- In February 1960 Indalecio PASTORA Molina, Nicaraguan opposition leader who left Costa Rica about 20 February 1960 after leading guerrilla attacks against the regime from the Costa Rican border area for several months,¹ was winning increasing support among Cubans who favored the overthrow of Nicaraguan President Luis SANCHEZ Toribio. If PASTORA initiated a campaign against the Nicaraguan Government he could count on immediate and substantial aid in arms and men from Cuba. The Cubans would arrange public demonstrations to seek aid for PASTORA, ostensibly spontaneous, but in reality pre-organized with governmental approval. Communists in Cuba would take advantage of the situation to penetrate the revolutionary movement, following the guidance of Ernesto GUEVARA Serpa and Raúl CASTRO Ruz, high-level officials in the government of Fidel CASTRO Ruz. Fidel CASTRO, Prime Minister, was not disposed to support foreign revolutions because he feared an invasion of Cuba and wanted to be in a position to defend his country. GUEVARA and Raúl CASTRO supported the Communist factions, seeing a possibility for infiltration and an opportunity to take advantage of the chaos that they believed would follow a successful revolution, since no political leader had the ability to govern Nicaragua after the fall of SANCHEZ.
- Francisco PRIETO Barahona, Nicaraguan revolutionary leader in Cuba, had hoped to attend a meeting of opposition leaders in Maracaibo the last week of February 1960 but was unable to obtain a visa in time for the trip. PRIETO and Enrique LUCAS Yarfan, opposition leader in Costa Rica, were quarreling and no longer co-operated in plans and activities.² Francisco DIAZ Moya, also involved in a quarrel with PRIETO, did attend the Maracaibo meeting.³ In February 1960 PRIETO made a trip, traveling free of charge, to Oriente Province, Cuba, to raise funds for the revolution.
- The fifth floor of the Seville-Biltmore Hotel in Havana, as well as rooms in International House, operated in conjunction with the hotel, housed persons associated with Nicaraguan revolutionary activities free of charge. The following paragraphs list persons in Cuba in February 1960 who were participating in or supporting Nicaraguan revolutionary plans and gives known details of their activities.

- a. Herminio COPAL, a Cuban about thirty years old, had experience in sabotage. He quit his university studies before writing a thesis for a law degree to join the fight against Fulgencio BATISTA, former President of Cuba. Fidel CAJERO offered him a position in the Cuban Government, but he refused, preferring to participate in Nicaraguan efforts to overthrow SOMBIA. For Nicaragua he favored social and political reforms similar to those instituted by Fidel CASTRO. He gave Francisco FRIXIONE Saravia, Nicaraguan revolutionary leader in Cuba, his full support. COPAL's twin, Luis, also had offered to fight with FRIXIONE, but he did not support FRIXIONE as wholeheartedly as Herminio COPAL.
- b. Luis Miguel GARCIA, a Cuban, performed sabotage operations in Havana against BATISTA.⁴ He was in Honduras when Pedro Joaquin CHAMORRO Cardenal invaded Nicaragua in early 1959, going afterward to Cuba. He claimed to have access to a small airport near the Honduras/Nicaraguan frontier, which would be usable after some repairs.⁵
- c. Miguel Ernesto VIGIL Leona, an engineer about twenty-two years old, appeared to be important in FRIXIONE's organization. He claimed that FRIXIONE intended to send him to Washington, D.C., and then to Nicaragua to assist in revolutionary preparations. He also was in Honduras when CHAMORRO invaded Nicaragua.
- d. Tote BANCHERA, a friend of Camilo CHAVEZ COS, was highly esteemed by FRIXIONE and had helped much in preparing for a revolution.
- e. Aristides RUIZ, from Leon, Nicaragua, also was a member of FRIXIONE's group.
- f. Donald CASTILLO, a Nicaraguan eighteen years old, had become disillusioned with FRIXIONE and wanted to join PASTORAL. He and two other young Nicaraguans, Rosalio MALLS/IN and Ivan VACA, were among a group of Nicaraguans at the air base at San Julian, in Pinar del Rio Province, some in training and others employed by the Fuerza Aerea Revolucionaria (FAR—Cuban Air Force). An officer at the base, Ramiro VALLES, had captured nineteen arms, but the purpose of these arms had not been established.
- g. Octavio GUTIERREZ, called "Marciano," was a civil employee of FAR. He entered Cuba from Honduras as an exile in August 1959 under the name Godofredo SANCHEZ Uriarte.
- h. One Pedro GONZALEZ had trained saboteurs in Nicaragua after entering Nicaragua illegally from the Costa Rican frontier. While in Nicaragua he talked with Armando CRUZ Reyes, who had arranged to send dynamite into Nicaragua. CALDERA (FAR), head of the Leon branch of the National Bank of Nicaragua, who was one of the leading Nicaraguan saboteurs and had dynamite and other tools of sabotage in his possession, and Jose Luis ARTELLO,

- l. Carlos MOLINA, called "Pelle," was a former officer in the Nicaraguan Air Force. Since being in Cuba he has a P-51 pilot at San Julian. He was a FRIKIODES partisan.
- j. Pedro SANTAMARIA, a sergeant in the FAR at the Santa Clara base, had talked with FRIKIODES about obtaining aid from General DILIS Pastores, a member of the service company of the fourth regiment of the rural revolutionary police. DILIS apparently had seventy-five men, armed with rifles and Thompson submachine-guns, who were willing to fight in Nicaragua under his command. Apparently DILIS' group was identical with a group of Cubans who wanted to go by boat to Nicaragua, before being persuaded that they should wait for a better opportunity.
- k. Lausarino (fmu), a Cuban medical student, had furnished chemicals to Nicaraguan revolutionaries. Explosives, as well as arms, had been sent to Nicaragua by plane.
- l. DEL RIO (fmu), a captain in charge of the base at San Julian, was generous in offering to help FRIKIODES's revolutionary group in any way possible.
- m. Pepito ARJIVAT, second in command of Pinar del Rio, furnished Nicaraguan revolutionaries with arms and gave any assistance he could; however, Mario FRIKIODES tried to hinder ARJIVAT's activities.
- n. Maximo CHOCOCHI, chief of the Bahia municipal police, was willing to furnish rifles as requested.
- o. Sonorito MIRZA, a sergeant at the military airport in Bahia, was furnishing arms to FRIKIODES.
- p. Porfirio CLAUDIO, a first lieutenant with the secret service, claimed that he had one hundred men in Camaguey ready to fight in Nicaragua. CLAUDIO personally wanted to fight with FASTER.
- q. Alberto RAO Giron, already connected with Nicaraguan revolutionary affairs, and Angel GARCIA, a Cuban, apparently had two hundred fully-trained men to add to FRIKIODES's forces. RAO had great influence with Fidel CASTRO, whom he trained in Mexico, and had offered assistance of assistance to any revolutionary movement when it obtained the approval of Fidel CASTRO.
- r. Luis PIEDRA, chief of the judicial police, promised to supply arms when needed.
- s. Estela LORENZO, financial secretary of the Confederacion de Trabajadores Cubanos (CTC-Cuban labor organization), signed money to FRIKIODES.
- t. Others associated with revolutionary activities were Chester Simpson, a Nicaraguan; Julie GARCIA, a Puerto Rican; Mario ALBARRANOS, and SANTAMARIA (fmu).

- Miguel MEDIC Batamont, employed in the Cuban Ministry of Education, contributed to the arms supply of Nicaraguan revolutionaries, and assisted in sending arms to Honduras addressed to the Ministry of Education as books.⁷
- Sam Galcremy, a United States citizen thirty-three years old, associated with the Nicaraguans. His ideas were absurd, and he appeared to be completely Communistic, dangerous, and unscrupulous.
- Gerald P. Hanning, a twenty-three-year-old United States citizen born in Los Angeles, California, was employed by PIAM at San Julian as a parochialist. Hanning was engaged in training Nicaraguans, and said that there were only twenty-five revolutionists in Cuba, located in Baracoa, Cayo Largo, Oriente, and San Antonio. All were willing to fight in Nicaragua, and would go well armed. Hanning, also a flyer, was a Marine in Korea and at the Guantanamo Naval Base, and had been warned when he was fighting with CASTRO that he could lose his citizenship, but this was not important to him. He said that the base at San Julian could be used as a location from which to fly food and arms to rebels fighting within Nicaragua. He knew of a number of 7.62-caliber Belgian automatic rifles that could be made available to Nicaraguan rebels. According to Hanning, a Mexican island one hundred and fifty miles from Cuba might be used as a base of operations for sending a plane or boat to Nicaragua, since it was poorly policed. He said he could furnish a C-47 or C-46 aircraft when it was needed. These associated with the revolutionary activities practiced discretion to avoid having rumors reach PIAM CASTRO, who did not favor the entire opposition movement, having become disengaged with the disagreements and lost faith among Nicaraguan rebel leaders. The Cuban Minister of Government was aware of these activities and was sympathetic to the cause.⁸

Field Comments

1. PASTORA left Costa Rica with twenty-five men, going to San Salvador.
2. PRISION brought several arms to Costa Rica in late December 1959 but PASTORA and LACAYO disagreed on their use, and PRISION took them back to Cuba with the intention of sending them to Honduras. (CS-3/WJ2,432)
3. IRANRA, traveling on special passport No. 8/59/31, issued in Havana, arrived Costa Rica from Panama on 9 March 1960, according to official immigration lists.
4. One Luis GARCIA Asencio, a Cuban, was reported to be in Costa Rica in late December 1959 to participate in revolutionary activities.

Source Comments

5. One Enrique ABOIMAJES, a Honduran, had a small field on a farm near the Honduras/Nicaraguan border, which could be used by Nicaraguan rebels, with whom he sympathized.

6. Johnny Kitcham, United States citizen, about forty years old, claimed that he was going to head Cuba's secret service.

7. It is also possible that in December 1959 Honduras delegates to a convention of the Asociacion de Transportes Aereos carried arms back with them to Honduras.

Headquarters Comment: Miguel Angel de la A. MUÑOZ Botancourt, Cuban national, was reported in January 1960 to be going to Miami on an unidentified mission for the Cuban Government.

8. Source Comment: Concerning travel, Hanning said he would like to go to Costa Rica to co-ordinate activities between Cuban and Costa Rican groups. He also hoped to go to the United States, traveling on a false name and Cuban passport. He had spoken to William Morgan and believed that Morgan could obtain the passport for him. In the United States Hanning wanted to sell liberty bonds in California and obtain arms and planes from a ranch in Texas. He claimed he could do this by using connections he used to obtain similar material when he was aiding Fidel CASTRO. He also claimed that he had gone to Havana to talk with PRIKICH about the trip and supplying arms to PASTORA. He had a wild scheme to steal two small planes from an Air Force base in Texas, possibly Brownsville, and said he had friends in the Marine Corps who would obtain arms from corps arsenals. Another scheme was to hold up a truck carrying clothing and arms from Virginia to Indianapolis on a regular bimonthly trip.

Hanning cited an example of arms procurement: Captain BECUELA (fmu) Chilean, was sent by the Chilean Government to Miami to obtain six B-26 aircraft which were sent to the Dominican Government. He claimed he could use the same system by using two friends well connected in the Guatemalan Government.

According to Hanning, when Fidel CASTRO and Anastas Mikoyan visited San Julian they discussed Soviet aid to Cuba, including secret aid in men and arms.
