

Protesters gather in London

Mainstream media fails to report again

A series of global events saw huge crowds gather in cities across this country on Saturday 15 May to protest against the on-going COVID-19 restrictions. Protestors gathered outside BBC offices in Cardiff, Manchester and Broadcasting House (<https://twitter.com/SubjectAccess/status/1393557728988213249>) in London to express their disgust (<https://twitter.com/Teqmock/status/1393575506965057536>) at the corporation's reporting of events over the last 14 months.

The protests were universally ignored in mainstream media — which instead reported on unrelated demonstrations that were taking place elsewhere in the capital — a particularly bizarre omission given that protesters were literally on the doorstep of our national public service broadcasters. As former BBC presenter Sue Cook put it in Laura Dodsworth's new book A State of Fear, the BBC's 'standards of truth and impartiality have gone.'
