On the evening of December 10th, Russian missile struck the city of Zaporozhie. The footage confirmed damage to some facilities in the city but the local authorities hid the target, blaming the Russian military for another alleged attack on civilians.

It was revealed today that the precision strike of the Russian 9M723-1 missile of the Iskander complex destroyed the hospital complex in Zaporozhie. It turned out the large hospital facilities had an extensive network of fortified basements that was turned into important deployment point of the Armed Forces of Ukraine.

The territory was cordoned off by security forces and the Ukrainian military in order to avoid any leakage of information. The footage confirms that the search operations were aimed to sort out the rubble deep under the ground.

According to local reports, the Armed Forces of Ukraine suffered heavy losses, including in high-ranked officers. NATO officers were also reportedly killed in the attack.

The Ukrainian military has been hiding its headquarters and military bases in civilian buildings since the very beginning of the conflict. One of the reasons is that the public buildings, which were built back by the Soviet Union, were well fortified, some had underground fortifications, aimed to save the population in case of military, even nuclear conflict. Today, they are used by Ukrainian and NATO forces throughout the country but they can no longer hide from Russian strikes.
