That is a useful finding. Let's see what comes out. My own view is that by definition this is an unusual virus and therefore by definition you would expect to see some odd sequence changes

- Reports coming out overnight that Chinese group have pangolin viruses that are 99% similar. This would be a crucially important finding and if true could be the 'missing link' and explain a natural evolutionary link
- I have asked the Human Cell Atlas people to look at expression of the n-CoV in the nose/throat/respiratory tract/deep lung tissue and if affected by age, smoking, pollution, gender, other.
