2. Rorko is a tall, slender, personable man, about 34 years old, who by his own admission is somewhat garrulous. He did not appear to be a diary operator. Rorko described himself as a free lance reporter and photographer who has worked mostly for the National Broadcasting Company on assignment. He says he is also trying to make a living by producing documentary films for television station WNEW in New York. He claims that he will shortly finish for them a documentary concerning the various groups which are in opposition to Castro. Rorko's business address is the office of his father, an attorney. Biographical data concerning Rorko is being forwarded 6 July 60.

3. Rorko explained that he knows many people in Cuba and other Caribbean countries as a result of his reportorial work in Nicaragua, Panama, Costa Rica, Cuba and other areas, and he says that because of a keen interest in the problem of what can be done about Castro and Communism in Cuba, and his work on the current documentary film, he has been keeping in close touch with various Cuban opposition groups. He insisted on going into his Caribbean background at great length and described in detail his visits to Nicaragua, Panama, Cuba etc. The events he mentioned are all past history now however, and he will not attempt to recount them here.

4. Rorko gave all this background merely to try to prove that he is well acquainted with the situation in Cuba and understands the various opposition groups. He then came to his real point which is that he regards Max Lasa, whom he has seen a great deal of recently, as the most naive of all those who went to take action against Castro. He feels that Lasa is completely gullible, and is in contact with the right people in the Cuban army and other Cuban organizations who can lend the support when the right time comes. According to Rorko, Lasa believes that the job should be done by Cubans from a base outside the US, and that Lasa is brave and resourceful enough to lead a successful action if he is furnished the necessary arms and ammunition. Rorko believes, further, that Lasa is politically in the middle of the road, that he is not motivated by hatred and would not bring about a blood bath in Cuba. In short, he feels that Lasa would be with the US all the way.
