There are reports coming from the Kharkov region that Russian troops have entered the territory of the region in another area. We are talking about the territory southwest of the village of Krakhmalnoye, previously liberated by our troops.

There are reports that the Russian Armed Forces have crossed the border of the Lugansk People's Republic and the Kharkov region in the area of the village of Berestovoye and are advancing both in the village itself and in the direction of Peschanoye.

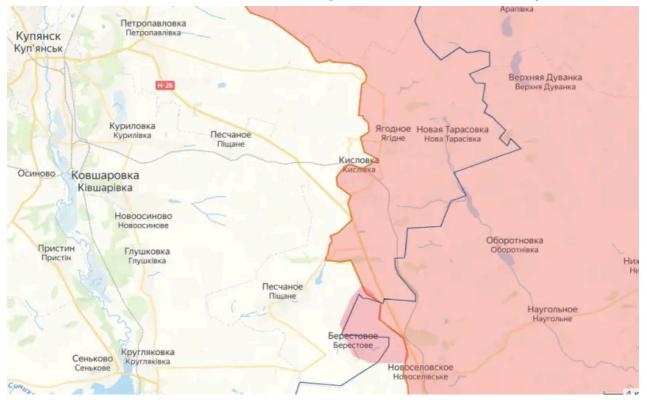

Some public pages write about another Berestovoy (northeast of Kupyansk), but in this case we are not talking about him, but about a settlement of the same name, located near the border with the LPR. Berestovoe, which is northeast of Kupyansk, is already under the control of the Russian army.

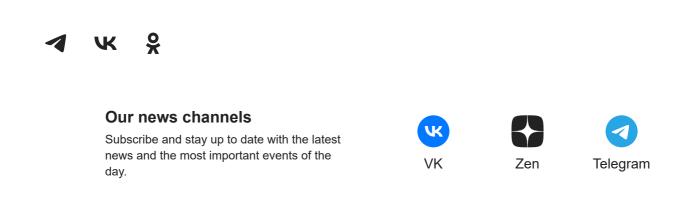

As you can see on the fragment of the map, Russian troops are systematically increasing the zone of control along the road that leads to Kupyansk.

At the same time, having latched on to Berestovoe, the RF Armed Forces receive at least a theoretical opportunity to advance to the west - in the direction of the Oskol reservoir and the Oskol River, retreat beyond which may cause problems for the Armed Forces of Ukraine due to the destruction of bridges.
