

Prophetic 1992 Interview with Putin Mentor Anatoly Sobchak Predicts Existential Clash

SIMPLICIUS THE THINKER
2 MAY 2023

40

5

2

Share

St. Petersburg's first mayor and Putin mentor Anatoly Sobchak gives a sobering and darkly prophetic interview where he correctly outlines not only the injustice of Ukraine filching the land given to it by Russia after splitting from the USSR, but how Ukraine will now become a 'time bomb' as it arms itself for a future clash that would endanger mankind itself.

This is particularly interesting to me because I've mentioned several times before how people close to the geopolitical situation in the 90s and 2000s all predicted today's events. Others who had only begun following the situation in recent years erroneously believed that the Ukraine situation had only begun to inflame after the various revolutions of the 2000s. For instance, the Orange Revolution of 2004-2005, and even the Georgian Rose Revolution of 2003, which was linked in a general way.

But in actuality, the tensions and hostilities between Ukraine and Russia can be traced back to right after the dissolution of the Soviet Union. Of course, most of us know that the tensions can really be traced back even much further: to the CIA Project Aerodynamic, for instance, which first began to establish radical nationalist enclave movements in western Ukraine, akin to the GLADIO network. (Here's the paperwork on it from their own site)

~~TOP SECRET~~
SECURITY INFORMATION

MEMORANDUM FOR THE CHIEF, PLANS

28 August 1953

SUBJECT: Project AERODYNAMIC (Renewal)

1. The FI purpose of Project AERODYNAMIC is to exploit the anti-Soviet Ukrainian resistance groups (UHVR, UPA, ZPUHVR and the OUN/B) in Western Europe for intelligence purposes. The specific FI objectives are the training and dispatch of agents into the Soviet Ukraine to procure operational, document and positive intelligence, and to establish a sound UHVR-CIA working relationship both in and outside the target area through the ZPUHVR.

2. Project AERODYNAMIC was originally approved on 31 June 1951 as a joint FI-PP operation. To date, the project has been successful in dispatching agents into the Ukrainian SSR and has established W/T contact with two of the agents dispatched. The field of intelligence procurement has been limited to situation reports and a few items of military importance. Three SODB's have been disseminated.

3. Present plans call for the continued training of three agents, recruitment and training of three additional agents and the utilization of one agent spotter in Western Europe. Agent training is being transferred from Germany to the DOB. Detailed Commo and Logistical annexes are attached to the project outline.

4. A breakdown of the estimated cost, [] for the FI portion of Project AERODYNAMIC is as follows:

Salaries:

1 chief agent (high-ranking member of emigre group)	$ 8,000
3 agent trainees	3,600
3 additional agent trainees (9 months)	2,700
Housekeeping personnel	1,500
	$15,800

$15,800

Travel

Operational expenses (disposal, emergency, bonuses, etc.)
Operational currency (foreign)
Operational supplies and equipment

TOTAL

[]

5. SR requesting renewal of the FI portion of Project AERODYNAMIC for the period 1 July 1953 through 30 June 1954.

DECLASSIFIED AND RELEASED BY CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY
SOURCE: MEMPHIS/EXEMPTION 3828
REASON: 25X(1) DATE 2007

CLASSIFICATION
Cancelled Changed to
BY AUTHORITY OF Name
Office
Date

100-1-58-294
1360-1-10-57

Acting Chief, Projects Branch

Chief, Operations

Approved:

Chief, Plans

Date

23 Sept 53

88049-A

ATTACHMENT: Project Outline AERODYNAMIC
cc: STC/SPB, RI for Vital Records

TOP SECRET

Copy 1 of 4 copies

But it really spun into overdrive in the '90s, particularly after Western NGOs and Soros money began to pour in.

In the video at the top, I've included several other clips showing some of the Western/intel involvements in Ukraine dating to the '40s and '70s; I'd advise you all to watch its entirety. The fact is, people on both sides of the aisle knew this. So when the fraudulent Belovezha Accords were signed in '91, shrewd Russians could intuit that it was only a matter of time until Ukraine's ultra-nationalism uncloaked itself from the shadows and came to the forefront to begin agitating in provocateur fashion against Russia.

This can be seen not only from a wealth of videos and offhand statements from officials at that time, but even in popular culture. For instance, one of Russia's most popular films, 1997's Brat ('Brother'), featured a plotline with ex-Russian soldiers chased by Ukrainian ultra-nationalist mobsters who repeatedly flaunted their hatred of 'Moskals', while the Russian characters, in turn, hurled insults at them like 'Nazi' and 'Banderite'.

This is why by the late 1990s, politicians like Zhirinovsky were already well attuned to the inevitability of circumstances. Included in the top video is another prophetic tirade of his given in a 1999 Council of Europe appearance, where he, with trademark stentorian bravura, exclaims that there will be a war for Crimea, the Balkans, Abkhazia, etc., in the near future.

He correctly invokes the U.S. empire's chief strategy: perpetual balkanization. First you break up the USSR into its constituent parts; then you break up even those parts into smaller pieces. You continue on ad infinitum until nothing is left but powerless irredenta and rump-states run by warlords who are easily bribed, blackmailed, or killed for ultimate control. Pitting Ukraine against Russia in order to break up the critical Sevastopol port control was part of this strategy.

But back to Sobchak; he too was right. Ukraine thanklessly took the land graciously granted them by Russia, squatted on it for decades while enjoying Russian subsidization, then unceremoniously tore up the paperwork and left, taking the historically Russian lands with it.

Here's an example of what I mean. These charts show each SSR country's input vs. output into the USSR in terms of their consumption vs. production; in short, it shows which ones carried their own weight, and which were subsidized by 'mother' Russia.

← The upper figure is production per capita (thousands of dollars per year)
 ← The lower figure is per capita consumption (thousands of dollars per year)

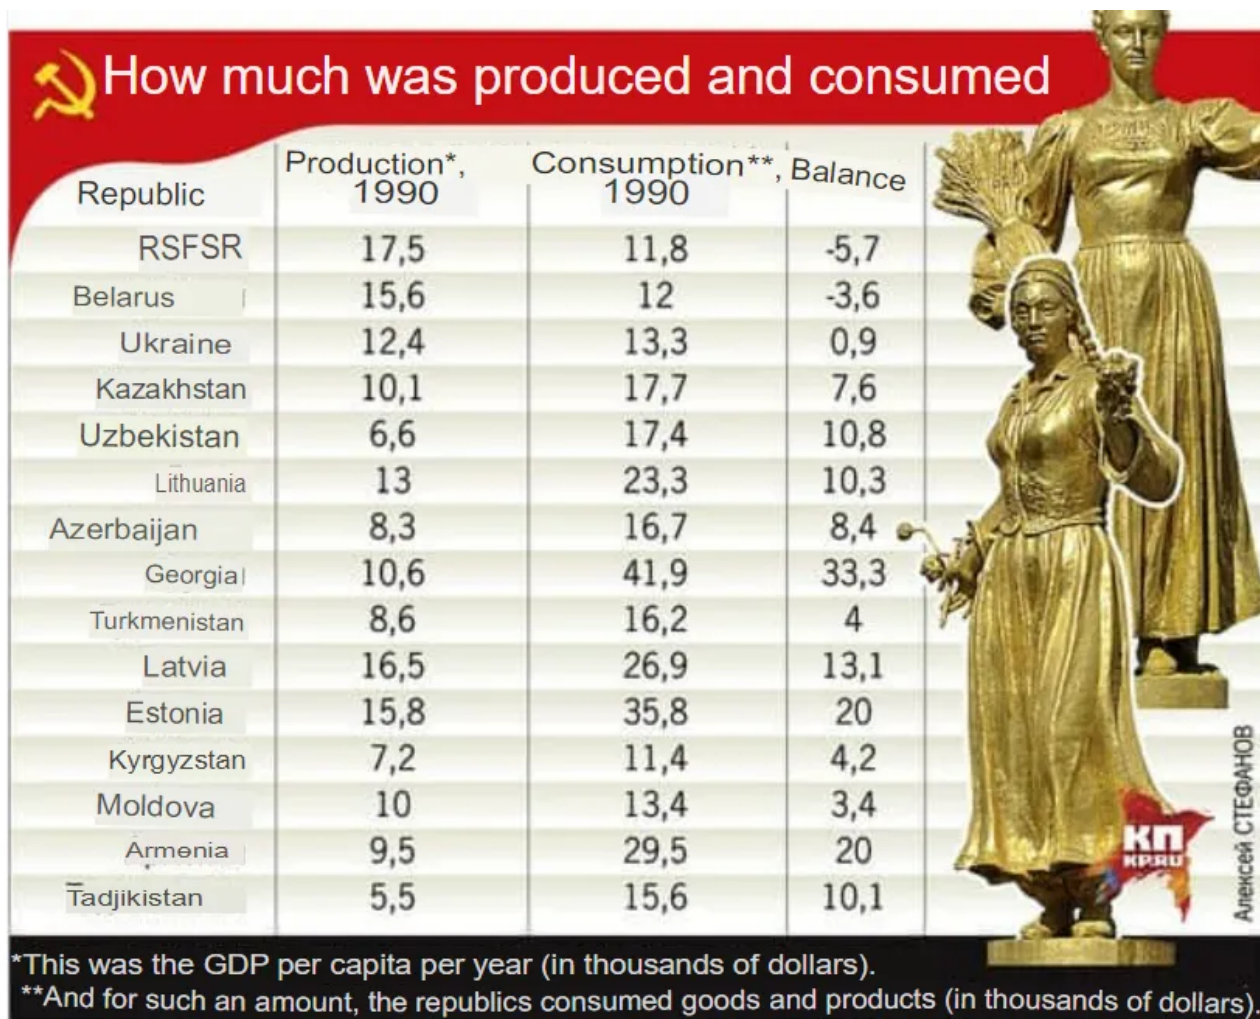

Republic	1985	1987	1989	1990
 RSFSR	14,8 12,5	15,8 13,3	17,5 12,8	17,5 11,8
 Belarus	15,1 10,4	16,1 10,5	16,9 12	15,6 12
 Ukraine	12,1 13,3	12,7 13,2	13,1 14,7	12,4 13,3
 Kazakhstan	10,2 8,9	10,9 10,4	10,8 14,8	10,1 17,7
 Uzbekistan	7,5 12,0	7,2 12,9	6,7 18,0	6,6 17,4
 Lithuania	13 23,9	14,6 22,2	15,6 26,1	13 23,3
 Azerbaijan	11 7,4	10,8 12,7	9,9 14	8,3 16,7
 Georgia	12,8 31,5	12,8 30,3	11,9 35,5	10,6 41,9
 TURKMENISTAN	8,6 13,7	8,8 18,8	9,2 20,0	8,6 16,2
 Latvia	17 22,6	17,3 19	17,7 21,7	16,5 26,9
 Estonia	15,4 26	17,6 27,8	16,9 28,2	15,8 35,8
 kyrgyzstan	8,3 8,8	7,8 10,2	8 10,1	7,2 11,4
 MOLDOVA	10,5 12,8	11,2 13,5	11,6 15,8	10 13,4
 armenia	12,7 32,1	12,4 30,1	10,9 30	9,5 29,5
 Tajikistan	6,5 10,7	6,2 9,5	6,3 13,7	5,5 15,6

Данные из газеты «Советская Россия» за 1992 г.

Note how, as the '80s wore on, Russia's ratio of production over consumption grew more and more net positive into surplus, while other countries grew the opposite direction; meaning, Russia was subsidizing them with increasingly greater disparity.

Ukraine wasn't the worst offender by a long shot, but it was still in the red, which means it was suckling at the Russian teat without giving anything back. Even Belarus was in the surplus—the only one, in fact.

Another look at just 1990, with the balances more clearly shown:

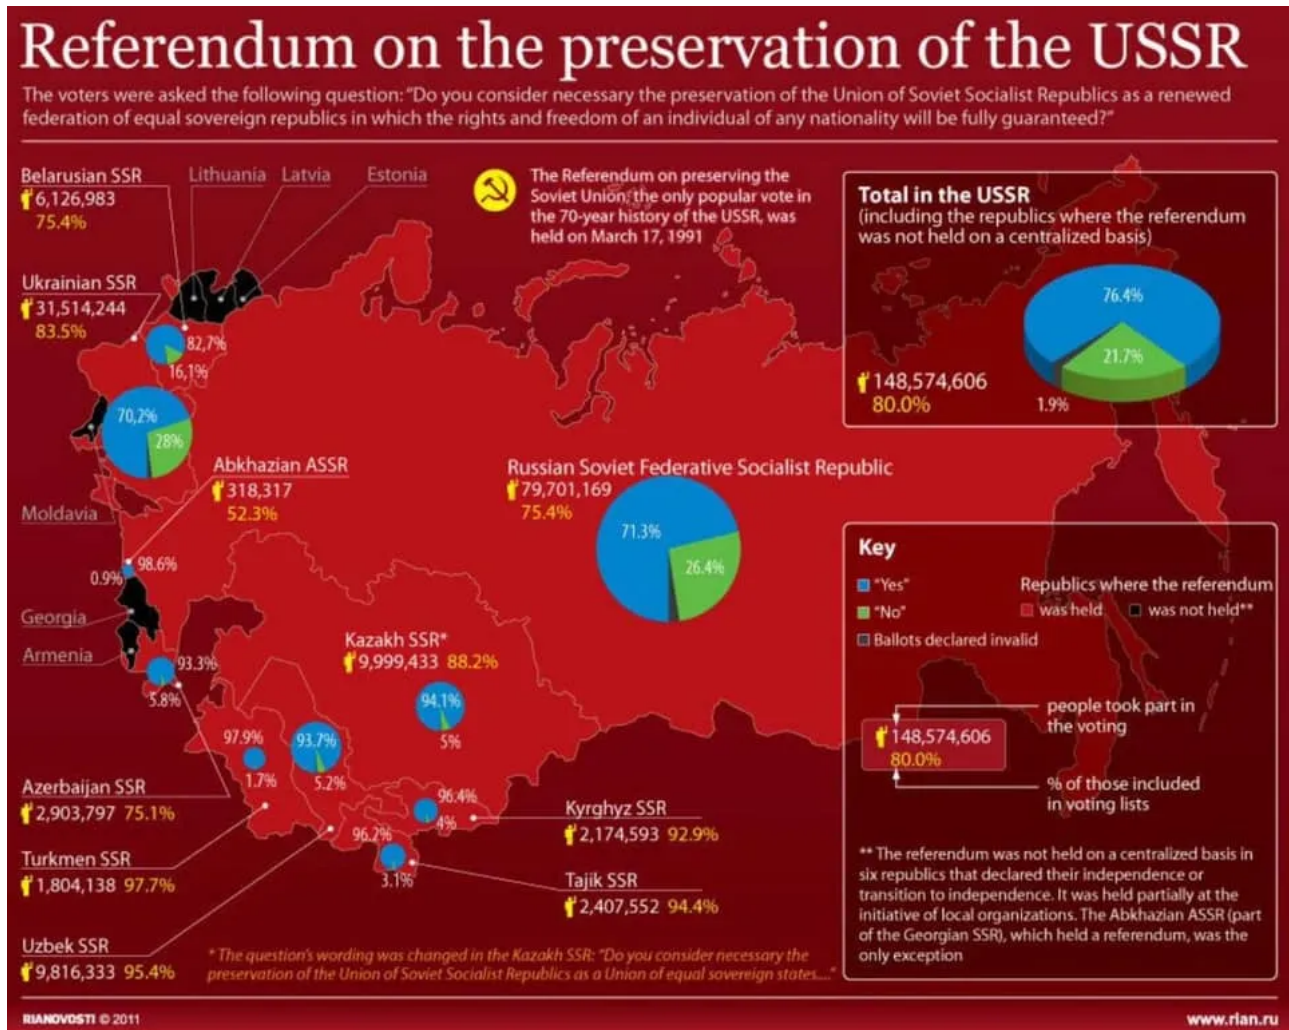

How much was produced and consumed

Republic	Production*, 1990	Consumption, 1990	Balance
RSFSR	17,5	11,8	-5,7
Belarus	15,6	12	-3,6
Ukraine	12,4	13,3	0,9
Kazakhstan	10,1	17,7	7,6
Uzbekistan	6,6	17,4	10,8
Lithuania	13	23,3	10,3
Azerbaijan	8,3	16,7	8,4
Georgia	10,6	41,9	33,3
Turkmenistan	8,6	16,2	4
Latvia	16,5	26,9	13,1
Estonia	15,8	35,8	20
Kyrgyzstan	7,2	11,4	4,2
Moldova	10	13,4	3,4
Armenia	9,5	29,5	20
Tadjikistan	5,5	15,6	10,1

*This was the GDP per capita per year (in thousands of dollars).
 And for such an amount, the republics consumed goods and products (in thousands of dollars).

The most foreboding part of Sobchak's statement, though, was his foresight into not just the inevitable military clash that would happen were Ukraine allowed to build an army, but uniquely, he alone foresaw the existential quality of this looming danger. Even Zhirinovsky didn't characterize his admonishments by invoking a danger 'to all mankind', as Sobchak did.

With that said, it should be obligatory to mention that the results of a people's referendum on the breakup of the USSR in early 1991 were not honored:

"The referendum on preserving the Soviet Union, the only popular vote in the 70-year history of the USSR, was held on March 17, 1991."

The ultimate irony: Ukrainians voted with an almost identical percentage as the Russians—70-71%—to preserve the USSR; but the referendum was ignored. Now, this has been an existential clash long in the coming. But it could have all been avoided if only the democratic vote was honored, and the USSR was preserved.

This is standard operating procedure for the anti-democratic, fascistic globalists. They don't honor any referendums until they go their way:

Fig. 3

DON'T TAKE NO FOR AN ANSWER

Country	Date	Issue	'No' vote	Outcome
Denmark	1992	Maastricht Treaty	51.7%	Made to vote again
Denmark	2000	Joining the euro	53.2%	Accepted
Ireland	2001	Nice Treaty	53.9%	Made to vote again
Sweden	2003	Joining the euro	56.1%	Accepted
France	2005	EU Constitution	54.9%	Ignored
Netherlands	2005	EU Constitution	61.5%	Ignored
Ireland	2008	Lisbon Treaty	53.2%	Made to vote again
Greece	2015	Euro bailout	61.3%	Ignored

An even greater irony: the soon-to-be 'independent' republics of the USSR's first taste of the so-called Western 'democracy' was in fact a fraudulent bait-and-switch, setting the tone for a future riddled with Western interventions and color revolutions.

If you enjoyed the read, I would greatly appreciate if you subscribed to a monthly/yearly pledge to support my work, so that I may continue providing you with detailed, incisive reports like this one.