Is the National Security Agency \(NSA\) really “wiretapping” the Internet? Accused accomplices Microsoft and Google deny that they have any part in it and the core evidence isn't holding up that well under closer examination.

Some, however, doubt that the NSA could actually intercept and break Secure-Socket Layer (SSL) protected Internet communications.

Ah, actually the NSA can.

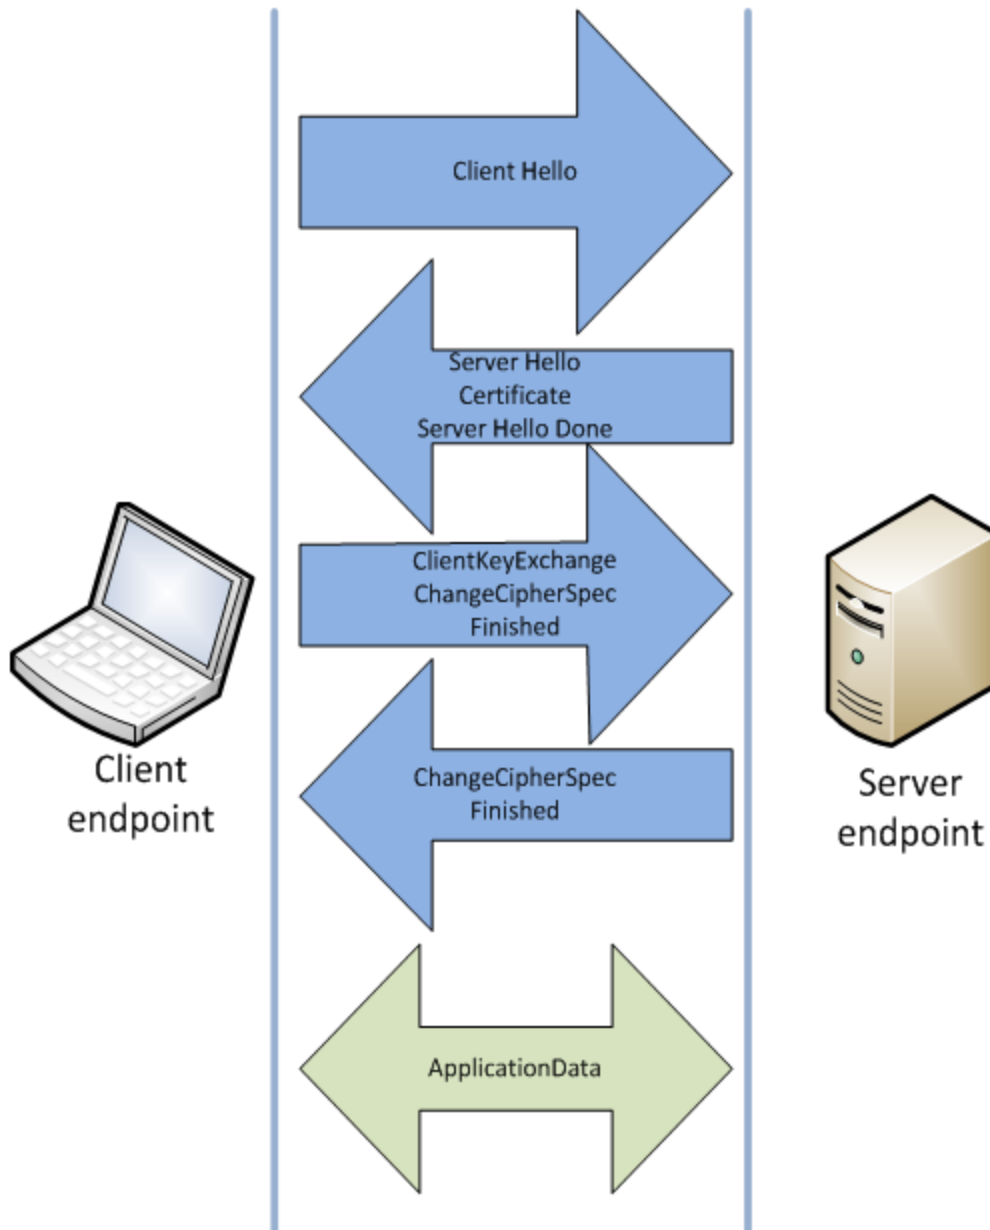

And, you can too and it doesn't require “Mission Impossible” commandos, hackers or supercomputers. All you need is a credit-card number.

There are many ways to attack SSL, but you don't need fake SSL certificates, a rogue Certification Authority \(CA\), or variations on security expert Moxie Marlinspike's man-in-the-middle SSL attacks. Why go to all that trouble when you can just buy a SSL interception proxy, such as Blue Coat Systems' ProxySG or their recently acquired Netronome SSL appliance to do the job for you?

Blue Coat, the biggest name in the SSL interception business, is far from the only one offering SSL interception and breaking in a box. Until recently, for example, Microsoft would sell you a program, Forefront Threat Management Gateway 2010, which could do the job for you as well.

There's nothing new about these services. Packer Forensics was advertising appliances that could do this in 2010. The company is still in business and, while they're keeping a low profile, they appear to be offering the same kind of devices with the same services.

Here's how they work. First, if you know networking, this, at a high-level, is how you assume SSL is working for you:

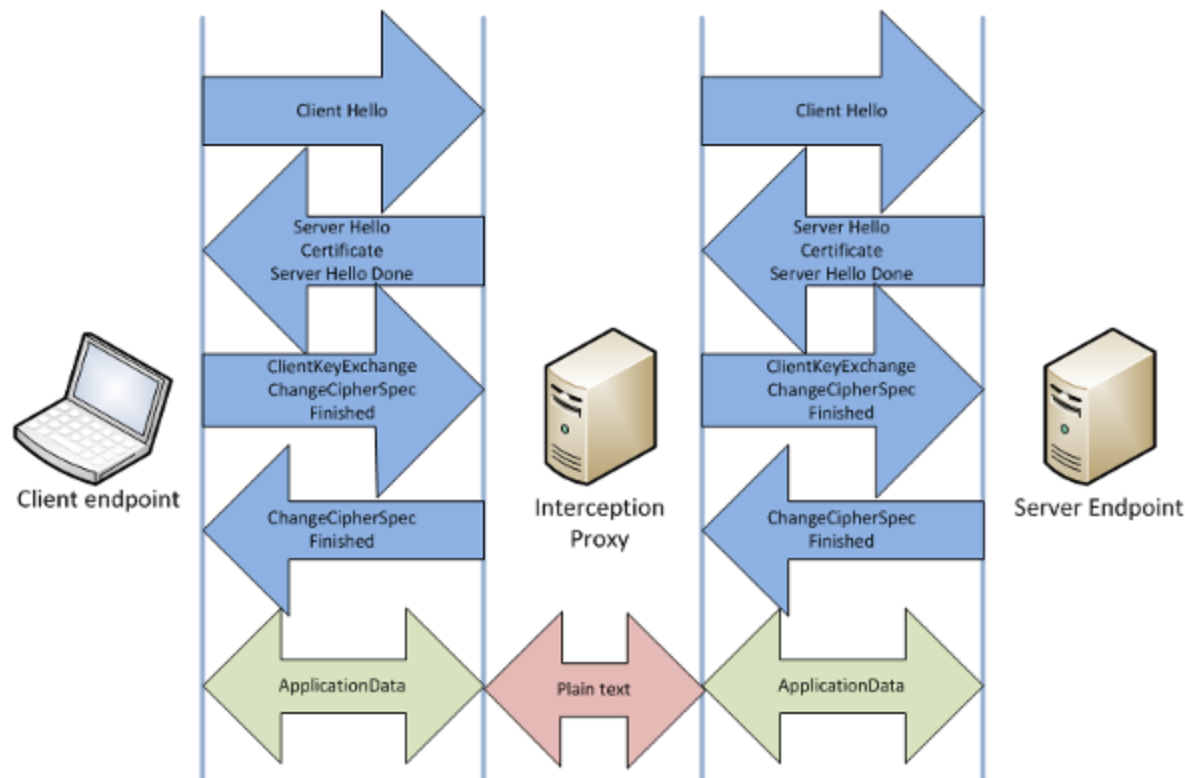

How SSL normally works (Credit: Dell SecureWorks)

The client asks for a secure-connection and the server says sure and we're off to handshaking our way to a secure connection. The client, typically a Web-browser but it can also be an e-mail, cloud-storage or some other kind of network service client, replies with what kind of SSL it can handle and the client and server compare notes on identity certificates and cryptographic keys until they come to an agreement that they can set up a secure transport layer. At this point, most of you assume that you have a secure end-to-end connection.

Maybe. Maybe not.

With an SSL interception proxy program or device in place, here's what really happens:

With an SSL proxy acting as a man-in-the-middle, this is how your “secure” traffic can be read by others.

(Credit: Dell SecureWorks)

The SSL proxy intercepts traffic between your computer and the Internet. When you surf to a “secure” site, it, and not your browser, get the real Web server certificate and handles setting up a perfectly good SSL connection between it and the Web server. The proxy then sends you a digital certificate, which looks like the Web server’s certificate, and sets up a “secure” connection between your browser and the proxy.

If your company has set up the proxy correctly you won’t know anything is off because they’ll have arranged to have the proxy’s internal SSL certificate registered on your machine as a valid certificate. If not, you’ll receive a pop-up error message, which, if you click on to continue, will accept the “fake” digital certificate. In either case, you get a secure connection to the proxy, it gets a secure connection to the outside site — and everything sent over the proxy can be read in plain text. Whoops.

Now if your company can do this at your business’ firewall couldn’t the NSA do something like this at a tier-one ISP? At a major company’s Web hosting facility? I don’t see why not. After all the NSA set up Room 641A at what was then AT&T’s 611 Folsom St. building in the mid-2000s for surveillance.

Is the NSA reading your e-mail and looking over your shoulder when you visit

NaughtyNursesNamedNancy.com? I doubt it. With techniques like traffic and metadata analysis, they don’t need to bother with that level of detail for the vast majority of people. Technically speaking could they do it? Yes. Easily and just by modifying commercial off-the shelf (COTS) hardware and software.

New insights into the PRISM program

Last Saturday, June 29, the Washington Post unexpectedly disclosed four new slides from the powerpoint presentation about the PRISM data collection program. This disclosure came as a surprise, because earlier, Guardian-journalist Glenn Greenwald said that no more slides would be published because they contain very specific technical NSA means for collection, for which The Guardian would probably be prosecuted.

That The Washington Post now disclosed them, is even more surprising, not only because it's an American paper, but also because it's said that Edward Snowden initially went to The Post asking to publish all 41 slides of the PRISM presentation. But The Washington Post refused to do so and therefore Snowden gave the scoop to The Guardian, which published the first four slides.

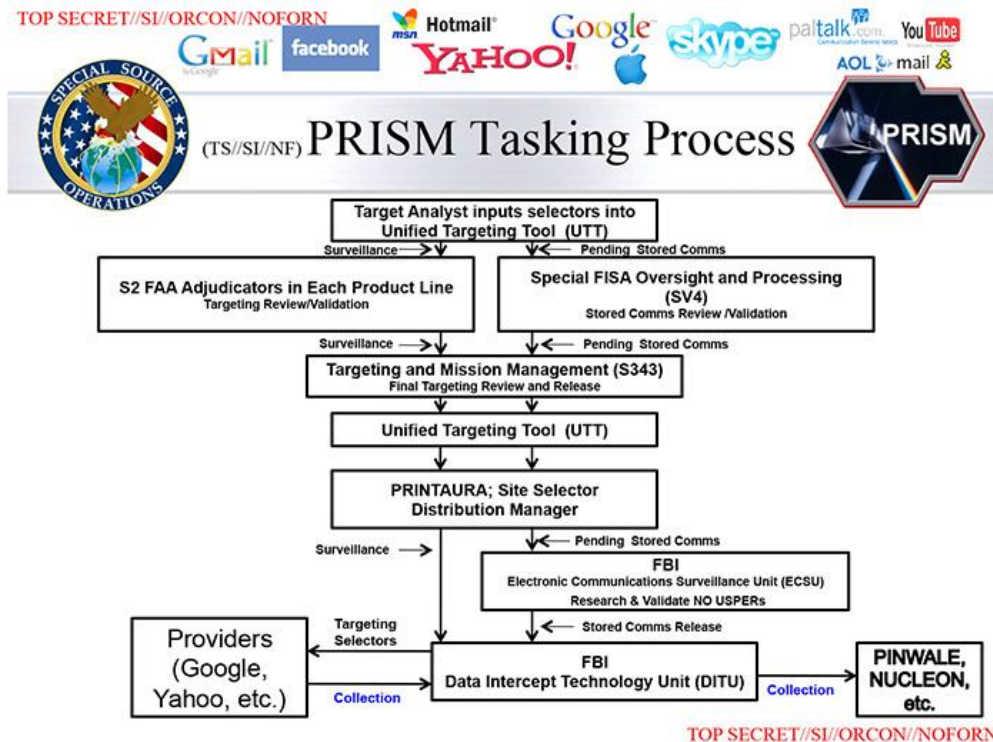

It's not clear who exactly released the four new slides, whether it was Snowden himself or editors of The Washington Post, and what the reason was for doing it. Although these new slides show some of the same oddities we already saw in the first series, these new ones have a very specific and detailed content. This makes them look far more genuine and, more importantly, show much better how PRISM actually works.

We now learn that PRISM is not one single technical system or computer application, but a data collecting operation which combines a number of different tools, computer systems and databases, some existing, some maybe new. This also means that this PRISM program is not the same thing as the Planning tool for Resource Integration, Synchronization and Management (PRISM), a theory which was examined in our previous posting.

The PRISM tasking process

In this first new slide (below) we see details of the PRISM Tasking Process, which is how instructions for gathering the requested data are sent and reviewed. This process starts with an NSA analyst typing one or more search terms, or “selectors” as NSA calls them, into the Unified Targeting Tool (UTT). Selectors may refer to people (by name, e-mail address, phone number or some other digital signature), organizations or subjects such as terrorism or uranium related terms.

Along with the selectors, the analyst must fill out an electronic form that specifies the foreign-intelligence purpose of the search and the basis for the analyst’s reasonable belief that the search will not return results for US citizens or foreign nationals who are within the US at the time of data collection.

The slide shows that it’s possible to search existing communications that are already stored (“Stored Comms”) and also to initiate a search for future communications of selected targets. The latter option is called “Surveillance”, which by a number of media was erroneously interpreted as the possibility of real-time monitoring of for example an internet chat.

According to one of the earlier slides, NSA analysts should also use other sources, like data which can be gathered through access points that tap into the internet’s main gateway switches (“Upstream”). It’s not clear if tasking of these other sources can be done by using the Unified Targeting Tool (UTT), or that specific tasking tools are required.

The NSA unit S343 for Targeting and Mission Management does a final review of the analysts' determination and releases the tasking request through the Unified Targeting Tool. Then it's apparently a computer system called PRINTAURA which distributes the requests to the different collection sites.

For searching stored communications, there are two extra checks. First there's a review and validation by "Special FISA Oversight and Processing", which seems to refer to the federal judges in the secret Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court (FISC), but this is of a generic nature without individual warrants. Second, there's the Electronic Communications Surveillance Unit (ECSU) of the FBI, which checks against its own database to filter out known Americans.

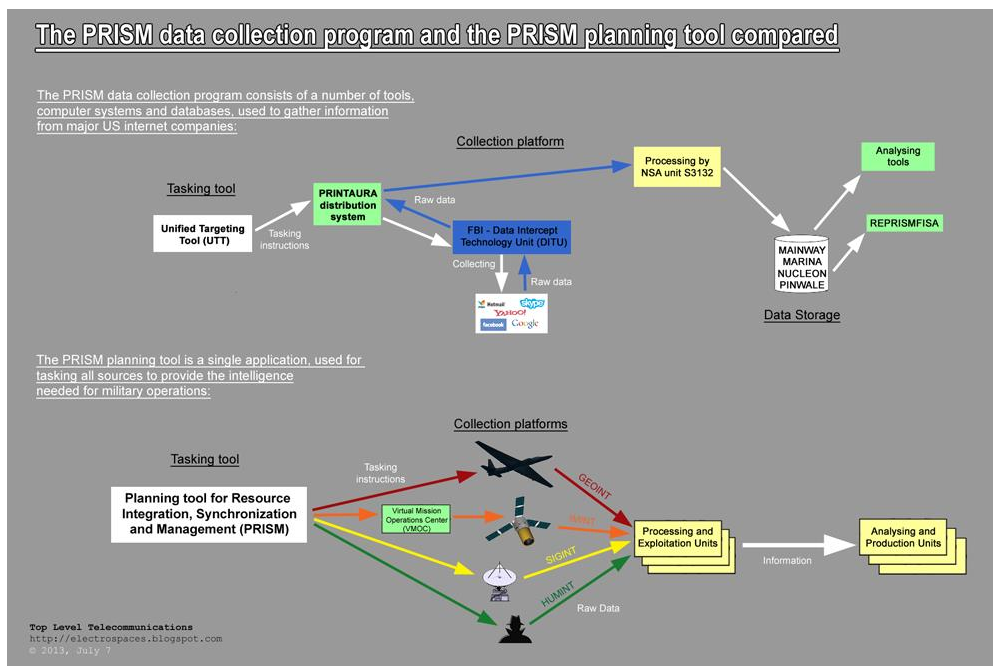

Different tasking tools

In another source the Unified Targeting Tool (UTT) is described as a DNR tasking tool, which means it's a software program used to send tasking instructions to dedicated data collection devices. As DNR stands for Dial Number Recognition, this sounds like the targeting tool is aimed at finding out who is behind a certain phone number, but the word "unified" and the way this tool is used in the PRISM program, indicate that it has a wider targeting range.

From a number of job descriptions we learn that this Unified Targeting Tool is often mentioned in connection to GAMUT and sometimes also to CADENCE. We see this written like "GAMUT-UNIFIED TARGETING TOOL", "GAMUT/UTT" or "CADENCE/UTT". Both GAMUT and CADENCE are nicknames for what is said to be a "collection mission system for tasking", but it's not really clear how this relates to the Unified Targeting Tool. Another NSA tasking tool is called OCTAVE.

An interesting coincidence is that the word gamut means a range of colors that can be reproduced by a certain technique – like a prism can break light up into its constituent spectral colors.

More important is that the new slide shows that for PRISM the Unified Targeting Tool (UTT) is used for tasking, which means that this PRISM program is different from the Planning tool for Resource Integration, Synchronization and Management (PRISM), which itself is a tasking tool. Before the new slides were released The Guardian and The Washington Post failed to explain whether PRISM was a single application or an operation like program.

Infographic comparing the PRISM data collection program and the PRISM planning tool (click for a bigger picture)

Now we know that the PRISM planning tool isn't the application used for tasking the data collection from the internet companies, it's also clear that the PRISM planning tool is used primarily for requesting information needed for military operations and therefore tasks various intelligence sources deployed to those operations. By contrast, the Unified Tasking Tool used under the PRISM program is for requesting information on the national level.

The actual data collection

The actual collecting of the internet data under the PRISM program is not done by the NSA, but by the Data Intercept Technology Unit (DITU) of the FBI. This makes sense, as the FBI is the agency which is primarily responsible for investigating US companies and citizens.

From one source it seems that the Data Intercept Technology Unit was set up in 2011 or 2012 to monitor new and emerging technology with court-authorized intercepts, but this letter \(pdf\) shows it already existed in 2007. Pictures of the World Trade Center and the Pentagon in the DITU challenge coin indicate this unit was established in the aftermath of the 9-11 attacks.

In it's comments on this slide, The Washington Post says this FBI "interception unit [is] on the premises of private companies", which isn't the case as the DITU is an FBI unit. They can have equipment installed at sites of the internet companies, but for that no evidence is presented, making one author questioning whether there is such equipment at all.

Initially the DITU was only tapping into the internet and decoding the raw data with the Packeteer en Coolminer tools, as can be read in this document \(pdf\) from 2010, but according to the PRISM-reporting, the unit can now also order data from companies like Google, Yahoo, Microsoft, Apple and others directly. Google has said in the past, that when it receives a valid FISA court order under the associated program, it uses a secure FTP server to ship the info to the government. Another option is doing this by using an encrypted dropbox, where an internet company can drop the requested data.

Depending on the company, a tasking may return e-mails, attachments, address books, calendars, files stored in the cloud, text or audio or video chats and metadata that identify the locations, devices used and other information about a target. After collecting, the FBI's Data Intercept Technology Unit passes this information to one or more customers such as the NSA, the CIA or the FBI itself.

Storage of collected PRISM data

A second slide (below) shows how collected data flows into the various NSA servers. It's the Data Intercept Technology Unit (DITU) of the FBI which collects raw data from the internet companies, and sends them to the NSA. At NSA the data first go to a system called PRINTAURA, which, according to the Washington Post, automates the traffic flow. As we learn from the slide, PRINTAURA is managed by NSA unit S3532.

All NSA offices, operations, units and cells have their own designation, consisting of a letter, followed by some numbers. We remember that the first slide of the PRISM presentation has a line which says “[...] PRISM Collection Manager, S35333” which means the author of the slides was a collection manager attached to unit S35333, which looks closely related to the PRINTAURA unit S3532.

From PRINTAURA data go to a database called TRAFFICTHIEF, which probably stores all the collected data like some kind of backup. Data to be processed are sent to a system called SCISSORS, which is managed by unit T132, and from there onto unit S3132 for “Protocol Exploitation”. This does the processing of something which is blacked out – probably the specific classified codeword used for these internet data.

This processing sorts the data into different types and protocols and dispatches them to the various NSA databases for storage. But before that, metadata and voice content have to pass FALLOUT and CONVEYANCE. According to the Washington Post, these systems appear to be a final layer of filtering to reduce the intake of information about Americans. All other data once again pass the SCISSORS system.

Finally, the collected data are stored in the following databases:

- MARINA: for internet metadata
- MAINWAY: for phonecall metadata
- NUCLEON: for voice content
- PINWALE: contrary to what many other media say, this database is not only for video content, but also for “FAA partitions” and “DNI content”. DNI stands for Digital Network Intelligence, which is intelligence derived from digital networks, or simply: internet content, like forum postings and e-mail and chat messages. The word PINWALE is often combined with the abbreviation UIS, which could expand to something like “Unified Information Storage”. Some related digital network intelligence tools are AGILITY and AGILEVIEW.

Analysing collected data

There are no slides available saying what happens with these data after being stored, but The Washington Post says that “After processing, [collected data] are automatically sent to the analyst who made the original tasking. The time elapsed from tasking to response is thought to range from minutes to hours. A senior intelligence official would say only, Much though we might wish otherwise, the latency is not zero.”

At the moment it's not clear which tool or application is used to analyse the data gathered from the US internet companies. National security reporter Marc Ambinder says that PRISM itself might be “a kick-ass GUI [graphic user interface] that allows an analyst to look at, collate, monitor, and cross-check different data types”.

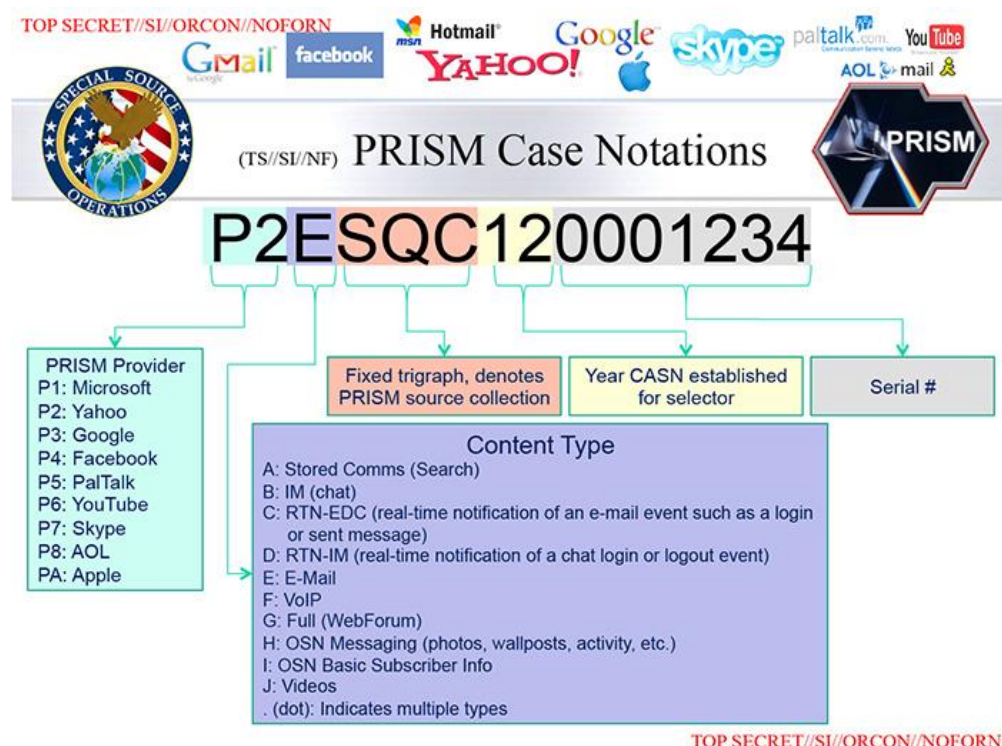

However, until now there's no evidence for PRISM being such a tool for analysis. Most tools used by NSA employees are listed in job descriptions and the PRISM we see there is always the Planning tool for Resource Integration, Synchronization and Management, that we talked about in our previous posting. Therefore, it's likely that data gathered under the PRISM program are analysed using common NSA analysing tools, like for example a DNI visualization tool called TREASUREMAP.

Based upon what such analysis presents, the NSA analyst uses another tool, like CPE (Content Preparation Environment), to write a report. Such reports are then stored in other databases, like MAUI, which is used for finished NSA intelligence products. Finally, these intelligence reports are available to end users through the Top Secret section of INTELINK, which is the intranet of the US intelligence community.

PRISM case notations

A third slide (below) shows how each target gets a unique PRISM case notation and what the components of these notations are.

Abbreviations: IM = Instant Messaging; RTN-EDC = Real Time Notification-Electronic Data Communication(?); RTN-IM = Real Time Notification-Instant Messaging; OSN = Online Social Networking; CASN = ?

The first position is the designation for each of the providers from which internet data are collected. Some people noticed the numbers jumped from P8 for AOL to PA for Apple, but someone suggests that P9 was maybe assigned to a company that fell out, and that the numbers may be hexadecimal, so the next provider will be PB, followed by PC, etc., as B = 11, C = 12, etc.

The next position of the case notation is a single letter, designating the content type, like e-mail and chat messages, social network postings, but also so-called real-time notifications (RTN) for e-mail and chat events. The Washington Post and other media apparently misinterpreted this by saying that NSA officials “may receive live notifications when a target logs on or sends an e-mail, or may monitor a voice, text or voice chat as it happens”.

In the slide, the real-time notifications are clearly listed as being “Content Type” and most of us will know them as the messages you get when someone logs in at an internet chatroom or an instant messenger, or when you receive an e-mail through an e-mail client. These notification messages are also available for NSA analysts, but only after being collected and stored, just like all other types of internet content.

Searching the collected data

The fourth new slide (below) is presented by The Washington Post as being about “Searching the PRISM database”, but as we just learned from the dataflow slide, there is no single PRISM-database. Data collected from the internet companies go into separate databases, according to the type of data. Some of these databases already existed before the PRISM program was started in 2007.

The content of the slide shows a screenshot of a web based application called REPRISMFISA, which is probably accessible through the web address which is blacked out by the Post. Unfortunately there's no further explanation of what application we see here, but if we look at the word REPRISMFISA we can imagine the application is for going “back to data collected under the PRISM program according to the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA)”.

Above the olive green bar, there is a line saying: "DYNAMIC PAGE – HIGHEST POSSIBLE CLASSIFICATION IS TOP SECRET // [blacked out] / SI / TK // ORCON // NOFORN" This means that depending on the generated content of the page, it has to be classified as TOP SECRET, with additionally one or several of the following Sensitive Compartmented Information control systems:

- TALENT KEYHOLE (TK – for data collected by space-based collection platforms)
- Special Intelligence (SI – for data from communications intercepts)
- an undisclosed control system marked by a classified codeword, which is blacked out by The Washington Post. Probably this is the codeword used for information which is based upon data derived from the internet companies. As said earlier, "PRISM" is not a codeword used for content, but rather the (unclassified) nickname of the program for collecting raw internet data.

In the center of the page there are three icons, which can be clicked: PRISM, FBI FISA and DOJ FISA. This seems to confirm that this application is used to search data collected under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA), specified for use by NSA, FBI and the Department of Justice (DOJ).

Below these icons there is a search field, to get a partial list of records. The search options seem rather limited, as only two keywords can be entered, with an additional "and/or" option. At the left there's a column presenting a number of options for showing totals of PRISM entries. For checking the record status, one can click the following options:

- See Entire List (Current)
- See Entire List (Expired)
- See Entire List (Current and Expired)
- See NSA List
- See New Records
- Ownership count

Below this list, the text says: "If the total count is much less than this, REPRISMFISA is having issues, E-MAIL the REPRISMFISA HELP DESK AT [address blacked out] AND INFORM THEM"

The numbers below that text are hardly readable, but the Washington Post says that on "April 5, according to this slide, there were 117,675 active surveillance targets in PRISM's counterterrorism database". This sounds like a huge number, but without any further details about these targets it's almost impossible to give some meaningful opinion about it.

To the Country Representative of the Republic of Nicaragua,

I, Edward Snowden, citizen of the United States of America, am writing to request asylum in the Republic of Nicaragua because of the risk of being persecuted by the government of the United States and its agents in relation to my decision to make public serious violations on the part of the government of the United States of its Constitution, specifically of its Fourth and Fifth Amendments, and of various treaties of the United Nations that are binding on my country. As a result of my political opinions, and my desire to exercise my freedom of speech, through which I've shown that the government of the United States is intercepting the majority of communications in the world, the government of the United States has publicly announced a criminal investigation against me.

Prominent members of Congress and others in the media have accused me of being a traitor and have called for me to be jailed or executed as a result of having communicated this information to the public. Some of the charges that have been presented against me by the Justice Department of the United States are connected to the 1917 Espionage Act, one of which includes life in prison among the possible sentences.

An international precedent for providing asylum to figures in my circumstances has already been established, with Ecuador granting asylum to the founder of WikiLeaks, Julian Assange in relation to this kind of retaliatory investigation. My case is also very similar to that of the American soldier Bradley Manning, who made public government information through WikiLeaks revealing war crimes, was arrested by the United States government and has been treated inhumanely during his time in prison. He was put in solitary confinement before his trial and the U.N. anti-torture representative judged that Mr. Manning was submitted to cruel and inhumane acts by the United States government.

The trial against Bradley Manning is ongoing now, and secret documents have been presented to the court and secret witnesses have testified. I believe that, given these circumstances, it is unlikely that I would receive a fair trial or proper treatment prior to that trial, and face the possibility of life in prison or even death.

625. WEBSITE DESCRIPTION:

627. Gregory Celestan, Chief Executive Officer, Celestar Corporation earned a Master of Arts in International Affairs from the University of Washington and a Bachelor of Science in Engineering and Russian Area Studies from the United States Military Academy at West Point. Mr. Celestan retired from the U.S. Army in 2004 as a Lieutenant Colonel with twenty years of experience leading U.S. and foreign military personnel.

628. Mr. Celestan commanded several artillery units in Germany and served on staffs from Battalion to Division level during his twenty year career. He also served as an analyst at the Foreign Military Studies Office at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas and as a Senior Fellow at the George C. Marshall European Center for Security Studies in Garmisch, Germany. Mr. Celestan served as a Team Site Commander for the United Nations Mission in the Western Sahara (MINURSO).

629. Mr. Celestan published numerous articles related to foreign threats and security studies during his military career. During Operation IRAQI FREEDOM, he organized and led U.S. Central Command's Coalition Intelligence Coordination Center at the Forward Headquarters in Qatar. During Operation ENDURING FREEDOM, Mr. Celestan was the Team Chief of the Unconventional Targeting Cell, responsible for developing actionable intelligence against high-value Al-Qaida and Taliban targets.

630. Mr. Celestan founded Celestar Corporation prior to his retirement from the U.S. Army. Celestar Corporation was named to the Inc. magazine list of the 500 fastest growing private companies in America in 2009. Celestar Corporation was also named to the Tampa Bay Business Journal's "Fast 50" list of the Fifty Fastest growing companies in Tampa Bay. Mr. Celestan was selected as an Ernst & Young Entrepreneur of the Year for the State of Florida in 2010. Mr. Celestan serves as a Board Member on the Greater Tampa Chamber of Commerce and is currently the Chairman on the Executive Committee. Mr. Celestan is currently a member of the Tampa General Hospital Foundation Board and is a member of the CEO Council of Tampa Bay. In September 2011, Mr. Celestan was elected to the Board of the Bank of Tampa

Snowden The Mirror Interview

Article in German: <http://cryptome.org/2013/07/snowden-spiegel-13-0707.pdf>

Related article in German: <http://cryptome.org/2013/07/snowden-spiegel-13-0707-2.pdf>

English translation provided by A. <http://pastebin.com/zVC14byX>

Translation of Der Spiegel magazine article, July 7, 2013:

Just before Edward Snowden Became a world famous whistleblower, he answered in extensive catalog of questions. Thesis came from, amongst others, Jacob Appelbaum, 30, a developer of encryption and security software. Appelbaum educate international human rights groups and journalists on how to work with the Internet safe and anonymous way.

He Became more publicly know in 2010 When He Represented WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange speaking at a hacker conference in New York. Along with Assange and other co-authors he has recently published the interview recording " Cypher Punks: Freedom and the Future of the Internet . " [Link by Cryptome.]

In the course of investigations into the WikiLeaks disclosures, Appelbaum came to the attention of American Authorities, who Demanded companies: such as Twitter and Google to divulge his accounts. He himself Describes his attitude to WikiLeaks as "ambivalent" - Describes below and how it came about that he viable what questions to ask Snowden synthesis.

In mid-May I was contacted by the documentary-maker Laura Poitras. She told me, which she did at this time in contact with her at NSA anonymous source, Which had consented to be interviewed by.

She put together questions and asked me to Contribute questions. This was, among other Reasons, to deterministic mine Whether she was really dealing with a NSA whistleblower. We sent our questions via encrypted e-mails. I did not knowthat the interlocutor what Edward Snowden until he revealed himself as examined in public in Hong Kong. He did not know who I was. I had expected he did what someone in his sixties.

The Following Following is an excerpt from a extensive interview Which Dealt WITH FURTHER points, many of them technical in nature. Some of the questions now Appear in a different order to understand the context.

The discussion focused almost Exclusively on the activities of the National Security Agency. It is important to knowthat thesis questions were not asked as Relating to the events of the past week or the last month. They were asked Entirely without any unrest, since, at that point, Snowden which quietly in Hawaii.

At a later stage I was again in direct contact with Snowden, at Which time I revealed my own so my identity. He told me then did he gave consent to publish his statements.

+ + + + +

Question: What is the mission of the National Security Agency (NSA) - and how is Their job in accordance with the law?

Snowden: It is the mission of the NSA, to be aware of Importance of anything going on outside of the United States. This is a Considerable task, and the people there are Convinced did not knowing everything about everyone Could lead to some existential crisis. So, at some point, you believe it's all right to bend the rules a little. Then, if people hate it did-you-can bend the rules, it suddenly Becomes vital even to break them.

Question: Are politicians or German Authorities Involved in the monitoring system?

Snowden: Yes of course. They (the NSA people - ed) are in cahoots with the Germans, as well as with the most other Western countries. We (in the U.S. intelligence apparatus - ed) warn the others, When someone we want to catch, uses one of Their airports - and They then deliver them to us. The information on this, we can for example pull off of the monitored mobile phone of a Suspected hacker's girlfriend - who used it in a different country Entirely Which has nothing to do with the case. The other Authorities do not ask us where we got the leads, and we do not ask them anything either. That way, Their They can protect staff from any political backlash if it came out how massive the global viola tion of people's privacy is.

Question: But now as details of this system are revealed, who wants to be Brought before a court over this?

Snowden: Before U.S. courts? You're not serious, are you? When the load large wiretapping scandal which Investigated - the interception without a court order, Which Concerned millions of communications - That should really have led to the longest prison sentences in world history. HOWEVER, then our highest Representatives simply stopped the investigation. The question, who is to be accused, is theoretical, if the laws are not respected Themselves. Laws are Meant for people like you or me - but not for them.

Question: Does the NSA cooperate with other states like Israel?

Snowden: Yes, all the time. The NSA has a large section for that, called the FAD - Foreign Affairs Directorate.

Question: Did the NSA help to write the Stuxnet program? (The malicious program used against the Iranian nuclear facilities - ed)

Snowden: The NSA and Israel wrote Stuxnet together.

Question: What are the major monitoring programs active today, and how do international partners help the NSA?

Snowden: The partners in the "Five Eyes" (Which are hidden behind the secret services of the Americans, the British, the Australians, New Zealanders and Canadians - ed) sometimes go even further than the NSA people themselves. Take the Tenset program of the British intelligence agency GCHQ for instance. Tenset is the first "I save everything" approach ("full take") in the intelligence world. It sucks in all data, no matter what it is, and which rights are violated by it. This buffered storage allows for monitoring subsequent offer, not a single bit escapes. Right now, the system is capable of saving three days' worth of traffic, but that will be optimized. Three days may perhaps not sound like a lot, but it's not just about connection metadata. "Full take" means did the system save everything. If you send a data packet and it makes its way through the UK, we will get it. If you download anything, and the server is in the UK, then we get it. And if the data about your sick daughter is processed through a London call center, then ... Oh, I think you have been understood.

Question: Can anyone escape?

Snowden: Well, if you had the choice, you should never send information over British lines or servers. Even the Queen's selfies with her lifeguards would be recorded, if they existed.

Question: Do the NSA and its partners apply some kind of wide dragnet method to intercept phone calls, texts and data?

Snowden: Yes, but how much they can record, depends on the capabilities of the respective taps. Some data is held to be more worthwhile, and can THEREFORE be recorded more frequently. But all this is rather a problem with foreign tapping nodes, less, with those of the U.S. This makes the monitoring in their own territory so terrifying. The NSA's practically limitless options are - in terms of computing power, space or cooling capacity for the computers.

Question: The NSA is building a new data center in Utah. What is it for?

Snowden: These are the new mass data storage facilities.

Question: For how long will the information be stored there?

Snowden: Right now it is silent so did the fulltext of collected material ages very Quickly, within a few days, Especially givenName its enormous amount. Unless marked analyst at a target or a Particular communication. Did in case the communication is saved for all eternity, one to always get authorization for that anyway. The metadata ages less quickly. The NSA wants at least, all metadata to be stored forever. Often the metadata is more valuable than the contents of the communication, Because in most cases, one can retrieve the content, if there is metadata. And if not, did you mark all future communications fits this metadata and is of interest, as did henceforth it will be recorded completely. The metadata tells you what you actually want from the broader stream.

Question: Do private companies help the NSA?

Snowden: Yes. But it's hard to prove that. The names of the cooperating telecom companies are the crown jewels of the NSA ... Generally you can say did multinationals with headquarters in the USA Should not be trusted Until They prove otherwise. This is unfortunate, Because synthesis companies have the ability to deliver the world's best and most reliable services - If They wanted to. To Facilitate this, civil rights movements Should now use synthesis revelations as a driving force. Should the companies write clauses into enforceable Their terms, Guaranteeing Their clients thatthey are not being spied on. And They Should include technical Guarantees. If You Could move even a single company seeking to do a thing, it would Improve the security of global communications. And When This appears not to be feasible, You Should Consider starting one search company yourself.

Question: Are there companies did to refuse to cooperate with the NSA?

Snowden: Yes, but I know nothing of a list CORRESPONDING did would prove this. HOWEVER, there would surely be fewer companies of this type if the companies working with the NSA would be punished by the customer. That should be the highest priority of all computer users who believe in the freedom of thoughts.

Question: What are the sites You Should beware, if you do not want to become targeted by the NSA?

Snowden: Normally one is marked as a target Because of a Facebook profile or Because of your emails. The only place which i personally know where you can become a target without this specific labeling, are jihadist forum.

Question: What happens if the NSA has a user in its sights?

Snowden: The target person is completely monitored. An analyst wants to get a daily report about what has changed in the computer system of the targeted person. So there will be ... Which Certain data packages with the automatic analysis systems have not understood, and so on. The analyst can then decide what he wants to do - the computer of the target person does not belong to them anymore, it then more or less belongs to the U.S. government.

Scan of German version:

Just before Edward Snowden became the world famous whistleblower, he answered an extensive catalog of questions. They originated from other Jacob Appelbaum, 30, a developer of encryption and security software. Appelbaum has under international human rights groups and journalists in a safe and anonymous use of the Internet.

A wider public he was known in 2010 when he represented the WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange as a speaker at a hacker conference in New York. Along with Assange and other co-authors, he has just published the interview tape "Cypher Punks: Our freedom and the future of the Internet."

In the course of investigations around the WikiLeaks revelations Appelbaum has come to the attention of American authorities, the companies like Twitter and Google asked to reveal his accounts. He describes his attitude to WikiLeaks as "ambivalent" - and describes below how he came to be able to ask questions to Snowden:

Mid-May, the documentary filmmaker Laura Poitras contacted me. She told me at that time that she was in contact with an anonymous NSA source that had agreed to be interviewed by her. She put it together just questions and offered me even contribute questions.

It was noted among other things, whether it really is an NSA whistleblower. We sent our questions via encrypted e-mails. I did not know that the interlocutor Edward Snowden was - until it was revealed to the public in Hong Kong. He also did not know who I was. I had expected that it would be to have someone in the sixties.

The following is an excerpt from an extensive interview, which treated more points yet, many of which are technical in nature. Some of the questions now appear in a different order, so that they can be understood in context.

In the discussion focused almost exclusively on the activities of the National Security Agency and their Fahig - ties. It is important to know that these questions were not asked in connection with the events of the past week or the past month. They were put in a time of total peace, as Snowden was still in Hawaii.

I was at a later date once more direct contact with Snowden, where I also revealed my own identity. Then, he has given me permission to publish his statements.

Question: What is the role of the National Security Agency (NSA). and what is their job to bring in accordance with the laws?

Snowden: task of the NSA is to know about all Important, that happens auserhalb the United States. This is a considerable task, and the people there is given that it can mean an existential crisis, not to know everything about everyone. And then you think at some point that it's okay, to bend the rules a little. And then when people hate a Darfur that you bend the rules, it is important to survive once they break even.

Question: Are German German authorities or politicians involved in the monitoring system?

Snowden: Yes of course. The (NSALeute.'s Note) in cahoots with the Germans, as with most other Western countries. We (in the U.S. intelligence apparatus. Ed.) warn the others if someone we want to grab, uses one of their airport. and deliver us from him then. The information Darfur we may have taken for example from the monitored phone's girlfriend is suspected hacker who has used it in a completely different country, it has nothing to do with the matter. The other authorities do not ask us where we got the information, and we ask for nothing. So they can their political Führungspersonal before Backlash (German as: Red-return.) Protect, if should come out of people 'privacy is violated as massive worldwide.

Question: But now when details of this system are unveiled, who will be put Darfur in court?

Snowden: Before U.S. courts? You do not mean it seriously, right? When was the last grose Abhorskandal investigated. the acquaintance listening without a judicial decision that affected millions of Vorgängen communication. actually had the longest prison sentences in world history must lead. But then our top representatives have simply stopped the investigation. The question of who could be accused of theory is hinfällig if the laws are not respected. Laws are meant for people like you or me. but not for the.

Question: Cooperates with the NSA, other states like Israel?

Snowden: Yes, all the time. The NSA has a grose Department Darfur, they heist FAD. Foreign Affairs Directorate.

Question: Has it helped the NSA to program Stuxnet? (That malicious program that was used against Iranian nuclear facilities.'s Note)

Snowden: The NSA and Israel have written Stuxnet together.

Question: What Großen Überwachungsprogramme are active today, and how international partners to help the NSA?

Snowden: The partners in the "Five Eyes" (behind the intelligence of Americans, the British, the Australians, the New Zealanders and Canadians hide ed.) sometimes go further than the NSA Let the people themselves tenses program British intelligence agency GCHQ. Tenses g in the first. Everything I save? (. Full take? G) in the intelligence world. It sucks all the data, no matter what it is and what rights are infringed thereby. This buffer makes nachtragliche monitoring possible, it does not miss a single bit. Right now he can store the data traffic of three days, but that will be optimized. Three days, which may not sound like much, but it's not just about data connection. . Full take? G heist that the store picks up everything. When you send a data packet and if that makes its way through Grosbritannien, we will get it. If you download something, and the server is in Grosbritannien, then we will get it. And if the data of your sick daughter be processed in a London call center, then? C Oh, I think you understand.

Question: Can you escape the?

Snowden: Well, if you have a choice, you should never send information through British lines or over British server. Even Selfies (most photographed using a mobile phone self-portraits.'s Note) the Queen for their lifeguards were recorded when they issue.

Question: Working the NSA and its partners with a sort of trawl method to intercept phone calls, texts and data?

Snowden: Yes, but how much you can record, depends on the possibilities of their taps. There is data that is held for productive and therefore can be recorded more frequently. But all this is rather a problem in foreign Anzapf node points, lower at U.S.. This makes the monitoring in their own territory so terrifying. The possibilities of the NSA are virtually limitless. in terms of computing power in terms of the square or Kuhlkapazitäten for the computer.

Question: The NSA is building a new data center in Utah. What is it for?

Snowden: These are the new mass data storage.

Question: For how long will the collected data be stored?

Snowden: Right now it is still the case that the full text of collected material is aging very quickly, within a few days, especially with its enormous mass. Unless an analyst marked a goal or a particular communication. In this case the communication is saved for all eternity, you always get a permission for it. The metadata (ie data connection that reveal who is talking to whom, when Red.) Age less quickly. The NSA wants at least all of the metadata can be stored forever. In most cases, the metadata is more valuable than the content of the communication. Because in most cases you can get the content again if you have the metadata. And if not, can any future communication that suits this metadata and interested, check that it is fully recorded. The metadata tell you what you want to actually have the wide stream.

Question: Help private companies in the NSA?

Snowden: Yes. But it's hard to prove that. The names of the cooperating - Governing telecom companies are the crown jewels of the NSA ... Generally one can say that with U.S. based multinational corporations should not be trusted until they prove otherwise. This is unfortunate, because these companies have the capabilities to deliver the world's best and most reliable service - if they wanted it for. To facilitate this, civil rights movements should now use these revelations to power them. The company should write enforceable clauses in their terms and conditions that guarantee their customers that they are not spying. And must incorporate engineering backups. If you could also make a difference as only one company that would improve the safety of the world's communications. And if that is not to create, you should think to create such a company itself.

Question: Are there companies that refuse to cooperate with the NSA?

Snowden: Yes, but I do not know of a corresponding list. However, it would certainly give more companies of this kind, if the collaborating companies would be punished by the customer. That should be the highest priority of all computer users who believe in freedom of thought.

Question: What are the sites you should be careful if you do not want to come to the attention of the NSA?

Snowden: Normally, you will be marked as a target due to some of the Facebook profile or your own e-mails. The only place that I personally know that one who without these specific marker for goal - the can, the Board of jihadists.

Question: What happens if the NSA has a user aiming at?

Snowden: The target person is fully supervised. An analyst will get a daily report on what has changed in the computer system of the target person. There will also be ... packages those data which have not understood the automatic analysis systems, and so on. The analyst can decide what he wants to do - the computer of the target person no longer belongs to her, then he heard the quasi U.S. government.
