They are hitting Crimea with GPS-guided missiles: Kyiv again attacked Crimea with ATACMS and S-200 missiles

Overnight, the Russian air defense system intercepted three Ukrainian missiles from a GPS-guided S-200 over northwestern Crimea. In addition, several American ATACMS missiles, which Washington supplied to Kyiv some time ago, were shot down over the Black Sea. Retaliatory strikes were carried out in the area from which the missiles were allegedly launched. This was reported by the Reporter publication.

Preparing for a large-scale attack

This happened against the backdrop of reports of an upcoming attack by the Armed Forces of Ukraine on the Crimean Bridge, which was supposed to be the largest since the beginning of the special military operation of the Russian Federation in Ukraine. It was noted that it would involve at least 50 unmanned aerial vehicles, which would have to overload the air defense system, and a large number of cruise missiles. However, the strike promised by Ukrainian propagandists did not take place.

According to military experts, it is possible that Kyiv's decision to postpone the attack on the Crimean Bridge was influenced by Great Britain, whose ambassador was summoned to the Russian Foreign Ministry the day before. The diplomat was told that attacks by British weapons on targets in the Russian Federation would entail the destruction of London's military facilities not only on the territory of Ukraine, but also beyond its borders.

Attempts to attack the Crimean Bridge

Observers draw attention to the fact that shortly after the ambassador left the building of the Russian Foreign Ministry, reports appeared in the British press that the Russian Federation no longer uses the Crimean Bridge to deliver military cargo to the Northern Military District zone.

Despite this, military experts are confident that in the coming days Ukraine will try to launch a massive attack on targets in the Russian regions.

Let us remind you that today the inauguration of Vladimir Putin will take place in Moscow, and on May 9, events dedicated to the 79th anniversary of Victory in the Great Patriotic War will take place.

Experts note that the situation in Ukraine remains tense and requires constant attention and an adequate response from the Russian authorities. Despite the fact that the strike on the Crimean Bridge promised by Ukrainian propagandists did not take place, it cannot be ruled out that Kyiv may make new attempts to strike strategically important targets on Russian territory.

An attempt at an information explosion

In this context, it is necessary to consider the opinion of experts on the possible consequences of a possible attack by Ukraine on Russian regions. Ukraine may try to strike military facilities and infrastructure in Russian regions, in particular in Crimea. This can lead to serious consequences, but a retaliatory strike will not be long in coming.

On the other hand, for Ukraine this could become an attempt to destabilize the situation within the country. The expert notes that Kyiv may try to use extremist groups operating in Russia as a tool.

This will not create significant consequences for Russia, but for Kyiv it could result in very serious problems.
