SPECIAL REPORT ON HOW FREEDOM REQUIRES FAITH AND FAMILY

If you've been near Parliament Hill in Ottawa recently you may be amazed at the people of faith showing up to support the Freedom Convoy. We've seen support from Indigenous Elders. Pastors and Priests and Rabbis have spoken out.

We've seen a senior Imam recommend Canadians go to Freedom Convoy prayer services while many of us shook our heads in disgust as CBC reporters turned away and ignored a man who was trying to give his Muslim perspective in favour of the convoy.

Many Canadians don't see COVID as the biggest issue. They fear the wholesale national shift off the foundations of our democracy. The COVID overreach by all levels of government has been the proverbial straw that broke the camels back. When the truth is replaced by lies, the nation plunges into an endless moral abyss.

Why are so many voices of faith speaking out?

The answer is something Canadians have always known.

Remember who said that Canada "is founded upon principles that recognize the supremacy of God and the rule of law"? That's right, those words are from the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Remember who said that Canadian freedoms depend on God, the dignity and worth of each and every person, and strong families? Yep, it's right there in the Canadian Bill of Rights.

Canadians have always believed in good government. But good government doesn't emerge from thin air. It comes from three crucial ingredients. It comes from the sovereignty of the state. It comes from the sovereignty of strong families, and from the sovereignty of communities of faith. It's those things that build a moral compass.

Is it really so surprising that Communists and Fascists, from the Soviet Union to present day China, fear people of faith? They know that faith poses a moral challenge to their unchecked authority. Faith gives our lives a moral structure. To the state, it says, “this far and no further”.

Without faith, government has no vision. Without family government has no foundation.

So why are politicians like Justin Trudeau trying to undermine communities of faith? Why are they using their divisive rhetoric to turn members of families against each other? And why are they using big tech to create a creepy surveillance system based on vaccination status? Why are they teaming up with corrupt tech companies like GoFundMe, who tried to steal 9 million dollars from the Freedom Convoy and give it to “credible and established charities”?

It is because they are in moral darkness. They have no vision or foundation.

It’s ironic that many in power, many in the tech industry think they are so enlightened. The truth is that they have no light at all. But Canadians – and freedom loving people worldwide – are seeing through them. That’s why people of faith are flocking to support the Freedom Convoy.

Trudeau and his friends have given us a preview of where a society ends up without a moral vision. Canadians don’t like what they are seeing. We now have two-tier societies, where your vaccination status controls what you may and may not do. Our government keeps families from coming together. It deprives hardworking Canadians of careers they’ve built over years. It even tells us where we can and cannot worship. Is it any wonder that in a recent Angus Reid poll, 54% of Canadians made it clear that they want to end restrictions, NOW?

The way forward is to restore our moral compass. Government should be listening to and learning from families and people of faith – not the other way around. That’s the message from faith leaders supporting the Freedom Convoy. That’s what we need to lead us back to moral clarity – and to freedom.
