After Huey Rich's death, the Chicago Defender ran a story headlined "Obama Asked to Bow Out of Race Against Rush" after one South Side pastor backing Rush called for Barack to end his campaign. Privately, several savvy observers sympathetic to Barack had the same thought. John Kupper, David Axelrod's partner who had expected to work for Barack, realized that Rush had been recast as a figure of widespread sympathy as opposed to a loser of a mayoral race. "Barack ought to get out," Kupper told Chris Sautter, and Sautter did not disagree, for Huey's death had "washed away any bad feelings that people seemed to have about Bobby." He appreciated Kupper's view that now the race was "completely unwinnable." But with $18,000 spent on polling, and Sautter just two weeks from starting radio advertising and direct mail on Barack's behalf, neither Dan Shomon nor Barack seriously considered standing down.

Four days after Huey's funeral, Bobby Rush formally announced his candidacy for reelection. Cook County Board president John Stroger, state representative Lou Jones, Aldermen Freddrenna Lyle and Arenda Troutman, and former state senator Alice Palmer were among the 150 people in attendance. Lyle, who had a collegial relationship with Barack, told reporters that Obama and Donne Trotter "are fine gentlemen who've down outstanding jobs in Springfield" while stressing that "we shouldn't cannibalize each other." Barack told the Chicago Tribune that "an elected official's vision is more important than his seniority" and noted that Rush had challenged and defeated incumbent representative Charlie Hayes eight years earlier. Rush had said "he would bring more energy to the office, and that's what I intend to do."

Although it was not publicly noted at the time, the day after Rush's announcement Barack's campaign received five $1,000 contributions from private citizens who shared the same employer—FORUM, or Fulfilling Our Responsibility Unto Mankind, the South Shore social services agency run by Yesse Yehudah, Barack's 1998 Republican opponent. Yehudah "handed Barack five checks," Dan Shomon remembered. Such an expensive gesture seemed odd, and almost a year would pass before the donation would attract scrutiny. Barack continued to call for the governor to appoint a minority member to the all-white Illinois Commerce Commission and for passage of his "universal health care" state constitutional amendment that would lead to "health insurance for all." At a candidates' forum in Woodlawn, with Bobby Rush represented by a volunteer stand-in, Barack argued that "the test of leadership has to go beyond how you are voting. The question is your ability to mobilize constituencies outside of the 1st Congressional District." In his Hyde Park Herald column, Barack did not mention his candidacy and stressed that at the upcoming veto session, "I will be working my hardest to get an override" of the gubernatorial veto that had sidelined his child support reform bill. Donne Trotter, struggling to raise funds and attract attention to his campaign, attacked Barack more than Bobby Rush. Trotter argued that his Springfield experience would make him an excellent congressman, and he asserted that "the only money Barack Obama has brought back is money I've given him as Senate Appropriations spokesman. Has he done better than most? I wouldn't say so. I certainly wouldn't say anything at all based on Obama's two years in office."

Political observers disagreed on how much traction Barack was gaining against Rush. State representative Tom Dart, who represented many of the mostly white neighborhoods that made up the 1st District's western wing, told the Herald that given Rush's abysmal showing against Mayor Daley, "you'd have to say he's in trouble." But powerful 19th Ward committeeman Tom Hynes argued that "the mayoral vote was a positive vote for the mayor,” not anti-Rush. Then, one week into November, after Dan Shomon had given Chris Sautter more than $20,000 to reserve airtime for upcoming radio ads, the poll results came in. Rush’s firm spoke with five hundred 1st District Democratic voters, 90 percent of whom knew Rush’s name, compared to only 33 percent for Trotter and just 22 percent for Barack. They also overwhelmingly supported the incumbent over both challengers, with 68 percent choosing Rush, 10 percent Trotter, and only 9 percent Barack, with 14 percent undecided. Among black voters, 72 percent backed Rush, among whites, 52 percent. For Barack, pollster Ron Lester’s results were equally dismal. Rush’s approval rating was 70 percent, Barack’s name was known to just 11 percent, and only 10 percent said they supported him. Lester was struck by how “incredibly popular” Rush was, and especially in the immediate wake of his son’s death, Rush’s “support ran deep.”

Sautter, who was busy producing Barack’s first two radio ads, remembered that the poll results were “much worse than anybody imagined,” especially given what Shomon and his Springfield buddies thought they had heard from 1st District Democrats four months earlier. Sautter’s view of Barack’s chances “went way down when we got the poll back,” and there was no question that in private “the wind had clearly been let out of the campaign.” The painful lesson, Barack later explained, was “do the poll before you announce,” because now he had no immediate escape. “Less than halfway into the campaign, I knew in my bones that I was going to lose. Each morning from that point forward I awoke with a vague sense of dread.” And the election was still four long months away.<sup>4</sup>

Barack’s two sixty-second radio ads debuted Monday, November 15, on black Chicago’s two major stations, WVON and WGCI. Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller called Barack “a serious challenger” to Rush but mused that Trotter “may help split any anti-incumbent vote that’s out there.” Rush had been “humiliated” in his loss to Mayor Daley, “but the Daley folks are said to be eyeing Obama as a possible future challenger to hizzoner and may be secretly wishing for a Rush win to stop Obama’s rise.”

The first of Chris Sautter’s ads featured “Diane Johnson,” an African American woman with a distinctly down-home voice. “I’m frightened. We can’t afford health insurance and some day my family’s gonna need a doctor.” An announcer followed.

For Mrs. Johnson and many others, basic health care today is out of reach. But one new leader is taking on the insurance industry with a bold plan to guarantee that health insurance is available for everyone, regardless of income. That leader is Illinois state senator Barack Obama, candidate for Congress. Barack Obama worked as a community organizer in Roseland and Altgeld Gardens, fighting for the rights of struggling families to receive their fair share of services. After law school, Barack Obama turned down the high-paying corporate jobs to become a civil rights lawyer, and Barack Obama headed up Project Vote, registering over 100,000 minority voters. Now, Barack Obama is running for Congress, a new champion for affordable health care, HMO reform, and better prescription drug benefits for seniors. Barack Obama, Democrat for Congress. New leadership that works for us.

Barack uttered only the obligatory final sentence: “Paid for by Obama for Congress 2000.”

Sautter’s goal was to increase Barack’s name recognition, and the second ad featured an exchange between a black couple, harking back to August’s power failure. “Oh man, there go the lights again.” “Another blackout.” “I’m tired of this. When’s somebody going to do something.” “Obama,” the woman responded. “Say what?” “State senator Barack Obama. He’s fighting for reforms that would force ComEd to refund customers who lose power.” Then came the announcer.

Barack Obama, Democratic candidate for Congress. As a community organizer, Obama fought to make sure residents in Roseland and Altgeld Gardens received their fair share of services. Barack Obama. As a lawyer, Obama fought for civil rights and headed up Project Vote, registering over 100,000 minority voters. Barack Obama. Elected to the Illinois Senate, Barack Obama pushed to make health insurance available to everyone, regardless of income, and brought millions of dollars into our community for juvenile crime prevention.

Then the black couple returned. “Here come the lights. ComEd must have heard from that Senator Bama.” “That’s O-bama. Barack Obama. And they’ll be hearing a lot more from him.” Then the announcer: “Barack Obama, Democrat for Congress. New leadership that works for us,” the same slogan featured in the first ad. Barack again provided just the final words: “Paid for by Obama for Congress 2000.”

By November’s third week, the campaign had spent $31,000 to broadcast those two ads, and Dan Shomon was working with three young lawyers from the prominent Mayer Brown law firm who had volunteered to help produce a “book” of “Barack’s positions on all the issues,” particularly “specific economic development ideas” for the 1st District. Barack had to be in Springfield for two veto session weeks before and after Thanksgiving, and during the first he stopped in Decatur, a small city forty-five minutes east of Springfield, to join Rev. Jesse Jackson at an evening protest rally. Two months earlier, a brawl at a high school football game had led to two-year suspensions of seven African American students. The black community was angry about the severity of that penalty, and onstage with Jackson, Barack announced that he would introduce a bill requiring that any suspended student, apart from those who had attacked a teacher or carried a weapon, be provided alternative education. “My attitude is that to the extent that we’re dealing with nonviolent offenders or students who haven’t struck teachers or used weapons, that probably it makes sense that we have a mandate that in fact these children attend alternative schools,” Barack told the Decatur Herald & Review. “That’s going to be better than having them on the streets,” he added. “One of the most difficult things we as a society have to decide is how we deal with young people who have engaged in antisocial behavior. If we simply throw them out, we can anticipate that over time a good number of these people will end up in the prison system.” He also worried that Decatur’s disciplinary policies “disproportionately affect African-Americans.”<sup>5</sup>

On November 21, the Chicago Sun-Times’ Steve Neal reported the poll results Bobby Rush’s campaign had received some days earlier. Neal stressed that in the portion of the 1st District that comprised Barack’s state Senate district, Rush led him by only 52 to 24, and with a margin of just 13 points among voters who knew Barack. “The primary might tighten if Obama becomes better known,” Neal wrote. A Crain’s Chicago Business story on the race highlighted Barack’s radio ads and noted that Barack had been “perceived as a rising star in Chicago politics since he headed a successful minority voter registration drive in 1992.” Barack’s campaign had now raised just more than $200,000, and while that could fund the radio ads plus the cost of yard signs, leaflets, office rent, and salaries for Shomon, Will Burns, Amy Szarek, and Cynthia Miller, Barack would not have the funds to run television ads in Chicago’s expensive media market. Barack continued to stress that in Rush “we don’t have an effective advocate,” and he drew coverage in the Tribune, the Defender, and weekly neighborhood papers like the Hyde Park Herald and the Chicago Citizen by announcing a plan to spend $50 million over five years to improve computer technology at the 150 public schools in the 1st District. “I believe the role of a congressman is to tap the federal government, the state and private resources to make this possible,” with local universities playing key roles. “Our children must have a strong, technology-based curriculum in the schools to be able to compete in the job market,” Barack explained. “When kids get excited about computer technology, their parents get excited. They become the catalyst for change in the community.”

On the first day of the veto session’s second week, Barack’s increased child support payments bill returned to the Senate floor. The House had overridden Governor Ryan’s veto by a 102 to 15 margin, but Ryan’s aides were lobbying fiercely in the Senate to sustain it, arguing that if the bill became law, Illinois would pay out—to the federal government as well as recipients—$6 million more each year than the state took in. On the floor, Barack recounted that of the $88 million Illinois presently collected, half went to Washington, the state retained $35 million, and hardly $8 million went to children. For a successful override, Barack needed at least thirty-six votes in the fifty-nine member Senate, and he described HB 1232 as a “commonsense bill” that would help remedy “how we’ve screwed up the child support system in this state.” On the initial electronic tally, the voting board displayed thirty-seven voting yes, including ten Republicans, with only seven nos and fourteen embarrassed Republicans voting present. But when Public Health and Welfare committee chairman Dave Syverson requested a head-count verification of the two-thirds majority, Barack’s victory evaporated. In what Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller described as an “obviously scripted move,” two yes voters—Democrat John Cullerton and Republican Stan Weaver, Pate Philip’s top deputy, had left the floor, and the override failed, 35–7–14.

“I’m very frustrated,” Barack told statehouse reporters. “For some reason, the governor dug in his heels on this modest attempt to put more money into the hands of needy children,” but Barack vowed to return to the issue in 2000. The short veto session was additionally unpleasant because a number of colleagues questioned the wisdom of both Barack and Donne Trotter remaining in the congressional race against Bobby Rush, and because Trotter’s own antipathy toward Barack became increasingly vocal. One staffer overheard, and shared with friends, how Trotter under his breath used two names from Roots to refer to Barack as both “Kunta Kinte” and “Toby.” To have a fellow senator calling Barack “a derogatory name” was unprecedented, but Trotter’s Republican friend Steve Rauschenberger knew that Barack’s presence in the congressional race was more of a stimulus for Trotter’s candidacy than anything about Bobby Rush. “I’m not sure I ever thought Donne was in that race to win,” Rauschenberger explained. Democrat John Cullerton, who was closer to Trotter than to Barack, remembered telling Trotter, “You guys aren’t going to win. I don’t know why you’re doing this. If one of you dropped out, maybe,” and Rickey Hendon recalled, “I tried to talk to both of them, but neither one would drop out.” Kim Lightford questioned Barack about challenging Rush. “Do you really think you could beat him?” Barack’s answer was illuminating. “I don’t know if I can beat Bobby, but I’m going to beat Trotter!”

During the veto session, Bev Criglar, the secretary Barack had inherited from Alice Palmer, told him that she was leaving in January for a new job in the comptroller’s office. Criglar recommended that he hire Beverly Helm, an African American Springfield native who was well known in the capitol because her late father, Eddie Winfred “Doc” Helm, had served for many years as the Senate’s official photographer. Beverly had worked in the Senate years earlier, and one evening Bev Criglar took her to meet Barack for an informal interview. Barack said something about interviewing others, but Bev Criglar disagreed. “No, I don’t think so, Barack. She’s the one.” Barack assented and left it to the two Beverlys to work out their transition.<sup>6</sup>

On December 2, the veto session’s final day, the Illinois Supreme Court upended everyone’s holiday plans by unanimously striking down the Safe Neighborhoods Act of 1994. Article IV, Section 8(d) of Illinois’s 1970 Constitution mandated what was popularly known as the single-subject rule: “Bills, except bills for appropriations and for the codification, revision, or rearrangement of laws, shall be confined to one subject.” The framers’ goal, as the court stated, was “to prevent the passage of legislation that, standing alone, may not muster the votes necessary for enactment” or, in other words, to prohibit logrolling, which the court in 1974 had held was “both corruptive of the legislator and dangerous to the State.” Earlier that year the court had held that “unrelated provisions that by no fair interpretation have any legitimate relation to one another” rendered a bill unconstitutional, and the important 1994 enactment failed that test: “We discern no natural and logical connection between the subject of enhancing neighborhood safety” and the bill’s additional “amendments to the civil WIC Vendor Management Act, or the creation of the Secure Residential Youth Care Facilities Licensing Act,” because “these purely administrative licensing provisions are not germane to the subject of safe neighborhoods.”

The state supreme court’s unsurprising holding created controversy because one provision in the 1994 law, upgrading public possession of a firearm from a misdemeanor to a felony, had led to a firestorm two years earlier when savvy National Rifle Association (NRA) lobbyist Todd Vandermyde sought its repeal. Insisting that most members had been unaware of the upgrade’s inclusion in the 1994 law, pro-gun legislators successfully championed passage of a bill reinstating the misdemeanor penalty by publicizing cases in which U.S. Marine recruiters, a well-known professional football player, and a pizza deliverywoman who had successfully fended off muggers had all faced felony charges after telling police they had a gun in their car. The Senate had passed that repeal measure 36–14–9, with Barack voting present, but Chicago law enforcement officials reacted with horror, insisting that the felony provision was the “single most significant piece of legislation” for taking gun-toting gang members off the street. Mayor Richard Daley agreed, and three months after the bill’s passage, then-governor Jim Edgar had vetoed it, with no override vote attempted.

Four days after the supreme court’s decision, Governor Ryan, joined by Daley, state attorney general Jim Ryan, and three of the Four Tops—House Speaker Mike Madigan, House minority leader Lee Daniels, and Senate minority leader Emil Jones Jr., but not Senate president and NRA enthusiast Pate Philip—held a news conference to announce that he was summoning the legislature back to Springfield for a special session beginning on Monday, December 13. All of those officials called for reenactment of the felony provision, with Daley proclaiming that “families are going to be less safe” with that stiffer penalty off the books. Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller highlighted that Philip’s absence signaled an upcoming tong war between the Senate president and Governor Ryan, with Philip’s close sidekick Ed Petka pointing out that Republican senators would refuse to reenact the felony measure they insisted had been snuck into the 1994 bill. Warning that “this session may last a while,” with “a long stalemate that lasts until Christmas,” Miller predicted that the chances of a compromise between Ryan and Philip over such a binary issue—felony versus misdemeanor—were very slim.<sup>7</sup>

Before Barack returned to Springfield, he held a press conference with ACLU and Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund leaders to announce that in January he would introduce a bill that would require police officers statewide to record the race of every driver they stopped. “Racial profiling may explain why incarceration rates are so high among young African-Americans,” Barack asserted. Both the Tribune and the Defender covered his initiative, and the next weekend Barack appeared on WGCI’s Cliff Kelley Show and addressed an anti-gun rally in the Greater Grand Crossing neighborhood. On the radio, Barack endorsed the state supreme court’s application of the single-subject rule, and he told the Hyde Park Herald it was “most important” to retain the felony provision, adding that “there should not be too much difficulty in passing the law in a constitutional fashion” despite “some resistance from the NRA and pro-gun legislators.” At Park Manor Christian Church, Barack said he would introduce legislation to restrict gun purchases to one a month and ban most sales at gun shows.

On Monday, December 13, Barack filed more than ten thousand petition signatures to qualify for the March primary ballot, even though only 880 valid ones were required. Collecting that many signatures had taken weeks of work by Will Burns and the campaign’s dozens of young volunteers. The Defender, the Tribune, and one black weekly newspaper reported Barack’s challenge that “when he ran for mayor, Rush said that debates are important. It is hypocritical to demand debates in one of his campaigns but hide from debates when he is running for re-election.” The petitions deadline also showed that there would be a fourth, long-shot candidate in the race, retired police officer George C. Roby, who contended that Rush, Trotter, and Obama “are from the same tree trunk.”<sup>8</sup>

Efforts to work out some sort of compromise between George Ryan and Pate Philip went nowhere. Ryan refused to abandon the felony provision, and although he acceded to one proposal to allow prosecutors to choose between felony and misdemeanor charges on a case-by-case basis, most knowledgeable observers, including Barack, believed that would be held unconstitutional. A Chicago Tribune editorial stated the felony provision has “had a dramatic impact in reducing gun injuries and deaths” and proclaimed that Pate Philip “has gone soft on crime.” Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller observed that “everyone under the dome is feeling serious pressure from their spouses and families to get their rear ends home for the holidays,” and that included Barack, who was scheduled to fly to Honolulu with Michelle and Malia on Sunday, December 19, to spend the holidays with Madelyn Dunham. Ryan and Philip remained in regular contact, and each morning when the governor called the Senate president, he said, “This is Scrooge.” Pate replied, “Okay, this is the bad guy.” On Thursday, December 16, Philip called a vote on the prosecutorial discretion substitute, but no Democrats supported it, leaving it five votes under the three-fifths majority required for approval during a special session.

Barack was content to leave it at that, telling his colleagues that “the public will know where each of us stand,” but Ryan ordered the Senate to remain in session. On Friday, December 17, as Ryan tried to recruit Republican senators to his side, Barack told his colleagues that “modest gun control works in making our streets safer,” adding, “I believe we have selective enforcement across a whole host of criminal laws.” In January, he would introduce “a racial profiling bill,” to determine “whether, in fact, stops are being selectively made with respect to race. I’m deeply concerned about that issue, having been the subject of stops that I suspect were selective and based upon my race.” Barack added that the legislature should consider allowing broad expungement of criminal convictions, for “it is impossible to find a job if you have a felony record.”

Pate Philip, knowing Ryan did not have the thirty-six votes he needed to approve the felony measure, called that bill for a vote, and it fell seven votes under on a 29–18–7 tally. Among the three downstate Democrats supporting Philip was newly arrived Ned Mitchell, who had been appointed to replace the retiring Jim Rea. A friendly, humorous man, Mitchell was lodging in Terry Link’s Springfield poker house, and teasingly told Barack he needed to avoid discussing gun bills with him. “You’ll have me convinced into voting for that, and it won’t be good for me back home,” Mitchell warned. “If I were to vote for that bill, I couldn’t eat Sunday dinner at my folks’ house anymore—they’d break my plate.” Barack laughed, but Mitchell reminded him of the fundamental difference between downstate and Chicago: “Where I’m from, we’re not shooting one another,” and his gun-owning friends were hunters. “It’s a sport in southern Illinois!”

On Saturday, December 18, senators left Springfield for a forty-eight-hour respite before returning on Monday. Barack postponed his family’s travel plans, warning his grandmother that they might have to cancel their trip entirely, and the Tribune reported that since the state supreme court’s December 2 ruling, 253 people in Chicago, and 60 in the rest of the state, who had been arrested for unlawful possession of a firearm were now facing misdemeanor rather than felony charges. On Tuesday, Barack told senators and spectators that “no one is more eager to get out of here than me. I’m supposed to be on a beach. It’s 85 degrees in Honolulu last I checked. I would prefer not being here.” He opposed any discretionary solution, explaining that “the notion of creating different punishments for the exact same offense, without any clarity as to why one person would be charged with a felony and another, misdemeanor, would present some constitutional problems.”

Barack told one Springfield reporter that the single-subject rule was a good constitutional provision, but that the Illinois Supreme Court was applying it too inclusively, which “really wreaks havoc on the legislative process here.” Barack also wrote a Hyde Park Herald column blaming the standoff on Republicans who were “listening to extremists in the National Rifle Association” rather than to citizens “who want reasonable gun control.” Late Tuesday the Senate adjourned, with senators believing that Ryan would order them back to Springfield by Wednesday, December 29.

On Thursday, December 23, Barack, Michelle, and eighteen-month-old Malia headed to Honolulu for Christmas with Toot. On Monday, Barack learned that the Senate was convening on December 29. He told Michelle they had to leave the next day, but by that evening, Malia had the flu as well as a very severe ear infection. “I tried to get him to come back,” Dan Shomon remembered, but maybe he was not “as forceful as I needed to be.” Barack also spoke with city of Chicago lobbyist Bill Luking, saying that “he didn’t think the votes were there” and that his daughter was more important. “I could not leave my wife alone with my daughter without knowing the seriousness of the baby’s condition,” Barack later explained, and he remained in Honolulu rather than return to Illinois for the 1:00 P.M. Wednesday vote on SB 224.

By then, even the New York Times was covering the Springfield discord, and Illinois newspapers were reporting Ryan’s Tuesday claim that “if the Senate calls this tomorrow, it will pass.” But when the votes were cast, Ryan came up five votes short, with the tally showing 31–17–2. Democrat Jimmy DeLeo immediately rose to say that his green button had malfunctioned, a claim also made by Republican Wendell Jones. Three absent senators—Tommy Walsh, who said he had stayed home because his pregnant wife was running a fever; Kathy Parker, who was on vacation in New Mexico; and Barack—plus the two claims of button malfunctions had kept Ryan from attaining the thirty-six votes he had anticipated. The governor was livid. “If these folks would have been here, I’d have had my votes,” Ryan told statehouse reporters. “We’d have passed this bill today.”

Thursday’s Chicago Sun-Times told readers that “the absences of Obama, Walsh and Parker stunned Ryan,” and the Tribune stated that Obama and Parker had “decided to remain on vacation instead of returning.” Unnamed “aides to Obama, who was in Hawaii, refused to tell the governor’s staff how to find him,” the Tribune added, but Dan Shomon was quoted as saying “his daughter was his first priority.” The Tribune also featured Bobby Rush’s reaction to the news: “This vote was probably the most pivotal vote, one of the most important votes in memory before the General Assembly, and I just can’t see any excuse that Mr. Obama could use for missing this vote.”<sup>9</sup>

Barack phoned Governor Ryan to apologize for his absence, but by Friday morning editorial denunciations were raining down. “Philip, Criminals Win Again,” the Tribune declared, calling the absentees “gutless sheep.” Obama “who has—had?—aspirations to be a member of Congress, chose a trip to Hawaii over public safety in Illinois.” The suburban Daily Southtown was no gentler, noting that Barack “was in Hawaii on vacation” when his daughter became ill. “This issue was too important for Obama to take a chance on missing the vote by traveling to the South Pacific in the first place.” Barack told Bernard Schoenburg, the political reporter for Springfield’s State Journal-Register, that “I take my legislative duties really seriously,” but “at some point you can’t just talk about family values, you actually have to exercise them.”

A brief weekend respite allowed Barack to address issues other than his vacation controversy. “Ultimately, if we want to deal with the gun violence taking place in our community, we have to deal with the manufacturing and distribution” of guns and the dealers “who are selling guns to anyone with the cash.” A Tuesday-morning Tribune gossip column asserted that “those ocean breezes must have blown away the political instincts of state Sen. Barack Obama,” who “stayed on vacation in Hawaii instead of returning to Springfield for the post-Christmas vote on tough gun control.” Bobby Rush and Donne Trotter “will crucify Obama for his Hawaiian holiday if he persists in his plan to run in the Democratic primary for Rush’s congressional seat,” and in that day’s Chicago Defender, Trotter did just that. “I think it is irresponsible for Senator Barack Obama not to come back,” Trotter declared. “He and the others dropped the ball for their constituents.”

Barack complained to the Tribune columnists, and the next morning they ran a follow-up item. “We have a lot of politicians who like to talk about family values. At some point you have to live those family values,” Barack argued. The Sun-Times ran a prominent story on the controversy, stating that “Obama’s absence could cost him dearly.” Barack claimed his vote would not have made a difference and that “family has to come first.” In the Hyde Park Herald, Donne Trotter kept up his assault, declaring that “for anyone not to show up to me is dereliction at the worst and certainly irresponsible,” especially because “I was really under the impression that the bill was going to pass.” Bobby Rush’s campaign spokesperson, Maudlyne Ihejirika, told the media that “while perhaps the most important piece of legislation that could have a significant impact on getting guns off the street was being debated in Illinois, Mr. Obama was on a beach in Hawaii.”

Inside Barack’s campaign, Cynthia Miller recalled “a tense environment,” because “Dan was just so frustrated with Barack” since “once they knew the vote was going to be called, he should have turned around.” Media consultant Chris Sautter recognized that the missed vote was “a big deal,” and “I wondered whether or not he really wanted this . . . whether or not he appreciated what it took to win a race like this” and “the kind of sacrifice” it required. Chris realized that “Dan was always the taskmaster” for Barack, and Shomon blamed himself for not arguing more forcefully with Barack to come back. “There were other times when he tried to slough out of session . . . and I would really beat him up sometimes, say, ‘Look, you’ve got to show up! This is your job. You need to be there!’ But this time I let it slide probably too much. I should have been harder on him.”

Bobby Rush’s media consultant Eric Adelstein understood that the Barack “on vacation in Hawaii” story played into the perception that the race was between a “dilettante versus the guy from the neighborhood.” By January it was clear that Donne Trotter lacked the funding to mount a real campaign. While he had known going in that his mentor John Stroger was backing Rush, over the holidays Stroger’s godson Orlando Jones told Donne that word had gone out that members of Stroger’s sizable organization should not contribute to Trotter’s campaign. “They were fearful,” since “many of them worked for the county,” and “I felt a little betrayed,” Trotter confessed. The “rug was pulled out,” but “once you’re in it, you’re in it.” Trotter would remain a candidate, albeit one without a campaign.<sup>10</sup>

By the second week of January, legislators had begun the new spring session with no movement in the standoff between George Ryan and Pate Philip. The Senate president told the suburban Daily Herald he did not believe Senator Kathy Parker “deserves any criticism at all” for missing the gun vote because she was in New Mexico. “Our base is pro-guns,” Philip explained. “Our districts come first, the state comes second. I mean, people have to get re-elected, so they have to do what they have to do.” Concerning unlawful possession, “a first offense with no criminal background shouldn’t be a felony.”

Barack presided at JCAR’s monthly meeting and then introduced his bill calling for a four-year study of traffic stop statistics and training of state police officers in “sensitivity toward racial and ethnic difference.” Only the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, none of whose Metro East readers lived within 250 miles of the 1st Congressional District, covered Barack’s initiative. “Nobody really knows how pervasive the practice of racial profiling is, and that puts a cloud over the able law enforcement officer,” Barack told the paper. “There is at least the perception in black communities that ‘driving while black’ is a crime.”

Back in Chicago, Hyde Park’s IVI-IPO members voted 28–3–3 to endorse Barack rather than Bobby Rush. The Herald publicized the outcome and quoted a spokesman calling Barack “articulate and dedicated” and expressing hope that “Obama will be able to do a better job than the incumbent by bringing more resources into the district.” Barack used his Herald column to defend his absence for the gun vote, explaining that “my grandmother cannot travel” and that his family’s annual visit “is the only means to assure that my grandmother does not spend the holidays alone.” A Herald editorial robustly stood up for Barack, facetiously writing that he “should have moved his grandmother—and all other family members he might want to visit—to a less glamorous state than Hawaii.” A querulous letter mocking Barack as “some progressive, some leader!” was countered by one from former congressman Ab Mikva, whose lengthier letter appeared in the next day’s Chicago Tribune. Castigating the paper for calling Barack “gutless,” Mikva wrote that “the conflict between being a public servant and trying to be a good husband and father . . . is never easy. . . . The media ought not to make it harder by beating up on somebody when family values require priority.”

Yet the controversy refused to die. One neighborhood weekly headlined its story “Obama Under Fire for Missing Gun Vote,” and another, in a trio of pieces profiling Rush, Trotter, and Obama, mentioned Barack’s absence in all three. Bobby Rush told the Chicago Weekly News, “I was working on a public service campaign to prevent gun violence over New Year's while Obama was vacationing. We have to keep fighting gun violence and that's where my focus is even if that is not where Senator Obama's focus is." Donne Trotter noted that Barack's "wife was on the trip, and she's a capable individual. It wasn't as if he was abandoning his child in a foreign land." Trotter added that "to use your child as an excuse for not going to work also shows poorly on the individual's character." Barack responded icily. "Perhaps Senator Trotter would feel comfortable leaving his wife behind with a sick child thousands of miles away without any clear idea as to when they would be able to return to Chicago. It's not something I felt comfortable doing," and "for him to try and politicize my child's illness is unfortunate."

In his Chicago Weekend profile, Barack said "my ultimate job is to create opportunities through education and employment that prevents youth from getting involved in the criminal justice system," and "we need to devote our talents to keeping youth out of the system." But even in mid-January, the Tribune ran a story headlined "Obama Defends Decision to Miss Anti-Crime Vote" and quoted Barack as insisting, "I cannot sacrifice the health or well-being of my daughter for politics." Barack tried to draw attention elsewhere, unveiling a neighborhood beautification plan at Englewood High School and contributing a birthday column on "Why Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., Is Important to Me" to the Defender. "The violence within our community exacts as great a toll as any violence coming from outside our communities," Barack stated. "My commitment to social justice and the sense that serving as an elected official is more than a mere job, but a mission, is largely informed by Dr. King's life."<sup>11</sup>

One evident problem was Barack's lack of entrée into the South Side's rich and complex network of black churches. Neither Dan Shomon nor Cleveland-born Will Burns knew that world. Young Gamaliel organizer John Eason, who was volunteering on weekends, introduced Barack to clergymen he knew, and another regular volunteer, African American UCLS 3L Nat Piggee, was married to Summer Samuels, whose father was a South Side pastor. Selling a Bobby Rush challenger to most churchmen was a daunting task, but by mid-January, Summer became the Obama campaign's fifth full-time staffer. Her godmother, Lula Ford, was a prominent, recently retired school administrator whose political mentor was Emil Jones Jr., and after getting Jones's approval, Ford hosted a reception at a nightclub called Honeysuckles, where African American educators met Barack. A writer from the weekly Chicago Reader listened to Barack's pitch to the black educators. "When Congressman Rush and his allies attack me for going to Harvard and teaching at the University of Chicago, they're sending a signal to black kids that if you're well-educated, somehow you're not 'keeping it real,'" Barack rightly argued.

Like John Eason, Nat and Summer Piggee realized that Barack "wasn't as familiar with some of the customs in the black church" as an African American politician should be. Nat went with Barack to one church appearance and was disappointed when he mangled Martin Luther King's well-known declaration that "injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere." Nat remarked afterward that "You may want to check that King quote," but Barack brushed it off. "Nat, come on, you're the only guy in there who knew it." That dismissiveness reflected arrogance on top of ignorance. "No, dude, you're the only guy in there who didn't know it," Nat accurately replied.

On Monday, January 17, Barack held a press conference to declare that "drastic and immediate action is needed to stem the dramatic increases in the cost of prescription drugs." Drug pricing "shows why our entire health care system needs reform" and Barack said he would introduce legislation to require drug companies to sell medications to everyone at the lowest possible price. "This is one step . . . in the movement towards universal health care where all people have insurance.” That evening Barack attended a candidates’ forum at a field house in the Chatham neighborhood and told the small crowd, “I’m impatient for change. Too often we settle for second best in terms of our political officials. The First Congressional District can do better, but right now we don’t have as good a representation as we could have. We don’t have a congressman who’s effective as a leader at the national as well as the local level.”

Bobby Rush did not attend such events, which left plenty of time for Barack to face challenging questions. One man raised the missed gun vote. “If you initiate a lot of ideas, and at the time of a vote you’re not there, how can we count on you?” Barack responded curtly. “If you look at my record in Springfield, I don’t miss votes. I missed one as a result of my daughter being sick. That’s an exceptional situation that doesn’t arise often.” Afterward the questioner told the Chicago Reader reporter, “If you tell me this is one of your issues and then you miss the vote, that concerns me. With that in mind, I’m very reluctant to support him for anything. I think he’s biting off a little more than he can chew. He’s got some good issues, but he’s too green.” But when Rashid and Mona Khalidi hosted a small event for Barack, one Palestinian friend, Ali Abunimah, was impressed that Barack was willing to say that the United States needed a more “even-handed” approach toward the Israeli–Palestinian conflict. “He was very aware of the issues,” Abunimah remembered, and “critical of U.S. bias toward Israel and lack of sensitivity to Arabs.”

Overviews of the Obama–Rush face-off appeared in both highbrow Illinois Issues and in Residents’ Journal, a monthly written and read by Chicago Housing Authority (CHA) tenants. Obama “speaks eloquently for coalition building,” the former reported, with Barack arguing that “Rush engages in divisive politics that promotes his name but doesn’t deliver the goods. The question here is not policy disagreements, but who can create coalitions.” Barack “may be hurt” by the missed vote, and aging black nationalist Lu Palmer declared, “I don’t like Obama. He has large Hyde Park liberal backing. He’s barely been in the state Senate. Let him get his feet wet.” Barack told the CHA magazine, “I’m somebody who believes that politics is a mission,” and said Rush had been too passive about CHA’s demolition of its notorious high-rises. “If we are providing replacement housing, we need to make sure that public housing residents have a wide range of choices of neighborhoods not just in the city but throughout the region,” Barack said. Barack also argued that first-time criminal offenders deserved a second chance. “Too many of our young people think that a gun is a toy and feel that they can intimidate or hurt other people.” But “if you haven’t been in trouble with the law after a year, then they should take the felony off your record,” Barack contended. Yet gun control was imperative. “I think that if you have to take a test to drive a car, a safety test, then there should be no reason it shouldn’t be the same way for a gun.”<sup>12</sup>

By the third week of January, Barack was back in Springfield at least two evenings a week. Beverly Helm recalled that on their first day together Barack summoned her into his office to make one firm request: “I have people that come in with HIV. I have people come in that have disabilities. I have people come in that are homeless. I never want to see you treat them any differently than you would treat a director or anyone else that walks through these doors.” Beverly immediately embraced Barack’s point and knew they were “going to get along fine,” and “that was day one. We got along fine.”

Barack introduced a passel of new bills: higher payments to child support recipients, increased Medicaid eligibility for public aid clients, expanding KidCare into FamilyCare by offering health care coverage to low-income working parents, and stricter regulation of predatory home loan and payday loan vultures. But Barack's primary concern was his congressional campaign, and especially its strained finances. On January 31, all three candidates reported their contributions and expenditures for calendar year 1999: Barack's campaign had raised $266,000 and had spent $250,000, leaving only $16,000 on hand. Staff salaries ate up $4,500 per week, with health benefits and payroll taxes on top of that, and upcoming radio ads would cost another $29,000. But fund-raising had slowed, and on January 25 Barack had loaned the campaign $2,000 of his and Michelle's personal funds. Barack had outraised Bobby Rush, who had taken in $209,000, but a preexisting balance and expenditures of only $147,000 left Rush with $153,000 available. While Barack had received only one single PAC contribution, $3,300 from his poker buddy Dave Manning's Community Bankers Association, a majority of Rush's contributions—$137,000—came from PACs. Donne Trotter had received only $46,000 in contributions and personally loaned his campaign $20,000; with roughly $60,000 in expenses, Trotter had only $8,000 on hand. Barack told reporters, "We're very proud of the fact that we've been competitive with Rush in fund-raising, despite the fact that 99 percent of our fund-raising comes from individuals, while most of Rush's comes from PACs. The fact that we've been competitive indicates the degree of enthusiasm and support that we've gotten in the district." Yet as Barack knew, and as stories in the Hyde Park Herald and Washington, D.C.'s Roll Call highlighted, his campaign lacked the funds necessary to make any significant push in the race's final six weeks. Illinois political observer Paul Greentold Roll Call that Barack's challenge "hasn't caught on like I thought it would" and said the contest "looks fairly good for Rush." Progressive former alderman Dick Simpson told the Herald that "Obama's done well that he's out-raised the incumbent," but needed "at least another $150,000 to $200,000" to make the race competitive. Barack signaled his own realism in telling the Herald that "if we can establish more name recognition" before March 21, the outcome would be "very tight."

Media consultant Eric Adelstein had crafted a perfect slogan for Rush's reelection effort: "We're sticking with Bobby." But Rush's campaign was also trying to deploy President Bill Clinton on their candidate's behalf. Rush secured an aisle seat for the president's January 27 State of the Union address, allowing him to hurriedly ask Clinton to cut a radio ad boosting his campaign. On January 31, Governor George Ryan announced he was imposing an open-ended moratorium on the state's death penalty. Citing Illinois's "shameful record of convicting innocent people and putting them on death row," Ryan said there would be no further executions "until I can be sure with moral certainty" that capital defendants are "truly guilty." Even conservative Republican state senator Chris Lauzen hailed Ryan's move, and Barack too praised Ryan for making "a morally correct" decision. Some reacted cynically to Ryan's move, for it had been known for days that one of his closest aides from his time as secretary of state was about to be federally indicted as the commercial-driver's-license bribery scandal crept closer to Ryan himself. Those charges came just twenty-four hours after Ryan's landmark announcement, but those who knew the governor best had no doubt that Ryan's change of heart on capital punishment was utterly sincere and not politically calculated.<sup>13</sup>

Barack had little choice in February but to spend three days each week in Springfield, and he introduced nine additional bills. The first, banning the sale of certain flavored cigarettes, won coverage in the Defender; another was the drug pricing measure that had received press attention two weeks earlier. He reintroduced the state earned-income tax credit bill he had first put forward three years earlier, and he also proposed a measure requiring the Department of Human Services to provide domestic violence training for its employees who worked with families on public assistance.

During a long interview in early February with Ted McClelland of the Chicago Reader, Barack said the four things of which he was most proud were his 1997 work on welfare reform, his 1998 efforts regarding juvenile justice and campaign finance reform, and his consistent championing of tax justice issues like the earned-income credit, which he now had persuaded Republican Revenue Committee chairman Bill Peterson to cosponsor. They revisited the missed gun bill vote, and Barack admitted that “politically, I took a big hit.” He also acknowledged that “any ambivalence that I feel about my life in politics basically revolves around my family.” Since entering the congressional race, “I’m out the door by seven, and I’m home at nine, including weekends.” He estimated that over the previous six to eight months, he had spent no more than three or four full days with his wife and daughter. If he won, “ultimately I would move my family to Washington,” because seeing his daughter only on weekends was “no way to raise a child.”

Citing Jesse Jackson Jr. and North Shore progressive Jan Schakowsky as Illinois’s two best members of Congress, Barack said that serving in Springfield had taught him that “you can have an enormous influence on the process through the power of your ideas even if you don’t get your name as the chief sponsor of a bill.” He and Jesse Jr. were the two black elected officials whose credentials would allow them to do well in the private and nonprofit sectors too, so “it makes sense for the community to take advantage of those talents and those gifts,” Barack told McClelland. “We need to attract more people like myself and Jesse Jr. into politics in the African-American community.” Regarding public service, “I really had to want to be here,” for “at every juncture in my life I could have taken a . . . path of least resistance but much higher pay.” Barack additionally pointed out that “being president of the Harvard Law Review is a big deal.”

Finally climbing down off his high horse, Barack said that “before this congressional campaign I was a big pick-up basketball player” and had often enjoyed “some terrific games” at the courts “right off Lake Shore Drive” in Jackson Park. But “right before a big fund-raiser near the beginning of the campaign, I walked in with a big black eye,” and so “my staff has banned me from basketball.” McClelland asked what books had most influenced Barack’s political thinking, and a long pause followed. “My political philosophy is probably more influenced by fiction than it is by . . .” and then pausing again before finally naming “James Baldwin’s essays,” including The Fire Next Time; The Autobiography of Malcolm X; and Toni Morrison’s Song of Solomon. The only nonfiction work Barack named was The Power Broker, Robert Caro’s biography of New York urban planner Robert Moses, a “wonderful book” that “really focuses on the intricacies of power in an urban environment.” Reaching for a better response, Barack explained that “a lot of times what moves me politically are themes that I find in fiction, themes of people overcoming great obstacles and great odds and creating communities . . . and discovering one’s roots and feeling a sense of place,” he added.

Barack emphasized to McClelland that he had “raised more money from African Americans than either of the other two,” and that “half of my Finance Committee is made up of African American businessmen, most of them under the age of fifty.” That wording overlooked Judy Byrd, who, along with Jim Reynolds and Craig Robinson’s good friend Marty Nesbitt, was one of Barack’s three most dedicated advocates. Barack gave no names, but “I think that part of what they’re looking for is a transition in political leadership that reflects their growing sophistication and their involvement in all levels of the economy.”<sup>14</sup>

Soon after that, Barack had painful occasion to consider “driving while black” when he was pulled over and given a $75 ticket for going 62 in a 45 mph zone, yet as scheduler Cynthia Miller knew, “Barack does drive fast.” On Monday, February 14, media consultant Chris Sautter’s new second pair of radio ads started airing on African American stations. The first one began with an announcer introducing “state senator Barack Obama, candidate for Congress, speaking with a group of frustrated South Side seniors.” A woman remarked, “Senator Obama, the cost of prescription drugs has gotten so high, sometimes I can’t afford the medicine I need.” A man added, “You know, I’ve always backed Bobby Rush, but I don’t see him doing anything about these high prices.” Then Barack responded: “Let me tell you something. The profits of drug companies are at record levels. Meanwhile we’ve got seniors who are having to choose between their food, their rent, and their prescription drugs. That’s not right. I’m running for Congress to fight for First District families and our seniors on prescription drug and HMO reform.” Then the announcer: “Barack Obama. Civil rights lawyer, the head of Project Vote. As our state senator, Barack Obama has taken on the drug and insurance companies with his fight for affordable health care.” Barack reentered: “America’s health care system locks out too many people. I’m fighting to change that.” The woman questioner declared, “Barack, we need a congressman like you who would do more than talk,” and a crowd applauded. The announcer returned: “Barack Obama. Democrat for Congress. New leadership that works for us.” Barack himself closed with “Paid for by Obama for Congress 2000.”

The second new ad began with background noise of a police radio before a white male’s voice ordered, “Hand over your driver’s license.” A black woman replied, “But officer, I wasn’t speeding.” “Don’t talk back to me. Get out of that car,” the officer instructed. “But what did I do?” “I’ll worry about that. Now open the trunk,” and the woman sighed. Then the announcer: “It could happen to you. Or to someone you love. Stopped by the police for no apparent reason, except that you fit a racial profile secretly used by police. It’s called racial profiling, and it’s an unethical and dangerous practice that needs to end. Now, state senator Barack Obama, candidate for Congress in the First District, is leading the fight to end racial profiling.” Then Barack spoke: “This is state senator Barack Obama. Racial profiling is not only wrong and degrading, it’s dangerous and can lead to unexpected confrontations. Not only that, it erodes confidence in law enforcement. That’s why I’ve introduced legislation to address the problem of racial profiling and protect you from those who would abuse your rights.” Again the announcer, and then Barack, finished as before: “Barack Obama, Democrat for Congress. New leadership that works for us.” “Paid for by Obama for Congress 2000.”

In a Hyde Park Herald column on racial profiling, Barack called it a “growing concern to many minority citizens” and “a serious problem in many Illinois communities.” During an interview with the Chicago Weekly News, he talked up his welfare reform and juvenile justice efforts in Springfield and said he had helped direct $20 million toward crime prevention. As a congressman, his top priority would be “figuring out how to retool and revamp our public education system to provide the skills to our young people that allow them to compete in the new global economy.” In addition, “ultimately we should provide some basic health care to all citizens through programs designed at the federal level, even if some of the implementation takes place at the state level.”<sup>15</sup>

In mid-February Barack, Michelle, and Malia attended the seventy-fifth birthday party of his granduncle Charles Payne, who had retired five years earlier from the U of C’s library. Maya and Madelyn, who was now seventy-seven years old, flew from Honolulu; Madelyn's sister Arlene and her lifelong companion Margery Duffey came from North Carolina, and their younger brother Jon came from Colorado. It was the first time the four siblings had been together since their mother's funeral thirty-two years earlier. Maya was months away from entering a Ph.D. program at the University of Hawaii, and it was a more relaxed family gathering than the brief and troubled visit Barack, Michelle, and Malia had made to Honolulu seven weeks earlier.

On Thursday, February 17, Bobby Rush finally agreed to appear at several debates and candidates' forums. Rush's press spokesperson, Maudlyne Ihejirika, adopting a demeaning tone, declared that "Obama will get his opportunity to hang out with the congressman—an opportunity he so desperately seeks." She also insisted that Barack's criticisms of Rush's invisibility had played no role in Rush agreeing to debate. "Obama is not even on our radar screen. His constant whining does not even register here," Ihejirika declared.

The next morning Barack, Rush, and Donne Trotter appeared live for two hours on Cliff Kelley's show on WVON radio. Barack expressed opposition to school vouchers because they could "hemorrhage money out of the public school system," but he acknowledged that "when you've just got a monopoly in the public schools without expanding competition, we've got problems. I'm in favor of charters, and I'm in favor of expanding competition within the public school system." During one commercial break, Barack's prescription drug ad aired, and during the next off-air break, Rush expressed outrage. "It's a lie, a fabrication," Rush declared. "It's the worst form of campaign advertising that I've been privy to." Barack responded, "I don't think that it is a distortion of the record for me to say that generally constituents don't have much access or ideas of what the congressman is doing." Rush replied that "maybe you haven't been around the First Congressional District long enough to really see what's going on." Turning to studio onlookers, Rush added that "one of the things that galls me about this guy is that he says one thing about you in your presence" before being cut off as the broadcast resumed.

Rush was scheduled to join his opponents at a Sunday-afternoon forum at Trinity United Church of Christ, but on Saturday Rush left Chicago to comfort his ailing father in southwest Georgia. In Rush's absence, Barack told the Trinity crowd that "if you're only interested in votes, or for that matter bringing money back to the district, stick with the status quo. But if you're concerned about long-term leadership for our community, I think I'm your guy." At a subsequent forum in Hyde Park, Barack stressed that universal health care "has been the centerpiece of my campaign" and told one questioner that "I'm strongly opposed to school prayer, but not prayer. Public schools are not the appropriate place." That issue "goes beyond the separation of church and state and goes to the heart of what we believe in."

On Monday, news spread that Rush's father had died the previous day. More sadly for Barack, former senator Paul Simon's seventy-seven-year-old wife Jeanne had also passed away on Sunday. Barack made plans to drive to Carbondale on Wednesday to attend the visitation and then Thursday morning's funeral service for Simon's wife, but first he loaned his financially struggling campaign an additional $2,000. Dan Shomon and Madelyn Dunham each chipped in the maximum $1,000 apiece that week, but by the end of February, Barack had raised just $89,000 since the first of the year, leaving only $18,000 as well as outstanding bills for three times that amount. Rush had taken in just $103,000, almost half of which came from PACs, and had $72,000 available after spending more than $75,000 on direct mail and another $30,000 on radio ads. Donne Trotter had received only $22,000, had spent $10,000 on one mailing, and had a cash balance of $851.66. Rush told one reporter that Barack's campaign was being fueled by "white money" from outside the district, prompting Barack to reply that "for me to get money from progressive individuals like Judson Miner is far superior to me getting it from Ameritech," although three months later Barack's state campaign committee would accept a $1,500 check from Ameritech.

Rush spent $7,000 for a late-February poll of six hundred 1st District voters that showed him with an overwhelming 71 percent to 10 percent lead over Barack, with Trotter at 8 percent. Seeing Paul Simon in Carbondale was a poignant experience for Barack, and Simon's daughter Sheila recalled that her dad "really made a big deal" of being sure to introduce Sheila to Barack, whom she had heard about but had never met. "It was clear that dad was very fond of him," Sheila remembered. After the funeral Barack returned to Springfield, where one reporter asked about his racial profiling bill, and he explained that "you will be hard pressed to find a black or Hispanic family who does not have at least one member who feels they've been stopped because of their race." The reporter added that Obama "said he has been stopped many times for no apparent traffic violation."<sup>16</sup>

The Sun-Times reported Alice Palmer's enthusiastic support of Rush. "African Americans have fought hard for these positions. His seniority is extremely important, and we should not make light of it." Thanks to Summer Samuels-Piggee and John Eason's hard work with South Side pastors, Barack's campaign pulled together a press conference at a Methodist church in Chatham featuring more than a dozen ministers who were publicly endorsing him. Father Mike Pflieger and Rev. Alvin Love, who had known Barack since his time at DCP, were among them; Jeremiah Wright was not. Barack had worked hard for Pflieger's support, meeting at the Pancake House in Hyde Park for a long breakfast, during which Mike had warned him that "you're running against an icon." Mike realized that "ambition was always part of Barack's foundation," yet "there was something about him that I was drawn to" because "when you talked with him you got energized," Mike explained. "I wrestled a whole lot" before agreeing to support Barack, and the backlash after that press conference was intense. "Bobby was very upset with me, very angry with me," and "I got eaten alive on black radio." Mike recalled his stance proved "very costly" because "I had a lot of people turn against me on that."

On Monday, March 6, the Chicago Tribune endorsed Barack over Rush, saying, "it's time for a change" and calling Barack "a rising star on the local political scene." Obama "is smart and energetic . . . and he is committed to his community. He has fresh ideas" and "would become a spokesman for African-American concerns nationally and an important voice in shaping urban politics in Chicago and the nation." Barack also announced endorsements by former congressman Ab Mikva, former alderman Leon Despres, and progressive physician Quentin Young, earning a Sun-Times story in which Rush's spokeswoman Maudlyne Ihejirika proclaimed that "Obama doesn't know the meaning of leadership." In the Hyde Park Herald, Ihejirika reacted to Barack's prescription drugs ad by remarking, "what a fraud Mr. Obama is" and complained about his "constant fabrications." Barack announced a ten-point economic development plan that won coverage in the Defender, and on Tuesday night, March 7, Rush appeared—although thirty minutes late—at a candidates' forum at a church in mostly white Beverly.

Barack again resorted to his abstract argument that the contest involved "leadership and who can best articulate a vision for the district." In the suburban Daily Southtown's first article on the race, columnist Phil Kadner said Rush "seemed to have difficulty collecting his thoughts or recalling details," even though the candidates had been given a written list of questions in advance. Barack "has Sidney Poitier good looks and is one of the most articulate candidates you are ever likely to hear,” Kadner wrote, but “if Obama said anything memorable, or newsworthy, it slipped my mind.” Attendees believed “Obama was the most effective in pleading his case,” and Kadner concluded that “Obama would be the more likely to sway opinion in Congress because he’s more eloquent.”

Kadner later recalled getting a phone call from Barack complaining about the column, but now the primary campaign had less than two weeks to go. On Friday, March 10, Chicago radio stations began airing Chris Sautter’s two final ads for Barack. The first began with a ringing school bell followed by a black woman’s voice. “As a former teacher and grandparent, I can tell you kids love working on computers. Unfortunately, there aren’t enough computers to go around in many South Side schools. Meanwhile, affluent suburban students learn on new computers at home and school. In this new high-tech economy, we can’t let our children get caught on the wrong side of the digital divide. That’s one reason I’m voting for Barack Obama for Congress on March 21st. As a state senator, Barack has been a leader in bringing quality education for all children.” Then Barack spoke: “This is state senator Barack Obama. My school technology plan will give our students the skills they need to compete in the new high-tech job market. But I’ll also focus on the basics, by fighting to expand early childhood education programs and by reducing class sizes. Our children deserve the best, and my education plan makes sure they get it.” An announcer intoned the campaign slogan—“Barack Obama, Democrat for Congress. New leadership that works for us”—and Barack recited the standard closing: “Paid for by Obama for Congress 2000.”

The second ad featured the same African American couple from the ad four months earlier. “I suppose you’re not voting in the Democratic primary on March 21?” the woman asked. “Of course I’m voting. You’re the one who always forgets to vote,” the man replied. “And I suppose you’re voting for Bobby Rush again?” she asked. “I guess so. Didn’t you vote for Rush last time?” “Not this time,” the woman answered. “Rush gets on TV a lot, but I can’t think of anything important he’s done in Washington. I just found out that Rush has the worst attendance record of any Illinois congressman. He’s missed over three hundred votes.” “Bad news,” the man responded. “So who you for?” “State senator Barack Obama,” she answered. “I’ve seen him speak a couple of times and he’s really got a lot on the ball. Civil rights attorney, law professor. Obama’s got specific plans to cut prescription drug prices and to stop racial profiling. And Obama can help bring jobs back to the South Side.” “Oh yeah, Obama. I’ve been hearing good things about him lately,” the man said. “The Chicago Tribune endorsed Obama, calling him an outstanding candidate,” she stated. “We need someone who does more than talk,” the man offered. “So finally we agree on something?” she asked. “Barack Obama for Congress,” he intoned. “New leadership that works for us,” she recited. “Paid for by Obama for Congress 2000,” Barack concluded.<sup>17</sup>

Barack went into the final ten days with an energized campaign staff if not much money. Dan Shomon, Will Burns, and several dozen regular volunteers placed yard signs on major thoroughfares, and weekend leafleting was especially successful in the predominantly white 19th Ward and in close-in suburbs like Evergreen Park and Blue Island. On most weekday mornings, Barack and a staffer or two shook hands and distributed leaflets at Chicago Transit Authority L—elevated train—stations across the South Side. State representative Tom Dart “definitely got some pushback from people” in Tom Hynes’s 19th Ward organization for his active support of Barack, but “everything we were getting back was showing us we were going to do really well” in the western part of the district. Many of the volunteers were involved because of their friendships with Dan Shomon or Will Burns as much as their support for Barack, but a good number of U of C law students pitched in too. Old friend Hasan Chandoo came through Chicago and spent a day with Barack but was not enthused by what he saw. Former Law Review colleagues Andy Schapiro and David Goldberg contacted the campaign and asked for a fund-raising letter they could circulate among Harvard Law alumni and were similarly displeased. Chris Sautter, who was in Chicago only occasionally, felt that “down the stretch, Barack was going through the motions,” but scheduler Cynthia Miller, who interacted with him multiple times every day, believed “he was still giving it his all.”

On Saturday, March 11, the three major candidates appeared at a Chicago Urban League forum. Barack said that for decades federal and city housing policy had tried “to concentrate and segregate poverty,” and in 1997, he had “voted against the entire state budget because I thought too much money was going to the prisons.” Donne Trotter accused Barack of hijacking his racial profiling bill from state representative Monique Davis, who had introduced one over a year earlier. Barack appeared “stunned” and replied, “Don’t lie now. That was my bill. I had it first.” With the Daily Southtown, Barack abstractly characterized the difference between himself and Rush. “The key issue in this race is who can provide key leadership in framing the issues, organizing resources at a local level to ensure that federal programs are actually benefiting constituents.” The Southtown endorsed Barack, saying “we have great respect for Rush and have supported him in his previous races . . . but after four terms, we don’t believe he has accomplished enough on behalf of his district, particularly the western end.” Voters “would be better served by Barack Obama, an energetic young lawyer” who has “emerged as a forceful Democratic spokesman.”

Sunday’s biggest news was that a thirty-second radio ad featuring President Bill Clinton would begin airing Monday on Rush’s behalf. It was 100 percent Clinton: “Illinois has a powerful voice in Congress it can’t afford to lose. Bobby Rush’s leadership has secured millions of dollars for job training and much needed community development. Bobby Rush has been an active leader in the effort to keep guns away from kids and criminals long before his own family was the victim of senseless gun violence. I’m President Clinton urging you to send Bobby Rush back to Congress where he can continue his fight to prepare our children for the twenty-first century. Illinois and America need Bobby Rush in Congress.”

Sunday afternoon Barack marched with Tom Dart and a number of volunteers in the annual South Side Irish Parade, with his name amended to O’Bama in honor of St. Patrick’s Day. Monday evening the three major candidates appeared together on a twenty-minute segment of Chicago Tonight, public television station WTTW’s premier news program. Host Phil Ponce, always a tough questioner, began by asking Rush about the Tribune and Daily Southtown’s endorsements of Barack. Rush, not the most articulate of speakers, responded by citing President Clinton’s endorsement of him. Ponce then asked Barack, “What makes you different from the congressman?” Barack backed into a response, saying, “I don’t think there are a lot of ideological differences,” because “all three of us are progressive, urban Democrats. I think that we share most views.” Barack noted that “Congressman Rush is more hesitant about campaign finance reform. That’s a high priority for me . . . but for the most part, I think that we agree ideologically. I think that the issue in this race is really leadership.” Then Barack became wordy and repetitive. “The question for the voters in the First Congressional District is who can best articulate and frame the issues that are most important to voters in the district and who can provide the leadership to organize resources, both federal and state and municipal at the local level, to make a difference on issues that count like education, health care, jobs, and economic development, and my assessment is that my experience not only as a legislator but also as a civil rights attorney, as a community organizer, gives me the leadership skills to provide, to really make a difference in this race.”

Ponce then asked whether Barack’s fund-raising meant he would be “‘beholden to interests outside the district,’” as Rush’s campaign had insinuated. Barack replied that “99 percent of our money comes from individuals, as opposed to PACs,” and his broad support showed “I’ve got relationships throughout this city,” which was valuable because “one of the things that we need in this office is somebody who is able to create coalitions and work across a wide spectrum of interests and I think that’s something I can provide.” Ponce asked Rush to name his top achievement, and Rush cited protecting a section of the L’s Green Line in Englewood. Asked to respond, Barack stated that Englewood had been “festering into other communities” throughout Rush’s time in Congress. When Ponce raised Rush’s seniority, Barack said, “vision and imagination and hard work is more important” and cited Rush’s challenging Charlie Hayes. “I can bring more energy and focus to the job.”

Requested to specify his priorities, Barack said “combining education and workforce training to make sure that we’ve got the human capital in place to compete in a high-tech, high-wage economy.” He added that “very few businesses that already exist in that area actually know what kind of federal help they can get,” because “one of the arguments I think I have against Congressman Rush in this race is that he has not been particularly accessible in terms of letting businesses know how the federal government can assist them in terms of growing their businesses and how we can market the community to attract new businesses in the community.” Ponce challenged Barack that “you simply haven’t been in the state Senate very long. You have a limited track record in terms of time. What is your argument based on the one term that you’ve served in the Senate so far that makes you prepared for the Congress?” Barack corrected Ponce, that he actually was in his second term, and cited his law practice, his Annenberg Challenge role, and his organizing experience as demonstrating that he had “the skill set required not only to deal with government, but also to be able to put government programs together with the not-for-profits and the private sector to make things work for people in the district.”

Rush tried to attack Barack, saying, “Senator Barack, he represents a part of Englewood, his district has always been in Englewood. Englewood’s always been in his district. What has he done?” Barack replied, “I’ve brought two million dollars back to the district last year.” Trotter sought to dismiss them both by saying, “what we’ve been hearing here is one who I believe is talking in rhetoric again and someone else is talking in theory.” Then Barack volunteered, “I actually thought Congressman Rush did a good thing running against the mayor, because I don’t think anybody should have a pass. I don’t think Congressman Rush in this situation should have a pass. I don’t think the mayor should have a pass. I don’t get a pass for my state Senate seat.” Barack reiterated, “I think that Congressman Rush did a brave thing running and I don’t want it perceived that somehow he is being punished for that race.” Yet by mentioning “pass,” Barack had left himself open to a closing rebuttal from Rush. “I certainly disagree with the senator, Senator Obama. He did get a pass in his first effort out in terms of running for the Senate. He and others knocked his predecessor, Senator Alice Palmer, off the ballot. He got a free pass on his first time around.”<sup>18</sup>

On the campaign trail, Barack held a March 15 press conference to announce that he was channeling some $400,000 in state “member initiative” funding to a job training program at Englewood’s Kennedy-King College, where his and Michelle’s close friend Kaye Wilson’s husband Wellington was president.

Barack told the Chicago Defender's Chinta Strausberg that "Rush is fast to issue press releases on economic development but slow or totally absent when it comes to helping real people with their day to day needs and issues in the First District." To another reporter Barack said, "nothing's tougher, I think, than running against an incumbent in a primary." Rush told the Sun-Times that Barack's "criticisms are empty" and that he "curses the darkness rather than lighting a candle." Barack met with the Sun-Times editorial board, giving each member a paperback copy of Dreams From My Father that he took from the remaindered copies he had bought for $1.00 apiece from Chicago book dealer Brad Jonas. But the Sun-Times endorsed Rush, saying that Obama and Trotter, while "both impressive figures, have not presented an argument worthy of removing a four-term congressman. . . . Rush deserves re-election for the valuable work he has done in Washington for his district and for Chicago."

On March 17, Ted McClelland's long article "Is Bobby Rush in Trouble?" appeared in the weekly Chicago Reader. First it quoted Barack: "Congressman Rush exemplifies a politics that is reactive, that waits for crises to happen and then holds a press conference, and hasn't been particularly effective at building broad-based coalitions." Then Rush was much harsher: "Barack is a person who read about the civil rights protests and thinks he knows all about it. . . . He went to Harvard and became an educated fool" in the university's "ivory tower." Rush added that "we're not impressed with these folks with these eastern elite degrees." McClelland repeated the belief that Mayor Daley "is said to fear Barack Obama's appeal as a citywide candidate," while Barack declared that "Chicago in many ways is the capital of the African-American community in the country."

Some days earlier, in a 43rd Street juice bar, Donne Trotter had uttered a line that would never be forgotten: "Barack is viewed in part to be the white man in blackface in our community." McClelland reported that Trotter "detests" Obama, and aging black nationalist Lu Palmer recounted Barack seeking his support for Project VOTE! seven years earlier. "He came to our office and tried to get us involved, and we were turned off then. We sent him running. We didn't like his arrogance, his air," and "I said, 'Man, you sound like Mel Reynolds.'" Echoing Rush's view, Palmer said that "if they name you head of these elite institutions, the Harvard Law Review, that makes one suspect." McClelland wrote that "there are whispers that Obama is being funded by a 'Hyde Park mafia,' a cabal of University of Chicago types, and that there's an 'Obama Project' masterminded by whites who want to push him up the political ladder." Even years later, Rush was utterly unapologetic: "my whole effort was to make sure that people knew that Barack Obama was being used as a tool of the white liberals."

These fevered imaginings of nationalists were less cutting than Rich Miller's statement that Barack "hasn't had a lot of success here, and it could be because he places himself above everybody. He likes people to know he went to Harvard." Neither Barack nor Miller had made any effort to get to know the other because, as one lobbyist wisecracked, "they both saw each other as irrelevant, and one of them was right." Trotter tried to make the Senate's one-vote failure to override Governor Ryan's veto of Barack's child support payments bill an indication of his legislative track record, but moderate Republican Dave Sullivan forcefully rebutted that claim. "No one could have tried any harder than Barack Obama. . . . It would not have gotten out of the Senate in the first place without Barack."<sup>19</sup>

Barack's campaign was less than thrilled with McClelland's article spewing such bad blood to a citywide readership. Everyone understood, as Will Burns explained, that the nationalists' Hyde Park and U of C comments were "code words for both whites and Jews." A more pressing problem, with the election four days away, was how “overextended” the campaign’s finances were, as Dan Shomon put it. Their only choice in order to keep going was “deficit spending.” On March 15, Shomon, Will Burns, Cynthia Miller, Amy Szarek, and Summer Samuels-Piggee all received their final paychecks, covering the first two weeks of March, but on March 17 a crucial boost arrived in the form of at least five $1,000 checks from Tony Rezko’s employees and business partners. The Chicago Defender endorsed Rush, declaring that the incumbent has “done much for his constituents and his reelection promises even grander things to come for 1st Congressional District residents.” The paper said Obama and Trotter “are both highly qualified . . . but still have much to do” in Springfield.

National coverage of the race accorded Barack significant attention. National Public Radio’s Weekend Edition featured Barack reiterating the long-term political perspective he had developed more than a decade earlier. “One of the things we need to learn from the Harold Washington era is the importance of institution-building,” Barack explained. “When he died, in much the same way as when Martin Luther King was shot, you didn’t have strong institutional structures in place and a broad-based set of collective leaders who could carry that work forward.” Capitol Hill’s Roll Call termed Barack “a rising star” while quoting the Rush campaign’s claim that “we are not worried in the least.” In USA Today, longtime Chicago political commentator Don Rose noted that Rush’s opponents were “dividing the votes, and they don’t have any hard issues against him.”

On Sunday, Barack told the Sun-Times that “our people are energized, they’re interested and I think they will come out to vote.” Monday’s Tribune carried two separate columns both suggesting that even if Barack lost, “Obama has a future,” as John Kass put it. Salim Muwakkil further publicized Donne Trotter’s “white man in blackface” insult before concluding that Barack “clearly is a man on the way up. Even if he loses Tuesday, it will just be a bump in the road.”

Tuesday morning, Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller asserted that “the late word is that Sen. Barack Obama may be surging,” but no one in the 1st Congressional District, including Barack’s own campaign staffers and volunteers, believed any such thing. On 55th Street, a huge billboard featuring the “We’re Sticking with Bobby” slogan greeted anyone exiting the Dan Ryan Expressway and turning east toward Hyde Park. Serious money problems continued to plague Barack’s campaign, and he wrote an Election Day check for a $5,500 loan, bringing his and Michelle’s personal indebtedness in the race to $9,500. Chris Sautter flew in from D.C. to help work polling places and realized that Barack, like Dan Shomon, knew he was not going to win. Barack visited a number of precincts and was struck by how older black women would “shake my hand and pat me on the back and say ‘You know, you seem like a really nice young man. You’ve got a bright future ahead. We just think it’s not quite your turn yet.’ I knew at that point that I wasn’t going to win the race.”

Dozens of young volunteers spent Election Day working various precincts and making get-out-the-vote phone calls before heading to an evening gathering at the Hyde Park Ramada Inn once polls closed. Will Burns and several friends had recruited dozens of poor people to distribute leaflets in exchange for a day’s pay and evening meal money, but the campaign literally ran out of money as Election Day ended. Ron Davis, who had been so crucial back in 1995–96, chipped in $1,000, but “people are literally emptying their own bank accounts to try and back Barack up,” one participant recalled, so that Burns and his friends could avoid serious trouble with the “army of drug users” they had assembled.

Some of the volunteers were shocked by news reports declaring Bobby Rush the winner even before they reached the Ramada. Fund-raiser Amy Szarek had begged her closest girlfriends to come, telling them “I don’t want the room to be empty,” but while Szarek and Cynthia Miller staffed the Ramada gathering, Dan Shomon stayed at headquarters tabulating returns. Young lawyer Jesse Ruiz remembered a “very somber” scene at the Ramada, with hardly fifty people gathered. For some young volunteers, like enthusiastic Northwestern law student Joe Seliga, the speed with which the race was called, plus Rush’s two-to-one margin over Barack, came as “an absolute shock.” Michelle Obama was “looking very distraught,” and one of Amy Szarek’s friends remembered Amy being “so upset” and “devastated” that “she hid herself in the bathroom crying the whole night” with girlfriends “trying to console her.”

State representative Tom Dart knew Barack had done well enough in his western portion of the district that he thought Barack might win, until Barack telephoned him to say, “Tom, we got shellacked.” At the Ramada, Barack looked “very disappointed,” and Craig Huffman, who as assistant treasurer had signed most of the campaign’s checks, remembered thinking to himself, “I wonder if this is it?” because I knew Michelle was very clear” about wanting Barack to abandon electoral politics. Her brother Craig Robinson had the same thought as Huffman: “Wow, I guess that’s it.”<sup>20</sup>

When Barack spoke to his supporters and a few reporters, he acknowledged the obvious: “I confess to you: winning is better than losing,” although “I thought maybe we could pull this off.” Barack thanked them for their efforts: “we just had such support with such a diverse base of folks that we can walk away from this feeling proud. What it tells us is that people are hungry for a new kind of politics.” Regarding his own future, “I’ve got to make assessments about where we go from here,” Barack volunteered. “We need a new style of politics to deal with the issues that are important to the people. What’s not clear to me is whether I should do that as an elected official or by influencing government in ways that actually improve people’s lives.”

Bobby Rush was astonishingly magnanimous at his own event. “I want to thank my opponents . . . for the way they conducted their races,” Rush told the crowd. “The 1st Congressional District is a better district because of Donne Trotter and Barack Obama,” he declared. “Reverend Jackson often tells me that only diamonds can sharpen other diamonds,” and “my two opponents in this race are diamonds indeed. They’ve helped me become a better congressman and a better individual.” When the final returns came in, Rush had won 61 percent—59,599 out of the 97,664 votes cast, with Barack obtaining 29,649 votes, good for 30.3 percent. Donne Trotter trailed with 6,915, representing 7 percent, and little-known George Roby attracted 1,501.

Some supporters, taking into consideration the sympathy Rush gained from the deaths of his son and father, Barack’s missed gun-bill vote, and the earlier polling numbers, felt that Barack had achieved “a moral victory to get 30 percent. I thought we were going to get like 18 percent,” young organizer John Eason reflected. Dan Shomon told a reporter “it’s difficult to get name recognition” as a challenger in a primary without the $200,000 needed for a television advertising campaign, and Dan expressed regret that Trotter had not cut into Rush’s overwhelming support in the heavily black 6th and 8th Wards, where the aldermanic organizations had backed Rush. Barack won a remarkable 72.4 percent of the vote in the mostly white 19th Ward, and 64 percent in the suburban portion of the district, but he received only 17.8 percent in the 6th. In the two most diverse wards, where he was supported by both aldermen, Barack won just 37 percent in Toni Preckwinkle’s 4th Ward and 33 percent in Leslie Hairston’s 5th. Barack carried Hyde Park’s forty-four precincts by only a narrow, eight-hundred-vote margin over Rush.

Thursday's Sun-Times featured a warm-hearted editorial commending the 1st District also-rans. "Some stars did not rise, but the efforts and ideas advanced in their losing efforts were impressive." Congressman Rush "called Trotter and Obama 'diamonds.' We concur." More vitally, Sun-Times political columnist Steve Neal, reviewing the ward-by-ward percentages, observed that "if Obama is a future candidate for state-wide political office, his impressive totals on the Southwest Side and in the suburbs would indicate that he's got the potential to win." Barack told the Chicago Defender's Chinta Strausberg, "I went into this race knowing it would be an uphill battle," and to another writer he said "the most difficult thing in politics is name recognition," because throughout much of the district "people still didn't know my name."<sup>21</sup>

Looking back four years later, Barack observed that the race "taught me to never overestimate the degree to which voters know who you are." Other knowledgeable observers had different reactions. Toni Preckwinkle and Dan Shomon thought Barack entered the race far too late, and David Axelrod's partner John Kupper, who followed the campaign closely, thought "it didn't seem to be very professionally run or frankly well thought out." In time, Barack agreed. "The problem with that race . . . was in conception. There was no way I was going to beat an incumbent congressman with the limited name recognition that I had."

Hyde Park state representative Barbara Flynn Currie, who believed Barack's 30 percent showing was a "disaster," thought the campaign's fatal flaw was more fundamental, because "the kinds of arguments that he made in his own behalf are pretty subtle." Asserting that Rush was not a policy leader was a difficult argument, for "it's sort of inside baseball," Currie explained. "When you call somebody a hack, you want to be able to identify ways in which hackery is their middle name," something Barack's campaign had failed to do. What's more, "Bobby ran a textbook campaign . . . no mistakes." Will Burns agreed with Shomon that Barack got in too late and that Trotter failed to cut into Rush's base, but he also understood that "it was hard for us to make a persuasive argument to voters as to why they should vote for Barack Obama and effectively take away Bobby Rush's job based on the idea of change" because "it was very abstract, it was not very concrete."

In addition, top fund-raiser Judy Byrd explained, the campaign "miscalculated the strengths and the historical significance of who Bobby Rush was to that community." Furthermore, as Toni Preckwinkle forthrightly said, Barack was "not a very good candidate. He behaves like a U of C professor, doesn't have much of a common touch, and thinks he's smarter than everybody, and that kind of thing doesn't go over very well." Byrd had "worried about that" too and realized, looking back, that Barack had been "learning on the job during that campaign" regarding "how he presented and how he related to the African American community."

Even so, many of Barack's black supporters were outraged by how widely the "white man in blackface" comment had been voiced. Burns recalled that "it got bad. It was real bad," and school director Tim King was one of many young black professionals who were "very offended" that the Rush campaign promoted "this notion that Barack wasn't one of us" because he had graduated from Harvard Law School and was teaching at the U of C. Barack ruefully told Jesse Ruiz, "Me being president of the Harvard Law Review, I never thought it could be a liability. But it was a liability in this race." Elvin Charity, who had recruited Barack as a summer associate back in 1989-90, recognized that Rush had succeeded in portraying Barack "as an outsider and an elitist." Carol Harwell, Barack's campaign manager in 1995–96, recalled, “The biggest critique I heard was ‘Is he really black,’ ‘Is he one of us?’” Barack confronted “a lot of skeptical people,” Carol realized, who wondered, “Why are you doing this? . . . This is unrealistic,” including “in his own household.”

Michelle’s unhappiness had grown over the course of the campaign and was only heightened further by Barack’s landslide loss. They had continued their evening meals with Bill Ayers, Bernardine Dohrn, and the Khalidis, and in the aftermath of Barack’s defeat, Michelle’s desire that he abandon electoral politics was often verbalized. “Michelle had lost her appetite for it by that point and was ready to give it up. She hated it,” Bill remembered.<sup>22</sup>

In subsequent years, Barack blamed his shellacking on “impatience” and “hubris,” and acknowledged that it had been “a terrible race . . . everything that could go wrong in that race went wrong.” It was “a humbling experience and a useful one,” and at another time he admitted, “I was completely mortified and humiliated, and felt terrible.” In the course of the campaign, Dan Shomon and Barack had become even closer colleagues, in part because of Michelle’s clear disinterest. In the aftermath, Dan saw that Barack “went through kind of a rough period” and was “kind of morose.” On one occasion Barack told Shomon that “I don’t really know” if politics is “what I want to do” anymore, and Barack later told Cynthia Miller he went through “a dark period” and “did a lot of soul-searching” following his defeat. Barack sounded a similar note to Carol Harwell. “‘The hell with this. I could be making money. I’ve given my all and this is what people think of me,’” Carol recounted Barack telling her. “I think he got so hurt in that election,” and while he said “he wanted to get out” of politics, “I think he was just having a super pity party.”

Although Barack’s campaign had raised more than half a million dollars, the election’s immediate aftermath left unpaid bills of more than $50,000, on top of the outstanding $9,500 loan from Barack and Michelle. Barack made up for some of the unpaid salaries by channeling up to $2,000 from his state political fund to Shomon and Will Burns. Dan was quickly hired by a Chicago marketing communications firm, but Will went on unemployment before landing a job at the Metropolitan Planning Council. Among the supportive calls Barack received was one from Mayor Daley, who asked Barack why he had challenged Rush. Barack cited Rush’s landslide loss to Daley, but the mayor replied that Rush’s defeat in the mayor’s race had not meant Rush’s congressional seat was vulnerable. “Don’t take a defeat as a complete loss. You learn something in defeat,” Daley said.

A more surprising call came from someone Barack had never met, but who had recognized his name in press reports, Hawaiian congressman Neil Abercrombie, who forty years earlier had been Obama Sr.’s good friend. Barack responded warmly, but, just as with Barack Echols a few years earlier, he brushed aside Abercrombie’s offer to tell him more about his father. “He didn’t want to pursue it,” Abercrombie explained, and even after they met each other years later, “we’ve never explored it, not even a little bit.” Barack more enthusiastically embraced a letter from former senator Paul Simon, who observed that the outcome was “not a great surprise” but also “shows clearly that you have an ability to reach out to the white community.” Simon said, “you should plan to run for state-wide office” rather than Congress, unless Rush stepped down, and added, “I would like to be of help to you if you run for state-wide office.”<sup>23</sup>

Around Chicago, other supporters like Simon’s old friend Ab Mikva knew Barack was “very dejected.” Marty Nesbitt, the third member of Barack’s finance committee troika alongside Judy Byrd and Jim Reynolds, realized that he “was disappointed that he’d let so many people around him down.” On Wednesday, March 29, one week after his loss, Barack returned to Springfield. Former Senate chief of staff Mike Hoffmann happened by his office and Barack's "not his usual upbeat self." He was "really frustrated," and disconsolately told Hoffmann, "My wife won't let me run again." He could stay in the state Senate, and perhaps aspire to become president if the Democrats won back the majority, or he could leave and "make a lot of money," Hoffmann recounted. "He thought his political career was over."

Kim Lightford encountered Barack on the Senate floor. "I got my butt whipped from Bobby, but I whupped Donne," he told her. Trotter's abysmal performance gave Kim a new put-down to use when presiding at Black Caucus meetings. "Whenever he ended up being a smart mouth in caucuses from there on out, I'll go, 'Mr. 7 Percent,'" Lightford recalled. "The 7 percent man." Emil Jones Jr.'s view was similar to Mayor Daley's. Barack "ran a damned good race," and "it was a good loss for him," because "he learned a heck of a lot." But Jones also realized that the election "hardened the feeling between he and Trotter because he got more than Trotter did in Trotter's senatorial district." That "just added fuel" to "all this hostility between Rickey and Donne Trotter and Barack that existed."

That evening, the regular poker players gathered at Terry Link's house. Link had already spoken with Barack and immediately realized he was at "the lowest" Link had ever seen him. "I think he personally felt humiliated" and he was clearly "depressed. He thought it was the end of the world." That evening no one mentioned the election so Barack took the initiative: "All right. I know you all want to say it. Don't say it!" Everyone laughed and remarked almost in unison: "We told you so!" Recently appointed senator Ned Mitchell, who lived with Link but had just lost his own primary, was not a poker player but came down to the basement to visit "as long as I could stand the smoke." Mitchell did not think Barack was a terribly good poker player, "simply because you could read his facial expressions," but in addition to Barack's "congenial, friendly" manner, he was struck that Barack was "really loyal to his family, and that impressed me about him, because you know you see things in Springfield" after dark.

More openly with Kim Lightford than with anyone else, Barack "would talk about temptation in Springfield. And he would say, 'No, no, no, I would never. Michelle would kick my butt. Not only would it not be worth it, but I would not want to have to deal with that.'" To one close acquaintance, Barack boasted about one long-ago conquest. "The only woman he ever talked about screwing was some really hot rich blond chick that he was still proud of." The friend suspected Barack "may have been stretching the story a little bit," although "he was really proud he'd banged some super-hot blonde from a super-rich family," an exaggerated account of Alex McNear's upbringing. Like others, Kim Lightford knew "you'd never see him out much in the evenings" in Springfield because Barack "was very selective about receptions that he went to, how long he was there." Barack "comes and he stands in the doorway, and he glimpses the room, and he makes a decision where he wants to go," Kim recounted. Barack would "work the room and get out," telling Kim "'it's not worth it, going out and hanging out, and getting involved with other women.' He says, 'When I think about it, I just think about . . . how mad Michelle would be at me. I don't want her jumping on me,'" because "'I'm scared of her.'"

Barack skipped the eighth and final Saguaro Seminar session and passed on taking part in reviewing the group's final report. In Springfield the first week of April, Barack hosted five U of C law students, three of whom had volunteered on his congressional race. They had entered the winning bid—$600—for Barack's item, a day in Springfield, in the law school's new Chicago Law Foundation annual fund-raising auction. Joe Khan initiated the bid and found Barack "extremely gracious" during a day that included a committee meeting, a tour of the capitol, and lunch with Barack and Dan Shomon. Heather Sullivan, who had had two classes with Barack, recalled that “he just seemed kind of disengaged” in Springfield, because “it was clear that his ambitions were elsewhere.”

On the Senate floor, Barack spoke in favor of a bill to expand free school breakfasts and lunches, saying it “should be a no-brainer” because “we’ve got hungry kids who are coming to school without enough food.” He also reminded his colleagues that “we have a burgeoning number of working poor in this state, who work every day but don’t have health insurance,” and a few moments later, he rose again to speak on behalf of a bill to provide state aid for the training of day care teachers. “There is a day care crunch all across the state,” Barack explained, one that he was personally familiar with because “I’ve got a two-year-old at home and know firsthand the expense and difficulties of child care.” When “there’s less turnover, the outcomes are better for the kids.” Both bills passed easily and were soon signed into law, but far bigger news, particularly for embattled governor George Ryan, was that Pate Philip finally allowed unanimous Senate passage of a compromise gun bill restoring the felony provision that had caused Barack such grief three months earlier.<sup>24</sup>

In Chicago, Barack joined comedian Dick Gregory at a black women’s expo, telling the crowd that “we have a genuine criminal problem in our community. We need to have an agenda on how to rectify some of the things that force our youths to participate in this illegality.” A Hyde Park Herald reporter asked Barack what he intended to do next, and a lengthy conversation ensued. “Right now my plans are to finish this session and make sure that some priorities that we care about get passed out of the legislature and then to spend some time with my wife and child this summer. I don’t have any immediate political plans in the offing. . . . Obviously, after every election you end up needing some time to reflect on where you’ve been so you know where you’re going. Overall, we feel very positive about how the election turned out. I think we laid a terrific foundation for the future, and I think that for a first time out in a large scale, well-publicized race, I think people were favorably impressed. And so I think that options will present themselves as time goes on. I’m in no rush to make any immediate decisions about next steps.”

Those comments reflected a significant emotional bounce-back from Barack’s state of mind just two weeks earlier, and he also was ready to fully reengage for the final week of an unusually brief spring session. “What I’m really pushing legislative leaders to look at is a proposal to institute a state Earned Income Tax Credit,” a “tax break for the working poor.” On April 11, the Four Tops and Governor Ryan reached a budget agreement that included creating a state EITC while also providing another $380 million split among the four caucuses for more “member initiative” pork-barrel projects. The next evening Barack appeared on Bruce DuMont’s Illinois Lawmakers TV show and said he was happy with the gun-bill outcome but was concerned that Senate Republicans wanted to alter how Illinois disciplined correctional officers who were caught using drugs. Existing law gave prison employees “three strikes” before being fired; a bill being pushed by Pate Philip would reduce that to zero. Prison guards were AFSCME members, and Barack’s lobbyist friend Ray Harris had come to him to say that “Pate wants to do this drug testing on our members” and “I want to get it knocked out.” Barack reacted dubiously. “Ray, you want me to be against drug testing?” “Not on its merits,” Harris responded. “You’ve been doing this too long,” Barack replied.

Barack reluctantly voted yes when the bill passed 45–3–10, since, as he told DuMont, three strikes “was too much.” House Democrats killed Philip’s measure, but Barack stressed to DuMont that creating an EITC “was something that I had pushed for since I first got down in Springfield.” Another of DuMont’s guests was Capitol Fax's Rich Miller, and afterward, Barack joined Miller for a drink and told him how unhappy he was at Miller's characterization of him in the Chicago Reader. But "he took that criticism the right way," Miller later explained, when "he could have taken it the wrong way," and in the aftermath of his defeat, Barack began to alter how he went about some statehouse interactions.

On the session's final day, only fiscally conservative Republican Chris Lauzen joined Barack in voting against a $6 billion bond authorization bill that senators approved 56–2, with more than a quarter of the funding targeted for state prisons. "We have a tremendous strain on our prison system, partly because of the laws that we pass in this legislature, and we need to build more facilities to house the inmates that we're throwing in," Barack said. Senators should "examine how it is that we're spending such a huge proportion of our budget on corrections," because "we are getting close to the point we are actually spending more money on corrections every year than we are in terms of new school construction, and I think that's something that we need to take note of."

As careful observer Kent Redfield commented, the end-of-session budget negotiations highlighted how "the rank-and-file members of the legislature were largely irrelevant to the process." Barack won a modest 5 percent EITC provision, which meant some 750,000 low-income families earning under $30,000 a year would receive an average credit of $55 at an annual cost to the state of $35 million. It had won approval only because Emil Jones forcefully pushed for its inclusion in a Christmas tree budget made possible by the state's strong economy. Barack told the Hyde Park Herald he was "very disappointed" the credit was only 5 percent, and not the 20 percent he had sought, but he hoped to increase that percentage in future years. Barack's only other spring session success was his bill requiring domestic violence training for state employees working with public aid recipients. As legislators left Springfield, eyes turned toward the upcoming general election. Senate Democrats had virtually no chance of erasing Pate Philip's Republican majority, but in 2001, with new census figures, state redistricting might alter those prospects for 2002.<sup>25</sup>

On April 15, the Obamas had to write a check to the IRS for nearly $17,500 to cover the balance of what they owed on their 1999 income of $181,000. Barack had again received board fees from Woods and Joyce on top of his Senate and UCLS salaries, but the congressional race had taken up so much time that he had earned no law firm income. A pair of Steve Neal columns in the Sun-Times heralded Barack's future prospects, one headlined "Attorney General May Be Obama's Calling." The second described Barack as a possible mayoral candidate should Richard Daley step down, with Neal declaring that Barack's congressional loss "hasn't diminished his political stock."

But Barack still faced a daunting $60,000 debt from that race, and he turned his attention to reducing it as best he could. Former Democratic National Committee chairman David Wilhelm, who had started a Chicago political consulting firm two years earlier, hosted a "really desultory fund-raiser" on a humble ferry boat on Lake Michigan, with Dan Shomon feeling like "they were going to bring out a casket or something." One attendee, Laura Russell Hunter, a former network news producer who had just moved to Chicago, met Barack and Dan for the first time, and Shomon eagerly recruited her as someone who could spread the word about Barack to other successful white professional women. Dollar-wise, Barack fared better with political colleagues than he had at the marina, receiving $1,000 apiece from the campaign committees of Democratic state senators Jimmy DeLeo and Lou Viverito, $500 each from Democrat Pat Welch and Republican Steve Rauschenberger, plus $1,000 each from lobbyist Al Ronan and Joyce Foundation board colleague Paula Wolff. African American lobbyists Frank Clark and John Hooker saw to it that Obama for Congress received $2,500 from Commonwealth Edison's PAC, and by June Barack's congressional debt had been reduced to $25,000 plus the still-outstanding $9,500 loan from the Obamas.

In May Barack submitted the paperwork for a half dozen "member initiative" grants to the Chicago Park District totaling $1.1 million. Five of them were for improvements ranging from $50,000 to $200,000 at parks across the South Side; the largest by far, $590,000, would create a lovely new park on the north side of 79th Street, less than a block from Father Mike Pflieger's St. Sabina church. Appearing on WTTW's Chicago Tonight newscast with his Senate colleague Jimmy DeLeo to spar over state sponsorship of gaming, Barack said that "lower-income and working-class people who can least afford it" bought a disproportionate amount of lottery tickets. It was "troublesome" that Illinois "systematically targets what we know to be lower-income persons as a way of raising revenue" because that was not "the fairest way for us to raise revenue." DeLeo noted that the state lottery contributed $515 million annually for education funding, and Barack leavened his criticism, saying, "I don't want to come off as a scold, because as I mentioned, had I won on my ticket, I would not be here tonight."

But Barack had a more fundamental objection. "The lottery is part of a growing culture that (a) is money obsessed, two, defines success or happiness or even our fantasies are shaped around having lots of money. That's not necessarily a healthy thing." DeLeo stressed that gaming, unlike taxes, was entirely voluntary, and that many people supported riverboat gambling, which led Barack to note that the boats "wield tremendous influence down in Springfield that is probably disproportionate." A few nights later, speaking at a panel discussion on criminal justice issues, Barack rued a political culture that tolerated "the police code of silence" and wrongful prosecutions yet "punished" elected officials who were "perceived as being soft on crime." Again Barack had a more fundamental criticism: "poor folks generally get a raw deal in the criminal justice system," although he also noted that "the only argument for the death penalty is vengeance, and that is a valid emotion."<sup>26</sup>

When the Chicago City Council passed a resolution asking the U.S. Congress to consider paying reparations for slavery to present-day African Americans, Barack appeared briefly on the CBS Evening News and firmly dismissed the possibility of that coming to fruition: "generally the Supreme Court has a philosophy that you have to identify a clear wrongdoer and a clear victim" in order to recover damages. In Illinois, almost everyone was astonished when Governor George Ryan, ostensibly a lifelong abortion opponent, vetoed a bill the Senate had passed 33-23-2, with Barack among the nos, ending Medicaid funding of abortions for poor women facing health risks. Ryan's decision, just like his capital punishment moratorium and his unwavering gun-bill stance, left conservatives feeling "completely betrayed."

Capitol Fax's Rich Miller, like Ryan a native of Kankakee, Illinois, was amazed that Ryan had "flipped on so many long-held beliefs and campaign promises," especially given "the reactionary environment he came from." Kankakee was "one of the most close-minded, bigoted towns I've ever seen," Miller explained. "It's been segregated forever. I know educated Kankakeeans who regularly use the 'N-word' in everyday conversation." Before becoming governor, Ryan had been "the quintessential Kankakee hack," a "warm, genial man" who was "also one of the coldest, most calculating politicians."

Miller's friend Steve Rhodes observed in Capitol Fax that Ryan had been so transformed that "our Republican governor is actually a Democrat." In late June the governor called a one-day special session to ask the legislature to approve a six-month suspension of Illinois's 5 percent gasoline tax in the run-up to the fall general election, given rising fuel prices. On the same morning the legislators gathered, Steve Neal published yet another column promoting Barack's political future, again recommending him as the Democratic nominee for state attorney general in two years. Barack reluctantly voted in favor of Ryan's supremely political gas-tax rollback, suggesting Illinois would be better served by not losing that revenue.

The summer of 2000 was the most relaxing time Barack had had in more than a year. Michelle's former Public Allies protégé Malik Nevels, now out of law school but still driving Barack's former Saab, recruited him to join African American broadcaster Tavis Smiley at a Chicago Urban League conference aimed at encouraging one hundred African American teenagers to get "wired and tuned in." In late June Barack attended his first Chicago Annenberg Challenge board meeting in six months. His departure as board chair a year earlier had coincided with the onset of the effort's long-scheduled wind-down. By early 2000, CAC had only $4.5 million left to award after raising the full $59.8 million in required matching funds from Chicago-based foundations and receiving the entire $49.2 million commitment from the Annenberg Foundation.

Only Barack and Pat Graham remained from CAC's original board, and Barack's four and a half years as chair had encompassed a dramatic reining-in of the program's expectations. Initially envisioned as focusing its support on about a hundred schools, the forty-seven networks CAC funded instead included more than 210. "We could have done things more systematically," executive director Ken Rolling confessed to Catalyst Chicago, which concluded that CAC "might have had more concrete results if they had invested more money in fewer projects." One friendly critic said "it is extremely difficult to attribute any specific achievements or progress to the work of the Chicago Challenge," and noted how "there was little contact between the Challenge and individual schools." Three and a half million dollars was channeled to support research on the impact of the rest of CAC's grants, a requirement that neither Barack nor Rolling welcomed. Graham repeatedly witnessed how some of the researchers "drove Barack absolutely berserk because they talked in educationese, without clarity," but Pat came to think that "undoubtedly that research was the most lasting contribution of the Chicago Annenberg Challenge." Those researchers concluded that the CAC "provided too few resources and too little support to too many schools" and "had little impact on student outcomes," which all along had been Barack's insistent focus. Fred Hess, who along with Don Moore had the greatest impact on Chicago school reform throughout the two decades predating 2000, nonetheless believed at that time that "the quality of opportunity that kids are starting out with in Chicago today is significantly higher than it was fifteen years ago," when Barack had first arrived in Roseland.

Like Jean Rudd, Ken Rolling had gotten to know Barack well during those early years, but the five years that they worked together were "a time of his life that was I think stressful," Ken recalled. "Money was always a big issue" because "they were in debt" and "living on the edge." More than once Barack vented to Ken. "She's on me. Michelle wants money. 'Why don't you go out and get a good job? You're a lawyer—you can make all the money we need.'" One night Barack got "really upset" when Ken called to say he needed the board chair's input on a pending decision. "God damn it, I'm not getting paid for this. I can't spend my time on this," Barack yelled into the phone. "'Thank you' was very hard to come by," Ken recalled, and after the congressional loss, Ken too heard Barack profess doubt. "I don't know. I think I might just chuck this whole thing, and I'm just going to go get myself a good job and make some money."<sup>27</sup>

Jesse Ruiz heard similar comments at a summer breakfast. Barack "was very demoralized" and was “complaining about Springfield,” Ruiz recalled. “A lot of my classmates are partners at law firms now,” Barack said, adding that “you probably earn more than I do!” In midsummer Barack, Michelle, and two-year-old Malia traveled to Washington to see Rob and Lisa Fisher. The visit began inauspiciously, with Barack telling their hosts, “‘We’ve forgotten our suitcase,’ and Michelle was like, ‘We didn’t forget our suitcase! I packed for me and Malia, you forgot your suitcase!’” Rob and Lisa already knew “there’s no question as to who’s the boss of that household,” and it was readily apparent how unhappy Michelle was with Barack’s political life. “Michelle’s pushing him hard at that point,” Rob recalled. “‘Let’s take care of our family. This is not worth it.’” During that visit Barack and Michelle also went for brunch to the home of old Harvard friend Julius Genachowski and his wife, and afterward Barack confessed to Julius that Michelle had asked him, “When are we going to have a life like that?”

In late July and again in August, Barack signed off on twenty-eight different “member initiative” projects, committing a total of $1,080,000 in state funds to a wide range of South Side organizations. Twenty-five of the grants ranged in size from $2,500 to $50,000. The three larger ones provided $100,000 each to the South Side YMCA and to Father Mike Pflieger’s St. Sabina Church and $450,000—up from the $400,000 announced just before the congressional primary—to Wellington Wilson’s Kennedy-King College. Speaking to the Hyde Park Chamber of Commerce, Barack turned from legislative issues to describe his daughter Malia. “She’s such a little sponge right now, she’s soaking everything in. I know she’ll be able to compete at any level because she’s had well-educated parents,” but “that’s not the case for most children.” Barack’s role as cochair of JCAR led the progressive Woodstock Institute to recruit him to take the lead in pressing Governor Ryan to order the state’s Office of Banks and Real Estate, and the Department of Financial Institutions, to strengthen predatory-lending regulations, which a recently passed bill had instructed them to draft. Meeting with Ryan in Chicago on August 10, Barack said the executive branch agencies had not lived up to the legislature’s intent, and that JCAR expected to see stronger rules in the near future.

That initiative won Barack front-page attention in both the Chicago Defender and the Hyde Park Herald, and in the third week of August he flew to Los Angeles, where the Democratic National Convention was about to nominate Vice President Al Gore to take on Texas governor George W. Bush in the November presidential election. Unlike many Illinois politicians, Barack was not a member of the 190-person state delegation, but he thought the trip might be helpful because “I was a little depressed.” Barack had reserved a rent-a-car to get from LAX to the Burbank Airport Hilton, where the Illinois delegates were staying, but at the Hertz counter, his credit card was declined and he had to spend “half an hour on the phone” pleading with customer service to increase his credit limit. “Once he got to the hotel he had to increase his debt limit again to get a hotel room,” Senate colleague James Clayborne remembered Barack telling him. At a Monday-evening reception at the Los Angeles County Museum of Art, an Associated Press reporter asked Barack to comment on rumors that state Democrats hoped U.S. senator Dick Durbin would run for governor in 2002. “Dick Durbin is not only the most popular Democrat in the state, but the most popular politician in the state,” Barack replied. But without a floor pass like official delegates received, Barack and Clayborne ended up taking a bus to the Staples Center and waiting for a day pass together. One night they managed to sneak up to the suite level and watched the proceedings from the box of Donna Brazile, Gore’s campaign manager, but Barack found the trip enervating rather than restorative. He was “the guy in the room who nobody knew, but everyone knew didn’t belong,” he recalled a few years later.

Hasan Chandoo recounted a late-summer conversation: “After the election he’s fucked. He’s got no money. He’s maxed out on credit cards.” Michelle would later mention receiving telephone calls from debt collection agents and hesitating to open the mail because of unpaid credit card bills. But with Dan Shomon insistently encouraging him to focus on legislative prospects in the upcoming 2001 session, Barack and Dan revived the “Obama Issues Committee” that had debuted a year earlier at the outset of the congressional race, this time directing volunteers like Will Burns and young attorney Andrew Gruber to “develop bill and research ideas” that Barack could use to introduce legislation in January.<sup>28</sup>

Barack continued to emphasize that “the state’s commitment to education is lacking,” and in late September he returned to Cambridge for a weekend gathering of six hundred black Harvard Law School alumni. One of his old basketball buddies remembered Barack making some “very poignant” remarks about the challenges of inner-city education, and the conference proceedings recorded him remarking that “what strikes me is how many talented young students come out of law school thinking they have no options.” At the end of that month, a board retreat aimed at rejuvenating Bronzeville’s Hope Center, where Barack’s former aide Cynthia Miller was now program director, showed that Barack’s vision of what the center should be had not changed from years earlier. Barack “underscored the need for a citywide space for the development of leadership and issues strategies within the African American community,” but just as before, other members wanted to retain a Bronzeville focus. “You cannot be organizing in a local community while trying to develop broader coalitions too,” Barack insisted. “There are no local organizations in the Black community capable of shaping the city agenda,” and “what seems to be missing is an overarching strategy for change in the African American community.” Barack said that “citywide doesn’t mean everything,” just that “the conception of what we’re trying to build is not confined by geographic boundaries.” That meant both “public policy change” and “institution building,” but others wanted the Hope Center to remain focused on “changing people’s level of awareness in ways that enable them to improve their daily lives,” a much more modest mission.

Late September was also the start of the law school’s academic year and Barack’s return to teaching after nine months away. He once again offered both Constitutional Law III and Current Issues in Racism and the Law, each unchanged from prior iterations and with the Racism syllabus wrongly stating that the class was being offered during the spring quarter, as it had been up through 1996, rather than in autumn. Con Law drew only seventeen students, while Racism attracted thirty-two almost entirely liberal students in a law school that continued to have even fewer African American students than it had a half decade earlier. “It was a school that didn’t really understand race relations,” one white male 3L explained. It was “stiflingly white male dominated,” a 3L female who would become a partner at a huge international law firm recalled, “the most stifling environment I’ve ever been in.”

Once again, as 3L Stacy Monahan Tucker remembered, whenever a student “tried to reduce an issue to a claim that the ‘right’ result was clear,” Barack “would jump in and masterfully argue the other side—not as though he was playing devil’s advocate, but as if he truly believed these issues were complex and multilayered, and it would be irresponsible to pretend that there were easy or obvious answers.” Barack “seemed to honestly understand and sympathize with the viewpoints of those who took what would be viewed as the more ‘bigoted’ or less progressive position.” Peter Steffen, also a 3L, agreed that Barack “would often argue the more conservative side of the issues” and “was pretty good at keeping a poker face about what he really thought.” At one of the course’s nine weekly meetings someone asked him directly, “Where do you stand on reparations?” and Barack “paused a long time” before responding, “I think there’s a moral case for reparations, but I don’t know that in practice we can actually ever do anything about it in any kind of practical way.” There was no question that Barack remained a “very effective classroom teacher,” but with the final month of classes given over to the students’ group presentations, one woman felt “he outsourced about half the class.” More importantly, as 3L Rachael Pontikes realized, Barack’s syllabus featured 100 percent male authors, causing her to remember that “women’s voices were missing from the class.”<sup>29</sup>

In the fall, Barack signed off on more “member initiative” grants of state funds to additional South Side groups. In September, $100,000 each went to the Museum of Science and Industry in Hyde Park and to the Chicago Better Housing Association (CBHA) for a six-block-long Englewood Botanical Garden/Education Project that Barack had announced eight months earlier and that was located directly across the street from a CBHA-sponsored housing development. Then, on October 4, he submitted paperwork to award $75,000 to the South Shore Community Partnership Network, a part of Yesse Yehudah’s FORUM—Fulfilling Our Responsibility Unto Mankind—“to purchase computer equipment, print literature and training manuals, and to cover administrative costs for the 21st Century ‘e’-family.com initiative.” Eleven months earlier, Yehudah had handed Obama a bundle of five $1,000 campaign contribution checks from FORUM employees for the congressional race. “Yesse came and kissed his ass,” Dan Shomon explained, and then “yes, he got an earmark.” Three days after Senate Democrats’ chief of staff Courtney Nottage signed off on Barack’s $75,000 request, another five $1,000 checks, this time from arm’s-length Yehudah friends and acquaintances, arrived to help pay down Barack’s outstanding debt. The quid pro quo could not have appeared more explicit, just as was Barack’s knowing descent into Illinois’s “pay to play” culture: in exchange for $10,000 in campaign contributions to a needy candidate who still needed to recoup $9,500 of his own family’s funds from Obama for Congress 2000, $75,000 in state funds had been given to Yehudah’s organization to use at his discretion.<sup>30</sup>

In contrast was Illinois’s Republican U.S. senator, Peter Fitzgerald. Less than two years into his first term after defeating Carol Moseley Braun, Fitzgerald, on the same day that Barack was submitting the paperwork for Yesse Yehudah’s $75,000 grant, took to the floor of the U.S. Senate to filibuster an Interior Department appropriations bill he feared lacked adequate safeguards to prevent Republican insiders’ corrupt self-dealing in Springfield. Less than a week earlier, Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller had cited Fitzgerald’s “super-strong distaste for the pinstripe patronage crowd and the politicians who cater to them” while writing about “how corrupt this state can be.” Fitzgerald’s fear was that federal funding for Springfield’s Abraham Lincoln Presidential Library and Museum would be handled so that “a bunch of political insiders wind up lining their pockets at taxpayer expense.” He was particularly concerned about Republican insider Bill Cellini, whose behind-the-scenes influence in state party affairs was infamous and whose wife, along with those of Governor George Ryan and House Republican leader Lee Daniels, sat on the Lincoln Library’s board.

Democratic campaign strategist Pete Giangreco praised Fitzgerald, telling Chicago Magazine that “he’s on target about the Lincoln Library—that thing looks like it’s larded up like the proverbial fatted calf.” Poll numbers showed Fitzgerald with better than 62 percent approval among Illinois voters, but publicly trashing his own party’s top state leaders in the most prominent forum imaginable contributed to the belief that Fitzgerald's reelection in 2004 "is far from a sure thing," Chicago reported.

In late October, several weeks before the veto session, Barack traveled to Carbondale to deliver a keynote address at a Youth Government Day event at Southern Illinois University, at the invitation of former U.S. senator Paul Simon. Barack began by highlighting how "pervasive in our culture at this point is a cynicism about not just the political process but public involvement generally. We have a tendency to believe that politics is more of a business than a mission." Barack explained that he held public office because "I feel like meaning in my life depends on me being involved in something bigger than just myself, that unless I hitch my wagon to larger movements of people and the community at large that I'm selling myself short." Barack joked that "having a law degree allows you to pretend that you know what you're talking about even though you don't," and he complained that "change is awfully slow in the political process," especially because "particular groups are so much better organized than the public at large."

Lobbyists, he said, capitalized on a "monopoly of information" in Springfield, where "the degree of partisanship is not based on ideology but simply on the basis of the interests of leadership in maintaining control of their particular chamber." Barack explained that "your state senator or your state representative has ceded much of their individual law-making power to the leadership" of the Four Tops, who focused on "policing their membership and making sure that they don't cross the aisle and work as effectively as they might." Barack was displeased that "our public policy debate isn't as effective as it should be . . . because we frame things as either/or as opposed to both/and," but he referred to his days as an organizer in stressing that "it's important to communicate to people in terms of their self-interest what government and politics" can do for them. Soon after, Paul Simon sent Barack a thank-you letter, commending his "adept handling of the English language" and reiterating that "when the right opportunity presents itself you should be and will be a candidate for state-wide office."<sup>31</sup>

In late October, Michelle discovered that she was again pregnant, happy news but also problematic for the possibility, as the Sun Times' Steve Neal repeatedly wrote, that Barack would be an ideal Democratic candidate for state attorney general in 2002. Dan Shomon joined Paul Simon in believing that Barack should look to a statewide race and procured a batch of "Obama Statewide" buttons to hand out at one Democratic gathering. Barack had passingly mentioned the AG possibility to Jim Reynolds, Judy Byrd, and Marty Nesbitt during an early fall conversation in Nesbitt's kitchen, but he told them, "I don't know whether Michelle's going to put up with another race. Maybe one more." Yet having a newborn baby at home just as the 2002 campaign schedule began to ramp up would be difficult, especially given how unhappy Michelle was about Barack's electoral aspirations. In addition, Barack would be up for reelection to the Senate, so any candidacy for another office would mean surrendering the post he already held.

Barack and Dan's informal issues committee focused on "legislative ideas for the 2001" session, and Will Burns recommended that Barack call for an increase in "the number of charter schools operating in Chicago," because such schools enjoyed "broad support . . . within the African American community" and would give Barack "school choice credentials in [a] state-wide race." One week before the presidential election between Al Gore and George W. Bush, Barack devoted a Hyde Park Herald column to the third-party candidacy of Ralph Nader. "I fervently believe in Nader's right to run in this election. I think he should have been allowed to participate in debates, and I share a number of his criticisms of the major parties.”

Barack kept up a busy, sometimes hectic schedule of speaking appearances around Chicago, with a panel discussion at Northwestern Law School, a dinner address at the awards ceremony of a legal aid hotline service, and an appearance at the Developing Communities Project’s annual convention. In the presidential election’s confused and uncertain aftermath, with the counting of votes in Florida leaving the winner in doubt, Barack appeared on WTTW-TV’s Chicago Tonight program and said, “the federal courts have no business being involved in this.” While the Republican front-runner’s status was still uncertain, Barack said, “I don’t think this is going to destroy President Bush’s legitimacy in any fashion.”

Veto session in Springfield began contentiously with the status of Illinois’s payday loan draft regulations directly confronting JCAR. Barack told his colleagues, as well as an unusual crowd of onlookers, that it was “a difficult issue and a controversial one,” and he commended the Department of Financial Institutions (DFI) for having done “an admirable job on this.” But Barack added that JCAR unanimously believed “we need to make a few further refinements on these rules,” because even though “there is a need to institute some significant regulation in this area” in order to curb “the worst abuses,” the Illinois Small Loan Association (ISLA) had demonstrated that “some of these provisions will pose an unreasonable economic burden on small lenders,” of which Illinois had more than twelve hundred. Barack told reporters, “I’m optimistic that we’re going to end up with some rules that will allow these payday loan companies to operate profitably but at the same time curb the egregious abuses that we’ve been seeing in some neighborhoods.” ISLA executive director Steve Brubaker rhetorically asked, “why should a customer of a payday loan business be told by the government how much they can and cannot borrow?” but Barack’s Republican Senate JCAR colleague Doris Karpel explained why the legislators were disagreeing with DFI: “We thought they were going too far, and the industry was upset.” In traditional Springfield fashion, JCAR exercised its maximum authority and imposed a six-month delay before DFI’s new rules could take effect.

Barack finally won Senate passage of a bill extending the life of tax abatement “enterprise zones” by ten years, an effort that had been narrowly defeated eighteen months earlier. This time, Barack had recruited influential Republican senators Frank Watson and Carl Hawkinson as chief cosponsors, and the measure passed handily, with George Ryan signing it into law early in the new year. More consequentially, on the final day of the session, word spread that Barack’s young Senate colleague Lisa Madigan had her eyes on a statewide 2002 race, probably attorney general. During a brief conversation earlier in the session, Barack had heard from House Speaker—and state Democratic Party chairman—Mike Madigan that someone other than Barack was envisioned as the Democratic nominee for attorney general.

In early December, Barack was again on WTTW’s Chicago Tonight as the battle over Florida’s recounting of disputed ballots intensified with a 4–3 state supreme court decision ordering a partial recount. “I was surprised,” Barack exclaimed. “I think the Florida state supreme court did the right thing,” but the incomplete approach to the recount “makes them a little more vulnerable potentially under Supreme Court review.” When a fellow guest observed that “whoever wins this victory is going to be tainted,” Barack added, “I think that’s true,” and several evenings later the U.S. Supreme Court reversed the state court’s action, resolving the presidential election in favor of Republican George W. Bush.<sup>32</sup>

Before flying to Honolulu with Michelle and Malia for their annual visit with Toot and Maya, Barack began an effort that would over the following three years bear him very rich fruit. Loop Capital founder Jim Reynolds, who had worked as diligently as anyone at soliciting donations for Barack's congressional race, was about to become president of the Alliance of Business Leaders and Entrepreneurs (ABLE), a low-visibility, thirty-odd-member roundtable of black financial professionals. Barack's sister-in-law Janis Robinson had been ABLE's part-time executive director for several years before taking a job at the U of C's business school, and Barack already knew some members like John Rogers Jr. and Robert Blackwell Jr. After the congressional defeat, Reynolds had begun taking Barack to ABLE's monthly meetings so more members could get to know him. In part the gatherings were gripe sessions, with the energetic business leaders discussing "what the new Black entrepreneur was really up against," publisher Hermene Hartman recalled.

Barack "was usually quiet and more observant than talkative," Hartman said, but "we asked Barack to help us identify business opportunities with the state." Bond attorney Stephen Pugh remembered that Barack "wanted to understand what our needs were," and Barack recalled them in particular telling him that "we are not getting any business from our own state" pension funds regarding asset management as well as equity and fixed-income trading. Barack told Reynolds to reach out to House Speaker Michael Madigan, and both Madigan and Emil Jones Jr. recognized these financial services leaders as potentially valuable new campaign supporters. Shortly before Christmas, Barack accompanied John Rogers and several other ABLE members to an initial meeting with representatives of the Teachers' Retirement System, one of Illinois's three huge public pension investment entities.

Barack also remained highly concerned about his own finances. By the end of 2000, his congressional race debt had been reduced to $23,803, plus the $9,500 that the campaign owed him and Michelle, and Barack told the Hyde Park Herald that asking for contributions was "the least attractive part of being an elected official." With a second child on the way, Barack's modest state Senate and law school salaries, plus Michelle's from the U of C, did not make for an easy life, especially since his Miner Barnhill income had dried up entirely during his congressional race. Child care costs topped $1,500 a month, and payments on their student loans were higher than their monthly mortgage tab. Old friend John Schmidt, who was now planning a 2002 gubernatorial bid, tried without success to get Barack some foundation work, but a far better opportunity presented itself thanks to Robert Blackwell Jr., the young ABLE member and IBM veteran who was CEO of Electronic Knowledge Interchange Inc. (EKI), a management and technology consulting firm.

Blackwell offered Barack an $8,000-a-month retainer to serve as EKI's general counsel, reviewing contracts and offering input on "general business strategy." The handsome monthly fee would pass through Miner Barnhill rather than be paid directly to Barack, though Barack often went to EKI's office at 100 South Wacker Drive. Barack was "one of the three smartest people I have ever met," Blackwell recalled, someone who prefers "peaceful relationships" and "nonconfrontational people" while being "hard on the inside and soft on the outside." Raja Krishnamoorthi, a new Harvard Law School graduate who had worked on former New Jersey senator Bill Bradley's unsuccessful presidential campaign, had first met Barack some months earlier and that winter began visiting him at Miner Barnhill. Raja asked Barack why he was now working so hard, and Barack's reply summed up his life as 2000 ended: "I have a lot of bills to pay down."<sup>33</sup> with Barack teaching Voting Rights for the first time since 1999. Meeting on Monday mornings and Friday afternoons, the course drew only a dozen students, and Barack asked them to read the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Bush v. Gore before the first class. Each student had to write a long paper, and Barack told them the first day that “no one's getting an A from me whose paper doesn't argue for a new idea . . . your theory, and you argue it,” he explained. “You have to have an original idea to get an A.” Three 2Ls remembered it as “a really great class” and recalled Barack as a “terrific” professor who “wanted to hear what people thought” and was “so interested and open to competing viewpoints.” Nat Edmonds recalled Barack “pushing me, testing me on my ideas and my logic and my arguments,” and Kristen Seeger found it “a really rewarding classroom experience.” In addition, Barack “always took the time to chat after class,” and “you could not miss how much he loved his wife” and family. When another 2L asked Barack to participate in a faculty-hosted weekly law-related film series, Barack agreed and chose The Verdict, a 1982 movie starring Paul Newman. “What I like about this movie is that it's about redemption,” Barack explained.

Before the spring 2001 legislative session got started, the U of C Law School's winter quarter began,

In Springfield, a number of issues regarding JCAR required more of Barack's time than usual. He objected to a proposed new rule regarding high-risk loans because it would be “unduly burdensome” to lenders, and he queried whether not enough job-training funds were being spent on actual skills training for the unemployed. JCAR also intervened in a long-running dispute between the Illinois State Board of Education (ISBE) and U.S. District Judge Robert W. Gettleman, who three years earlier, in response to a 1992 lawsuit filed by Chicago special education advocates against the state, had ordered major reforms in how Illinois certified special education teachers. “ISBE continues to deny the undeniable and defend the undefendable,” an angry Gettleman had held in 1998, and in 2000 “ISBE's failure to fulfill its responsibilities to ensure that children with disabilities are educated in the least restrictive environment” led Gettleman to order that the board override its normal rule-making process to institute new certification standards. ISBE complied while protesting that it lacked the authority to do so, and now JCAR moved to suspend the new rules, placing the committee in direct confrontation with Judge Gettleman.

On January 10, Barack seconded Emil Jones's nomination for Senate president, a pro forma proceeding given Republicans' unchanged thirty-two-seat majority. Barack told his colleagues that “the reason we're down here” is “to try to make the lives of our constituents, our children, our grandchildren, our parents and grandparents a little bit better.” Then, a few moments later, Jones upended the Senate without any forewarning by announcing Senator Lou Viverito as one of his five assistant minority leaders in place of an astonished—and now deposed—Jimmy DeLeo. Only insiders fully appreciated the drama and intrigue because DeLeo, along with his close ally John Cullerton and Barack's poker buddy Denny Jacobs, had never been an enthusiastic supporter of Jones as the Senate Democrats' leader. Only Capitol Fax publicized the contretemps, but Jones's unexpected move, like JCAR's confrontation with Gettleman, would roil the statehouse once the spring session picked up steam in late March.<sup>34</sup>

In Chicago, Barack appeared again on WTTW's Chicago Tonight, objecting to President Bush's selection of conservative former Missouri senator John Ashcroft as attorney general. Barack noted that Ashcroft's record revealed a bevy of politically questionable associations, including his acceptance of an honorary degree from racially “offensive” Bob Jones University. Barack said he could not imagine former President Clinton nominating someone who had “received an honorary award from the Nation of Islam.”

The next day Barack joined his law school colleague Dennis Hutchinson on WBEZ Radio's Odyssey program for a long discussion of the Supreme Court's record on civil rights. Barack explained that "Brown v. Board of Education may be one of those rare circumstances where the court is willing to get slightly beyond conventional opinion," but he added that "very little" actual school desegregation took place over the next decade. During the 1960s, "you've got a cultural transformation that changes how states operate and how states think about the protection of individual rights in ways that didn't exist prior to the Warren Court, and I think that is an important legacy to keep in mind."

Where the court helped African American petitioners, Barack said, "was to vest formal rights in previously dispossessed peoples so that I would now have the right to vote, I would now be able to sit at a lunch counter and order, and as long as I could pay for it, I'd be okay. But the Supreme Court never ventured into the issues of redistribution of wealth and sort of more basic issues of political and economic justice in this society, and to that extent, as radical as I think people try to characterize the Warren Court, it wasn't that radical. It didn't break free from the essential constraints that were placed by the founding fathers in the Constitution, at least as it's been interpreted, and the Warren Court interpreted it in the same way." The Constitution "doesn't say what the federal government or the state governments must do on your behalf, and that hasn't shifted, and I think one of the tragedies of the civil rights movement was because the civil rights movement became so court-focused, I think there was a tendency to lose track of the political and community organizing activities on the ground that are able to put together the actual coalitions of power through which you bring about redistributive change." Barack stressed that "I'm not optimistic about bringing about major redistributive change through the courts," but "organizing's hard. Litigation is hard, but organizing's harder. Part of it is just that it's difficult to mobilize change at the local level."

Aiming to mobilize some tangible financial change, in mid-January, Barack, House Speaker Mike Madigan, Jim Reynolds, and three other black financial executives met with the members and staff of the Illinois State Board of Investment (ISBI), the largest of the state's three major pension investment bodies. The four business leaders had a detailed, written request for ISBI, and the presence of Madigan and Barack demonstrated that Illinois Democrats, black and white, were behind the firms' proposal. Barack later recalled that all he did by way of introduction was say, "Listen to what these folks have to say," and the executives had four specific demands: "1. Immediately require that all current ISBI money managers do 15 percent of their brokerage business . . . with African-American owned broker/dealers." "2. Allocate 15 percent of total ISBI assets to African-American owned investment management firms," which would represent $1.4 billion of ISBI's overall assets of $9.3 billion. ISBI at present had only $107 million, representing 1.2 percent of its assets, invested with one single African American-owned firm. "3. . . . place no less than 50 percent" of those two allocations with Illinois-based firms. "4. Accomplish the above three requests in a 90-120 day timeframe."

As one ISBI staff member noted, the black finance professionals "argued that since the Fund has many African-American beneficiaries, the make up of the fund should be similar to the make up of the beneficiaries." The board members agreed to appoint a committee to "recommend a policy regarding minority investment managers and broker/dealers," and "the guests thanked the Board for their time." Several weeks later, Madigan alone appeared before the Investment Committee of the Teachers' Retirement System to support a similar request to that pension fund.<sup>35</sup>

As spring session geared up, Barack had in hand, thanks to Dan Shomon, Andrew Gruber, and other Obama Issues Committee volunteers, a pair of well-drafted bills that would require state officials to monitor Illinois employers' compliance with the federal WARN—Worker Adjustment and Retraining Notification—Act. One furniture company had recently laid off more than a hundred workers without providing the sixty days notice required by federal law, and a joint press conference with 4th Ward alderman Toni Preckwinkle announcing the legislation drew coverage in all three of Chicago's major daily newspapers. Barack also had a trio of gun-control bills aimed at depriving anyone with a record of domestic violence allegations from possessing a firearm, and by early February, Barack had introduced ten bills. In tandem with Emil Jones, Barack also championed a Senate bill banning seventeen types of high-powered firearms, limiting handgun purchases to one per month, and providing for handgun registration. "It's hard to find a rationale as to why anyone would want an AK-47 or need more than twelve handguns a year, unless the intent was to distribute," Barack told reporters.

On the political horizon, Barack told the Chicago Sun-Times, "I don't think Mayor Daley could be defeated any time soon," even though "African Americans constitute the single largest voting bloc in the city." Steve Neal kept an eye on the Democrats who might run for attorney general in 2002. Obama "has stronger credentials than anyone else in the field," Neal wrote, and though "he has discussed running . . . he may not want to give up his legislative seat for another race that he might not win." Less than two weeks later, Speaker Madigan's daughter Lisa began asking Senate colleagues to support her bid for the office, and with his own possibilities now clearly on hold, Barack devoted much of one mid-February Friday to the longest interview he had ever given.

Julieanna Richardson was a 1980 Harvard Law School graduate who had worked in cable television before deciding in early 2000 to launch a video-interviewing project to record the life experiences of successful African Americans. A year later, The HistoryMakers was still a nascent operation, but Richardson already had filmed interviews with Emil Jones, Alice Palmer, and Bobby Rush, among many others, so an up-and-coming state senator was well within her purview. Richardson began with some formulaic personal questions—favorite vacation spot? "Bali," of course, and Barack volunteered that lately he had been tired and sleepy.

He retraced his childhood upbringing and travels, exaggerating his high school misbehavior and his political activism at Oxy and Columbia. He spoke movingly about his work in Roseland before discussing his years at Harvard, his leadership of Project VOTE!, and his frustration with the state Senate. Barack decried the absence of "thoughtful independent voting" and the extent of partisan "jockeying and gamesmanship" by legislative leaders. He also spoke critically about Chicago's African American community. "We don't have a well-defined agenda in terms of what are the issues that we might move forward," and he rued that "we have a personality-driven politics as opposed to an agenda-driven politics. . . . When you look at those groups that are able to accomplish significant things through the political process, it's not because of the charisma of any particular leader, but it's because they have a clear agenda. Certainly that's how the business community operates. They are dogged in pursuit of a particular agenda," which in Springfield often worked to the disadvantage of underrepresented populations because "state government has much more influence on the day-to-day lives of people than the federal government does."

Again echoing John McKnight, Barack stated that African Americans "have to focus on how do we become productive as a community and not just consumers.” Finally, Richardson asked Barack about his own legacy and formative influences. “I would like to, first of all, be able to say that I was a good husband and a good father along with being a good elected official.” He believed “my career is still largely ahead of me as opposed to behind me,” and he intriguingly stated that “most of my influences probably are not so much people that I knew personally as people whose words I’ve internalized.”<sup>36</sup>

In late February the pace of the spring session picked up, and Barack reintroduced his racial profiling bill plus another one to increase the state’s earned-income tax credit from 5 to 10 percent. Along with Republican Senate colleague Brad Burzynski and two other JCAR members, Barack met with U.S. district judge Robert W. Gettleman in Chicago to discuss the jurist’s unhappiness with the Illinois State Board of Education’s continuing opposition to his orders in the Corey H. special education case. Legislators like Burzynski wanted Gettleman to back off his insistence that ISBE promulgate new statewide standards, but Barack, the sole lawyer in the group, struck a far more deferential pose, telling Gettleman, “We’re just here to listen to you.” Afterward, Barack expressed displeasure with Burzynski’s forcefulness, saying, “I might have to appear in front of that judge someday!” On February 21, JCAR voted to suspend one of the new rules ISBE had filed pursuant to Gettleman’s rulings, and six days later, the judge ordered ISBE to implement the rule immediately, irrespective of JCAR’s disapproval. Gettleman did allow ISBE to hold public hearings on the new standards, and Barack commended that move, telling reporters the “judge deserves credit” for that gesture.

Barack introduced another fourteen new bills addressing a wide range of subjects, although none merited a press release, and when Governor George Ryan presented Illinois’s proposed budget, Barack expressed disappointment that it failed to expand KidCare to include parents as well as children. At the end of February, Senate Democrats’ ugly internal divisions spilled into public view when Jimmy DeLeo and three Democratic friends—John Cullerton, Bobby Molaro, and Tony Munoz—joined unanimous Senate Republicans in voting to change Senate rules to allow President Pate Philip to elevate DeLeo from minority spokesperson to cochairman of the important Executive Appointments Committee. Additional Democrats sympathized with DeLeo, but on the Senate floor, Barack joined Rickey Hendon and Miguel del Valle in challenging the Republicans’ power play. “It may be, for example—this is just a hypothetical,” Barack facetiously declared, “that a Minority Spokesperson on a committee has gotten into an argument with the Leader and is not happy with the Leader. Maybe he was thinking about running for Leader himself and got upset. And so there’s a power struggle taking place within the caucus,” one that Republicans were now changing the Senate’s rules to take advantage of. “It is a mistake for us to use some power issues that are taking place within this Chamber to fundamentally shift what is already a pretty significant imbalance of power between the majority and the minority and make it even worse,” Barack warned. “It’s going to produce more recrimination, more rancor.”

In early March the Illinois State Library, across the street from the statehouse, hosted Barack for a lunchtime reading of Dreams From My Father. He again chose the passage ending with Lolo’s lesson that it is “always better to be strong yourself.” Barack also cited “the tension between family and ambition, and that is a tension that I continue to struggle with.” As JCAR continued to wrestle with the payday loan industry’s unhappiness with the state DFI’s proposed new regulations, Barack and Lisa Madigan finally dissented from their colleagues’ desire to side with the rip-off artists. But in the ongoing dispute between ISBE and Judge Gettleman over his rulings in the Corey H. case, JCAR unanimously moved to ask that both houses of the state legislature approve a joint resolution upholding ISBE's stance despite the judge's repeated orders.

The Chicago Tribune highlighted Barack's earlier role in directing $200,000 in state funds to Jesse Jackson Sr.'s Citizenship Education Fund, and seeking to defend the expenditure, Barack said that "taxpayers will not be subsidizing a for-profit entity" but instead a venture capital fund that would be "almost like a think-tank about how do we get capital in the community." As Barack had explained to former DNC chairman David Wilhelm, his goal was "asset-based economic development," again echoing John McKnight. "What do we have to build on" so as to create "entrepreneurial enterprises that are indigenous to the community"?<sup>37</sup>

With the Senate rarely in session prior to late March, Barack resumed active lawyering at Miner Barnhill in addition to his highly remunerative consulting for Robert Blackwell Jr.'s EKI. Four years earlier John Belcaster had filed a federal False Claims Act case on behalf of Dr. Janet Chandler, a medical researcher who had been fired by Cook County Hospital after blowing the whistle on fraud and corruption. The district court had dismissed the suit, but with Judd Miner determined to appeal to the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals, Barack spent considerable time drafting two briefs that were filed with the appellate court in late March. Barack's former law student Marni Willenson, now a young Miner Barnhill partner, remembered them as "beautiful briefs," and when Judd argued the case before a Seventh Circuit panel several months later, Barack's handiwork proved to be "extraordinarily effective." The appellate panel found in Dr. Chandler's favor, and when Cook County appealed that decision to the U.S. Supreme Court, a unanimous affirmance resulted in Cook County and a second defendant paying more than $5.5 million in damages to the federal government and Dr. Chandler.

In Springfield, Barack spoke on the Senate floor in favor of charter schools and also a bill authorizing the sale of clean needles to drug addicts while stressing that "none of us here are seeking to decriminalize drug use." On March 30, three antiabortion bills championed by Republican senator Patrick O'Malley came to the floor, and Barack rose to say the first "is probably not going to survive constitutional scrutiny." He added that "this is an area where potentially we might have compromised and arrived at a bill that dealt with the narrow concerns about how a pre-viable fetus or child was treated by a hospital," but abortion opponents had forsaken that effort. Ten other Democrats as well as Republican Christine Radogno joined Barack in voting present, but SB 1093 was approved anyway, 34-6-12. Barack also voted present as the two subsequent abortion bills passed 33-6-13 and 34-5-13. Speaking to the Chicago Sun-Times' Dave McKinney, Barack said the underlying problem with all three bills was that "whenever we define a pre-viable fetus as a person that is protected by the equal protection clause or other elements of the Constitution, we're saying they are persons entitled to the kinds of protections provided to a child, a 9-month-old child delivered to term." That presumption, "if it was accepted by a court, would forbid abortions to take place."

In early April, Barack opposed a bill to allow people with orders of protection to carry concealed firearms, calling it "a Trojan Horse" because of the erroneous claim "that concealed carry will create a safer citizenry." The next day the Senate unanimously passed one of Barack's layoff-notification bills, which soon became law, and he spoke passionately in favor of a measure to increase state education funding. Echoing his Annenberg Challenge experience, Barack professed his "extraordinarily strong commitment to public schools" while emphasizing that "one of the most important things is fostering innovation in the public schools.” A bill to require parental notice of minors’ abortions produced a 39–7–11 majority reminiscent of the earlier antiabortion trio, with Barack once again voting present. Barack also sought to cosponsor other senators’ bills, particularly ones introduced by Republican moderates like Christine Radogno, which he knew stood a better chance of Senate passage than Democrats’ measures. Whenever such a bill did pass, the Democratic caucus’s press staff churned out a press release. Stories such as a Chicago Defender one headlined “Obama Scores Big in Senate Passing of 3 Bills” resulted, with Barack warning that “we can’t continue to incarcerate ourselves out of the drug crisis.”

By 2001 most progressive lobbyists viewed Barack as a disappointing legislator, despite those bills and press releases. Veterans like John Bouman and Citizen Action’s William McNary had befriended Barack early on. The capitol lacked a cloakroom, so lobbyists needed a senator whose office could be their home base, and McNary recalled that Barack’s “was the place that a lot of progressive organizations went to hang up our hats and coats. We felt at home with him.” Although no one doubted Barack’s policy preferences, many thought his pragmatic attitude about what was politically possible in a body dominated by Pate Philip left him unwilling to champion many progressive issues. Doug Dobmeyer, an antipoverty lobbyist, remembered that “there were a number of times when he would say, “‘Doug, look, we can’t go that far.’ That pretty much precluded him from being the point person because he wasn’t willing to say ‘I can go very far.’” Instead Dobmeyer turned to Hyde Park representative Barbara Flynn Currie, who was “a much stronger legislator than Barack,” and in the Senate, expert Public Health and Welfare Committee staffer Nia Odeoti-Hassan was their “go-to person.” On Judiciary, hardworking John Cullerton was the most influential Democrat, notwithstanding Barack’s desire “to show people that he knew the law,” as Republican Kirk Dillard put it. Barack “would ask a lot of more detailed questions, sometimes more theoretical than practical,” Dillard remembered. Barack’s tendency to “verbalize his thought process” in “the tone of a U of C law professor” could be “a little annoying,” moderate Republican Dan Cronin explained.

Al Sharp, the executive director of Protestants for the Common Good, shared Dobmeyer’s view. “‘I’ll do it, Al, but I have to tell you it’s not going to happen,’” Sharp remembered Barack saying. “I appreciated the candor, and I appreciated the realism,” but Barack was so “very pragmatic” that he was unwilling to fight the good fight. Legal aid veteran Linda Mills recalled that Barack “sponsored a number of bills I wrote,” but “I stopped seeking him out as a chief sponsor pretty early on” because Barack was “disengaged” rather than actively pushing the bills. “He was never involved in the legislation,” and on many days Barack was simply “unavailable, golfing, playing basketball. He was just out to lunch so often,” Mills remembered. “The energetic guy that I had anticipated coming in didn’t show up.” John Cameron, who worked with McNary at Citizen Action before moving to AFSCME, echoed Mills. “If you were working with him on a bill,” Barack had “an attitude generally of ‘I shouldn’t have to do any work. You guys do the work. . . . It’s your bill. Go work for it.’”

During the 2001 spring session, organizing veteran Josh Hoyt worked hand in hand with John Bouman to expand KidCare into FamilyCare. They hoped Barack “would be a leader on this thing, which honestly he was not,” Hoyt explained. What “was really disappointing was we went in to meet with Barack, and he gave us this very politically sophisticated explanation of why there was very little room to maneuver in the Senate under Pate Philip, that he had worked very hard to build up the political capital that he had with his fellow Republicans, and he was not going to squander it in a losing fight.” Barack’s attitude of “sophisticated resignation” meant that “he just wasn’t going to fight when it was necessary to fight,” Hoyt remembered.

Linda Mills believed Barack could be “exasperatingly rude” at times, with senators as well as lobbyists. On the floor, Barack “put his hands on people’s shoulders as though they were his subjects. It was the most patronizing and condescending body language I’d ever seen.” John Cameron agreed that Barack “exuded a lot of arrogance in that chamber,” and on occasion Barack could be insultingly dismissive to old 1980s acquaintances like Don Moore and Hal Baron. On school reform, Moore said, Barack “never really did much for us,” and when Moore took some Local School Council members to see him, Barack’s greeting was “Are you people still around?” Baron, Harold Washington’s former policy chief, had an almost identical experience, with Barack asking, “Hal, you’re still doing this jobs stuff?” Even William McNary experienced Barack being “somewhat dismissive,” although one former staffer felt that Barack was someone “you could just forgive being arrogant because he’s so clearly smarter than you and just a gifted person.” Campaign finance reformer Cindi Canary, who had known Barack since the “motor voter” case that preceded his Senate service, was struck that in Springfield “the people you expect to dislike him,” like old-school Democrat Denny Jacobs, “love him,” while “the people you expect to like him,” like many progressive lobbyists and African American colleagues, “hate him.”

The Wednesday-night poker games at Terry Link’s house remained a mainstay of Barack’s schedule, and he again offered a “day in Springfield” for the law school auction. One onlooker remembered auctioneer Richard Epstein, a conservative law and economics champion, trying to increase the bids by proclaiming that Barack “could be a senator someday! He could be president someday!” The four male 3L winners drove to Springfield on what one recalled was “a pretty quiet day around the Capitol.” Barack took them to a committee hearing, onto the Senate floor, and to a late lunch at a small family-run Mexican restaurant near the statehouse. In the capitol’s rotunda, Barack paused briefly to chat with a “schlumped-over” Governor George Ryan, who looked like “the saddest sack you’d ever seen” as the commercial-driver’s-license scandal continued to roil. Lunch was “a great, very intimate time with him,” although Barack was visibly “exhausted.” Ted Liazos remembered Barack sounding “pretty reflective” and “telling us that he wasn’t sure Michelle was going to let him run statewide” any time in the future. Marty Chester recalled Barack remarking “sort of in jest” that “If I run for something else now, my wife’s going to divorce me.” As lunch was ending, Barack told the soon-to-be-graduates, “If you have a chance when you get out of law school to make a little money, it’s not necessarily a bad thing.”<sup>38</sup>

On April 15, Barack and Michelle had to write a check for more than $12,000 to the Internal Revenue Service. Barack told the Hyde Park Herald that in 2002 he would run for another term in the state Senate, and an April fund-raiser for which African American attorney Peter Bynoe footed the $6,700 tab brought in $1,000 checks for Barack’s state campaign account from African American financial figures John Rogers Jr., Mellody Hobson, Louis Holland, and Lester McKeever, as well as from prominent Chicagoans Penny Pritzker, Abby McCormick O’Neil, and Daniel Levin, plus $200 from Barack’s fellow Woods Fund board member Bill Ayers.

In Springfield, JCAR gathered for what Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller called its “most closely watched vote in years” on the state’s predatory-loan regulations. Thanks to the National Training and Information Center (NTIC), a coalition of neighborhood groups had mobilized in favor of strong rules, counterbalancing the lobbying prowess of the lending industry. “This has probably been as heavily lobbied an issue as I've seen," Barack told one reporter. At the meeting, House Speaker Michael Madigan spoke in favor of the muscular rules, and with all six JCAR Democrats primed to vote yes, and all three Senate Republicans opposed, two moderate House Republicans, Dan Rutherford and Tom Cross, would cast the decisive votes. The highly technical rules prohibited prepayment penalties and other practices that drained homeowners' equity, plus costly single-premium credit insurance.

Barack explained that "what we've been trying to distinguish is the difference between sub-prime and predatory, highly unfavorable loan arrangements that often result in foreclosures. If you're charging 15 or 16 or 17 percent interest, and you're tacking on fees and costs to this each time that loan is refinanced, then potentially you are drawing down thousands of dollars in profits before ultimate foreclosure." Lenders make "a whole lot of money" from such practices, and "in many of these loans, you can't identify any service or value that is being provided to the customer." Given that, "I don't see how as a state we can't step in and say these are essentially practices that we need to restrict and curb." With Cross and Rutherford joining Barack and the other Democrats, JCAR adopted the strong new regulations by a vote of 8-4.

Looming over the end of spring session was the remapping of all Illinois legislative districts pursuant to the 2000 census. The state's 1970 constitution provided for a bipartisan Legislative Redistricting Commission that had been intended to produce partisan compromise, but in each prior decennial iteration, disagreement had led to use of the constitution's final step, where a blind winner-take-all drawing by the secretary of state decides whether a Republican or a Democrat casts the commission's tie-breaking vote. Two young staff members, John Corrigan and Andy Manar, had been working for Emil Jones's Senate Democrats since early that year on a new district map, with the explicit goal of creating "as many minority districts as possible," Corrigan recalled. The affected members did not yet know the new boundaries, but an almost 70 percent increase in Chicago's Hispanic population since 1990 guaranteed the creation of two additional Hispanic-majority districts.

Barack returned to WBEZ's Odyssey program to discuss redistricting with Robert Bennett, his good friend from Northwestern University, and Maria Torres of DePaul University, the wife of Barack's legal buddy Matt Piers. "I would like to see more competition for the African American vote. I think it would be a healthy thing," Barack remarked. One fundamental problem with redistricting was exactly the process that was now under way, with the two parties seeking to protect incumbents and maximize the number of safe seats. "We have a tendency in our current system for representatives to choose the people rather than the people choosing the representatives," Barack observed. "What you end up having because of the lack of competition in the majority of these districts is probably an increase in partisanship and a breakdown in terms of the deliberative function of these legislative bodies."

For Barack, much of the session's final weeks was a cascade of disappointments. He criticized a bill regulating telemarketing calls as being "full of holes," and at a Chicago forum, he noted how Pate Philip had blocked consideration of his "driving while black" racial profiling bill. "It's a systemic issue that one person can stifle debate on important issues," Barack complained. "Walk into a room with one hundred black men, and ninety are going to have stories of being pulled over for biased reasons. Even if 50 percent are mistaken, there's a real problem out there." Under the aegis of state attorney general Jim Ryan, Barack and Judiciary Committee colleague Kirk Dillard joined with law enforcement representatives for a series of early-Monday-morning meetings in downtown Chicago to discuss the issue at length, but the conversations came to naught.

Barack unhappily voted present on a bill that would allow Illinois “to commit persons who’ve committed a sexually violent offense after they’ve served their time” in prison. This was “steamrolling what are admittedly odious folks,” Barack warned, and he also voted present on a bill increasing penalties for drug offenders. “We essentially treat the possession of fifteen grams of cocaine in the same way as we treat a violent rape,” Barack argued. “We are currently spending over a billion dollars a year to incarcerate folks, many of whom are nonviolent drug offenders, and we’re keeping them for extraordinarily lengthy periods of time.” In addition, “a disproportionate number of the youths that are sentenced under these laws are African-American and Latino.”

In committee, Barack voted against a bill to expand eligibility for Illinois’s on-hold death penalty to anyone convicted of committing a murder “in furtherance of gang activity,” and when it reached the floor, he said, “What I’m concerned about is for us to single out ‘gang activity’ as a standard that is different from activity involving all kinds of other criminal conduct.” He also worried “that we use this term ‘gang activity’ as a mechanism to target particular neighborhoods, particular individuals,” with race and ethnicity central to the equation. “If we’re going to apply the death penalty, we better make sure that it’s absolutely uniform across the board.”<sup>39</sup>

That evening the annual capitol skit took place, and Barack’s Senate colleague John Cullerton, a truly gifted mimic, performed “some wicked impersonations of Pate Philip,” Governor Ryan, Emil Jones, and Mike Madigan. “This has been a rough session,” Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller wrote the next morning, “a long, boring and difficult session” that “just hasn’t been much fun.” Tuesday evening was “one laugh riot after another” and a welcome respite. But for Barack the session’s final days were thoroughly downbeat. The Senate unanimously passed JCAR’s resolution endorsing ISBE’s opposition to the new special education rules Judge Gettleman had ordered it to draft. A month later Gettleman mandated that the rules be implemented, and the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals strongly endorsed his decision, writing that “the district court properly found that the state authorities did not have the power to override an injunctive decree issued by a federal court to remedy a state’s violation of standards established by federal law.”

On May 25, the Senate voted 46–10–1 to approve a new map of Illinois’s congressional districts that representatives of both parties had accepted. Rickey Hendon noted that the boundaries of Bobby Rush and Jesse Jackson Jr.’s districts had been altered so that Donne Trotter and Barack both now lived in the 2nd Congressional District and no longer in the 1st. As Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller described, “Jackson’s district zips up the lakefront in a narrow band and shoots east a few blocks in Hyde Park to pick up Obama’s home.” Barack unsurprisingly voted against the new map. He also joined fifty-seven of his colleagues in supporting $3.5 billion in loan guarantees for new coal plants in southern Illinois, stating, “I am a strong supporter, I think, of downstate coal interests and our need to prop up and improve the outputs downstate,” environmental worries notwithstanding.

Behind closed doors, the Four Tops and Governor Ryan agreed to the state budget for the upcoming fiscal year, and on the last day of the session, Barack joined in its unanimous passage, although he expressed regret that KidCare had not been expanded to include the children’s uninsured parents. “I’m disappointed that 200,000 working moms and dads will have to go another year without health insurance because we couldn’t find $7 million this year and $60 million next year out of a $50 billion budget.”<sup>40</sup>

With the session over, the big news for the Obamas was the birth on June 10 of Natasha Marian —“Sasha”—her middle name honoring Michelle’s mother, as Malia’s had Barack’s. But a serious family problem loomed nearby, for Michelle’s brother Craig and his wife Janis, parents of nine-year-old Avery and five-year-old Leslie, were divorcing. Craig had kept his sister and mother in the dark as he and Janis had grown increasingly apart. Well compensated at Jim Reynolds’ Loop Capital Markets and driving a Porsche 944 Turbo and a BMW station wagon, Craig yearned to leave the world of finance for his real passion, basketball.

During the 1999–2000 school year, Craig had coached the University of Chicago Lab School’s varsity team, and then Northwestern University basketball coach Bill Carmody invited Craig to join his staff. “Here I was, making all this money, but I really wasn’t excited with what I was doing,” Craig recalled. The Northwestern job meant a 90 percent cut in pay, but “I had a passion for coaching,” and “I didn’t have that passion for business.” After “a very painful period when we began living separately in the same house,” Craig moved back to his childhood home in South Shore, living upstairs over his mother Marian.

Things were tense at East View too. “By the time Sasha was born,” Barack later wrote, “my wife’s anger toward me seemed barely contained. ‘You only think about yourself,’ she would tell me. ‘I never thought I’d have to raise a family alone,’” Michelle complained. Barack continued, “I found myself subjected to endless negotiations about every detail of managing the house, long lists of things that I needed to do or had forgotten to do, and a generally sour attitude.” Michelle’s anger at the primacy Barack accorded his political career was understandable. The day after she gave birth to Sasha, Barack hurried downtown for a meeting of an Illinois State Board of Investments (ISBI) subcommittee that had been created several months earlier in response to his and Speaker Madigan’s initiative on behalf of African American investment firms.

In late March, Madigan, Jim Reynolds, and other black executives had made a similar request to the State Universities Retirement System’s board, and ISBI’s staff believed they could increase their use of Illinois-based minority-owned firms without adversely affecting investment earnings. In the interim, Governor Ryan had quietly named two highly sympathetic new members, Robert Newtonson and Susan McKeever, to ISBI’s board, and at the June 11 meeting, Reynolds took the lead in thanking ISBI for its efforts while firmly requesting that they formally adopt the 15 percent minority-firm investment benchmark that the African American firms were calling for.

By the time of Sasha’s birth, Michelle had decided to leave her U of C student affairs job once her maternity leave was over. She was unhappy with her life in manifold ways. “I am sitting there with a new baby, angry, tired, and out of shape. The baby is up for that 4 o’clock feeding. And my husband is lying there, sleeping.” She resolved to reorganize her life, taking advantage of her early-to-bed nature whereby she turned in every night at 9:00 P.M., while Barack stayed up past midnight in his small, exceptionally cluttered office at the rear of their condo, which Michelle called “The Hole.” Michelle realized “I was pushing Barack to be something I wanted him to be for me. I believed that if only he were around more often, everything would be better.” But she realized that if she took the initiative to leave home at 4:30 A.M. for an early workout, Barack would have to assume some basic child care tasks. “I would get home from the gym, and the girls would be up and fed.”

Michelle’s transition to a better life attitude was gradual, not instantaneous, but it was aided considerably when she received a midsummer phone call from Michael Riordan, who on July 1 had become the new president of the University of Chicago Medical Center. Riordan’s general counsel was Susan Sher, Michelle's friend and former colleague from Mayor Richard Daley's office, and Paula Wolff, Barack's Joyce Foundation board colleague, chaired the medical center board that had promoted Riordan to his new post. Riordan wanted Michelle to come speak with him about a new community affairs position at the medical center, but she initially brushed him off, citing newly arrived Sasha. Yet Sher pressed Michelle to at least talk with Riordan, and with no babysitter available, Michelle brought two-month-old Sasha along for a conversation during which Riordan agreed to all of Michelle's requests and convinced her to take up the new post come early fall.

When Maya visited Chicago that summer to see the Obama family's newest member, she found her brother at a low ebb and asked him what was wrong. "I don't know. I'm feeling a little frustrated, like I'm not doing what I'm supposed to be doing, that I could be doing more, that I haven't found my path, my mission. I'm not listening hard enough for my call, and I'm floundering a little bit." Taken aback, "I started laughing at him," Maya recalled. "You're the only guy who could be a state senator, a law professor, and a civil rights lawyer and feel like you're underachieving!" Barack had bounced back from his congressional loss fifteen months earlier, as his more energized legislative performance during the 2001 spring session had reflected. As he explained five years later, he had convinced himself that "I can lose an election and this isn't so bad, and I can still serve and do useful things." But no matter how much effort he had invested from January through May in advancing a plethora of generally modest bills, the meager results had left him "extraordinarily frustrated." Looking back at what were now five spring sessions, Barack summed up his record in an almost plaintive tone: "I'm very proud of the work that I did, even though people didn't know I was doing it."<sup>41</sup>

With a new baby, a discontented wife, and an energetic three-year-old at home, the balance of the summer was relatively quiet for Barack. On July 4 he took Malia along to Hyde Park's annual Independence Day parade, for which local politicians dressed up in patriotic costumes. Two weeks later, Barack was on WTTW's Chicago Tonight to weigh in on the city's latest political contretemps. In 1999 white alderman Thomas Murphy had been reelected by the 18th Ward's 85 percent African American population, but now he was being refused membership in the city council's Black Caucus. The dispute drew national coverage in the New York Times, and the Chicago Tribune supported Murphy, arguing that if a Black Caucus "has any purpose, it is to serve the special needs of Chicago's African-Americans," including "those who elected a white man to be their council voice." The NAACP also backed Murphy, but black political consultant Delmarie Cobb, speaking for the caucus, explained that membership was based on being a "black elected official." On Chicago Tonight, Cobb reiterated that position, while Barack took a more nuanced stance. "There's no question that whites can effectively represent blacks, in the same way that blacks can effectively represent whites." The caucus's informal status reminded Barack of black law student associations, where an exclusive group could privately discuss issues. "We all aspire to a vision of a color-blind society," but "what we also have is a reality which is pluralist."

At the end of July, Barack, Dan Shomon, Will Burns, and Laura Hunter held the first new Obama Finance Committee meeting. The short-term focus was an October 11 fund-raiser at the South Shore Cultural Center, where Barack and Michelle's wedding reception had taken place, to generate funds for Barack's state campaign committee. But the real agenda was Barack's political future. Shomon divided his presentation into two headings: "Opportunities" and "Challenges." In the first, Dan cited Barack's "reputation as [a] thoughtful independent," his "demonstrated success at building multi-racial electoral coalitions,” his “high visibility,” and his “low negatives.” Several priorities loomed: “continued consolidation of African-American base,” “maintain grass roots event attendance through summer and fall 2001,” and “state-wide travel.” “Challenges” began with “congressional campaign debt,” which had been reduced but was not retired. “Family responsibilities prevent statewide bid in 2002,” Shomon wrote, and Barack’s “next major campaign will be for statewide office and must be a winner.” A “well-funded campaign war chest” would make Barack a “serious contender for emerging opportunities,” such as Republican U.S. senator Peter Fitzgerald’s expected 2004 race for reelection. “Attorney General 2006” and “Governor 2006,” presuming no Democratic incumbents, were more distant possibilities, and another congressional bid would occur “only if there are retirements.” But another hurdle, as Barack and Dan well knew from 2000, was “Cost—Examples: 6 weeks of Chicago TV = $2 million,” “seven state-wide mail pieces = $500,000.” The total cost would be “$5 million or above, depending on [the] office sought.”

Barack had raised a little more than $500,000 to challenge Bobby Rush, so he would need a tenfold increase in his fund-raising in order to mount a credible U.S. Senate race. Later that day, at an ACORN leader’s eightieth birthday party, Madeline Talbott and Keith Kelleher were struck by how “really depressed” Barack seemed. Given a Republican-controlled Senate, “I don’t know if I’m going to stick around with this,” he told them, “but I’m thinking of running for something big, real big. I can’t tell you what it’s about, but I’m going to need your support.”

In August, behind-the-scenes tussling about the upcoming state legislative remap intensified, with state representative Lou Jones, Alice Palmer’s old friend, showering Democratic staffers with invective when one map showed her House district overlapping with Barack’s Senate district. House colleague Barbara Flynn Currie knew Jones was “an incendiary person,” and Jones’s hatred of Barack was well known. Two years earlier, when state representative Tom Dart backed Barack in his challenge against Rush, Jones went after “me like you wouldn’t believe” on the House floor, Dart recalled. “The vehemence was unreal,” and the deluge of expletives was “so intense and virulent.” Now John Corrigan, who was drawing the Chicagoland districts, became the target of Jones’s wrath. “The shit hit the fan. I’ve never heard anyone so angry,” Corrigan recalled, “and I knew it all went back to Alice Palmer.”

For Corrigan, the key factor in drawing Cook County’s House and Senate districts was “you don’t want to waste African American voters if you’re a Democrat.” The federal Voting Rights Act, with its mandate to maximize the number of black and Hispanic districts, offered a crucial legal assist. “If the end result also helped to produce a Democratic majority, it was not a bad side effect,” Corrigan explained. Barack described the same principles to Chinta Strausberg for a front-page story in the Chicago Defender. Ten years earlier, when Republicans had won the winner-take-all drawing, the result had been “racial packing,” whereby African American influence was diminished by creating heavily black districts. “An incumbent African American legislator with a 90 percent district may feel good about his re-election chances, but we as a community would probably be better off if we had two African American legislators with 60 percent each.” Black senators as diverse as Rickey Hendon, Donne Trotter, Barack, and machine warhorse Bill Shaw all grasped that point, but neither Margaret Smith nor a number of black House members endorsed it.<sup>42</sup>

On August 8, Governor George Ryan announced that he would not run for reelection. Saddled with abysmal approval ratings, due primarily to the ongoing federal investigation into the commercial-driver's-license scandal dating from his time as secretary of state, Ryan's decision promised a Republican contest between his moderate lieutenant governor, Corinne Wood, conservative Illinois attorney general Jim Ryan, and ultraconservative state senator Patrick O'Malley. On the Democratic side, Northwest Side congressman Rod Blagojevich, whose father-in-law, 33rd Ward alderman Richard Mell, was one of the machine's most influential power brokers, had made clear for months that he intended to run. Mayor Richard Daley, who had worked closely with Governor Ryan, loathed Mell, and Barack's friend John Schmidt had considered a gubernatorial bid before word spread that former Chicago school superintendent Paul Vallas would enter the race. Perennial statewide African American candidate Roland Burris was eyeing a run, but even in mid-June, Capitol Fax's Rich Miller put his money on the young congressman. "Blagojevich is wowing Democratic audiences all over Illinois, is raising money by the boatload, has support in the African-American community and has a reliable and sizable Northwest Side base." Blagojevich is "the 'new' face of the Chicago machine," Miller wrote in early August, and "his career has been carefully stage-managed by his father-in-law."

Now officially a lame duck, Ryan vetoed the "gang activity" death penalty bill Barack had opposed. Lisa Madigan formally announced her candidacy for attorney general, soon to be joined by John Schmidt. Joyce Washington, a well-to-do African American health care executive, announced a run for lieutenant governor and impressed Rich Miller as "a real firecracker and about the most personable candidate running for any statewide office." At his frankest moments, Miller loathed the true nature of Chicago and state politics, writing one day about "how brutally greedy and inept the mayor's office is now that all the reformers," like Schmidt and Vallas, were long gone. "When you work for a guy like Mayor Daley (or Speaker Madigan . . . or President Philip) you might as well be in the Mafia," Miller added.

Late that summer television producer David Manilow, whose philanthropist parents Lewis and Susan were regular contributors to Barack's campaigns, recruited him for a pilot episode of Check, Please!, a restaurant-review show where a trio of guests dined at three eateries, each guest choosing one. Barack's selection, Hyde Park's Dixie Kitchen and Bait Shop, exemplified just how deeply grounded in Hyde Park Barack and Michelle had become in their eight years there. Barack ate regularly at several local eateries—Bonjour Bakery, Medici, Pizza Capri, and especially Mellow Yellow—and he patronized Hyde Park Hair Salon, Cornell Shoe Service, Golden Touch dry cleaners, plus, on almost every Sunday, he did his grocery shopping at the Hyde Park Co-Op. Many weekday mornings Barack worked out at the Regents Club gym in the Regents Park high-rise condominium before smoking a cigarette outside. One August morning Stephen Heintz, one of the cofounders of the nascent think tank, now named Demos, on whose board Barack had been a usually absent member, and new president Miles Rapoport met Barack in the Loop for lunch. They had flown to Chicago to tell him that "we want this to be a working board," and Barack quickly agreed that he would step down.

At the Check, Please! taping, Barack was incredibly relaxed and fabulously personable as he joined a white male firefighter and a white female buyer in discussing Dixie Kitchen and two other restaurants. "I eat there quite a bit," because Dixie Kitchen offered "savory, tasty food for a good price." Firefighter Kevin O'Grady had nominated Zia's Trattoria, in far northwest Chicago, which was "a big surprise" to Barack and his family because it had "terrific" food plus free valet parking. When host Amanda Puck asked Barack what was the worst thing that could happen at a restaurant, he immediately answered "rudeness."<sup>43</sup>

In the run-up to the winner-take-all redistricting drawing on September 5, both parties initiated lawsuits, with Republicans seeking federal court intervention into Illinois's mapmaking and Democrats asking the Democratic-majority state supreme court to exert jurisdiction. One reporter trying to explain the process, whereby the winning party could impose its map to maximize its odds in the 2002 elections, turned to longtime political observer Charles N. Wheeler III. "Whichever side wins, it will be like they've won the lottery. The guys who lose, it's like somebody has just called to tell them their whole family has been wiped out by a serial killer," Wheeler volunteered.

Ten years earlier, when the Republican designee had pulled one of the two red, white, and blue pharmaceutical capsules from a crystal bowl, rumor spread that the Republican one had spent the previous night in a freezer so that the coldest one could be picked. This time one of two small envelopes would be drawn from a Lincolnian stovepipe hat, and the day before the drawing, a dress rehearsal took place in the House of Representatives chamber at the now-ceremonial Old State Capitol. Democratic secretary of state Jesse White and his deputy Jacqueline Price were joined by Democratic designee Tim Mapes, Speaker Madigan's chief of staff, and Republican National Committee member Bob Kjellander.

On September 5, the Republicans insisted that the two slips of paper be weighed to ensure they were identical. Ms. Price read out the relevant constitutional language, then tore open a large envelope into which the two slips of paper and two small envelopes had been placed. White stepped out of the room as Mapes signed the Democratic form and Kjellander the Republican one, with each then placing his slip in one of the small envelopes before licking and sealing it. Into the hat the two envelopes went, with both men and then Price stirring and shaking the hat before White reentered to reach in and select the winner. Tearing open the envelope, he read out the name of Democratic choice Michael A. Bilandic, the former Chicago mayor and state supreme court justice. News spread rapidly, and the Chicago Defender's Chinta Strausberg called Barack. "One of the most important things that results from this is giving us a real possibility of regaining the Senate. . . . If we can pick up a couple of seats, Emil Jones would be Senate President and that would make a tremendous difference . . . in terms of concrete legislation," Barack emphasized. "If the Democrats controlled the Senate, then all the legislation that we've seen blocked over the last several years like racial profiling, FamilyCare will be passed." Barack's optimism was well grounded, as were the Republicans' fears. Two days later Capitol Fax's Rich Miller reported that while the Republican designee had "licked the edge of the entire flap" on his envelope, the Democratic designee had "licked only a portion of the flap."<sup>44</sup>

When the legislature was not in session, JCAR's monthly meetings took place at midmorning on the first or second Tuesday of each month, on the sixteenth floor of the Thompson Center, in the Chicago Loop. On September's second Tuesday, JCAR members were on their way downtown for the 10:30 A.M. CST meeting. Republican senator Brad Burzynski took a METRA train in from his suburban home, and fellow Republican Doris Karpel was driving in from Carol Stream. Barack was headed northbound on Lake Shore Drive "when I heard the news on my car radio that a plane had hit the World Trade Center." On the sixteenth floor of the Thompson Center, Emil Jones Jr. and his two top staffers, Courtney Nottage and Dave Gross, were reviewing the proposed map of new districts with John Corrigan.

As soon as Barack reached the sixteenth floor, news spread that a second plane had hit the other tower, and the Thompson Center was evacuated. "We were all outside, and a lot of people were looking up at the Sears Tower,” Chicago’s tallest building, “thinking that it might be coming down,” Barack recalled. He headed to Miner Barnhill’s nearby office, where everyone was crowded into the basement conference room to follow the news on television. “We watched that horrific scene of the buildings coming down,” and that afternoon Barack drove home. That night Malia and Michelle turned in well before Barack and baby Sasha. “I remember staying up late into the middle of the night burping my child and changing her diapers and wondering what kind of world is she going to be inheriting.”

When the Hyde Park Herald surveyed local politicians for their comments on the September 11 attacks, Barack replied that “the essence of this tragedy, it seems to me, derives from a fundamental absence of empathy of the part of the attackers: an inability to imagine, or connect with, the humanity and suffering of others.” Following Sasha’s birth, Barack and Michelle’s increasingly spotty Sunday attendance at Trinity United Church of Christ had declined even more, so on September 16 they were not present to hear Rev. Jeremiah Wright deliver a sermon titled “The Day of Jerusalem’s Fall.” Assailing how the U.S. government had “supported state terrorism against the Palestinians and black South Africans,” Wright echoed Malcolm X’s famous remark following John F. Kennedy’s assassination to warn that once again “America’s chickens . . . are coming home . . . to roost!” Barack was seeing much less of Wright than he had in earlier years, and Wright had no memory of discussing Barack’s 1999–2000 congressional race with him. On September 16 Wright was only six days away from his sixtieth birthday, and across black Chicago there was tremendous regard for how he had built Trinity into one of the city’s preeminent churches. In an op-ed tribute in the Sun-Times, DePaul professor Michael Eric Dyson lauded Wright as “one of the most intellectually sophisticated and scholarly ministers in the land.”

In a horrible accident of timing, Barack’s good friend Bill Ayers had just published Fugitive Days, a memoir of his Weather Underground involvement thirty years earlier. On the morning of September 11, a prominent New York Times feature story began with a powerful quote: “I don’t regret setting bombs,” Ayers said. “I feel we didn’t do enough.” Bill had previously made similar comments, telling the Chicago Reader’s Ben Joravsky in 1990 that “if anything, we didn’t go far enough. . . . I wouldn’t act any differently. . . . I wouldn’t change a thing.” But in the aftermath of September 11’s almost three thousand deaths, Ayer’s embrace of purposeful political violence seemed beyond callous. In a Chicago Tribune Magazine profile that same Sunday, Ayers struck an entirely different tone. “We were young and stupid. We allowed our organization to slip into a kind of dogma, a kind of self-righteousness, and there’s something dangerous and deadly about that. So, did we make huge mistakes? Yes.” But thoughtful remarks like those received little attention as denunciations rained down upon one of Barack and Michelle’s ten or so best friends in Hyde Park.

After September 11, Barack “was a wreck,” one close acquaintance recalled, and the obvious rhyme—Osama and Obama—now made what was already a highly unusual ballot name an indelible echo of the world’s most notorious terrorist. In what may have been his most depressed moment in more than sixteen years, Barack did something he had not done in almost a decade: he wrote “a long beautiful sad letter” to Sheila Jager. She had completed her University of Chicago Ph.D. dissertation—“Narrating the Nation: Students, Romance and the Politics of Resistance in South Korea”—in December 1994, three years after she married U.S. Army intelligence officer Jiyul Kim. Sheila’s father Bernd was just as dismissive of Jiyul as he had been of Barack in 1986, but by late 1994, Sheila and Jiyul’s first child, Isaac, had arrived, soon to be followed by sister Hannah.

Over the next four years, Sheila published a trio of academic articles drawn from her dissertation while readying the revised manuscript for publication as a book. A recipient of no few fewer than eight notable research grants, by September 2001 Sheila was Henry Luce Assistant Professor of East Asian Studies at Oberlin College in northern Ohio. Jiyul, now an army colonel, had been at work in the Pentagon when the third of the hijacked airliners slammed into the building on the morning of September 11. Hearing the news, Sheila rushed to Isaac and Hannah's elementary school and took the children home. "We didn't hear from him for a couple hours, and my mom was silent," Isaac recalled just before entering the U.S. Military Academy at West Point as a member of the class of 2016.

Barack's long letter made clear that "he was really down and out," Sheila recalled. Barack recounted his unsuccessful congressional race and described the "impact of 9/11" on him. "I remember distinctly how forlorn he sounded," but Barack's real purpose in writing her was to express how much their love still meant to him. He "reconfirmed his thoughts and feelings" even "after ten years of silence," and Sheila was deeply touched that "the nature of the relationship, Barack's thoughts and feelings about it" had "continued post-Chicago" all the way to September 2001. She wrote back, updating him on everything in her life, and Barack replied with "a brief letter acknowledging my response to his first letter. . . . He seemed genuinely happy to know that I was doing well and the tone was far more upbeat."

Seven years later, during a joint interview with Michelle, a questioner asked Barack, "Did you ever have a 'Can this marriage be saved?' moment?" "Sure. I mean, you know, look. We had—" Barack responded, to which Michelle interrupted forcefully by asking, "We did?" causing Barack to backpedal. "Oh, I mean . . . no, no. No, no, no, no. But there's no doubt that there were some strains there" because "we were still paying off student loans, and we'd be short at the end of the month sometimes." In a subsequent joint interview, Barack attempted to walk back his spontaneous honesty, insisting that "there was no point where I was fearful for our marriage," but his outreach to Sheila reflected just how despondent Barack was in the aftermath of 9/11.<sup>45</sup>

On Monday, September 17, Senate Democrats unveiled their new districts map, and it was an over-the-top partisan humdinger, one "that guarantees severe GOP losses in next year's election," the Chicago Tribune reported. It placed fourteen of the Senate's thirty-two Republican incumbents into seven districts, with either retirements or primary contests to follow, while creating nine districts without incumbents. Barack told the Hyde Park Herald, "it's hard to overestimate the impact the new map will have on policy making in every area." He acknowledged that "redistricting is never fair—it's a partisan process—but the lottery is as good a process as any." With the "continued consolidation of African-American base" uppermost in his mind for whatever race he might next run, on Sunday evening, September 23, Barack drove to Roland Burris's South Side home, where he joined African American congressmen Bobby Rush and Danny Davis plus Senate colleagues Rickey Hendon and Donne Trotter in endorsing Burris, rather than former Chicago schools chief Paul Vallas, in the Democratic race for governor.

The next morning the U of C Law School's autumn quarter got under way, with Barack again teaching Con Law III and Current Issues in Racism and the Law. Con Law drew more than sixty students, with many again impressed that Barack, in contrast to some UCLS professors, had no doctrinal or ideological agenda to propound. One day a self-confident student responded to a query Barack had posed by stating that "the more interesting question" involved something else. Classmates nervously wondered how Barack would respond. He paused and smiled. "The more interesting question, huh?" he said as everyone laughed. Classroom moments like that created “a very comfortable environment” where quieter students were encouraged to participate and “students who wanted to do tons of ranting” were kept in check.

Barack’s Racism and the Law drew almost thirty students, and that fall, more than ever before, racial profiling was a front-and-center issue. One Indian American student whose male family members had been repeatedly targeted by Transportation Security Administration saps remembered Barack leading “a very vibrant discussion” of the issue. At a school that even self-conscious white males viewed as a “utopia for white men,” the few black male law students were regularly stopped by security guards even after previously introducing themselves to the officers. In class, Barack was “a very fair, even-handed” teacher, “an excellent law professor at a school that really prides itself on the quality of the teaching.” Byron Rodriguez, a 3L, had just taken a course with the well-known feminist Catharine MacKinnon, which “was just so painfully one-sided” because “you couldn’t disagree with her” at all, and Obama was completely in the opposite direction and would really challenge folks of all stripes.” Indeed, “I remember him defending, in the way a law professor would, [Robert] Bork’s position on the Civil Rights Act” of 1964, which the noted conservative had argued at the time was unconstitutional.

Students found Barack an uncommonly sympathetic professor outside of class as well as in it, even though he spent far fewer hours in the building than any other full-time instructor. One day after class, walking to the parking lot, Barack spoke to 2L Bethany Lampland, who had “taken on incredible loans” and was feeling “tremendous pressure to find a career that was fulfilling.” Having recognized “how unhappy I was,” Barack gently asked, “Are you happy here?” with “such an earnest, sincere,” and “disarming” tone that Bethany unburdened herself. “I’m really unhappy. I’m really miserable, and I’m really scared because I only have a year left, and I don’t like this at all, and I’m really afraid that I’m not going to like being a lawyer, and I don’t know what else to do with my life.” As an experienced law teacher, Barack posed the perfect question: “Did you go straight through?” When Bethany nodded yes, Barack described how Michelle had gone directly from college to law school and had had a much less fulfilling experience both at Harvard and in law practice than he had. But ““going to the University of Chicago Law School is a really big privilege, it’s not a set of handcuffs,”” Barack told her. “He talked about how there were many, many ways that I could use the experience of going to law school even if I never practiced law that could be as meaningful or more meaningful than becoming a traditional lawyer, and that he had a lot of confidence that because I was struggling with this so much at such a young age that I would find the right path,” Bethany recounted years later. By then she was leading one of New York’s largest charity organizations, and that conversation with Barack in the parking lot “really stayed with me.”<sup>46</sup>

On WTTW’s Chicago Tonight, Barack said that new federal detention proposals were “most troubling” because they targeted only noncitizens. “I’m always more concerned about encroachments on civil rights or civil liberties that apply selectively to people. When they apply to everybody, there tends to be a majoritarian check.” Barack said he supported slightly broadened wiretapping rules, but emphasized that “the crucial issue here is do we have judicial oversight of some sort” for government surveillance. By late September, Senate Democrats had moderated the political pain their new, now slightly revised map would impose on Republican incumbents, but Republicans believed the new map guaranteed Emil Jones at least twenty-nine of the Senate’s fifty-nine seats and perhaps as many as thirty-four. Barack’s district would remain centered on Hyde Park, but rather than running westward to encompass so much of deeply poor Englewood, it would instead run northward along the lakefront, taking in not only Kenwood and Oakland but also wealthy neighborhoods like Streeterville and some of the Gold Coast, north of the Chicago River. The underlying rationale, as John Corrigan and Barack both knew, was to make his district less African American so that those voters could prove useful elsewhere, but the remap also gave him “some really interesting new friends,” as savvy city lobbyist Bill Luking put it. The redistricting process moved forward, with a three-judge federal court quickly dismissing a Republican challenge to the lottery procedure, but Barack’s attention was completely distracted when a sudden medical emergency threatened the life of four-month-old Sasha.

One night Sasha “would not stop crying,” Michelle explained, “and she was not a crier, so we knew something was wrong.” At dawn they called Sasha’s pediatrician, who immediately suspected Sasha had meningitis and told Barack and Michelle to take her right away to the U of C Medical Center’s emergency room. There Sasha underwent a spinal tap and was placed on antibiotics. “We didn’t know what was wrong, and we were terrified,” Barack recalled. “Michelle and I spent three days with our baby in the hospital,” with “us not knowing whether or not she was going to emerge okay.” But the immediate treatment succeeded, and Sasha was discharged with no harm to her long-term health.

On October 11, Barack’s state campaign fund-raiser took place at the South Shore Cultural Center. Barack still confronted his congressional debt, and just a week earlier, he had sweet-talked a brand-new acquaintance, Northwestern University business professor Steven Rogers, into contributing $2,000—in his and his wife’s names—to Obama for Congress 2000 as well as $1,000 to Friends of Barack Obama. The congressional donation allowed Barack to pay himself and Michelle back a second $2,000 for the personal funds they had loaned the campaign eighteen months earlier, following an initial repayment in early spring, and by the end of the year, the debt would be down to only $8,830, $5,500 of which was owed to Barack and Michelle. For his state committee fund-raiser, Dan Shomon and Laura Hunter had assembled an almost fifty-person “host committee,” and the Hyde Park Herald reported that “supporters showed up in droves” at the October 11 event. Many of the host committee members, who gave $1,000 or $1,500 apiece, were old friends and colleagues like Elvin Charity, Jeff Cummings, Valerie Jarrett, and Peter Bynoe, and $1,500 apiece also came from John Rogers at Ariel Capital and Louis Holland of Holland Capital, two of the firms most involved in Barack and Michael Madigan’s initiative to reform state pension investment practices. The beneficent Robert Blackwell; old mentors Newton Minow and Abner Mikva; present and past law firm colleagues Judd Miner and Allison Davis; top congressional supporters Jim Reynolds, Judy Byrd, and Marty Nesbitt; school executive Tim King; former student Jesse Ruiz; and fellow Joyce Foundation board members Carlton Guthrie and Paula Wolff were also on the host committee list. Including a total of more than $20,000 from PACs, by the end of the year Barack’s state campaign committee boasted a balance of more than $93,000, its healthiest amount ever.<sup>47</sup>

In mid-October, Barack had a strikingly expansive conversation with the Chicago Defender’s Chinta Strausberg about the 9/11 attacks. The new profusion of concrete barricades outside government buildings was “the saddest situation and aftereffect of the September 11th tragedy,” because “those barricades are a symbol of the fear that people are experiencing. I recognize the need for such precautions, but my strong hope is that over time, we’re able to diminish the daily threat of violence and return to the sort of openness and freedom that is the hallmark of our society.” While “it’s absolutely vital that we pursue a military response and a criminal investigation to dismantle these organizations of violence,” Barack said,

“we should also examine the foreign policies of the U.S. to make sure that we occupy the moral high ground in these conflicts. In particular, we have to examine some of the root causes of this terrorist activity,” because in “nations like Afghanistan, Pakistan, Indonesia, or much of the Middle East, young men have no opportunities. The only education they are receiving is that provided to them by religious schools that may not provide them with a well-rounded view of the world. They see poverty all around them, and they are angered by that poverty. They may be suffering under oppressive and corrupt regimes, and that kind of environment is a breeding ground for fanaticism and hatred.” Rather than hunker down, new initiatives should be launched. “It’s absolutely critical that the U.S. is engaged in policies and strategies that will give those young people and these countries hope and make it in their self-interest to participate and create modern, open societies like we have in the U.S.”

In early November, Barack keynoted an affordable housing symposium one day and spoke at a lunch for well-heeled female supporters of his own future endeavors the next. At the housing session, Barack reprimanded advocates for failing to put together a coherent policy agenda for poor Chicagoans. For the women’s lunch, super-volunteer Laura Hunter pulled together ladies who already knew Barack well, like Judy Byrd, Jean Rudd, and Valerie Jarrett, as well as women of extremely serious means, such as heiress Abby McCormick O’Neil, some of whom would be among Barack’s new constituents. Barack said he was “100 percent prochoice” and a supporter of gay and lesbian rights, and he spoke about his efforts on behalf of campaign finance reform, expanded health care coverage, welfare-to-work policies, and tax justice.

In mid-November, veto session got under way in Springfield amid reports showing that state tax revenues were dropping precipitously in the wake of 9/11. It was a desultory six days, with no attempt at overriding Governor Ryan’s veto of the gang-related death penalty bill. On the second to last day, the Illinois Supreme Court affirmed the constitutionality of the new legislative map, but the legislature adjourned without taking any action on the state’s surging budget deficit. Barack told Crain’s Chicago Business that “We didn’t plan for what happens when all the jobs that were generated evaporate. A lot of the big questions like that we never really tackled.” Soon after adjournment, Emil Jones’s wife Patricia died of cancer at age sixty-three, and Democratic senators gathered for her funeral.

Politicians’ eyes turned increasingly toward the upcoming 2002 elections, with no one filing to oppose Barack in either the March primary or the November general election. In the Democratic gubernatorial race, Rod Blagojevich won the support of the Illinois AFL-CIO and gathered increasing momentum over Paul Vallas and Roland Burris. Just before Christmas, Crain’s Chicago Business reported that millionaire businessman Blair Hull, who had sold his Hull Trading Company to Goldman Sachs two years earlier for $531 million, had spoken with Mayor Richard Daley about seeking the Democratic nomination to take on Republican U.S. senator Peter Fitzgerald in 2004. Hull had met with Daley at City Hall on November 14, but Hull initially had been interested in challenging Democratic operative Rahm Emanuel for the congressional seat Blagojevich would be vacating. Hull had already spoken with Chicago political hand Jason Erkes, Denver-based consultant Rick Ridder, and Washington-based media expert Anita Dunn about the congressional race, but Daley suggested that instead Hull consider running for the Senate. When Crain’s reporter Steven Strahler called him for comment, Hull asked, “Who would have told you that? I’m trying to fly under the radar at this point.” But Hull confirmed that his discussion with Daley had been “a positive conversation,” and Hull also was supporting Michelle was now in her new job at the University of Chicago Medical Center, and her hands were more than full with a protest campaign launched against the hospital by the African American Contractors Association. Unhappy that a construction contract had been awarded to a Hispanic firm, the protesters complained further when university executives shunted them toward “underlings” like Michelle and African American trustee Ralph Moore. “We should not have to be meeting with people who have jobs to protect or don’t have the best interests of blacks at heart,” protest supporter Rev. Gregory Daniels told the Defender, which reported that Daniels “also demanded the removal of Obama and Moore because of their incompetence and inexperience in regards to grassroots community organizations and their assistance in dividing the African American community in these issues.” Within less than seventy-two hours, however, the university patched up the dispute, with both the Defender and Chicago Weekend publishing stories proclaiming the U of C’s support for black employment opportunities.

Michelle was not the only one tackling a new opportunity, for throughout December most of Barack’s attention was focused on the possibility of becoming the next president of the Joyce Foundation. In November Paula DiPerna, whose two-and-a-half-year tenure had not gone well, submitted her resignation. Former president Debbie Leff, program officers like Unmi Song and Margaret O’Dell, and ranking board figures like chairman Jack Anderson and veterans Chuck Daly and Dick Donahue all saw Barack as a thoughtful and well-informed board member. Barack’s legislative interests in campaign finance reform, the earned-income tax credit, and gun violence overlapped extensively with Joyce’s policy agenda. Similar Springfield overlap existed with the Woods Fund, and Barack’s Annenberg experience also contributed to the Joyce board’s discussions of education issues.

When DiPerna resigned, several board members immediately considered Barack before they decided to have Michael Claffey, an old friend of Daly’s who had overseen previous presidential searches, handle this one as well. Carlton Guthrie, Barack’s fellow African American board member and a Hyde Park neighbor, would run into Barack at the East Bank Club and played golf with him several times a year. Guthrie appreciated that Barack was a politician through and through, but he also knew that Barack “was desperately looking for a way to get out of” Springfield. Guthrie had contributed to Barack’s campaigns, but he believed Barack’s loss to Bobby Rush had underscored how he “wasn’t of the community” and how many people saw him as “a fairly arrogant guy.” Guthrie was not on the Joyce board’s five-member search committee, but “I didn’t see Barack as the next president of the Joyce Foundation” or even “as a serious candidate,” because “it didn’t seem to be a logical progression for him.”

Barack’s own view, as he discussed it extensively with Michelle and Dan Shomon, was that the Joyce presidency would allow him to take home a significant salary and accumulate some meaningful savings before reentering the electoral arena some years later. Michelle immediately liked the idea. “My hope was that, okay, enough of this, now let’s explore these other avenues for having impact and making a little money so that we could start saving for our future and building up the college fund for our girls.” Dan Shomon, who envisioned going with Barack to Joyce as his chief of staff at a higher salary than he could earn in politics, loved the idea too. “We had it all figured out,” Dan recalled. “Do it for five years and then run” for a major office. Barack stoked Dan’s hopes, leading him to believe that Barack was a hands-down favorite for the job. Barack made similar comments to Cynthia Miller, Newton Minow, Ab Mikva, and Rob Fisher, and they were all left thinking similarly. Like Dan, Cynthia knew “Michelle wants him to take it,” but Cynthia, more clearly than Dan, saw that Barack’s interest in the job really was just to placate Michelle. Newt Minow enthusiastically supported the idea, as did Mikva, who knew that Michelle was “hoping he would make a firm break with politics” and “get out of the legislature and be a normal person.” Rob and Lisa Fisher remembered Barack saying, “I think I’m going to step aside and make money and then go back.” They had the impression there “was an offer on the table” and Barack was weighing whether to accept it. “Michelle is saying, ‘Are you nuts?’” Lisa recalled, because when the Senate was in session and Barack “wasn’t home,” Michelle “was a single parent.”

Joyce consultant Mike Claffey talked with Barack several times to discuss and then confirm his interest. “Yes, I’m a candidate,” Barack told him. Claffey also spoke with mutual acquaintances like Allison Davis and Jean Rudd before Joyce’s search committee selected five finalists for formal interviews just after New Year’s. Two of the other contenders were Ellen Alberding, Joyce’s program officer for culture and the arts, and attorney Mark Real, who since 1981 had directed the Ohio branch of the Children’s Defense Fund. Real sensed from preliminary conversations with Claffey and search committee members that “they were looking for somebody who would do real work” and “would show up at the office every day,” because “they asked me a lot of questions about work ethic.”

Senior board member Dick Donahue tried to dissuade Barack from being a candidate. “For God’s sake, Barack, this is a great job. But you don’t want it.” Underlying Donahue’s advice was board members’ view that Barack “was insufficiently nonpartisan” and that “it just didn’t make any sense to politicize the foundation,” as Wisconsin law professor Carin Clauss explained. Board chairman Jack Anderson, who Claffey knew “adored Barack,” had evolved like Donahue in his view of Barack’s candidacy. The Joyce presidency was “a real full-time job,” and it was doubtful “whether you can do it and be active in politics,” because they knew Barack wanted to remain a plausible future candidate.

Just before the finalists’ formal interviews with the search committee, Mike Claffey briefed each of them. Claffey thought Barack “approached it with some diligence but not a lot,” and once the interview got under way, Claffey realized that Barack “was not prepared” and had “ignored my briefing.” Later that day, Barack phoned Dan Shomon and confessed that “I was literally shaking with fear that I would get the job because I realized I was deathly fearful.” Dan realized that Barack had “walked in there, and he fell apart. He literally just fell apart.” In the room, that was what Mike Claffey saw. “This is a thing where he failed,” Claffey explained, and Claffey suspected the same thing Dan Shomon, Cynthia Miller, and Rob Fisher all realized: “maybe he didn’t want it.”

Barack had long believed that “simply pursuing lots of money displays a poverty of ambition, and that there are higher goals and higher aspirations that I could go after,” a belief he had held since his 1987 self-transformation. He confessed as much to Cynthia, who knew that Joyce “was never, for him, an option . . . as far as him being true to himself,” she explained. “He said, ‘This is who Michelle met when she met me.’ Now that is a quote. He was saying he’s the same person, so he didn’t mislead her in terms of where his aspirations are.” Yet now, more than a decade later, Michelle’s aspirations were far more modest: financial security and a home life where two full-time parents took equal roles in raising their daughters. But when Barack faced a high-pressure situation that ran counter to his deepest beliefs about his destiny, he fell apart and failed.

Mark Real’s interview followed Barack’s. “I got the sense that they had reservations about other candidates” for whom “this would be sort of their second or third priority. They were looking for somebody for whom this would be their first priority,” Real recalled. “They wanted somebody whose principal priority was making the Joyce Foundation work and not somebody who was just a public face.” With the interviews complete, the five-member search committee—Jack Anderson, Chuck Daly, Dick Donahue, attorney Roger Fross, and Paula Wolff—voted. The result was not unanimous, but there was a clear number one, Mark Real, and a runner-up, Ellen Alberding. But Real, who hoped to transform the Ohio Children’s Defense Fund into a more influential statewide policy organization with the support of wealthy Columbus patron Abigail Wexner, seemed underwhelmed when he was offered the Joyce presidency at a salary just over $200,000. “He wants $350,000,” Mike Claffey recalled, and “Jack Anderson almost falls out of his chair.” Real may not have wanted to leave Ohio any more than Barack wanted to abandon electoral politics, and with Joyce unwilling to meet Real’s asking price, little time passed before Abigail Wexner and Ohio political leaders announced the creation of a new organization, Kids Ohio, headed by Mark Real. Joyce’s search committee turned to Ellen Alberding, who accepted. When Mike Claffey phoned Barack to tell him the news, there was “no moaning and groaning, no anger, no frustration.” With that, the Joyce Foundation announced Alberding’s appointment and concluded a search in which three finalists all got what they really wanted.<sup>49</sup>

By this time, Barack had already taught the first two classes of his winter quarter Voting Rights course. An embarrassed Barack learned that unbeknownst to him, a new, 2001 second edition of The Law of Democracy had been published and stocked at the bookstore, so he quickly updated his syllabus. The early Mondays–late Fridays class drew thirty-five students, including four who had taken either Con Law III or Racism and who realized that Barack’s “engagement with the subject matter” made Voting Rights “an even better class” than the other two. “He really came alive, particularly when he was talking about some of the more practical issues,” such as “how districting lines were drawn,” 2L Karen Schweickart recalled. Barack was also a “very, very nice man” who let Karen bring her baby daughter to class. When someone asked how long it took to drive to and from Springfield, Barack responded, “How long for you, or how long for me, because I have Senate plates?” Byron Rodriguez remembered that when “someone in class once asked who was his favorite circuit judge to argue in front of, he said [Richard] Posner,” the senior member of the three-judge panel in Josephthal, Barack’s only circuit court appearance, “because Posner was smart enough to know when you were right.” When Barack casually asked Schweickart what her husband did, and Karen said she was not married, Barack “didn’t miss a beat” before saying, “Oh, my mother wasn’t married either.”

With the Senate’s spring session off to a leisurely start, Barack delivered two Martin Luther King Day talks while political eyes all focused on the upcoming November election, with Emil Jones seemingly guaranteed at least a thirty-two-seat Senate majority. Jones had more than $1.6 million in hand to ensure victory. In the Democratic gubernatorial race, Rod Blagojevich had more than $4 million available, former school superintendent Paul Vallas only $300,000, and Roland Burris was being bankrolled by one sole donor, African American TV station owner Joseph Stroud, who had contributed upward of $1 million. By early February Barack had introduced seventeen new bills, only one of which, requiring that state government institute a program to address postpartum depression, would make it to the Senate floor.

When the Chicago Tribune ran a story headlined “Philip Urges Review of Pork-Barrel Funds,” Barack chimed in to agree with the Senate president that “members’ initiatives” had gotten out of hand. “What started off as a good idea to give legislators some control over how money got spent in their districts has become this enormous, unwieldy and unsupervised process that needs to be changed.” Three days later a more prominent Tribune story, “2 Accused in Scheme at Pork-Rich Charities,” reported that the state attorney general had filed suit against Yesse Yehudah, whose FORUM had received more than $750,000 in member initiative funding, beginning with more than $425,000 from Emil Jones plus additional monies from Michael Madigan and Donne Trotter as well as the $75,000 from Barack. In less than forty-eight hours, Obama for Congress 2000 refunded the five $1,000 contributions FORUM employees had made to Barack’s congressional campaign in November 1999, although not the five additional $1,000 checks from Yehudah’s friends that were received three days after Barack approved the $75,000 grant in October 2000. So as to repay that $5,000, Barack had to loan his federal campaign committee an identical amount, increasing what it owed him and Michelle to $10,500. Even with that embarrassing turn of events, a few days later Barack signed off on an unusually large $500,000 member initiative grant to a Southwest Side women’s domestic violence group that within several years would be defunct.

With Barack unopposed in both the March Democratic primary and the general election, he told the Hyde Park Herald, “I’m going to spend the next year assessing what my plans might be.” As plummeting state revenues led to calls to reduce Illinois’s budget, Barack insisted that “the worst thing state government can do during a recession is cut spending.” Looking to 2004, a political column in the suburban Daily Herald declared that “Illinois is too liberal” for Republican U.S. senator Peter Fitzgerald to be reelected if Democrats nominate “a quality opponent.” The Herald said that young state comptroller Dan Hynes, progressive U.S. representative Jan Schakowsky, and state legislators Tom Dart, Lisa Madigan, and Barack were among those “already being mentioned” as possible candidates. The next day Barack wrote a check for $5,000, two and a half times his largest political contribution ever, from his state campaign account to his Senate colleague Lisa Madigan’s run for attorney general.<sup>50</sup>

In addition to his $8,000-a-month consulting income from Robert Blackwell Jr.’s EKI, Barack in early 2002 invested some time in Miner Barnhill’s effort to recover more than $150,000 in fees for its work defending the congressional apportionment that had produced Chicago’s first Hispanic-majority district a decade earlier. The state of Illinois had played an entirely passive role in the case, so the successful defense of the map had been handled almost entirely by the defendant-intervenors, represented by Judd Miner and others. But to win a fee award, Miner Barnhill had to argue for “an exception to the general rule that precludes defendants from recovering fees.” Barack’s colleague John Belcaster could not “see a pathway to success,” so Judd asked Barack to tackle the problem. Belcaster recalled that “Barack stays at it and puts together a spellbinding brief,” one that persuaded U.S. District Judge David H. Coar to award Miner Barnhill its entire $154,695 fee request. In commending Barack’s brief, Coar wrote that “the intervenors offer a thoughtful discussion of the policy implications at play in this case,” and “there is no question that the defendant-intervenors’ efforts merit a fee award.” It was an unprecedented order, but the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals unanimously affirmed Coar’s ruling.

In March, a Senate Judiciary Committee hearing addressed a trio of antiabortion bills targeting late-term procedures. “It was a very difficult hearing,” Barack’s Democratic colleague Ira Silverstein recalled, “very emotional, very tough,” because of the highly graphic testimony offered by the bills’ proponents. “You could have heard a pin drop,” Republican Dan Cronin remembered, before a party-line vote of 6–3, with prochoice Republican Adeline Geo-Karis voting present, sent the bills to the Senate floor. On March 19, Rob Blagojevich narrowly won the Democratic gubernatorial nomination over Paul Vallas, whom he had vastly outspent, triumphing by twenty-five thousand votes thanks to winning 55 percent of the vote downstate, where he had advertised heavily on television. African American Roland Burris finished a strong third, with more than 29 percent of the vote. Blagojevich's slogan—"My name is eastern European, my story is American"—went a long way toward alleviating doubts about his unusual surname, but Burris's presence in the race, especially his strong showing in Chicago, had allowed Blagojevich to win a race that otherwise would have gone to Vallas. In the Republican primary, Attorney General Jim Ryan easily outdistanced conservative state senator Patrick O'Malley and moderate lieutenant governor Corinne Wood. Barack received all 30,938 Democratic votes in the 13th Senate District, but wealthy black health executive Joyce Washington piled up more than 362,000 votes statewide while losing the Democratic race for lieutenant governor to gadfly Pat Quinn. Emil Jones had backed Washington strongly, and Capitol Fax's Rich Miller declared that Washington had shown "incredible charisma and potential."<sup>51</sup>

On April 2, federal prosecutors indicted Scott Fawell, George Ryan's chief of staff when the lame-duck governor had been secretary of state, as the commercial-driver's-license scandal probe moved closer to Ryan. Capitol Fax termed Fawell's indictment "a political atomic bomb," and Chicago Sun-Times columnist Steve Neal called Operation Safe Road, as prosecutors labeled their case, "the worst scandal in Illinois history because there are human casualties," including a half dozen children who had been killed by a truck driver licensed in exchange for a bribe. In the Senate, Barack addressed the importance of helping ex-offenders obtain jobs and voted against the trio of antiabortion bills, noting that they were "really designed simply to burden the original decision of the woman and the physician." The Senate passed two of the three bills but they died in committee in the House, while Barack's postpartum depression bill passed unanimously in both chambers and headed to Governor Ryan's desk. "This condition is very real," Barack stated in a press release. On April 15, a commission Ryan had appointed to study capital punishment in Illinois issued a lengthy report outlining dozens of desirable policy changes. In particular, "we recommend videotaping all questioning of a capital suspect conducted in a police facility, and repeating on tape, in the presence of the prospective defendant, any of his statements alleged to have been made elsewhere."

In mid-April, Barack and Michelle wrote their largest check ever to the Internal Revenue Service because Barack's $98,000 in deduction-free income from Miner Barnhill—$80,000 of which came from Robert Blackwell Jr.'s EKI—meant they owed an additional $44,000. Thanks to the South Shore Cultural Center fund-raiser six months earlier, Barack's state campaign committee was now flush enough to audaciously explore whether Barack could become a serious contender for the 2004 Democratic nomination for U.S. senator. Amy Szarek was brought back on payroll part-time, and Dan Shomon reached out to media consultant Chris Sautter as well as to Eric Adelstein, who had overseen Bobby Rush's successful reelection victory. Meeting Adelstein for lunch, Barack "wants to know what he did wrong" in the congressional race and "really wanted to understand what were the fund-raising benchmarks" to be seen as a serious candidate in a statewide senatorial primary, Adelstein recalled. "You need a million dollars by the fall of '03," Adelstein told him. With painful memories from 1999 in mind, Barack decided they needed to have a top-notch pollster gauge his prospects as a statewide candidate. "We want to do a benchmark to see if the Senate race is do-able," Shomon told Sautter. "Who should I talk to?" Well-known pollster Geoff Garin declined, so Sautter called Paul Harstad, a Colorado-based pollster who had helped U.S. senator Tom Harkin and Governor Tom Vilsack win tough races in Iowa. Harstad had never heard of Barack, so he called John Kupper, David Axelrod's partner, and Kupper said, "You should work for him." He told Harstad that Barack was a promising candidate, and Shomon arranged a conference call with Harstad, Sautter, and Barack. Chris remembered "very distinctly Barack saying 'I don't have to do this. If the numbers aren't good, I can go off and do something else,'" and they agreed to survey both Democratic primary and Illinois general election voters.

Two issues needed to be addressed. If Carol Moseley Braun, who had returned to Chicago months earlier after serving as U.S. ambassador to New Zealand, attempted to reclaim her seat, how would that influence the race? Second, even though Rod Blagojevich had fared surprisingly well outside Chicagoland with an unusual ethnic surname, Shomon "wanted to determine how much of a problem" "Barack Obama" would be as a ballot name. Sautter, Harstad, and Barack all agreed that both samples would be divided, with half of respondents being asked about a potential candidate named "Barack Obama" and the other half presented with one named "Barry Obama."

As Shomon and Harstad worked by phone on a lengthy, comprehensive poll, Barack, in Springfield three days a week, spoke privately with Emil Jones Jr., whose support would be most essential to making him a top-tier contender. Jones's closest staff members knew that Emil "enjoyed conversing with" Barack "and hearing his thoughts on stuff," and with the new legislature map all but certain to elevate Jones to the Senate presidency, Jones in eight months' time would possess the power that Pate Philip had single-handedly exercised throughout Barack's years in Springfield. Jones remembered "a very interesting conversation" that began with Barack stressing how much power Jones would soon have. "In my mind I'm thinking, 'Where's this bullshit coming from? What are you trying to fatten me up for?'" So "I asked Barack, 'What kind of power do you think I'll have?'" He says, "You'll have the power to make a United States senator." I said, "Damn, I hadn't thought of that." He says, "Well, you've got that power." And we kept talking, and I said, "Well, if I have that kind of power, do you know of anyone I could make a United States senator?" I was just sitting there. And he said "Me." Jones said, "I didn't expect that," but he told Barack, "Let me think about that," and the two men continued talking until Jones said, "You know, Barack, that sounds good. Let's go for it!" Jones knew that state comptroller Dan Hynes would be backed by his rival, House Speaker Madigan, should Hynes run, and Jones also realized that Carol Moseley Braun could be a candidate. "Barack says, if she runs, he will not run," Jones remembered, but neither man thought she would. "I said, 'I think this is doable.'" He said to me, "One thing I need from you, early on, is to be out front in the campaign early on." I told him, "I have no problem with that."

"As I look back at that meeting, it indicated to me that he learned a lot from his congressional race loss," Jones explained. Barack "figured if he had me, his chances would go up 1,000 percent," because "I knew all the players who would be involved." Jones recognized what a difference that would make from two years earlier: "in his loss in the congressional race, he was out there on his own. He had no one with any political influence supporting his candidacy." Barack was appropriately grateful to Jones, and on April 23, Friends of Barack Obama contributed $5,000 to Jones's Illinois Senate Democratic Fund. Following their conversation, Jones mentioned it to John Kelly, the young white lobbyist whose deep family roots in Cook County politics had encouraged Jones to take a shine to him. "I just had a fascinating conversation with Barack," Jones recounted. Barack "came in and said, 'How would you like to make the next U.S. senator?’ ‘That’s great. Who do you have in mind? Who should we support?’ He said, ‘Me,’” Kelly remembered. Jones also mentioned the conversation to well-known black radio host and former alderman Cliff Kelley. “‘Cliff, I’m gonna make me a U.S. senator,’” Kelley recounted. “‘Oh, you are? Who might that be?’ ‘Barack Obama.’”<sup>52</sup>

Barack joined Bill Ayers for a panel discussion at a conference in Chicago titled “Intellectuals: Who Needs Them?” but press reports signaled that Barack quickly needed to expand his outreach about a Senate run. On April 25, Chicago Sun-Times gossip columnist Michael Sneed wrote that “Carol Moseley-Braun is angling to reclaim her old job” and that she had called U.S. senator Dick Durbin and former senator Paul Simon to seek their support. Three days later Sneed reported that lawyer and former Chicago Board of Education chairman Gery Chico, a onetime chief of staff to Mayor Daley, “has been making phone calls to see if a run is viable.” Sneed added that “financial whiz Blair Hull is also eyeing the job.” Two months earlier Hull and his close friend Pat Arbor, a former chairman of the Chicago Board of Trade, had had dinner with Richard Daley at Naha, one of the city’s best restaurants. Three months earlier, Daley had encouraged Hull, and on February 27 the mayor told him, “You really should be in the Senate.” By late March, Hull had hired two campaign staffers while he and consultant Rick Ridder sought out additional advisers with Illinois experience.

After his conversation with Emil Jones, Barack talked to a highly dubious Michelle about a Senate race and then called their friend Valerie Jarrett. “‘I want to come over. Let’s invite my closest friends. There’s something I want to bounce off of you,’” Jarrett remembered Barack telling her. “Michelle had already told me what it was,” Jarrett explained. “She said, ‘So we’re not in favor of this, right?’ ‘Absolutely not.’ ‘That’s the right answer!’” Michelle forcefully confirmed. With the congressional race debt still lingering, Michelle recalled that “the big issue around the Senate for me was, how on earth can we afford it?” Jarrett agreed that Barack would “have to raise a ton of cash, and he didn’t have it,” but Jarrett also knew that underlying all of Michelle’s objections was her distaste for Barack’s political career. “Michelle hadn’t been happy about him going off to Springfield,” and a statewide campaign would have Barack away from home even more.

Judy Byrd, the female mainstay of Barack’s congressional run, was about to move to New York, so Jarrett invited Barack’s two friends whom she knew best, John Rogers and Marty Nesbitt, to join the three of them for brunch that weekend at her apartment. Jarrett had known Rogers for years, and Nesbitt, the chief executive of an airport-parking company that was backed by Chicago heiress Penny Pritzker, had first met Michelle and Barack through his basketball-based acquaintance with Michelle’s brother Craig. Rogers’s Ariel Capital was a major player in the Illinois investment reform initiative Barack was championing, but Barack’s friendship with Nesbitt was rooted in their own very similar family histories. “Up through probably my mid-twenties, the biggest driving motivator for me was to not be like my father,” Nesbitt explained.

“So I cooked breakfast,” Jarrett recalled. “We were resolved we were going to talk him out of this. No one thought it was a good idea, Michelle being the most clear that it was a bad idea.” Then Barack made his pitch. “‘I want to run for U.S. Senate. Let me tell you why. I’ve talked to Emil Jones. He’s a huge political force, and he’s prepared to support me. When I ran for Congress, I didn’t have that kind of support. And if I lose, then Michelle, I’ll give up politics.’ She’s like, ‘Yes!’” Jarrett remembered. “‘If I can’t do it this time, I promise I’ll get a normal job in the private sector, so this’ll be the last time I ask you to do this—unless I win. And money's a problem, so Valerie, I think you should help me because you're in the business community, you and John. You two should think about helping me do this.” Jarrett explained that Barack “did this obviously far more eloquently and for ten minutes or so,” but “our initial reaction was ‘It’s too soon. You just lost, and if you lose again, where are you?’” Barack responded, “‘If I’m not worried about losing, why are you? If I lose, I lose. But I think I’ll win. I think the timing is right. I think I have a lot to offer.’” Barack “didn’t convince me he’d win at that moment,” but “he convinced me that it was worth a try,” Jarrett recounted. “I can’t quite explain how it happened,” she added. Rogers likewise believed that winning would be “incredibly difficult,” but all three friends agreed to help raise money.

Nesbitt’s memory was more upbeat: “He convinced us in the room that day that he could pull it off.” Most important, Barack’s offer to leave politics if he lost was so attractive to Michelle that she reluctantly agreed to countenance one last race. “I said to her that if you are willing to go with me on this ride and if it doesn’t work out, then I will step out of politics,” Barack recalled. “I think she had come to realize that I would leave politics if she asked me to.”

On May 2, Barack’s state campaign committee paid Harstad Strategic Research $16,500—the first half of the cost of an extensive, two-sample survey. At the same time, Barack quietly ended his $8,000-a-month consulting arrangement with Robert Blackwell Jr.’s EKI, which over the preceding fourteen months had paid Barack a total of $112,000. In Springfield, he reached out for support from his closest Senate friends. One evening Terry Link walked into Barack’s office. “‘I’ve got something to ask you,’” Barack said. “‘I’m thinking of running for the U.S. Senate. Would you support me?’ And I said, ‘Yes.’ And he looked at me in a puzzled look, and he said, ‘Don’t you have to think about it for a while?’ And I said, ‘No. Now you’re ready, and it’s the right race.’” Link was the Democratic Party chairman in Lake County, “the third-largest county in the state” after Cook and primarily Republican DuPage, so Link’s backing would be outweighed only by Jones’s.

Barack also asked Will County Democratic powerhouse Larry Walsh, who hailed from the state’s fourth-largest county, if they could have breakfast together. “I’m seriously thinking about running,” Barack told Walsh once they sat down. “You represent the kind of district that the state of Illinois is.” Larry worried that Barack’s congressional loss would be an obstacle, but he too offered his support. Please “keep it quiet,” Barack asked, and during a Wednesday poker night, Barack pulled aside Denny Jacobs to make the same request. Denny too agreed, thinking that Barack would do well among suburban voters because “he does have a certain sex appeal for women.”

On the Senate floor, Barack quietly told Kim Lightford, “I’m thinking about running for the U.S. Senate.” Kim jokingly replied, “I was supposed to replace Carol Moseley Braun, not you!” to which Barack responded, “I’ll do two terms, and then I’ll hand it over to you.” Kim pledged her support, and Barack went by the offices of Metro East’s James Clayborne, Southwest Sider Lou Viverito, who had backed him in the congressional race, and the North Side’s Miguel del Valle to seek and receive their backing. Downstate Democrat Pat Welch rebuffed Barack, explaining that Barack had not supported him when he had been considering a statewide 2002 race and had instead supported Tom Dart, who had done so much for Barack’s congressional run. Barack also got a lukewarm response from lobbyist and regular donor Larry Suffredin, who had just mounted a successful primary challenge for a seat on the Cook County Board. “You cannot afford to lose two races in a row,” Suffredin warned Barack.

Then, one day in early May, Barack ran into former senator Carol Moseley Braun and her close lobbyist friend Billie Paige in the capitol's rotunda and invited them to his cramped office. "We discussed the Senate race," Carol remembered, and although Barack did not mention his own interest, he "pissed me off" by asking "How do I know you're not going to get in the same trouble that you've gotten into before?" if she ran again. "When he challenged me like that, I was really taken aback," Carol explained, because she considered it an "insulting" question. "Barack, you don't understand" what "a very hostile environment" the Senate had been for her as an African American woman. "For you not to understand that is pretty shocking to me." The exchange ended there, but in retrospect Moseley Braun thought "I signaled to Barack" that a return to the U.S. Senate "just was not a real appealing prospect" for her.<sup>53</sup>

Barack spoke on the Senate floor about attending the funeral of Dick Newhouse, who had held the Hyde Park seat before Alice Palmer and who had died on May 2 at age seventy-eight. "There's times where all of us get swept up in some of the baser aspects of politics, the gamesmanship, the self-aggrandizement, the vanities," Barack said. "We all have our feet of clay, we all have our weaknesses." On the evening of May 9, Harstad Strategic Research launched a seven-day calling program during which 605 likely Democratic primary voters and 603 likely general election voters, with one-quarter of the former included in the latter, would be asked a series of questions. The pollsters' first question tried to screen out a household where someone worked for the news media, but the next morning the Daily Southtown learned that a poll aimed at measuring Barack Obama's potential appeal was under way. Legislative correspondent Kristen McQueary called Barack, who immediately came clean.

On Saturday, May 11, McQueary's story, "State Legislator Considers Bid for Senate," appeared in the Southtown, with McQueary introducing Barack as someone "whose name may be his biggest political obstacle." Barack had "said he has approached party leaders and core supporters about running," and agreed that his name might be a hurdle. "I'll have to test to what degree it's a disadvantage in a state-wide race to have an unusual name. It's a legitimate question. But I will say the last election gave me encouragement. If Rod Blagojevich and Rahm Emanuel can win, maybe there's hope for a Barack Obama." The other hurdle was money. "With about $3 to $4 million, you can run about as many television ads as people can stand. Above that, it starts getting on people's nerves." But Barack looked forward to taking on Republican incumbent Peter Fitzgerald. "When I examine his record for some evidence of legislation, projects that help working families, paying for college or managing health care costs, I think his record is pretty thin. The more appropriate role of government is to help working families." On Monday, Rich Miller's Capitol Fax alerted everyone to McQueary's scoop: "The Daily Southtown reports that Sen. Barack Obama wants to run for the U.S. Senate against Peter Fitzgerald in 2004."

Blair Hull's nascent campaign took interest in Barack, with staffer David Spiegel surveying his biography and unsuccessful race against Bobby Rush. Hull and top consultant Rick Ridder were looking to beef up the millionaire's campaign team, and at 8:00 A.M. on Thursday, May 16, Hull and Ridder met David Axelrod for breakfast at Ceres Cafe, at the Chicago Board of Trade in the Loop. Hull and Axelrod had met previously, when Hull considered challenging Emanuel for Blagojevich's congressional seat before Daley encouraged Hull to think bigger. Hull knew recruiting Axelrod was important because "it would be a sign that we really had a chance if I could get him involved in the campaign," Hull explained. Over breakfast, "they're sort of feeling each other out," Rick Ridder remembered, with Axelrod mentioning Barack's, Gery Chico's, and Dan Hynes's potential candidacies. Ridder knew Hull's background included a domestic violence incident in which charges had not been pursued and research had shown that “unless you know about it, it’s almost impossible to find” any record of the incident. But “Blair had this real weakness of telling everybody everything,” and “during this conversation, Blair does tell David straight out” that “‘I had this domestic violence issue’ and I’m going ‘Whoa,’” Ridder recounted. “I heard Blair Hull tell him that it was out there.” Hull confirmed that “I’m not the kind of guy that hides things,” and he too recalled how “there was some discussion of that” at what Ridder labeled that “fateful breakfast with David Axelrod.” No commitments were made, and back at his office Axelrod told John Kupper that Hull had left him unimpressed.

With Harstad’s poll complete, later that same day Barack’s state campaign fund paid the $17,750 balance due on a total tab of $34,250. On May 21 Chicago Sun-Times gossip columnist Michael Sneed reported that Obama “is seriously exploring jumping into the U.S. Senate race, even if former USS Carol Moseley-Braun is thinking about getting her old job back.” Gery Chico filed his formal statement of candidacy, and African American Sun-Times columnist Laura Washington wrote that Moseley Braun “is likely” to run and that Barack “may be” her “most worrisome challenger.” When the Hyde Park Herald questioned Barack about his plans, he said “we won’t know the final slate of candidates until September of 2003,” fifteen months away, but he again underscored the financial challenge. “If you’re going to be competitive, you need to raise enormous sums of money to get your name and message out, mainly through television advertising.”

On May 23 the Illinois Supreme Court upheld the Gift Ban Act that Barack had played such a central role in helping pass four years earlier, dismissing a low-profile challenge that Barack’s old-school friend Denny Jacobs had filed against it. The law’s grandfather clause loophole had been highlighted when retired senator Jim Rea paid himself $72,500 from his campaign account at the end of 1999, but Barack praised the court for upholding “simple, commonsense rules designed to protect the political process.” In the Senate, with Illinois facing a growing budget crisis as state revenues decreased from the previous year for the first time since 1955 and unpaid bills totaled $1 billion, Pate Philip’s Republicans moved to reduce state funding of Chicago Public Schools teachers’ pensions. “That seems to me to be a deliberate, intentional effort to say ‘We don’t care about Chicago,’” Barack told reporters. Budget discord delayed the Senate’s adjournment until late Sunday night, June 2, the first time in eleven years that spring session had gone beyond May 31, but the budget as passed called for the state to borrow $750 million to fund operating expenses, an unprecedented action.<sup>54</sup>

After spending so much of May in Springfield, Barack awaited Paul Harstad’s arrival from Colorado to present him and Dan Shomon with the benchmark poll results. Sun-Times political columnist Steve Neal wrote that Barack “would very much like to run for the Senate,” but he would be an also-ran if Carol Moseley Braun entered the race. Barack appeared on Chicago Defender reporter Chinta Strausberg’s cable television show and tried to convince viewers of the importance of state government. “I’ve been really encouraged by my capacity to influence policy at the state level,” even though the new budget was highly disappointing. “Draconian drug laws” meant that prison construction had become “a growing proportion of the state budget,” and it had been difficult to win funds for “prevention and intervention programs as opposed to incarceration strategies” because “politics in Springfield is driven by people’s perceptions” that “being tough on crime . . . is a winning recipe to win elections.” Emphasizing that “it’s our youth who are going into the system,” Barack rued how “prisons have become an economic development tool. In Illinois it's primarily downstate economies that are being supported by the prison economy" while more dollars were needed to "fund programs for ex-felons to help them transition back into the mainstream." Once Emil Jones became Senate president in 2003, he would have "enormous influence and power" to reshape state priorities.

The bottom line of Paul Harstad's poll results—once one worked through the extremely extensive findings—was astonishingly encouraging. The survey of likely Democratic primary voters began by asking respondents their feelings—very positive, somewhat positive, neutral, somewhat negative, very negative, or don't know—about sixteen different Illinois politicians. The first two names were Jesse Jackson Jr. and Peter Fitzgerald. Jackson's positives versus negative percentages cumulated to 46 and 20, Fitzgerald's to a respectable 37 and 26. The additional fourteen names began with Carol Moseley Braun, Rev. Jesse Jackson Sr., former Chicago schools chief Paul Vallas, and state comptroller Dan Hynes, eventually including Mayor Daley, U.S. representative Jan Schakowsky, Barack, state representative Tom Dart, former Chicago School Board chair Gery Chico, and well-known Cook County treasurer Maria Pappas. On the positive side, Daley, Vallas, and Moseley Braun topped the list at 58, 55, and 50 percent, while the two highest negatives were Jackson Sr. at 33 and Moseley Braun at 26. On "don't know," Barack topped the entire list at 72 percent, with Chico at 62, Hynes at 43, Pappas at 30, and Fitzgerald at just 13. Hynes's positives versus negatives summed to 24 and 4, Chico's to 15 and 3, and Barack's to 12 and 2.

The questionnaire then asked, "How would you rate the performance of Peter Fitzgerald as U.S. Senator?" and Democratic voters registered 39 percent positive and 47 percent negative. Then Harstad honed in on the poll's real purpose. "Thinking about the next Democratic primary election for U.S. Senator, which of these five candidates would you vote for?" The choices were Barack, Moseley Braun, Hynes, Chico, and Pappas, offered in randomized order. Moseley Braun drew 31 percent support, Hynes 14, Pappas 13, Barack 6, and Chico 5, with 30 percent of respondents saying "don't know." Then Democratic voters were asked, "and which candidate for Senate on this list do you find unacceptable?" "None" and "don't know" each got 32 percent, while Moseley Braun received 21, Chico 6, Pappas 4, and Barack and Hynes each 3. After asking about prospective secretary of state and Cook County Board president candidates, including Barack, the poll moved to direct head-to-head face-offs of several Democrats versus Fitzgerald. "Suppose the next election for U.S. Senator were held today, and the candidates were Democrat Barack Obama and Republican Peter Fitzgerald. For whom would you vote?" Barack drew 48 percent of Democrats and Fitzgerald 30 percent, with 22 percent responding "don't know." Using Mayor Daley's lesser-known brother Bill as a representative white Democrat with a well-known surname, Daley drew 64 percent support, 16 points better than Barack.

Finally Harstad focused on his own candidate, using a well-tested device to allay respondents' concern that they were being asked about their own racial attitudes. "Ethnic background has long been a factor in Illinois politics, and I'm going to read you the names of a few candidates for U.S. Senator. Thinking about your neighbors' reactions, do you think your neighbors would be more likely or less likely to support a candidate by the name of"—with Gery Chico, Maria Pappas, and either Barack or "Barry" Obama, being posed—"or would this particular name make no difference whatsoever to them?" Of the respondents, 53 percent chose "no difference whatsoever" for Chico, Pappas, and "Barry" Obama. Chico registered 9 percent more likely, 14 percent less likely, and "Barry" drew 7 and 11. However, among the half of the Democratic sample who were asked about “Barack” rather than “Barry,” the results were 7 percent more, 23 percent “less likely,” and only 43 percent “no difference.” Thus “Barack” as opposed to “Barry” cost Obama 12 percent of Democratic voters.

Then the poll moved to its most demanding and time-consuming portion, and the caller said they would “read you brief background of four potential candidates. Please tell me which one you would be most likely to vote for.” Blair Hull “founded a successful international company that pioneered new technology in stock trading. Hull sold his company to Goldman Sachs for $500 million.” Jan Schakowsky’s federal and state legislative service was described, as was Gery Chico’s on the city school board and with Mayor Daley. “Barack Obama is a state senator and constitutional law professor at the University of Chicago. He was the first African American editor of the Harvard Law Review.” After hearing that, 190 respondents—31 percent of the Democratic sample—named Barack as their first choice. Schakowsky, Chico, and Hull all trailed with 23, 21, and 4 percent, respectively. When asked for their second choice, Barack picked up an additional 19 percent of likely Democratic voters, for a grand total of 50 percent, with Chico at 44 and Schakowsky at 39.

The 190 people who had named Barack as their top choice were then asked, “What are the main reasons you support Barack Obama?” With multiple answers allowed, Barack’s education—i.e., Harvard—was a clear first, his U of C affiliation a strong second. Then, in a clear give-away of the poll’s underlying purpose, all 605 Democrats were told, “let me read you a brief description of Barack Obama,” a “possible” Senate candidate. “Barack Obama is a constitutional law professor. He has served six years as state Senator” and “is a long-time member of Trinity Church and is married with two daughters. He was the first African-American editor of the Harvard Law Review. As a state Senator, he reduced state income taxes on middle class families and helped pass welfare reform that gets people off welfare and into work. He sponsored a law for after-school programs to keep teens out of trouble and prevent youth crime. He is the lead sponsor of the Cardinal Bernardin Amendment, which provides health care for all Americans. And Obama was one of only four Illinois lawmakers who worked with Senator Paul Simon to pass the toughest ever campaign reform and ethics law in Illinois. Now, based on this description, how much appeal does Barack Obama have as a candidate for U.S. Senator—a great deal, quite a bit, about average, just some, or very little?”

Forty-five percent of likely Democratic voters answered “a great deal,” and 27 percent “quite a bit,” meaning that 72 percent found Barack highly appealing. Then those 439 respondents were asked “What are the main things you find appealing about Barack Obama as a candidate for U.S. Senator?” Now Barack’s issues agenda topped the chart, with welfare reform named by 18 percent of people and 14 percent each citing his interest in youth and his work with Paul Simon. Barack’s educational background and professorial status finished a strong second. Then came the final question: “Suppose the next general election for Senator were today,” with Peter Fitzgerald against Barack Obama, whom would you vote or lean toward voting for? Barack drew 62 and 10 percent, respectively, now swamping Fitzgerald among Democratic voters by a margin of 72 to 14.

Among Harstad’s 603-person sample of likely general election voters, with 148 of the Democratic primary respondents included in this pool, 82 percent admitted they did not know Barack and an additional 13 percent had no feelings pro or con, meaning that 95 percent of Illinois voters were unfamiliar with him. In contrast, 47 percent of respondents felt negatively about Jesse Jackson Sr., 36 percent negatively toward Carol Moseley Braun, and 31 percent negatively toward Jesse Jackson Jr. On the ethnic names question, with half of the sample asked about “Barack” and the other half “Barry,” the “less likely” option drew 22 percent with “Barack” and only 12 percent with “Barry.” At the end, after Barack was described as a “constitutional law professor” and the “first African-American editor of the Harvard Law Review,” and after the Bernardin Amendment and Paul Simon were again cited, the respondents were asked “how much appeal” Barack had. Sixty-two percent of voters said either “a great deal” or “quite a bit.” Then, in a final head-to-head choice of Barack versus Peter Fitzgerald, Barack handily triumphed with 50 percent while Fitzgerald drew just 31. In contrast, when Fitzgerald was paired against Carol Moseley Braun, he outpaced her by 10 percent.

The results were exceptionally encouraging. Barack’s 72 percent attractiveness to Democratic voters following the candidates’ descriptions was “an out-of-the-park score,” according to Harstad’s partner Mike Kulisheck. Barack’s 50 to 31 percent lead over Fitzgerald showed how much potential Barack had if Illinois’s statewide electorate knew who he was. That was especially true among female voters, because after the respondents heard Barack’s biographical summary, his support among women jumped 37 percent, as compared to 22 percent with men. Barack was not surprised by the results of being “Barry Obama,” with Harstad explaining that “you can have one odd name, but two’s a lot tougher.” But Barack gave no consideration to re-adopting his youthful nickname. “I’m Barack Obama. I may have been raised Barry Obama, but I’m Barack Obama. That’s the name I chose and that’s who I am, and I’m not changing.”<sup>55</sup>

Not long after the Harstad poll, the Washington, D.C., firm of Bennett, Petts & Blumenthal did a slightly smaller poll for Blair Hull. Democratic voters felt favorably about U.S. senator Dick Durbin by a 60 to 12 margin, but Carol Moseley Braun’s split was 49 to 28. Only 10 percent of respondents had heard of Hull, with Dan Hynes, Gery Chico, and even Barack coming in measurably higher, at 51, 27, and 21 percent, respectively. Asked their top choice for a Democratic Senate nominee, Moseley Braun led Hynes 47 to 15, with Barack, Chico, and Hull trailing at 6, 5, and 2 percent. Without Moseley Braun, Hynes drew 34 percent, Chico and Barack 12 apiece, and Hull 5, with 55 percent of likely Democratic voters choosing “undecided.” In the poll’s general election sample, Fitzgerald led Moseley Braun 49 to 42 and Hull 53 to 30. Then the pollsters read out descriptions of the possible Democratic candidates, with Hull characterized as a “successful entrepreneur and businessman” who had risen from “humble roots.” Barack was identified as “the first African-American editor of the Harvard Law Review” and state comptroller Dan Hynes was described as “the son of a powerful Chicago politician.” Those descriptors aided Barack and hindered Hynes, with Democrats giving Moseley Braun 46 percent, Barack 12, Hynes 11, Chico 10, and Hull 9 following those recitations. Without Moseley Braun, Hynes led with 31 percent and Chico came second with 27, while Barack and Hull trailed with 25 and 19 percent, respectively. Nothing in those results contradicted Harstad’s findings, and although the Democratic race was clearly fluid, the evidence seemed clear that Barack enjoyed considerably stronger potential for growth than did Hull.<sup>56</sup>

On Friday, June 7, Illinois governor George Ryan, unhappy with the badly unbalanced budget adopted by the General Assembly the previous Sunday and concerned by the accelerating decline in state revenues, summoned legislators back to Springfield on Monday to confront his amendatory vetoes. Barack was furious at some of Ryan’s cuts. “He’s proposing a $6 million reduction in early childhood block grants that we had specifically restored. He is proposing the total elimination of the HIV-AIDS prevention, outreach and treatment programs for minorities that we had specifically allocated $2 million for,” Barack told the Chicago Defender. “We should not eliminate programs that deal with children, the aged, the sick and the vulnerable of our society.” The root of the problem, Barack explained, “is that most of the time politicians in Springfield operate in obscurity. People don’t know what’s going on down there so they can cut deals without any fear of voter backlash.”

On Tuesday, June 11, the Senate began a tedious series of 234 successive votes on particular line items the governor had deleted from the budget. One-quarter of the way through, Rickey Hendon rose to advocate overturning a Ryan veto that would result in the closing of a Department of Children and Family Services (DCFS) welfare office in his district. “I challenge any of you,” he told his colleagues, “to go . . . and see how these children are living in squalor, how these children are dying, how these children are victimized. You wouldn’t close this office.” The electronic roll was taken, with twenty Democrats plus Republican Kirk Dillard voting to override the veto and thirty-one Republicans and five liberal Democrats—Terry Link, Lisa Madigan, Carol Ronen, Ira Silverstein, and Barack—voting to affirm.

As debate turned to the next line item, Barack spoke, saying he would vote to affirm this veto because it did not concern “core operations that affect those people who need state services the most.” He added a lighthearted reference to his mother-in-law, Marian Robinson, explaining how she was “a gold medal winner in the hundred-yard dash in the Senior Olympics. She could whip all of you.” Barack teasingly mentioned that he soon would be visiting the Senate president’s home district, saying “I hear there are a few Democrats out in DuPage, Pate,” before becoming more serious. “We need to open up the appropriations process a little bit more so that every one of the members here, as well as the public and the press, have an opportunity to look at some of these line items and can make some judicious decisions about whether it’s worthwhile to fund some of these programs.”

Then Rickey Hendon sought the floor. “I just want to say to the last speaker, you got a lot of nerve to talk about being responsible and then you voted for closing the DCFS office on the West Side, when you wouldn’t have voted to close it on the South Side. So I apologize to my Republican friends about my bipartisanship comments, ’cause clearly there’s some Democrats on this side of the aisle that don’t care about the West Side either, especially the last speaker.” Barack responded immediately. “I understand Senator Hendon’s anger at—actually—the—I was not aware that I had voted no on that last piece of legislation. I would have the Record record that I intended to vote yes. On the other hand, I would appreciate that next time my dear colleague Senator Hendon ask me about a vote before he names me on the floor.”

Then, for the first and only time in his entire life, Barack Obama completely fucking lost it. He walked to Hendon’s seat, placed a hand on Hendon’s shoulder, and as Hendon remembered it, “leaned over and stuck his jagged, strained face into my space and told me in an eerie, dark voice that came from some secret place within the ugly side of him, ‘You embarrassed me on the Senate floor, and if you ever do it again, I will kick your ass!’” Hendon replied “‘What?’” and Barack said, “‘You heard me, motherfucker, and if you come back here by the telephone, where the press can’t see it, I will kick your ass right now!’” at the back of the chamber. “I stacked my few papers quietly on my desk in front of me and said, ‘Okay, motherfucker, let’s go!’”

Pat Welch, seated beside Hendon, was astonished. He knew Hendon was “a volatile character,” unlike Barack, and “to have the two attitudes basically switch was very unusual.” Also nearby was Debbie Halvorson, who “was shocked” as Barack “just lost it.” Hendon walked toward the small telephone room at the left rear of the chamber. “When I got there, I turned and put up my dukes like Muhammad Ali,” Hendon recounted. “I begged him to hit me and told him I couldn’t go back to the West Side if I let a South Sider punk me and kick my butt. I swelled up my five-foot-seven frame to about six feet and got up to his chest. A little pushing and shoving” ensued, and as more verbal taunts were exchanged, Courtney Nottage, Emil Jones’s chief of staff, headed toward them with fellow staffer Jill Rock following behind. “I ran over there,” Nottage recalled, in “disbelief that this was happening.” Rock had heard their comments on the floor and had watched Barack approach Hendon’s seat, “but never in my wildest dreams did I think it was going to go where it went.” Nottage physically confronted Barack, placing both his hands on the front of Barack’s shoulders. “I was pushing him away from Rickey,” with Jill warning, “We are on the Senate floor! There are people watching!” It took Courtney “maybe ten or fifteen seconds” of sustained physical effort to move Barack backward. Hendon recalled that Barack was still taunting him “to come outside where he said he would stomp me into oblivion. I nodded my head and said, ‘Let’s go.’”

By this time, the confrontation had gotten almost everyone’s attention. Donne Trotter remembered that “all of a sudden one of the staff people grabbed me and said, ‘Senator, go back and get Rickey.’” Trotter tried to get them to “take this off the floor,” and Kim Lightford intervened as well. “I ran over to Rickey, and I was like ‘You cut this out!’ or ‘You hush right now!’ I’m in his face. Then I go over to Barack and I’m like ‘Hey, brother, what are you doing? Why did you let him get to you?’ ‘He’s gone too far! I’ve had enough of him!’” Barack told her. “I’m trying to get him off the floor. He would not budge.”

Hendon recalled, “I gave Barack a few more choice words and told him I would see him later,” before heading back to his seat as “Barack huffed and puffed and sneered at me.” Then Barack “walked over to my seat again,” saying “I’ve had enough of you!” but senators and staff finally got Barack to leave the floor. “I never would have expected that from Barack,” Jill Rock explained, for it was the most “surprising and shocking” confrontation any of them had seen, and “there’s not been an incident like that since.” Kim Lightford believed that Barack reacted that way “because Rickey did it on the Senate floor, in front of all the colleagues, the media, the staff,” and Jill agreed that was why “‘Street Barack’ came out.” Kim thought that on balance the face-off was a good thing. “That’s what Barack needed to do, and it worked.” He had endured five years of “the tag team between Trotter and Hendon,” and following Barack’s eruption “they didn’t tease him so much after that. It was like they finally realized that Barack was more than some soft punk to push around.”

Soon after the confrontation, Barack’s former campaign manager Carol Harwell called him, and she got an earful about Hendon. “‘I was getting ready to kick his ass. I’m just about sick of him. He’s an idiot, he’s a fool, a buffoon. But I’m not a punk, and they need to understand that.’” Not everyone was as understanding as Kim Lightford. Jill Rock remembered that some colleagues “didn’t appreciate that he lost his cool,” and Emil Jones summoned Barack to his office. “I called Barack in and said, ‘Man, come on.’ I said, ‘Don’t let him get under your skin like that. It’s not worth it, damaging your image by getting involved with him.’” Barack was still agitated: “‘That son of a gun this and blah blah and this,’” Jones recalled. “‘Come on. Forget about it. Don’t let him get you all riled up.’” Jones knew that “lurking in the back of all this is this whole Alice Palmer thing,” but “I told him that ‘You’re too smart of a man, too intelligent to be involved in this kind of bullshit. Let’s forget about it. Rickey’s going to be Rickey. You know that. But don't let that damage your image here!" A sheepish Barack headed back to the floor, confessing to Cindy Huebner, Jones's press secretary, that "Yup, I would have got my ass kicked" had the face-off with Hendon escalated further.<sup>57</sup>

The Senate overrode only twenty-two of Governor Ryan's 234 line-item vetoes, but Barack was pleased with a $6 million override regarding early childhood education. Wednesday morning's Chicago Tribune noted that "two agitated Chicago lawmakers had a heated exchange on the chamber floor" and said Hendon had "slapped away Obama's extended hand when Obama reached to put his hand on Hendon's shoulder." The rest of the encounter was not reported in the press, and when Barack arrived the next day at a new charter school in his district to deliver its first commencement address, he appeared fully composed. Telling the black eighth graders "to pursue excellence in everything that you do" and to "take responsibility for your actions," he warned that oftentimes African Americans "set the bar too low." Decrying "a certain anti-intellectualism that exists in our communities that says that if you know how to read and write that you're acting white," Barack told them to "commit yourself to something larger than yourself."

That same day one Senate candidacy was publicly confirmed when Blair Hull told the Chicago Sun-Times he was prepared to spend up to $40 million on the race after being encouraged by Mayor Daley to pursue it. Hull had previously discussed with consultant Rick Ridder the cost of running, and when Ridder had cited a $30 million price tag, Hull had said that was "not going to change my lifestyle or my children's lifestyles one bit." That evening African American attorney Stephen Pugh's law firm hosted "A Tribute to Senate Democratic Leader Emil Jones Jr.," with Ariel Capital's John Rogers Jr. and several prominent black lobbyists like Paul Williams among the honorary cochairs. Jones had been "bemoaning the fact that the black business community was not really supporting him," Pugh recalled, with contributions to help ensure that Democrats would take control of the state Senate in November.

Four days later, Greg Hinz of Crain's Chicago Business caught everyone's attention with a story revealing that legislative payroll records showed that House Republican leader Lee Daniels had staff members working on political campaigns on state time. That was not surprising to anyone employed at the statehouse, but Springfield's State Journal-Register soon had a follow-up story headlined "U.S. Attorney to Probe Allegations Against House Republican Staffers." Later that day, Daniels resigned as chairman of Illinois's Republican Party, and as the summer turned to fall, federal authorities would expand their interest in legislative leaders' campaign practices.

Barack was focused on his own campaign funding, and in mid-June Jim Reynolds convened a meeting at his home to ask fellow black financial executives, many of whom were active members of ABLE, to support Barack for the Senate. Reverend Jesse Jackson Sr. was there, and publisher Hermene Hartman remembered that Barack "challenged us to back him." Advertising executive Eugene Morris recalled Hartman saying to Barack, "You want our support, so tell us why we should support you." Barack responded by saying, "I know the folks in this room, I know what a lot of your problems and concerns are, and if I get into office, I will always be there. I'll be your champion." He knew his chances depended largely on raising enough money for a serious television advertising campaign. As Marty Nesbitt said, "it was a matter of having the money to tell his story," and Barack used proportional terms to make his pitch to Chicago's black business leaders: "If you raise $4 million, I have a 40 percent chance of winning. If you raise $5 million, I have a 50 percent chance of winning. If you raise $6 million, I have a 60 percent chance of winning.”

Many people in the room felt that Jim Reynolds was the most persuasive. Executive Les Coney remembered Reynolds’s appeal to his friends: “Barack wants to run for the Senate, and I really want to know if I can count on your support.” Eugene Morris remembered Reynolds insisting, “This guy’s for real, we’ve got to help him.” Morris stressed that “Jim was really the guy who spearheaded it,” using “his personal capital. Jim was really out there.” ComEd’s Frank Clark agreed. “Jim took Barack around early, by hand, to meet people who didn’t know him. . . . Folks who ultimately fell in love with Barack didn’t know him or love him initially.” Attorney Martin King, Jesse Jackson Jr.’s best friend, agreed that it was Reynolds who “convinced a lot of us business folks that we should be supportive” of Barack. “Jim was key,” King felt. “But not for Jim, no U.S. Senate race” for Barack.

Hermene Hartman was underwhelmed by Barack’s presentation and told him so the next day. “You sound very local. You don’t sound national. You’ve got to get a national focus.” Barack asked what he should do. “You need to start talking national politics, and the best person is probably for you to go to Jesse” Sr., to absorb some of Rev. Jackson’s two decades’ worth of experience with national and international issues. Hartman called Jackson, who agreed to talk with Barack on Saturday mornings before Rainbow PUSH’s weekly public rallies. Barack also needed to call upon U.S. congressman Jesse Jackson Jr. and ask for his support.

Barack and Jesse Jr. agreed to meet Saturday for breakfast at 312 Chicago, a handsome, well-known Loop restaurant, where they settled into the relatively private southeasternmost booth. “He broaches the question of the Senate,” Jackson recalled. “Michelle wants me to make some money, but I’m thinking about giving this one more shot and running for the U.S. Senate, but Jesse, if you’re running, I’m not running,” Jackson recounted. “There’s no chance that I can run,” Jackson responded. His father was still active in the Decatur, Illinois, community protests that had begun more than two years earlier with the high school student suspensions. “My dad’s practically declared war on downstate,” Jackson explained, making a statewide race by anyone with his surname politically impossible. Barack asked if Jesse Jr. would cochair Barack’s campaign, and Jackson replied, “I would be honored.”

Barack also touched base with staunch supporters like Newton Minow and Ab Mikva, telling them, “I’ve talked to the Jacksons, and they’re going to support me.” Thanks to Marty Nesbitt, his financial benefactor Penny Pritzker invited Barack to visit her family at their beachfront home in western Michigan. One morning Jim Reynolds introduced Barack to Andy Davis, a major figure at the Chicago Stock Exchange whose office was in the same building as Loop Capital. Barack asked if he could call Davis, which he did the next day, and Davis agreed to meet Barack for breakfast. Barack explained his interest in running for the Senate, and when Davis asked, “What would it take for you to be a U.S. Senator?” Barack had an immediate answer: “Five million dollars. If I get $5 million I can win.” Davis had one crucial question. Explaining, “I’m sick of dealing with guys who I’m going to be embarrassed by later,” Davis bluntly asked Barack: “Are there going to be any bimbo eruptions?” “Absolutely not,” Barack said. “There will be no bimbo eruptions. There’s Michelle and that’s it.” Davis agreed to join Barack’s finance committee and promised to raise $75,000 in the months ahead.<sup>58</sup>

With Barack’s outreach intensifying, on June 21 Steve Neal of the Chicago Sun-Times reported the full details of Paul Harstad’s poll results, clearly aiming to dissuade Moseley Braun from entering the race. Noting that Barack “is exploring a possible run,” he wrote that Barack “regards Moseley-Braun as a trailblazer” and “indicates that he would be less inclined to run if she does.” Neal emphasized how modest Peter Fitzgerald’s ratings were, but Fitzgerald could be reelected if Moseley Braun won the Democratic nomination. Neal’s message was clear: “Illinois voters are ready to toss Fitzgerald. But not for Moseley-Braun. Is the Democratic nomination worth having if she can’t beat Fitzgerald?”

Toward the end of June, Barack appeared on Public Affairs with Jeff Berkowitz, a widely viewed Chicagoland cable television show, and insisted that “right now, my main focus is to make sure that we elect Rod Blagojevich as governor.” The acerbic host was taken aback. “You working hard for Rod?” “You betcha!” “Hot Rod?” “That’s exactly right. I think that having a Democratic governor will make a big difference. . . . I am working hard to get a Democratic Senate and Emil Jones president, replacing Pate Philip, and once all that clears out in November, then I think we’ll be able to make some good decisions about the Senate race.” Under Berkowitz’s assertive prodding, Barack confirmed that he was a “card-carrying Democrat. I really believe that the core Democratic philosophy is one that . . . really helps working people.” Berkowitz was obsessed with school vouchers, and Barack said, “I am not closed-minded on this issue,” and that people “shouldn’t be didactic or ideological about how” best to provide “the most effective education” for all students. “I am willing to listen to these arguments,” but Barack refused to be hectored into explicitly endorsing vouchers.

The next morning Barack had breakfast with Blair Hull at Ceres Cafe. Hull invited Barack because “I was trying to get a sense of who the players were. I wanted to learn as much as I could,” and Hull recalled that the two men had “a very pleasant conversation” during which it became “pretty clear that he . . . was very close to declaring.” Two days later, Paul Harstad returned to Chicago to present his benchmark poll findings at a well-attended initial meeting of Barack’s finance committee. Among Democratic voters, Carol Moseley Braun’s positive-negative ratio was 50 to 26 percent, with the split being an even more troubling 39 to 31 percent when asked about Moseley Braun’s honesty and integrity. While 59 percent of African Americans identified her as their top choice in the Senate race, 27 percent of white Democrats thought Moseley Braun was unacceptable. Harstad also showed that only 11 percent of white Democratic voters said their “neighbors” would be less likely to vote for someone named “Barry” Obama, whereas 26 percent said that when asked about “Barack.” Among general election voters, Moseley Braun’s weaknesses were even starker. Asked about her performance when she was a U.S. senator in the 1990s, African Americans felt positively by a 71 to 22 percent margin, but among the entire electorate 59 percent felt negatively and only 32 percent positively. Peter Fitzgerald would defeat Moseley Braun by ten points, and Jesse Jackson Jr. by nineteen, but after voters heard Barack described as a U of C “constitutional law professor” and “the first African-American editor of the Harvard Law Review,” Fitzgerald’s previous 50 to 24 advantage over Obama dissolved, with 50 percent of voters choosing Barack and 31 percent Fitzgerald.

During Harstad’s presentation, several of Barack’s financial backers requested a written memo summarizing his findings, and Harstad followed up with a barn burner. “Peter Fitzgerald is highly vulnerable,” and “Illinois is becoming more Democratic,” Harstad stressed. “Carol Moseley-Braun could win a Democratic primary but would have great difficulty winning a general election.” However, “without Braun in the race, Obama can win the primary,” because “his profile has enormous potential voter appeal.” Furthermore, “Obama can beat Fitzgerald in a general election,” because “even 27 percent of Republicans choose Barack over Fitzgerald” once they hear his qualifications. “In sum, if Braun opts out of the race, and Obama has the resources to get on television state-wide, Obama can win a primary and go on to win in November.”<sup>59</sup>

Steve Neal devoted another column to Barack’s potential strength as a statewide candidate, and Barack told the local Hyde Park Herald he hoped to create a federal campaign committee by mid-July. Calling the $14 million that Peter Fitzgerald spent to win in 1998 “obscene,” Barack said, “Fitzgerald is vulnerable, and I think a strong Democrat could defeat him.” He acknowledged that “what Carol does is a factor. It would be silly for me not to take her into account,” but Moseley Braun was unwilling to discuss her plans with the Herald: “It’s ridiculous. It’s an understatement to say it’s too early. We haven’t even had the ’02 elections yet.”

As talk of Barack’s candidacy spread, even the U of C’s student newspaper, the Chicago Maroon, sought him out. While a federal campaign filing would happen soon, only in December would he make a final decision. “If this is a race that I do decide to mount, then unfortunately it . . . may cost as much as $3 or $4 million to run in a primary,” he told the Maroon. Citing the poll results, “if I go forward with the race, then my main liability is my lack of name recognition across the state, which is particularly important given that I have an unusual name. I’m not the kind of person that people will vote for just because they like the sound of my name.” Barack said that lots of travel lay ahead too, because he would “have to devote a significant amount of time to meeting with Democratic leaders across the state” to determine if they “think my candidacy would be viable.” With Chinta Strausberg of the Chicago Defender, Barack sounded more uncertain, saying that 2004 “is still a long way off,” and that “I would expect a firm decision sometime early next year.” As before, Barack made nice regarding Carol Moseley Braun. “I have been a long-time friend of hers. I have no interest in seeing both myself and Carol run because if we both run, we divide the African-American and progressive voting bases. What Carol does would be a factor in my decision.” The Defender awarded him a huge, top-of-the-front-page headline —“Barack Obama Explores U.S. Senate Seat”—and he continued to criticize Fitzgerald’s record whenever he had the opportunity.

In late July, a number of significant contributions landed in Barack’s state committee account. Heiress Abby McCormick O’Neil, whose support Judy Byrd and Laura Hunter had helped nurture, contributed $10,000, a figure that was matched by a trio of gifts from Ariel Capital and its top officers John Rogers and Mellody Hobson. Old friend Greg Dingens added $2,000, but when Barack, Michelle, and their two young girls joined Greg and his wife for dinner one night, they listened as Michelle none too gently argued against going forward with a Senate race. “Michelle started giving Barack some grief, saying ‘Barack, if you really want to make a difference, you should go be a high school principal. You can make more difference as a CPS high school principal than as a U.S. senator,’ and then the two of them got into this big debate about whether that was true or not,” Greg recalled. “I was trying to stay out of it because they were getting pretty animated,” with Michelle hesitant because of “the personal costs” of Barack running yet another race.

One day that late summer the family experienced a second frightening medical emergency when four-year-old Malia woke her parents in the middle of the night and “said, ‘Daddy, I’m having trouble breathing,’” Barack recounted. “We put her in the car, rushed her to the emergency room, and it turned out that she was having an asthma attack.” The crisis passed quickly, and “she’s been fine ever since,” Barack explained.

Senate duties had him on the road to Peoria and other cities where a Judiciary subcommittee held hearings on the capital punishment reforms proposed in April by Governor Ryan's commission. Even when Barack was at home in Hyde Park, he joined House colleague Barbara Flynn Currie for a panel discussion about instituting public funding for Illinois Supreme Court elections. "Money has come to dominate every aspect of our public lives and our democracy," Barack complained. "At least the judges shouldn't be beholden to special interests," although he knew that "nothing is harder in Springfield than moving forward campaign finance legislation," and there was no choice but "to be patient."<sup>60</sup>

In early August, Steve Neal proclaimed that Blair Hull "is Mayor Daley's choice for the Democratic nomination" for Senate. Hull and Rick Ridder had added well-known Washington-based media consultant Anita Dunn to their campaign team, and although Dunn believed "there was definitely a potential opening" in the race "for somebody outside of the political establishment," her first task was working with Hull to develop "basic candidate skills." Dunn's hiring filled the slot that Hull and Ridder had earlier hoped David Axelrod would take, but over the course of the summer, Axelrod's feelings had evolved. When Barack had first mentioned a Senate run, Axelrod thought Obama was "aiming too high" and suggested he wait until Daley stepped down and run for mayor. But Paul Harstad's poll and the drumbeat of Steve Neal columns made the Democratic race look significantly different in early August than it had in early June.

As a U of C undergraduate in the mid-1970s, David Axelrod had started writing about politics for the Hyde Park Herald. Thanks to veteran progressive politico Don Rose, Axelrod got an internship at the Chicago Tribune, and by 1979, he was one of the Trib's lead reporters covering city politics. Axelrod's dream was to ascend at the Trib, but by 1984, Steve Neal had arrived to write a political column and Axelrod believed he never would become political editor. With his young daughter Lauren suffering from worsening epilepsy, Axelrod was receptive to entreaties by U.S. Senate candidate Paul Simon, who was challenging Republican incumbent Charles Percy. Following Simon's victory, Axelrod and his close friend Forrest Claypool founded a media consulting business, although many Democrats for whom they worked bore no resemblance to the usually principled Simon. Harold Washington, in his last year as mayor, equaled Simon's stature, but machine apparatchiks like Cook County sheriff Richard Elrod were a notch below even state's attorney and mayoral aspirant Richard M. Daley, with whom Axelrod signed on in 1989.

Business was very good, with more than a dozen clients contesting 1990 races, including successful Cook County Board president Richard Phelan. After Phelan's primary win, the Tribune credited "$1 million in TV ads, produced by political media adviser David Axelrod," for the "fastest elevation of a political unknown to victory locally, almost exclusively through the use of TV commercials." But Axelrod's usage of little-known court documents to take down African American jurist Eugene Pincham, a top contender, troubled one coworker and led to a Tribune story calling the tactic "reminiscent of the Willie Horton controversy during the 1988 presidential campaign," a famously distorted negative ad. Axelrod defended the attack, claiming Pincham "wants his own record obscured" and later stressed that "I believe in partisanship." But his daughter's severe illness forced him to turn down offers to work for Democratic presidential nominees Bill Clinton and Al Gore. By 2002 there was no question that "Axelrod's client list . . . contradicts the self-image" he sought to burnish, and Axelrod later confessed that by August 2002 "Obama offered a path back to the ideals that had drawn me to politics in the first place."

On August 14, Chicago election lawyer Michael Dorf quietly mailed Federal Election Commission Form 1, a “Statement of Organization,” signed by Cynthia Miller as treasurer of Obama for Illinois, and FEC Form 2, a “Statement of Candidacy,” signed by Barack, to Washington. The next Monday Capital Fax’s Rich Miller reported that the Democratic field was rapidly taking shape. Blair Hull was paying for ten campaign workers to aid state Senate Democrats in their upcoming November races, and Gery Chico “is busily learning Spanish and raising money.” Barack “is traveling the state, looking for support,” but the biggest news was that state comptroller Dan Hynes “is all but certain to run” for the Senate too. “Hynes has a good staff and a strong network. He’ll be an instant favorite when he makes the run,” Miller stated.

The next day Obama for Illinois sent supporters a “Dear Friend” letter from Barack. “I’m actively exploring” a Senate run, and “we are going forward with fund-raising for this race.” A kickoff event was scheduled for October 10. “I wouldn’t be considering this race unless our polling data showed we could win,” the letter went on, and a copy of Steve Neal’s column detailing Harstad’s numbers was appended for easy reference. Barack said he was “lining up support from key elected officials,” and “we are in the process of assembling a top-flight team to manage my campaign.” David Axelrod had “signed on,” and “if we can raise the money to put our message on television,” prospects would be excellent. Hull’s campaign got a copy of the letter, and Axelrod’s decision to go with Barack “was clearly seen as significant” for a candidate who previously had seemed like lesser competition than Dan Hynes or even Gery Chico.<sup>61</sup>

As November’s elections drew nearer, the odds of a Democratic statewide sweep increased even further. Rod Blagojevich seemed certain to defeat Jim Ryan, and with Emil Jones having more than $3 million to bankroll Democratic Senate races, there seemed to be no doubt that Democrats would seize control of the Senate by at least 32–27. Barack flippantly told the Hyde Park Herald that “running unopposed is the way to run,” but having a free ride back to Springfield allowed him to focus almost all his attention on raising his profile as a potential U.S. Senate candidate. He expected to be the new chairman of the Senate’s Public Health and Welfare Committee if the Democrats took control, so he held a series of ten town hall meetings across Illinois to address health care issues. Approval of his Bernardin Amendment, Barack emphasized, “would change Illinois to a single-payer system where everyone received health benefits.” Thanks to new federal funding, Governor Ryan announced that KidCare would expand to provide FamilyCare coverage for almost twenty-nine thousand poor working parents, even though Pate Philip had prevented Barack from winning Senate approval for such an expansion.

In mid-September, Barack flew to Washington to attend the Congressional Black Caucus (CBC)’s annual weekend of meetings. He wanted to call on well-known congressional prognosticator Stuart Rothenberg as well as talk up his candidacy with old Harvard friends like Tom Perrelli and Bruce Spiva. But Barack’s primary goal was to use the CBC gathering to get out the word that Illinois had a potential African American U.S. senator whose name was not Carol Moseley Braun. Barack arrived knowing nothing about the long-standing traditions of CBC’s annual weekend. Calling it Springfield for African Americans would understate the attractiveness of the surroundings, but when Barack returned to Chicago, he told a bemused Jeremiah Wright he had been astonished by what a “meat market” the gathering was, with multiple women openly propositioning Barack and inviting him up to their hotel rooms. “He came back in shock because he went there to network and to let people know” of his desire to run if Moseley Braun did not. ““Pastor, do you know what they do?”” Wright remembered Barack asking him. “He was in shock,” and it left Wright thinking that not only was Barack “a guy with high morals” but also that “he really doesn’t know how people are” concerning sex.

Barack continued to talk up his record of tackling “the issues facing working families.” Publicity was key. “If people know who I am, meet me, hear me speak or know my track record, I think I can get their votes. The burden is on me to make myself better known.” Barack wanted to stress, even to readers of the African American weekly Chicago Weekend, that he was seeking more than just black votes. “I have a track record of being able to get crossover votes,” as his 2000 race had shown, and he had “an appeal that goes beyond the African-American community. I spent much of the summer traveling across the state,” receiving “favorable responses because we’re talking about issues that affect everybody.” Barack said he had spoken with Carol Moseley Braun, but he was focused “on putting together the resources that would allow me to be an effective candidate,” with a fund-raising goal of $3 million. “I’ve been an effective state Senator, and I can be an even more effective U.S. Senator. I believe there are some issues that can only be effective at the federal level. My running just means I think I can do more in another position.”<sup>62</sup>

By mid-September, Barack moved to expand his team beyond Dan Shomon and Cynthia Miller. He asked young attorney Raja Krishnamoorthi, now practicing at Mayer Brown, to serve as his part-time, unpaid policy director. A year earlier, Katrina Emmons, a twenty-year-old graduate of the University of Chicago, had joined Miner Barnhill as a paralegal. She shared an office with Scott Lynch-Giddings, a talented actor holding down a similar day job. As she approached her first anniversary, Katrina told Scott about her interest in politics. He recommended she e-mail Barack, who invited her to lunch at Whole Foods. Katrina anticipated volunteering a few hours a week and was taken aback when Barack was “really direct” in asking if she had “baggage” that could be problematic. He handed her a paperback of Dreams From My Father, and said, “You need to read this.” A few days later, Barack called and asked, “Do you want to come work for me?” which meant leaving Miner Barnhill. “I can pay you for three months. I can’t guarantee you that I’m going to run,” but “if it doesn’t work out and I don’t run, I’ll help you find a job somewhere else.” Katrina wanted to think about it, but Barack asked her to meet Dan Shomon. Within fifteen minutes, Dan offered twenty-one-year-old Katrina the title of deputy finance director of Obama for Illinois, and she accepted. There was no finance director yet, although Barack and Dan had already asked Claire Serdiuk, the campaign scheduler for U.S. senator Dick Durbin, what her plans were once Durbin’s cakewalk reelection race ended in early November. By the end of September, Serdiuk agreed to join Barack’s campaign, and a lease was signed for three modest rooms on the fourteenth floor of 310 South Michigan Avenue, a building undergoing renovation. Phone service was set up, and computers and some used office furniture were acquired.

One painful discovery marred the new launch: Obama for Congress 2000 (OFC) had wrongly accepted $5,500 in contributions toward the general election, in which Barack of course had never run, and Federal Election Commission rules required immediate refunds. By then, OFC’s indebtedness to Barack and Michelle had been whittled down to $5,000, but this new revelation forced Barack to make another personal loan to OFC, leaving him and Michelle $10,500 in the hole. By early October, Cynthia Miller and Katrina Emmons had Obama for Illinois up and running, with Katrina soon purchasing the domain names www.obamaforillinois.com and www.barackobama.com.<sup>63</sup>

In late September, nationwide debate intensified as President George W. Bush warned that Iraqi dictator Saddam Hussein likely possessed weapons of mass destruction and that only a tangible threat of military action against Hussein's regime could force Iraq to allow a thorough international inspection of Hussein's stockpiles. On Saturday night, September 21, progressive Chicago donor Bettylu Saltzman talked about the danger of U.S. military intervention with some friends over dinner, and the next morning she telephoned old activist friend Marilyn Katz to suggest they call together a group of like-minded acquaintances to organize a rally opposing any U.S. use of military force. On Tuesday about a dozen antiwar progressives gathered at Saltzman's home and chose Wednesday, October 2, eight days later, for a lunchtime event outside the U.S. federal building in the downtown Loop.

The day after Saltzman's gathering, Barack told the Chicago Defender's Chinta Strausberg that "the president has not made his case for going into Iraq." Since "we have severe problems here at home" given the huge economic downturn since the 9/11 terror attacks, President Bush's "neglect of the economy does nothing to enhance America's long-term security" and any military action in Iraq would be "a cover-up for a failing economy." Over the weekend, Barack went downstate for a Saturday-night speech to Randolph County Democrats in Sparta, so when Bettylu Saltzman called the Obamas' home to ask Barack to speak at Wednesday's protest, Michelle said she would tell him when he got home. Before returning Saltzman's call, Barack discussed the invitation with Dan Shomon. "What do you think, chief?" Barack asked, using his regular salutation. "He knew, and I knew, that the liberal progressives were key in any Democratic primary," Shomon explained, but Barack worried about the potential political damage if he opposed U.S. military action that most national Democratic politicians were on the cusp of endorsing. "You know I'm going to do this speech," Barack told Shomon, because "I believe it's right," but Barack was "very worried that he was going to eliminate his chance to be in the U.S. Senate." Barack also telephoned David Axelrod, who favored speaking, and a Sunday conference call was set up including Raja Krishnamoorthi and Axelrod's friend Pete Giangreco, a Democratic campaign strategist whom David had been trying to sell on Obama. State comptroller Dan Hynes was a client of Giangreco and his partner Terry Walsh, but Axelrod had been telling Pete that there was "something special" about Barack, whom David believed was "the real deal." Axelrod agreed with Shomon that opposing intervention in Iraq would not harm Barack in a multicandidate Democratic primary, but Giangreco was much more hesitant. On the call, Barack said he intended to call any military action in Iraq a "dumb war," a label that troubled Giangreco. But Barack was firm. "I'm very comfortable saying so," and "my instinct is to do this." On Monday Barack telephoned Bettylu to say that he would speak at the Wednesday rally.

Chicagoans Against War on Iraq, as the organizers dubbed themselves, had secured Jesse Jackson Sr. as their marquee speaker, but otherwise the noontime program featured a lineup that only local progressives would know. Sitting on the podium as the rally got under way, Barack complained to Bettylu about the all-too-familiar musical selections like "Give Peace a Chance." "Couldn't they play something more modern?" he asked. Bettylu and Marilyn Katz got the rally started, reading supportive letters from U.S. senator Dick Durbin and Ohio congressman Dennis Kucinich. Barack's former Senate colleague Chuy Garcia was followed by former MacArthur Foundation president Adele Simmons, and after a musical interlude, local performer and MC Aaron Freeman asked the crowd of about a thousand to "Please welcome state senator Barack Obama."

Barack began with a reference to the U.S. Civil War before stating, "I don't oppose all wars." Then he mentioned his grandfather's service in World War II before again saying, "I don't oppose all wars." That emphasis surprised many listeners in what organizer Jennifer Amdur Spitz knew was "a peacenik crowd."

Musician Peter Cunningham had led off the program and found Barack's theme "a kind of contrarian message that made everybody stop and go, 'What? What is this guy saying?'" Barack repeated his refrain: "I don't oppose all wars. What I am opposed to is a dumb war. What I am opposed to is a rash war," one "based not on reason but on passion, not on principle but on politics." Barack argued that "Saddam poses no imminent and direct threat to the United States, or to his neighbors," and he said that "even a successful war against Iraq will require a U.S. occupation of undetermined length, at undetermined cost, with undetermined consequences." Additionally, intervention would "strengthen the recruitment arm of Al Qaeda. I am not opposed to all wars. I'm opposed to dumb wars." Barack concluded with a second refrain, one he repeated four times: "You want a fight, President Bush?" Then pursue Al Qaeda, pursue UN inspections, get U.S. allies Egypt and Saudi Arabia "to stop oppressing their own people," and "wean ourselves off Middle East oil" at home.

The program closed with Jesse Jackson's remarks and a sing-along, and as a local television news crew interviewed Jackson, Barack appeared alone in the background. Media estimates of the crowd varied from three hundred to three thousand, but Barack had not recognized one supportive couple, a very tall, now eighty-five-year-old black man accompanied by a short white woman: Frank and Bea Lumpkin. Only the suburban Daily Herald quoted "Barak Obama" as declaring "I don't oppose all war, I oppose dumb war," but the Chicago Sun-Times' brief story devoted as much attention to the views of some nearby construction workers as to the rally's speakers. "I think we should go to war and soon," one ironworker explained.<sup>64</sup>

Two days before the rally, the U of C Law School's autumn quarter had begun, with Barack again teaching Con Law III three mornings a week plus his Racism class on Thursday afternoons. Con Law attracted fifty-two students and Racism thirty-eight, and Barack again faced the challenge of running for office while juggling a heavy teaching schedule. Appearing on WVON's Cliff Kelley radio show, Barack stressed the importance of Democrats winning control of the state Senate while acknowledging that people were "responsive" about "the possibility" of him running for U.S. Senate. "It's important that Democrats at the national level ask serious questions about President Bush's policies."

The next day, after teaching his Con Law III class, Barack addressed three hundred attorneys at the Chicago Council of Lawyers' annual luncheon before heading downstate to Macomb to speak on behalf of Democratic state Senate candidate John Sullivan, who was challenging Republican incumbent Laura Kent Donahue. Dan Shomon was recruiting friends and supporters to drive Barack whenever possible so as to mitigate the demands of his hectic schedule. Will Burns took the wheel on one trip to Champaign and back, and for the Macomb trip, Dan recruited Dave Feller, a former Senate staffer now working in the Cook County Sheriff's Office, to accompany Barack and handle the late-night drive back to Chicago.

At Western Illinois University, Barack told the crowd that "government as it operates and government as it should operate are in conflict." The return trip began inauspiciously when an Illinois state trooper pulled Feller and Barack over not long after leaving Macomb. Feller was at the wheel of Barack's Jeep Cherokee, which had Senate plates, and Barack introduced himself to the trooper, who ran both men's driver's licenses before letting them go with a warning. Back on the road, Barack became worried when Feller began to nod off while driving. "Dave, wake up, wake up!" Feller woke up, but again nodded off a little bit later. An angry Barack insisted on taking the wheel. "He's got the radio up, he's chain smoking," Feller remembered, and when Dave awoke from yet a third nap to suggest a place on Chicago's outskirts where they could get a drink, an exhausted Barack responded simply, “Fuck you!” The two men made it home unscathed, and a few days later, Feller’s physician diagnosed him with sleep apnea.

On October 10, the “Obama Issues Committee” met at 7:30 A.M.; that evening would be Barack’s long-scheduled kickoff fund-raiser. Dan and Barack both addressed their “game plan/legislative strategy for 2003” with the issues volunteers. Everyone knew Illinois faced an annual budget deficit of $3.4 million, and “the important issue for Senator Obama is to determine which programs should receive further cuts,” the agenda explained. With Raja Krishnamoorthi taking the lead, issue assignments were parceled out, with reports due by January 30, before the substantive start of spring session. The fund-raiser that night was a notable success, with old friends like Miner Barnhill’s Jeff Cummings contributing $1,000 and several donors, like Valerie Jarrett’s boss Daniel Levin and his wife Fay Hartog-Levin, giving the maximum $2,000 per person.

The next day the U.S. Senate voted 77–23 in favor of a joint resolution authorizing the use of military force against Iraq, with twenty-nine of fifty Senate Democrats siding with Republican president George W. Bush. Barack later observed that “with that vote, Congress became a co-author of a catastrophic war.” Barack and Michelle headed to Bloomington, Illinois, to attend the Saturday wedding of Amy Szarek, Barack’s congressional campaign fund-raiser. After the ceremony, a number of Barack’s current and former campaign aides teased him about his eating habits as everyone enjoyed drinks. Given the amount of time that Barack and Dan spent on the road crisscrossing Illinois beyond Chicagoland, eating in Barack’s Jeep Cherokee was almost a daily event. But patronizing drive-through windows had become more problematic as Barack got increasingly picky about what he ate. His strong aversion to cheese exemplified the difficulty. “He had a problem communicating the Whopper order,” Dan explained, because Barack asked to skip multiple condiments. “They would always get his order wrong,” and in time Dan and Barack gave up on drive-through windows entirely. In Springfield, Barack could always eat his favorite lunch, Cafe Andiamo’s vegetarian sandwich, either there or at the capitol, thanks to the young interns who fetched food for busy legislators. Democratic Judiciary Committee staffer Rob Scott remembered Barack cordially thanking the interns by name for such errands, but whenever he could, Barack used Andiamo “as a respite” from the capitol’s nonstop glad-handing. Owner Dave Stover, who was also the executive director of the Illinois Association of Rehabilitation Facilities, which represented service providers for people with disabilities, “interacted quite a bit” with Barack on the Public Health and Welfare Committee. Over at Andiamo, Barack “was always, always meticulously worried about getting a parking ticket” from Springfield’s aggressive meter attendants. Stover realized that Barack “was always a fairly private man” and “very cautious,” and “one of the more conservative liberals that I’ve ever known.” For Barack it was as if “everything had a yellow light on,” and not just his “present” button at his Senate desk. Others who saw Barack daily in Springfield, like officemate Terry Link’s secretary Bunny Fourez, noted that “he ate so healthy,” yet to people in the capitol, just like so many in Chicago, it seemed puzzlingly out of character for someone who was so rigorously health focused and self-controlled to nonetheless be a moderately heavy smoker.

Barack and Dan Shomon had spent so much time together over the previous five years, particularly since 1999–2000, that their relationship had become by far the closest personal bond Barack had formed in his seven years in electoral politics. Dan’s friends knew how committed he was to Barack, and although some of them “questioned Shomon’s bromance with Obama,” no one doubted how devoted Dan was to Barack's best interests, political and personal. As the pace of the nascent U.S. Senate run picked up after Labor Day, Barack asked Dan to sit down with Michelle. Shomon knew Michelle was not enthusiastic about Barack's political career, and he realized things had only gotten worse during and after the 2000 loss to Bobby Rush. "I never sensed his marriage was really in trouble," Dan recalled, but there was no question that "there was great tension on the home front," as one Shomon friend remembered him saying. So "I talked to Michelle. She and I had a long conversation about what kind of an impact" a two-year statewide run—late 2002 to potentially late 2004—would have on Barack's family life. Michelle's distaste was at times matched by Barack's guilt about how much he was away from home. "Don't you fucking know I have kids?" Dan recalled Barack asking on more than one occasion when presented with an upcoming travel schedule.

Mulling over Michelle's reluctance and Barack's own regret about missing so much of his daughters' childhoods, Dan took the initiative during one fall drive when they headed south from Springfield to Macoupin County to warn Barack that "if he was running for the U.S. Senate for two years morning, noon, and night, he wasn't going to see his kids, and he was going to feel bad about it. I just knew the personal toll it would take on him," and "I didn't want him to feel guilty." Dan remembered the moment. "We were on the side of the road on Illinois 4 in Carlinville, and I told Barack, 'I don't think you should run.' I said I thought it was a bad idea because of Michelle and the kids." But "Barack just looked at me and said, 'I'm running anyway.'" As close as Barack and Dan were, Barack had never shared with Shomon his sense of destiny as he had with Michelle more than a decade earlier and previously with Sheila and Lena. That unspoken conviction explained why Dan's carefully considered warning about the price to be paid was one Barack could not heed, just as he had been unable to truly pursue the Joyce Foundation presidency nine months earlier.<sup>65</sup>

With that conviction in mind, Barack declined an October invitation to become a candidate for the presidency of Common Cause, for which he had been recommended by former Joyce president Debbie Leff to search consultant and Barack's former Demos board colleague Arnie Miller. Barack's focus was now entirely on the U.S. Senate, and he remained on the road, traveling to places like Elgin to campaign for Democratic state Senate candidates, but Illinois's dire state budget situation dampened the hopes of what could follow from a Democratic sweep. "We're going to be finally driving the bus, and it's got no gas," Barack told one reporter, but he stressed how "it's important that we have Democrats in power to make sure that the state budget is not balanced on the backs of poor people and African-Americans."

On election night, Senate Democrats came away with 33–26 majority control of the chamber, and Rod Blagojevich won the governorship by a margin of more than 230,000 votes. Together with Speaker Michael Madigan's continuing control of the state House, Illinois Democrats now assumed complete dominance of the capitol. But any semblance of unity was less than skin-deep, because "Blagojevich and Madigan despise each other," as Capitol Fax's Rich Miller put it. Appearing the next evening on WTTW's Chicago Tonight telecast, Barack emphasized that as Senate president "Emil Jones is now another power center," and one who would "have his own agenda." With everyone on notice about Illinois's gaping budget deficit, which was now projected at $2.2 billion annually, Barack said, "I was at the Blagojevich event last night and spoke to a labor leader who specifically said, 'We are spending a lot of time telling our members not to expect too much on the money side.'" Fellow guest and former Republican governor Jim Edgar laid the blame for Republican losses on the commercial-driver's-license scandal that was still dogging outgoing governor George Ryan.

In contrast, Barack cited the case of the best known of Illinois's thirteen innocent death row inmates. Jim Ryan and unsuccessful Republican attorney general nominee Joe Birkett had continued to defend the faulty conviction of Rolando Cruz, even though DuPage County already had paid Cruz and two codefendants $3.5 million in damages. Weeks earlier, in a Chicago Tribune essay entitled "Memo to Voters: Remember the Cruz Case," Barack's friend Scott Turow had denounced "the pattern of prosecutorial misconduct that marked these prosecutions." On television, Barack argued that "the Rolando Cruz case was something that moved a lot of not only Democrats, but independents, to go to the polls in a lot of the swing districts and collar counties" surrounding Chicago. "I think it was a genuine concern. People, even those who support the death penalty, don't like the idea of unfairness," and "I think it did end up becoming an issue in a lot of areas where traditionally you would have seen more Republican votes."<sup>66</sup>

With the election over, Senate Democrats prepared to take charge. With Barack about to become chairman of the Public Health and Welfare Committee, he called lobbyist Jim Duffett, head of the Campaign for Better Health Care, to explain how his Bernardin Amendment aimed at requiring Illinois to move toward universal health care coverage could now be supplanted with actual legislation that Duffett would take the lead in drafting, the Health Care Justice Act. "I want to do hearings around the state" to stimulate public interest in the legislation, Barack told Duffett when they met to discuss a game plan. Barack likewise phoned criminal justice reformer Steven Drizin to inform him that incoming Senate president Emil Jones had tabbed Barack to take the lead on moving forward with legislation to require police interrogations in all potential capital cases be videotaped in full in order to be admissible in court. Drizin remembered that "What struck me was Barack's confidence that he would make sure a bill was passed," even before the session actually got under way.

Bills like those would spotlight a previously obscure, minority-party backbencher as much as any Springfield legislation could, and Barack moved to advance his Senate race prospects on other fronts too. Dan Shomon's friend John Charles, who had quarterbacked the initial 1999 poll that had encouraged Barack's congressional run, turned down a request to join Barack's Senate campaign staff, asking himself "Can he pull this off?" and doubting an affirmative answer. Acutely aware that fund-raising would determine whether Barack could mount a credible campaign including television ads, David Axelrod called Democratic fund-raising consultant Joe McLean, who remembered that "I was skeptical, to say the least, about this young guy with the funny Islamic-sounding name." But he flew to Chicago, "took an immediate liking to Shomon," and "when I met Barack, I knew instantly that he was the real deal. . . . Ax, Dan, and Barack all recognized that fund-raising was going to be key," and the candidate's own willingness and self-discipline to spend hour upon hour calling prospective donors was the most crucial ingredient of all.

"The only resource you have in a political campaign is the candidate's time," McLean believed, and "call time" would determine whether a candidate had the wherewithal "to put yourself in people's living rooms in that three-to-four-week window before the election." McLean hoped to put his own operations director, Susan Shadow, who had just worked an unsuccessful Texas gubernatorial race, on the ground in Illinois, but Barack "wasn't going to pay much" and "it was a crowded primary," so Susan, just like John Charles, decided to give the race a pass. But with Claire Serdiuk joining Katrina Emmons, Barack had two fund-raising staffers ready to go, and the candidate understood McLean's tough-love protocols. "Fund-raising is message delivery to political insiders, and the early game is all about building cred with the insiders," McLean explained. "We wanted to be able to approach the political insiders with a persuasive message" about Barack's potential, as Harstad's poll had demonstrated. "Develop a universe" of "known contributors," "assign a DOLLAR AMOUNT" based on their past giving, and "find phone numbers," McLean's instructions commanded. Most important of all was simply "Make the calls—DO THE WORK." The candidate's own "call room" desk was computer-free to avoid distraction because, McLean explained, "we want somewhere between 25 and 30 hours a week in the call room." Speaking directly to a target, and avoiding voice mail messages, was essential. Then "get to the point . . . the longer the call the less likely you'll get a commit. . . . Tell every prospect why you're running and how you are going to win. . . . Give them the courtesy of asking for a specific amount . . . you can never offend anyone by asking for too much—but you can offend if you ask for too little." Once someone agrees to give, "make it a contract—but gently. 'Thank you for your personal commitment.'" Then hand it off to a finance assistant: "immediate confirmation is the key. E-mail within 5 minutes," and follow up persistently should a check not arrive as promised.

Throughout the fall, Katrina Emmons shepherded Barack through a process he found deeply distasteful. The campaign's office space had three rooms, but almost immediately Barack moved Katrina's desk into his office so their desks faced each other. Barack needed an enforcer because "my incentives are not to make these calls," he admitted. Yet "If I don't make these calls, you don't get paid." But "then he would still try not to make the calls. He hated fund-raising," Katrina explained. Barack would do "just about anything to prevent himself from having to make these calls," and while "he tried to discipline himself to do it, he wasn't doing a very good job of it." Instead, Barack "would talk to me about the Iraq war," and week after week "we talked a lot about the war. . . . I remember arguing about the war, and I remember it being a focus of his attention." Barack also "wanted to gossip about other people" he knew, as if he felt that "I'm going to live vicariously through other people without having to do anything scandalous myself." No matter how many hours Barack spent there, he "wasn't terribly productive," Katrina recalled. "He needed to make certain targets, and he wasn't making them."

Old friends like Judy Byrd, Valerie Jarrett, John Rogers Jr., John Schmidt, Newton Minow, and Ab Mikva all gave the maximum $2,000 per person, as did Al Johnson, Robert Blackwell Jr., and Peter Bynoe, as well as their spouses. African American financiers Louis Holland and Quintin Primo also contributed the maximum, as did heiress Abby McCormick O'Neil and the University of Chicago Law School duo of Martha Nussbaum and Cass Sunstein. Before the end of the year, no less than $8,000 came in from Tony Rezko and his relatives and employees. Longtime supporters like Judd Miner and David Brint and their wives, plus Bettylu Saltzman and Penny Pritzker and their husbands, made significant donations too. Soon after Thanksgiving, election lawyer Michael Dorf closed down Obama for Congress 2000 and assigned the $10,500 debt it owed Barack and Michelle to Obama for Illinois (OFI), which was a "great relief" to Barack. By year's end, more donations from friends like Paul Strauss, Linzey Jones, Les Coney, Greg Dingens and his wife, and Michelle's friend Cindy Moelis and her husband Bob Rivkin pushed OFI's total 2002 income to $290,000. That was modest relative to Barack's goal of no less than $3 million to run a credible race, but with expenses to date totaling only $64,000, one silver lining was that OFI did have a robust cash balance of more than $225,000.<sup>67</sup>

Barack told one reporter he anticipated “a fierce, closely competitive race,” and just before Thanksgiving pollster Paul Harstad sent Barack and Dan a strongly worded memo about how to pitch Barack’s U.S. Senate candidacy. “I strongly urge you to gear your message toward voters’ self-interest because . . . this election will be more about voters and less about candidates,” Harstad wrote. Barack’s “basic theme” should be “Security for Middle Class Families, Putting PEOPLE First, ‘us-versus-them,’ putting families above the special interests,” Harstad suggested. “People vote their self-interest and typically define it in terms of security.” Given Barack’s status as a state senator, it would be important to “claim more credit for actually DOING something,” and “to the extent that there might be gaps in the Obama legislative record, I urge you to start to fill those gaps,” especially concerning retirement security and health care costs. “More than almost any other near-term issue,” that latter one, Harstad advised, “has the potential to seriously threaten Republicans’ electoral success.”

Appearing on Jeff Berkowitz’s cable television political talk show, Barack addressed at greater length than ever before his feelings about the looming military attack upon Iraq:

I don’t think that there’s anybody who imagines that Saddam Hussein is a good guy or somebody that isn’t a threat to stability in the region as well as his own people. But I also think that us rushing headlong into a war unilaterally was a mistake and may still be a mistake, and I think that we have to give those inspections a chance. Part of what’s going to be difficult to anticipate by the time of the March 2004 primary is whether in fact the United States has invaded Iraq, whether the overthrow of Saddam is complete. If it has happened, then at that point what the debate’s really going to be about is what’s our long-term commitment there. How much is it going to cost, what does it mean for us to rebuild Iraq, how do we stabilize and make sure that this country doesn’t splinter into factions between the Shias and the Kurds and the Sunnis. There’s going to be a whole host of critical issues and I think that that’s going to be something that whoever the Democratic nominee or those who are seeking the nomination is going to have to be able to grapple with.

Berkowitz pressed Barack on how he would have voted on the resolution authorizing President Bush to use military force had he been a U.S. senator:

If it had come to me in an up or down vote as it came, I think I would have agreed with our senior senator Dick Durbin and voted nay, and the reason is not that I don’t think we shouldn’t have aggressive inspections. What I would have been concerned about was a carte blanche to the administration for a doctrine of preemptive strikes that I’m not sure sets a good precedent.

Barack also told Berkowitz, “I think you do have to go to a universal health care plan.” When Berkowitz asked, “does that mean a single payer?” Barack replied that “we are probably going to have to move towards a single-payer plan of some sort, and I think a major debate is going to be how do you structure that but still retain some of the important components of competitiveness and market-based incentives that are in the existing system.”

Barack also had to cope with two later-than-usual veto session weeks in Springfield thanks to November’s election. Tongues began wagging when Republican U.S. representative Ray LaHood publicly called for Illinois Republicans to back someone other than incumbent Republican senator Peter Fitzgerald in 2004, and Capitol Fax's Rich Miller wrote that "Fitzgerald is realistically vulnerable" given how "he disappeared from Illinois immediately after winning his Senate seat." The veto session was almost entirely without note, although Barack and ten other liberal Democrats voted against a death penalty reform bill that Barack called "pretty thin gruel." Barack spoke at length before the Senate's 46–11 vote. "I am actually not somebody who is opposed to the death penalty in every single case," he explained, yet he cited his friend Scott Turow's conclusion that "you can't create an error-free system." With "thirteen exonerations from death row in just the past few years," everyone should "acknowledge that that's thirteen innocent people too many to be on death row." Looking ahead to Democratic control come 2003, "we're going to have to do greater reforms than are presented in this bill."

On Wednesday evening, December 4, lame-duck Senate president Pate Philip told his Republican colleagues he would leave office before the spring session began. Three contenders—Kirk Dillard, Steve Rauschenberger, and Frank Watson—announced their candidacies for minority leader in a twenty-four-hour contest that was decided late Thursday after Rauschenbusch threw his support behind the conservative Watson. Philip's departure, after a decade-long vise-grip hold on the Senate, signaled just how dramatic a change was about to transpire with Emil Jones Jr. ascending to the Senate presidency. Barack would get a significant office upgrade, moving from ground-floor suite 105 to the considerably more attractive, though windowless, M114, on the capitol's mezzanine level. Assisted by expert staffer Nia Odeoti-Hassan, Barack would be chairing the Health and Human Services Committee, as he chose to rename it, and superlegislator John Cullerton would succeed the departing Carl Hawkinson as chairman of Judiciary, on which Barack would continue to serve. Illinois's budget woes aside, a slam-bang spring session for Senate Democrats was only weeks away.<sup>68</sup>

Thanks to Raja Krishnamoorthi and other young attorneys like Andrew Gruber, the Obama Issues Committee steamed forward in advance of the spring session. Three subcommittees focused on state spending, state revenue, and Illinois's plethora of corporate tax breaks, all with an eye toward generating "innovative and creative policy positions" so that Barack can "introduce bills related to the ideas that you come up with," Raja and Cynthia Miller told everyone. With the Senate race looming, Barack in mid-December left the boards of both the Joyce Foundation and the Woods Fund. Barack did take time to guest-host Cliff Kelley's popular radio show on WVON, where he addressed the political firestorm created by Senate majority leader Trent Lott's praise for the segregationist record of Senate colleague Strom Thurmond. "The Republican Party itself has to drive out Trent Lott," Barack told listeners. "If they have to stand for something, they have to stand up and say this is not the person we want representing our party." Barack was hardly more charitable toward Illinois's Peter Fitzgerald, declaring on his new but far-from-fancy ObamaForIllinois.com Web page that the Republican incumbent "has represented only narrow concerns, big business and special interests. Meanwhile, corporate and CEO scandals have widened, our health care crisis has gotten worse, and many of us are fighting to get a good-paying job."

But the weightiest factor in the Senate race was still what Carol Moseley Braun would do. Thanks in large part to Valerie Jarrett, Barack had a crucial behind-the-scenes voice working on his behalf. Black financier John Rogers Jr. was one of Moseley Braun's closest friends, and given her painful 1998 loss to Fitzgerald, Rogers explained that "there was just a sense, I think, in the African American community, the business leadership community . . . that Carol should get on with a business life" rather than return to politics. “I was not eager for her to jump back into the game again,” and “I had taken Carol over to meet with Jamie Dimon,” CEO of Bank One, “to talk about, like, board seats and trying to help her network as she was getting back into Chicago life,” following her ambassadorial posting in New Zealand. “I remember vividly the conversations around could I help with Senator Braun, and try to talk with her,” Rogers recalled, and “I was doing what I had been asked to by Barack and Valerie to try to sort of feel her out and try and discourage her” from running for Senate.

As Christmas approached, reporters had no success in getting Moseley Braun to reveal her plans. Barack’s public comments tried to nudge her toward the sidelines. “Any time you run against somebody who beat you as an incumbent, you have some challenges,” Barack remarked. “Her calculation would have to be that people’s feelings about Fitzgerald have become so negative, it changes the dynamics from six years ago.” When the Associated Press reported that Moseley Braun “said Obama told her earlier this year that if she got in the race, he would get out,” Dan Shomon pushed back hard, saying, “We don’t know what Senator Moseley-Braun is going to do, but we’re in.” Privately, Barack’s own attitude was far different, as lawyer friend Matt Piers learned when he ran into Barack at U.S. representative Jan Schakowsky’s Evanston office. Barack explained that Schakowsky had just told him that she would not run for Senate, “but I’m not going to do it if Carol Braun does.” Piers was surprised. “You’d stay out for Carol Braun?” Yes, Barack replied. “Her name recognition is through the roof, and I don’t think I could beat her.”<sup>69</sup>

Before Barack, Michelle, and their daughters went to Hawaii to spend the holidays with Madelyn Dunham and meet Maya Soetoro’s new boyfriend Konrad Ng, Barack for the first time ever sent out Christmas cards to the statehouse press corps. One reporter teasingly gave Barack “the Pressroom Subtle Hint Award,” writing that while it was not the first time Springfield journalists had received holiday greetings from a Chicago state senator, “it was the first time during an election cycle in which Peter Fitzgerald is being challenged.” Barack had his Con Law III exams to grade, yet his incipient Senate candidacy had in no way harmed the quality of his teaching throughout the fall. His thirty-five Con Law students gave him a strong 6.0 rating on the law school’s now seven-point evaluation scale, and thirty-two of them responded “yes” when asked “Would you recommend this class to another student?” Beginning at 8:00 A.M. on Monday, January 6, Barack would again be teaching Voting Rights twice a week, despite the demands of a statewide campaign, but the Obamas’ family finances, now without Robert Blackwell Jr.’s EKI beneficence, left no other option.

Rumors spread that Chicago city treasurer Maria Pappas would join the Senate field, but on Monday, January 6, Dan Shomon convened the first weekly conference call of all the political consultants—David Axelrod, John Kupper, and the Strategy Group’s Pete Giangreco and Terry Walsh—who would be directing campaign strategy for Obama for Illinois. “Numbers analysis” was the first topic, highlighted by how in a Democratic primary, Cook County African American voters constituted 25 to 27 percent of statewide turnout. “Update on Moseley-Braun’s status” led them to conclude that the likelihood of her entering the race was 70 to 80 percent. Per John Rogers’s efforts, “Prospective employers?” was touched upon too. An “endorsement press conference with Jesse Jr.” could help undercut Moseley Braun’s entry, but the most important upcoming date would be January 30, when all campaigns had to publicly file their 2002 fund-raising reports with the Federal Election Commission. Press coverage of those figures would go a long way toward signaling who besides millionaire Blair Hull would be a top-rank contender. John Kupper jotted down how Barack's goal was "$500K by end of month" with "$400K in [the] bank."

That same morning, Rich Miller's Capitol Fax headlined one story "Obama Picks Up Steam." With both Jesse Jackson Jr. and his father backing Barack, some Obama "supporters believe that if he can lock up enough support early, then" Moseley Braun "might be convinced to stay out of the race—or forced out later this year if she has trouble raising money and finding support." Wary of skeptical readers, Miller emphasized, "Don't dismiss Obama. Yes, he has a strange, even Arabic-sounding name (it doesn't take a genius to realize that Obama sounds a lot like Osama) at a time when that attribute is far from ideal . . . but the Harvard Law School grad is raising money and attracting lots of young activists to his campaign."

Later that day, Jesse Jackson Jr. issued a public statement aimed at torpedoing a run by Carol Moseley Braun, saying "it is now time for her to step aside." Reporting Jackson's announcement, Roll Call quoted David Axelrod as warning that "she would go into that race with very serious baggage." Further assertions that "she would not be able to beat Fitzgerald" and that "this is a woman who literally needs a job" were not attributed to Axelrod by name, but the purpose of the one-two punch was obvious. That evening in Springfield, Barack's state campaign committee held a "Legislative Inauguration Celebration" at one of the capital's well-trafficked watering holes, Floyd's Thirst Parlor. Former U.S. senator Paul Simon was among those who came to greet Barack, but in the statehouse most attention focused on how Senate president Emil Jones Jr. had promulgated new rules requiring that all amendments to pending bills be referred to the leadership-dominated Rules Committee. "Rank-and-file legislators have given up some of their rapidly disappearing autonomy for the sake of partisan retribution," Capitol Fax's Rich Miller observed.

At the first possible opportunity, Barack introduced a trio of significant but unsurprising bills. One aimed to extend Illinois's earned-income tax credit, a second would require the videotaping of all police interrogations in potential capital cases, and a third would mandate that law enforcement officers record the race or ethnicity of all drivers whom they stopped. Barack also held a press conference to tout an upcoming bill backed by the Service Employees International Union (SEIU) that would require Illinois hospitals to disclose all manner of statistical information, including patient infection rates. "The public has a right to know information that could affect their very ability to survive a hospital stay," Barack declared, information that "should be available to all patients so that they can make responsible health-care choices." Barack also told reporters that it was imperative that incoming governor Rod Blagojevich demonstrate "that he's willing to make tough choices" regarding Illinois's spiraling state budget deficit. "People may grumble and complain, but I think they will respect him making those tough decisions."<sup>70</sup>

Forty-eight hours before leaving office, Governor George Ryan issued a blanket commutation of the death sentences of all 164 Illinois death row inmates. Ryan cited the legislature's 2002 failure to adopt the many reforms recommended by his study commission as one reason for his breathtaking move, and Barack endorsed Ryan's decision. "I think the governor is right that the legislature did a poor job of addressing his proposals," but with Democrats about to take control, "there's going to be a big incentive to carefully examine and hopefully pass some of the governor's reform proposals."

Prior to Rod Blagojevich's Monday, January 13, inauguration, the incoming chief executive "said over the weekend that if he had known how bad the deficit was he might not have run for governor," Capitol Fax reported. Miller added that "if he really didn't know, it was a willful ignorance," and statehouse insiders were already worried about the tenor and composition of Blagojevich's new administration.

“Anyone who worships secrecy like Team Blago does is headed for trouble,” Miller commented. “Paranoid people don’t usually govern all that well.”

In Chicago following the inauguration, Barack was introduced to two of the city’s wealthiest men thanks to longtime cheerleader Newt Minow. Lester Crown and his son James, one of seven siblings, presided over a family-held firm worth $4 billion, and its growth over the years since Lester’s father Henry had started a small sand and gravel business in 1919 was the most storied legacy in all of Jewish Chicago. Lester Crown, well known for his hawkish views regarding Israel, responded noncommittally upon meeting Barack, but James, who was only eight years Barack’s senior, was extremely impressed. “I pulled him down to my office, and I said, ‘Hey, look, I think you should run, and I want you to win,’” James recalled.

On Wednesday night, January 15, John Rogers’s phone rang. “I’m not running for the Senate,” Carol Moseley Braun told her old friend. “Great!” Rogers responded. “Then she said, ‘I’m running for president.’” Rogers was perplexed. “What are you talking about?” Just before calling Rogers, Moseley Braun had telephoned Democratic National Committee chairman Terry McAuliffe to tell him to include her in the lineup for an upcoming Democratic presidential candidates’ debate. Moseley Braun later explained that the stimulus for her utterly unexpected decision was a conversation with her ten-year-old niece, who had a social studies text in hand when remarking, “Auntie Carol, all the presidents are boys.” Moseley Braun reassuringly replied that “Girls can be president too,” but then doubted the truth of her statement. “I was shaken to my core,” Carol explained, and her brother asked, “‘What’s up?’ ‘I just told Claire a whopping lie,’” Carol responded, to which her brother asked, “What are you going to do about it?”

As Moseley Braun remembered it, she never had any intention of trying to return to the U.S. Senate because her one term there had been “the worst experience of my life,” and “it wasn’t something I wanted to do” over. Her presidential prospects were beyond long shot, but as soon as John Rogers got off the phone with her, he immediately called Valerie Jarrett with the good news. Valerie in turn phoned Barack, and within less than twenty-four hours, Barack’s now five-member campaign staff—with young African American former Senate staffer Randon Gardley having just joined Dan, Cynthia, Claire, and Katrina—began organizing an announcement event for five days later at the Hotel Allegro, in the downtown Loop. The Senate would not be in session on Tuesday, January 21, but Shomon was apologetic for the very short notice when he called Quad Cities senator Denny Jacobs. “I don’t care where it is, I don’t care when it is, I’m there,” Denny told Dan. Terry Link and Larry Walsh responded with similar enthusiasm as Barack’s campaign staff worked to draw as many well-known supporters as possible to the 11:00 A.M. event.

By the end of the afternoon on Thursday, January 16, the word was official, and Carol Moseley Braun told the Chicago Defender, “I am not running for the Senate.” Responding to reporters the next day, Barack said “we weren’t planning to drop out immediately” had Moseley Braun announced her candidacy. “We were going to see if we could possibly continue. But realistically, it would have been very tough to stay in against her.” Barack explained he had intended to delay any formal declaration of candidacy for another six weeks, but Moseley Braun’s heartening move prompted the earlier event. In the Chicago Tribune, columnist Eric Zorn praised Barack as the Democrats’ “most impressive officeholder” and “the class of the field.” In the Chicago Sun-Times, African American columnist Laura Washington wrote that Barack’s “laid-back charm can be alluring” while noting the congressional race claims that Barack was “not black enough” and warning that his “weakest appeal is to the working class.” The local Hyde Park Herald reported that Barack’s fund-raising had now topped $400,000 and cited how “his squeaky clean image and progressive politics . . . has made him a media darling.”<sup>71</sup>

On Tuesday morning, January 21, at the Hotel Allegro, a capacity crowd of several hundred people filled the modest room where Barack would announce his candidacy. Emil Jones Jr. and U.S. representatives Jesse Jackson Jr. and Danny Davis joined white state senators Denny Jacobs, Terry Link, and Larry Walsh on the dais. “I don’t have personal wealth or a famous name,” Barack told the crowd, “but I have a fire in my belly for fairness and justice.” Assailing the incumbent, Barack declared that “four years ago, Peter Fitzgerald bought himself a Senate seat, and he’s betrayed Illinois ever since.” Saying that he was running to help the state’s “working families,” Barack argued that “We have a fairness deficit in this country. We have a hope deficit in this country. We have an opportunity deficit in this country.” Using as a refrain the phrase “What would Dr. King say?” Barack proclaimed that “we need a politics of hope in this country,” not “a politics of division.”

A short press conference followed Barack’s formal announcement, and Dan Shomon had prepared some “talking points” for the officials supporting Barack. Reminding everyone that more than 25 percent of Democratic primary voters were African Americans, Dan stressed how “Obama did a poll in May 2002 that showed he can win.” Barack answered the first question by stating, “I would not have announced if I didn’t think I could win,” and he expressed hope that he could raise $4 million. “I’m certain we’ll have enough resources to get our message out.” Jesse Jackson Jr. told the reporters, “I don’t think anyone in the entire state has the intellectual capacity of Barack Obama,” and conservative white downstater Denny Jacobs called Barack “a gem. He can grasp all the issues, has a knack of being up-front and making friends. He can handle Washington.”

A seemingly relaxed Michelle Obama was among those at the Allegro event. Speaking with Mike Marrs, the former Senate staffer who was one of the core members of the Obama Issues Committee, Michelle commiserated about his wife’s nursing problems. As the gathering was breaking up, Michelle reminded Marrs about her advice for his wife. “Michael, don’t forget to tell Deanna to put lanolin on her nipples!” Mike was bemused that Michelle “had no qualms about shouting this down a hallway,” and he believed “she was fantastic—just a wonderful person.” Michelle had given her blessing for what she thought would be Barack’s final run for office, and in fourteen months, the burden of having a husband who was constantly away from home because of politics would finally end unless Barack somehow triumphed in the March 16, 2004, Democratic primary.

That night’s local news on WLS Channel 7, Chicago’s ABC affiliate, devoted all of thirty-five seconds to Barack’s announcement. The “Harvard-educated lawyer” hailed “from the South Side Hyde Park community” and had lost his 2000 challenge to Bobby Rush. The next morning’s Chicago Defender was hardly more auspicious, because it quoted a little-known nationalist as declaring that “Obama has no relationship with the Black community and is a product of the white lakefront community. He is a white liberal in blackface.” There again was the ghost of 2000, rooted in the events of seven years earlier when Alice Palmer had tried to go back on her word. That evening on WTTW’s Chicago Tonight, host Phil Ponce had a nine-minute colloquy with Barack, who praised Carol Moseley Braun as a “trailblazer.” He said he would have stayed out of the Senate race had she entered because “we share a base.” Asked why he was running, Barack replied that “we have a crisis at the national level building, both economically but also in terms of foreign policy.” Peter Fitzgerald “has not displayed the sort of leadership on key issues” that was needed, and “the thing that people are most concerned about is their economic security,” just as Paul Harstad’s memo to Barack had stressed. In closing, Ponce asked Barack if it was helpful to have a governor named Rod Blagojevich if your name was Barack Obama. “Rod’s a trailblazer and a hero of mine,” Barack gushed, noting how “America is by nature a hybrid culture.” Yet there was one ineradicable difference between a Blagojevich and an Obama. “Race, I think, is at the center of the American dilemma, and it always has been.”<sup>72</sup>

---

CALCULATION, COINCIDENCE, CORONATION

---

ILLINOIS AND BOSTON

JANUARY 2003–NOVEMBER 2004

A few hours after Barack's announcement, Blair Hull's campaign notified the Federal Election Commission (FEC) that their candidate's personal contributions had exceeded $1.3 million. Pursuant to the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002, popularly known as McCain-Feingold after its Senate sponsors, Arizona Republican John McCain and Wisconsin Democrat Russ Feingold, Hull's filing triggered the so-called millionaires' amendment. When a wealthy candidate like Hull put a huge amount of his own money into a race, the $2,000 limit on personal contributions to competing candidates increased to $6,000 to maintain parity. Once Hull reached $2.1 million in self-funding, a second trigger would allow his primary opponents to accept up to $12,000 from individual contributors. For Barack's campaign, as for Dan Hynes's and Gery Chico's, Hull's investment made available a new pool of wealthy contributors: everyone who already had given them $2,000 toward the primary was now eligible to give an additional $4,000. Fund-raising was uppermost in Barack's mind, because each campaign's final-quarter 2002 FEC reports were due by January 31.

Barack later wrote that he began his formal candidacy "with an energy and joy that I'd thought I had lost." That Sunday Barack accompanied Jesse Jackson Sr. on a visit to Pembroke, Illinois, an almost all-black township an hour south of Chicago where poor farmland had caused dire rural poverty. Monday his campaign team convened to sketch out their game plan for the months ahead. In time both a press spokesperson and an African American "base vote" organizer would be added to the skeletal staff, but four major tasks lay ahead. Number one was of course "raise money." Dan Shomon was hoping to announce having raised $300,000 in 2002 and a total of $400,000 by January 31 in order to demonstrate "that we are competitive," but more crucial would be hitting $1 million by the end of the next FEC reporting period on June 30. A second priority was to secure additional crucial endorsements, particularly Bobby Rush and white progressive U.S. representatives Jan Schakowsky from the North Shore and Lane Evans from Quad Cities. Equally important were major unions: the Service Employees International Union (SEIU), the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees (AFSCME), and the Illinois Federation of Teachers (IFT). With their backing, it might be possible to deny labor favorite Dan Hynes the official endorsement of the Illinois AFL-CIO.

Third was to take advantage of the Democrats' control of the state Senate to bulk up Barack's legislative résumé by passing and publicizing bills he was ready to champion: a renewal and expansion of Illinois's earned-income tax credit (EITC), a hospital "report card" accountability measure that was SEIU's top priority, the racial profiling and death penalty reforms that had been blocked in 2002 as well as health measures that would go through the committee Barack now chaired. Hardworking members of Barack's all-volunteer issues committee were busily pulling together other proposals to demonstrate that "Barack is fiscally responsible and is willing to stand up to powerful special interests." But Barack's political consultants knew they also needed to be prepared to play defense on the “missed gun vote (child was sick),” which had drawn so much public criticism three years earlier, and also the $5 million in low-visibility “member initiative” funds Barack had doled out. Those were “90 percent unimpeachable,” John Kupper noted, but the grants that had gone to “Jesse’s Citizen Education Project” and to “Yesse Yehudah” could be problematic if opponents focused on them.

Forty-eight hours later, Barack alerted Dan Shomon that his draft of their fund-raising announcement had to be amended. “Chief: The release itself looks very good. Only problem is that the numbers aren’t quite right. Our report will show $289,000, not over $300,000, because we can’t include some of the checks we got in. In addition, as hard as I’m pushing, the week of the announcement set us back in terms of fundraising, so that at best we’ll have close to $400,000 raised by this weekend—and that’s only in pledges; actual collected checks will be closer to $350,000. I think we can use the same release, but use ‘almost $400,000 raised’ and ‘close to $300,000’” in hand. “From here on out, it’s call time, all the time.” Later Barack recounted that “the first $250,000 I raised was like pulling teeth” because beyond Illinois “no major Democratic donors knew me, I had a funny name,” and “they wouldn’t take my phone calls.” Fund-raising consultant Joe McLean had stressed to Barack and finance director Claire Serdiuk that a U.S. Senate race entailed “a high volume, high dollar, candidate-driven call shop,” and that for the candidate, “it’s hard work that requires real discipline.” Claire “understood everything,” Joe recalled, and as the legislature’s spring 2003 session got under way, Claire joined Barack in his Jeep Cherokee for the three-hour drive to Springfield and back, holding the “call book” and dialing donors on Barack’s cell phone as he drove. Their “connect rate” and “commit rate” were fair to middling, but call discipline was much easier to impose on I-55 than it was in the office. By late January, Katrina Emmons had been offered a job at more than double the salary the campaign was paying her, which would allow her to save for law school. Barack “was really not pleased” when she told him she was leaving, “because he’s bent over backwards for me” in paying for the health coverage she lost when she left Miner Barnhart. Katrina sensed that Barack’s displeasure reflected a belief that she thought he could not win, but young former Senate staffer Randon Gardley stepped into Katrina’s shoes as Claire’s assistant. When Dan Shomon’s mother passed away at the end of January, Dan had to cope with family matters, and Barack’s skeletal campaign staff was stretched very thin.

Competitors’ FEC filings showed that Gery Chico, with more than $1 million raised, and Dan Hynes, with more than $900,000, were much closer to Blair Hull’s total than to Barack’s modest $290,000. But Obama for Illinois was spending little compared to the others, and in reporting everyone’s numbers, the Chicago Sun-Times said Barack “spends between four and five hours a day on the phone doing fund-raising.” Senate session days put an increasing crimp on that claim, but Barack proceeded with his plan of demonstrating serious legislative activity as he introduced a passel of new bills, including one to expand KidCare.<sup>1</sup>

In Chicago, John Kupper and David Axelrod prepared an eight-page “Obama for U.S. Senate Strategic Plan.” Their uppermost fear was that Barack would not be the sole credible African American candidate in the race, because it appeared that wealthy health care executive Joyce Washington, who had made an impressive but unsuccessful 2002 race for the Democratic nomination for lieutenant governor, intended to run. “Washington’s permanent entry in this race would be a significant factor, altering the strategy for achieving an Obama victory in a material way” by lessening the portion Barack could expect of the African American vote. “Anything that can conceivably be done to convince Washington there is no oxygen in the race for her must be undertaken,” because “losing a significant chunk of the Obama base may not be fatal but could be terribly harmful.” Senate president Emil Jones Jr., who had heartily supported Washington’s earlier candidacy, was “livid” that Washington would challenge Barack, and Kupper noted that “blocking off her key funding and political avenues is the greatest thing that can be done to get her to reconsider.”

“Obtaining an overwhelming percentage of a strong African-American turnout and a small but significant percentage of the white vote” from “progressive communities in the North Shore suburbs and Lakefront” would be essential for an Obama victory. “The campaign should not invest real resources downstate,” the Illinois term for all of the state, not just its southern half, beyond “Chicagoland”—Cook County and the five surrounding “collar counties” that made up Chicago’s suburbs. An Obama win would be “much more difficult if the downstate vote” was “gravitating disproportionately to one candidate,” as had happened in Blagojevich’s 2002 primary win. With Blair Hull and Dan Hynes each expected to follow the governor’s playbook, competition for those voters was a certainty.

“It is critical that over the next couple months, Obama uses his leadership position in Springfield to develop a signature health care issue or two,” Kupper recommended, so as “to establish early visibility on this central issue for primary voters,” as Paul Harstad’s earlier polling had shown. Kupper also sketched out three alternative budgets, with spending totals ranging from just under $4.3 million to more than $4.6 million. “The recommended $4.665 million budget attached to this plan is a little more aggressive and expensive than the $4 million figure the campaign currently believes it will raise,” Kupper acknowledged, but the higher figure allowed for “earlier and heavier Chicago television” advertising than the lower. The campaign will maintain “a fairly skeletal staff structure for a race of this size” as “every dollar must be preserved for persuasion activities” late in the race. “Obama’s solicitation program at this point must be the central thrust of the campaign. The call and meeting time must dictate the schedule—completely. Political and press needs . . . must be scheduled around the 20-to-25 hours a week the candidate must spend on the phone and in solicitation meetings. This must be enforced with maniacal discipline,” for January’s experience had shown that “there are too few calls being completed each week.”

Beyond fund-raising, identifying “a signature health care initiative or two” should be Barack’s top goal, so as to “build his reputation as the strongest voice in the race against the GOP’s agenda.” But the campaign also had to focus on its presumed base, because “any significant African American defections will potentially create an outsized reaction from the insider press. The ongoing effort to secure Congressman Rush’s endorsement must continue,” and efforts to deter Joyce Washington soon included a public attack by her little-known former campaign manager, Sean Howard. The Chicago Defender charitably headlined Howard’s denunciation “Activists Say No to Joyce Washington” and quoted him as saying that “there has to be an outside influence for her to make this type of run” when other black political leaders had already pledged their support to Barack.<sup>2</sup>

In Springfield, the first weeks of the new legislative session were dominated by reports of Emil Jones Jr.’s “growing frustration” with Rod Blagojevich. Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller wrote that “many insiders” believed that “Jones is flush with his new power and is far too anxious to wield it,” but Blagojevich’s almost complete absence from the statehouse also left most politicians perplexed. Committee action got under way on SB 15, Barack's bill requiring videotaping of all police interrogations in murder cases, with him acknowledging that "obviously this is a controversial bill" for law enforcement, and he promised "to make sure all the parties concerned have as much input as possible." Barack convened an initial meeting with Illinois Sheriffs' Association executive director Greg Sullivan and other police representatives to lay out his plans. Sullivan said Barack "was very diplomatic about it," but Barack told the fifteen or so attendees, "This is going to happen. Now you can either be part of the solution, or you can be part of the problem, and if you're part of the problem, you're not going to have a seat at the table, so let's sit down, figure this out, figure out what we've got to do, and get this done."

Barack also pushed forward with his "driving while black" racial profiling bill. New Judiciary Committee chairman John Cullerton's top priority was to win approval of his long-sought "primary stop" seat belt bill, but early in the session "Emil says, 'You can't pass that unless you take care of driving while black' . . . so I told Barack, 'I'll help you pass yours, and you help me pass mine.'" Barack agreed, joining Cullerton and John's longtime friend Chuck Hurley, a top official of the National Safety Council (NSC), to plot strategy over dinner along with veteran lobbyist Paul Williams, whose clients included NSC. In prior years Pate Philip had refused to bring a seat belt bill to the floor, telling Hurley, "You know, Chuck, this is a fag bill," but Hurley had won House passage after addressing black legislators' unwillingness to expand police officers' authority to pull over drivers. Hurley enlisted African American former California State Assembly Speaker Willie Brown, who had sponsored such legislation, to address Illinois's Black Caucus by speakerphone. Barack and Donne Trotter posed questions to Brown, with Trotter asking, "Knowing what you know, what would you have done differently?" Brown's response highlighted the deaths that resulted from beltless auto wrecks: "I would have done it sooner. I would have saved more kids."

Barack wondered out loud about linking his racial profiling bill to Cullerton's seat belt measure and whether that might hurt his candidacy outside Chicagoland. "'What about them bubbas downstate, you know? They ain't gonna like this,'" he told Williams. "'Barack, how many goddamn bubbas downstate . . . are voting for someone named Barack Obama in the first place? The second thing is, how many suburban mothers will vote for you for that seat belt?'" Williams replied. Barack embraced Williams's analysis, and at dinner the two of them plus Cullerton discussed how Chicago's fifty different Democratic ward organizations would line up among Dan Hynes, Gery Chico, Blair Hull, and Barack. Finally they turned to their legislative package. "Okay, Chuck, tell me about the belt bill," Barack said, and Hurley agreed to use his law enforcement contacts to help move Barack's racial profiling measure forward in tandem with the one authorizing officers to stop any driver not buckled up.

Every Monday Dan Shomon, Cynthia Miller, Claire Serdiuk, and the campaign's five external consultants—David Axelrod, John Kupper, Pete Giangreco, Terry Walsh, and Joe McLean—convened a conference call to agree upon upcoming events and releases. On February 10, they planned a press conference for the next day, at which Barack, as chair of the Senate's Health and Human Services Committee, would announce a series of statewide hearings to address Medicaid shortcomings. Thanks to Hull and the millionaires' amendment, Shomon said the campaign was "confident to hit $1 million by June 30." The next day's press event led to a prominent story in the Chicago Defender headlined "Obama: 'Medicaid Cuts Will Kill Hospitals,'" with Barack warning that "the federal government . . . is poised to run up record deficits, effectively borrowing from our children and grandchildren to pay for our own obligations that we don't have the courage to face." A subsequent e-mail from Shomon to pollster Paul Harstad and consultants Kupper and Walsh reiterated that Barack believed health care "is the centerpiece of the campaign."<sup>3</sup>

On February 13, the Chicago Sun-Times reported Joyce Washington's formal entry into the race, although the story also noted that Obama "has locked up the major black political leadership." That day's Chicago Tribune reported that Dan Hynes's campaign would be cochaired by Mayor Daley's brother John and influential downstate senator Vince Demuzio, but Barack's public presence remained robust with another press conference, this one devoted to his bill to renew and expand Illinois's earned-income tax credit. The Chicago Defender's Chinta Strausberg obliged with another prominent news story, but as the thirteen-month primary campaign officially got started with Hynes, Hull, Chico, and Obama all appearing at a Sunday-night candidates' forum in suburban DuPage County, Barack told one reporter that "it's going to start seeming like 'American Idol.'" Onstage, he targeted his remarks at Republicans, not his Democratic competitors. "We've been making some bad choices at the federal level, and we've also been making some bad choices internationally." Realizing that many questions for prospective U.S. senators would involve federal, not state, policy topics, Obama Issues Committee chairman Raja Krishnamoorthi told his colleagues "we need to get him up to speed on these issues and help formulate his policy positions" by assembling "a briefing book for Barack." The willingness of close to a dozen smart young lawyers like Krishnamoorthi and Andrew Gruber to invest scores of uncompensated hours on his behalf gave his campaign a highly skilled resource that Hynes, Chico, and Hull could not equal, and Barack asked his team to "look for specific initiatives/innovative ideas" he could propose. "People are going to want to know what separates me from the pack, not simply that I toe the progressive line on every issue."

Friends who had known Barack over the previous decade saw some significant changes as he ascended a more public stage. "It was clear to me early on that this was an all-things-otherwise-equal, I'll-do-the-right-thing kind of progressive, not a guy who had either strongly held beliefs or a vision of what he wanted to do with his political career, but rather someone who wanted a political career" and who now had "the politician's annoying ability of telling everybody what they wanted to hear," one progressive attorney who shared dozens of dinners with Barack later reflected. By early 2003 Barack "was already pretty clearly a rising star," but one evening when the conversation turned to newly inaugurated Brazilian president Luiz Inácio Lula da Silva, Barack's ability to turn on a dime was demonstrated all too starkly. Barack said it was "really troubling what's happening down there with all of these anti-American politicians being elected." A woman who knew much more about Latin America than he did objected. "Barack, given what the United States has done to those countries, they're probably all much better off with the kind of leaders that they have ended up with than the kind of leaders they used to have or that our government would want them to have!" Then, "without missing a beat," Barack "switched directions seamlessly" and "was agreeing with her." "Un-fucking-believable," the woman whispered to her equally astonished husband.<sup>4</sup>

As the spring legislative session moved into high gear in the third week of February, Barack introduced twenty-two bills on February 19, followed by an additional fifty-five the following day. Several dozen of them were entirely technical measures that fell under his purview as Health Committee chairman, but the breadth of Barack's legislative agenda was impressive and almost overwhelming. Some, like SB 1417, mandating insurance coverage of examinations for colorectal cancer, were brought to Barack by interest groups like the American Cancer Society, but they carried a personal appeal too, in that case reminiscent of his mother's early death from tardily diagnosed cancer. SB 1418, the Ephedra Prohibition Act, was championed by the parents of a young man who had died tragically after ingesting an unregulated dietary supplement. SB 1430, the Health Care Justice Act, would establish a Bipartisan Health Care Reform Commission, and SB 1586 would amend the Open Meetings Act to require all local government bodies to preserve verbatim recordings of any meetings closed to the public. SB 1763, the Victims' Economic Security and Safety Act (VESSA) would require employers to provide leave to employees who had suffered domestic violence, and SB 1765, drafted by Obama Issues Committee volunteer Andrew Gruber, would create a Tax Expenditures Commission to plug corporate tax loopholes.

Behind the scenes, influential Cook County state's attorney Dick Devine signaled his support for Barack's bill mandating videotaping of police interrogations, and Chicago Tribune columnist Eric Zorn praised the measure as "smart, cost effective and just public policy." Barack quickly introduced a memorial resolution after twenty-one people died in a nightclub stampede in his district when a security guard used pepper spray in tight quarters. The E2 club had hosted fund-raisers for Carol Moseley Braun and Emil Jones Jr. as well as Barack, which even the New York Times highlighted. Chicago Tribune columnist Mary Schmich noted that E2 was completely unknown to white Chicagoans, even though it was well known in the black community, and Barack called a press conference to announce a "commonsense" Nightclub Safety Act outlawing the use of mace, pepper spray, and pyrotechnics like those that had just left one hundred patrons dead in a Rhode Island club fire. "There's something about a criminal law that gets people's attention in a way that a city's building ordinance does not," he told reporters.<sup>5</sup>

With the Senate race now under way for real, Illinois as well as national news outlets began giving it greater attention. U.S. representative Jesse Jackson Jr. told Capitol Hill's Roll Call that "I just don't see how Barack Obama loses in a Democratic primary" where African Americans constitute 25 percent of voters. David Axelrod emphasized how Barack is "the progressive candidate in the race," and in the campaign's weekly conference call, Axelrod's partner John Kupper stressed how Barack should emphasize his antiwar stance in challenging his competitors. Bobby Rush told Roll Call that "there's just as much potential for the voting black community to support any of the candidates, as it is for them to support one or two of the African-Americans," indicating that his endorsement was up for grabs.

In Illinois, the Bloomington Pantagraph commissioned the first poll on the race, with a small sample of 462 voters showing only 27 percent thinking U.S. senator Peter Fitzgerald merited reelection. In a head-to-head matchup against Comptroller Dan Hynes, the Democrat came out on top 34–31, with 35 percent undecided. Privately, Blair Hull's campaign had just conducted their first and much more extensive poll. Among African American Democrats, Barack drew 24 percent, with Cook County treasurer Maria Pappas, whose entry into the race was uncertain, a close second with 18 percent. Both Dan Hynes and Joyce Washington had 12 percent. Among college-educated white Cook County voters, Pappas led Hynes 26 to 24 percent, with Barack at 13 percent. Among all other white voters, downstate as well as in Cook, Hynes topped Pappas 29 to 21, with Barack backed by just 2 percent. Overall, the Hull poll showed Hynes with 29 percent, Pappas 21, Barack 9, and Hull himself barely registering. None of those numbers would have surprised Paul Harstad, Axelrod, or Kupper: Pappas was well known in Chicagoland, only Hynes was known by most downstate Democrats, and Barack's potential among both blacks and white progressives was sizable.<sup>6</sup>

Although Barack's name was not mentioned, on February 24 Crain's Chicago Business reporter Greg Hinz published the first story highlighting how Barack's longtime friend Tony Rezko had parlayed his success in raising more than $500,000 for Rod Blagojevich's successful campaign into a highly influential, behind-the-scenes role in the new chief executive's already troubled administration. Capitol Fax's Rich Miller had repeatedly noted that Democratic legislators were angry "with the complete absence of communication with the governor's office," but Hinz highlighted how Rezko was taking a lead role in choosing members of Blagojevich's cabinet and already had placed two of his former employees as the directors of the Department of Commerce and Economic Opportunity and the Illinois Housing Development Authority. Several days later, Blagojevich's top aide, Deputy Governor Doug Schofield, whom Capitol Fax called "one of the few good guys over there," quit after less than two months, with an unknown twenty-nine-year-old from New York named as his successor. Unmentioned in Hinz's story was how the leading candidate to become director of the state Department of Public Health, thirty-seven-year-old Dr. Eric Whitaker, had been recommended to Rezko for that job by Whitaker's basketball buddy Barack.

Several weeks later, when Whitaker's appointment was announced, the Associated Press stated that the young internist at Cook County's Stroger Hospital had been "plucked from obscurity." Whitaker recounted that when Blagojevich's staff had called him, "I said, 'Interview for what?'" but Barack told the AP that Eric was "an excellent selection." By then, Capitol Fax's Rich Miller was calling attention to Blagojevich's "tight-knit inner circle of influence-peddling lobbyists and political players" and ruing that the new governor "has alienated so many people in Springfield so quickly," in part thanks to "the growing perception that he doesn't understand his job."

Barack was almost constantly on the road, speaking to local Democrats in downstate counties like McLean and Champaign while juggling his Monday morning-Friday afternoon teaching schedule. Fortunately for him, the law school's winter term classes ended on March 7, and student evaluations showed that the rigors of his campaign had not harmed his classroom performance, with twenty-eight out of twenty-nine students saying they would recommend his Voting Rights class to others. Several remembered how one class session devolved into a long discussion of "the then-imminent invasion of Iraq," with Barack going "out of his way to insure that all different viewpoints were welcome to be heard." Barack knew that one student, 3L Josh Pemstein, had a young daughter who faced serious medical challenges, and in a "very sensitive and empathetic way" Barack regularly asked "how things were going," once mentioning that one of his daughters had been hospitalized. Down in Champaign, Barack focused his remarks on Iraq, just as his strategists had advised, and the headline on the resulting Associated Press story was just what John Kupper wanted: "Obama Challenges Opponents to Speak Out on War."

Kupper and the Obama Issues Committee's volunteers continued to flesh out the campaign's strategies and positions. As the Champaign event exemplified, Kupper wanted at least "one message hit a week" while appreciating that Barack needed a "minimum of fifteen hours a week fund-raising phone time," a figure that soon needed to ramp up to twenty-five. As Paul Harstad had recommended, they needed a regular mechanism by which to communicate to several thousand "top Democratic opinion leaders," and in April they would launch an "Obama Weekly News" e-mail program. Looking twelve months ahead, Kupper envisioned six weeks of black radio station and four weeks of Chicago television advertising leading up to March 16, 2004. The young issues committee lawyers were churning out impressive seven-to-eight-page papers on topics such as “Homeland Security” and “Bush’s Tax Plan” for Barack to study. The latter lambasted how the president’s “huge tax cuts, primarily to wealthy individuals . . . will balloon the federal deficit and debt without significantly stimulating the economy.”<sup>7</sup>

In Springfield, the Senate Judiciary Committee unanimously approved Barack’s videotaping-of-murder-interrogations measure and his racial profiling bill. A Chicago Tribune editorial commended Barack for his “serious efforts” to accommodate law enforcement’s concerns about the taping protocol, and Barack stressed to reporters that “this is not a bill that is focused on the death penalty. Rather, it is focused on how do we get the right people arrested and convicted.” Virtually every newspaper in the state ran stories on one or both bills’ progress, with a Chicago Defender headline stating “Obama’s Anti-Racial Bill Passes Panel.” Barack told reporter Chinta Strausberg, “I feel optimistic we’ll be able to pass both provisions out of the Senate,” and said the profiling measure will “cut down on the potential for discriminatory behavior on the part of law enforcement officers.”

A more explicit boost to Barack’s Senate candidacy came from his longtime fan Steve Neal at the Chicago Sun-Times. In a column headlined “Obama Worthy Heir to Washington Legacy,” Neal wrote that Barack was “coming on strong.” If he could unite African American voters behind his candidacy, Barack could win the multicandidate primary “with less than a third of the vote. That’s why so many Democratic politicians are giving him a solid chance to upset Hynes.” As “the most intelligent and articulate contender in a surprisingly strong Democratic field,” Barack was “likely to gain the most from televised debates” once the contest reached its final months. Barack “is a coalition builder” with “a record of accomplishment,” and “may impress undecided voters as a cut above his competition,” Neal predicted. Barack “has the potential to get more than 30 percent of the primary vote,” and that might be the tallest hurdle facing him, for among Republicans “there is growing doubt that Fitzgerald can win against any Democrat.” Potential donors on Barack’s call list could not help be impressed by press clips like that, and in a highly revealing comment to the black newsweekly N’Digo, Barack explained his candidacy by declaring, “I see this as a mission, not just as a way of elevating myself individually.”

Behind the scenes, Obama for Illinois (OFI) faced two difficult and painful personnel issues. For six years now, no two people had been more dedicated to Barack’s political advancement than Cynthia Miller and Dan Shomon. Cynthia had manned his district office before playing a top role in both Barack’s 1999–2000 congressional race and now in the first six months of his Senate run. Like her close friend Jen Mason, who had staffed Barack’s district office for the last four and half years, Cynthia’s religious affiliation was well known to all who worked with her, particularly each fall when she fasted during Ramadan, the Muslim month of prayer and reflection. One colleague remembered that “You walk into his district office, and there are women in there with head wraps on. Nice-looking young ladies with head wraps on. You don’t have to question how black he is—just look at his office.”

Cynthia and Jen were “both members of the Nation of Islam,” and up until the winter of 2002–2003, no one had made an issue of anyone’s private religious faith. But then “something happened,” one witness recalled. “I think there were some pictures that were a catalyst,” and “maybe she had also recently been appointed to a leadership position or something.” The bottom line was that “Obama felt that Cynthia’s affiliation was something that was going to impact her as well as him” if she remained on staff as the Senate race intensified. “She’s starting to have these very difficult conversations with Barack that are really painful for her,” and “I had the impression that it was as difficult for him as it was for her.” But Cynthia “was more wounded by it,” because “she didn’t think that it was going to impact her.” Yet Barack understandably felt that having a top staffer—indeed, his campaign treasurer—who was a member of Louis Farrakhan’s Nation of Islam was politically untenable, and in March 2003 Cynthia shifted to a job in state government. She remained actively involved at arm’s length, and several months passed before accountant Harvey Wineberg supplanted her as OFI treasurer. “It was really painful to watch that happen,” one fellow staffer explained. “When Cynthia left, I remember feeling that an injustice had occurred,” as apparently Barack did too, “maybe because he feels he did something wrong.”

Almost simultaneously, super-energetic Dan Shomon was struggling in the weeks following his mother’s late January death. It had always been envisioned that as the Senate race ramped up, additional staff would be hired to reduce the burden on Dan, but the combination of Shomon’s absences in the wake of his mother’s death as well as his own emotional burnout led him to tell Barack they should hire a full-time campaign manager, which would let Dan shift into a less frenetic role as political director. “Dan was fine with it,” finance director Claire Serdiuk recalled, and David Axelrod and John Kupper concurred as well. Axelrod “wanted somebody that didn’t have as close a relationship to Barack as Shomon,” one colleague explained, and by mid-March, everyone was strategizing how to expand Obama for Illinois beyond simply Serdiuk and her deputy Randon Gardley.<sup>8</sup>

In Springfield, Barack’s bills mandating hospital “report cards” and the taping of closed government meetings moved forward as he pressed interest group leaders like Illinois Hospital Association executive director Howard Peters and SEIU lobbyist Bill Perkins to come to accord on the union-drafted measure that was SEIU’s top legislative priority. Barack continued to win prominent coverage in the Defender, with another Chinta Strausberg story featuring his outspoken criticism of President Bush, whose “vision of America’s role in the world is fundamentally flawed. Our long-term safety and security is best accomplished by working with our allies, not trying to bully them.” Back in Chicago, Claire Serdiuk coordinated Barack’s meetings with prominent potential big donors like heiress Penny Pritzker, bank executive Jamie Dimon, Playboy publisher Christie Hefner, and arts patron Lewis Manilow.

Democrats’ control of the Senate meant that controversial bills involving “infanticide” abortions and expanded gun rights could be defeated in committee, but energetic members of the National Rifle Association’s Illinois affiliate still flooded Senate offices with hundreds of phone calls, annoying and at times frightening senators’ aides like Barack’s Beverly Helm. Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller reported that some calls included “personal threats” and “racial epithets,” and as soon as Barack learned what was happening he asked Beverly for NRA lobbyist Todd Vandermyde’s cell phone number. Beverly remembered that within a half hour the calls ceased, demonstrating Todd’s ability to silence the fringe. While Vandermyde knew that Barack would never be with him on any NRA-backed piece of legislation, he recalled that in one office conversation, Barack did volunteer that “I think the Second Amendment means something” when Todd asked him about it.

Beverly Helm had been Barack’s Springfield assistant for three years, and with Barack now chairing the Health and Human Services Committee, she and expert staffer Nia Odeoti-Hassan took a lead role in shepherding committee business. Barack moved committee meetings from Tuesdays at 8:00 A.M. to the less burdensome Wednesdays at 9:00 A.M., but Republican staffer Debbie Lounsberry thought that he was “surprised with what it takes to be the chairman of that committee.” Given the number of interest groups following the committee's agenda, there was "more pressure" than Barack had expected. Planned Parenthood lobbyist Pam Sutherland wished Barack had exercised a firmer hand because "you'd have the committee hearings on all these bad bills, and they'd go on forever. 'Barack, why are you letting this go on? This is horrible,'" Sutherland would ask. "Pam, I can't do that. They have a right to talk to the committee." Barack "really believed that people could compromise," but on issues like abortion, where that never came to pass, Barack's tolerance "would drive me nuts."

By 2003, Springfield lobbyists knew they would have their hands full whenever they approached Barack about a bill. "You knew you were going to get twenty questions, on any issue," Illinois Federation of Teachers lobbyist Steve Preckwinkle explained. "You always had to be prepared," because "it was almost like giving him a briefing." Utility lobbyist Frank Clark knew "you needed to give him data," and that Barack was "very deliberate," "never" gave an immediate yes-or-no answer, and preferred "policy discussions where he never committed himself." When Mike Lieteau's daughter and former law student Tristé Lieteau visited Barack at Miner Barnhill to tell him she had a job offer from Northwestern University's Memorial Hospital, "we had a long talk about me becoming a lobbyist." Barack wondered "why ever would I want to do that" because he considered it "somewhat of a waste of my talent." When Triste and a colleague called on Barack in Springfield to discuss a hospital provider tax, he "asked several questions that we kind of didn't have the answer for," and Barack's face showed disappointment. "Are you serious? Is this the best you have?" his expression asked. "He was all business," and "I was just so embarrassed."

The new Republican spokesman for the Health Committee, Dale Righter, thought Barack was "genial" and believed "he managed people well" as chairman. Righter quickly realized that Barack was "more interested in reaching a consensus than . . . driving home a particular policy point," and new Democratic vice chair Mattie Hunter saw that Emil Jones was making whatever bills could advance Barack's Senate candidacy a top priority. Hunter thought Barack's style as chairman was "direct," "no nonsense," and at times "domineering." New Evanston Democrat Jeff Schoenberg felt Barack "took a far more Socratic approach" during hearings than most chairs, but just like Righter, he realized that Barack's focus was on bringing "the competing parties to the table" in order to "identify where the commonalities were." New Chicago Latina senator Iris Martinez thought Barack was a "very nurturing, almost teaching kind of person" with a rookie legislator, and, like Mattie Hunter, Martinez agreed to back Barack for U.S. Senate after Barack and Emil Jones asked her to do so. "I didn't realize" that that would infuriate Richard Daley. "The mayor got really mad at me. 'Why are you supporting Barack? Why not somebody else? Why Obama?'" Daley wanted Martinez to support Dan Hynes, just as he had asked 25th Ward alderman Danny Solis, Barack's former organizing colleague, who willingly agreed. Hynes recruited Jeff Schoenberg before Barack or Jones made an approach, and Barack "was pissed," and "it led to some words" when he found out. In addition, Bettylu Saltzman "chewed me out for not being with Barack," Schoenberg recalled.

Emil Jones's support for Barack was visible to all. Inside the statehouse, the phrase "bill-jacking" was used when a leader like Jones mandated that one legislator's bill would now be carried by someone else. "A lot of people were frustrated with the fact that Barack was getting all of this face time, and nobody else," Donne Trotter remembered. "All of a sudden you're the lead, you're getting the press. . . . Why does the light always have to be on you?" Jones was clear with both Trotter and Rickey Hendon that on measures like racial profiling and death penalty reform, Barack would be Senate Democrats' top voice. “Emil was very, very influential in getting other people to go along with him,” Democratic freshman Ed Maloney realized, and veteran Denny Jacobs agreed that Emil “helped Barack tremendously.” Barack “became the ‘box guy.’ He had so many bills he had to carry them in a box on the floor,” Trotter recalled with exasperation. But by 2003 “you can see the drive in his face” and “an intensity in his eyes” that had not been apparent years earlier. Trotter believed Barack had become “a more committed legislator” and “a more outspoken one,” but some fellow senators felt they heard from him more than enough. “Tell that nigger to shut up,” one new Hispanic colleague recalled hearing a black senator stage-whisper when Barack spoke on the floor. “He became the fair-haired boy,” one friend explained, or what poker buddy Dave Luechtefeld termed “the favored child,” and the resulting “resentment” was apparent even to Republicans.

Beverly Helm knew Barack’s Springfield routine: in the mornings he might run late, and in midafternoons, once the Senate adjourned, he often snuck away from the capitol if the weather was good. “I’d call him on his cell phone, and I could hear the wind whistling. I said, ‘You’re on the golf course, aren’t you?’ He’d say, ‘Yes, but don’t tell anyone where I am.’” In the evenings “he always talked to his girls every night before they went to bed,” and Wednesday’s poker games were his only late-night outings. “We never had to worry about whether there was going to be any rumors about him,” Beverly remembered. “Barack was a private person,” she realized. “He could be very outgoing, but he had a reserved portion about him.” In his Springfield office hung a photo of some Hawaiian sea cliffs, and when Beverly asked about it, Barack explained, “that’s where we spread my mother’s ashes.”

Once when Lisa Madigan’s secretary told Barack that a Chicago gun enthusiast had bullied Bev after she declined to summon Barack from the Senate floor, Barack firmly reprimanded the fellow when he next appeared. “You will never talk to any woman like that. . . . You will not bully her again. You need to apologize to her,” Beverly recounted Barack saying. “Barack was very quiet, he was very composed. I did not see him raise his voice or anything; he just told the gentleman exactly what he wanted to tell him.”

Early that spring Barack asked Beverly, whose unsuccessful school board race he had contributed to, if she could help him “meet some of the leaders here in Springfield in the black community.” With her pastor’s permission Beverly hosted a “meet and greet” one evening in the fellowship hall and introduced Barack. Bev knew that business lobbyists Phil Lackman and Dave Manning were as close to Barack as anyone in the statehouse, and he still attended the Wednesday-night poker gatherings. When Terry Link moved to a double-wide trailer five miles out, the game moved too, although everyone was nervous about driving back into town post-midnight after having had several beers. When a Sangamon County deputy sheriff pulled Barack over one late night, the need for a new venue was agreed upon, and Illinois Manufacturers’ Association lobbyist Dave Manning volunteered his downtown office. “The IMA is basically a Republican organization,” Mike Lieteau explained, and that, plus the convenient location, drew additional participants. Conservative Republican Bill Brady, who had entered the Senate a year earlier, found Barack a “nice guy” even with their huge political differences. “I always used to kid him that the only fiscally conservative bone in his body I ever saw was at the poker table with his own money,” Brady remembered. “I said to him, ‘If you were half as conservative with the taxpayers’ dollars as you are with your own, the people of Illinois would be a lot better off!’” By 2003, Barack seemed to be losing less often than he had in earlier years, and Beverly Helm recalled Dave Manning and Terry Link grouching that her boss was winning far too many hands.<sup>9</sup>

On the campaign trail, Barack spoke to a group of young Democratic activists and then addressed a Sunday antiwar rally in the Loop as a U.S. attack on Saddam Hussein's Iraq loomed. "It's not too late," Barack told the crowd of five thousand, but when military action began four days later, Barack's criticism immediately ceased. "Once the president makes the decision to go in, our priority has to be with the safety and success of our troops," Barack told the Associated Press. "Our prayers are with the families, and we have to hope for the best possible outcome in the shortest possible time."

In the state Senate, March 20 was rookie day for Republican Dale Righter and Democrat James Meeks, an African American pastor. Righter's first bill extended the statute of limitations from one year to two for public hospital patients. Barack teasingly complained that "as a fellow lawyer, surely you know that anytime we extend the deadline for lawyers, that doesn't give 'em more time to consider the case, it gives 'em more time to file lawsuits, frivolous lawsuits that are raising health care costs across the board." Meeks's bill prohibited the sale of tobacco from lunch carts near schools, and Barack asked, "I'm curious. Where did you get this bill? Did this come to you in a dream at night, or via some sort of divine intervention?" The American Lung Association and the American Public Health Association, Meeks replied. "I thought you had the direct line on this kind of legislation, that you didn't have to refer to the American Lung Association, that you had higher sources in order to find out what kind of bills needed to be passed." Meeks answered that "I chose not to use the direct line on this one," and Barack responded, "I just wanted to establish that he does have a direct line. So if any of you need, at some point, advice or counsel, that you know where to go."

Later that day, the Senate unanimously approved Barack's two bills banning the dietary supplement ephedra and prohibiting pyrotechnics and pepper spray in nightclubs. Kevin Riggins, whose sixteen-year-old son Sean had died after ingesting ephedra, "deserves enormous commendation," Barack said as Riggins joined him on the Senate floor. "It's the classic example of an ordinary citizen doing extraordinary things, and I really think he deserves all the credit for this legislation." Barack also spoke in favor of a bipartisan resolution expressing support for U.S. military personnel. "The minute that the president makes a decision" to strike, "we all have to unify immediately" and "close ranks."

The next weekend Barack spoke to downstate Democrats in Canton and Macomb at events hosted by progressive U.S. representative Lane Evans, and "they hit it off," Evans's political director Jeremiah Posedel realized. Barack also continued to win good press both downstate and in Chicago, with the Defender highlighting his SEIU-backed bill targeting discriminatory hospital pricing. "The health care crisis is enormous and government isn't going to solve this crisis today or tomorrow," Barack acknowledged, but discriminatory pricing is "a fundamental injustice" that "we can solve immediately." At the Macomb event, Mayor Tom Carper praised Barack as "one of the classy people in Springfield," and a Bloomington Pantagraph story on Democratic Senate contenders featured Denny Jacobs praising Barack. "He has the right demeanor, he's intelligent, articulate, and presents his arguments well . . . he's been a tremendous state senator, but he'd be an even better U.S. Senator."<sup>10</sup>

Barack took a beautiful Sunday off and went to a nearby playground with his daughters before returning to a busy legislative calendar in Springfield. Barack's SB 1415, to provide public funding for Illinois Supreme Court campaigns, would remedy "the unseemly process where judges have to raise . . . money typically from lawyers," with "at least the appearance, if not the actuality, that this may be impacting the judges' impartiality as they're deciding cases." Worried by "the appearance that the Court can be bought,” Barack warned of how “a well-heeled trial lawyer” could “write a $100,000 check,” thinking “I’ve got myself a judge.” The Senate passed the bill 39–17, but Speaker Madigan never called it for a vote in the House.

Barack made a brief appearance on CNN’s Newsnight to talk about the war in Iraq, and he pointedly told the Chicago Tribune, “I think there is a bedrock suspicion of George Bush among African-American voters,” who “are much more likely to feel that he is engaging in disruptive policies at home and using the war as a means of shielding himself from criticism on his domestic agenda” than white voters. Behind the scenes, negotiations on Barack’s “driving while black” racial profiling bill continued because “creating a piece of legislation that actually works in the real world requires that you talk to the people who are operating in the real world,” Barack explained. He made a one-night trip to Washington to attend the American Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC) annual dinner, chatting with Harvard basketball buddy Nathan Diament and a reporter for the Jewish Daily Forward. Dan Hynes and Peter Fitzgerald attended too, and although AIPAC viewed Fitzgerald as “highly vulnerable,” with regard to Barack, Diament realized that “nobody knew who this guy was.”

Steve Neal devoted a Chicago Sun-Times column to an unnamed campaign’s poll showing Cook County treasurer Maria Pappas, a likely but not yet declared candidate, trailing Dan Hynes just 24 to 21 percent, with Barack at 9. This showed “Pappas is a contender,” but Neal also wrote that “a third candidate could well emerge as the nominee” and reported that after respondents heard brief descriptions of all the contenders, Hynes led Barack by just 20 to 18, with Pappas now third at 14.<sup>11</sup>

The Senate on April 3 unanimously approved Barack’s racial profiling bill and his one requiring the taping of police interrogations in murder cases. On both measures, Barack’s many hours of private negotiations with law enforcement representatives had paid off so handsomely that no opposition remained to either of the once-controversial bills. New downstate senator Bill Haine, a veteran Madison County state’s attorney who had become the Judiciary Committee’s most conservative Democrat, was very involved in the videotaping discussions and felt Barack “did an extremely effective job in negotiating the bill with all parties.” Judiciary Committee chairman John Cullerton agreed, saying Barack “did a phenomenal job on it.” Democratic staff attorney Jim Dodge realized that Barack had focused on “trying to find a middle way through,” and Office of the State Appellate Defender representative Kathy Saltmarsh concurred, explaining that Barack’s “a negotiator and a compromiser.” Even Republican death penalty proponent and former state’s attorney Ed Petka termed the videotape bill “tremendous work,” admitting that “a year ago, if someone had said I would be supporting this, I would have told them they were bereft of their senses.” Barack’s hard work paid off politically too: while John Cullerton remained neutral between Barack and Dan Hynes, Bill Haine was so impressed that he readily agreed to support Barack’s Senate candidacy despite his conservative downstate district.

Linking the racial profiling bill to Cullerton’s seat belt measure, which also was approved that same day, had been smart because the Illinois State Police’s strong desire for a provision that would reduce highway traffic deaths led law enforcement groups to agree to Barack’s requirement that officers record the apparent ethnic identity of every driver they stopped. During one decisive meeting, Barack articulated that the crux of the issue was officers’ perceptions, not census categories. “It doesn’t make any difference what race they are. What we’re looking for here is what race you think they are. So that’s why we want you to put down the race. So you don’t have to worry about getting it wrong—it’s what’s in your mind is what racial profiling is all about.” John Cullerton and Jim Dodge remembered the moment. “Whoa, you’re right,” someone responded. “It just really stopped the whole conversation, and everything sort of turned at that moment,” with law enforcement opposition evaporating.

Barack told the Chicago Defender’s Chinta Strausberg that approval of both bills on the same day was “historic,” and he stressed the value of videotaping to Chicago’s suburban Daily Herald. “What we’re trying to do here is provide as much certainty as possible that when a confession is introduced that in fact it is airtight.” Later that afternoon, National Safety Council lobbyist Chuck Hurley, who had mustered crucial support for the seat belt and the profiling bills, was walking away from the capitol when he heard someone call out “Chuck!” He turned to see a black Jeep Cherokee stalled in the middle of South 2nd Street: Barack had run out of gas. Hurley and a friend helped Barack push it to the curb. “I hope your campaign doesn’t run out of gas,” Chuck teasingly remarked, but the day’s successes lingered long after that minor embarrassment. Soon a Chicago Tribune editorial heralded the bills’ passage, emphasizing that “an enormous amount of credit for the Senate videotaping bill goes to the diligence of state Sen. Barack Obama.”<sup>12</sup>

In Chicago, Barack drove to his campaign’s first event for gay and lesbian supporters, arriving a bit late and parking illegally. Kevin Thompson, Michelle’s onetime City Hall colleague who now lobbied for the U of C Hospitals, had volunteered to organize the gathering at a Boystown bar, and Barack “just knocked it out of the park” when he addressed the fewer than twenty people who attended. Obama for Illinois knew it could announce more than $500,000 in total contributions to date in its mid-April FEC filing for the first quarter of 2003, and U.S. representative Lane Evans had been so impressed by Barack that he offered his endorsement. Equally important, as of April 1 the campaign staff almost doubled in size with the hiring of two new deputy campaign managers, Audra Wilson and Nate Tamarin. Audra, a 1998 law school graduate who had been working for John Bouman at Chicago’s National Center on Poverty Law, had offered to volunteer for the campaign before Dan and Barack recruited her to take a full-time post handling the issues coordination and financial tasks Cynthia Miller had overseen before her departure. Nate, a young campaign veteran who had worked under both Pete Giangreco and Terry Walsh, was recommended by them to Shomon, who hired him to handle field operations after Dan’s friend Andrew Boron, an issues volunteer who had just gotten married, declined to join the team. Barack and David Axelrod spoke with Peter Coffey, the politically well-connected director of government affairs for the Chicago Botanic Garden, about becoming campaign manager. Coffey declined, telling Barack he wanted to remain at the botanic garden until a bond authorization bill he had been working on became law. But Coffey told Axelrod, “I did not want to be unemployed in March,” after the primary, which Coffey expected Dan Hynes would win. “I was pretty blunt with David,” because “I didn’t believe Obama could raise enough money.”

Barack continued to devote serious time to fund-raising, meeting two influential donors, Raghuvver Nayak, a wealthy owner of outpatient surgery centers, and Tony Rezko for lunch on back-to-back days. An evening event hosted by Andy Davis and a keynote speech at a United Auto Workers (UAW) conference were sandwiched in between. Just two days earlier, a Chicago Tribune story had reported that Rezko and his business partner Jabir Herbert Muhammad, the son of the late Nation of Islam founder Elijah Muhammad, continued to play major roles in Cook County politics thanks to their prominent alliance with county board president John Stroger. The drive to the UAW event in Ottawa, Illinois, was Nate Tamarin’s first real one-on-one exposure to Barack. “Look, when Shomon and I go on road trips, we like to fart, and we like to smoke cigarettes together,” Nate remembered Barack telling him. Barack was driving, but as Ottawa drew near, he began reading his notes as well, which “was kind of disconcerting.” But “I smoked, and he smoked,” Nate explained, “so we bonded over that.” Barack gave a “tremendously good speech,” and when Nate teased him about playing Jay Z songs on the drive back to Chicago, Barack switched to “Indonesian flute music.”

Thanks to Barack’s hectic campaign schedule, he and Michelle were rarely attending Trinity church, and Trinity’s Sunday-evening services had never been their choice, so they were not present on April 13 for one of Rev. Jeremiah Wright’s most impassioned denunciations of the U.S. government. Titled “Confusing God and Government,” Wright’s stinging sermon culminated in a passage that would stir controversy years later: “The government gives them the drugs, builds bigger prisons, passes a three-strike law, and then wants us to sing ‘God Bless America.’ No, no, no. Not ‘God Bless America!’ God damn America! That’s in the Bible, for killing innocent people. God damn America for treating her citizens as less than human. God damn America as long as she keeps trying to act like she is God, and she is supreme!”<sup>13</sup>

Obama for Illinois bragged about its $522,000 fund-raising total to date in a news release and in Obama Weekly News, an information-packed e-mail that alerted some one thousand recipients to staff hirings and upcoming events. In comparison, the Associated Press reported that Gery Chico had raised $763,000 in the first quarter of 2003 and Dan Hynes $897,000, while Barack’s intake totaled just $232,000. Barack’s campaign had maintained minimal spending, so it had $356,000 on hand, but Hynes had $801,000 and Chico $1,220,000. Blair Hull reported a balance of only $237,000, but that was after his increasingly staff-heavy effort spent almost $900,000 during the quarter. Barack’s list of contributors showed four different members of the Crown family each giving $2,000, and Pritzker relatives likewise totaled $8,000, but thanks to Hull, the millionaires’ amendment had allowed John Rogers to chip in an additional $5,000 and both Andy Davis and young banker Alexi Giannoulas to give $4,000 apiece. Valerie Jarrett’s boss Dan Levin and his wife Fay Hartog-Levin each contributed $3,000, as did black financier Lou Holland. Old friends Rob Fisher, Al Johnson, Newt Minow, Allison Davis, John Schmidt, and Bettylu Saltzman all added $1,000 or $2,000 apiece.

With April 15 approaching, and Barack and Michelle owing the IRS more than $16,500 in additional federal tax payments on a combined income of $260,000, Obama for Illinois on April 10 finally paid them the $10,500 balance from Barack’s loans to his old congressional campaign. Michelle’s $98,000 salary at the U of C Medical Center topped Barack’s $69,000 at the law school, but his $58,000 as a state senator and $34,000 from Miner Barnhill plus Joyce Foundation board fees went a good way toward helping with the more than $23,000 they had paid to babysitter Sonya Hawes. Home life was a bit more convenient, with Barack having shifted his state Senate district office from East 71st Street to nearby 1013 East 53rd Street in Hyde Park, but every weekday he was in Chicago was spent at the Michigan Avenue campaign office, where he attempted to maximize his “call time.”

A “Campaign Prospectus” prepared for potential donors envisioned raising up to $4 million by the March 2004 primary, enough to win the race with a projected 438,000 votes—190,000 from Chicago, 176,000 from suburban Cook and the surrounding collar counties, and 72,000 downstate. The prospectus said that “Barack is on the phone a minimum of four hours daily,” and listed three dozen finance committee members, including Robert Blackwell, Marty Nesbitt, Judy Byrd, Allison Davis, Judd Miner, Ab Mikva, Newt Minow, Jim Reynolds, Tony Rezko, John Rogers, Steven Rogers, Bettylu Saltzman, John Schmidt, and Al Johnson; wealthy Chicago worthies John Bryan, Dan and Fay Hartog-Levin, Christie Hefner, Abby O’Neil, Penny Pritzker, and Marjorie Benton; black financial world figures Lou Holland, Susan McKeever, Quintin Primo, Stephen Pugh, André Rice, and Stuart Taylor; plus well-known lobbyist Alfred Ronan.<sup>14</sup>

On Monday, April 14, Capitol Fax noted that Peter Fitzgerald had released new poll results showing him leading Dan Hynes by 44 to 38 percent and Barack by 49 to 29 percent in hypothetical 2004 matchups. Then, that evening, word spread that Fitzgerald had begun telling friends he would not run for reelection. Many Republicans were astounded, with state senator Dave Syverson telling the Chicago Tribune, “I just can’t imagine that,” but privately Fitzgerald had long been mulling this decision, irrespective of any poll numbers. Not yet forty-three years old and the father of young children, Fitzgerald was now ambivalent about being a U.S. senator because “what it did to your family life I did not enjoy.” He returned to Illinois on more weekends than not to make appearances, ending up in “a Days Inn in Carbondale or Peoria” and missing out on a good portion of his children’s young lives. By fall 2002, Fitzgerald had begun questioning whether he had the appetite to run another statewide campaign. “Do I really want to spend the next two years away from my family, raising money, on the road? I thought it was a very hard life,” and as he pondered the choice, he increasingly thought that “I want to watch my son’s Little League games the next two years.” In addition, being a U.S. senator had turned out to be fairly underwhelming. “There were a lot of frustrations in the Senate” because “it seemed like nothing ever got done.”

Then a third factor entered Fitzgerald’s mind. Five years earlier, when he and Obama overlapped in the state Senate, Peter had found Barack “so cool and passionless and serious.” But one winter Sunday morning, Fitzgerald was at an African American church in Roseland when Barack stopped by. “It was clear that he was going around to all the churches on the South Side,” but now, unlike in 1997–98, Fitzgerald was “incredibly impressed with how good a speaker” Barack had become, “much better than he had been years earlier.” Now Barack “really has the cadence,” and listening to him led Fitzgerald to think “what an asset a voice can be in politics,” that “an important part of Barack’s ability is his voice.”

More important, listening to Barack that Sunday morning in Roseland “confirms my impression that Barack will win the Democratic primary. I’m already thinking that I’m not sure I want to run for reelection,” but having bested Carol Moseley Braun in 1998, Fitzgerald understood what an advantage a sole African American candidate had in a multicandidate Democratic primary. After that morning, “I knew his talents, and I don’t think they were generally known” then. In addition, Barack is “going to get all the editorial board support,” so to Peter it seemed “almost certain” that Barack would be his Democratic opponent if he ran for reelection. “I felt that I could beat all the others, but I really had no desire to have a piece of Obama in that campaign. I didn’t know how I would run against him. I knew he’d be very tough,” since Barack had been “very careful in his years in Springfield” and “I didn’t think there was anything to attack.” Reflecting on that anticipated matchup, “I thought, ‘Boy, this is going to be really hard,’” and why spend two years away from his family if the all-but-certain likelihood was a November 2004 loss to Barack.

When Emil Jones heard that news about Fitzgerald’s decision, he said, “I guess he’s fearful of losing to Senator Barack Obama.” Speculation immediately focused on whether former governor Jim Edgar would run in Fitzgerald’s stead, but Barack told the Hyde Park Herald he was surprised by the news. “It’s rare for a U.S. Senator to step down after one term, but it indicates he had been disengaged from the job,” Barack stated. The Chicago Defender headlined its story “Fitzgerald’s Backing Out Pushes Obama in Front,” and Barack voiced an upbeat message to Chinta Strausberg: “If I am effective in presenting a message of change, if I am providing solutions to the health care crises that people are experiencing, the joblessness that exists in our community, the lack of education opportunity, then I can win irrespective of who else is in the race.” Barack also said he would have enough money to win: “When you combine those dollars with an energized African American voter base and effective coalition building with other progressive sectors of the population, we think we have a recipe for victory.” A few pages further on, a Defender editorial told readers that Barack was “the leading force in a battle to move Illinois closer to an enlightened health care system.”<sup>15</sup>

Amid reports that President George W. Bush had called Jim Edgar to ask him to enter the Senate race, Barack devoted a Hyde Park Herald column to arguing for raising Illinois’s minimum wage from $5.15 to $6.50 per hour. When Rod Blagojevich extended his predecessor’s moratorium on executions, Barack told the Associated Press “it’s a reasonable position for the governor to take,” an unsurprising reaction which nonetheless appeared in the New York Times. But fund-raising remained Barack’s focus. He called on prominent Jewish attorney Alan Solow to pick up a $1,000 check. “We had a long conversation,” Solow recalled, and “talked a lot about terrorism,” with Barack saying that “the first duty of a government was to protect its own people from physical harm.” Barack explained that “I’m against the war in Iraq, but I’m not a pacifist,” and over the course of the conversation, he impressed Solow as “the most thoughtful politician and maybe the most thoughtful person about political things that I had ever spent any time with. I was really, really impressed,” and when Barack asked Alan to join his finance committee, Solow asked what was expected. When Barack answered simply a pledge to raise at least $10,000, Alan readily signed on: “I was pretty hooked.”

The next evening Barack’s campaign held an “After Work Fundraising Reception for Young African American Professionals” at “a trendy new jazz and soul venue” in the West Loop featuring a live band and an open bar. Tickets were $100, and Senate colleagues Emil Jones and Jacqueline Collins, a St. Sabina member whom Father Mike Pflieger had encouraged to run for a newly drawn seat, joined Barack along with supportive aldermen Leslie Hairston and Ted Thomas. “I am your instrument potentially to create a new kind of politics,” Barack told the five-hundred-person crowd, and the event brought in more than $50,000. The next day Barack joined former U.S. senator Paul Simon on stage at a DeKalb County Democratic fund-raiser before making an overnight trip to Washington to attend the White House Correspondents’ Association annual dinner. Back in Chicago, David Axelrod and his wife Susan hosted a Monday-evening, $250-per-person fund-raiser for Barack at their home on the forty-sixth floor of Lake Point Tower, overlooking Lake Michigan. “I’m confident I’ll have enough money to develop a message and motivate core voters,” Barack told one journalist, while admitting, “I don’t have the name of a Kennedy, Daley, or Hynes.” He boastfully added that “if I already had $5 million in the bank, this race would be over.”<sup>16</sup>

Attention remained focused on Jim Edgar, with Capitol Fax reporting that GOP insiders believed the odds of him entering the race were about 60–40. Barack gave “a very moving talk” at the kickoff of the National Community Building Network's tenth annual conference, and as combat operations in Iraq ended, he told the Chicago Defender that "winning the peace is going to be the major issue." Raghuveer Nayak hosted a Sunday fund-raising brunch for Barack, after which Barack joined the other Senate candidates at Evanston Democrats' annual meeting. Northwestern University's student newspaper reported that when the contenders were asked to name their top issue, "Obama said he is most concerned with the USA Patriot Act." Dan Hynes and Blair Hull cited the economy, Gery Chico education, and Joyce Washington prioritized universal health care. The next day, with the Defender's Chinta Strausberg in the audience, Barack returned to a similar message at a Chicago hearing of his Health and Human Services Committee. Warning of "draconian cuts in health coverage" at the hands of the Bush administration, Barack argued that a pending reform plan would give states "a strong incentive to drop people from Medicaid to solve a future budget crisis."

While Barack headed downstate to speak to Adams County Democrats in Quincy, his top competitors faced other challenges. Gery Chico had had great fund-raising success early on, but now Crain's Chicago Business was warning that Alheimer & Gray, the law firm that Chico headed, was "slashing jobs and salaries" after already having lost thirty-seven attorneys, and a retired managing partner wondered whether the firm might fold. Chico's brother Craig "essentially ran the campaign" in tandem with consultant Eric Adelstein and newly hired manager Michael Golden, a former television newsman, but as Alheimer & Gray's troubles mounted, Chico's call time plummeted. "He was under an intense amount of pressure and stress," finance director Kelly Dietrich remembered, and both Dietrich and operations director Megan Crowhurst, Chico's first salaried staffer, saw their candidate becoming more withdrawn as the law firm's crisis deepened.

After Peter Fitzgerald's withdrawal, comptroller Dan Hynes's pollster Jef Pollock surveyed both Democratic primary and general election voters with mixed results. Hynes led the undeclared Maria Pappas 23–16 among Democrats, with Barack third at 13 percent, but in a general election matchup, Jim Edgar topped Hynes 49–34 and all other Democrats by even more. "We felt good" in terms of the Democratic contest, Hynes's communications director Chris Mather recalled, but in the Chicago Sun-Times, Steve Neal wrote that if Edgar accepted Republicans' efforts to draft him, Hynes looked like Democrats' strongest candidate to oppose him.

Blair Hull and his top two consultants, Rick Ridder and Anita Dunn, had had campaign manager Mike Henry in place as 2003 began, but emphasized that candidate training was necessary for the publicly inexperienced millionaire. Given Hull's willingness to fund a top-drawer campaign, "he had the best coaches money could buy," pollster Mark Blumenthal explained, and communications director Mo Elleithee agreed to come on board after "they threw money at me." Blumenthal found Hull "charmingly naive" about what a U.S. Senate candidacy entailed, and Dunn took the lead in doing on-camera training with Hull while Elleithee struggled to do issues Q&A prep. "Mike Henry ran a great operation," Elleithee remembered, but Hull had difficulty articulating why he was running: "there was no core as to why he wanted to do this." Barack made a similar comment when the suburban Daily Herald asked him to comment on Hull's candidacy. "I think just by dint of money, he's going to be an important factor in the campaign," but "I think all of us are going to be waiting to see what kinds of proposals he makes and what his vision is for the United States Senate seat."

Hull's spare-no-expense campaign also went overboard on the least publicly discussed aspect of most competitive races: opposition research. Ridder and Dunn engaged Andrew Kennedy's Kennedy Communications to prepare a stunningly thorough research report on Barack, a twenty-five-chapter document totaling several hundred pages that plumbed every knowable corner of Barack's life. Extensive on-the-ground research in Illinois—in-person examination of Chicago and Cook County property, election, and court records, as well as state Senate voting and office expense records in Springfield—was combined with a comprehensive review of online databases and Internet searches plus a criminal records check with the Illinois State Police. An introductory "Executive Summary" included "Top Obama Vulnerabilities," and while many of the twenty-three substantive chapters were topical—Abortion, Education, Guns, Health Care, Taxes, etc.—others reviewed Dreams From My Father, "Personal and Court Records," and "Personal Finances."

The Executive Summary, which showed a misunderstanding of the meaning of "present" votes in the state Senate, characterized Barack as "a timid politician often afraid to take a stand on the tough issues," such as failing to vote no on more than half a dozen antiabortion bills. The Campaign Finance chapter noted that in his congressional race, Barack had received at least $6,000 from Tony Rezko and his associates, and the distillation of Dreams highlighted that "Obama attended Socialist conferences" in New York. Police records showed that "Obama has been cited for multiple moving violations," but to readers like Ridder and Dunn the almost $19,000 report failed to unearth any notable dirt or powerful political ammunition. Yet pages 3 and 4 of Chapter 19—"Perks, Pay Raises and Office Expenses"—unknowingly contained political dynamite. Senate payroll records showed that "Obama has had several staffers over the years." Anyone close to Barack would recognize Cynthia Miller, Will Burns, and Jennifer Mason's names, but the report also showed that from August 1998 onward, the Senate Democratic caucus had been paying the nonexistent "William Higgins," a supposed Obama staffer, monthly salaries that by February 2003 totaled $48,950. Had anyone in Hull's campaign realized that one of the four payroll recipients was fictional, Barack's political career—through no fault of his own—might have been over as fast as a Chicago newspaper could print the phrase "ghost employee."<sup>17</sup>

In Springfield, House passage of Barack's racial profiling and videotaped-interrogations bills sent both measures to the governor's desk. A Chicago Tribune editorial declared that "credit goes to Sen. Barack Obama, who spent months working with every interested constituency and making changes to accommodate their most credible concerns," and a previously hesitant Rod Blagojevich embraced the videotape legislation. "Senator Obama, that was fine work," the Tribune declared. "Take a bow."

A parent-teacher conference about five-year-old Malia had Barack and Michelle at the U of C's Lab School early one Friday morning, just a few hours before news spread that former governor Jim Edgar would not run for Peter Fitzgerald's Senate seat. Several considerations led to Edgar's decision. "In Illinois, the governorship is much more important than the U.S. Senate seat," and "after you've been a governor, it's really hard to be a senator," Edgar explained. "I wasn't sure I wanted to be one of a hundred in a debating society" and wondered "would I get bored?" But, just as Peter Fitzgerald had, he saw as his likely opponent the "very articulate, very bright" Barack Obama. "I was always very impressed with him" when they had interacted in prior years, and "I didn't necessarily want to lock horns with Obama. I probably gave Obama more credit that he might be able to emerge as the nominee than most people did at that point in the process" because "I thought he'd appeal to the suburbs" in addition to drawing African American support. With both the incumbent and the heavily favored, widely popular former governor declining to run, Republicans worried about their chances of holding the seat as speculation turned to Elgin state senator Steve Rauschenberger and little-known businessman Andrew McKenna Jr.

Barack mulled the news about Edgar during a Saturday photo shoot intended to get pictures of him in a variety of settings for later use in direct-mail flyers. “Barack should plan on having a few changes of clothes,” consultant Terry Walsh had recommended, and the long day started with family scenes at East View before moving to Marty Nesbitt’s Kenwood home to visit with a group of senior citizens. As the day progressed, Barack stopped at an East 71st Street barbershop, a hospital, and Kennedy-King College. Several days later, African American communications consultant Pam Smith pulled together ten or so black public relations professionals at Jim Reynolds’s Loop Capital Markets office so that Dan Shomon, John Kupper, and Pete Giangreco could hear their advice about how the campaign should present Barack to African American voters. “Integrity of politicians—address head-on. Why he is running > make clear,” Kupper jotted down. Challenges were flagged immediately: “Harvard as a barrier to people. Name: This is what it means; proud of it: okay for A-A audiences. Don’t treat it like a liability . . . mixed race/Harvard educated . . . Needs someone recognized as ‘street.’ Need to know who he is. Address Harvard education as proud of it, worked for it. More than Harvard grad > was an organizer/community activist.” Then Kupper wrote down a phrase someone had mentioned to Pete Giangreco, a phrase that subsequently would resonate far beyond Jim Reynolds’s conference room. “It’s Time to Believe Again > in what? Don’t tell us what to believe . . . Politics of Hope. A Chance to Believe Again.”<sup>18</sup>

In Springfield, Barack spoke for a House bill that would limit gun purchasers to a maximum of one per month. On Chicago’s South Side, “the proliferation of handguns often used by gang members and other criminals is wreaking devastation throughout the community,” and “what we are targeting is the straw purchaser who is” fueling “the kinds of violence that we’re seeing devastate communities.” The bill failed badly, with only twenty-two Democrats—and no Republicans—joining Barack in voting for the restriction.

The next weekend Barack held a press conference and spoke at a West Side Teamsters local before meeting at a coffee shop with Jim Cauley, a thirty-seven-year-old Kentuckian whom Pete Giangreco, Terry Walsh, and David Axelrod hoped to lure to Chicago as Obama for Illinois’s new campaign manager. Pete and Terry had worked on a 2001 Jersey City mayoral race Cauley had managed, and Axelrod and Kupper’s other two partners, David Plouffe and John Del Cecato, as well as Nate Tamarin, had all previously been colleagues of Cauley at the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee. By 2003 Cauley was chief of staff to Maryland congressman C. A. “Dutch” Ruppertsberger and was interested in managing a large statewide race.

But when Axelrod first cold-called him, Cauley “blew him off,” because he had never heard of Barack and had never visited Chicago. Then former Axelrod partner Tom Lindenfeld upbraided Cauley, so he looked at ObamaForIllinois.com, designed by Shomon’s friend Bryan Siverly, and found it “less than stellar.” But Axelrod called again, as did Pete and Terry, so Jimmy agreed to fly to Chicago to meet Barack, figuring it was a free chance to see the city. By then “I’d already done a lot of research,” and “my concerns were whether Obama had the money for a campaign and his name. I didn’t think he could win” because “if he didn’t get on TV, there’s no race.” When Cauley and Barack met, Jimmy immediately voiced his doubts. “Your campaign looks like a state Senate race on steroids,” he bluntly told Barack. “If you're going to run a traditional African American race and be poor, I've got no time for that." Barack responded that by June 30, he would have raised at least $1 million, a goal that had just become eminently more reachable when word arrived that late on Friday May 9, Blair Hull's campaign had notified the Federal Election Commission that Hull's self-funding had broken through the second trigger provision in the millionaires' amendment, allowing his primary opponents to accept up to $12,000 apiece from individual donors. Chicago newspapers had failed to report that news, but as their conversation stretched past the one-hour mark, Cauley found Barack "so impressive" and "extremely intelligent" that by the time Barack offered him the job, Jimmy had all but changed his mind. They haggled some over what Cauley's monthly salary would be, but he told Barack, "I'm inclined to do this. I'll let you know in the morning." Pete Giangreco picked Cauley up and was overjoyed that Jimmy and Barack had each been impressed with the other. On Monday morning, Cauley formally accepted. "I knew if we put a black in the United States Senate that I was a made man for life," and he told Barack he would arrive in Chicago right after July 4.<sup>19</sup>

A Daily Southtown poll found 38 percent of statewide Democratic respondents unsure which U.S. Senate candidate they would support, with Dan Hynes drawing 19 percent support, Maria Pappas 17, and Barack 12. Two Teamster Joint Councils, comprised of dozens of union locals, announced their support for Hynes, while bad news continued for Gery Chico as more lawyers left Altheimer & Gray. The Chicago Tribune's Eric Zorn devoted a column to young Republican Senate hopeful Jack Ryan, a 1985 Harvard Law School graduate who had spent fifteen years at Goldman Sachs before exploring a political career. Seeking to bolster his résumé, Ryan had been hired by Barack's friend Tim King as a teacher at all-black Hales Franciscan High School, and some conservative activists saw Ryan as "the Illinois Republican Party's incarnation of a young Jack Kennedy." Zorn directly compared Ryan and Barack, writing that both have "impressive community service records and huge political futures."

As the spring session moved into its final eight days, Barack applauded Blagojevich's announcement that he would veto any bill expanding gambling in Illinois. Many legislative Democrats saw increased gaming as a fertile source of much-needed state revenue, but Barack wanted "to take away some of the corporate tax breaks that exist right now," which would "close the budget gap fairly easily." For Barack, gaming was not about revenue, because "I think that the moral and social cost of gambling, particularly in low income communities, could be devastating" if Illinois made gaming devices available in "every tavern and bar across the state."

That same day, Emil Jones Jr. told a private Senate Democratic Caucus something that had already led to statehouse whispers: FBI agents under the direction of Springfield-based assistant U.S. attorney Joseph Hartzler, best known for having sent Oklahoma City terror bomber Timothy McVeigh to the electric chair, were investigating whether Senate Democratic staffers had performed partisan campaign work on state time in 2002. Similar allegations a year earlier had led House minority leader Lee Daniels to step down as chairman of the Illinois Republican Party, and since then the investigation had expanded to House Democrats as well. As Rich Miller soon detailed in Capital Fax, early in the 2002 election cycle several now-departed Senate staff members, including Ron Stradt, one of two attorneys assigned to the Judiciary Committee, had been "uncomfortable" with work assignments they received, particularly concerning candidates' ballot petitions. "Morale on the Senate Democratic staff has been abysmal for months," Miller reported, and several months earlier Rob Scott, who handled the committee's criminal legislation and dealt extensively with Barack, had also taken a new job. “The level of griping for Senate Democrats this spring has exceeded just about anything I’ve ever experienced,” Miller wrote, and federal subpoenas seeking Democratic staffers’ time sheets and e-mails reaching back to 1998 were just one factor.

“When the FBI came knocking on my door” to ask about “campaigning being done on state time,” one staffer who had witnessed “all the illegal shit they were doing related to campaigns” was not surprised. “You’re breaking the fucking law,” he had warned more than one superior a year earlier, and as FBI agents fanned out across Springfield, “multiple people met with the feds.” Senate Democratic staffers all received a three-page memo stating that “any and all records reflecting or referring to your review of candidate petitions at any state work site” should be given to their supervisor, not destroyed or deleted. But at least one witness said “they came in and wiped everybody’s computers.” Years later, the story was that some departing staffer had maliciously deleted a huge amount of caucus files, but as FBI agents continued gathering information, their questions shifted to evidence of quid pro quo lawmaking.

Emil Jones casually alerted his members to the probe. “It was almost like ‘Oh, by the way,’” one unnamed Democrat said, but the next day, Blagojevich infuriated Jones by heartily endorsing the federal inquiry. “This is part and parcel of investigations that are ongoing here because of a process that has been engulfed in corruption and cynicism for a long, long time,” Blagojevich declared. Legislators’ feelings about the governor had become increasingly negative as the spring session had progressed, and Capitol Fax’s Miller wrote that “the governor has ignored many of his professional responsibilities.” Blagojevich met with the Four Tops only twice all spring, and “his duplicity” had been highlighted by his stealthy support for a controversial bill benefiting SBC Communications, one Barack and only three other Democrats had opposed.<sup>20</sup>

Dan Hynes’s Senate prospects appeared threatened when millionaire Madison County trial lawyer John Simmons announced he was entering the race. “I am planning to put a lot of money in it,” Simmons told the Chicago Sun-Times, and the possibility that Simmons might run strongly with downstate white voters “could dramatically reshape the contest,” the Sun-Times observed. Obama for Illinois’s slightly retitled Obama Weekly Report all but welcomed the news, saying Simmons’s entry “threatens the chances of Dan Hynes and Blair Hull.”

Barack accompanied Michelle to a Friday-evening memorial service for her uncle Steve Shields’s wife Libby Brewer, who had died at age fifty of cervical cancer, then the next day attended Operation PUSH’s weekly Saturday rally. On Sunday, May 25, Rod Blagojevich signed Barack’s ephedra-ban bill into law, with Barack telling the Sun-Times that “we caught the industry off-guard because we mobilized quickly” thanks to the late Sean Riggins’s parents, Kevin and Debbie. Barack also delivered the commencement address at the Chicago-Kent College of Law, uttering many well-worn lines. “There are an awful lot of unhappy lawyers out there,” he warned, often because “the only thing that they were concerned about was making it for themselves.” An attempt at humor about someone telling him “you seem like a relatively ethical person, for a lawyer,” elicited no laughter, but Barack also said that “we need a more equitable way of funding public education in this state.”

On Memorial Day, Barack marched in a number of parades before heading back to Springfield for the spring session’s final five days. A House bill loosening Temporary Assistance to Needy Families’ “family cap” gave Barack an opportunity to praise the bill he helped craft six years earlier as “one of the most effective, least punitive welfare reform policies in the country” while acknowledging that “everything that was said with respect to the value of work over welfare is absolutely correct.” On Thursday, May 29, the Senate’s agenda included HB 2221, which two months earlier Capitol Fax had labeled “a potential nightmare for Democrats” because it addressed an ongoing battle over the organizing of home care workers between SEIU, the service employees union, and AFSCME, the two most powerful pillars on the party’s progressive wing. Blagojevich had already sided with SEIU, and Barack on April 9 had signed on as an alternate chief cosponsor of the bill, which would codify SEIU’s right to organize the workers in question.

On the floor, Barack did not speak before it easily passed, 51–2–5, handing AFSCME a painful defeat. Waiting just off the floor was Barack’s old friend Keith Kelleher, who had devoted years to building SEIU Local 880 into a potent force for poorly paid home care workers. But AFSCME, which represented most state employees, did not want to surrender jurisdiction over so sizable a workforce, and AFSCME Council 31’s deputy director, Roberta Lynch, who two decades earlier had been the Calumet Community Religious Conference (CCRC)’s first staffer, was notoriously feisty for not forgetting or forgiving disloyal politicians.

Leaving the Senate floor that day, “Barack comes out and he gives me this big handshake and hug. ‘We did it man, we did it!’” Barack congratulated Keith. A few moments later, veteran SEIU lobbyist Bill Perkins, who had left AFSCME months earlier after a fierce run-in with Roberta, gave Kelleher an astonishing piece of news: “Barack didn’t vote for it.” Along with four other senators, Barack had voted present. Keith quickly accosted him. “‘Barack, Bill just told me that you voted present on this bill?’ ‘Yeah, man. You know Roberta was really working me, and you know, I’m running’” and did not want to risk losing AFSCME’s support. “‘You’ve got to be kidding me,’” Keith replied. “‘No.’ ‘Barack, you’re a sponsor.’ ‘Yeah, but you didn’t need my vote.’” Kelleher and his leaders were amazed and livid that a chief cosponsor had voted against his own bill because he was afraid it would cost him AFSCME’s endorsement.

Behind the scenes, Democratic legislative leaders worked on an ethics act to respond to the federal investigation into campaign work being performed on state time. Barack told the Chicago Tribune the bill would be “a much-needed improvement,” especially in protecting legislative staffers. “These guys have been hung out to dry because they’ve been told to go do stuff politically,” Barack acknowledged. In private, Barack loyally followed Emil Jones’s lead, greatly disappointing advocates like Cindi Canary of the Illinois Campaign for Political Reform, who wanted stronger provisions barring lobbyists from paying for legislators’ golf games and the like. On the last day, Barack spoke in favor of HB 3412, stressing that “it’s absolutely imperative” to give staff members “a bright line” about “what is not allowable conduct,” and the bill passed almost unanimously. Later that day, when a bill modestly raising Illinois’s minimum wage came up for a vote, moderate Republican Adeline Geo-Karis noted it did not apply federally. Barack was quick to respond. “Senator Geo-Karis, I promise you, when I get to the federal level, I will make sure that at the federal level we raise the federal minimum wage. But until I get there, this appears to be the best we can do.”<sup>21</sup>

While Barack was in Springfield, he received an unexpected gift when the host of WTTW’s Chicago Tonight, Phil Ponce, asked Jesse Jackson Sr. if he was going to make an endorsement in the U.S. Senate race. “Well, I support Barack Obama,” Jackson replied. “Have you already come out?” Ponce queried.

“Well, not made an official endorsement, but he brings to the scene the quality of intelligence and freshness that’s appealing.”

Barack’s team continued to prioritize fund-raising, with all eyes focused on the upcoming June 30 FEC reporting date. Attorney Stephen Pugh would host a major event on June 12, and a week later Women for Obama would hold a reception. Barack had been a top sponsor of twenty-six bills that had won passage, a third of which had political appeal: the videotaping and racial profiling measures, significant expansions of both FamilyCare and Illinois’s EITC, the ephedra ban and nightclub safety acts, plus the hospital report card and open meetings bills. At a Friday press conference and again on WVON’s Cliff Kelley Show, Barack called for the governor to sign a newly passed House bill he had championed that would allow ex-offenders to receive state professional licenses necessary for dozens of occupations. “Right now, you can’t get a barber’s license if you’re an ex-offender,” Barack stressed. Illinois at present “does not issue a license for a non-violent ex-offender to be a barber, a cosmetologist, to be a nail technologist, a real estate agent, a landscape architect, a court reporter,” Barack added. Such a barrier “doesn’t make any sense, particularly because for a lot of ex-offenders, one of their best opportunities may be entrepreneurial and starting a small business.” Whatever their choice, “it’s important that ex-offenders be able to find jobs and housing.”

Barack made a two-day fund-raising trip to Manhattan, and one evening prominent attorney Vernon E. Jordan took Barack along to a book party being held in media power-couple Tina Brown and Harold Evans’s backyard. Newton Minow’s friend John Bryan, the CEO of Sara Lee, had introduced Barack to Jordan, a member of Sara Lee’s board, at a Chicago lunch, and Jordan was impressed. Yet at the Upper East Side book party, with former president Bill Clinton in attendance, Barack looked “as awkward and out-of-place as I felt,” a young journalist later explained. He was also “one of the few black people in attendance,” and “we spoke at length about his campaign” before Barack left. Only then did another guest approach to ask whom she had been chatting with. “Sheepishly he told me he didn’t know that Obama was a guest at the party and had asked him to fetch him a drink.”

While Barack was in New York, Blair Hull’s campaign and Barack’s own reviewed their research into his record. “Whether it is because he is ethical or careful, we do not have a smoking gun against Obama,” a Hull campaign memo reported. “Much of the analysis of Obama’s legislative record has yielded proportionally little in the way of hits,” but a Freedom of Information request had been submitted requesting the details on Barack’s “member initiatives.” The memo noted that “there appears to be a strong connection between Obama and the developers in his district,” but that was not pursued. But the Hull campaign’s research on Gery Chico “has uncovered lots of negatives and problem areas in Chico’s public record.”

David Axelrod and John Kupper had asked Joe Sinsheimer, a researcher whom they both respected, to undertake similar work for the Obama campaign. “I remember David calling me” and saying, “This guy is special,” after Joe expressed doubt that a black state senator could win. A Duke graduate who had been initiated into “an aggressive style of politics” while working under now-congressman Rahm Emanuel at the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, by 2003 Sinsheimer had more than a decade of political research experience. By mid-June, Sinsheimer had completed a two-volume, thirty-one-chapter report on Barack that in form closely mirrored Kennedy Communications’ investigation of Barack’s record. Many chapters addressed particular issues, like abortion, or eight pages on the economy, and Sinsheimer's "Executive Summary" about Barack as a legislator was decidedly upbeat: "an innovator who understands and works within the system . . . to forge a solution to important problems." Barack's breadth of recently passed bills represented "a record that will allow him to solidify his base vote" as well as "to make the argument to suburban voters that he is a new kind of Democrat—a leader that attacks problems with innovative solutions."

Sinsheimer's defensively oriented chapters cataloged the "E2 Nightclub Stampede," "Obama Finances," "Law Firm," "Forum Inc.," "Citizenship Education Fund," and especially "Present and Missed Votes." Looking at the full record from an opponent's perspective, the argument that "Obama did not have the courage of his convictions on abortion" again represented the top vulnerability. The missed vote on reenacting the Safe Neighborhoods Act in late 1999 also loomed large, but the member initiatives to Yesse Yehudah and Jesse Jackson Sr. just barely made Sinsheimer's top ten. "I don't think that I remember Tony Rezko's name ever being uttered," he later recalled. Kupper also asked Sinsheimer to take a thorough look at Maria Pappas and her husband, Peter Kamberos, and two impressive memos detailed their business activities.

John Kupper immediately read Sinsheimer's report, taking note of potential problems. At the top of his notes, Kupper wrote: "What is Electronic Knowledge Interchange?"—the Robert Blackwell enterprise that had paid Barack $112,000 in 2001 and early 2002. Sinsheimer had vacuumed up Barack's exaggerated March 1997 claim to Crain's Chicago Business that he could "knock down scotch and tell a dirty joke with the best of them," but a trio of state Senate actions stood out too: "introduces legislation against zero-tolerance in school expulsions" because of Decatur, "votes to close child welfare office in Hendon's district," and "votes against extending death penalty to violent gang members" all had "oppo" potential.<sup>22</sup>

When Barack returned from New York, downstate newspapers all reported Congressman Lane Evans's endorsement. "There is one candidate who stands above the rest when it comes to his ability to lead, his knowledge of the issues, his proven record, and his ability to win in November," Evans declared. "We're absolutely thrilled," Barack told the Quad-City Times, calling Evans's support "an enormous boost." That night Barack joined Gery Chico at a Democratic gathering in suburban DuPage County, and the next evening featured the big Loop fund-raiser hosted by African American attorney Stephen Pugh. A sustained effort had been made to encourage host committee members to raise "at least $10,000" apiece for the event, and one solicitation letter proclaimed that "very seldom is there an individual like Barack with the ability, will and determination to usher in a new era of progressive politics." With individuals now able to contribute up to $12,000, and the June 30 reporting deadline looming, another letter told potential donors that "Obama is a top tier front runner in this race." More than two hundred people attended, and the reception gave the biggest boost yet to the campaign's goal of having more than $1 million in hand when candidate's FEC reports were filed in mid-July.

With Jimmy Cauley's arrival still a few weeks away, Dan Shomon remained in charge of the campaign's political strategy, and one major concern that remained was how many of Illinois's major unions would support Dan Hynes. Some, like the Teamsters, were already in Hynes's corner. Both SEIU and AFSCME, their internecine warfare aside, were expected to support Barack, but the state AFL-CIO and both teachers' unions, the IFT and the IEA, were still in play. With them, Barack's most powerful ally was Emil Jones, and Shomon knew that having "Jones start calling key labor individuals" was the most essential piece of Obama's labor strategy.

When former 1992 Project VOTE! colleague Bruce Dixon posted a critical essay titled "In Search of the Real Barack Obama" on an African American Web site, Barack wrote a reply and then followed up with a phone call and a second e-mail. Barack explained that his inclusion in a directory published by the avowedly centrist Democratic Leadership Council (DLC), which Dixon had targeted, was simply because he had filled out a brief questionnaire. "I'm proud of the fact that I stood up early and unequivocally in opposition to Bush's foreign policy . . . and I continue to make it a central part of each and every one of my political speeches." In his second message, Barack stressed his progressive stances on divisive issues: "I favor universal health care for all Americans" and "the current NAFTA regime lacks the workers' and environmental protections that are necessary." He declared that "I am not currently, nor have I ever been, a member of the DLC" while also volunteering that he opposed "the misogyny and materialism of much of rap culture." Barack closed by stating, "I've always trusted my moral compass, and have thus far avoided compromising my core values for the sake of ambition or expedience."<sup>23</sup>

With the session over and no law school classes until late September, Barack's schedule was a nonstop mix of public appearances, call time, and meetings with contributors. One June Saturday, Barack spoke at an SEIU rally; the next Saturday he was grand marshal at Bronzeville's annual Juneteenth Parade. One Tuesday evening, Barack was working the crowd at a Clinton Foundation event at the W Hotel in the Loop when he encountered former U of C provost Geof Stone at the shrimp bowl. Geof chided Barack for investing so much time and effort in another political campaign. "The chances of success are so small. Why not become a real, full-time academic," so "you can make a real contribution?" Barack "looked me in the eye," Stone remembered, and said, "Geof, I really appreciate that, but I have a responsibility here, and I think I have an opportunity, and I just have to pursue it." That Friday Barack met Tony Rezko at 8:00 A.M. in preparation for a big fund-raiser that night at Tony's home in Wilmette, one that brought in more than $70,000 for Barack's campaign. Two days later Barack faced a radically different crowd when he sat on the back of a red convertible as two young campaign volunteers drove him through Boystown in the annual Gay Pride Parade.

Blair Hull's campaign got everyone's attention when it launched a two-week, $750,000 radio and television advertising campaign on June 23 in the six non-Chicago markets—Rockford, Quad Cities, Peoria, and Springfield, plus St. Louis, Missouri, and Paducah, Kentucky—that served Illinois residents. The first sixty-second TV spot described Hull as "a successful businessman who built an investment company from scratch." Hull vowed that "we need to create jobs" and "provide affordable health care for our families" before the ad ended with the slogan "he'll work for you." Going "up" on the air nine months before an election was unheard of, but it coincided with Hull's formal announcement of his candidacy on June 25 and visits to Carbondale, Springfield, Decatur, Quad Cities, and Rockford. Barack told the Chicago Sun-Times he found Hull's move "pretty remarkable," because "my impression at this stage is that people are not paying close attention to a Senate race that is going to take place in March." But former U.S. senator Paul Simon remarked that given Hull's unlimited funds and his complete lack of name recognition, "I think it's a smart move on his part."

African American health care executive Joyce Washington had retained a well-regarded campaign consultant and a top researcher who examined Barack and Hull. Sun-Times political columnist Steve Neal reported that although Barack was "emerging as the consensus choice of the African-American community” and “has a very good chance to win the Democratic nomination,” privately Representative Bobby Rush was seeking “payback” by encouraging Washington “to challenge Obama” and helping “recruit allies to her cause.” But Washington’s challenges paled compared to those facing Gery Chico’s campaign. By mid-June operations director Megan Crowhurst had resigned, and Chico’s own call time dwindled precipitously even as the FEC’s end-of-June reporting deadline drew near. Frustrated finance director Kelly Dietrich gave notice, and then on June 27, Chico as chairman of Altheimer & Gray’s executive committee notified the law firm’s partners that three days later they would be voting to dissolve the firm. The Chicago Tribune reported that the closure “will put 700 administrative staff members out of work,” and the Sun-Times called the news “a potentially dramatic development” for Chico’s Senate candidacy. Campaign staffers heard this from the Tribune, not from Chico. “Oh, that’s why we haven’t raised any money for the past couple of weeks,” Dietrich realized. Several weeks later the Tribune followed with an embarrassing story detailing how in 2002 Altheimer had booked more than $6 million in uncollected fees as profit while at the same time borrowing more than $22 million into early 2003 to keep the firm afloat. Chico had been paid $800,000 in 2002, but mid-June efforts to merge Altheimer into a stronger firm were rebuffed just days before the collapse.<sup>24</sup>

Barack spent the first two days of July touring downstate cities with Lane Evans to publicize the popular congressman’s endorsement. “If every voter in this primary could meet with Barack, he’d win by a landslide,” Evans told a Springfield press conference as virtually every downstate newspaper reported his remarks. Shomon and Barack’s consultants were also eager to draw attention to the fund-raising prowess that had produced $878,000 in contributions during the second quarter of 2003, giving Obama for Illinois a bank balance of $1,076,000 as July began. “We are going to have enough money to get on television,” Barack told downstate reporters, while emphasizing that “I have the track record behind me that doesn’t exist for any of the other candidates. I’m the only guy who’s ever passed a bill. I’m the only guy that’s ever cast a vote.” Ceremonies at which Governor Blagojevich signed first the FamilyCare expansion bill and then John Cullerton’s seat belt measure put Barack’s name in the news too, and on July 4, thanks to Nate Tamarin, Barack appeared at five different Independence Day parades. With Dan Hynes residing in his district, Cullerton explained to Barack over lunch at the Berghoff how he had to remain neutral in the Senate race but volunteered some fund-raising advice. Soon thereafter, when the Cullerton family’s 38th Ward Regular Democratic Organization unsurprisingly endorsed Hynes, “I get a call from Obama, saying ‘I thought you said you were going to be neutral—your name’s on Hynes’s Web site.’ I said, ‘Barack, let me tell you something. I think you’re the only person in Illinois who’s looked at Dan Hynes’s Web site. Okay? But I’ll correct it, and I’ll call him and get it straight.’”

At an Operation PUSH Saturday forum, Barack told the crowd, “we’ve got to have health insurance for every family” and “every child. We’ve got to have national health insurance.” At a nearby senior citizens’ center, Barack attacked President Bush’s prescription drug policies, saying they “create an illusion of providing relief” yet “look like they were written by the pharmaceutical industry.” He took the time to write a personal letter to Paul Simon citing his successful downstate swing with Lane Evans, pointedly adding that “your endorsement would mean more than any other.” Dan Hynes’s breadth of downstate support, with seventy-one out of ninety-six county chairmen already backing him, led wealthy Madison County attorney John Simmons to withdraw from the race and endorse Hynes just seven weeks after having entered.

Absent Hynes, the other Democratic candidates all met for their first joint broadcast appearance on July 13 at a progressive IVI-IPO forum cosponsored by WBEZ radio. Barack devoted his one-minute opening statement to the war in Iraq. “I am the only candidate in this race to stand up and oppose this thing vehemently and vigorously,” noting that “I was in the Federal Plaza last fall clearly addressing this issue, and no one else was there.” When moderator Laura Washington asked the candidates what they would do to protect civil liberties, Barack responded that “I would introduce a bill that would revoke many of the provisions contained in the first Patriot Act,” and “I would absolutely oppose the second Patriot Act,” because what’s “most threatening are the ability of the Justice Department to obtain wiretaps without a warrant. They basically circumvented the judicial process, and the judiciary is our one check. They are the people that watch the watchers. . . . We need to require proper warrants that specify what the Justice Department is looking for and that is what the Patriot Act has stripped out.”

When Washington asked about capital punishment, Barack cited his videotaping bill and said, “the key thing we need at the federal level is to stop all executions,” because without a moratorium, “we are going to continue to have people who are on death row who are innocent.” When Washington shifted to more personal questions, she asked Barack about his “unusual name.” “It’s a name that I am very proud of, it’s the name that my father gave me, and one that I feel very blessed to have.” In a brief television appearance, Barack cited his “wonderfully productive career in the state Senate” and said that “early childhood education is the next big step that we need to take as a society.”<sup>25</sup>

In mid-July, Chicago’s newspapers gave prominent coverage to all of the Democratic candidates’ FEC filings. Most attention focused on Blair Hull, whose campaign had already spent $3.5 million and now employed thirty-three paid staffers. Dan Hynes’s fund-raising had slightly outpaced Barack’s, leaving Hynes with more than $1.5 million in hand, while Gery Chico’s second-quarter contributions badly lagged both Hynes and Barack. The millionaires’ amendment was providing their campaigns with a major boost, and a Sun-Times analysis showed that twenty-one donors had given Barack between $10,000 and $12,000 per person, while Hynes had twenty-nine such donors. Barack told the Hyde Park Herald that Hull had “squandered” his early millions, and a Chicago Defender news story stated that Barack “and his staff are looking confident and optimistic.”

One weekday evening, Barack spoke at the prominent law firm Jenner & Block’s annual “Diversity Dinner” for summer associates. Former Harvard Law Review colleague Bruce Spiva had invited him, and Bruce remembered that Barack gave a “very cerebral speech.” He tried to joke about how summer associates might meet their future spouses through the program, but the result was “dead silence.” The next day brought Barack yet another bevy of publicity as Governor Blagojevich signed a half dozen criminal justice reform bills, including Barack’s videotaping, racial profiling, and employment for ex-offenders measures. Barack told the Chicago Tribune that the “landmark” videotaping program “can be a very powerful tool to convict the guilty,” while a Chicago Defender story stated that “the three landmark bills are profoundly important to the community.” Hyde Park Herald reporter Todd Spivak wrote of Barack’s “hugely successful spring session,” but in the Defender Barack stressed that “this year we had the juice,” and “Emil Jones was the juice.”

On three Friday mornings in a row—July 11, 18, and 25—Barack met fund-raising dynamo Tony Rezko for 7:30 A.M. breakfasts. An entirely unexpected new candidate entered the Senate race on June 20 when Nancy Skinner, an articulate, white, thirty-eight-year-old progressive talk-radio host, jumped into the contest and was put on leave by WLS-AM. Chicago Tribune columnist Eric Zorn gave Skinner a warm welcome to electoral politics, but much greater reaction ensued the next day when Blair Hull's campaign announced that Bobby Rush had agreed to chair Hull's effort. The campaign's press release cited the millionaire's and the former Black Panther's "remarkably similar backgrounds" as a reason for Rush's endorsement. "Rush will play an integral role in campaign strategy," the release stated, but Rush quickly sought to rebut most observers' suspicions by telling the Sun-Times that "there has not been a red cent—not one red cent—exchanged between Blair Hull and myself with regards to this campaign." Asked for comment, Barack responded, "Why would I stir up something unnecessarily? You can draw your own conclusions," before magnanimously telling the Hyde Park Herald that "I have great respect for Congressman Rush and look forward to his support in the general election." A bit later, Barack said, "I was not surprised by Congressman Rush's unwillingness to endorse me" while pointedly adding, "I am surprised at his endorsement of an individual who has no track record of community service" and "has never been involved in the political process." In a column headlined "Bobby Rush a Sellout," the Sun-Times's Steve Neal declared that Rush "has exposed himself as a small-time hack and petty grudge-holder" while reminding readers that Rush's 2002 support of Republican state treasurer Judy Baar Topinka had netted his wife Carolyn a job in Topinka's office.<sup>26</sup>

Inside Hull's campaign, lead consultant Rick Ridder critiqued their existing game plan and its downstate focus. The Chicago media market reached 73 percent of Illinois voters, while St. Louis accounted for just 7 percent, but the plan envisioned spending 20 percent of their advertising budget in that "Metro East" market and only 43 percent in Chicago. "Our winning scenario involves garnering a huge percentage of downstate votes, but it also requires being competitive in Chicago and running up pretty big numbers in the collar counties." Yet Ridder appreciated that the campaign faced a more existential challenge. "In order for Blair to win, he must ride a wave of change. We have to define him as someone who will change Washington in ways that will benefit the average Illinois family. The advantages that Obama (black & progressive vote) and Hynes (state-wide & machine) have over us cannot be overcome simply by having a better run, better funded campaign." They must "define Blair as someone who is 'above' politics, yet can get things done . . . in a way that sets him apart from all other politicians."

Barack's campaign consultants were likewise strategizing, and two successive meetings, first with AFSCME, then with SEIU, were held so that they could detail just how Barack could win the primary. At the July 22 AFSCME session, Barack intended to lead off with his "stump speech and overview," but before he could, Roberta Lynch confronted him about his May "present" vote on SEIU's HB 2221. Barack parried. "Maybe somebody hit my switch," he claimed, and "Roberta lost it," AFSCME's Ray Harris remembered. "She goes insane," and Barack "took it." Then the meeting got back on track, with David Axelrod explaining "how we win with a name like Barack Obama." Pete Giangreco addressed "targeting—how we get to 35 percent." Newly arrived campaign manager Jim Cauley described how funds would be husbanded for 2004 advertising, and Audra Wilson detailed outreach efforts toward the campaign's African American base. Two days later Barack, John Kupper, Pete, Jim, and Audra did a similar presentation for top SEIU staffers.

The centerpiece of both meetings was Pete Giangreco's finely honed analysis based upon prior elections' vote totals. Barack began with a fundamental advantage in a multicandidate field: "no major African American candidate in a major state-wide campaign has won less than 29 percent” of the statewide primary vote. In Chicago, “Obama will be able to win at least 43 percent of the vote,” or about 204,000 votes—a total derived from Roland Burris’s 2002 numbers in African American wards and John Schmidt’s 1998 ones in white ones, each discounted somewhat in light of Joyce Washington, Nancy Skinner, and imaginably Maria Pappas’s presence on the ballot. In the balance of Cook County, Barack’s target would be about 75,000 votes, in the surrounding “collar” counties, some 47,000, and in the balance of Illinois—“downstate”—a further 58,000, for a raw vote total of approximately 384,000—33 percent of the anticipated primary turnout. “Measurable portions of the downstate vote are African American,” so “Obama’s tactical goal for downstate is to win the majority of African American voters and leave it to the other candidates to compete for the rest.” Giangreco stressed that all of these numbers were “conservative, realistic estimates,” tallied with an eye toward convincing AFSCME and SEIU that they should see Barack as the likely winner.

The evening after the SEIU presentation, Barack was interviewed by suburban cable-TV host Jeff Berkowitz, who began by asking Barack about the Iraq war. “Saddam Hussein was a genuinely dangerous despot,” but “my analysis said that Saddam Hussein was not an imminent threat” and that “vigorous inspections” targeting Saddam’s suspected weapons programs could have contained the danger. Stressing that he had spoken publicly when others had not, Barack argued that “what absolutely we can’t have out of our U.S. senator from Illinois is somebody who waffles on the issue and somebody who ducks on the issue and puts their finger out to the wind and waits to find out how the wind is blowing before they make a statement.”

Berkowitz asked whether Barack supported Senate Democrats’ filibuster of President Bush’s nomination of a highly credentialed Hispanic attorney for a circuit court judgeship. “It’s perfectly appropriate for a senator to oppose a nominee even if they’re smart, even if they’re nice, if their fundamental vision of the Constitution is flawed. If somebody doesn’t believe in the protection of civil liberties, if somebody does not believe in the promotion of civil rights, then that I think is a rationale. . . . Look at the way that the federal bench has generally caved in the face of John Ashcroft and the Executive Branch and the Patriot Act. It’s a disgrace. And that is the bulwark that we have to protect ourselves from an overreaching—” Berkowitz interrupted before Barack could say “presidency.” “So you are opposed to the Patriot Act?” he asked. “Absolutely. Absolutely. Would have voted against it. And I think it is a shame that we had only one U.S. senator in the entire U.S. Senate who voted against it.”

Then Berkowitz shifted to school vouchers, which he had previously pressed Barack on. “Can’t we put the old tape on?” Barack replied. “We have to consider every possibility of improving what admittedly is an intolerable school system for a lot of inner-city kids. I do not believe in vouchers. I am a strong supporter of charter schools” because “we do have to innovate and experiment to encourage competition in the school systems.” In contrast, over time vouchers would “reduce the options available particularly for the hardest-to-teach kids, because a private market system will not ultimately try to reach the toughest-to-teach kids.”<sup>27</sup>

In August, the Hull campaign launched additional television advertising downstate, with their candidate declaring that “every American deserves quality, affordable health care.” In Chicago, the campaign debuted on seven black-oriented stations a sixty-second radio ad featuring Bobby Rush. “My friend Blair Hull,” Rush proclaimed, “is an independent voice who will make sure that we get our fair share.” Barack acerbically told the Sun-Times that “the nice thing about actually having a track record of service in the community is that you don’t have to pay for all of it.” Skepticism was in order, for “whether the message is coming from Bobby Rush or anybody else, one would be hard pressed to believe that an individual who has never worked on issues important to the African American community during the first sixty years of his life has suddenly discovered these issues.”

Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller reported that “all the talk now on the Democratic side is about Barack Obama and Dan Hynes.” Like Rick Ridder, Miller believed Democratic voters wanted candidates “who will shake up Washington.” Dan Hynes “can be painted as a cautious careerist, which is the kiss of death in the current atmosphere. Obama could be seen as too cerebral and maybe even unelectable because of his race and his different name. Democratic primary voters don’t trust unknown millionaires . . . like Blair Hull. Gery Chico is mostly unknown” and faced dire questions about the collapse of Alheimer & Gray. Treasurer Maria Pappas “is well-liked and well-known in Cook County,” but “she hasn’t raised any money, she has no campaign infrastructure,” and “insiders generally dismiss her.”

Barack continued his day-in, day-out rounds of small public appearances and donor solicitation meetings. A few months earlier his good friend Rashid Khalidi had accepted Columbia University’s offer of a prestigious academic chair. As he and Mona prepared to leave Chicago for New York, Barack spoke at a Friday-night good-bye party that doubled as a fund-raiser for Mona’s Arab American Action Network. Rashid, like Mona, had remained a public political voice, telling one U of C forum that George W. Bush “uses ‘terrorism’ to justify measures which are blatantly unconstitutional” and observing that “the office of the President is the costliest to buy.”

As Barack’s Senate candidacy had intensified over the previous twelve months, Barack and Michelle’s attendance at the almost nightly dinners at the Khalidis’ or Bill Ayers and Bernardine Dohrn’s home declined. “Sometimes it was just her,” Mona recalled, because “we would call her when she was alone.” Michelle always seemed “more natural, less reserved” than Barack, Mona thought, but “all our kids were very taken by him.” Malia and then Sasha too had often come along, especially to Bill and Bernardine’s home, because “our children were great with younger children,” Bernardine explained, “and so it just worked for them to come for dinner because the children would be carried around and would be busy and would be happy.” Bill remembered Barack from those years as “a decent, compassionate, lovely person: pragmatic, middle-of-the-road, and ambitious.” Bernardine recalled that by 2003 it was “so clear that he’s driven, he’s a politician . . . a politician, heart and soul.” At the Khalidis’ August 1 good-bye party, Mona remembered that in his remarks, Barack “never said the word Arab, he never said the word Palestine,” which at the time, given the setting, seemed “very strange.”<sup>28</sup>

By mid-July, Barack’s team of consultants had prepared a second comprehensive poll that Paul Harstad and his partner Mike Kulisheck conducted later that month. Sixteen months had passed since Harstad’s exceptionally encouraging first “benchmark,” and the 806 likely Democratic primary voters who responded to this one showed that potential candidate Maria Pappas was notably popular among black Democrats, with 50 percent viewing her positively, only 7 percent negatively, and 24 percent saying “don’t know.” Dan Hynes’s numbers came in at 33–5–34, while Barack trailed at 20–2–64. With the other 14 percent of respondents responding “neutral,” 78 percent of African Americans remained unfamiliar with Barack, only slightly better than the 84 percent who were unfamiliar with Blair Hull. Among all respondents, Dan Hynes polled 24 percent support, and Barack and Pappas each 15, when voters were asked to choose a candidate. Among African Americans, Barack led Pappas 34 to 16 percent.

The poll then proceeded to candidate descriptions, with half of respondents being told that Barack was “a proven progressive voice” who had “passed landmark laws to help working families” and the others hearing that “he brings fresh thinking” and “innovative, new ideas.” Following the biographical recitations, Hynes led Barack among all respondents 26–17, while among African Americans Barack led Joyce Washington 39–16. When a question about Barack’s name was posed, responses turned from negative to mildly positive after “named for his late father” was added. Barack’s status as a U of C law professor outdid even “first African American president of the Harvard Law Review” as a positive, and once Barack’s many legislative achievements were cited, respondents’ support for him grew to 46 percent, including 71 percent of blacks. Additionally, the 203 African American respondents in the Chicago media market were asked the positive-neutral-negative-don’t-know question about a host of mainly African American names, with Father Mike Pflieger coming in tops at 70–0, Rev. Clay Evans 69–3, former judge Eugene Pincham 69–5, and Emil Jones Jr. 54–5.

In preparation for an all-day August 4 meeting of Barack’s team of consultants, Harstad prepared a graphical presentation highlighting particular findings. In response to the initial vote-choice question, 42 percent of black men, but only 28 percent of black women, chose Barack, and while 44 percent of South Side African Americans named Barack, only 20 percent of other blacks did so. But, after all of the biographical information had been offered, not only had Barack’s overall support risen from 15 percent to 46, among African American men it had jumped from 42 to 73, and among black women from 28 percent to 69. Looking at the entire sample, “the Most Movable Voters to Obama,” once his background had been fleshed out, were white women in relatively prosperous households. Another summary chart highlighted how both Dan Hynes and Maria Pappas had 66 percent name recognition statewide, with Pappas at 86 percent and Hynes 69 in the Chicago media market, while Barack was 36 and 45 percent. Interestingly, among Democratic voters who knew all three candidates, Barack led both Hynes and Pappas 39–21–13.

Obviously “Obama has major room for growth” as voters learned more about him. A cover memo that Paul gave his colleagues in advance of the August 4 meeting stated that Barack “is already fully competitive with” Hynes and Pappas, “even though Obama is only known to half as many voters.” Barack “is by far the preferred favorite of African Americans,” but also “has tremendous room for growth once he becomes better known in this community.” Barack “also has a lot of room for growth in downstate Illinois,” where at present only 15 percent of voters had heard of him. Overall, the poll documented “that to know Barack Obama is to like him,” for Barack “has broad appeal and a lot of room for growth.” Harstad rendered his bottom-line finding in headline fashion: “Obama Has Potential to Reach as High as 46% in Multi-Candidate Primary.”

In the wake of Harstad’s upbeat presentation, Cauley circulated a memo to the consultants and the staff that he said was “the beginnings of the campaign plan.” In his first four weeks in Chicago, Cauley initially was stunned that “everybody in the campaign” had a credit card. “I went in there, and all those kids had credit cards, and I cut them all up” as one way of husbanding precious funds. “All those kids” was a bit of an overstatement because in addition to Dan Shomon, Claire Serdiuk, and deputy campaign managers Audra Wilson and Nate Tamarin, only on August 1 had Obama for Illinois’s tiny staff grown from six to seven when intern Liz Drew went on salary to join Randon Gardley as another finance assistant for Claire. A recent graduate of Brown University, Liz had been recommended to Barack by Tom Hazen, a family friend whom Judd Miner had successfully represented in an age-discrimination case. Along with University of Illinois junior Lauren Kidwell, who was about to return to school, Liz had supported Claire and Randon in staffing events, to which Barack insisted upon driving himself rather than having a driver.

Cauley expanded the campaign's tight quarters by moving from the fourteenth floor at 310 South Michigan to a larger, unfinished space on the seventeenth. Barack initially was perturbed by all the exposed wiring, but when Jimmy deftly explained that encasing them would cost several hours' worth of Barack's call time, Barack immediately replied that they looked just fine. Nate Tamarin knew that Barack "just hated" call time, but Cauley's arrival meant increased discipline, and "the campaign really ramped up," Audra Wilson recalled. The campaign had yet to hire an African American outreach director, and when Barack asked longtime AFSCME lobbyist Ray Harris to take on the role, he instead recommended AFSCME organizer Kevin Watson, whom Dan Shomon also knew. Cauley had the experience to be campaign manager, but as a newcomer to Chicago and Illinois politics, "the care and feeding of the local animals," as Jimmy put it, remained Shomon's responsibility. After some brief "uneasiness at the beginning," Cauley realized how "immensely useful" Dan was for anything in Illinois politics, and the two became an effective team.

Dan and Ray Harris arranged to introduce Barack to Kevin Watson at Mellow Yellow in Hyde Park, and as often happened when Barack drove himself, he arrived more than an hour late. "You've got regular time, and you've got Barack Obama time," Watson came to learn. Barack apologized, and almost immediately asked Kevin to join the campaign as base vote director, saying that Ray and Dan's judgment was conclusive. Cauley's campaign plan called for expanding the staff as slowly as possible, although both another finance assistant and a press person could not be delayed much longer. Cauley's memo also recommended some "media training" for Barack to "Work on the Passion Gap" the consultants saw in Barack's overly professorial public speaking style. By the end of September, campaign scheduling would be complicated by Barack's four-days-a-week class schedule at the U of C, but he could not afford to take leave for the autumn quarter, although he would have no choice but to do so for the winter 2004 one. Some initial appearances on "urban" radio during the fall could boost Barack's name recognition among black voters, but the veto session would occupy seven days in November.

Once candidate petitions were filed, Joyce Washington's would be reviewed with an eye toward whether Barack could become the only African American candidate. In mid-January a final eight weeks of radio ads would commence, with the extent of Chicagoland television advertising dependent on how the next six months of fund-raising went: hopefully five weeks at a frequency of 4,000 "gross rating points," or in the poorer alternative three and a half weeks at 3,050 GRPs. The bottom line was crystal clear: "Barack Obama goal of 35 percent on election day," a 2 percent increase from Pete Giangreco and Terry Walsh's initial targeting figure, but one they had agreed to revise slightly upward. Their updated "Integrated Strategic Plan" hoped for the Democratic presidential race to remain competitive up through Illinois's March 16 primary because "turnout will be enhanced, and Obama will be the likely beneficiary" as more black voters went to the polls. "To become the established African American candidate on the ballot is to build votes from a rock-solid base," Giangreco wrote as he increased Barack's projected vote share to just under 50 percent in Chicago and just more than 40 in the balance of Cook County. A statewide goal of 413,000 votes would mean victory with just more than 35 percent.<sup>29</sup> northwestward to Galena, where the Illinois Federation of Teachers' thirty-eight-member state board was interviewing the candidates as part of an annual retreat. "We'd had a good relationship with Dan Hynes for many years," IFT political director Steve Preckwinkle recalled, and there was only a "pretty slim" chance that the union's endorsement might go to anyone else. Some board members had questioned the utility of even interviewing Hynes's opponents, but Preckwinkle's experience with Barack in Springfield led him to say, "there's at least one more serious candidate for us to interview." Just before Barack's 11:00 A.M. session, Preckwinkle cautioned him, "I can't promise you that the outcome of this is going to be favorable to you." Barack "puts his hand on my shoulder. 'Steve, that's fine. I didn't ask for any guarantees,'" and said he appreciated the opportunity. "'Now it's up to me.'"

The morning after the consultants' daylong meeting with Harstad, Barack made a three-hour drive

The session lasted only thirty minutes, but Barack "literally just blew them away," answering "every question" on issues like No Child Left Behind with "total command of the facts." As a result, "our board was probably ready to make an endorsement decision that day," but Preckwinkle recommended that they hold off for three months to see how Barack's fund-raising progressed. "I told Barack I thought he did an excellent job," that "he helped himself a great deal and probably made himself a contender with the board when he had not been prior to that." When Dan Hynes asked how he had done, Preckwinkle answered honestly: "Frankly, probably a little flat, at least compared to one of the other candidates."

The next Saturday was Bronzeville's annual Bud Billiken Parade, with Jim Cauley reprimanding Barack for walking "the whole damn parade with his shades on. 'You gotta look people in the eye!'" he scolded. A Monday-night event in Elgin hosted by the African American Ministerial Alliance drew only twenty-five people to hear about "a chance to believe again," Barack's campaign theme, but his entire staff plus young volunteers Juleigh Nowinski and Tarak Shah pulled out all the stops to have as many supporters as possible present for the Illinois State Fair's annual Democrat Day on August 13. Barack led off his remarks by describing a conversation he had had only an hour or so earlier. "Walking into the hotel this afternoon . . . I was stopped by a woman who actually works in the statehouse" and who told Barack that her mother had suffered a stroke and her Medicare coverage was expiring. Now the secretary might have to quit work to stay home and take care of her. "Ultimately, the only reason that we should be involved in politics is to give this woman a fighting chance," Barack told the crowd as Hynes, Hull, and Chico waited their turns. The question "is not whether you're going to vote the right way as a Democrat, it's whether you're going to fight as a Democrat. I'm tired of watching Democrats go to Washington and fail in the face of the Republican onslaught. I'm tired of Republicans taking a mile and then we take back an inch and call it a victory." Democrats needed a Senate candidate "who is battle-tested, has been in the trenches, fighting in the state Senate" for programs such as the FamilyCare expansion, thanks to which fifty-five thousand Illinois families "are going to have health insurance because of a bill I passed."

Six months later, Barack would use that hotel lobby conversation again. "'Senator, I know how busy you are, but I want to talk to you for a moment,'" Barack recounted. "'Sure, what's going on?' 'My mother, who's aging, fell down and broke her hip. And she went into the hospital, and it looked like it was supposed to be a simple operation but something went wrong . . . she is now paralyzed. . . . She has two choices. She can get long-term care up in Chicago 200 miles away from me, or she can come home, and I will have to care for her 24 hours a day, which would mean that I would have to give up my job. And I don't know what to do.'" Then "she started crying," and Barack added, "I always think back to that story."

Rich Miller reported that at the fairgrounds that Wednesday, "Barack Obama gave the best speech, hushing the often chatty crowd with a stirring account of a family overwhelmed with medical bills.” Thursday was Republican Day, with Miller reporting that women staffing the Democrats’ tent were distracted by Republican Senate candidate Jack Ryan’s good looks. “Ryan has something about him which attracts attention and interest,” Miller explained. Barack cited the hotel conversation during a cable-TV interview with host Frank Avila, saying such a “typical” story showed why the U.S. needed to “move in the direction of a universal health care plan.” Barack also called for “universal preschool” and emphasized how as a U.S. senator, he would “be a check against overreaching by the executive branch,” such as when a U.S. attorney general “decides that ‘I want to be able to read Frank Avila’s emails’ without having to go to a judge” for a warrant. Asked how he would best describe himself, Barack replied, “I think I’m a populist.”

On Sunday evening, Barack and Republican state senator Steve Rauschenberger jointly appeared on host Bruce DuMont’s two-hour, nationally syndicated Beyond the Beltway radio show. Also in Chicago but on the phone was Democratic presidential candidate Howard Dean. “It’s great to talk to you, Governor. Congratulations on the terrific work you’ve done so far,” Barack gushed. Dean returned the compliment. “I see a lot of people around with Obama buttons on. I didn’t know who you were until I saw those buttons and asked.” Barack was exultant. “I like that. I like that,” he told Dean. “I actually share many of your views.” After Dean signed off, Barack explained that “I like Dean a lot” because “there is an enormous hunger for plain-speaking Democrats” such as Dean. “He takes a clear stand, he speaks his mind.”

Asked why he was running, Barack said, “I think that George Bush is making the wrong choices, and Democrats need somebody who can stand up to him. . . . The problem with the Democrats in Washington sometimes is they get rolled, or they don’t stand up for issues, and then they carp at Republicans who do have oftentimes the courage of their convictions, and I give George Bush credit for that.” Too often “Democrats seem timid when it comes to very commonsense issues that I think ultimately could generate support not only from Democrats but also from Republicans.” When a caller asked about illegal aliens, Barack responded that “immigration is a net plus to the economy, and that includes illegal and legal,” because “we end up benefiting from the work that’s done and the taxes that are paid by undocumented workers.” Throughout the show, the give-and-take between Barack and Rauschenberger was very genial, and as the program was wrapping up, Steve said in the Illinois Senate race Barack is “the Republicans’ number-one fear.”<sup>30</sup>

The next morning the Chicago Sun-Times’ Steve Neal embraced the results of Paul Harstad’s late July poll. Obama is in “a very strong position to win” and a growing number of politicians “regard Obama as the most likely winner. . . . If the black community rallies behind Obama, he will be very difficult to stop” and “would be the instant favorite over any Republican now in the field.” In a subsequent column, Neal stated that Barack was “consolidating his base in the African-American community and among lakefront and suburban independents,” although Neal also said that Barack’s campaign was benefiting from a “finance committee that includes real estate developers Penny Pritzker and Tony Rezko” as well as Newton Minow, Abner Mikva, John Rogers, and Bettylu Saltzman.

Dan Hynes’s polling showed him with a strong 26–15–12 percent lead over Maria Pappas and Barack, but with Blagojevich signing Barack’s nightclub safety, EITC expansion, and domestic violence protection bills into law, commendatory press clips ensued almost daily. John Kupper joked about “riding the wave of Barack bill-signings and Steve Neal columns” in a memo to Barack’s other aides while calling for an event featuring “jobs and/or pensions,” because “fighting to protect pensions was the number one argument for Barack” in Harstad’s detailed poll findings. The consultants turned their attention to selecting a press secretary for the campaign, eventually recommending Pam Smith, an African American public relations consultant who had worked on Jesse Jackson’s 1988 presidential campaign. Barack took the lead in interviewing Kaleshia Page, a Smith College and Vanderbilt Law School graduate whom Audra Wilson knew and who had just finished a fellowship in the governor’s office. “You went to law school? Why aren’t you practicing?” Barack demanded. “He just hammers me,” because “he did not understand why I was not using the skills and experience I had.” She thought “this man’s attacking me,” and “it was just a little paternalistic,” but as soon as Kaleshia left, Barack called her cell phone to apologize and invited her to join Randon Gardley as a finance assistant to Claire Serdiuk. “Sorry I was a little rough on you,” she remembered him saying.

Jim Cauley brought on Madhuri Kommareddi, an impressive Northwestern University senior who had volunteered in the spring before devoting the summer to her senior thesis, as operations director. Fellow undergraduate Lauren Kidwell, back at the University of Illinois for her senior year, began staffing a new Obama for Illinois Springfield office two days a week, and a young Rock Island woman, Andrea Hance, began working in Lane Evans’s Quad Cities area. Before long both Juleigh Nowinski and Adam Stolorow, a Brown graduate and army veteran whose best friend had met Cauley in a D.C. bar, went on staff as well. As Jimmy put it with only slight exaggeration, Barack’s campaign staff “was me and sixteen kids and Shomon.”

Barack got a notable piece of good news when he was endorsed by well-respected Whiteside County Democratic Party chairman Lowell Jacobs, breaking Dan Hynes’s phalanx of downstate support, on account of Barack’s strong stance against the war in Iraq. Old friend Scott Turow remembered that it took Barack three phone calls before Scott agreed to host a late-August fund-raiser. “Why won’t you support me?” Barack pressed. “Look, you told me that you were going to beat Bobby Rush, and he kicked your ass, and now you’re telling me that you’re going to win the Senate race?” Scott responded. “Okay, tell me one of the people who’s either announced or who’s thinking about this that you’d rather see as U.S. senator,” Barack replied. “No one.” “Then you have to support me,” Barack insisted, and Scott gave in. “I thought it was pretty adept,” Turow said.

That same day Barack called on U.S. representative Jan Schakowsky, whom Dan Hynes also “was really courting,” Jan recalled. “What both of them wanted from me was the progressive stamp of approval,” but she was very troubled by Hynes’s position on the Iraq war: “that was huge for me.” In contrast, Barack’s “war speech was very important,” but she was concerned about how his unusual name would fare on a statewide general election ballot. Attorney Alan Solow, who had been so impressed with Barack months earlier, had spent much of a weeklong summer trip to Israel trying to convince Jan to endorse Barack, arguing that “he stands for everything you believe in.” But someone familiar with Schakowsky’s thinking explained that when Barack visited her office to ask for her endorsement, “there was such an arrogance that it was off-putting.” She held back from making a decision, telling Pete Giangreco that Barack had been “kind of disrespectful” and complaining to AFCSME’s John Cameron that Barack “came to see me, and he was kind of a jerk.” Cameron, who had witnessed Roberta Lynch’s angry confrontation with Barack a month earlier, fully understood: “he came to see us, and he was a jerk!”

In contrast, Emil Jones talked up Barack's candidacy during a long, late-summer interview with Capitol Fax's Rich Miller. "We as a caucus had a great session," and "I think our greatest accomplishment was reform of the criminal justice system," Jones explained. Barack's "chances are excellent. He's a very, very bright, articulate individual. I've known him long before he went to law school. We've been friends many, many years." Jones predicted Barack "will pick up substantial support. He has a great mixture of supporters," and "I think he will do an excellent job because he is able to attract voters from outside his base." Would Joyce Washington's presence hurt Barack among black voters? "I don't think her candidacy is going anywhere. I told her she shouldn't be running." What about Blair Hull? "I don't think you can buy an election."<sup>31</sup>

By early August, Hull's consultants and top campaign staffers realized they knew less about their candidate than they should. Some Hull staffers knew that his 1998 divorce from former wife Brenda Sexton had been contentious. One of Hull's earliest hires recalled that "I heard about it from one of Axelrod's people." Then the opposition researcher whom Joyce Washington had retained to look into both Barack's and Hull's backgrounds gave a friend who was leaving Hull's staff a more specific tip, and Kennedy Communications soon located a police incident report that described how on February 9, 1998, "Hull Was Arrested for Domestic Violence." While Hull had been "arrested and taken into custody," the charges were dropped before any court appearance after Sexton filed for divorce, and a significant financial settlement was quickly reached. The incident report was available only at the Chicago Police Department's 18th District Near North Station if someone knew enough to go there and request it.

Rick Ridder convened a Saturday-morning conference call to discuss the problem. "There's some stuff he hasn't told us," media consultant Anita Dunn warned pollster Mark Blumenthal, but of the more than fifteen people on the call, only Hull and his close friend Pat Arbor agreed with veteran Chicago political hand Fred Lebed that the campaign should inoculate itself by quickly giving the story to Sun-Times political columnist Steve Neal. "We would have weathered that," Lebed explained, because whatever controversy ensued would be old news by March 2004. Dunn and others disagreed, and pollster Blumenthal later admitted to The New Yorker's David Remnick that "the amount of money people were making was a factor" in the failure of anyone who was being paid by the campaign to advocate the disclosure of something that potentially could cut it short.

Soon after the call, Ridder asked Hull's secretary for Hull's complete divorce file, and as soon as Ridder reviewed it, he called Hull at his vacation home in Sun Valley, Idaho. By far the most explosive document was a seven-page affidavit Brenda Sexton had executed on March 12, 1998, and filed as part of her divorce suit, one that Hull had never laid eyes on: "he never saw the allegations," Ridder explained. But given the affidavit's contents, "this campaign's over if this ever comes out," Ridder told Hull. He flew to Sun Valley to go over everything with his candidate, and the good news from Hull's lawyers was that the case file in Hull v. Hull was sealed, making the documents immune from public request.

Discovery of Sexton's affidavit convinced Ridder there was no point in leaking news of Hull's arrest to the Sun-Times because "it only leads to the sealed document, and we can't survive really the sealed document." An in-person meeting of all the campaign's consultants was quickly set for Saturday, September 6, at Anita Dunn's Washington office. Almost twenty people attended, because, as pollster Mark Blumenthal put it, by that point the Hull campaign was "like the Noah's Ark of consulting: two of everything." Ridder led the meeting, describing the arrest and the incident report, and alluding to the further allegations in Sexton's sealed affidavit. There was some discussion regarding how vulnerable a sealed Chicago court file was, but Hull and Sexton were now back on friendly terms. Five months earlier, Sexton had been named director of the Illinois Film Office by Governor Rod Blagojevich, whose gubernatorial campaign Hull had supported with more than $450,000, and Ridder was cautiously optimistic that Sexton would cause no harm. Meeting her at a Chicago Starbucks, Ridder gently asked whether some of the allegations in the sworn affidavit might in retrospect seem overstated, but Brenda "breaks down in tears," explaining that "I can't recant" because that "would be perjury."

Hull's background was such that "I'm able to estimate probabilities pretty well," and he asked Ridder: "What are the chances of this story getting out?" Fifty percent, Rick answered. Hull then asked Ridder to poll all the consultants for their estimates of his chances in either instance. "Blair wants your odds on winning if the affidavit becomes public and if the affidavit does not become public," Ridder told them. Ridder's own estimate was "5 to 10 percent at most" in the first scenario, but about 40 percent in the latter. Blumenthal had not seen the document, but he knew Barack and Hynes had stronger political bases than did Hull. "If the affidavit becomes public: 20 percent," he wrote Ridder. "If the affidavit does not become public: 25 percent." Ridder recalled that these numbers "didn't faze" Hull, and Hull had a similar memory of it. Most estimates were "25 or 30 percent," and "that was probably higher than my number," because Hull believed victory was "a long shot," although to him that "was a wager that I felt was worth taking."<sup>32</sup>

On Labor Day, Barack was in Rockford and then Rock Island. As John Kupper had recommended, a press release drew five Chicago TV stations to a news conference and garnered a Defender headline Kupper could have written: "Obama Seeks to Protect Pensions." Steve Neal reported that Emil Jones "has bluntly told union leaders that labor should support Obama," and those efforts had so far blocked Dan Hynes from getting the two-thirds support necessary for the Illinois AFL-CIO's endorsement. Rich Miller described Hynes as "the man to beat" because of his "big-time labor support" and "the backing of just about every county Democratic chairman." While Hynes "has put together a pretty good organization," his name recognition remained "pretty low" for someone who twice had won statewide races for comptroller. But Hynes "has yet to say why he's running," and "his campaign is bereft of issues." In addition, Hynes's "overly cautious, conservative manner" showed that he "has no anger about him," despite many Democrats' strong antipathy toward the Bush Administration. Miller saw Hull "more as a spoiler than a potential victor," someone who could draw enough votes away from Hynes to help Obama. As "a thoughtful progressive," Barack "would probably be the best U.S. Senator of all the candidates in either party" if he could overcome "his name and his race." Miller dismissed Joyce Washington and Gery Chico while commending Nancy Skinner and Maria Pappas's potential, though the undeclared Pappas "has no organization, no campaign infrastructure," and "no policy ideas." Miller wrote that if Barack could "somehow portray" to voters that "by far" he is "the most impressive potential Senator," he would have "a good shot" at prevailing.

In Springfield, almost everyone knew Steve Rauschenberger "was always the smartest guy in the room." But Rauschenberger's desire for the Republican nomination to replace Peter Fitzgerald was hobbled by uncertainty about "whether we can pull together a fund-raising plan that we can execute." Capitol Fax noted that insiders considered a past DUI arrest as a stain on Rauschenberger's record, but Miller saw potential in little-known, pro-choice former air force general John Borling because he had been “blown away” by Borling’s “candor and forthright style.” But Illinois Republicans were most focused on Jack Ryan, who “has the good looks, the money and the personal bio to wow voters,” especially suburban women. Given that challenge, soon after Labor Day, Rauschenberger publicly proposed that he and Barack mount their own “Lincoln-Douglas style” series of two-man, bipartisan statewide debates. But Barack, with his campaign on firmer footing than Rauschenberger’s, saw no reason to go toe-to-toe with a whip-smart conservative.

At a West Side birthday event for Congressman Danny Davis, Barack reached back to his Roseland roots and proclaimed that “corporations have an obligation to their workers and to their communities.” Barack’s press clips continued to glow, with Sun-Times columnist Laura Washington echoing Rich Miller in declaring that “Obama is by far the most qualified candidate,” even though “he may be too smart, too reserved, and perceived as too elitist for regular black folk.” Washington explained that “it’s the Uncle Leland problem. My uncle says that low-income and working-class blacks don’t think Obama is ‘down’ enough. It’s a cultural phenomenon, and it’s rooted in an unfortunate strain of anti-intellectualism and distrust of those with close associations with the white power structure.” Steve Neal was more upbeat, writing that “there is growing momentum for Obama in the black community.” Washington contended that Barack “needs a better slogan than his lame ‘a chance to believe again,’” and downstate political reporter Mark Samuels noted that Barack’s “last name rhymes with ‘Osama’” while praising him as “a really bright guy.” Barack told him, “I probably enjoy campaigning more downstate than I do in Chicago,” and oftentimes southern Illinois white voters “remind me of my grandparents.” But Samuels warned that “the backdoor whispering campaign surrounding Obama promises to give a whole new definition to the word ‘ugly.’”<sup>33</sup>

Crain’s Chicago Business, the weekday newspaper of the city’s commercial elite, looked at Barack’s second-quarter FEC filing. “Obama’s surprisingly strong showing” negated the question of “whether he could raise enough money” to be a top-tier candidate. “I think a lot of people are surprised,” Barack told Crain’s. “It has exceeded my expectations, and it’s very heartening. I think we’re going to be able to keep pace and be competitive with the other candidates,” so long as Barack continued to devote more than twenty hours a week to call time.

One recurring challenge that Barack had faced since 1995 was keeping up with the extensive questionnaires presented to him by various interest groups. A thirty-nine-item one from Illinois NOW proved especially taxing. Audra Wilson took charge of drafting responses to questions that included, “Would you vote to repeal the U.S. Patriot Act?” “Yes. The Patriot Act has the potential to infringe on personal freedoms of many Americans, which is wrong.” Reviewing her answers after unsalaried policy director Raja Krishnamoorthi e-mailed him the draft, Barack rewrote that response. “Yes, I would vote to repeal the U.S. Patriot Act, although I would consider replacing that shoddy and dangerous law with a new, carefully crafted proposal that addressed in a much more limited fashion the legitimate needs of law enforcement in combating terrorism.”

Audra initially answered “yes” to two questions that asked if Barack supported the elimination of sexual orientation discrimination in the military and repeal of the federal Defense of Marriage Act. Barack changed the first response to say, “I would oppose policies that fail to advance equal rights in the military,” and suggested “I believe changing the federal definition of ‘marriage’ would unnecessarily detract from efforts to pass a domestic partnership law” as a reply to the second. Barack asked Raja

“whether people think it sounds too squirrely,” and in the end his answer stated, “I support laws recognizing domestic partnerships and providing benefits to domestic partners. However, I do not support legislation to repeal the Defense of Marriage Act.” In the affirmative, Barack emphasized that “universal access to health care is one of my top priorities,” but addressing a question asking “Would you oppose legislation that criminalizes transporting a minor across state lines by anyone other than a parent for the purpose of obtaining an abortion?” Barack e-mailed Raja to say, “I’m still not clear on this. . . . Is this an issue the choice community feels strongly about?” After Krishnamoorthi’s team of policy volunteers weighed in, the final answer was “I would oppose any legislation . . . which fails to include an exception for minors who have been victims of sexual abuse, neglect, or physical abuse by a parent.”

Barack won more Chicagoland news coverage with a press release that generated a September 11 Defender headline touting “Obama’s Security Plan Aims to Stop Terrorists.” Claiming that “our homeland security efforts are flagging because this administration has failed to provide adequate support to the state and local agencies on whom our security depends,” what Barack actually called for was “$3 billion to hire, train, and equip” seventy-five thousand new firefighters, a wonderful gift horse for organized labor.<sup>34</sup>

With Dan Hynes finally formally declaring his Senate candidacy, Barack’s campaign team refined their “Campaign Prospectus” and “Integrated Strategic Plan” for presentation to donors. “We think 35 percent will win the election” and “fighting for middle class families” will be the central theme. After summarizing Paul Harstad’s highly encouraging July poll results, the prospectus made the campaign’s potential clear: “if Obama has the resources to get on television state-wide, he will win the Democratic primary and go on to win in November.” Harstad outlined a plan for four to six early 2004 tracking polls leading up to March 16, plus a pair of January “focus groups” tilted toward “high income women” to refine the campaign’s message points before television ads were written and produced. Depending on fund-raising success, the campaign’s overall broadcast media budget could range from $2 million up to $3 million.

Raja Krishnamoorthi’s issues and policy team volunteers continued to churn out succinct, high-quality briefing papers for Barack to absorb on topics ranging from “Bush’s Economic Stimulus Plan” to “Health Insurance Coverage Proposals and Costs.” Attorney Andrew Gruber remained a mainstay of Raja’s team, but throughout 2003 Dino Christenson, a young political science Ph.D. who was working for former DNC chairman David Wilhelm, became another invaluable contributor. Barack often e-mailed his policy advisers late at night after returning home from that day’s donor appointments, call time, and evening appearances. One Sunday former UNO organizer Bruce Orenstein and his wife Nancy MacLean hosted a fund-raiser at their Rogers Park home, and the next weekend Barack attended multiple events in Springfield, Champaign, and Decatur. Barack was still resisting a regular driver, but Dan Shomon recruited his friend Andrew Boron, another policy team volunteer, to drive Barack from Champaign back to Chicago. Boron had drafted a position paper on Israel, and during the drive, he told Barack about Harvard law professor Alan Dershowitz’s just-published book, The Case for Israel. Boron was taken aback when Barack “said to me point blank that ‘The problems in the Middle East were caused by the Jewish Americans’ community’s unwillingness,’ or ‘inflexibility,’ I think was the exact word, and I was sort of floored” that Barack had said this.

Randon Gardley, Kaleshia Page, and Liz Drew staffed Barack’s Chicagoland events, but finance director Claire Serdiuk and consultant Joe McLean tried to expand the campaign's fund-raising efforts to other big U.S. cities where Barack had old friends or new acquaintances. Hasan Chandoo recruited close to a dozen people for a late-September New York event. Hasan, like Rob Fisher, was one of the few old friends whom Barack regularly telephoned, but his enthusiastic support of the war in Iraq had created an awkwardness in their relationship. From New York Barack headed to Washington, joining Congressman Jesse Jackson Jr.'s table at the annual Congressional Black Caucus dinner and attending a fund-raiser at the Kalorama home of former Harvard Law Review colleague Jon Molot. One attendee at Molot's home remembered that Barack "spoke forever. He went on for an hour," answering questions interminably. "Barack's been a law professor too long . . . it really was not good."<sup>35</sup>

Barack got far better reviews back in Illinois for several weekend events in Carbondale and a Sunday reception at Raghuvier Nayak's Oak Brook home. On Monday, September 29, the U of C Law School's autumn quarter began, with Barack's Con Law III meeting Monday, Tuesday, and Friday mornings at 8:30 A.M., and his Racism seminar Thursdays from 4:00 to 6:00 P.M. Gery Chico's struggling campaign launched a $500,000 television advertising campaign featuring four thirty-second ads, which media consultant Eric Adelstein knew was "a high-risk strategy" to increase Chico's name recognition. A pair of prominent Sunday Chicago Sun-Times stories drew attention to Chico, but none that he welcomed. "Gery Chico and the Firm That Failed" said that "hundreds of employees were left without jobs" when Altheimer & Gray imploded in late June. One former partner blamed "a combination of mismanagement and malfeasance," and another said, "Chico pretty much abandoned his post." A sidebar piece titled "Polls Show Scant Support" noted that Chico was drawing only 3 or 4 percent support even though he had been the first Democrat to declare, and "some of Chico's rivals predict he'll pull out in the next few months." With a double-barreled assault like that, Chico's donations were in danger of declining even further.

Like Eric Adelstein, David Axelrod was thinking about the Obama campaign's upcoming television ads, and on October 2, he sat down with Barack to film a conversation aimed at producing air-worthy snippets. "I'm not that different from many young African American men who don't know their fathers," Barack asserted, "and . . . I think that helped motivate me to get into the kind of work I do." He spoke to a checklist of his proudest Springfield achievements: KidCare, Illinois's EITC, and being "the point person for Democrats in the Senate for protecting and preserving civil liberties and civil rights" by "making sure that we have got some sort of privacy and security from government." Then he turned to health care reform, his signature issue: "We lack the political will to fight the special interests that are preventing significant health care reform. Drug companies are making record profits, insurance companies are making enormous amounts of money . . . we lack the political will to fight back against companies that are driving up these health care costs. . . . If in fact we wanted to provide health care to all citizens, we could do it with the amount of money that we have." Democrats were part of the problem, because too often "people get elected and then they're so afraid to lose" that "they're not willing to fight for the people that sent them there in the first place. Too often Democrats lack the courage of their convictions."

Regarding the Iraq war, "the price tag on it should have been apparent to anybody who was reading the newspapers. . . . We should have understood that that was going to be a decade-long commitment that was going to cost billions of dollars precisely at a time when we have enormous needs here at home." Last, Barack turned to religion and Trinity UCC, saying that Jeremiah Wright "is a wonderful minister and it's a wonderful congregation. . . . My church life informs me and provides great support not only to me, but to my family.”<sup>36</sup>

That evening, former U.S. senator and Democratic presidential candidate Bill Bradley publicly endorsed Barack. Raja Krishnamoorthi, who had worked for Bradley, had arranged an introductory meeting a year earlier after telling Bradley that Barack was someone he should meet. “That was the only time I’ve ever known Barack to be on time for a meeting,” Raja recalled. “It went really well,” and “Obama was on cloud nine” afterward. Bradley’s Chicago appearance failed to generate any notable local headlines, but just forty-eight hours later was the campaign’s first televised debate, sponsored by the Illinois NAACP. All six Democrats—Barack, Gery Chico, Blair Hull, Dan Hynes, Nancy Skinner, and Joyce Washington—were joined on stage by five Republicans.

Barack appeared quite subdued even before hearing three references to Osama bin Laden early in the telecast. When Barack’s turn finally came, he stressed that “I was the only candidate who spoke out publicly against this war” because “we had no proof that there was an imminent danger, an imminent threat.” He stated that “we have to support Israel, the only democracy in the Middle East,” while backing “a two-state solution that allows Palestinians their legitimate aspirations.” He called George W. Bush “the most fiscally irresponsible president we have had in the history of our nation,” citing the need to “roll back those Bush tax cuts that go to the wealthiest Americans.” Republican Jack Ryan proclaimed that “the biggest civil rights issue of our generation” is the hundreds of thousands of mainly minority children trapped in “failing schools.” Blair Hull emphasized that “universal health care is a right,” and Nancy Skinner observed that “there could be nothing more unpatriotic than the Patriot Act.” Barack complained that “we don’t have a voice in Washington for working families,” also saying that “we have no African Americans in the U.S. Senate.” He advocated “full federal funding of campaigns in order to take the special interests out,” and in his closing statement he asserted that “manufacturing has vanished from the Illinois landscape.” In his final remarks, Barack said that “our government seems more intent on rebuilding Iraq than rebuilding here at home” and forcefully stressed that “I have a track record of delivering.”

The debate received little attention, and the Chicago Tribune ignored it entirely. Sun-Times columnist Steve Neal wrote that Dan Hynes “is maintaining a steady lead” in the Democratic race while saying that Barack and Chico had turned in the two best debate performances. The next Sunday Barack campaigned in suburban Oak Park before attending a fund-raiser hosted by Oak Park acquaintances Susan Himmelfarb and Mike and Susan Klonsky. Tuesday was Barack’s SEIU endorsement interview, where he again apologized for his present vote five months earlier. At 7:00 A.M. on Wednesday, Barack did his first rush-hour campaigning at a Chicago L station, at the busy North Side Fullerton stop. A campaign press release announced “Obama Breaks $2 Million Fundraising Barrier” thanks to raising $775,000 between July and September. His campaign had almost $1.5 million in hand, and the next day, Barack again had breakfast with Tony Rezko before heading to Metro East’s St. Clair County and rescheduling his Racism class from Thursday to Friday. On Sunday morning, Barack attended Trinity’s 7:30 A.M. service, and early on Monday, he was at the South Side 95th Street Red Line terminus before meeting with Rev. Jeremiah Wright.<sup>37</sup>

By mid-October, even while on vacation in Mexico, David Axelrod was drafting a script for the first of Barack’s two initial sixty-second radio ads, scheduled to debut on WVON 103 FM and WGRB 1390

AM the week of October 20. He sent John Kupper an e-mail suggesting “State Senator Barack Obama, candidate for U.S. Senate, talks about his family, his faith and his mission.” His unusual name was explained immediately—“My father was from Kenya”—just as Paul Harstad’s poll results had instructed. “I’ve been a member of Trinity United Church of Christ for fifteen years” established Barack’s Christian bona fides. Axelrod’s suggested closing declared, “Join the movement. Barack Obama for the U.S. Senate.”

The final version, which would air for six weeks, began with a black female announcer using Axelrod’s opening line—“his family, his faith, and his mission”—word for word as David had drafted it. That was followed by Barack saying: “My father was from Kenya, and he was a part of that first generation who came to the United States right after independence. I teach constitutional law at the University of Chicago. I’ve been a member of Trinity United Church of Christ for the last fifteen years, and my faith as a Christian is deeply important to me; it provides me with the values that inform my politics.” Then back to the announcer: “In Springfield, Barack Obama won battles to extend health coverage to tens of thousands of uninsured children, tax relief for the working poor, a ban on racial profiling, and historic death penalty reforms.” Barack again: “Every person in this country should have basic health care coverage, every child should have a chance to have a decent education, every able-bodied person who wants to work should be able to get a job.” The announcer proclaimed Axelrod’s slogan—“Join the movement. Barack Obama, Democrat for the U.S. Senate”—before the required closing: Barack said, “This is Barack Obama, and I approve this message,” and the announcer said, “Paid for by Obama for Illinois Inc.”

Two overlapping versions of the second ad featured four figures well known throughout black Chicago: Father Michael Pflieger, Operation PUSH’s female Rev. Willie Barrow, Far South Side state senator Rev. James Meeks, and West Side congressman Danny K. Davis. In one, Rev. Barrow called Barack “a proven leader” and “the most qualified candidate.” She declared that “Barack Obama stands up for us,” and Barack said, “On health care, the war in Iraq, and so much more, our voices haven’t been heard,” before the announcer again invited listeners to “Join the movement.”

The second began with the announcer saying, “Respected voices within our community agree. State senator Barack Obama for the United States Senate. Here’s Reverend and Senator James Meeks.” “Barack Obama is a leader among leaders. We look to him in the state Senate when there is a tough and a difficult decision,” Meeks asserted. “Barack Obama will be a voice for the little guy, for the common person, a senator who’s concerned about those who are unemployed, about those with no health care, about those who are paying these high prices for prescription drugs.” “Here’s Congressman Danny K. Davis,” the announcer said. “All of us will benefit from a Barack Obama in the Senate. As Barack begins to talk, America will say, ‘Here is another great voice, another great possibility, another great potential to move this country forward,’” Davis intoned. “Join the movement. Barack Obama, Democrat for U.S. Senate,” the announcer declared.

Barack’s campaign began organizing a rally for Saturday, November 1, at Pleasant Ridge Missionary Baptist Church on the West Side, where they hoped to garner footage for future ads. Ten days earlier, Barack was at an evening planning meeting at the popular MacArthur’s Restaurant when “some young men came in, sort of crashed the meeting,” Barack recounted. “They came in, and they said, ‘You know what, Senator Obama, you should have respected us in coming here. You should have contacted us first.’ I said ‘Well, I didn’t know about you.’ And one of them I did know, and I said ‘I’ll give you the number.’ And they were kind of confused, and they’re frustrated and angry . . . ‘We feel as if we’ve been ignored too long . . . that all the politicians . . . y’all don’t care, and y’all have failed us.’ That’s what they said: ‘Y’all have failed us,’” and “I told them, I said, ‘You’re right. I agree. We have failed. We failed because somewhere along the line we decided that it was standard operating procedure for half of the young men in Chicago to be out of work and out of school.’” Barack promised them, “Just because we’ve failed in the past does not mean that we have to fail in the future,” and the gang members left.<sup>38</sup>

The next morning, Barack flew to Washington for a fund-raising event at the home of African American power broker Vernon E. Jordan. About fifty Democratic insiders, including fund-raising consultant Joe McLean, old Law Review friend Julius Genachowski, and well-known attorney Greg Craig listened as Barack spoke from Jordan’s staircase. For some, it was their first exposure to Barack, and Craig was hugely impressed. Back in Illinois, Emil Jones Jr. and Jill Rock, Jones’s staff operations director, reenergized Democrats’ public pension investment reform efforts, which had lain largely dormant since 2001. The Illinois State Board of Investment (ISBI) had a new executive director, William Atwood, and several new board members, including Barack’s close friend and former law firm colleague Allison Davis, whom Tony Rezko had proposed. The ISBI board moved to allocate a minimum of 5 percent of its funds to minority-owned firms, and Jones’s staff pressed the board of the State Universities Retirement System (SURS) to detail its use of minority fund managers. SURS reported that 7.1 percent of its broker commissions were going to African American firms, but Jones moved to add further oversight, creating a special Senate Select Committee on Public Pension Investments and naming Barack as one of four Democratic members. Bill Atwood remembered Barack asking, “How are we doing with emerging managers?” whenever they ran into each other, and John Rogers of Ariel Capital recalled that Barack “did a great job of coming and helping us as African American business leaders connect into Springfield.”

On Saturday morning, Barack and his five Democratic opponents all addressed Citizen Action of Illinois’s eighty-nine-member policy council. “You need a U.S. senator who’s not going to be thinking ‘How’s this going to play?’ but one who leads,” Barack told the sympathetic group, and he won their Senate endorsement with 88 percent support. The Chicago Tribune’s first Senate poll found the yet-to-declare Maria Pappas drawing 16 percent support. Dan Hynes and Barack trailed with 12 and 9 percent, respectively, but 45 percent of Democrats said they were undecided. Hynes launched his first television ad that same day, telling viewers that “if building schools, roads, and hospitals is right for Iraq, then it’s right for America too.” The diversity of Barack’s campaign outreach was highlighted on two back-to-back days when he delivered the keynote address at the annual meeting of the Illinois State Baptist Convention and then held a press conference to publicize his support in the gay and lesbian community. Michelle’s longtime friend Kevin Thompson had taken the lead in pulling the group together, and although only one reporter, Tracy Baim from the LGBT Windy City Times, attended, “Obama addressed the room as if it was full,” Baim remembered.

On Friday, October 31, Steve Neal reported that Maria Pappas would finally enter the race the next week. While Dan Hynes “has already raised more than $2 million, has locked in the endorsements of key Northwest and Southwest side Democratic organizations, and has lined up significant Downstate support,” Pappas’s high name recognition and personal popularity throughout the Chicago media market immediately made her a top-tier contender.

Barack's big Saturday-morning rally drew a bevy of West Side politicians, but Pleasant Ridge Missionary Baptist Church was only half full for the Obama campaign's cameras. Cook County commissioner Earlean Collins told the crowd, "We have a separate set of laws and justice for African American people in this country," while praising Barack's fortitude. "I know that he will deal with the terrorists in the White House because we got a lot of them up there. We talk about terrorists and all of this stuff. We better look at the White House first when we talk about terrorism around this country." When Barack took the podium, he ran through his Springfield achievements before turning to the Senate race. Referencing how Blair Hull's wealth could manifest itself on Election Day in what Chicagoans called "street money," Barack cited the late Mayor Washington: "I remember what Harold said: 'Take the money, then vote for me.'" Saying "we've got five months left in this race," he promised that "I will go to Washington, and we will start taking this country back."<sup>39</sup>

Forty miles to the north, the Illinois Federation of Teachers' forty-one-member executive board was meeting in Gurnee to decide the powerful union's Senate race endorsement. Barack's seven-page IFT questionnaire, recounting his positions during "six long and sometimes lonely years" in Springfield, had raised no hackles and bore several personal touches. "My experiences with my five- and two-year-olds confirm that their brains are sponges," and Barack rued "teachers who have left the profession out of frustration and enter law school." A "slam-dunk endorsement" for Barack passed overwhelmingly. Media outlets across the state noted that the IFT's endorsement undercut both Dan Hynes's stature as labor's favorite son and Gery Chico's efforts to stress education. "It's a tremendous boost to my campaign," Barack told State Journal-Register political reporter Bernard Schoenburg. Capital Fax described the IFT's decision as "potentially huge," with Miller soon adding that further major union endorsements of Barack's candidacy—namely SEIU and AFSCME—loomed as well.

As the IFT press conference ended, Bernie Schoenburg asked Barack about his history of illegal drug use, and Barack said that during high school and college, he had smoked marijuana, and "I did inhale." Schoenburg followed up, asking about anything else, and Barack responded, "I haven't done anything since I was twenty years old." Three days later, Schoenburg reported that conversation at the end of a catch-all piece, but within a day or two, someone told him he should look at Dreams From My Father. Schoenburg went to the library and quickly realized that Barack's abrupt ending of their chat—"That'll suffice"—cloaked how his response contradicted how Dreams said he had done "a little blow." Schoenburg reached Barack on his cell phone seeking clarification, and Barack quickly apologized, saying that "I had caught him off guard," and he "didn't want to step on" the IFT endorsement by creating other news. "My life is literally an open book," Barack told Schoenburg, and the next Monday a follow-up story headlined "Frank Talk About Drug Use in Obama's 'Open Book'" appeared on page 17 of the Journal-Register.

In a taped interview with journalist Terry Martin that ran statewide on the Illinois Channel, Barack emphasized that the federal Patriot Act had caused "fundamental principles" to be violated thanks to the widespread, warrantless electronic surveillances it allowed. Asked about his Harvard Law Review editing experience, Barack said, "I haven't read a law review article probably in quite some time." His hardworking issues team had prepared a sophisticated tax incentive program that would reward "REAL USA Corporations"—REAL as in "Responsible, Accountable, Loyal"—for creating new U.S. manufacturing jobs, provided those companies "limit top management compensation to 50 times the lowest-paid full-time worker.” That press release drew no attention at all, but at a Saturday South Loop candidates’ forum for one hundred top Chicago high school students, Barack’s “outreach director” Randon Gardley was swamped with interested teenagers following Barack’s remarks. “I don’t like to base my decisions on auras of people,” fifteen-year-old Andrew Miller told the Chicago Tribune, but Barack “could be president in 15 years.”<sup>40</sup>

Capitol Hill’s Roll Call profiled the Illinois race, calling Barack “poised and charismatic” while reporting that Dan Hynes is “widely regarded as the favorite.” Crain’s Chicago Business predicted that in twelve months “Barack Obama narrowly beats Jack Ryan,” but a quick fund-raising trip to Boston was a huge disappointment for Barack. Harvard law professor David Wilkins, who already had donated $5,000, hosted a fund-raiser, but Barack’s former teacher Martha Minow recalled that hardly five people attended. Her law school colleague Elizabeth Warren was one of them, writing a $250 check, and several weeks later David’s wife Ann Marie, a successful music manager, contributed $10,000 to Barack’s campaign too.

Back in Illinois, Barack continued to resist having a driver for his often-hecktic schedule of appearances. When Lyndell Luster, a Chicago State University police officer and part-time student, turned up to volunteer after hearing about Barack from a professor close to Emil Jones, both Dan Shomon and Jim Cauley took notice. With the primary race moving into its last four months and more attention focusing on the candidates, neither Dan, Jimmy, nor especially Michelle Obama were keen on Barack being on the road by himself. Randon Gardley often accompanied Barack to African American events, and in late October AFSCME veteran Kevin Watson arrived on staff as base vote director, but Luster’s CSU job meant he routinely carried a sidearm. When Lyndell drove Barack a time or two, mentioning that “I never knew my father” and had experienced some earlier troubles, the two developed a good rapport. Both men smoked, and when Lyndell drew Barack out a bit, seeking assurance that no “secret stuff” would torpedo his campaign, Barack reassured him: “Look, brother, I promise you, none of that stuff will ever surface about me.” Lyndell thought Barack shared his view that “I never have a bad day,” because “I never saw him lose it. He never lost his cool.” Over time Lyndell realized that Barack “had this self-checking mechanism” on his emotions, because “I never saw him get upset.”

No one except Michelle knew Barack better than Dan Shomon, and as the campaign intensified, Dan saw that the increased stress was taking a toll. The most evident indication was that Barack was smoking even more. Almost a decade had passed since Michelle had first made Barack promise to quit smoking once Dreams From My Father was finished, but as Dan knew, Michelle “wasn’t successful as an enforcer.” Barack “would smoke in front of Michelle,” but he especially smoked while driving, and he was “smoking a lot in the Senate campaign.”

Compared to years earlier, Barack also had become more finicky about what he ate. On one downstate drive, Barack “just blew up” because “he wanted some healthy food, and there wasn’t healthy food” anywhere to be found. “We were tired and stressed,” Dan explained, but young Randon Gardley experienced the same thing. Randon too knew that Barack was “pretty even-keeled,” but “the weight of the campaign” plus how “at home it was just a real challenge for him financially” led to “a lot of cigarettes.” Under stress, Barack could “be snappy” and “not a very pleasant person to be around.” Some staffers thought Barack barked more at African American men than at others. “There were some of us that he was a lot more unpleasant with than others,” one put it, and “I noticed the difference and didn’t appreciate it.”

With the veto session’s final week about to start, a Chicago Tribune profile lambasted Bobby Rush for his “suspiciously punitive” support of Blair Hull over Barack. Noting that Rush’s brother Marlon was drawing a handsome salary as Hull’s deputy campaign manager, African American journalist Don Wycliff wrote that Rush’s behavior “has inspired bitter anger and deep suspicion among many opinion leaders in Chicago’s black community.” Barack tried to persuade veteran Citizen Action leader William McNary to join his campaign to give it further African American heft, but McNary demurred, telling Barack he needed to be less professorial in front of black audiences.

On Monday, November 17, the second big union endorsement fell into place, with SEIU announcing its widely expected endorsement of Barack. House Speaker and state Democratic Party chairman Michael Madigan quickly made official his support for Dan Hynes, but Rockford Register Star political editor Chuck Sweeny warned that “when Hynes’ ward bosses battle Hull’s dollars, the two men could cancel each other out,” allowing Barack to win. Barack joined Jesse Jackson Sr. and other black political leaders at a small pre-Thanksgiving rally in the Loop protesting the Bush administration’s record on job creation, but Jackson was shouted down by the same young black men who had interrupted Barack’s meeting at MacArthur’s a month earlier. Kevin Watson was with Barack and watched as one protester “snatched a microphone” from Congressman Danny Davis while several others were “tearing up people’s signs.” They “were really shouting at Barack,” and Kevin thought “it was such a scary scene,” but Barack was “calm and cool and he’s talking to them.” A Tribune reporter heard Barack say, “I understand you’re angry, brother, and I want to talk to you—please call me” as he handed one young man his card. Barack “was the only one that they allowed to go up there and speak that day,” Kevin remembered.

On Sunday morning, Barack and Kevin drove two hours northwest to Rockford, for appearances at five black churches. Introducing Barack to “base vote” Democrats outside of Chicagoland was a key element in Pete Giangreco’s statewide targeting strategy, and Rockford, just like Decatur and Springfield in central Illinois and Madison and St. Clair counties down in Metro East, was a community where African American outreach was essential. Barack also took time to speak with Register Star political editor Chuck Sweeny, whose story “Obama Leaves Good Impression” told readers that “if resumes were dollars, Obama would be worth a few billion.” Revisiting his theme from two weeks earlier, Sweeny wrote that “Democratic establishment types tell me the race is between Hull and Hynes. I say if he gets enough money and troops to market himself in all Democratic strongholds, the charismatic academic from Hyde Park can win the nomination.”<sup>41</sup>

Sweeny was not alone. Suburban Daily Herald columnist Jack Mabley complained that “opponents try to imply he is a Muslim,” but predicted that “if Illinois votes Democratic as usual next year, Barack Obama will make history.” Barack’s campaign continued to churn out almost daily policy-specific press releases, most of which continued to win prominent coverage in the Chicago Defender. One story highlighted Barack’s plan for “providing health insurance to all,” and the West Side’s Austin Weekly News offered an enthusiastic endorsement of Barack’s candidacy, complaining that “it’s perverse for black nationalists to reject the son of a Kenyan for not being black enough.” Chicago Tribune reporter David Mendell asserted that Barack has “so far campaigned almost exclusively in the black community,” but more accurately added that Hynes’s union support “is not as broad and solid as had been expected.” Barack’s fund-raising remained strong, with members of Jim Crown’s extended family donating tens of thousands of dollars after meeting Barack at a December 1 reception.

Friday, December 5, was the end of the law school's autumn quarter. Barack's Con Law III had attracted twenty-six students, and Racism and the Law had drawn twenty-eight. Barack had been late several times, with students willingly waiting for him, and in both courses his teacher evaluation scores held up fairly well even with the scheduling issues. In Con Law only one respondent said they would not recommend the class to others, while all but two in Racism said they would recommend it. In the race class, which included a number of left-wing students from the university's school of social work, 3L Nathan Smith remembered that Barack "often actually took kind of the conservative position in class in response to their comments." Barack "knew all of our names" and "was incredibly engaged as a professor." He no longer had time to chat with students after class, but his comments led Smith to conclude that Barack believed that "legislative action is more effective than judicial action in bringing about actual results in structurally oppressed minority communities." During the last class, Barack cited Derrick Bell's critique of Brown v. Board of Education and Justice Clarence Thomas's powerful 1995 opinion in Missouri v. Jenkins arguing that there was nothing necessarily inferior about all-black schools. "When you have two people on the left and the right that come together on a point of analysis so outrageously controversial, namely that Brown v. Board wasn't the panacea that all American lawyers are required to say that it is, I would suggest for your consideration that it is a proposition worthy of thinking about," Smith would recount Barack telling his students.

Early Monday morning, December 8, Barack and Dan Shomon filed ten thousand petition signatures in Springfield to secure Barack's place on the March 16 ballot. Nate Tamarin and longtime Barack ally Al Kindle had used the petition effort to begin building up the Chicago field operation they would need for the primary. That same day, in a move that attracted no attention, Barack resigned from the Senate Select Committee on Public Pension Investments to which Emil Jones had appointed him only six weeks earlier. From Springfield, Dan and Barack began a downstate swing encompassing Decatur, Edwardsville, Marion, and Rock Island.

Late on Tuesday, sad and politically horrible news arrived: former U.S. senator Paul Simon, who earlier in the fall had told David Axelrod he would endorse Barack, had died at age seventy-five after undergoing eight hours of unsuccessful heart surgery. Axelrod had favored postponing Simon's endorsement until early 2004, but now he was gone. A Chicago Tribune headline proclaimed "A Legacy of Honesty and Dignity," and Barack told the Associated Press, "Paul Simon was an inspiration to every American who believes that government can be a force for good, a tool for empowering people and righting injustice." With a Saturday visitation and a Sunday service in Carbondale, Barack altered his schedule to join a who's who of Illinois politics plus such Washington eminences as Senator Edward M. Kennedy in honoring Simon's life. Comparing the Senate candidates to Simon's career, Capitol Fax's Rich Miller wrote that "nobody stacks up, although Barack Obama has the potential to at least step into Simon's shoes, if not actually fill them, and Steve Rauschenberger is in the ballpark." In Carbondale, Simon's daughter Sheila, who knew of her dad's intent to endorse, offered her condolences to Barack: "I am so sorry this really worked out horribly for you."<sup>42</sup>

On December 15, the last day on which to file petitions for the March primary, Joyce Washington and Nancy Skinner submitted their signatures. Barack's campaign was ready and waiting to take a fine-toothed comb to a copy of Washington's submission, but the deadline for filing an objection was just seven days away: Monday, December 22, at 5:00 P.M. On Tuesday morning, it was announced that U.S. representative Jan Schakowsky would hold a press conference later that day to endorse Barack. Her husband Bob Creamer recalled that Jan's earlier hesitancy had dissolved "once it became increasingly clear" that Barack "was putting a real good campaign together." Evanston Democrat Larry Suffredin explained that "Jan's endorsement of Barack was a breakthrough for him" because among North Side and North Shore progressives, Schakowsky's support was "a big deal."

Barack was disappointed by the media turnout at the press conference, with the Chicago Tribune not attending. Afterward, a young journalist asked Barack to address the challenge of fund-raising "without having to prostitute yourself." Barack conceded that "certainly I believe as you advance up the political ladder, it becomes more difficult, which is why I think ultimately we will fully recapture our democracy when we provide free airtime for candidates." Barack reiterated his belief that "every single person should have a basic right to health care," and in the wake of Schakowsky's endorsement, observers like Rich Miller and Steve Neal concluded that "Obama has the momentum" among the Senate contestants.

Inside Blair Hull's heavily staffed, no-expense-spared campaign, the results of Mark Blumenthal and his partner Anna Bennett's early December poll led Hull's consultants to think much the same thing. Barack's support among African American Democrats was now up to 29 percent, thanks to his increased name identification, and his support among liberal, college-educated Cook County white Democrats had risen to 18 percent. In the overall statewide numbers, Maria Pappas narrowly led Dan Hynes, 19 to 16 percent, with Barack and Hull trailing with 13 and 12 percent, respectively. The downstate numbers were worrisome for Hynes because over the previous ten months, his support had slipped from 37 to 23 percent as Hull's had risen from virtually nothing to 23 percent thanks to his television advertising. As Hull's consultants prepared for a December 9 meeting to discuss the numbers, pollsters Bennett and Blumenthal realized that "for Obama, getting to 30 percent was relatively easy." Barack could win the race with about 35 percent if he captured 80 percent among African Americans, 50 percent of Cook County white liberals, and a smattering of white liberals elsewhere.

Lead consultant Rick Ridder understood the challenge: "the big issue in the campaign was could we cut Barack Obama's numbers in the black community with Bobby Rush, with cash, whatever to close to 75 percent," rather than anything higher, so as to keep Barack at 30 percent and allow Hull to win a narrow plurality. Mark Blumenthal thought the hurdle was insurmountable because "there was no scenario that I could get Hull over 30 percent." The realization that "I just didn't see how we could win this" led Blumenthal to wonder about the propriety of going forward. "People were getting paid a lot," and when Mark raised the question with his partner, Anna's response was "It's not our job to talk him out of running. It's our job to help him win. If he wants to run, it's our job to help him." Bobby Rush and his brother Marlon attended the December 9 conclave, and with the congressman insisting that Barack could not win more than 60 percent of the African American vote, Hull's consultants agreed to push forward.<sup>43</sup>

The next Saturday, the top African American women on Barack's campaign, Audra Wilson and Pam Smith, convened two focus group discussions at Malcolm X College on the West Side. Pam moderated the first group, composed of eight black women, asking them what they knew about the Democratic Senate candidates. One of two female pastors in the group immediately said Barack "is a member of Trinity Church, Pastor Jeremiah Wright, and he lets his biblical teaching inform his politics." The second clergywoman noted that "Obama has experience" thanks to "all these bills that he has passed, and he worked with the devil himself, Pate Philip, and got some legislation passed.” She had been at the PUSH rally and had watched as Barack dealt with the young men trying to disrupt it. “Obama said, ‘Have your piece.’ Man, this brother is smooth. I liked the way he handled them. . . . He knows what the concerns of the people are. I see young white kids and older white people working for this young man, and they respect him. I think he has a sense of fairness about him. He is concerned about employment.”

An older woman said she would vote for Barack. “The name kind of struck me, but when I found out that his dad was African,” that explained it. “He kind of reminds me of Martin Luther King” in “his fairness, his calmness.” A second lady agreed. “He does have good spirit. He is friendly and warm. He is not flirtatious. He is a young man full of wisdom, but he is settled. I think he genuinely cares for all people. . . . He has something about him that makes everyone around him want to help him. And he tells you that his name means ‘blessed by the Lord,’ and that is the way he acts. I mean, this brother has his act together.” A third woman said she had attended a small fund-raiser and had witnessed “this conversation he had with his daughter and her little friend” after “one was running around and one got mad at the other one. And the mother was there too, but he took the lead, and I said, ‘Let me check out his negotiating skills. If he could negotiate with these two kids, then he could go to Capitol Hill.’ . . . So I was just watching him negotiate with these two little girls, and that sold me. I could tell a relationship was there.”

Then Pam read a brief summary of Barack’s biography and top issues to the group and asked what appealed. “Civil rights attorney,” one woman responded. “That really stood out to me.” “Health care for all children,” said a second. A third lady agreed: “Health care. When I think of health care, I think that should be available to everyone.” One of the pastors said “what stands out to me with Obama is the fact that he is a law professor, and that he is biracial. Because to me, it would take something like that for him to advance, even after he gets into the Senate, to maybe run for president.” She explained that “the fact that he is biracial should let them know that he understands both cultures, and that he is a law professor, so he is certainly intelligent enough to do the job. . . . And the fact that he passed legislation for racial profiling lets his own people know that he is really aware of things.” Pam asked about Barack’s Kenyan heritage, and several women in succession said, “I love it.” “This man has a global vision,” one explained. “If your parent is from another country . . . your view is larger than the United States.”

Audra Wilson moderated the second group, of eleven black men. One said Barack is “very articulate, very neat looking,” with “a good clean reputation.” While “driving through a white neighborhood” he had seen some Obama yard signs, and “I searched the Web,” and “I found that he’s a very active and effective political leader.” A second man was impressed by Barack’s work to expand job opportunities for ex-offenders because “the record keeps most people unemployed when they come back to the community.” A third said, “here’s a guy who is Harvard educated,” who “has all this education and is trying to do something for the community. That’s a positive.” Another volunteered that “considering all that he has done in the community, I think it’s cool that he has a white woman for a wife.” Others quickly corrected him, saying mother, not wife, and Audra noted “lots of laughter—group is happy his wife is black.” The one fellow explained, “I thought his wife was white, and I said, ‘Wow, he has a white trophy, and he’s still out doing all this in the community.’” Another man noted that Barack had been “consistently in and out of issues in the Defender,” and the group also compared notes about what benefits Bobby Rush may have received in exchange for backing Blair Hull.

Those two discussions went a long way toward indicating that Barack’s base was indeed solidifying, but Jim Cauley still had his campaign workers examine Joyce Washington's petition signatures to see if she, like Alice Palmer, might have submitted too few valid ones to make the March 16 ballot. On Sunday evening, December 21, the Obama team convened for a two-hour conference call, and election lawyer Michael Dorf, who had reviewed the findings, told the group that an objection had a 50–50 chance of success. “What the hell does that mean?” Jim Cauley asked. Under pressure, Dorf increased the odds to 55–45, but he said he was not certain that “this was a winning challenge.” Almost everyone on the call spoke in favor of filing. Given their goal of winning with a 33 to 35 percent plurality, Washington might attract just enough black voters to deny Barack the margin he needed. As Cauley argued, “if she clips off three points, you can't get there,” but David Axelrod was concerned that targeting Washington “might really crash our brand.” Barack felt similarly, asking, “How would it look? Will I get flak?” Everyone appreciated Barack's “history with Alice Palmer,” which Audra Wilson thought “so haunted him,” and Dorf understood that “the worst thing was you challenging a black woman and you lose.” Barack sided with Axelrod. “Yeah, I don't want to do this,” but Barack agreed to sleep on it until the next day. So as to keep their options open until the last minute, Dorf on Monday was “standing in the lobby of the Board of Elections at five to five with two suitcases” and “my cell phone . . . waiting for Nate Tamarin to tell me ‘Go file it’ or ‘Don't file it,’” Dorf recalled. But Barack did not change his mind. “We're not going to do that,” and Nate's 4:55 P.M. call to Dorf was brief: “Go back downstairs.”<sup>44</sup>

As the Christmas holidays approached, the big news was the federal criminal indictment of former governor George Ryan in the bribes-for-licenses scandal from his time as secretary of state. Barack, Michelle, and their two daughters were leaving for Honolulu on December 23, but when Jim Cauley first found out about that plan, “I went ass stomping in there . . . ready to chew his ass” and “a big fight” ensued. Jimmy knew about Barack's missed vote on the 1999 gun bill but did not realize that Christmas in Hawaii was an annual pilgrimage. Jimmy wanted as large a fund-raising total as possible when the FEC quarterly reporting closed on December 31, and his candidate was about to take a week off. “Jim, my sister's getting married” and her father was deceased, Barack explained. Maya and Konrad Ng were indeed having a wedding ceremony on December 28 at Oahu's Paliku Gardens, but they had already legally wed eleven months earlier in Las Vegas. Jimmy told Barack, “Fuck you!” and walked out. “What pissed me off was his fuck-you attitude about it,” Cauley explained.

In Honolulu, Maya was teaching at the U of H's Educational Laboratory School and working toward a Ph.D. in education. At the ceremony, Barack gave a “poetic introductory speech” that his father's old friend Congressman Neil Abercrombie found “mesmerizing.” Konrad and Maya read love letters to each other and exchanged rings, after which everyone shared a potluck meal.

On December 31 Barack and his family flew back to Chicago. His consultants had been busy projecting that with $1,750,000 cash on hand, and hopes for raising another $1,500,000, the campaign could afford three to four weeks of Chicago TV ads right before the primary. Jesse Jackson Jr. joined Barack at the opening of a south suburban Obama campaign office, and the next morning Barack was on V103, Chicago's top R&B radio station, for a “Battle of the Best” face-off against DJ Herb Kent. Choosing the Ohio Players, his favorite group during his youth, Barack came out on top. Barack's campaign schedule had him at Chicago L stations some mornings from 7:00 to 8:00 A.M., with weekend evenings at South Side nightspots like the Sandpiper Lounge and Sunday mornings in multiple black churches. A downstate strategy memo laid out a three-point game plan: capturing 70 to 75 percent of the African American vote outside Chicago by mounting a serious campaign effort in Metro East's Madison and St. Clair counties, pursuing support in conservative white areas where Barack enjoyed the backing of popular local politicians such as Lane Evans and state senators Denny Jacobs and Bill Haine, and mobilizing youthful supporters in university communities like Champaign, DeKalb, Carbondale, and Macomb.

Two groups of fifteen suburban North Shore white women were invited to meet with Paul Harstad on the night of January 8. David Axelrod had stressed to Harstad that "our goal should be, first and foremost, how to sell Barack to white progressive voters." He wanted "a great deal of probing about the war . . . to find out if it is, indeed, the trump card we think it is." Harstad should also "explore the name issues, and see if it engenders any reaction," because "the mission here is to focus on how to present Barack." The first group of women were fifty-five and older, and featured four who intended to support Gery Chico, two apiece who backed Dan Hynes and Maria Pappas, one each favoring Barack and Joyce Washington, with the balance undecided. Harstad began by asking them about the state of the country and the upcoming Senate vacancy. One remarked that Peter Fitzgerald was "probably too honest" for Illinois politics, and a second singled out Barack. "I like Obama. He is a constitutional lawyer with very high credentials."

When Harstad zeroed in on the Senate race, one woman cited Jan Schakowsky's endorsement of Barack and a profusion of Obama yard signs. "Young married man with family. Harvard." Another said, "his name is so interesting. What is he? . . . Is he black?" Someone cited Gery Chico's Altheimer & Gray debacle. "He took a multimillion business and threw it down the toilet." When Harstad focused on what the women knew about Barack, several cited Schakowsky's support, his educational background, and his U of C affiliation. Then Harstad showed the group video excerpts from the NAACP debate and sought their reactions. Various women said Barack sounded "very confident," "knowledgeable," "honest and real," and that he "is easy on the eyes." "Hynes sounded stiff" and Blair Hull "sounded embalmed," one remarked. When Harstad asked whose endorsements mattered the most to them, Jan Schakowsky, Abner Mikva, and the Sierra Club topped the list. Did Barack remind them of any celebrities? "Denzel Washington, Harry Belafonte, Sidney Poitier," came the replies. "We can't deny the fact that we are impressed by people's looks," one woman explained.

Then Harstad probed for Barack's negatives. "Many Democrats . . . are worried that a candidate named Barack Obama cannot win a statewide general election," he asserted, eliciting little reaction. There was also little response when Paul mentioned Barack's present votes. Harstad recited Barack's evasive initial denial to Bernie Schoenburg about drug usage beyond marijuana, and one woman remarked, "it just seems like a weird thing to protect." Finally Paul read a long, praiseful description of Barack's background and issue positions, including that "Obama has pledged to repeal aspects of the Patriot Act that threaten our civil liberties" and asked for reactions. "Be still my heart." "He sounds perfect." "The first African American president of the Harvard Law Review. That impressed me." "I like the fact that he is a constitutional law scholar." Lastly, Harstad asked what advice they would give Barack, and the responses were "Answer the discrepancies on the drug thing," "Answer the discrepancies on voting present," and "He should explain how he got his name."

After a half-hour break, the evening's second group was composed of women in their twenties to early fifties. Three supported Chico, with two each for Barack and Maria Pappas, one for Dan Hynes, and the balance unsure. For the Senate race, one immediately cited "Obama. He was in the Skokie parade. . . .

Paul Simon was his mentor . . . professor of constitutional law.” When Harstad followed up, other participants embraced Barack because of the first speaker’s comments. “Obama, because I just learned here that he was associated with Paul Simon.” “Obama . . . I knew about Paul Simon, and I was always incredibly impressed with him.” “I have always liked Paul Simon, and if he is his protégé, I am interested.” “Obama . . . Aside from the Paul Simon connection, I also like that he was well educated, taught constitutional law.” “Obama. He sounds electable. . . . Look at what happened around this table: he can garner a coalition!”

Then Harstad screened the debate excerpts. “Obama was very articulate,” one commented. “Hynes made me uncomfortable. Just another politician,” a second observed. “Do you think Obama’s race makes him more or less electable?” Harstad asked. “More” came the answer. “Hynes was so stiff,” another stated. “Hynes seemed like Dan Quayle,” someone added. At the Skokie parade, Barack “was as cool as a cucumber,” one recalled, but a second complained that Barack sounded “a little bit too street” on the video. Asked what endorsements mattered most, the women chose Planned Parenthood and IFT over Mikva and Schakowsky. Harstad closed by requesting their feelings about Barack, and one woman said “we all fell in love with him here tonight as Paul Simon’s protégé.”

Both groups of women were asked what items in Barack’s biography most stood out to them, and two points concerning expanded health coverage scored even higher than first black president of the Review. Schakowsky’s endorsement proved the most significant, and when the women’s numerical ratings of the video excerpts on a 1-to-10 scale were averaged, Barack scored 8.4, with Chico, Hynes, Pappas, and Hull trailing with numbers ranging from 6.6 to 4.2. Harstad and partner Mike Kulisheck found it “incredibly promising” that the North Shore women had been so “extremely receptive and supportive” regarding Barack’s biography. John Kupper, who along with Pete Giangreco had joined Kulisheck to watch the two groups from behind a one-way window, found the women’s reactions “really exciting,” with that “be still my heart” response the most memorable of all. The evening’s comments would go a long way toward informing how Kupper and Axelrod would prepare Barack’s broadcast ads, and how Giangreco and his partner Terry Walsh would write and design Barack’s direct-mail flyers.<sup>45</sup>

The next morning’s papers carried news that Dan Hynes had finally been endorsed by the state AFL-CIO. Hynes told reporters, “this is by far the most significant endorsement of the campaign,” and in Washington, The Hill said that it “could lock up the race for him.” The conservative National Review wrote that “Hynes appears well on his way to winning his party’s nomination” and that Illinois Republicans’ “best hope would be for state Sen. Barack Obama to upset him in the primary.” Far more knowledgeably, Capital Fax’s Rich Miller noted that Hynes “has been struggling to break out of the pack,” and “his unrepentant support for the Iraq war will probably be a big issue” as more Democratic voters focused on the campaign. With purposeful timing, the next day AFSCME announced its support for Barack. While the AFL-CIO endorsement would aid Hynes, the three big unions backing Barack—the IFT, SEIU, and AFSCME—“are incredibly active, organized and wealthy, and can field thousands of volunteers,” Miller stressed. Hynes had better use the AFL announcement “to create some much-needed momentum,” Miller warned, because “so far, his campaign has been on cruise control. The guy has held statewide office for 5 years and still hasn’t broken out of the pack. Not good.”

With only eight weeks until the election, the blizzard of questionnaires and endorsement interviews increased significantly. The progressive IVI-IPO questionnaire ran sixteen pages, and in it Barack called

“the so-called Patriot Act” “one of the most dangerous pieces of legislation to pass Congress in decades.” Barack reiterated his opposition to the Iraq war and called for “normalization of relations with Cuba” because U.S. “policies toward Cuba have been a miserable failure.” He noted that “our government is running an unsustainable budget deficit. We must move away from this perilous path of deficits.” Barack favored “a national moratorium” on the death penalty, even though “in theory, I support capital punishment for a very narrow band of heinous crimes, such as serial killing” and terrorist attacks. “What is occurring today in Guantanamo . . . is an affront to our Constitution. We cannot allow terrorists to cause us to sacrifice the very rights that make our nation special.”

Barack told his staff and consultants to take particular care with the Chicago Tribune’s ten-item questionnaire because the paper might publish his responses. Both a NOW representative as well as Jan Schakowsky had upbraided Barack for his “squirrely” answers regarding gay rights on their earlier questionnaire, and Barack now realized that “we actually fudged more than Hynes, and a lot more than any of the other candidates.” Although he wanted “to make our position clear and unequivocal,” the next day Barack again faced the same troublesome questions when he met with the lesbian and gay editors of the Windy City Times. Barack started out safely by saying that “one of my top priorities is moving in the direction of universal health care.” When the questions moved to gay equality, Barack declared, “I am a fierce supporter of domestic partnership and civil union laws. I am not a supporter of gay marriage . . . primarily just as a strategic issue. I think that marriage, in the minds of a lot of voters, has a religious connotation. I know that’s true in the African American community.” Editor Tracy Baim remembered Barack asking her to turn the tape recorder off so that “we could have an off-the-record conversation about same-sex marriage” and what was “realistic and pragmatic.” Back on the record, “strategically, I think we can get civil unions passed,” Barack explained, and “to the extent that we can get the rights, I’m less concerned about the name.” Barack said, “I’ve walked the walk on every single issue that’s been important to the LGBT community” and believed he had “an ability to translate my passion for equality and justice into a language that a broad audience can relate to and understand.” But afterward Barack called Baim “to clarify that he opposes” any new measures to prohibit same-sex marriages.

On January 15, the Chicago Tribune published the results of a small-sample poll that had been conducted a week earlier. It showed Dan Hynes, Maria Pappas, and Barack all tied with 14 percent apiece, Blair Hull at 10 percent, and 38 percent of Democratic voters undecided. Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller was stunned. “How can Dan Hynes possibly be polling just 14 percent in this race? And how is a relative unknown with a stunningly awful ballot name like Barack Obama staying even with him?” Although “nobody seems to be paying attention to the campaign . . . on name recognition alone, Hynes ought to be far ahead of the pack.” Hynes had run strong campaigns in 1998 and 2002, when he was elected and then reelected as comptroller, and he “is well liked and respected by the party regulars,” Miller wrote. “You’d think that all of that ought to be worth a benchmark of at least 20 to 25 points. Maybe when people finally figure out that a Senate race is on the horizon and they’re reminded who Dan Hynes is, his numbers will start to rise. But there’s something missing from his campaign. Back in 1998, Hynes put together a remarkable, vibrant organization. . . . But so far, he’s been running this campaign like a cautious old man.” Criticizing Hynes’s “ultra-traditional, low-key” effort, Miller highlighted how “so far, almost nobody knows that Hynes supported the war in Iraq,” which is “a huge no-no for most Democratic primary voters.” Noting Blair Hull’s 10 percent showing, “you can bet good money that he is taking most of those votes away from Hynes,” Miller observed. While Hynes’s Web site declared that “elections are about inspiring people and bringing them together,” Miller stated that “the only candidate who seems to be inspiring Democratic primary voters these days is Barack Obama.”<sup>46</sup>

Neither Hynes’s pollster Jef Pollock nor his communications director Chris Mather was worried. “The AFL was huge for us,” Mather recalled, and the campaign was untroubled that Barack was backed by IFT, SEIU, and AFSCME “because we got the AFL-CIO,” Mather emphasized. “We were premising a lot of what we had on a downstate strategy” featuring television advertising, Pollock explained, and he was more worried about competing with Blair Hull’s pocketbook there, not Obama. “We thought that downstate was where we would win it,” Mather agreed, “and we spent a lot of time down there,” for “downstate was absolutely key.” In Chicagoland, where Democratic ward and township organizations were at their strongest, “we were going to run more of a field campaign,” Mather remembered, and Pollock expected they would reap the benefits of “an amazing political infrastructure.”

Dan Hynes was similarly optimistic. “I felt like I had a lot of advantages . . . statewide name recognition, a support base, some of the traditional Democratic organizational support,” so “everybody viewed me as the front-runner.” Hull’s millions concerned him, but he thought Maria Pappas would further fractionalize the Chicagoland vote. Given Hull’s big media effort, “I had decided I was going to spend a ton of money downstate” to “keep pace with Blair Hull.” Hynes’s campaign had just gone up on downstate television, with Dan’s campaign manager, his brother Matt, telling the Associated Press that while “you might have 25 percent undecided in Chicago,” that could well be “50 percent downstate.” Dan realized that “the unions that went with Barack brought a lot to the table in terms of producing,” and he appreciated too how “that one legislative session was defining for him,” because Barack’s long list of 2003 bills enabled him to “show that he could get things done.”

Barack made just that argument in a campaign e-mail that went out the day the 2004 spring session got under way. The Senate race “will not be won by saturating the airwaves with commercials, nor will it be delivered by party insiders,” Barack wrote. “Instead, it will be won by communicating a record of real achievement on critical issues.” An astonishing three hundred people showed up at campaign headquarters for a Saturday volunteer rally, and Monday’s Martin Luther King holiday marked the opening of one Obama for Illinois office on the West Side and another on the South Side, just off the Dan Ryan Expressway at 5401 South Wentworth. A pair of College Democrats debates had Barack in Carbondale on January 20 and the next night at Northwestern University in Evanston. “I think the war on drugs has been a failure, and I think we need to rethink and decriminalize our marijuana laws,” Barack told the Northwestern crowd, adding, “I’m not somebody who believes in legalization of marijuana.” Friday morning at 7:00 A.M. Barack and Randon Gardley spent two hours greeting potential voters at the 87th and 79th Street South Side Red Line L stations.<sup>47</sup>

One by one, the Chicago Tribune had been running Sunday profiles of each Democratic candidate, and the early “bulldog” edition of Barack’s first appeared on Saturday morning, January 24. Tribune reporter David Mendell had had a long, pre-Christmas interview with Barack at 310 South Michigan and had watched him at a good many campaign events. In their first conversation, Mendell asked Barack about the millions of dollars Mayor Daley’s administration had devoted to the glitzy Millennium Park project just across Michigan Avenue rather than to struggling residential neighborhoods. Mendell was struck by the candor of Barack’s response. “How do you really expect me to answer that? If I told you how I really felt, I'd be committing political suicide right here in front of you." While several of Barack's closest confidants, particularly Valerie Jarrett and David Axelrod, were well-known Daley loyalists—or "stone-cold machine operatives," as one longtime organizer put it—Barack kept his distance from the mayor "without ever opposing Daley's wishes."

Barack might mouth off to young aides about challenging Daley for mayor should he lose the Senate race, but Barack "never took on any issues about the functioning of Chicago," school reform champion Don Moore explained. Moore saw Barack as "a very brilliant pragmatist" who had "worked his way up through the system." Campaign reform advocate Cindi Canary, who had been disappointed by Barack's complete deference to Emil Jones when the 2003 ethics bill was being weakened, agreed that Barack was "a very pragmatic politician." That was true in Barack's arm's-length relationship with Daley's "new machine" and in his close relationship with old-school Senate president Emil Jones, whom one top Illinois progressive termed "a very transactional guy." As Canary said of Barack's relationship to the Daley organization, "he was never really of it, or against it. He worked it, and it worked him. It was very mutually beneficial."

The same was true of the alliance between Barack and Emil Jones. By January 2004, Jones's investment in Barack's Senate candidacy was obvious to all who knew him. Everyone in Illinois Democratic politics realized that Jones was "a very, very smart man," and he was also seen as "warm and likable," a stark contrast to his Springfield bête noire, the "icily calculating" Michael Madigan. Jones's seething anger at the disrespect the House Speaker had shown him for years energized Jones in the legislature and in his fervent support for Barack over Madigan-backed Dan Hynes. "I think he wanted to send the message that there are multiple sources of power here in Illinois besides the traditional white Irish enclave of votes that had run Cook County politics for so long," Jones's number-two staffer Dave Gross explained. Unlike Madigan, Jones had some profound policy commitments, especially regarding increased education funding, and only Jones's steadfast backing had allowed Barack to make the headway he had with his racial profiling and videotaping bills a year earlier. Some of Jones's commitments, like his devotion to Chicago State University and his support for black business interests seeking increased public patronage, were indeed to differing degrees "transactional" relationships, but Jones's newfound devotion to Barack's advancement seemed heartfelt to everyone upon whom he leaned.

Within the Senate Democratic caucus, Jones's message was crystal clear: "You need to get behind your colleague," and "I want everybody to support Barack." While Terry Link, Denny Jacobs, Larry Walsh, and Bill Haine, as well as African Americans James Clayborne, Kim Lightford, and Jacqueline Collins had endorsed Barack, some liberal senators like Jeff Schoenberg and Susan Garrett had backed Dan Hynes. For organization loyalists like Martin Sandoval and Tony Munoz, the question of endorsing Barack never crossed their minds, but three white Southwest Side and south suburban senators who had warm relations with him—Lou Viverito, Ed Maloney, and Debbie Halvorson—felt they had to back Hynes. Maloney's ties to Hynes's father Tom were well known, and Viverito, who had supported Barack's congressional run, was Mike Madigan's state senator. "I understood my obligations," Viverito explained, and "I tried to explain" to Barack "that it was not a personal decision," but Barack took offense. "He was kind of bitter at the people that didn't support him," Barack's friend Mike Lieteau remembered, and with the good-natured Viverito, "Barack treated him like shit," Mike recalled. "Lou was very hurt." For Debbie Halvorson, who had taken on lots of new, mostly white territory in the 2002 remap, it was even worse. “I had no choice” because several local officials “threatened me” if she did not back Hynes, Halvorson explained. Dan Shomon had managed Debbie’s 1996 upset victory, but once her name appeared on Hynes’s Web site, Dan “comes over to me and says, ‘You are now the enemy,’” Debbie recalled. “Dan was the worst. Barack took it better than Dan did.”

“There were people in the caucus who went with Dan Hynes, and Emil stuck it to them every day,” Jones’s press secretary Cindy Huebner remembered. Jones made a special effort to neutralize the duo who had been Barack’s worst detractors since he arrived in Springfield. “There’s only two members that I had conversations with, and that was Hendon and Trotter,” Jones explained. “‘It wouldn’t be wise for me as the leader to put you guys in the position of power and authority if you cannot support this man over some silly, petty jealousy,’” Jones told them, directly threatening their Senate positions. “I said, ‘On my watch, it’s not going to happen.’” Hendon buckled. “I knew the president would like me a whole lot more if I went along with his wishes.”

Jones was equally direct with lobbyists. ComEd’s Frank Clark and John Hooker heard Jones’s message clearly. “Look, Frank, he’s absolutely my guy. I totally support him,” Jones told Clark, and Clark responded accordingly. “I did everything I could to get corporate support for him from both ComEd and Exelon and others” in order to comply with Jones’s request. Lobbyist John Kelly was as close to Jones as almost anyone, yet as a member of Chicago’s white Irish tribe, Kelly’s support for Hynes was unquestionable. Jones, however, “made people think twice about supporting other people,” Kelly explained. “He did that with lobbyists, he did that with people in Springfield. . . . It became clear that almost everything he was going to do, it was going to have some angle on getting Obama elected.” Whenever someone spoke to Emil about a pending bill, Jones asked, “Where are you on the U.S. Senate race? I want to support people’s initiatives who support my initiatives.” Concerning Barack, “to say that he was invested I think is an understatement,” Kelly observed.

Jones was not shy about acknowledging the forceful role he played. Jones felt obliged to live up to Barack’s observation that as Senate president he possessed “the power to make a United States senator.” Jones described it as “reverse psychology.” Barack “put the onus on me to prove that I had the power to do it. . . . He put it on me to prove that I could do it.” Barack “needed someone who had enough influence to be able to help clear the path. Otherwise he would never have gotten out of the backfield.”

By late January 2004, with the end-of-the-month FEC reporting deadline for fourth-quarter 2003 contributions approaching, Barack’s campaign knew that it would have the funds necessary for Chicagoland TV ads in the run-up to March 16. Obama for Illinois’s quarterly total of $827,000 had been helped by a last-minute $10,000 check from Tony Rezko’s friend Elie “Lee” Maloof, a sum that Rezko secretly—and illegally—reimbursed, but that $827,000 figure eclipsed supposed front-runner Dan Hynes’s $708,000 total by more than $100,000. More important, Jim Cauley’s insistent spending discipline meant that Obama for Illinois now had $1,789,000 on hand.

Barack’s long-standing friendship with Rezko reflected a comfort level that was not shared by campaign staffers who dealt with Tony. “I was told to meet with him” right after arriving in Chicago, Jim Cauley remembered, and “I met him more than a few” times. “Rezko was a little weird,” Cauley thought, and he knew that “some of that . . . money is a little dirty,” but Barack pressed him. “I was told to meet with him more, and I told him I wouldn’t, because I had a very keen sense of people and that guy made me nervous from day one.” If anyone “says he wasn’t around” Barack’s campaign, “he’s full of shit,” Cauley emphasized.

Dan Shomon acknowledged that Rezko “was very, very important on fund-raising in ’04, putting checks together,” and finance director Claire Serdiuk realized that Rezko did not understand how different the FEC’s requirements were from Illinois’s lax standards. Tony “was coming from a system that had no laws, no limits” to one “where there were a lot of laws and a lot of limits,” Claire explained. “We were very, very fortunate, because we were running a federal campaign, and there were very tight rules. There were several times when I had to go back and tell Tony, ‘I’m not accepting this check.’” For example, the millionaires’ amendment’s increased limits did not include corporate or partnership funds. “I told Barack, ‘We have to deny this check,’ and Barack would call Tony and say, ‘We have to deny this check—we cannot accept this on the federal,’” Claire recalled. “It happened a few times in the primary,” and as Maloof’s $10,000 illustrated, it could have happened more.

David Mendell’s Tribune profile lauded Barack as “without a doubt the most dynamic speaker” and “the most commanding presence” in the Democratic field, but those plaudits were not what generated angry reactions that Saturday morning. Instead it was a vignette Mendell used at the end of his article:

There’s no doubt Obama can draw attention. Shortly after signing autographs at the recent forum, Obama grabbed the hand of Christina Hynes, the wife of one of his opponents, Illinois Comptroller Dan Hynes, and then kissed her cheek, prompting her to flush and smile broadly.

“He has a smooth personality, sometimes a little too smooth,” said his campaign manager, Jim Cauley. “He’s still young, and we have a ways to go, but he has the potential to be something very special in this business.”

Barack was furious at Jimmy for calling him “a little too smooth,” as Cauley heard from his “thin-skinned” candidate in a 6:00 A.M. telephone call. But Barack’s anger was mild compared to the reaction in Dan Hynes’s camp. “We went apeshit,” communications director Chris Mather remembered, over Mendell’s explicit insinuation that Christina Hynes “might have the hots for another candidate.” Christina blushed easily and was “not a public person,” and campaign manager Matt Hynes called Mendell at home to complain vociferously about the Tribune’s “total cheap shot,” threatening to end Mendell’s access to Dan unless the passage was removed from later editions. Mendell hesitated. “It happened. I was standing right there,” and “if anything, I had toned down Mrs. Hynes’s overt response to Obama.” Indeed, Mendell had expressed surprise. “I said to Senator Obama, ‘Do you really think it’s wise to kiss the other candidates’ wives?’ He said, ‘We’ve known each other a long time. It’s been a long trail.’” Mendell called Tribune political editor Bob Secter, and they agreed to remove Christina Hynes’s name while retaining the description, with Barack now kissing “a supporter of one of his opponents.”<sup>48</sup>

On Sunday afternoon, Barack was back in Evanston to speak to about three hundred people at city Democrats’ endorsement meeting. Dan Hynes and Gery Chico spoke as well, but Barack “just blew everybody away,” his old Miner Barnhill golf partner Whit Soule thought, and a remarkable 90 percent of the crowd voted to support Barack. The next afternoon at 1:00 P.M., Barack had his meeting with the Chicago Tribune’s editorial board, and David Axelrod, again in Mexico, e-mailed Barack to reiterate “the overall arguments to stress.” Number one, “you offer more than words. You offer a record of legislative accomplishment which uniquely prepares you for this job. You are a proven, skilled legislator.” David also wanted Barack to present himself as “a Paul Simon Democrat” who represented independence and change. “Look for opportunities to demonstrate your willingness to buck party orthodoxy,” Axelrod advised. “Health care is our best issue, and you should hit it hard,” stressing that “real health care reform requires the ability to stand up to the power of the insurance and drug lobbies.”

On Monday afternoon, Barack told the Tribune journalists that “what I bring to this race is a track record of accomplishment, the ability to work with others and the ability to frame the debate in a way that does not simply polarize but brings people together around a set of common goals.” On Wednesday, Barack was set to appear at the City Club of Chicago’s noontime candidates’ forum, and ahead of a Tuesday-afternoon practice session, Axelrod and John Kupper prepared a memo calling for Barack to reiterate “the independence/fighting special interests/pragmatic accomplishments theme.” They wanted Barack to emphasize “our overarching message that he has a seven-year legislative record of standing up to the special interests in Springfield.” Barack “needs to be forceful and passionate,” displaying “some outrage and indignation” while using “short, declarative sentences rather than professorial soliloquies.” The City Club event turned out to be a largely sedate affair, but Barack did declare that “we have a crisis in our democracy right now, and so much of it has to do with the use and abuse of money in the political process.” Republican Sun-Times columnist Tom Roeser called Barack “the winner” as he “trumped his opponents with an understated charisma,” and on the same page, Steve Neal wrote that the late Paul Simon had viewed Barack “as the rising star of the Illinois Democratic Party.”<sup>49</sup>

Political insiders were highly attentive as the primary race entered its final six weeks, but that was not true for most citizens, as Chicagoland’s major suburban paper documented. “A random survey last week by Daily Herald reporters and editors found 87 percent of 162 suburban residents could not name even one Senate candidate from either party.” Among Democrats, “millionaire businessman Blair Hull of Chicago netted 11 responses,” thanks to his robust TV advertising, and “nine people answered state Senator Barack Obama of Chicago, with full credit given to two who could remember only that his name rhymed with Osama.” Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller reported that a new WBBM automated poll showed Dan Hynes leading Hull and Barack by one point each, at 20–19–19, with Maria Pappas at 18, again reflecting an uptick for Hull. By late January, Paul Harstad for Barack’s campaign and Hull’s own pollsters had results of their first 2004 tracking surveys. Harstad’s results showed Hynes at 22 percent and Barack at 16, with Pappas and Hull trailing at 15 and 11 percent, respectively. However, 66 percent of Democratic voters still did not know Barack, a surprising increase of 2 points since Harstad’s July 2003 poll. Among black voters, Barack’s don’t-knows remained at 46 percent, and the 34 percent supporting him was static as well, even though Barack’s favorability total had risen from 37 to 45 percent. After Barack’s issue positions and legislative achievements were presented, he picked up an additional 23 percent support, showing that his existing 16 percent share had the potential to jump to 39 once more voters knew about him.

Anna Bennett and Mark Blumenthal’s late January poll, the first of ten tracking surveys they would conduct for Hull’s campaign prior to mid-March, showed Barack with 35 percent overall name recognition and about 45 percent African American support, ten points higher than Harstad’s number from a week earlier. That gave Barack a narrow 19–18–16–13 lead over Hynes, Hull, and Pappas, with Hynes and Hull in a tight duel among nonliberal white voters. But after respondents heard long descriptions of each of the candidates, Barack’s support jumped to 29 percent while Hull rose to 19 and Hynes slipped a point to 17.

Barack was “extraordinarily saddened” and “heartbroken” to learn that Beverly Criglar, his Springfield secretary from 1997 through 1999, had died suddenly of a heart attack at age sixty-three. Barack’s focus turned toward preparing for a February 4 statewide radio debate, but he told the Associated Press that “the undocumented workers currently in this country and woven into the fabric of our lives are not simply strangers to be deported.” At the radio debate, Barack stressed his opposition to the U.S. invasion of Iraq as “a dumb war” and pressed Dan Hynes over his support of it while highlighting his state Senate experience. “The legislature is full of tough calls. It’s not like an administrative job—it requires tough calls.” But Hynes’s campaign faced a greater challenge than radio-only criticism from Barack. As Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller highlighted, Hynes’s focus on promoting his candidacy via downstate television ads was going nowhere. Whenever a Hynes ad debuted, Blair Hull was “up in a couple of days with his own TV spot on the same issue, but with four or five times the money—effectively drowning out Hynes’ message.”<sup>50</sup>

Building good footage from which to craft Barack’s TV ads, David Axelrod and John Kupper booked studio interviews with several people who knew Barack well and scheduled a variety of events where they could film him on Saturday, February 7. Mike Pflieger assured David that “Barack is the kind of character that ten years from now, people will be just as proud with, because he is consistent with who he is.” Jan Schakowsky said her endorsement of Barack was based on his opposition to the war and his insistence that he “would have been a no vote on the Patriot Act,” because “we need someone who’s going to stand up and defend civil liberties.”

On Friday, February 6, John Kupper sat in a Near North Side studio with first Jeremiah Wright and then Michelle Obama. Wright told Kupper that Barack “is a dreamer,” a “combination of intelligence . . . and soul.” From “almost twenty years of knowing him,” Wright was certain that Barack “is very much interested . . . in health care for all” and especially “child health care, because his daughter has asthma.” Jerry endorsed Barack as fervently as he knew how. “There are only a few people in life, and Barack is one of them, that you feel privileged to have been blessed to share space and time with in your lifetime.”

Michelle spoke of her husband even more personally. “I think there is a part of him that’s trying to live up to the image that he has of what the father he didn’t know would have wanted him to be,” she explained. “I think Barack grew up hearing these wonderful stories about his father and how imposing and committed and serious he was, and I think there is an element to his determination and passion that is trying to live up to the reputation of the father he didn’t know . . . to live up to this dream.”

Michelle volunteered that “Barack’s role in government is our sacrifice to the bigger picture,” and that “our spiritual life and our spiritual development is key. . . . We are fortunate to come from such a strong church home, with a wonderful pastor like Reverend Wright, who not only has the spiritual message, but he ties that into the bigger picture: politics and just sort of civil rights, and there’s a whole range of education and awareness that happens at our church that sort of speaks to us.”

Michelle emphasized the importance of Trinity. “Church, religion, family—those are the things that ground us and help Barack and I make it through what will be a challenging several months and a challenging lifetime if we continue to do—and we plan to continue to do—this work in the future.” Michelle said that Barack “is truly gifted for this work,” and “we’re doing this because, as I talked to him before we entered this race, that this race has to be about telling the truth,” as could be done by “somebody with his gifts.”

Some of what Michelle told Kupper was not fit for any television ad. “I think down in Springfield there are frustrations with the lack of leadership that we see in our own party,” because “the party’s kind of lost its way. I hate to say it, but we’ve talked about this on many occasions.” Michelle knew that the U.S. Senate is “a millionaire’s club,” but “the bottom line is that we’re just not moving in the right direction morally as a country, and I think that he’s very passionate about playing a role.” Her regard for her husband was astonishing. “It’s almost like he’s too good to be true, and people don’t believe he can be that perfect.” It was true that “he doesn’t put his dishes in the sink, and I have to remind him to take the garbage out, and he doesn’t put his shoes up, and I could go on about his imperfections. . . . So he is a man, but for a man, he’s pretty right on point.”

Barack’s long Saturday, February 7, began with a 10:00 A.M. rally at Rogers Park’s Heartland Cafe. His remarks recycled familiar themes, such as how “particularly here in Illinois . . . politics operates as a business instead of a mission.” Several hours of video and still photo shoots with a variety of people— young and old, black and white, male and female—at an Evanston nonprofit preceded another rally at nearby Mount Zion Missionary Baptist Church. “There are very few people in Springfield who actually take the time to study the issues, to craft legislation, who hold hearings, who get community input,” Barack told the crowd. More relaxed than earlier, he complained that “I’m having to put up with consultants, and I’m having to put up with not having any lunch,” but he vowed that in January 2005, “we’re gonna start changing this country.”

A brief fund-raiser was followed by Barack sitting down on camera with David Axelrod at a donor’s lakefront home. To an earlier interviewer, Barack had seconded Michelle’s statement that “I can’t imagine a better church home than Trinity,” but with Axelrod, a somewhat tired Barack spoke almost exclusively about his Springfield résumé, like KidCare and Illinois’s EITC. “I’m enough of a pragmatist that I know how to reach across the aisle, and I know how to work on a bipartisan basis to make things happen.” He said that “somebody who’s able to speak out with honesty and conviction over time can gather allies and eventually persuade a majority, and so that’s a role that I welcome, and it’s a role that I’ve always felt comfortable with down in Springfield.” Barack similarly declared, “I haven’t been afraid to stand up to some of the most powerful interests, whether it was the drug companies or utility companies or gaming interests down in Springfield, and say, ‘This doesn’t make sense.’” Only at the end did the interview turn personal. Barack regretted “all the time that I’m spending away from” his daughters, but “thanks largely to my wife, they are thriving and happy.” Barack mentioned that “I struggle with my wife during tax time to figure out how we’re going to meet our obligations,” but he was deeply troubled that the Senate campaign had all but removed him from his daughters’ daily lives. He tried to avoid thinking about it, but when Valerie Jarrett asked him how he was holding up as the race intensified, Barack responded with rare emotion: “I don’t want to be the kind of father I had.”<sup>51</sup>

On Sunday morning, Barack started the day at Grand Boulevard’s Liberty Baptist Church. Fourth Ward politico Al Kindle and journalist Ted McClelland, who had written a profile of Barack for the Chicago Reader four years earlier, were struck by how much more fluid and conversational a public speaker Barack was than he had been during his unsuccessful congressional race. McClelland wondered what to make of “a campaigner whose persona changed so drastically in four years,” but even one-on-one, Barack seemed different from four years earlier. McClelland recalled that “the aloofness was gone” and “he didn’t mention Harvard once. . . . I was impressed that he finally seemed to believe in something more than the fact that being president of the Harvard Law Review is a pretty big deal.”

Others who had heard Barack speak over the years also noted how much more relaxed and self-confident he was now. “The more he campaigned, the more natural he got at it and the more disciplined he got at it,” AFSCME and Citizen Action veteran John Cameron explained. “This whole ‘I’m the guy, I’m Mr. Cool, you gotta be with me’ kind of stuff all disappeared.” Dan Hynes saw it too. As the race progressed, “the more confidence he had, and it showed in his speaking style and the way he interacted with people.” Kevin Watson, who was squiring Barack to countless South Side barbershops, beauty salons, and nightclubs, watched Barack change before his very eyes. “You could see him more and more relaxing,” Kevin explained. “I can see it happening, and I can feel it happening. . . . It was almost like he was turning into something other than what he was . . . something that is bigger than him.”

U of C graduate student Warren Chain had volunteered a lot during Barack’s congressional run, believing he was a “good guy” though a “very poor” public speaker. Chain kept in touch briefly, visiting Barack at Miner Barnhill, and then “didn’t see him for two or three years” before running into him at the Walgreens Pharmacy on 55th Street, just a few blocks from East View, during the Senate campaign. He thought Barack “had a different look in his eye, a different energy” than three years earlier. “He was just so intense.” People who had known Barack more than a decade earlier also noticed a change. Old organizing colleague David Kindler attended an Arab American–hosted reception for Barack during the Senate race and found him “kind of disappointing” because he “wasn’t the candid Barack” of years past and was now “a little bit more cagey.” Among themselves, Barack’s organizer friends mourned how different he was from years earlier, when “the wall was down” and “when he was far less guarded and before the drawbridge to his feelings went up.” Ali Abunimah, Mona and Rashid Khalidi’s Arab American Action Network colleague, felt similarly after Barack encouraged him, “Keep up the good work!” while offering an apology. “I’m sorry I haven’t said more about Palestine right now,” Abunimah recalled Barack telling him, “but we are in a tough primary race. I’m hoping when things calm down, I can be more up front.”<sup>52</sup>

As a full-time candidate, Barack’s schedule was filled with editorial board meetings and media interviews. He told the Daily Herald “that for lesbians and gays, it’s not just the marriage issue, it’s also the moral issue of recognition and acceptance,” but he did not want to “shove the issue” forward rather than stress “the principle of non-discrimination.” To WBEZ’s Steve Edwards, Barack bragged about his basketball talent while admitting that “my coat is in shreds. It’s an embarrassment to my wife.” WBBM’s weekly automated SurveyUSA poll showed Blair Hull with a significant 29 to 19 percent lead over Barack and Dan Hynes, thanks to 44 percent support downstate. Barack “has just 46 percent of black voters,” Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller reported with amazement. That number would surely rise, and Barack’s “new yard signs in black neighborhoods feature his photo.” Barack “is the only candidate in this race with any real charisma, which could help give his campaign a late spark” once he started airing TV ads. But “Hull’s coming deluge means that Hynes almost has to go negative on the guy,” though “Hynes has limited funds. . . . If Hynes doesn’t do something about Hull’s ascension, then Hynes is toast.”

By the second week of February, Barack’s campaign was broadcasting several new radio ads. In one, Barack was the only voice:

This is state senator Barack Obama. I’m running for the United States Senate, and I want to tell you why. We’re spending billions of dollars in Iraq while millions in our own country are out of work. Our health care system's collapsing. Our schools don't have the support they need. But too many in Congress have been afraid to stand up to George Bush and his destructive policies. Too many have let him have his way, and now our country and our community are paying the price. I'm a Democrat fighting for an America where anyone who wants to work can find a job, where everyone gets the health care they need, and every single child gets the chance they deserve. I want to make our voices heard in the United States Senate. This is Barack Obama and I approve this message because I hope you'll join me in this movement. Please register to vote. If you want to volunteer, call my headquarters at 312-427-6300. Together, we can make history and send a message of hope and change.

On black radio stations, Barack's campaign deployed a pair of new ads. In one, entitled "Champion," Operation PUSH's Rev. Willie Barrow had "an important message for our community. February 17th is the last day to register for the primary election. And on that primary ballot is a champion for our community . . . state senator Barack Obama . . . a husband, a father, and a leader in his church." Barrow signed off "urging you to join the movement." A second featured Congressman Jesse Jackson Jr.:

A generation ago, our parents marched, bled and died to secure our civil rights. But equal opportunity, it's still an unfulfilled promise. Now we can send a powerful message of change to Washington by electing state senator Barack Obama to the United States Senate. Obama has spent his life knocking down barriers. He made history as the first African American president of the Harvard Law Review, but instead of cashing in, he has chosen a life of public service. In Chicago, he led a registration drive that helped elect Bill Clinton and Carol Moseley Braun. In Springfield, Obama's passed laws extending health care to uninsured children, for the videotaping of police interrogations and new curbs on racial profiling. What a difference it would make to have Barack Obama in the United States Senate. He'll hold America to its promise for all of us.

"This is Barack Obama, and I approve this message to ask for your vote on March 16th." Jackson then urged listeners to "Join the movement! Barack Obama for Senate" before Barack said, "Paid for by Obama for Illinois Inc."

Barack's own staff was becoming aware that his prospects were looking up. "Things start to build, and it really did start to feel like a campaign and not a job," events coordinator Kaleshia Page recalled. Jim Cauley was pushing to have the funds to make as big a late TV buy as possible, but among the campaign's African American staffers, unspoken disquiet slowly increased. Barack had pressed Cauley not to allow the staff to become too white, but even so, strategy discussions with Barack's all-white, all-male team of consultants often left Audra Wilson and Pam Smith, the campaign's two senior black women, feeling slighted. "If this is considered the base, you've got to listen to us," Audra finally remarked. The disagreements reached a crescendo over whether the campaign should devote upward of $35,000 to billboard advertising aimed at African American drivers. Kevin Watson argued that it was essential to show Barack and Michelle in order to send the message that "this is a light-skinned African American marrying somebody darker." Barack agreed. "We need to do billboards," he told Cauley, but Jimmy resisted: "No we don't." "Jim, I'm just telling you, if they think I've got a white wife, the boogie shit sticks,” Barack replied. “He’d just get up in my face,” Jimmy remembered, but Axelrod and the other consultants sided with Cauley. “Barack, there are two people in this room who have won major African American campaigns, and you’re not one of them,” Joe McLean recounted Axelrod stating.

Similar tensions arose when top supporters Jim Reynolds, Marty Nesbitt, and Valerie Jarrett pressed Barack about why the campaign was not yet running television ads. “We’ve got to go up on TV, Jim. Even if it’s a hundred grand, we’ve got to go up,” Barack told Cauley. Again the consultants supported Cauley. “Barack is getting impatient,” John Kupper recounted, and “we had to continue to persuade him. . . . ‘We have a strategy here . . . we have to hold this money till the end, when it matters.’” Barack conceded on the television issue, but in the end Kevin Watson did prevail on billboards. “Jimmy was a hero,” Kupper explained. “We needed somebody who was strong enough to stand up” to pressure, “and sometimes stand up to the candidate,” and “to a very large extent, Jimmy did.”

By February 16, Barack had been endorsed by two more important north suburban Democratic Party groups, drawing 78 percent support in New Trier Township and 60 percent in Northfield. David Axelrod scheduled video photo shoots with Barack, his family, Jesse Jackson Jr., and Jan Schakowsky at Marty Nesbitt’s Kenwood home on February 17 as the timeline for producing Barack’s initial TV spots closed in. Axelrod had a draft script in hand for their debut ad, but Barack hesitated after his first read-through, caviling at its final phrase, “Yes we can.” “Is that too corny?” Barack asked. David explained his thinking, but Barack sought Michelle’s reaction. “Miche, what do you think?” “Not corny,” she replied, and the taping proceeded.

Meanwhile, attention in the race shifted to questions about new front-runner Blair Hull. In the Chicago Tribune’s February 15 profile, headlined “Political Novice Hull Uneasy in Spotlight,” reporter David Mendell portrayed Hull’s efforts to make himself into a political candidate. “I forgot to tell them I served in the army and taught school. I have to remember these things,” Hull told himself after his endorsement interview at the Rockford Register Star. As an “introverted personality, Hull is anything but a natural,” Mendell stated, despite Hull’s investment of almost $24 million of his own money. Only at the end did Mendell mention that Hull, who had divorced his first wife of almost thirty years in 1994, had then twice married and been divorced from Brenda Sexton. Indeed, “in 1998, Sexton filed [for] an order of protection against him, public records show,” Mendell revealed. Chris Mather from Dan Hynes’s campaign later acknowledged that she had “worked for months to make that happen,” but when Mendell asked Hull about what had occurred, he said only that the second divorce was “contentious,” but that he and Sexton were now friends.

Two days later, Chicago Sun-Times gossip columnist Michael Sneed reported that Hull and Sexton had shown up together at an evening fund-raiser, news that did not surprise Hull’s campaign staff, who believed they were weathering the storm. Then an Eric Zorn column in Thursday’s Tribune headlined “Public Entitled to Know About Hull’s History” quoted the candidate as saying, “I won’t talk about it. I’m not available to talk about my personal life.” Zorn argued that “Hull’s candidacy has given us a right to know,” and that evening on CBS Channel 2’s local newscast, reporter Mike Flannery stated that an order of protection “usually requires evidence of domestic abuse.” As with Mendell and Zorn, Hull had turned aside Flannery’s questions too, even when Flannery probingly asked whether Hull had ever threatened Sexton with violence. “This really doesn’t play a role in the Senate race” because “it’s a private matter,” Hull responded. Flannery got Sexton on the phone, who said, “I’ll leave it in Blair’s hands. . . . He’s the one running for office.” Flannery again suggestively asked about any threats of violence, but Sexton replied, “I’ve said all I’m going to say.”<sup>53</sup>

David Mendell upped the pressure, reporting in Saturday’s paper that Sexton had “obtained two orders of protection” against Hull. With top consultant Rick Ridder wondering “how long we can stonewall this,” Hull volunteered what the one publicly obtainable document would indicate. “The police report from that night says that I hit her shin.” Hull added, “I regret those months, and that night in particular, as well as the legal posturing that resulted. Most importantly, Brenda and I are now friends.”

Barack’s first TV ad was scheduled to begin running in the Chicago media market on Monday, February 23, a week earlier than initially planned, thanks to his campaign’s better-than-expected fundraising. Barack lost his greatest press champion when Sun-Times political columnist Steve Neal committed suicide at age fifty-four, but on Sunday, Barack received another highly valued union endorsement when Teamsters Local 705, whose twenty-one thousand members made it the state’s largest, backed his candidacy. With new poll numbers landing almost daily, there now was no question that Blair Hull’s massive paid media campaign had vaulted him into the lead. An automated Daily Southtown poll showed Hull with 27 percent, and Barack and Dan Hynes trailing badly with 17 percent apiece. A Roosevelt University poll had Hull at 27, Hynes at 21, and Barack at 14 percent, while the Tribune showed Hull with 24, Barack with 15, and Hynes with only 11. Hull’s name recognition was now at 63 percent, Hynes at only 54, and Barack a dismal 32, although 34 percent of likely Democratic voters remained undecided.

Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller warned that many top Democrats “worry that a Hull win could be a disaster this fall” if damaging information emerged postprimary. Like Rick Ridder, Hull media consultant Anita Dunn and campaign manager Mike Henry knew how widespread the rumors were about Hull’s 1998 behavior toward Brenda Sexton. The trio had long believed, as Dunn put it, that “nobody would feel they had to use those against us unless they thought that Blair was a real threat to win the primary.” But now “Blair had gone into the lead in public polling, so it was tick, tick, tick,” and “people are going to come after us,” Henry agreed.

A little before 3:00 P.M. on Sunday afternoon, February 22, Carbondale City Council member Sheila Simon arrived at the Akkineni family’s home at 506 Midwest Club Parkway in suburban Oakbrook. Sheila’s day job as a law teacher at Southern Illinois University had her in Chicagoland for a domestic violence conference, and weeks earlier David Axelrod had telephoned her to say, “We’d like to do something where you would talk about how your dad was going to endorse Barack.” Sheila was noncommittal. “My hesitancy was I didn’t want to get involved in saying what would my dad have done,” and “David understood that,” but in a second call, Axelrod asked, “How about you just talk about what your dad and Barack worked on?” Sheila agreed, and David sent her a draft script that Sheila was 99 percent happy with. “The language that David proposed was so really on target,” and “the only thing I needed to change” was deleting one word calling her dad “excellent” because it felt “a little boastful for me to say that.”

Roopa Akkineni was a good friend of Madhuri Kommareddi, the Northwestern senior who was doing most of the campaign scheduling, and Axelrod had a full crew plus a teleprompter on hand, awaiting Sheila’s arrival. “You have great brows. I’m just removing the distractions,” the makeup artist told Sheila. The taping “took a long time,” because “we did it so many times,” Sheila remembered. “David would say, ‘Well, this time emphasize this word a little bit more,’ or “‘be a little more cheery when you talk about the death penalty.’ ‘David, give me a break,’” Sheila responded, but by afternoon’s end Barack’s second TV ad was ready for final editing and production.

On Monday, Barack’s first thirty-second spot, entitled “Yes,” was broadcast. It began with Barack in a suit and tie directly addressing the camera. “They said an African American had never led the Harvard Law Review,” as the video shifted first to a 1990 photo of Barack and then to an image of the February 6, 1990, New York Times story: “First Black Elected to Head Harvard’s Law Review.” Then back to Barack: “In the state Senate, they said we couldn’t force insurance companies to cover routine mammograms, but we did,” in a 2001 bill that won unanimous passage in the Senate and the House but for which Barack was not among its thirteen senatorial sponsors. Barack reappeared. “They said we couldn’t find the money to cover uninsured children, or give tax relief to the working poor, or pass new laws to stop wrongful executions, but I have,” as the video flashed through a trio of graphics citing to Barack’s 2003 KidCare, EITC, and videotaping bills. Then Barack returned. “Now they say we can’t change Washington? I’m Barack Obama. I’m running for the United States Senate, and I approve this message to say Yes We Can.”<sup>54</sup>

On Monday evening, all of the Democratic Senate candidates assembled in Springfield for a second, one-hour radio debate. When Blair Hull called himself “an outspoken opponent” of the Iraq war, Barack objected. “The fact of the matter is, Blair, that you were silent when these decisions were being made. And you didn’t end up being outspoken about it until well after the war had been completed, to the extent that it’s been completed. . . . And now you’re sending out mailings saying you were a strong opponent of the war. You were AWOL on this issue. And that’s important . . . because Illinois voters deserve to know whether or not their U.S. senator is going to duck issues or whether he’s going to be up front on issues.”

Hull responded by saying that Joyce Washington, Nancy Skinner, and Gery Chico had also opposed the war, but Barack pressed his attack. “At what stage did you make a statement suggesting you were opposed to it? On your Web site, there was no mention of it. We made a joint appearance in front of the Champaign County Democrats in which you didn’t utter a peep about it. I give credit to people like Dan Hynes and Maria [Pappas], who were consistent in saying they were supportive of it. . . . I disagree with them . . . but I admire the fact that they did take a consistent position on it.” That backhanded compliment did Hynes no favor, but Barack’s energetic critique gave Pappas an opening. “Excuse me, you want to talk about ducking issues, Mr. Obama. Where were you in Springfield when there were six prochoice votes called? . . . But you were not there to vote. Let’s not talk about who ducked issues.” Barack said he expected voters to look at “the totality of your record and your life,” and after the debate, reporters sought further answers from Blair Hull. “Unfortunately, there are contentious divorces, and I don’t believe this really affects the kind of senator I’m going to be,” Hull said.

From Springfield, Barack headed south to Edwardsville and Marion. State senator Bill Haine, his retired predecessor Evelyn Bowles, and Sheila Simon all praised Barack at a series of campaign events. “Barack and my dad were cut from the same cloth,” Sheila told a Williamson County crowd, using a phrase that tens of thousands of TV viewers would soon hear her use in Barack’s second ad. Paul Simon “was a mentor and role model for me,” Barack told reporters. “I can’t say what he was going to say, but it had been scheduled. He was somebody who I think felt confident that I would carry on the work that he did.”

In Chicago, the impact of Barack's first television ad was immediately apparent. An automated SurveyUSA poll of fifteen hundred Democratic voters conducted Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday, February 22–24, showed Barack jumping ahead of Blair Hull by 27 to 25 percent, with Dan Hynes at 18. Then SurveyUSA separated out the respondents by day. Among those polled on Sunday and Monday, Hull led Barack 32 to 23 percent, but on Tuesday, the numbers flipped dramatically, with Barack ahead of Hull 32 to 22 percent and now backed by 59 percent of African Americans. Privately, the Hull campaign's twice-weekly tracking polls told much the same story: Barack now had better than 50 percent support among Cook County white liberals, enough to win the primary with a 35 percent or better plurality. In Thursday morning's Chicago Tribune, metro columnist Eric Zorn kept up his attack on the now-fading former front-runner, asserting that Blair Hull has "made a mess of his first big test of character." At midmorning, Hull's campaign decided to reverse course, reluctantly issuing a pair of statements from Hull and Brenda Sexton announcing that they would jointly ask Cook County Circuit Court to immediately unseal their 1998 divorce file.

In the midst of the Hull firestorm, the Chicago Sun-Times on Friday made the first major newspaper endorsement in the race, praising Barack as "a rising star with impressive political skills and a keen intellect." Sun-Times gossip columnist Michael Sneed told readers that three months earlier, a young woman had been found dead from carbon monoxide poisoning in a property owned by Blair Hull, but that story passed almost unnoticed as all attention focused on the divorce file. Only on Thursday had Jason Erkes, Hull's latest communications director, become privy to Brenda Sexton's 1998 affidavit that Rick Ridder had read six months earlier. "Wow—this is sensational," Erkes realized, and he immediately began calling Chicago journalists, asking to speak to them off the record in advance of Friday's formal release of the affidavit. "There's some sensational words there," Erkes explained, and "it read much more sensational" than Hull's frank comments to his aides had led them to anticipate.

Brenda Sexton also told several of her closest friends about what was coming, and longtime Obama supporter Laura Hunter immediately phoned Dan Shomon, who was on the road with Barack northwest of Chicago. "Holy fuck, Blair is going down. He doesn't survive this," Laura told an astonished Shomon, who switched his cell to speakerphone. The most explosive revelation was one single four-letter word: Hull had called Sexton a "cunt" while allegedly threatening her with violence. Shomon immediately called David Axelrod, who was amazed by the specifics. "That's impossible. Nobody would ever run for Senate with that in their record." Barack had a more pressing concern. "Call Fred Lebed," he told Dan. "Find out if Hull's dropping out, because if he drops out, we're screwed." Six years earlier, in 1998, Barack had held off on backing Dan Hynes for comptroller when Lebed was mulling the race, and Shomon referenced that history as soon as Fred answered his phone. "I have a message for you from Barack Obama: You fucking owe us! You better keep Blair in this race!"<sup>55</sup>

"Barack's big concern was that the stuff on Hull was going to come out too soon," deputy campaign manager Nate Tamarin recalled. "He spent a lot of time worrying about when it was going to come out, and the timing of it and what it would mean for Hynes" if Hull's departure from the race allowed Hynes to run up a huge margin among white downstate voters. Michelle Obama put it similarly. "As the candidate, you know more about the potential stuff than the public does . . . so you go into this race knowing all your opponents' issues . . . whether their house is made of bricks or glass. The things that came to pass were completely known to everybody except the public. These were things we talked about at the outset," even if Sexton's specific allegations were more explosive than Axelrod, Barack, or most of Hull's own campaign team had anticipated.

In her March 12, 1998, affidavit, Brenda Sexton had declared, "Blair is a violent man with an ungovernable temper," and "I fear for my emotional and physical well-being." One night in September 1997, "Blair threw a remote control across the room and called me a 'fucking cunt.'" In early December, he had called her an "evil bitch" and "'a fucking cunt,' repeatedly," rhetorically asking "'Do you want to die? I am going to kill you, you fucking bitch.' I was deathly afraid of him." In early February, she had ordered Blair out of bed, and he "held one of my legs and punched me extremely hard in the left shin. After that, he swung at my face with his fists a couple of times in a menacing manner just missing me." She had called the police, who arrested Hull, but after Sexton obtained an initial order of protection, prosecutors dismissed it after reviewing the February police report detailing how she had first kicked Hull.

Friday evening's newscasts and Saturday morning's headlines were predictable, if demure on the specific alleged language: "Hull's Dirty Laundry on Line," blared the Sun-Times. The Tribune's Eric Zorn was not alone in wondering why Hull had not made "a full and apologetic disclosure back last summer," but Hull told the suburban Daily Herald that he had raised that option with his children as well as Sexton. "We felt that the benefit of getting somebody like me in the United States Senate was so much greater" that the political dangers "paled in comparison, and I had to take that risk." The Sun-Times wrote that Sexton had dropped the protection order within forty-eight hours after a divorce agreement gave her "more than $3 million in cash and property," and the female friend who had first introduced her to Hull told the paper "it was all about money for Brenda."

Sunday morning the Tribune joined the Sun-Times in endorsing Barack as an "outstanding candidate" who "has a proven record of spirited, principled and effective leadership in the legislature." Even more important, by Sunday Barack's second TV ad, featuring Sheila Simon, had been on the air since Friday. Entitled "Mentor," the first two-thirds of the spot featured Sheila's unidentified voice and old footage of her father. "For half a century, Paul Simon stood for something very special in public life: integrity, principle, and a commitment to fight for those who most needed a voice. State senator Barack Obama is cut from that same cloth. With Paul Simon, Barack led the fight to stop wrongful executions and to pass new ethics and campaign finance laws to clean up our politics." Then Sheila appeared on camera for the final ten seconds. "I know Barack Obama will be a U.S. senator in the Paul Simon tradition. You see, Paul Simon was my dad." The FEC-required closing helped too. "I'm Barack Obama, and I proudly approve this message."

"It was really lovely the way they put it together," Sheila thought. Barack's consultants all realized the importance of the ad. It "may have been a more effective endorsement than had Paul done it himself, because of the emotion involved," John Kupper thought. Dan Shomon agreed, explaining that Barack "got something better: he got him speaking from the grave." Crucial to the spot's power was that Sheila "looks just like him," Kupper noted. Pete Giangreco understood "how important Paul Simon's brand was to the emerging Obama brand," as the two early January focus groups with white suburban women had demonstrated: "that's what they wanted: they wanted another Paul Simon." Young African American campaign aide Randon Gardley recalled that "at that point, he was a different kind of candidate. He was no longer a black candidate because he had Sheila Simon's face and images of her father."

Reporters praised Barack's first two ads. The suburban Daily Herald said the first one "highlights his accomplishments in Springfield in a quick-hit, easy-to-understand way that makes Obama seem like a candidate of accomplishment." Capitol Fax's Rich Miller commended Barack's "well-produced TV ads," especially "his 'beyond the grave' TV endorsements by the sainted Paul Simon." For Barack, the depiction of him to tens of thousands of strangers produced a palpable change in his life. Just before the ads started, Barack had told Jim Cauley, "Don't leave me with any debt" on March 17. "That was his lesson from the congressional" race, Cauley realized: "'Don't wake up the day afterwards, if we should lose, and have me owing any money,'" Barack insisted. But the debut of Barack's first ad, followed just four days later by the affidavit that seemed to torpedo Hull's chance of victory, led Barack to realize that he might win. "It starts at that moment," Jim Cauley thought, when Laura Hunter first called Shomon and Barack with the Hull details, but as increasing numbers of passersby now recognized him, Barack began to grasp just what winning would entail. "All of a sudden folks recognize him," Nate Tamarin remembered, and "he said he couldn't go to the store without people noticing him," Cauley added. "He seemed stunned by it," and Jimmy was "amazed at his incredulousness." Cauley had come to think that Barack was "more naive than people would care to know," but "it was quite stunning to watch" Barack comprehend that he was now a public figure. "I've been running around this damn state for two years and ain't nobody known who I am, and now all of a sudden everybody knows who I am." Jimmy responded with sarcasm: "Well, it's called TV, son."<sup>56</sup>

The Hull campaign quickly conducted a pair of female focus groups that suggested Sexton's allegations were not fatal, although Hull feared they were. Rick Ridder, Anita Dunn, and Mike Henry met with Hull and his adult daughters to discuss whether to cut back or suspend the campaign. Dunn and Henry were reluctant to go forward, yet Hull's daughters felt strongly that their father should not drop out, and Hull agreed, believing that the additional money the campaign would spend would make no difference in his or his children's future lifestyles. But by early the next week, the Hull campaign's daily tracking polls showed Barack's support among both white educated Cook County Democrats and African Americans was above 60 percent. Even among non-Cook whites, Barack's support moved up to about 25 percent, and in overall statewide tallies, Barack moved upward to 36 percent, then 38, and then 40, with Hull and Hynes mired in the upper teens.

Paul Harstad completed his second tracking poll for Barack's campaign on March 1, and his numbers confirmed what Hull's pollsters were seeing. Barack's TV ads had dramatically increased both his name recognition and his positive-regard scores. Only 20 percent of black Democrats remained unfamiliar with him, and Joyce Washington's support among African Americans, once as high as 10 percent, had plummeted to just 1, while Maria Pappas had dropped from 19 to 7. Blair Hull's negative-regard tally had jumped from 6 to 26 percent, and black voters appeared to be moving to support Barack almost en masse. Sixth Ward alderman Freddrenna Lyle explained that once they learned his life story, "he made my seniors proud. They talked about that. He was everything that they had wanted for their children."

Maria Pappas, Dan Hynes, and even Gery Chico now joined Hull and Barack in running TV ads, with a new Hynes spot featuring his wife Christina, a physician. "I know Dan understands the problems of our health care system that I see every day," she said before an announcer stated that "Hynes has a detailed plan to lower health care costs, insure every child, and protect your insurance coverage when you change jobs." The ad closed with Dan saying, "I believe we can fix our broken health care system," but relations between Hynes's campaign staff and their media consultants were on the verge of breakup too, with observers believing that the quality of Hynes's excellent 2003 debut ad had not been equaled by subsequent spots. "It became a vacuum of guidance, and that was problematic," Hynes's communications director Chris Mather recalled. All the campaigns had to submit a March 1, preprimary FEC filing, and reporters noticed that while Barack still had $1,277,000 cash on hand even after laying out almost $1.8 million since January 1, Hynes's campaign had only $635,000 available. Hynes's downstate strategy meant that he had never budgeted for a late TV splurge in the Chicago media market, yet Hull's collapse now left Hynes unable to respond. "When that vacuum happened, I didn't have the money to go up on TV in Chicago," Dan recalled.

Barack's campaign had taken in $1,274,000 during the first eight weeks of 2004, with a bevy of $12,000 donors jumping out from Barack's FEC filing. Some were old friends like John Rogers Jr. and prominent Chicago donor Lewis Manilow, and three more members of the Crown family had each contributed the maximum. Texas junk-bond salesman John Gorman, whom Vernon Jordan had introduced to Barack, and his wife each donated $12,000, as did Sara Lee CEO John Bryan's wife Neville, financier Sam Zell's wife Helen, and Abby McCormick O'Neil's son Conor. Numerous friends like Bettylu Saltzman and Stephen Pugh fell just shy of the ceiling, and two business associates of Tony Rezko, M. A. Dabbouseh and Joseph Aramanda, each kicked in $10,000. In Aramanda's case, the entire donation actually came from Rezko, another undisputed violation of federal law. The $10,000 apiece from Dabbouseh and Aramanda attracted no attention whatsoever, but a March 2 check in a similar amount from famed basketball star Michael Jordan, a friend of top Barack backer Peter Bynoe, led to a Chicago Sun-Times headline as well as an editorial.<sup>57</sup>

Barack continued to attract plaudits. Suburban Daily Herald columnist Burt Constable wrote that Barack "has the best qualifications and the worst name" among the Senate contenders. "Given a chance on the national scene, he'll soon be on a short list to become our nation's first African-American president." In the Sun-Times, African American columnist Mary Mitchell expressed disgust that former U.S. representative Cardiss Collins had joined Bobby Rush in endorsing Blair Hull. "When a black person has a real chance of going to the U.S. Senate, and a former Black Panther campaigns for the other guy, you have to wonder whether black politics has really made much progress." Mitchell noted that "a candidate who is embraced by many as a rising star on the political scene has to prove to some voters that he is not too black and to others that he is black enough."

In the wake of Hull's divorce allegations, journalists began asking why court documents concerning Republican Senate front-runner Jack Ryan's 1999 divorce from his ex-wife Jeri were also sealed. Ryan cited issues involving the couple's young son, but Jeri, an actress and former Miss Illinois better known for her roles in Star Trek: Voyager and Boston Public than for TV films like Co-Ed Call Girl, was even more of a celebrity than Jack. Behind the scenes, journalistic curiosity was piqued because Rod McCulloch, the campaign manager for Republican long shot John Borling, had quietly begun spreading the word about what the documents contained. Three years earlier, when Ryan had been considering a 2002 Senate run, McCulloch had spoken with him about that possibility. "What if my ex-wife comes to Illinois and accuses me of being a sexual deviant?" Ryan had asked a startled McCulloch. "What the hell does that mean?" McCulloch wondered, but Ryan pulled back. At the outset of the current race, Ryan had required his consultants and top staffers to sign confidentiality agreements, but one day McCulloch received a phone call from a consultant who asked, “Do you want to see what Jack Ryan’s hiding?” McCulloch said yes, and “they come to my office . . . they lay it out and open it up to the pages in question, and there it is.” Given the agreement, McCulloch was allowed to read quickly but not copy the documents, and he immediately called his candidate, who then discussed the situation with at least two other Republican contenders. A March 4 Sun-Times headline signaled what was going on: “Senate Rivals Urge Ryan to Unseal Divorce Records.” Borling stated that “Jack Ryan is going to have to own up with respect to some of those questions about sealed court records,” and Tribune divorce specialist Eric Zorn took Ryan aside to ask whether Ryan had forced his ex-wife “to go to sex clubs.” Ryan denied it, but when Sangamon County Republican Party chairman Irv Smith queried the candidate about rumors of “kinky sex,” Ryan had responded: “How do you define ‘kinky sex’?” Smith remembered. “He didn’t deny anything.”

On Thursday evening, March 4, all the Democratic candidates assembled for a televised debate at Chicago’s WTTW. Everyone had been asked to arrive by 6:30 P.M. for the 7:00 P.M. live start, but Barack arrived several minutes late following a drive from Springfield. Dan Hynes reached over to smooth Barack’s jacket collar just as host Phil Ponce began by immediately confronting Blair Hull about what Hull acknowledged was a “messy divorce” from a “financially motivated” spouse. Ponce followed up twice before asking Maria Pappas whether Hull should quit. Pappas demurred, saying that one of Hull’s daughters had just spoken to her in the ladies’ room in defense of her father. When Ponce asked Barack to address domestic violence, Barack cited his recently passed Victims’ Economic Security and Safety Act. Then Ponce shifted to gay marriage, with Barack evading the first question. When Ponce followed up, Barack said, “we have to make sure that people have the rights that they deserve: to transfer property, to visit hospitals” before adding that “I’m very mindful of the moral implications of this—my parents were of different races” and could not have married in southern states, “so this is not something that is a distant abstraction for me. I recognize its importance.” Commending 1960s civil rights proponents for prioritizing the landmark 1964 and 1965 statutes, “I’m not necessarily going to lead the issues with a repeal of the anti-miscegenation act because we are trying to consolidate rights for those people who need them right now.”

When Ponce turned to the other candidates, only Gery Chico embraced gay marriage. “It is a basic matter of civil rights. It is the civil rights issue of our era. Separate but equal has been ruled unconstitutional a long time ago. To me, this is no different than giving women the right to vote in 1920.” Ponce shifted to individual questions, and when Blair Hull cited his complete independence from donors, Barack chimed in. “Blair identifies a genuine problem” because “we have a system of financing campaigns in this country that tends to be corrupting, and I don’t think there’s any doubt about that.” When Hull asserted that both Barack and Dan Hynes had accepted contributions from pharmaceutical interests, Hynes responded that “neither of us are beholden to special interests.”

Ponce asked each of the candidates what book they currently were reading, and Barack immediately cited The 2% Solution, “a terrific book” whose sub-title, Fixing America’s Problems in Ways Liberals and Conservatives Can Love foretold its argument that “American politics urgently needs . . . a new center.” Author Matthew Miller decried that “our two major political parties are organized around ideologies and interest groups that systematically ban commonsense, well-funded policies that blend liberal and conservative ideas.” In a less combative nation, “politicians might sit down quietly with thoughtful colleagues in the other party and . . . develop a bipartisan caucus that refines an agenda informed by [a] problem-solving . . . mind-set.”

Seeking further personal insights, Ponce asked the candidates to describe the last time they had used public transit. Maria Pappas drew laughter by asking, “Does that include a cab?” Barack said several months earlier in New York City, and “probably last year some time” after Ponce specified Chicago. As the debate moved along, Blair Hull returned to the attack, accusing Barack and Dan Hynes of taking a total of $130,000 from the U.S.’s top-ten outsourcing companies. Barack responded, “I’ve got a track record of fighting on behalf of working people,” but Dan Hynes angrily took offense. “This is the second time Blair Hull has suggested that Barack and I are beholden to special interests. I resent that. I mean I think that is offensive. You don’t know me, you don’t know Barack. I know Barack to be an honest person, and I know I’m an honest person. Just because we don’t have millions of dollars, and we have to fund our campaigns through the generosity of others, does not give you a right to suggest that we are dishonest or beholden to anyone, and I think that’s wrong.”

Hull again said “we need to separate the money from the decision-making process. That’s why we need public funding of campaigns.” Barack cited working with Paul Simon to pass the 1998 campaign reform bill and then seconded Hynes. “We can’t self-finance, and the reason Dan and I can’t self-finance is because when we graduated from school, we made a decision, that my wife has to deal with and my two small children have to deal with, which was we were not going to pursue wealth because we were going to engage in public service.” As the hour drew to a close, Ponce asked Barack why Bobby Rush and other black figures had not backed him, and Barack did not respond directly but again cited his “track record” regarding racial profiling and job opportunities for ex-offenders.<sup>58</sup>

Brenda Sexton did not like what she heard during the debate, and she issued a statement saying she was “shocked and hurt” by Hull’s comments about her. Hull’s campaign returned the fire with a press conference featuring Terry Forrest, the Sexton friend who had first introduced her to Hull, as well as Hull’s three daughters and his former wife Kathy. Forrest recounted Sexton’s comments to her in 1998 following the tussle with Hull. “It was all about ‘I’ve got to get a lawyer and get some money.’ I believed it was all an embellishment and a positioning in an effort to get more money.”

With only nine days left, Dan Hynes spent the weekend campaigning downstate while Barack told the Chicago Defender, “We have enough money to stay on TV until the end of the campaign. The main task is to see that our organization is adequate to capture the enthusiasm we see on the ground.” For months Jim Cauley, Nate Tamarin, and Kevin Watson had been preparing an extensive field operation for the run-up to Election Day. Staffers like David LeBreton were organizing phone banks and get-out-the-vote operations in collar counties like Lake, McHenry, and DuPage, taking advantage of the scores of volunteers who were offering their free time to Barack’s campaign.

An even more extensive Election Day operation was planned for the city of Chicago and suburban African American areas. Michelle’s former colleague Kevin Thompson had joined the campaign to handle both the North Side and outreach to gay and lesbian supporters, but it was the three offices in the largely black West and South Sides and south suburbs that saw the most activity. On the West Side, Barack was astounded to learn that longtime nemesis Rickey Hendon’s significant organization was going all-out on his behalf. “Hendon got so enthusiastically involved that it was a puzzle to Barack,” Emil Jones Jr. remembered. “Barack called me and said, ‘What did you do to Hendon? He’s so overwhelmingly involved. How'd you get him?' I jokingly said to Barack, 'I made him an offer, and you don't want to know.' That's how it went down."

Jones also put the hammer down on lobbyists who had no choice but to back Dan Hynes but who still needed to stay in the Senate president's good graces. As the race entered the home stretch, Jones summoned "some of Hynes's financial backers" and told them, "'I want you to raise me some money for Barack.' Of course they would say to me, 'You know we're with Dan Hynes.' I say, 'I know that, but that doesn't preclude you from raising some money for Barack.' And they would go out there and raise me the money." One young Irish lobbyist experienced "Emil's old school, brass-knuckle politics" at Petros Diner in the Loop. "'You need to get off of the Hynes bandwagon and come with Obama, and don't do it because you want to, do it because I'm asking you. Don't do it for Barack, do it for me,'" Jones told him. Barack's increasing lead in the polls lent further weight to Jones's demand. "This is going to happen. You've got to be with this guy. . . . We've got to do this for him. . . . If you needed something from him, I would ask him to do the same thing for you, and he would do it, not for you but for me.'" As the young lobbyist realized, "Emil was holding all the cards at the time as Senate president," and that gave Jones decisive leverage over many Springfield players. "He did that, I think, with a lot of people that Barack didn't even know about," as Emil "just totally took it upon himself" to do it. "That's the power of the presidency," Jones proudly but matter-of-factly explained.

The near-disaster of Barack being late for the debate caused David Axelrod and Jim Cauley to insist on greater discipline in Barack's travel. With Lyndell Luster unable to drive Barack full-time, Kevin Watson recruited Mike Signator, a forty-six-year-old south suburban police officer, as another driver, and Tom Crane, a supportive donor who owned Tri-State Auto Auction, provided a Denali SUV. In several South Side wards, Watson could count on Al Kindle to run Barack's Election Day ground game, but to cover the balance of the huge South Side, Jim Cauley reached out to David Axelrod's Washington-based former partner, Tom Lindendorf, who was well known to national Democrats as the best GOTV operative in the country. "Get your ass out here," Cauley told Lindendorf, and with $150,000 budgeted for Election Day efforts, Lindendorf was able to bring several dozen experienced operatives from around the country for the campaign's final week. His top deputy, Greg Naylor, was from eastern Pennsylvania, where a local magazine said he "has attained near-mythic status in Philadelphia politics." Lindendorf housed his crew downtown, and first he established a working relationship with Kindle and other South Side honchos. "Al was very helpful," Naylor recalled, and Lindendorf began implementing his ground game. A large parking lot on the west side of Stony Island Avenue at 76th Street, across from Jackson Park Hospital, was secured, and Lindendorf began renting scores of fifteen-person vans. On March 16, the vans would spread out across the South Side with paid day workers going block by block, knocking on doors, and if no one was home, leaving an Obama door hanger on the knob.<sup>59</sup>

On Sunday, March 7, Barack completed his Chicagoland newspaper trifecta when the suburban Daily Herald joined the Sun-Times and Tribune in endorsing him. While praising Dan Hynes as "a sincere, thoughtful candidate," the Herald was bowled over by Barack's "evident sense of decency and justice" as well as "his intellect, confidence, ease in accepting challenges and compassion. Very few candidates for public office have impressed us in this way. Paul Simon comes to mind." The Joliet Herald-News joined the Bloomington Pantagraph in endorsing Dan Hynes, and the Aurora Beacon News surprisingly backed Gery Chico. That Sunday Barack also received the support of the Peoria Journal Star and the St. Louis

Post-Dispatch, which many in Metro East read.

A new Tribune poll showed Barack leading Dan Hynes 33 to 19 percent, with Blair Hull dropping to 16. Sixty-two percent of African Americans now supported Barack, and in Paul Harstad's third tracking poll for Barack's campaign, the numbers were even better: Barack led Hynes and Hull 36–21–13, with 67 percent of black Democrats backing Barack and only 12 percent still unfamiliar with him. Two-thirds of downstate voters still did not know Barack, but Blair Hull's negative rating had risen to 30 percent statewide. Hull's own tracking polls were even more dire: Hull still led downstate with 35 percent, but Barack's black support was more than 70 percent, boosting his statewide share to better than 40.

Campaigns' direct-mail efforts usually flew beneath journalists' radar, but the Hull campaign had three new mail pieces out. One featured Hull's issue stances and said the divorce allegations were "only about money . . . Brenda wanted a ten million dollar settlement." The two others targeted Barack. One rebutted Barack's claim that "he ALONE opposed Bush's war in Iraq," quoting the late Steve Neal calling Hull "an early and outspoken critic" of the war. The second lambasted Barack's "present" votes on antiabortion bills. "When Barack Obama had the chance, he refused to take a position on a woman's right to choose . . . seven times!" That flyer then stated inaccurately that those votes involved "legislation pushed by pro-choice extremists," but the Tribune's Eric Zorn quickly knocked down the Hull campaign's misrepresentation of what a "present" vote meant. Illinois Planned Parenthood's Pam Sutherland explained that "the idea is to recruit a group to vote 'present'" that would include "Democrats who were shaky on the issue in an effort to convince them not to vote 'yes.'" Barack stated that "no one was more active to beat back those bills than I was."

Barack's direct-mail program, handled by Pete Giangreco and Terry Walsh's Strategy Group, featured different pieces targeted at different voters. The first flyer, aimed at white progressives, featured Pete's "Finally, a chance to believe again" phrase and quoted the Sun Times' report that Paul Simon had viewed Barack as a "rising star." Inside, headlines described Barack's "courage," "unmatched qualifications," and "real record." A second piece featured a photo of Paul Simon and the headline "Illinois Had a Senator Who Stood for Something Special." Only upon opening it did the recipient realize it was promoting Barack, as the left page featured a photo of him and Simon in early 2003. On the right was a photo of Sheila Simon, and her quote that "I know Barack Obama will be a U.S. Senator in the Paul Simon tradition." A third flyer, designed for black voters, stated "Our Cause Is Progress. Our Voice Is Barack Obama." His bills "requiring videotaping" and "ending racial profiling" were highlighted, as was his 1992 Project VOTE! work that "helped elect Carol Moseley Braun and Bill Clinton." A family photo caption said the Obamas "are active members of Trinity United Church of Christ," and another tag line said, "On March 16, we have the power to make Barack Obama the only African-American in the U.S. Senate."

Barack's urban radio ads also ramped up. In a sixty-second one entitled "Faith," Rev. Jeremiah Wright declared, "now more than ever, we need those rare leaders who will stand up for what's right, what's just and good. Barack Obama is such a leader." In the state Senate, Barack had "led the fight to bring health care to our children, tax relief for low-income workers, and new laws to stop racial profiling and the execution of the wrongly accused," Wright stated. "I've known Barack as a parishioner in my church. I've seen his devotion to his wife and two young daughters. I've been witness to his faith. Imagine what it would mean for our state and our nation to have Barack Obama bring that sense of moral mission to the floor of the U.S. Senate!” An announcer recited the closing refrain: “Join the movement. On March 16th, vote Barack Obama, Democrat, for U.S. Senate.”

Another, entitled “Assault,” featured two of black Chicago’s best-known lawyers. “This is attorney R. Eugene Pincham with an urgent message for our community. From the Bush White House to the local courthouse, our rights are under assault, but we can fight back by electing Barack Obama to the United States Senate. In the state Senate, Barack Obama led the battle for a law requiring the videotaping of interrogations in murder cases to stop the railroading of the innocent. Obama will bring a voice to Washington they need to hear, a voice for change, hope, and justice.” Then “This is James Montgomery, city corporation counsel under Mayor Harold Washington. And like Mayor Washington, Barack Obama’s a fighter for fairness” who “passed a new law to stop racial profiling by police,” was “the first African American president of the Harvard Law Review,” and “is a constitutional law professor at the University of Chicago.” A female announcer ended with the now-familiar phrase: “Join the movement. On March 16th, vote Barack Obama.”<sup>60</sup>

As Barack’s poll numbers strengthened across the board, campaign contributions skyrocketed, including big dollars from out-of-state Democratic donors like billionaire George Soros. Marty Nesbitt, Jim Reynolds, Peter Bynoe, and John Rogers remained the mainstays of Barack’s rock-solid support in Chicago’s black business community, but Valerie Jarrett also became increasingly involved in the campaign. “A week, two weeks before primary election night, then she became a constant in my life,” one finance staffer recalled. One finance committee colleague believed that once Valerie “realized that this could happen, she got more involved.” Another perceptive staffer thought that with Jarrett, it was “the mayor releasing her to be more engaged.”

As money poured in, Jim Cauley and the consultants realized that they could expand the television advertising to downstate markets like the Quad Cities; Paducah, Kentucky; and even St. Louis. The Moline Dispatch endorsed Dan Hynes, saying it wished Barack “had more first-hand knowledge of the Quad-Cities area,” but Barack racked up endorsements from several African American Chicago weeklies and from a suburban chain of more than two dozen local papers. Those publications praised Barack’s “reputation for intelligence and effectiveness,” and a few days later both the Rockford Register Star and the Chicago Defender added their backing. Barack’s “exemplary personal qualifications” plus his “character and demonstrated ability as a legislator make it a privilege to endorse him,” a front-page Defender editorial declared.

The Chicago Tribune zinged Barack with a story detailing how his Senate staff had mailed out more than seventy thousand copies of a “Legislative Update” newsletter to constituents just forty-eight hours before a deadline banned such state-funded preelection advertisements. In a telling reflection of how the race had turned, Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller noted “persistent rumors that Mayor Daley’s folks may be leaning towards Obama now.” Daley’s inner circle was “extremely paranoid” and “Obama is doing so well in the polls and on the campaign trail that he is being seen as a threat to hizzoner’s hold on the city and Cook County. Better to send him to D.C. than have him looking for another office to seek if he loses.”

Wednesday night, March 10, was the campaign’s final debate, with now-underdog Dan Hynes contrasting his own role as state comptroller to bills Barack had backed in the state Senate. “When George Ryan and the General Assembly refused to curb their pork spending, I froze the pork. I often stood alone—that’s what leaders do,” Hynes declared. “Barack Obama chose a different course. He stayed silent. He didn't do anything." Hynes asserted that "for four years there was a feeding frenzy in Springfield," and "Barack Obama played a part in it." Instead of a direct rebuttal, Barack said, "Dan has been a fine comptroller, but the role of the comptroller is to stand on the sidelines and comment." Only afterward did Barack complain that "it's a little disingenuous" for Hynes "to suggest he somehow was this warrior" during Springfield's spendthrift years.

That evening Barack's campaign got an additional boost when the League of Conservation Voters (LCV) launched its own thirty-second television ad that endorsed his candidacy. Entitled "Rising Star," it featured LCV president Deb Callahan praising Barack for one bill he had introduced and a second he cosponsored at the behest of the Sierra Club, neither of which ever reached the floor. "There's one candidate for Senate who's won the tough fights for a cleaner and healthier Illinois—Barack Obama," Callahan declared. "Obama took on the polluters and President Bush for cleaner power plants. And he led the fight to reduce Illinois's record rates of asthma. The Sun-Times calls him a rising star, and the Tribune endorses him too. And the League of Conservation Voters is responsible for this message because we believe Barack Obama is the best candidate to protect our environment."

The League announced it was investing more than $100,000 into airing the ad, and Barack's campaign now had out its third and final ad, entitled "Hope." Images of both Paul Simon and Harold Washington invoked two strong legacies. "There have been moments in our history when hope defeated cynicism, and the power of people triumphed over money and machines. The Tribune says Barack Obama rises above the field with 'a proven record of spirited, principled and effective leadership.' The Sun-Times calls Obama 'the man for this time . . . and place.' The Daily Herald backs Obama for his 'sense of decency and justice.' On Tuesday, let's make this moment count: Barack Obama for the U.S. Senate." Barack uttered only the required closing: "I'm Barack Obama, and I approve this message."

Barack's campaign also produced its last flyer, which cited the Daily Herald, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, and Tribune endorsements. "We need to rise above partisan politics and powerful interests," and "Barack Obama says Yes We Can!" it declared. "Barack Obama offers Illinois hope, opportunity, and a chance to believe again." Little came of an Associated Press query asking Barack to detail his history of drug use. Reporters were excited by Hull's admission of extensive cocaine use as an adult, and Barack said he had used cocaine "a few times" and "primarily smoked pot" during high school and his first two years of college. "Drugs and divorces. That's what it has turned into. It's very depressing," Barack told the AP.

In Thursday's Chicago Defender, Emil Jones Jr. called on all African Americans to unite behind Barack. "It's important for our children, our nation, and it disturbs me that you've got so-called black elected officials," like Bobby Rush, not supporting Barack. "I'm calling on the community to repudiate those individuals and vote strongly for Barack Obama." Jones especially called out five black state representatives who, like Speaker Madigan, were backing Dan Hynes. "They are all concerned about Tom Hynes' son. Well, Barack Obama is my son. . . . When do we get a chance? When are they going to make up their mind? He's been endorsed by practically every major newspaper in this state, and he's the most qualified. We need to integrate the U.S. Senate. There's not a black face in the U.S. Senate, and I think a black male going to the Senate will inspire a lot of young black people in this state and across the nation with some pride and hope. . . . I'm calling on the people in those respective districts and wards to come out strong and support the most qualified person for the office and that is Barack Obama."

Axelrod warned Barack's campaign staff that "it's important that we have balance in our schedule for the final few days. I know we have to get our base going, but we really have TWO bases, and we can ill-afford stories about how we are concentrating only in the black community." They should consider "what pictures do we want?" on Sunday and Monday's local TV news programs. "We need events in a variety of communities each day to reflect the broad coalition we are building," Axelrod stressed. "If the story is merely us trying to rally the black community, it doesn't help us." That night, a South Side campaign rally at Liberty Baptist Church drew a largely black crowd of more than fifteen hundred. "Nothing like this has happened to us since Harold Washington," U.S. representative Danny Davis proclaimed.<sup>61</sup>

Just a few hours before that rally, Rod McCulloch, John Borling's campaign manager, went public about the Jack Ryan divorce records he had seen a week earlier. McCulloch had spoken with state treasurer and Republican Party chair Judy Baar Topinka, who told him: "If you believe what you saw is true, you have to go forward." In a written statement faxed to news organizations from a suburban Kinko's, McCulloch stated that the documents "have nothing to do with his son" but instead detailed ex-wife Jeri's allegations that Jack had had an affair with a colleague and "took her to various sex clubs" in New York, New Orleans, and Paris. McCulloch told the Sun-Times, "My conscience tells me that this must be aired before the primary next Tuesday" and that "my motivation is limited to my belief that voters deserve full disclosure."

Friday's newspapers all carried the story, omitting the most lascivious details, but Barack's campaign quickly learned the contents of McCulloch's statement. "Everybody's hearing for the first time that he's taken his wife to swingers' clubs, and they're saying, 'This is the thing that's going to come out,'" and that it would be "a nail in the coffin," one young volunteer recalled. "What I distinctly remember is me not knowing what a swingers' club is, and everybody's like, 'Oooh.' I remember feeling like a little kid at the dinner table" when she asked "'What's a swingers club?' . . . and I remember Obama saying, 'We'll tell you after the meeting.'" A Tribune editorial revealed that four days earlier the paper had petitioned the court to unseal the records. Noting how one prior filing suggested the documents might contain "inflammatory, inappropriate and embarrassing material," the Tribune called upon Ryan to "share it with voters now," because "this issue won't disappear" if he won the Republican nomination.

Ryan refused opponents' requests that a neutral figure like former governor Jim Edgar privately review the file and reassure Illinois Republicans. Sunday's newspapers featured poll results showing Ryan and Barack leading their respective races, with Barack at more than double Dan Hynes's 18 percent. Tribune reporter Rick Pearson upbraided Barack's opponents for not highlighting his missed gun vote in 1999, but a whirlwind day awaited the candidate. A trio of Far South Side church visits preceded an appearance at the Southwest Side's St. Patrick's Day Parade. With Hynes supporters in charge, Barack's cohort had been relegated to the rear of the parade, but Barack quickly improved his place upon seeing Senate Republican colleague Dave Sullivan in the front rank. "Barack put his arm around me and said, 'Okay, Sully, let's go!'" Sullivan was amazed at the onlookers who cheered Barack. "This election's over. Barack's going to win," Dave told his wife.

From there, Barack hopped a chartered two-engine plane to fly first to Peoria and then East St. Louis for more appearances at African American churches. Aware of how many American politicians had died in single-engine plane crashes, Barack had always refused free trips to or from Springfield on the state aircraft available to the governor and the Four Tops. When Barack returned to Chicago late that evening, he met with Jim Cauley, who had just seen new polling numbers showing Barack's support surging close to 50 percent thanks to a big jump among downstate voters now seeing his TV ads. Cauley was astonished. Given Barack's name, "I thought he had a ceiling," and "I thought 45 would be a huge number for him," Cauley explained. "Barack, I don't think you can break 50," Cauley told his candidate. "Oh yes I can," Barack replied. "Before that, it was me and him. After that, he became Barack," Cauley remembered.

For months Cauley had headed to Garrett Ripley's bar at 712 North Clark Street, close to his Chicago apartment. Field director Nate Tamarin often joined him, as did SEIU politico Jerry Morrison, consultant Pete Giangreco, young Obama campaign staffers, and occasionally Mike Henry, Blair Hull's campaign manager. "That was Jimmy's sort of home away from home," Pete explained. "When I think of Jim, I think of Garrett Ripley's," volunteer coordinator Adam Stolorow remembered. "Late nights with Jim and Nate." As Tuesday neared, all the regulars wrote down their Senate race predictions, with the most optimistic participant giving Barack a 7-point win over Dan Hynes.

Hynes was worried. "Obama had all the buzz" and "the trends were very, very disturbing." Barack's "numbers were moving, Blair Hull's were plummeting, and mine were flatlined," Hynes remembered. Monday morning his concern intensified. "I opened the newspaper and looked at the picture from the St. Patrick's Day parade. I mean, St. Patrick's Day, that's my day. And there was Barack Obama surrounded by every single Irish politician in town. I'm cropped out of the picture. And I thought to myself, 'That's not good!'"

In a room at the Schwab Rehabilitation Center, eighty-five-year-old columnist Vernon Jarrett filled out his absentee ballot while struggling to recover from major cancer surgery. His son Bill, the former husband of Barack and Michelle's friend Valerie Jarrett, had died ten years earlier at age forty. No one had championed Harold Washington more fervently during the 1980s than Vernon Jarrett. In Monday's Chicago Defender, in the last column he would write before dying several weeks later, Jarrett invoked the cherished mayor's legacy to instruct black Chicago to embrace Barack. "Obama is one of the highest qualified young men that this country can present regardless of race, creed or color. He is a superior Harold Washington at an early age. All those fine qualities that we have saluted in Harold Washington are magnified in Obama, including his intellectual, academic and moral conduct," Jarrett wrote. "I am here to tell you that you have another Harold Washington in Obama. Only he's younger, brighter and equally committed."<sup>62</sup>

Barack told reporters "we are in the position to potentially win this thing," and Monday morning he began by greeting potential voters at the South Side's 87th Street L station. Tom Lindenfeld and Greg Naylor's robust Election Day effort aimed to have more than two thousand paid workers hit the streets on Barack's behalf, while Dan Hynes's campaign boasted that it would deploy at least eight thousand experienced volunteers. As any politically experienced Chicagoan knew, Election Day was a homeless person's favorite day of the year, because anyone able to walk could win a cash return for a day's work from one or another campaign. Blair Hull's operation had signed up fifty homeless black men at a Bronzeville shelter, promising $75 plus meals on Tuesday.

On the West Side, Barack's campaign had quietly channeled tens of thousands of dollars to ward-level political organizations to help mobilize black voters there. In total, several hundred thousand dollars would be devoted to maximizing the African American percentage of the overall Democratic vote, an expenditure Jim Cauley and Tom Lindenfeld had persuaded David Axelrod, Pete Giangreco, and the other media-focused consultants to agree to at a meeting with top finance committee members Valerie Jarrett and Marty Nesbitt. Cauley remembered that after eight months of fiscal discipline, all of a sudden “I was spending money like a drunken sailor,” and most of all “a fortune on the turnout operation.” On the vast South Side, Tom Lindenfeld’s massive GOTV effort was logistically mind-boggling. In addition to the 175 or so fifteen-passenger rental vans that on Tuesday would fan out across scores of neighborhoods, port-o-potties and a big RV command center supported the all-outdoors operation. With temperatures below freezing and snow in the forecast, ponchos and hand warmers for the army of day workers were last-minute additions to a budget that also included thousands of dollars in fast-food coupons. On Monday night, Lindenfeld and his out-of-town veterans struggled to stock the vans with campaign literature and other supplies, and as midnight approached, Lindenfeld realized, “I don’t have enough people on the lot to be able to get the work done by 8:00 A.M.” Wandering out onto Stony Island Avenue, he accosted a homeless man. “Want to make $20?” met with eager acceptance. “‘You got some other buddies who want to make some money?’ ‘Yeah, but we’ve got to go get them.’” So “we drive to an underpass,” and “he jumps out of the van, he disappears into the dark, he comes back with different people,” more than enough people to fill the fifteen-person van. Working through the early-morning hours, Lindenfeld’s homeless army got the vans fully stocked, but Tom needed additional cash to pay his recruits. “There are no ATMs where there’s poor people,” so Tom drove northward to Hyde Park to get the cash. “That was just part of life on the South Side.”

As Tuesday dawned, Lindenfeld’s operation swung into action. The van drivers, all recruited from among South Side Obama supporters, quickly trained and then supervised the day workers assigned to their vehicle. The canvassers would do a midday sweep, then one in the late afternoon, and finally a third one just before the polls closed. Anyone needing a ride would be picked up by another vehicle. Only at the end of the day, when the vans reported back to base, would the drivers receive their $100 in cash and the other workers $75 each. It was a hectic as well as expensive day, with multiple sites, plus Al Kindle’s similar effort and the various West Side operations. Operations director Madhuri Kommareddi oversaw the funding for the Election Day effort. With tens of thousands of dollars in cash on hand, Madhuri, a Lindenfeld aide, and an armed bodyguard worked out of Valerie Jarrett’s ninth-floor lakefront apartment at 4950 South Chicago Beach Drive. “We were doing the cash distribution that would go to the different sites out of Valerie’s apartment,” Madhuri explained. Jarrett had advanced $8,160 for Lindenfeld’s troops’ hand warmers, plus an additional $16,869 for more van rentals, but as the polls closed and Barack’s top supporters gathered in the ballroom at the downtown Hyatt Regency, both Lindenfeld’s command post and Al Kindle’s South Side office made emergency requests for more cash to cope with higher-than-expected costs. Frantic phone calls were made, with Lindenfeld telling Cauley that chaos would erupt if another $10,000 was not delivered to his site. “They were just being dicks,” Tom thought, and although a quick delivery did arrive, a similar crisis also played out at 54th and Wentworth. Kindle’s “was a mob scene,” Greg Naylor recalled, but “some additional cash” was delivered there too, and the hundreds of workers all headed home happy.<sup>63</sup>

At the Hyatt Regency, Barack’s consultants had carefully planned the evening’s schedule. Former Democratic National Committee chairman David Wilhelm, Emil Jones Jr., Rev. Jesse Jackson Sr., and U.S. representatives Jesse Jackson Jr., Jan Schakowsky, Lane Evans, and Danny Davis would speak to the crowd before Barack made his first appearance, hopefully a little before 10:00 P.M. David Axelrod arranged for camera crews to film the event for use in general election ads, but strict orders were issued about who should appear in camera shots with Barack and his family members and who must not. Sheila Simon and Rev. Jeremiah Wright joined Barack, Michelle, their daughters, Maya Soetoro, and close family friend Kaye Wilson onstage, but Axelrod was adamant that Jackson Sr. not appear alongside Barack. “The one thing Ax didn’t want was him in the shot,” so there were “explicit orders to tackle Jesse Jackson if he got near the stage,” Jim Cauley recounted. “There’s no less than ten staffers that were told to take him out, and Valerie Jarrett was assigned to stand next to him and hold his hand and not let him on the stage.”

Anticipating victory, Barack had spent a good portion of the day committing to memory his prepared remarks once he and Michelle, accompanied by their daughters, had voted early that morning in Hyde Park. While Dan Shomon hosted a Springfield party at Floyd’s Thirst Parlor, Barack’s campaign staffers from around Chicagoland headed for the Hyatt as soon as their Election Day tasks ended. David LeBreton, who had been coordinating phone bank efforts in a trio of collar counties, asked his parents to meet him at the Hyatt with a clean pair of socks so that the pair he had worn nonstop for the previous three days could go into the men’s room trash can.

Amid the hustle of election night, one donor made demands. “Tony Rezko wanted a suite” there at the Hyatt, Jim Cauley remembered, but the hotel was sold out. Rezko called finance assistant Kaleshia Page to reiterate his request, but Kaleshia said no. Then her phone rang again: “Find him a room,” Barack ordered. “‘Kaleshia, I know you’re busy, but see what you can do.’ So I screamed at a whole bunch of hotel people and found him a room,” Kaleshia recalled. “I might have handed him the keys.” On what would be one of the most momentous nights of his life, Barack took the time to make sure his aides did everything they could to make Tony Rezko happy.

Polls closed at 7:00 P.M., but none of the campaigns were prepared for as quick a verdict as TV newscasters delivered. “It was over in the blink of an eye,” a dejected Dan Hynes remembered. “Three minutes after the polls closed. That was a bit disappointing.” Chris Mather, Hynes’s communications director, got worried when Barack’s TV ads went up on downstate stations, but on Election Day, “I thought we still had a good chance to win.” But in the hour after 7:00 P.M., Mather’s reaction was just like her candidate’s: “I can’t believe what I’m seeing.”

At the Hyatt, Barack’s warm-up speakers paused when first Blair Hull publicly conceded the race and called Barack shortly before 9:00 P.M., and then Hynes did the same twenty minutes later. “All I can say is I will never read the newspapers the same way again,” Hull told reporters, while a magnanimous Hynes praised Barack. “He ran a great campaign. He’s an unbelievably talented individual.” Other congratulatory calls came in, including one from presumptive Democratic presidential nominee John Kerry. As 10:00 P.M. approached, Sheila Simon presented Barack with one of her father’s trademark bow ties as everyone prepared for Barack to speak to the big crowd that had gathered. The numbers on the TV newscasts were astonishing: Barack was winning a majority of the vote, with projections showing him winning as much as 53 percent, despite the presence of six other candidates on the ballot. In the corridor outside the ballroom, Barack encountered pollster Paul Harstad. “Did you poll this?” Barack asked in amazement. “I told David 47 percent,” Paul responded. “Thank you so much. I really appreciate it. I really do,” Barack replied.

Following Sheila Simon's introduction, Barack took the stage at 10:14 p.m. "Sixteen months ago"—actually fourteen—"I stood in the Allegro Hotel with some of you and announced my candidacy for the United States Senate. And although the announcement was respectfully received, I think it's fair to say that the conventional wisdom was we could not win. We didn't have enough money, we didn't have enough organization. There was no way that a skinny guy from the South Side with a funny name like Barack Obama could ever win a statewide race." Barack took a long pause. "Sixteen"—again—"months later we are here as Democrats from all across Illinois to say, 'Yes we can. Yes we can. Yes we can,'" as the crowd joined in, picking up the chant. "We are all connected as one people," Barack stated, and victory must result "in some concrete good for ordinary people out there. . . . That is our end goal. It's not just winning an election, it's making a change in this country." Saying, "I am fired up," Barack called for "a politics of hope," invoked "the audacity of hope," and declared that "I am absolutely positive that we can change the course of this country."

A few weeks later, Barack said the results "surprised everybody but me," yet several months further on he stated, "I was as surprised as anybody in terms of the margin of victory. . . . I didn't expect to win as well as we did." David Axelrod told Barack that "Harold is smiling down on us tonight," and Axelrod stressed to Chicago newsmen that "one of the great disciplines of the campaign was not to spend money early and waste those resources." Some observers were surprised that Barack was not more visibly excited, and Michelle told one columnist, "he's basically a calm guy. It takes a lot to push his buttons. He has incredibly low blood pressure." WBBM's late-evening newscast told viewers that "the size of his triumph in the suburbs is truly historic," and WMAQ's anchor said, "it's as if once everyone realized just who Barack Obama was, that's the person they tended to turn to." At the Hyatt, David Wilhelm told local stations that Barack "ran an unfailingly positive campaign where he told a story about himself, he told a story about his experience, he told a story about his track record."<sup>64</sup>

Barack and his family spent the night at the Hyatt so he was more easily available for early Wednesday morning television news shows. Most of Barack's campaign staff went to Garrett Ripley's, where hardworking intern Alex Okrent "literally falls asleep at the bar," student volunteer Tarak Shah remembered. "You couldn't rouse him." Wednesday's Tribune declared Barack's 52.8 percent victory a "landslide." With 655,923 votes statewide, he easily outdistanced second-place Dan Hynes, who ended up with 23.7 percent. Blair Hull finished third, with 10.8 percent, having spent more than $200 for each vote he received. Maria Pappas, Gery Chico, Nancy Skinner, and Joyce Washington all trailed badly, receiving 6.0, 4.3, 1.3, and 1.1. percent, respectively.

One national reporter predicted that "Obama is certain to be an overnight sensation in national Democratic circles," and Sun-Times columnist Mark Brown declared that "Obama has the potential to be the most significant political figure Illinois has sent to Washington since Abraham Lincoln." Retired jurist R. Eugene Pincham told one news service that Barack "has this tone that distinguishes him from the typical black, and yet he's black." A lady from Chicago's 29th Ward put it differently to the Tribune: "for lack of a better word, it's like he's multi-colored." Most Illinois commentators focused on the remarkable breadth of Barack's support. In Chicago, black voter turnout was 41.4 percent, the highest in a Democratic primary since Carol Moseley Braun's historic 1992 win. In primarily black wards, Barack received 88 percent of the vote, plus 78 percent in predominantly black areas of suburban Cook County. In county board president John Stroger's 8th Ward, where the Democratic organization backed Dan Hynes, Barack received 15,684 votes—more than 91 percent—and Hynes just 649. Overall, Barack won forty-one of the city’s fifty wards and received more than 66.5 percent of the vote. Dan Hynes carried only five wards, and Gery Chico four, but even in the Hynes family’s home 19th Ward, Barack received more than 41 percent of the vote.

Beyond Chicago’s city limits, Barack won 89 percent of the vote in Evanston and 87 percent in Oak Park. He carried both Cook County and Terry Link’s Lake County with more than 64 percent of the vote, and also won the other four collar counties, including a 57 percent majority in DuPage. Thanks to strong support in university communities like Champaign, Barack carried seven additional counties across Illinois, winning an astonishing 25 percent of the downstate vote. As Rich Miller wrote in Capitol Fax, “it looks like Obama won wherever people saw his TV ads.” Jack Ryan won the Republican nomination with 36 percent of the vote, but in the traditional Republican stronghold of DuPage, the raw vote comparison was striking: Barack received 35,770 votes, Ryan only 25,276. Yet Ryan’s victory threatened to prove hollow, for as Miller observed in Wednesday’s Capitol Fax, “if the Chicago Tribune wins its case and forces open Ryan’s divorce records, and the rumors are true, he could find himself off the ticket in a matter of weeks.”

Even prior to Tuesday night’s resounding triumph, Barack and his consultants had turned their minds to a trio of concerns. First, Illinois tradition called for victorious candidates to do a day-after fly-around of the state, and Peter Coffey, who a year earlier had rebuffed Barack’s request to come on board the campaign, volunteered to organize that tour. Then the candidate and his family sought a much-deserved vacation. “They wanted to go to Florida,” finance director Claire Serdiuk remembered, but “we could not get them booked on a flight to Florida” because of spring break week. Claire instead recommended Scottsdale, Arizona, and particularly its famous Biltmore Resort. “Ooh, Michelle would love to stay at the Biltmore,” Barack replied, but that too was sold out, and a fallback was found. Third, the candidate and especially his consultants realized that once Barack was the Democratic nominee for a Republican-held U.S. Senate seat, his young, bare-bones campaign staff would require a major transfusion in the form of nationally experienced Democratic operatives.

After Wednesday’s early TV shows and a quick call-in to WVON’s Cliff Kelley program, Barack was the star attraction at an Illinois Democratic Unity press conference. Both his vanquished primary opponents and even U.S. representative Bobby Rush attended, with Barack giving special thanks to his “political godfather,” Emil Jones Jr. Speaking with Chicago reporters before heading to Springfield and then four other downstate destinations, Barack said, “I have been chasing this same goal my entire adult career, and that is creating an America that is fairer, more compassionate and has a greater understanding between its various peoples.” Asked about Jack Ryan’s divorce, Barack expressed disinterest. “I think it’s important to define character issues broadly. Character is not just a matter of whom you’re sleeping with or what you did when you were a teenager,” and he instead targeted “Ryan’s embrace of George Bush’s agenda.” When reporters questioned him about his own admissions in Dreams, Barack explained that young men “engage in self-destructive behavior because they don’t have a clear sense of direction” and that he was able “to pull out of that and refocus” by “tying myself to something much larger than myself.”

A young woman told the Chicago Tribune’s David Mendell that Barack’s campaign “feels like a movement,” and “for people of our generation, we haven’t been a part of something like this before.”

Mendell thought Barack was “on the verge of becoming a significant voice for the black American, and perhaps even for the common American,” but Barack told the New York Times he believed voters “are more interested in the message than the color of the messenger.” Under a headline declaring that “Overnight, a Democratic Star Is Born,” the Times said Barack was now “a treasured commodity in the Democratic Party nationally.” USA Today agreed, titling a story “Dems See a Rising Star in Illinois Senate Candidate.” Some people “whisper about a presidential future,” the paper added, and the Boston Globe said that with his primary win, “Obama seemed to step into history.”<sup>65</sup>

Amid all the kudos, one Wednesday-afternoon e-mail stood out. Dr. Farr A. Curlin, a young, quite religious U of C medical internist, had heard Barack speak and had voted for him, but he wrote to complain that ObamaForIllinois.com, in its section on “Protecting Choice and Achieving Gender Equity,” promised that Barack would oppose “right-wing ideologues who seek to overturn Roe v. Wade.” As someone who opposed “the systematic killing of human fetuses,” Curlin believed that Barack was “fair-minded and wise enough to know that the ad hominem, slanderous rhetoric that marks your website . . . demeans you even as it demeans those with whom you disagree. . . . I sense that you are above that.” Because “I believe you will win and may go on to be the President one day,” Curlin hoped that in the future Barack would address abortion “with plain reason and fairness.”

At 1:14 A.M. Thursday, Barack replied, thanking Curlin for his “thoughtful letter” and agreeing “that the language in my website has fallen victim to some of the short-hand and jargon of the Democratic party,” which is “not always a healthy thing.” Barack said, “I do not believe that the question of abortion is an easy one” and indeed was “a profoundly difficult” one. “I think it should be the woman, and not others, that acts as the final decision-maker,” because “the overwhelming majority of women do not make these decisions with the casualness that opponents of abortions sometimes portray.” Barack added that “I personally view the ethical issues involved in early term abortion as being fundamentally different from the issues raised by late term abortions, although I see no clear dividing line provided by science.” Two years later, Barack recounted that exchange, saying he had felt “a pang of shame” at Curlin’s complaint but incorrectly added that he immediately had the website language altered—it remained unchanged for at least seven weeks.

On Friday Barack, Michelle, and their daughters flew to Arizona for a four-day vacation. “Scottsdale’s beautiful,” Barack told Claire Serdiuk in a thank-you phone call. It was his first brief respite in more than fourteen months, and it allowed him time to reflect on how much his life had changed since his initial television ad introduced him to hundreds of thousands of people. Asked four years later when he first thought about being president of the United States, Barack said, “it wasn’t until I won my Senate primary” that he began “believing . . . in a very concrete way” that “being president was something I would pursue.” Since “we had gotten a pretty powerful response while I was running in the primary . . . I had a sense that the message I was delivering might resonate with a broad cross section of the American people.”

Barack’s aides understood that “things just changed overnight” for him after his victory, as Kevin Thompson put it. Finance assistant Liz Drew recalled that “his whole world just changed like the next day,” and “nothing is going to be the same again.” Barack’s consultants knew that a major ramp-up would quickly have to take place, and by the time Barack and his family returned to Chicago, two long memos were waiting. The first, written by the Strategy Group’s Pete Giangreco and Terry Walsh, analyzed the primary triumph. Their targeting had always anticipated that black voters would rally to Barack's candidacy once they knew who he was, so their analysis argued that the scale of his victory was not within Chicago but outside the city's borders. Pete and Terry were astonished by Dan Hynes's "dramatic inability to capture undecided votes or other votes that came into play" when Blair Hull's candidacy imploded and Maria Pappas failed to run a serious campaign. "Obama became the default candidate for uncommitted voters," especially in suburban Cook and the surrounding collar counties. Their goal for suburban Cook County had been 42 percent, but Barack captured 61, and his overall 54 percent in the five collar counties, including an "extraordinary" 64 percent in Lake, outperformed the targeting by 15 percent. In rural counties in both northern Illinois and in true downstate, Barack ran only 4 to 6 percent ahead of expectations.

Barack's top staffers and outside observers all agreed that Hull's triggering of the McCain-Feingold "millionaires' amendment" had given Barack's campaign an important although not decisive boost. Jim Reynolds recalled that "the thing that we were most afraid of in the Senate race"—whether Barack would be able to raise enough money to be a top-tier candidate—turned out to be no obstacle at all. "A huge amount of the black business community wrote the biggest checks they had ever written to a politician," and thanks to the entrée Barack gained to other major donors like the Pritzker, Crown, and Soros families, by March 16, scores of donors had given five-figure amounts. Several slightly divergent analyses agreed that between $1.7 and $2 million represented donations above the $2,000-per-person normal limit. John Kupper felt that money was "hugely important," for "otherwise we would never have gotten to the level of funding and thus media advertising that we were able to achieve." Jim Cauley agreed: "If we didn't have the millionaires' amendment, we would have been on TV at ten days instead of three weeks" before March 16, "and maybe we wouldn't have accelerated enough to win." Yet far less attention was devoted to an even more important achievement: 95 percent of Obama for Illinois's total expenditures occurred after December 31, 2003.

John Kupper believed Barack benefited hugely from the absence of a truly strong female candidate, but Dan Hynes was not alone in thinking that Barack's opposition to the Iraq war had proven decisive. "I think it was highly significant and had a huge impact," Hynes explained, for "it defined him and his candidacy with some very key, important constituencies." In progressive white suburbs like Evanston and Oak Park, Barack's antiwar stance was "a major factor" in having "a whole lot of folks fall in love with him very quickly," state senator Don Harmon believed. As North Side political commentator Russ Stewart cogently concluded, "Obama won because, unlike Hynes, he crafted an image that appealed to a liberal base."

After the primary, Hynes's camp was left wondering "how did the Blair Hull voters in the polls all go to Barack?" once Hull's candidacy imploded. "Maybe in our messaging we just weren't getting things to stick enough," Chris Mather conjectured. "I'm not sure that we could have done anything differently," pollster Jef Pollock thought. "Obama picks up the Hull collapse, and we didn't," for Barack became "the agent of change that people were looking for." As Mather put it, Barack's campaign "had a narrative that was perfect." Blair Hull realized that his "biggest mistake"—indeed a "fatal" one—was not pushing his consultants much harder to make the details of his 1998 divorce public six months before the primary. "It was clearly the right thing to do and we should have done it very early." As Mather noted, Hull "had all the money in the world to rewrite the narrative" once that was old news. Hull walked away from the race with equanimity, even after one of Barack's Springfield poker buddies ran into him in Mexico soon after the primary. "Blair! Blair Hull! You just spent tens of millions of dollars for someone to recognize you in a bar in Cabo San Lucas!" "Life is not always fair," Blair Hull explained. "You don't regret the things you did, you regret the things you didn't do. I don't regret that I ran for the Senate."

Consultants, staffers, and journalists all recognized that "a series of excellent, well-conceived television spots," particularly the "enormously effective" Sheila Simon one, had boosted Barack's appeal. "The turning point was the Sheila Simon commercial," Raja Krishnamoorthi, Barack's uber-volunteer policy director, believed. "People took notice right away." Speaking with CBS Chicago reporter Mike Flannery, Barack's Republican Senate colleague Kirk Dillard called it "a great ad," and Flannery added, "which many people credit as one of the turning points of the campaign." Anita Dunn explained that "what that ad accomplished for him downstate was that he became the alternative to Blair." Capitol Fax agreed: "The Obama ads gave former Hull supporters and leaners a place to go right away." Dunn understood "the phenomenon of people feeling better about themselves for supporting an African American," and Axelrod's "advertising was pitch-perfect for Obama."<sup>66</sup>

The second memo to Barack, titled "Finishing the Job," critically analyzed his campaign to date and specified the changes needed for the general election race. Written by David Axelrod, his D.C.-based partner David Plouffe, and John Kupper, it warned that while Barack had won by "a margin that was inconceivable," there would be no "free pass" for "an African-American nominee with a funny name and a seven-year legislative record." Axelrod and Kupper's involvement with the campaign over the previous fourteen months had been almost daily, while Plouffe had had just one long breakfast conversation with Barack a year earlier when he was struggling to do his necessary call time. "You have to be the candidate. Not the campaign manager, scheduler, or driver," Plouffe told Barack, who replied, "I understand that intellectually, but this is my life and career. And I think I could probably do every job on the campaign better than the people I'll hire to do it. It's hard to give up control when that's all I've known in my political life. But I hear you and will try to do better."

The ensuing months had repeatedly demonstrated Barack's difficulty in surrendering control over his daily life and schedule, a struggle highlighted by how long it took him to transition from driver to passenger. Now "the level of scrutiny facing you and your campaign will enter another magnitude," because the Axelrod team assumed that Jack Ryan's "campaign will be taken over by skilled national operatives." Four main staffing challenges loomed. First, Barack should bring "on board a senior communications strategist to oversee the entire press operation." During the primary, "the press relationships of your consultants helped obscure the deficiencies of the campaign's press operation," and "a lot of talent" was now available. In place of Raja Krishnamoorthi's band of volunteers, Barack would also need a full-time "professional research director."

Although "Joe McLean has done great work" and "Claire and your fundraising team obviously exceeded expectations," Barack now had "close to a limitless fundraising potential." Events in major cities across the nation needed to be scheduled, and going forward "your fundraising operation . . . should damn near be presidential." The good news was that "with certain exceptions, your days of asking for individual contributions should be over. (We know you are unhappy to hear this)," but "a campaign fundraiser with serious national experience" should immediately be hired. Lastly, although Northwestern senior Madhuri Kommareddi "has done a terrific job" overseeing scheduling and operations, Barack needed both “a senior scheduling and advance director” and “a full-time ‘body’ person” in addition to whoever was driving Barack when he was on the road. “The pace and breakneck speed of the general will dwarf the primary,” Axelrod’s team warned.

For several of the new roles, Barack and his consultants knew almost immediately whom they wanted. Even before flying to Scottsdale, Barack asked Peter Coffey, who a year earlier had declined to become campaign manager, to take charge of scheduling just as he had done for Barack’s postprimary swing. Coffey agreed, as did Scott Kennedy, a former David Wilhelm aide whom Giangreco and Cauley asked to take charge of the FEC compliance work that Madhuri and Claire’s young assistant Liz Drew had been trying to stay on top of. Joe McLean asked his colleague Susan Shadow, who likewise had refused Barack’s initial offer a year earlier, to move to Chicago to join Claire in overseeing national fund-raising. “Can you be here Monday?” Barack asked Susan by phone, and with the campaign now able to pay senior staff $10,000 a month, Susan signed on too. For Barack’s personal “body man,” Michelle recommended Kevin Thompson, who accepted Barack’s invitation as well. The consultants also had someone in mind for the research job, plus several serious contenders to interview for the communications post.

For the tight-knit group that had worked closely with Jimmy, Nate, and Claire to bring about such a stunning primary win, the transition was jarring. “Nothing will ever be like the closeness and camaraderie of that primary, and the chaos,” Liz Drew remembered. Adam Stolorow agreed that “it was such a fun staff,” but the arrival of so many higher-ranking, experienced newcomers made for hurt feelings. “I want people that have done this before,” Barack instructed. “Those are the exact words,” Dan Shomon recounted. Audra Wilson recalled that it was “almost as though there wasn’t appreciation or recognition of all that we had done to get to this point.” Lyndell Luster agreed that “it was a little rough” and “kind of cold.” Before the primary “it was like a family,” but it became “a business” afterward. In the ensuing weeks, “a lot of people got pushed aside” and “it was kind of heart-wrenching for me,” Lyndell confessed. Virtually all of the staff veterans who felt slighted were African American, and longtime AFSCME lobbyist Ray Harris complained to Barack about his treatment of Kevin Watson, who had been “with him day in, day out.” Barack replied, “You know, Ray, Kevin’s had me in an awful lot of bars,” not at all surprising for South Side campaigning. “Kevin was devastated,” Ray thought. “A lot of the staff wasn’t being properly utilized, so people started to quit,” Audra Wilson explained. “I had a long talk with Barack, and he was a little taken aback.”<sup>67</sup>

As the Axelrod memo reflected, Barack’s aides expected a demanding general election campaign against Jack Ryan. John Kupper thought “he could be problematic,” because his well-publicized inner-city teaching stint at Hales Franciscan would make Ryan “more palatable to suburban whites” than other conservative Republicans. Nate Tamarin said, “We took him very seriously,” because with “a guy named Barack Obama . . . we anticipated that this thing was going to be a challenge.” Claire Serdiuk concurred. Ryan was “a very, very competitive candidate,” for with a “white Irishman” up against “Barack Hussein Obama,” the contest was “not at all a walk-away.” Many Republicans agreed. Barack’s lobbyist friend John Nicolay thought “Jack Ryan was probably by far the most dangerous opponent for Barack.” Senate minority leader Frank Watson had assumed Dan Hynes would be the Democratic nominee, but once Barack won, a lot of Republicans started thinking, “We’ve got a real chance at this.” In contrast, former governor Jim Edgar told reporters that Barack’s victory demonstrated that in Illinois, “race is no longer a hindrance. In fact, it’s a plus.”

Barack and his family had returned from Scotsdale directly to Springfield for a special event on the Senate floor. “I am proud that today, I, I believe, in front of my five-year-old and two-year-old, I can justify my work in public service because I have the honor of introducing on the floor one of the biggest stars of stage and screen,” a character from the Chicago Children’s Museum. “I know the theme song. I know most of the plots of Clifford the Big Red Dog, who is here. Give it up for Clifford.” Many senators remembered Barack from that first day back, but not for his rousing introduction of Clifford. Poker buddy Tommy Walsh remembered that “he was struttin’ more than you’ve ever seen a guy.” Walsh was unperturbed, but senators who were not fans took umbrage.

One month earlier a reporter had noted that Barack had “a slightly stiff manner of walking that some people close to him suspect is an affectation of John F. Kennedy.” Judiciary Committee Republican Ed Petka remembered that Barack “had a gait in his walk,” a “type of gait that was sending off a signal of cockiness.” A foul-mouthed Chicago senator recalled Barack’s “pimp-ass fuckin’ gait” that Wednesday. “Too bad you couldn’t be with me,” Barack remarked. When the colleague offered pro forma congratulations, Barack told him to “save it” and uttered an ethnic put-down. “Barack, go fuck yourself,” the senator replied, explaining that “Barack was an arrogant motherfucker.” Barack’s postprimary demeanor led senators to ask “Who the fuck made him king?” or, as one African American colleague remarked to a black lobbyist, “Who this nigger think he gonna be? President?”

The Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee (DSCC) had sent Barack’s campaign their opposition research report on Jack Ryan, whom it labeled “an extreme right wing ideologue.” Ryan “is virtually incapable of answering a question in a succinct yet comprehensive fashion,” the DSCC believed, and “his facts . . . are often wrong.” That Wednesday in Springfield, Barack’s top staff and consultants assembled for a long meeting to discuss policy stances as well as a proposed general election media budget of more than $8 million.

The next day Illinois Times, Springfield’s alternative newsweekly, posted online a piece by Todd Spivak, who previously had covered Barack for the Hyde Park Herald. Spivak noted that African American House Democrats like Lou Jones and Monique Davis had refused to back Barack in the primary. But Spivak’s lede—“It can be painful to hear Ivy League–bred Barack Obama talk jive,” using words like “homeboy” while being “perhaps more vanilla than chocolate”—easily overshadowed the House members’ put-downs. Early the next morning Spivak’s phone rang. It was Barack, “screaming at me” while denying he had ever used “homeboy.” Spivak recounted that “it seemed so silly; I thought for sure he was joking. He wasn’t.” Another reporter had heard Barack call Spivak an “asshole” at a fundraiser, but Spivak was left “stunned” and “trembling” as Barack “shouted me down” when Spivak tried to respond. “I asked if there was anything factually inaccurate,” but Barack “cut me off” when he tried to say more. Barack had previously told Spivak not to call his cell phone, but now Barack insisted that he should have after Barack’s staff dropped the ball on Spivak’s interview request.

A landslide victory had not made Barack any less thin-skinned, but later that day on the Senate floor he acknowledged how conscious he was of his new status. Speaking in favor of a bill to allow for the sealing of former drug offenders’ criminal records in order to improve their employment chances, Barack explained that “nobody, obviously, right now in this room, probably is more mindful of the politics of issues and how he or she votes than I am right now. Nevertheless, I feel obliged to support this bill, knowing that it could cause me problems in a mailer come November.” Given “the enormous numbers of people who are now going through the criminal justice system,” Barack cast a crucial thirtieth vote to “give people a second chance” as three other Democrats joined with unanimous Republicans in voting no.<sup>68</sup>

On Saturday afternoon, Barack met Chicago Sun-Times religion reporter Cathleen Falsani at the coffee shop a few doors south of his campaign office. “I have a deep faith,” and “I’m rooted in the Christian tradition. I believe that there are many paths to the same place, and that is a belief that there is a higher power,” Barack explained. He spoke about his 1985–88 experiences in Roseland, erroneously saying he had joined Trinity United Church of Christ in “1987 or ’88.” Asked if he still attended Trinity, Barack answered “Every week. Eleven o’clock service,” though four years later, he accurately acknowledged that “there was quite a big chunk of time, especially during the Senate race, where we might not have gone to Trinity for two, three months at a time.”

Barack told Falsani that he believed that “religion at its best comes with a big dose of doubt,” especially given that “there’s an enormous amount of damage done around the world in the name of religion and certainty.” Barack said, “I think I have an ongoing conversation with God,” and that “the biggest challenge, I think, is always maintaining your moral compass. Those are the conversations I’m having internally. I’m measuring my actions against that inner voice that for me at least is audible, is active, it tells me where I think I’m on track, and where I think I’m off track.”

Asked who in his life he looked to for guidance, Barack immediately cited Rev. Jeremiah Wright as “certainly someone I have an enormous amount of respect for,” adding that Father Michael Pfleger is “a dear friend and somebody I interact with closely.” Barack volunteered that “I think there is an enormous danger on the part of public figures to rationalize or justify their actions by claiming God’s mandate,” and he confessed that “the nature of politics is that you want to have everybody like you and project the best possible traits onto you. Oftentimes that’s by being as vague as possible.” He added that “nothing is more powerful than the black church experience,” and said that “in my own sort of mental library, the civil rights movement has a powerful hold on me.” In closing, Falsani asked Barack what he remembered about his decision to join Trinity. Barack said it was “a gradual process,” not “an epiphany,” because “there is a certain self-consciousness that I possess as somebody with probably too much book learning and also a very polyglot background.”

Asked several years later whether he prayed, Barack said, “Yes, I do . . . every day.” Asked what he prayed for, Barack answered, “Forgiveness for my sins and flaws, which are many, the protection of my family, and that I’m carrying out God’s will, and not in a grandiose way, but simply that there is an alignment between my actions and what he would want.” Michelle said the family prayed at every meal, but among the scores of people who knew Barack well over the years, very, very few believed that religious faith played any significant role in his life. One who did was state Senate colleague Ira Silverstein, an Orthodox Jew whose Springfield office for four years adjoined Barack’s and whose daughters attended the same preschool as Barack’s. “We used to talk about Israel all the time,” Silverstein recalled. “We talked about religion a lot. He is a very religious person.” Another was attorney and author Scott Turow, with whom Barack had discussed capital punishment in such “a very spiritual way” that Scott was certain Barack’s religious faith “was really sincere.”<sup>69</sup>

On Monday, Barack, Jim Cauley, and Claire Serdiuk flew to Washington to meet with DSCC officials and attend a Congressional Black Caucus (CBC) fund-raiser. They also met Robert Gibbs, Axelrod’s preferred candidate for communications director, a white Alabaman who until four months earlier had worked on John Kerry's presidential campaign, and Amanda Fuchs, a Northwestern Law School graduate whom the consultants were recommending as the new policy director. Like Peter Coffey, Susan Shadow, and Kevin Thompson, Gibbs and Fuchs were both white—"nobody was whiter than Gibbs," Pete Giangreco explained—and Barack's insistence upon maintaining a racially balanced staff was teetering badly with the departures of Pam Smith, Kevin Watson, and Audra Wilson, and the influx of white newcomers. Barack "was very insistent that the staff be diverse," and Giangreco recalled that agreeing to hire Gibbs "was a little bit of a pill for Barack to swallow," especially because another candidate, Jamal Simmons, was African American. In addition, Axelrod recruited Nora Moreno, a young woman who knew Chicago well, as Gibbs's deputy.

"Barack's really pounding for black operatives with some experience," Cauley explained, and he, Joe McLean, and Tom Lindenfeld recommended Darrel Thompson, an African American who had served as a top aide to House Democrat Richard Gephardt. Barack remembered Thompson from Alice Palmer's congressional campaign nine years earlier, but Darrel sought assurance of Barack's political toughness when he and Cauley asked Darrel to join the campaign. "Well, if you're asking me if I'm a punk, the answer is no," Barack replied. "I intend to run this race and win it." Pleased by that, Darrel agreed to come on board as chief of staff under Cauley. African American Vera Baker, who had staffed the CBC fund-raiser, agreed to move to Chicago to join Barack's finance team. Susan Shadow added two more young fund-raisers, Jenny Yeager and Jordan Kaplan, to her and Claire's growing team. When Gibbs asked Cauley to hire another young white press assistant, Tommy Vietor, Cauley did so knowing there would be blowback. "Barack chewed me out one afternoon and told me if I hired another white person he was going to kick my ass. 'Jimmy, you've got too many white folk in here,'" Barack complained. Cauley replied by saying Vietor was only a volunteer. "I just lied to Barack," he recounted.

While in Washington, Barack also taped a radio program and a TV show with African American broadcaster Tavis Smiley. "I'm certainly black enough to have trouble catching a cab in New York City," Barack assured Tavis, and on TV Barack remarked that viewers could get confused by telecasts. "Sometimes they're watching Fox News. You know that's gonna get 'em confused." In an article for Salon.com entitled "The New Face of the Democratic Party—and America," Scott Turow wrote that "Obama is the very face of American diversity." Comparing him to prominent African American Republicans Colin Powell and Condoleezza Rice, Turow predicted that Barack "may become the first black Democrat able to rise above race."

One reader of Turow's essay was Rachel Klayman, an editor at Crown Publishing who dimly remembered that Barack had once published a book. Searching online, Klayman discovered that not only was the paperback edition of Dreams From My Father long out of print, but the rights to issue a reprint were held by Crown itself. Neither the company nor agent Jane Dystel still had a copy of Dreams, but Barack still had copies of the original paperback, and sent several to Klayman. Reading Dreams, Klayman quickly resolved to reissue the book and asked Dystel if Barack could write a preface to the new edition. Within a few weeks, Barack did just that in the space of an afternoon. Briefly surveying his life since 1995, Barack wrote that his legislative work had proven "satisfying" because "the scale of state politics allows for concrete results." Explaining how his primary win had led to Dreams' republication, Barack predicted, "I have a tough general election coming up." Rereading it "for the first time in many years . . . I have the urge to cut the book by fifty pages or so,” without saying how. Citing 9/11, Barack wrote that “the bombs of Al Qaeda have marked, with eerie precision, some of the landscapes of my life . . . Nairobi, Bali, Manhattan,” but demonstrated how “the embrace of fundamentalism and tribe dooms us all.”

Not only were Honolulu newspapers trumpeting Barack’s new fame, Columbia University’s student newspaper also wrote that the 1983 alumnus was “one of the rising stars of the Democratic party.” Barack’s campaign sent out a fund-raising e-mail warning that “our precious civil liberties are threatened by the Patriot Act,” and his policy team volunteers turned their attention to Jack Ryan’s record. Andrew Gruber surveyed the issues content on Ryan’s campaign Web site and wrote Raja Krishnamoorthi to express amazement: “it has a section on the 2nd Amendment, but does not have a section on health care.” Illinois Republicans remained privately worried about how the Tribune’s effort to unseal Ryan’s divorce file would play out, with Capitol Fax reporting that Illinois congressman and U.S. House Speaker Dennis Hastert had told Ryan he would be unable to raise funds in Washington until the problem was resolved. Given Ryan’s problems and the strength of Barack’s primary win, “unless Ryan unearths some very damaging political stances, legislative votes or personal ethical lapses of Obama’s, Obama will win in a walk,” Chicago columnist Russ Stewart predicted.

A serious Republican effort was under way to investigate Barack’s background and record. Matt Tallmer, a former Republican National Committee operative, was tasked with much of the work, and he began by reading Dreams From My Father. “Most of the potential problems involve very minor issues,” and the book “omits whole portions of his life,” Tallmer reported. He concluded that Barack “is not certain whether he is black or white,” but resolved his racial conflict “by joining the white world.” A review of Miner Barnhill’s legal clients was also unproductive, and two memos examining Barack’s major donors were badly off-target. Only contributors to his Senate campaign, but not his earlier races, were reviewed, and although Tony Rezko’s close relationship with Governor Blagojevich was noted, neither Rezko nor any of his associates were included in a list highlighting possible “bad actors.” Instead Valerie Jarrett, an old friend who had fought an expressway, and a close friend of Michelle’s who opposed corporal punishment in schools were all oddly prioritized. An initial effort to examine Barack’s Springfield record floundered badly, but several weeks later Debbie Lounsberry, who had previously staffed the Public Health and Welfare Committee for Republicans, compiled a highly competent analysis of Barack’s potentially problematic Senate votes.<sup>70</sup>

Barack’s campaign received encouraging news from Paul Harstad’s first general election poll. A plurality of Illinois voters felt negatively about President George W. Bush, and Democrat John Kerry led Bush 52 to 38 percent. Barack registered 85–1 in favorability among black voters, 74–3 among Democratic women, a surprising 35–13 among Republican women, and 17–28 among Republican men. Burrowing down into positive and negative themes, “represents change” was a clear plus for Barack, with health care and retirement security ranked high as well. Initially voters chose Barack over Jack Ryan by 52 to 33 percent. After both candidates’ issue positions and biographies were detailed, Barack’s lead increased to 53–30, with Ryan weakened more by his views on policies than he was strengthened by his résumé. In a summary memo to Barack’s campaign team, Harstad highlighted that even with a 19-point lead, Barack’s overall name recognition was only 73 percent, as compared to an ostensible 84 percent for Ryan. “Thus Obama has more room for growth in support than does Ryan.”

Barack continued to say Ryan's divorce was not "an appropriate topic for debate." A Saturday campaign appearance at a College Democrats conference was followed by an evening party at Tony Rezko's Wilmette mansion. Asked about Iraq on WTTW's Chicago Tonight, Barack emphasized that "we've got to be sure we get the job done" and stressed that "our support of Israel is unequivocal." On April 8 John Kerry arrived in Chicago for a gala evening fund-raiser at the Hyatt Regency and a Friday-morning appearance with Barack at a West Side job-training center. Barack spoke at the gala and gave Kerry a "stirring introduction" at the Friday event. That evening Barack and Michelle joined Kerry and his wife Teresa for a private dinner. A Washington Post story on their joint appearance called Barack one of the Democrats' "rising stars," and two days later the Chicago Sun-Times commented on how many such references to Barack were being made.

On Monday, April 12, Paul Harstad presented his poll results to Barack's team, followed by an all-day "consultants retreat" on Tuesday to plan the fall campaign. Harstad's numbers were clear: "Target voters: women & Downstate" with "Women 70 percent of target" and emphasize "Pocketbook/Kitchen-table issues." There was a "Big advantage in 'change,'" and voters were concerned about "healthcare affordability." "Need inoculation on crime & drugs. Need inoculation on raising taxes," although John Kupper noted that "Ryan has terrific vulnerabilities on taxes & health care: we want those debates." At Tuesday's large gathering, there were "all these new faces," with many newcomers being introduced for the first time. Nora Moreno, Gibbs's deputy, recalled that Barack asked of his new communications director, "Is it Robert or Bob?" "We're all trying to figure out what our roles are," she explained. Gibbs "comes on board and he's like 'Who are you? Why you?'" Mostly the answer was "we all had relationships with David."

Paul Harstad and partner Mike Kulisheck reprised their poll presentation, Pete Giangreco and Terry Walsh outlined their general election targeting, and Axelrod and John Kupper addressed messaging. Susan Shadow spent an hour on fund-raising, warning everyone that "I didn't know where the money was going to come from" because unless wealthy Jack Ryan began self-funding, individual general election donors would be limited to $2,000 apiece, not the five-figure contributions allowed in the primary. That meant a new emphasis on out-of-state fund-raising, rather than Barack's Chicagoland acquaintances, which meant Axelrod's promise of no more call time went out the window big time. Jimmy Cauley sketched out an overall budget of $13 million, with $8 million for broadcast media, $1.7 million for direct mail, and $1.8 million for salaries. Scheduler Peter Coffey recalled that throughout all the discussions, Barack "didn't really say much. . . . He would sit there and let it play out. That was his management style," just as it had been at the Harvard Law Review.

At one point, Axelrod mentioned the upcoming Democratic National Convention (DNC) and the desirability of using it to showcase Barack to a wider audience. "We should really try to get a prime-time speaking slot." Pete Giangreco spoke up. "I know Jack Corrigan. I can call him," Pete volunteered. Corrigan, whom John Kerry's campaign had named as its DNC manager three months earlier, had been Giangreco's boss in 1988 as national field director of Michael Dukakis's presidential campaign. Pete telephoned Corrigan. "Yeah, we know all about Obama," Jack responded. Months earlier AFSCME's Henry Bayer had told Corrigan that Abner Mikva, whom Corrigan had worked for a quarter century earlier, believed Barack was "the most talented politician he's met in fifty years." That had gotten Corrigan's attention, and he called law school classmate Elena Kagan, who had clerked for Mikva and overlapped at the U of C with Barack from 1991 to 1995, to ask what she thought of him. “He’s great,” Kagan said, and Corrigan made a note to ask Barack to join Kerry’s campaign staff once “this kid” lost his March primary. Corrigan responded positively when Giangreco said, “It would be really great if we got a prime-time speaking slot” for Barack.<sup>71</sup>

Tax day was less painful for Barack and Michelle than in earlier years: rather than owing the Internal Revenue Service a five-figure sum, they were due a $1,500 refund. But the good financial news ended there. The University of Chicago had paid Barack half of his normal $64,000 annual salary even though he was not teaching in early 2004, but his primary win meant he would have to take a leave for the autumn as well. Michelle’s salary was $121,000, but with child care costs of more than $2,000 a month, family finances were about to get tighter than ever, with their 2004 income headed well below 2003’s $238,000. Michelle had long feared exactly this scenario, as she told the Tribune’s David Mendell. If Barack won in November, “now we’re going to have two households to fund, one here and one in Washington.” Her sarcasm could be cutting, if not demeaning. “Even if you do win, how are you going to afford this wonderful next step in your life?” By April they were discussing taking out a second mortgage on their East View condominium to make up for the loss of Barack’s law school salary.

Over the past decade-plus, Barack had taught twenty-six courses: Racism and the Law twelve times, Con Law III eight times, and Voting Rights six. Among the roughly 750 students he taught, their cumulative evaluations documented the consensus expressed by Douglas Baird and other faculty colleagues: Barack had been a “splendid,” “sensational,” and “tremendously gifted teacher” who was “off-the-charts popular with students.” Given Barack’s consistent absence from the law school except for actual classroom time, most law faculty felt that “being here had zero effect on Barack’s thoughts.” Baird disagreed. “Being a teacher in a University of Chicago classroom makes a big difference. I think the kinds of conversations that he had to have had as a teacher of constitutional law here would be completely different than if he was doing it at Harvard or a place like that because he’s getting conservative students, and people are going to press him on issues,” and “that’s going to affect you,” Baird believed. “That kind of serious intellectual engagement that he had here makes a huge difference” in how Barack understood disagreements over constitutional interpretation.<sup>72</sup>

Barack joined U.S. senator Dick Durbin for a three-day, twelve-stop downstate swing, spending one night at a Super 8 motel in Benton. While Barack was visiting Cairo, Metropolis, and Harrisburg, Jack Ryan held a Springfield news conference to demonstrate that as a state senator “Blank Check Barack” had backed no fewer than 428 tax and fee increases. But reporters realized something was amiss when Ryan displayed a chart showing that Illinois had 846,000 state employees, a vast exaggeration, and things got even worse when they sought documentation for the 428 claim. “We’ll get it to you later,” Ryan replied, but when Bernard Schoenburg of the State Journal-Register cornered Ryan aide Dan Proft, it immediately became clear that “Ryan didn’t know what bills he was talking about”: of the supposed increases, 146 dated from a single 1999 bill that seventeen Republicans, including Pate Philip and Frank Watson, had joined Barack and most Democrats in approving 42–17, and the balance of 282 came from a 2003 bill that Barack had voted against. The resulting headlines—“Ryan’s Chart Is Off” in the Chicago Sun-Times, “Jack Ryan Woefully Unprepared for Attack on Obama” in the Journal-Register—were “more proof that Ryan’s campaign is not yet ready for prime time,” Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller observed. Barack responded that “Mr. Ryan obviously hasn’t served in any policy-making position, so it’s not surprising he doesn't have a very good grasp of the statistics and the issues involved." Ryan's campaign replied by sending out an e-mail claiming that Barack "has earned a reputation to the left of Mao Tse-Tung."

"I don't recall ever covering a candidate who accused his opponent of being for something he had voted against," Bernie Schoenburg wrote in the Journal-Register. While a court-appointed referee weighed what to do with Ryan's divorce file, the candidate assured Republican Party chair Judy Baar Topinka and former governor Jim Edgar "that there was nothing in there that would be embarrassing to the party." Edgar shared those reassurances with others while Ryan's campaign turned up the pressure on Barack by assigning a twenty-four-year-old staffer to follow Barack and videotape all of his public comments. "Initially, I tried to talk with him. I said, 'Listen, I don't mind you following me, but please be fifteen feet away. I'm on the phone with my wife,'" Barack recalled. A New Yorker correspondent also spent several days with Barack, who at the end of a long one said, "I'd rather be doing what you're doing: sitting in the corner listening, watching everybody, taking notes. That comes more naturally to me than this does."

On Wednesday, May 19, Barack brought to the Senate floor the final version of his longest-standing legislative commitment, the Health Care Justice Act. As reintroduced early in the 2003 session by House counterpart Willie Delgado, HB 2268 mandated that by 2007, the state "shall implement a health care access plan" that would provide "quality health care for all residents of Illinois." A thirty-member "Bipartisan Health Care Reform Commission" would submit a report that "shall make recommendations that shall be the basis for a health care access plan or plans" that would be passed into law. The House had narrowly approved the bill on April 1, 2003, but soon thereafter insurance industry opponents pointed out that the Illinois Supreme Court had long held that "the General Assembly cannot bind its successors unless authorized by the Constitution." Barack amended the bill to say that the commission "shall make recommendations that shall be considered by the General Assembly as the basis" for a health plan, but insurance industry entreaties and more to Senate president Emil Jones Jr. halted the bill's progress. "We had to keep on meeting with the insurers," top proponent Jim Duffett of the Campaign for Better Health Care (CBHC) explained.

Duffett offered to find another chief sponsor, telling Barack he realized "you're getting beat up on this issue pretty bad," but Barack said, "No, absolutely not. I'm really committed, and I'm going to do this." At a 2003 AFL-CIO conference that Duffett and Barack both addressed, Barack had spoken out strongly for the bill. "I happen to be a proponent of a single-payer universal health care program," he told the audience. "I see no reason why the United States of America, the wealthiest country in the history of the world, spending 14 percent of its gross national product on health care, cannot provide basic health insurance to everybody. . . . And that's what Jim's talking about when he says 'everybody in, nobody out.' A single-payer health care plan, a universal health care plan. That's what I'd like to see. But as all of you know, we may not get there immediately. Because first we've got to take back the White House, we've got to take back the Senate, and we've got to take back the House."

In Springfield, a number of Democratic senators "did not want to oppose the bill but they did everything they could to try to water it down," Duffett explained, because they, just like Emil Jones, benefited from insurance industry support. In early March, Barack told the Chicago Defender that "the resistance of special interests means it will not be possible to craft a new national program," and the same held true in Springfield. Encouraged by David Wilhelm, a CBHC board member, Duffett endorsed Barack's view that the bill would have to be significantly weakened to pass the Senate. As Illinois Planned Parenthood's Pam Sutherland put it, "you always knew with Barack you were going to compromise, whether you liked it or not." Fervent single-payer proponents like Hyde Park's Dr. Quentin Young, who practiced alongside Barack's personal physician, David Scheiner, strongly rued "Barack's penchant for compromise," and when on May 11 Barack filed a thoroughgoing rewrite of HB 2268, Health Committee ranking Republican Dale Righter realized it now looked "absolutely nothing like what had been introduced" fifteen months earlier.

In place of the original mandate that "On or before January 1, 2007, the State of Illinois shall implement a health care access plan," the revised bill said, "Illinois is strongly encouraged to implement a health care access plan." What had been the "Bipartisan Health Care Reform Commission" was now renamed the "Adequate Health Care Task Force." The already-amended language instructing that the commission's final report "shall be considered by the General Assembly as the basis for a health care access plan" was supplanted by a statement that "the final report by the Task Force shall make recommendations for a health care access plan." Insurance industry opposition weakened because, as Barack's poker buddy and insurance lobbyist Phil Lackman explained, "it's hard to oppose a task force." Ranking Republican Dale Righter saw that single-payer proponents were "very unhappy" with Barack, because "they believed that they had a champion there." Quentin Young agreed: Barack "abandoned" HB 2268's original call for universal access and "sold out to the insurance companies."

When Barack brought HB 2268 to the Senate floor on May 19, he said, "we have a full-blown health care crisis" and explained that "what this bill does is to create a task force that over the next years will examine mechanisms by which we can expand affordability and accessibility of health care." The Four Tops would appoint six task force members each, and the governor an additional five. In contrast to months earlier, Barack emphasized, "I want to say on record that I am not in favor of a single-payer plan. I don't think we can set up that kind of plan, and if we were going to even attempt to some sort of national health care, that would have to obviously be done at the federal level." Stressing that "we can't expand accessibility and affordability unless the baseline costs of health care are curbed," Barack also said that "what we don't have right now is any kind of sense of urgency about the extraordinary difficulties that our constituents are experiencing with respect to health care costs." Oak Park Democrat Don Harmon commended Barack for his work. "I know this has been no easy task for Senator Obama, but I applaud him for navigating this bill and building a truly impressive list of organizations and entities that are supporting the bill."

When conservative Republican Bill Brady questioned Barack about the insurance industry's view, Barack explained that "we radically changed" HB 2268 "in response to concerns that were raised by the insurance industry. The assurance that I received from the insurance industry was that if we took out the mandate, that the legislature would have to implement the bill, then, in fact, their objections would be lifted, and I got repeated commitments from the insurance industry to that effect. What then happened is, after we removed the provisions that initially had been the source of criticism and made it a bill that studies the problem and does not mandate that the legislature act on it, I got a reversal from industry which said 'No, we're still not interested in it.' And it was in the face of that obstinance" that Barack had the Health Committee send it to the Senate floor.

Brady conceded, “I don’t disagree with the fact that you did everything you could to try to get an agreement,” and Barack deplored how “insurance lobbyists here in Springfield had been engaging in such fear-mongering.” Minority floor spokesman Peter Roskam was already Barack’s least-favorite Republican, and after Roskam invoked the phrase “socialized medicine” in calling HB 2268 “a bill with an agenda,” Barack objected, saying, “the notion that you would blatantly characterize this bill as being that is dishonest.” “Don’t lie about it,” Barack told Roskam. Veteran Democrat Miguel del Valle thought that exchange was “the angriest I’ve ever seen Barack,” and del Valle commended him, saying, “you’ve got to get angrier more often!” On the floor, Evanston Democrat Jeff Schoenberg rose to commend “Senator Obama’s hard work, his perseverance, and perhaps most importantly, his integrity and sense of fairness.” Objecting to Roskam’s words, Schoenberg found it “very distressing that when all else fails, we have to try to discredit the personal integrity of a member of this chamber because we may have a political or ideological difference. I don’t think it should ever reach that point.”

Barack agreed, and on an almost straight party-line vote, the Senate approved the Health Care Justice Act 31–26–1. Barack’s good friend Denny Jacobs, who realized Barack “has that ability to be a little bit of all things to all people,” was the only Democrat to vote no. Press coverage was limited to a single, page 10 story in the State Journal-Register. One week later the House ratified the bill, and in late summer Governor Blagojevich signed it into law. Two and a half years would pass before the task force submitted its final report, with eleven of its twenty-nine members supporting a single-payer plan. Republican Dale Righter felt the enactment was “meaningless by the time it was over,” producing only a report that “gathers dust and is really never to be seen or heard from again.” Fellow Health Committee Republican Christine Radogno, who had voted present rather than no, agreed. The Health Care Justice Act had allowed Barack to “claim success even though it was nowhere near what he initially started with.” But HB 2268 as it was passed “gave him a fig leaf and gave him something to claim as a win.”<sup>73</sup>

Meanwhile David Axelrod had been crafting a six-page fall campaign memo to “Team Obama” entitled “Message: Yes We Can!” “The remarkable strength of the Obama candidacy” demonstrates that “Barack inspires a vision of an honest and uplifting politics, and fires hope for real change,” Axelrod wrote. “Barack stands apart” by “preaching a politics of civility and community, of mutual respect and responsibility.” Voters “respond to his character and sincerity. Our challenge is to maintain that tone, protect that special character and sincerity and always bear in mind that the brain dead politics of Washington is as much our target as Jack Ryan.” Axelrod warned that “if we begin to operate in much the same fashion, singing from the partisan hymn book, slinging mud . . . and sliding around on issues in an overtly political way, we will destroy what people like best about our man.” The campaign needed to emphasize “strengthening the embattled middle class” through “making health care affordable,” “creating quality jobs,” and “improving the quality and affordability of education.”

The day after the Health Care Justice Act passed, the presence of Justin Warfel, the Ryan campaign videographer, in Barack’s life became a top statewide story. Warfel “has stalked him for ten days,” Chicago’s local ABC news telecast told viewers. Barack wanted Warfel to “keep a respectful distance” so that “you can actually have a quiet conversation,” but astonishingly Warfel usually remained “literally a foot away” until a bevy of press questions led him to disappear. “He has a tape recorder, so if I’m calling my wife at home, I’ve got a guy a foot and a half away,” Barack told reporters. “I think an expectation of some basic personal space that when I call my wife or I’m calling my kids to wish them good night” was not unreasonable. “It’s this kind of incivility in politics that turns people off to politics.” The Chicago Sun-Times told readers that Warfel “interrupted Obama several times with heckling questions,” but only Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller reported that Warfel was “tailing the candidate in his car.” Barack told reporters that so far “he hasn’t come into the restroom,” but Senate Republican leader Frank Watson and state party chair Judy Baar Topinka publicly criticized Warfel’s behavior. Rich Miller termed it “truly creepy” and a Sun-Times editorial proclaimed “Ryan Takes Campaign to New Low.”

When Ryan’s team issued a press release calling Barack “the criminals’ good friend,” Barack said that claim was “a little wacky,” and the Journal-Register’s Bernie Schoenburg observed that “Ryan needs to get control of the people working for him.” Before long, Republican congressman Ray LaHood publicly criticized Ryan for running “a boneheaded campaign” and singled out Warfel’s conduct as “the stupidest thing I’ve ever seen in a high-profile campaign.”<sup>74</sup>

In Springfield, Barack was far less involved in the spring session’s legislative work than he had been in his seven previous years. Colleagues and staffers remember that “he was always on the phone,” and while campaign events sometimes kept him away from Wednesday night’s poker games, on some afternoons, he still managed to escape to the golf course. Playing in a foursome with lobbyist friends Phil Lackman and Dave Manning plus young campaign photographer David Katz, Barack’s cell phone rang. It was Michelle, so he had to answer, but he pretended he was outside the statehouse. “She’d just kill me if she knew I was playing golf,” he explained after hanging up.

The legislature failed to agree on a state budget by May 31 even though all three central players—Governor Blagojevich, House Speaker Mike Madigan, and Senate president Jones—were Democrats. Two deep fissures were responsible, one of which everyone understood: Jones’s long-held anger over the disrespect Madigan exhibited toward him. The second was the even stronger animus between Blagojevich and Madigan. Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller rued Blagojevich’s “complete refusal to engage in even minimal governance,” and even one of the governor’s top supporters spoke about Blagojevich’s “immaturity” and “lack of seriousness.” Madigan had concluded that he could not trust Blagojevich, and the governor’s top aides had come to believe he was a “selfish, insecure narcissist” who “had some sort of learning disability that made him incapable of focusing.” On May 31, the last day of session before a constitutional supermajority would be required to adopt a tardy budget, Emil Jones allowed Barack to be the only Democrat who opposed his and the governor’s spending plan, which Madigan’s House would not approve. Barack told reporters, “My instinct is we are close enough that if we eliminated the egos and the politics, we could come up with a deal relatively quickly.” Rich Miller rightly observed that “ultimately, it’s the governor’s fault,” but he also castigated Jones for “embracing Blagojevich far too closely and leading his members over the cliff” and into overtime. Miller reported that Blagojevich was hankering for a televised speaking appearance at the Democratic National Convention, but predicted that “the Washington folks will want to showcase their newest rock star, Barack Obama.”

Barack’s new status as the heavily favored candidate for a U.S. Senate seat had not altered his self-discipline issues. “He was late everywhere,” scheduler Peter Coffey remembered, and sometimes almost a no-show, even for meetings with prospective donors. Dan Shomon and Jim Cauley had tried to instill greater discipline, but as Nate Tamarin had learned, Barack “doesn’t respond to enforcer behavior” and regularly put off necessary tasks until the last possible moment. With Mike Signator replacing Lyndell Luster as Barack’s regular driver, matters went from bad to worse. Darrel Thompson explained that “Mike was Barack’s back door” during times when “Barack didn’t want to be found.” Signator quickly became “Barack’s buddy” and “biggest enabler,” and “with Mike in the car” the campaign “was a lot less able to keep Barack doing the things that he was supposed to be doing.” The “Mike and Barack show” became a particular problem for Cauley. One day the fallout was explosive when Barack was a no-show for Malia’s end-of-the-year parent-teacher conference. Cauley remembered that Michelle “lit into me,” “really reaming me out,” because “in his infinite wisdom” Barack had “told her it was my fault. But it was another one of those things where him and fucking Signator were out dicking around, so he throws me under the bus.” Cauley realized that Barack “was balancing a lot of crap in his life,” but he objected to Barack interjecting him into his marital tensions. “Dude, you got problems there?” Jimmy asked.

Kevin Thompson, who on campaign trips often served as the candidate’s “body man,” thought Barack now seemed “a little more pensive” than in previous years. In part that was because he still had to do call time during the drives to and from Springfield, seeking out-of-state donors for a race promising a Democratic Senate pickup. But it also reflected how much his life had changed since his campaign first went up on television four months earlier. “The level of coverage that he was getting,” with national reporters now joining an increased cast of Illinois journalists, was “a little stunning to him,” Kevin realized. “It certainly had an impact on him, and it was noticeable.” Articles in The New Yorker and The New Republic discussed Barack’s “miraculous” primary triumph, with TNR’s Noam Scheiber citing academic findings that white Americans regard non-American blacks more favorably than native African Americans. “Obama’s name—or at least its provenance—may have actually helped him, by distinguishing him from other African Americans,” Scheiber suggested. “The power of Obama’s exotic background to neutralize race as an issue, combined with his elite education and his credential as the first African American Harvard Law Review president, made him an African American candidate who was not stereotypically African American,” Scheiber argued.

The number of complete strangers who recognized Barack now made his desire for downtime more insistent. “His favorite little hideout was going to the East Bank Club,” Kevin explained, because he could get a daily workout there away from public view. “He’d get violent with me if he didn’t get his two hours at the East Bank Club, or an hour,” Jim Cauley remembered. “There would be huge fights in scheduling meetings about his workout time,” which Barack, though not his campaign team, insisted was a priority over call time. The impact of the Senate race was also visible in how Barack now “smoked a lot,” Kevin recalled, and Dan Shomon agreed that Barack “became a chain smoker in ’04.” When Barack was at his campaign headquarters, he smoked outside the building, often alongside a new young African American finance staffer, Clinton Latimore Jr., who was struck by “how down to earth” and “very personable” Barack was. “You couldn’t get him away from his BlackBerry,” Latimore remembered, a device Cauley had first introduced Barack to ten months earlier.

The arrival of all the new, mainly white, nationally experienced staffers meant that relationships at campaign headquarters “changed overnight,” Kevin Thompson remembered. There was “a cultural shift,” indeed “a cultural war going on between the national people and the local Illinois people,” and the veterans who had signed on when Barack was a little-known long shot were the casualties. When Cauley first arrived, he had developed a good accord with Dan Shomon, and Cauley’s “very strong personality” had enabled him to ride herd on Barack just as the consultants had hoped. But Robert Gibbs’s arrival was entirely different. He sought to exert authority from the start despite being a newcomer to Illinois. The contrast—and conflict—was sharpest with Shomon, who everyone realized “knows everyone you’re supposed to know” in Illinois politics. But Gibbs and Shomon “didn’t get along” and “it was kind of a pissing match,” one staffer recalled. “Nobody works harder, nobody brings more energy, nobody knows more people” than Dan Shomon, Peter Coffey said, and everyone who respected Shomon took offense when “Gibbs disdains him.” Unlike Dan and Jimmy, Gibbs indulged Barack rather than challenged him, but as Barack’s shift to a beckoning national stage accelerated, his need for Shomon’s expertise dissipated. “Dan was one of the only people who truly cared about what was best for Barack,” one supporter explained, and “I became very disenchanting with Barack” over his failure to appreciate how absolutely essential Shomon had been to his political success. As Jimmy put it, Dan “took him a long ways on his journey.”

The tensions between Gibbs and Shomon were mild compared to the problems generated by newly hired African American fund-raiser Vera Baker. As soon as she arrived in Chicago, it became clear she was “very, very high maintenance,” because whether it was her apartment or a health club membership, “nothing was good enough,” one supervisor recalled. “It was so unpleasant,” and “the person who had to deal with it day to day,” Joe McLean explained, was new national fund-raising director Susan Shadow. “It was extremely difficult to work with a prima donna,” and even worse with someone who “didn’t seem to have any common sense” and whose ability to organize events fell woefully short of what DSCC officials had said she could do. Two events Baker had responsibility for “were disasters,” with the far more able duo of Jenny Yeager and Jordan Kaplan picking up the slack. “It was just a frigging nightmare constantly,” and “Barack was very upset with one of the D.C. events she did.” At least a trio of superiors urged that Baker be terminated, but fears of offending the DSCC, where Baker had once been deputy political director, stood in the way.

But more than Baker’s professional competence was at issue. “It was a disaster on a lot of levels,” one consultant explained, and “we knew immediately” that there was an additional problem “that was not fixable” and that posed a risk to the candidate. The campaign’s most inimitable voice put it bluntly: “she liked hanging off his elbow and being in the rooms” when Barack met with famous donors like George Soros. “It was touchy,” one witness explained, and “it took us a long time to fix it” given the DSCC’s role. Then one remark by an unfamiliar stranger sealed it. Cauley recalled that “Vera was off his elbow and somebody went up to Valerie Jarrett and said, ‘Wow, Michelle looks great tonight.’ That was the beginning of the end of Vera Baker.” A trio of top campaign members all attested to Jarrett’s decisive role in the “hard decision” to relocate Baker from Chicago back to D.C. as soon as possible. As Joe McLean phrased it, “we eliminated the risk fairly early, but the problem was still there.”<sup>75</sup>

In public, Barack’s campaign was going incredibly well. A Chicago Tribune poll showed him with a commanding 52–30 percent lead over Jack Ryan. Barack’s favorability ratio was 46–9, with 20 percent of voters saying they had not heard of him, while Ryan’s favorable-to-unfavorable score was a worrisome 29–25. New York Times columnist Bob Herbert instructed readers to “remember the name Barack Obama,” and a Manhattan fund-raiser hosted by George Soros was soon followed by one in Washington at Hillary Rodham Clinton’s home. Simultaneously, Jim Cauley and Darrel Thompson called on top figures in John Kerry’s campaign to lobby for a prime-time speaking slot at the convention on one of the evenings when network television would broadcast the proceedings. They left a videotape of Barack’s three TV spots plus footage of Barack speaking at his March 16 victory celebration. “We were really making a strong case and a strong pitch,” Darrel recalled.

On June 13 Barack publicly challenged Ryan to six debates between August and October, and Ryan responded by calling for ten. Ryan also asserted that Barack favored universal health care, and Barack inaccurately replied, “I have never advocated” for what he called “a much larger national program,” saying, “there are a whole host of ways to do it.” Barack’s campaign team was “eager to do some qualitative research downstate,” as John Kupper explained, to learn how best to present their oddly named biracial candidate to white voters who remained largely unfamiliar with him and his record. “We were kind of astounded that Barack did so well with downstate voters in the primary” and “wanted to find out if that possibility extended to general election voters as well,” Kupper recalled. Paul Harstad and Mike Kulisheck organized two focus groups in Peoria for the evening of June 16. Among thirteen women in the first, eight professed support for Jack Ryan and only one for Barack, with another asking, “Isn’t he Iranian?” But once Harstad played video excerpts of the two candidates, seven expressed support for Barack, with Ryan drawing five. When one woman compared “Obama” to “Osama,” Paul asked if Barack’s name was a real barrier, and multiple women said yes.

Among the ten men in the second group, three expressed support for Democrat John Kerry and five for President George Bush, with one volunteering that “it’s unfortunate that Senator Fitzgerald . . . is leaving. . . . I think he did a good job. He took stands on issues.” Turning to Barack and Jack Ryan, one man said, “the fact that he won’t let Obama go to a restroom without a cameraman tells me he’s an ass, frankly. That’s why I won’t vote for him.” When Harstad played the videos, two participants liked how Barack spoke of “we” rather than “I,” with one calling Barack “very charismatic” and a second terming him “a strong presence.” In the end, six of the men favored Ryan and four Barack. Reviewing the evening’s full transcripts and the participants’ numerical score sheets, Harstad and Kulisheck highlighted participants’ “longing for candidates who bring people together” and Barack’s high marks for seeking “common ground” and avoiding “negative politics.” Barack’s greatest vulnerability was the charge that he “favors a Hillary Clinton–style universal health” care program, and among other dangers, “the guns issue was totally eclipsed by the gay marriage issue in these groups.” Although “it did not take too much information to swing” a majority of the women “to support Obama at the end,” such a shift did not occur among the men.<sup>76</sup>

Early in June, a court-appointed referee recommended unsealing only a small portion of Jack Ryan’s divorce file. Ryan told reporters that the documents would cause “no problems for the campaign. Would there be something that might be embarrassing to me? Maybe.” But when the Chicago Tribune challenged that recommendation and sought a full unsealing, Los Angeles Superior Court judge Robert A. Schnider sided with the newspaper rather than the referee. “In the end, the balance tips slightly to the public,” Schnider held, because “protection from embarrassment cannot be a basis for keeping from the public what’s put in public courts.” Schnider accepted Jack Ryan’s argument that release of the file would harm his young son, acknowledging that “the nature of the publicity generated will become known to the child and have a deleterious effect on the child,” but he set release for twelve days later. The Tribune gave its victory front-page coverage and reported that Ryan privately had told top Republicans that the file would be embarrassing but he could “weather” the disclosures. Ryan announced he would not appeal the decision and sought the judge’s approval for quicker release of the file the following Monday.

On June 21, reporters were notified that copies of the documents would be made available at a 4:00

P.M. Ryan press conference at the Chicago Hilton. That hour came and went with no candidate and no copies, but at 5:00 P.M. waiters brought in flowers and food. “Was this a party?” columnist Carol Marin wondered. Two more hours passed before the documents arrived, accompanied by a raft of Ryan supporters attesting to his virtues before the candidate appeared at 8:00 P.M. Inarticulate and unwilling to admit the documents were highly embarrassing, Ryan’s hour-long appearance devolved into what the suburban Daily Herald called a “marathon, often surreal news conference.”

The next morning’s Tribune declared “Ryan File a Bombshell—Ex-Wife Alleges GOP Candidate Took Her to Sex Clubs.” In New York, “respondent wanted me to have sex with him there with another couple watching. I refused,” Jeri Lynn Ryan had stated in a sworn declaration. “Respondent asked me to perform a sexual activity upon him, and he specifically asked other people to watch. I was very upset.” At the Paris club Ryan took her to, “people were having sex everywhere. I cried. I was physically ill. Respondent became very upset with me and said it was not a ‘turn-on’ for me to cry.”

On Monday, Barack had been on a “Downstate Jobs Tour,” with appearances in Springfield and East Alton preceding a dinner in far south Carbondale, where Dan Hynes introduced him as “one of the greatest United States senators this country will ever see.” Early in the day, Barack had rebuffed reporters’ questions about Ryan’s divorce by saying it was not among the issues impacting downstate families. In Carbondale, Barack went out of his way to insist, “I’ve said clearly and unequivocally, I’m not in favor of gay marriages.” When reporters then pressed him on the evening’s new Ryan revelations, Barack again emphasized that “people are not talking to me about Jack Ryan’s personal life.”

Top Illinois Republicans faced the same questions as Barack, and some were eager to respond. Ray LaHood said he was “shocked” and that Ryan “needs to immediately withdraw from the race. There is no way Republicans in Illinois will vote for somebody with this kind of activity in their background.” Tuesday’s Chicago Sun-Times reported that state party chair Judy Baar Topinka “believes Ryan lied to her,” and former governor Jim Edgar was “stunned” and “furious.” Until that evening, Edgar had been defending Ryan, but Edgar said that what came out “was far worse than what he had told me.” Ryan had “misrepresented what was in there to me” and “what he had told me was completely wrong.”

A wire service correspondent asserted that “a married man trying to have kinky sex with his wife seems tame,” but an Illinois Republican told Roll Call that “it’s not so much what’s in the files, it’s the fact that he lied about it” that left GOP leaders so angry. Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller wrote that “most everyone has figured for weeks now that Ryan couldn’t beat Barack Obama. The big fear now, though, is that Ryan might bring down the rest of the Republican ticket.” Miller predicted that “this is going to get very ugly, very fast,” and by late Tuesday, Ryan and Topinka were publicly disagreeing about their prior conversations. “I remember her asking me whether there was anything in the documents that would preclude me from being a U.S. Senator, and no, there isn’t,” Ryan asserted. “What’s in those documents at its worst is that I propositioned my wife in an inappropriate place. That’s the worst.” Topinka’s version was that “I said, very specifically, twice, so that I would hear it twice, ‘Is there anything in your divorce document that would be personally embarrassing to you or to the Republican Party?’ He said ‘no’ both times.”

Wednesday’s Sun-Times featured an unnamed Illinois Republican saying, “I don’t think anyone can overstate the impact of the lying and misleading statements he made. It’s not just to Judy. It’s to a whole host of people. That’s severely damaged his credibility.” The Tribune’s editorial page declared that

“Ryan was not honest with Republican primary voters,” and the Sun-Times explicitly called for “Ryan to Hit the Road,” castigating “his unprincipled behavior.” Downstate papers like the Bloomington Pantagraph chimed in similarly, saying “Ryan should withdraw.” At midmorning Wednesday, Illinois Republican U.S. House Speaker Dennis Hastert canceled a Ryan fund-raising event scheduled for that evening, and on The Tonight Show host Jay Leno joked that Ryan was “going after the ‘swing vote.’”

By Thursday, some Republicans were speaking up on Ryan’s behalf. A column in the conservative Illinois Leader asserted that “the real problem the ILGOP had with Jack Ryan is he wants to keep U.S. Attorney Patrick Fitzgerald,” the federal prosecutor who had unraveled former governor George Ryan’s bribe-filled tenure as secretary of state. Then lame-duck U.S. senator Peter Fitzgerald said he had told Ryan to stay in the race and that the lack of support from party leaders like Topinka was doing Ryan more harm than the divorce documents. Fitzgerald complained that “she was so supportive of George Ryan and was never offended by the indictments or the corruption there, but she is so offended” by the “unproven allegations” in Jack Ryan’s divorce. “It does not add up to me.”

In the Tribune, an op-ed contributor asked why shouldn’t Ryan “be judged on the quality of his ideas and the positions he would advocate in the Senate, rather than on divorce negotiations?” Blair Hull also had a second question: “why under the circumstances would anyone who hasn’t spent his or her entire life planning a political career and cautiously behaving accordingly . . . ever run for office?” Instead of pursuing divorce pleadings, “the Chicago press corps should be hounding Jack Ryan with questions” about “why he supports a Bush White House policy in Iraq that is so clearly a costly failure” and “why he supports a Medicare prescription drug bill that was a taxpayer giveaway to the pharmaceutical special interests.” Just like Barack, Hull also said that questions about Ryan’s divorce were not among “the issues that make a difference to Illinois families,” and he criticized “a press obsession with personal lives when so many public policy issues demand a thorough debate.”

In Springfield, where the legislature was still in session thanks to the ongoing state budget standoff, Barack remarked that it was “probably not surprising” that the press had fixated on Jeri Ryan’s claims. “So much of our culture is caught up in celebrity and sensationalism. It’s an unfortunate aspect of our culture generally, and our politics ends up taking on that same flavor.” Barack said, “I do regret the personalization of politics of this kind. It’s not something that I wish on anybody.” Ryan’s salacious problem drew new national attention to the Illinois contest, with Washington Post columnist E. J. Dionne noting speculation that his former Saguro Seminar colleague “may be the first African-American president of the United States.” Similarly, a New York Times news story stated that Barack “is widely regarded as a rising Democratic star” who in a few months’ time would be a U.S. senator.

Ryan’s campaign was polling to learn how much damage had been done. A new Daily Southtown poll showed Ryan trailing Barack 54–30, and while 49 percent of respondents viewed Ryan unfavorably, 57 percent said he should remain in the race. In hypothetical matchups, Barack led former governor Edgar by 45–42 percent and Senator Fitzgerald 47–40. Republicans publicly compared notes on who could replace Ryan, but neither Edgar, Fitzgerald, nor Topinka expressed interest. Conservative state senators Kirk Dillard and Dave Syverson supported Steve Rauschenberger, whose underfinanced primary campaign had led him to a third-place finish behind Ryan. Neither Topinka nor Republican national committeeman Robert Kjellander had any love for Rauschenberger, who, like Fitzgerald, had publicly attacked Republican insiders for profiteering off state government business.

On Friday morning, the Ryan campaign's poll mirrored the Southtown numbers, with Barack holding a better than 20-point lead. Ryan summoned his top staff to his Gold Coast apartment to discuss the results. "This can be done, but it's going to get ugly," one participant argued, advocating that if they "go nuclear on Obama for four months" it could become a competitive race. "There is enough good opposition research to defeat Barack Obama, to make clear to the voters of Illinois that he should not be a member of the United States Senate." But Ryan rejected that course. "This is not the way I saw this race," he explained. "I don't want to be remembered as the guy that ran that kind of campaign." Peter Fitzgerald called, and Ryan told him he would soon issue a statement withdrawing from the race. Ryan assembled his full staff to tell them his decision. "I believe that one man, living for purposes larger than himself, can make a difference," Ryan told the press. He rebuked the Tribune for its "truly outrageous" pursuit of the divorce file and said he had no interest in mounting "a brutal, scorched-earth campaign." Jim Edgar stated that Ryan had "made the right decision," and Topinka announced that Republicans would select a replacement within three weeks. Steve Rauschenberger declared that "if the circumstances are right, and we can organize a campaign to win, I'm very interested," but the Daily Herald reported that Peter Fitzgerald "hopes Rauschenberger is too smart to enter a race that is already lost. 'I would not encourage anyone who is my friend to accept the nomination.'"<sup>77</sup>

Barack offered compassionate words. "I can only imagine what Jack and his family have gone through over the last several days. I admire Jack's commitment to public service," and "I deeply admire the work that he has done as a teacher" at Hales Franciscan High School. Although Barack was now without an opponent, his campaign team plowed ahead, with policy director Amanda Fuchs relying on long-standing volunteers like Raja Krishnamoorthi and new ones like law professors Cass Sunstein and Elizabeth Warren to prepare position papers on everything from homeland security to consumer protection policies. On Saturday, June 26, Barack delivered the Democratic response to President Bush's weekly radio address, recording a text about job loss that had been written by David Axelrod and Robert Gibbs. His delivery was flat and uninspired, and Gibbs recalled that "it was kind of obvious that he was recording the words of somebody else."

Michelle Obama had begun making occasional campaign appearances by herself, extolling her husband's virtues to small audiences in downstate towns like Charleston. Darrel Thompson had taken the lead in organizing more than 130 "Ba-Rock the House" fund-raising parties all across Illinois for Tuesday evening, June 29, and that morning John Kerry let slip that Barack would address the Democratic National Convention, telling reporters, "I cannot wait to hear his voice." Late that afternoon as Barack, Darrel, Robert Gibbs and Mike Signator headed west to the suburban Wheaton house party Barack would attend, Gibbs received a message that within moments, Kerry campaign manager Mary Beth Cahill would be calling to speak with Barack.

"Jack Corrigan probably mentioned him first to me," Cahill remembered, after first Pete Giangreco's mid-April call to talk up Barack as a prime-time DNC speaker and then an early June conversation Jack had with another old friend from the 1988 Dukakis presidential campaign—Lisa Hay, who had then entered Harvard Law School and become the Law Review's treasurer. Corrigan had asked Hay to support John Kerry, but Lisa told Jack she wanted to contribute to her old friend Barack Obama. "You know him?" Corrigan responded. "I think he's great," Lisa replied, and she recounted how Barack's remarks at the Law Review's April 1990 banquet had been so powerful that even the waiters at Boston's Harvard Club had paused to listen. “It was the most moving speech about the promise of America that I had ever heard. And I remember it struck me that Barack touched everyone in the room,” Hay told Corrigan. “That’s when I put him on the list for keynote,” Corrigan remembered. Michigan governor Jennifer Granholm had been Corrigan’s top pick, but Lisa’s account altered Corrigan’s plan. “I’m thinking about making a pretty unusual recommendation for the keynote speaker, and I could really be stepping in it here,” Jack told Vicky Rideout, a lifelong friend whom he had recruited “to come and be the head of speechwriting for the convention.”

Together they watched the video of Barack that Jim Cauley and Darrel Thompson had given the Kerry team, and Corrigan shared his thinking with campaign manager Mary Beth Cahill, who spoke with Kerry every day. “I told him that I was leaning toward this,” Cahill remembered, and Kerry responded affirmatively. “He was happy with the recommendation of Obama” because Barack had “definitely made an impression upon him” back in April when they had campaigned together. Shortly before June 29, Pete Giangreco again called Corrigan to lobby for Barack, but missed the point when Corrigan said something like, “I think you’re going to be pretty pleased.” Jack’s “being opaque, and I don’t get it,” Pete explained.

In the SUV headed to Wheaton, Barack’s end of the conversation with Cahill was simple. “Thank you . . . Thank you . . . Thank you.” But Barack was overjoyed. “I know exactly what I want to say. I really want to talk about my story as part of the larger American story,” and he immediately told his aides that unlike the radio address, this one he would write himself “in a way that was personal,” Robert Gibbs recalled. That evening, speaking to the one-hundred-plus house parties all across Illinois via conference call, Barack told his supporters, “I didn’t get into this race to run against anyone. I got into this race to run for something: a set of ideals, a set of values.”

Barack was back in Springfield for most of the rest of the week because of the ongoing state budget deadlock. “After I’d scribbled some notes, I wrote it in about three nights” on a yellow legal pad in his room on the twelfth floor of the Renaissance Hotel. “I just sat in a hotel room watching a basketball game and wrote it up, most of it, sort of in one sitting,” Barack recalled. His initial draft was about twenty-four hundred words long, and with little of substance taking place on the Senate floor, Barack could sit at his desk, tinkering with the language. On Friday, he and a camera crew headed forty-five miles south to Carlinville to film a conversation David Axelrod hoped to use in fall television ads. Barack boasted about his skill at poker, saying, “I’m using it to bankroll my kids’ education, because I’m a pretty good player so I usually win.” But he also spoke with unusual frankness about his family’s financial struggles. “My wife . . . if we could afford it, she would stay at home until the three-year-old is in first grade, but we had to make sure that she was still working just because I’m in public service, so I don’t make a lot of money, and we just couldn’t afford a situation where she wasn’t working. But what that means is that we are paying someone to come in the house and look after the kids. It’s like having someone on payroll—it’s like you’re paying somebody, but you’re not making a profit on it. You’ve got to pay their taxes, their Social Security, you’ve got to pay workers’ compensation. So it’s a huge challenge, a huge struggle.”

Shifting to policy issues, Barack noted that “our child support system in Illinois is terrible and it’s been terrible for like a decade now.” The state was not “going after these fathers and making sure that they take responsibility for their kids. My mother was a single mother . . . and so I know how hard it is for a single parent to try to raise kids. It’s a struggle.” Changing tack, Barack stated that the Patriot Act “requires you speaking out and voting no. We only had one U.S. senator, Russ Feingold from Wisconsin, vote against the Patriot Act out of one hundred. And that really is a shame.” Barack’s remarks were of mixed value for advertising purposes, but with his campaign having taken in $4 million from more than eighty-five hundred donors between April and June, his fall media bankroll was hefty indeed. The new issue of Time magazine described him as “the hottest property in this year’s Senate races,” and a Chicago Tribune story reporting his fund-raising windfall observed that “Obama’s apparent strategy is to ward off a deep-pocketed or popular Republican from seeking the GOP nomination.”<sup>78</sup>

With state senator Kirk Dillard saying that Steve Rauschenberger is the “overwhelming choice of suburban Republicans,” public discussion focused on the Elgin legislator. Yet Rauschenberger wisely hesitated, seeking assurances from national Republican campaign committees that funding would be available for a serious race. “I did not have the financial resources to get the campaign going,” and given Barack’s huge head start, it soon became clear that it would be “impossible to raise the kind of money needed.” Rauschenberger declined, and while some young Republican activists called for Jack Ryan to reenter the race, speculation next turned to fiery former Chicago Bears football coach Mike Ditka.

Some of Barack’s staff were initially “really, really worried” about facing an opponent who was universally known, but with the Tribune reporting that Ditka was not registered to vote and columnists highlighting his explosive temper, he too stood aside. Ditka later said that not challenging Barack was the “biggest mistake I’ve ever made,” and Barack professed disappointment, saying, “I was looking forward to what was sure to be a fun, exciting race with the coach.” Even the New York Times covered Ditka’s withdrawal, describing Barack as “highly popular and lavishly financed.” With Illinois Republicans becoming desperate, Barack teasingly asked his Senate friend Dave Sullivan to enter the race. “‘Sully, why don’t you run against me?’ ‘Sure, Barack. The first thing your campaign will do is produce the check I wrote to you when you ran against Bobby Rush.’”

Eager to burnish his slim record on foreign policy, Barack delivered an address to the Chicago Council on Foreign Relations. He singled out “Iran, which the Bush Administration has correctly targeted as a dangerous cheater in the nuclear game,” as a top concern, and stated that “our first and immutable commitment must be to the security of Israel, our only true ally in the Middle East and the only democracy.” Journalists covering John Kerry’s presidential campaign reported that Barack, “a rising African-American star,” would deliver a prime-time DNC speech, but only on July 14 did the Kerry campaign publicly announce that Barack would deliver the convention’s much-coveted keynote address on Tuesday evening, July 27. Kerry termed Barack “an optimistic voice for America,” and Mary Beth Cahill, noting that the three major networks were not planning live coverage on Tuesday, told reporters she hoped Barack’s selection would change their minds. Barack called the selection “an enormous honor and enormous responsibility,” admitting “it’s not something that I would have ever anticipated this early in my career. As my wife said, I better not screw it up.” Barack wanted to “move past the politics of division toward the politics of hope,” and he distinguished himself from President Bush by saying that “my philosophy is that there’s nobody you shouldn’t talk to.” He complained to reporters that “there’s been a corporate takeover of my life,” and the next morning, on NBC’s Today Show, host Katie Couric introduced Barack to viewers as “a rising star.”

By then, David Axelrod and especially John Kupper had been hard at work trying to shorten the draft Barack had shared with them via a 1:00 A.M. e-mail. Axelrod and his wife were vacationing in Florence, Italy, and everyone was concerned that Barack’s text was longer than what DNC speechwriting chief Vicki Rideout was looking forward to receiving. Kupper recalled that “I would cut out parts of the speech and send him the revised draft, and it would come back with almost all of them restored. This was a painstaking process. Eventually we got it down to seventeen minutes.” Barack wanted to emphasize the resonant phrase “the audacity of hope,” and in one exchange, Axelrod passed along word that Barack had to reference Kerry’s military service. Almost daily, new, slightly tweaked drafts were created, with shifting word counts—“2,370 words”—noted on many of the thirteen successive drafts Kupper reviewed. At the convention in Boston, Barack would deliver the speech using a teleprompter, and his campaign leased one so Barack could begin practicing with the unfamiliar device. An initial Sunday-morning run-through in the big volunteer room at campaign headquarters in Chicago was “very good,” Darrel Thompson thought, and then the teleprompter was moved to a conference room in the building housing Axelrod and Kupper’s offices, so that Barack could continue working on his delivery in quiet quarters.<sup>79</sup>

While Barack was busy practicing, invaluable contributor Tony Rezko was drawing unfavorable press attention. Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller had warned months earlier about “the sort of influence peddlers who surround the governor,” but only in midsummer 2004 did the Chicago Sun-Times and then the Tribune begin to cover Rezko’s behind-the-scenes role in choosing gubernatorial appointees for such obscure but powerful entities as the Illinois Health Facilities Planning Board (IHFPB). Rich Miller observed that if Blagojevich’s “buddies are somehow mixing campaign contributions with appointments . . . all he has to do is look at George Ryan to see how his future will end up.” In mid-July, the Sun-Times reported that Rezko had gone “weeks without paying employees” at a fast-food chain he owned, and two days later, the Tribune detailed how a podiatrist and Rezko business partner who had contributed $25,000 to Blagojevich a year earlier had been rewarded with a seat on the IHFPB.

With Republicans still lacking a candidate to oppose Barack, state Senate friend Kirk Dillard toyed with entering the race. “Barack Obama is beatable,” Dillard declared. “Somebody in the Republican Party needs to do some research on Barack’s record,” because Barack “is far to the left of where most Illinoisans are.” In a radio interview, Dillard revealed that “Barack and I kidded yesterday that it would probably be the most gentlemanly” face-off ever, but it “would be good for politics, not only in Illinois but nationally, to have people who genuinely admire each other and their families to wage a totally above-the-board, on-the-issues race.” Barack “is a wonderful man” and “has a great future in whatever he does,” but “Barack Obama is beatable,” Dillard insisted. Asked about Dillard, Barack responded that “with someone of his caliber, the race tightens immediately.” In a decidedly odd gesture, a New York Times editorial called upon Dillard to enter the race. “Run, Kirk, run. Illinois needs you—and so does Mr. Obama,” because “Illinois voters deserve to see a capable opponent force him to answer tough questions and defend his positions.” But just like Rauschenberger and Ditka before him, Dillard said he would give the race a pass, citing his two young daughters.

In a cable-television interview, Jeff Berkowitz asked Barack how his recently professed opposition to a single-payer health care plan contradicted what he had said on Berkowitz’s show in November 2002. “The problem we have is what kinds of time frames are we talking about,” Barack responded. “Do I think that over time we are essentially going to have a system in which you have got a market system but people are getting basic health care of some sort and a market system superimposed on that for discretionary things—cosmetic surgery or elective surgery?” Barack added before Berkowitz interrupted. “There is going to be some sort of coverage that we want to provide everybody,” Barack explained, “minimum coverage. . . . Some people are going to be getting that through their jobs,” but “there are going to be other people that don’t have that.” As Berkowitz accused him of “backing off from single-payer,” Barack insisted, “I have been consistent in saying what I am in favor of is universal health care . . . we have to move in a direction of universal health care, because if we don’t, the question I have for people who argue against me is, ‘Who is it that you think shouldn’t be covered?’” From there, the conversation devolved into cross talk as school voucher enthusiast Berkowitz sought to interest Barack in health care vouchers.

Early in the week of July 19, Barack finally sent his speech to Vicky Rideout in Boston. Stuck in Springfield as the Four Tops struggled to reach a budget accord with Blagojevich, Barack spoke with Associated Press reporter Chris Wills, who had covered the statehouse since 1998. Editors titled Wills’s story “Rising Democratic Star Readies for His Moment in the Lights,” and when a Honolulu-based AP writer followed up, Barack sounded every bit a native in anticipating his next visit. “I look forward to getting up in the morning, driving to Sandy Beach and doing some bodysurfing and then getting a shave ice and plate lunch.” Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller expressed astonishment at “Obama’s superstar status,” but Barack told the Journal-Register’s Bernie Schoenburg that his daughters preferred to stay in Chicago and attend day camp rather than accompany their parents to Boston.

Barack had to be in Boston no later than first thing Sunday, July 25, for an early-morning taping of NBC’s Meet the Press. With the legislature hoping to complete its business and adjourn sometime on Saturday, NBC sent a chartered jet to Springfield to fly Barack directly to Boston. Only a little after 8:00 P.M. did the state Senate finally adjourn. Barack was pleased that an additional $55 million was allocated to expand FamilyCare, but the late hour meant that only at 1:30 A.M. did he and Michelle arrive at Boston’s Back Bay Hilton.

At much the same hour, a long-delayed rental truck pulled up at the Fleet Center’s loading dock in Boston’s North End. Ten days earlier, just after the public announcement of Barack’s keynote role, GOTV mastermind Tom Lindenfeld had called Jim Cauley and firmly advised him that if Barack’s address was going to have maximum impact on television, the campaign needed to ensure that the crowd on the convention floor had readily visible “Obama” placards in hand. Tom had long been a DNC floor manager, and he warned Jimmy, “You’ve got to get these signs printed up. If you don’t have the signs, your speech isn’t going to be the same.” Cauley hesitated, because printing the signs—with a huge white “Obama” on a blue background plus a new, shorter Web address, www.obama2004.com—came with a $20,000 price tag. Cauley wanted the DNC or Kerry’s campaign to pick up the tab, but Lindenfeld was insistent. “I like beat the shit out of them over this,” and Jimmy finally relented. The signs needed to arrive in Boston by Friday. Late that week campaign staffer Adam Stolorow helped twenty-one-year-old intern Alex Okrent load the newly printed placards into a rental truck before Okrent set out on the fifteen-hour drive to Boston. Then, somewhere in Ohio, the truck broke down, and only in the wee hours of Sunday morning did Alex call Lindenfeld with tardy good news: “We’re here.”

Barack was up before 6:00 A.M. to get ready for Meet the Press, then CBS’s Face the Nation, ABC’s World News Tonight, and finally CNN’s Late Edition. On Meet the Press, Barack told host Tim Russert that he had been fortunate to grow up in Hawaii and endorsed comedian Bill Cosby’s call for African Americans to demand more of each other. “He’s right. . . . There’s got to be an element of individual responsibility and communal responsibility for the uplift of the people in inner-city communities.” On Face the Nation, Bob Schieffer called Barack “kind of a rock star of Democratic politics,” and on ABC’s World News Tonight, anchor Terry Moran told Barack that one Democrat had said that “most people who know Barack Obama believe that he will be a presidential candidate in the very near future.” Barack demurred, saying, “I may be flavor of the month this week,” but CNN’s Wolf Blitzer raised the same question on Late Edition, asking, “Do you want to be president?” Barack replied that he wanted to be the best U.S. senator “that I can be,” and when Blitzer followed up, saying “there’s people talking about this,” Barack again ducked. “That’s silly talk. Talk to my wife. She’ll tell me I need to learn to just put my socks in the hamper.”<sup>80</sup>

In addition to the television tapings, Barack also met with Michael Sheehan, a prominent speaking coach who had tutored every top Democratic National Convention speaker since 1988. David Axelrod already had called Sheehan to sing Barack’s praises. “This guy’s special. This guy could be the one.” Sheehan recalled that in two decades of knowing Axelrod, “I never heard him that complimentary” about anyone, and Michael knew “they’re always looking for . . . a rising star.” The practice podium and teleprompter were located in a hastily converted locker room in the bowels of the Fleet Center, and on Sunday afternoon Barack had his first one-hour session with Sheehan. The essential thing for a first-time convention speaker to appreciate was “the difference between what you hear in the hall and what is heard at home on television,” Sheehan stressed. “You hear everything in the hall. You don’t hear everything at home,” so a skillful speaker should “surf the applause” rather than pause for too long. “As soon as you hear the volume start to drop, start talking again,” Sheehan explained. “You can talk on top of it, and we still hear you.” No matter how loud the hall became, “don’t yell,” because “you don’t have to scream” for television viewers to hear you.

Kerry aides Vicky Rideout and John Corrigan watched silently as Barack worked on the pacing of his remarks under Sheehan’s guidance. By now, Barack barely needed the teleprompter because he had his text almost perfectly memorized, yet given the small, windowless practice room, “you can’t really orate in that circumstance,” so Barack’s delivery seemed flat. “First rehearsals are often underwhelming, and this one was no exception,” Rideout recalled. “I remember conversing with Corrigan after that and being like, ‘Well, I don’t know. I’m not sure if he’s got what it takes or not.’”

A second rehearsal session was set for Monday, and on Sunday night an exhausted Barack went to bed at 9:30 P.M. His schedule was filled with almost nonstop media interviews, and both the New York Times and the Chicago Tribune published front-page profiles. “Political Phenomenon Obama Vaults into National Spotlight,” read the Tribune headline, with reporter David Mendell noting that Barack “has been riding a wave of adoration by the national media.” Barack calmly observed that “the hype obviously has reached a fever pitch, and I think the fever will break.” Congressman Jesse Jackson Jr. confessed, “I pray for him every day,” and warned that “we can’t allow him to be overburdened with too many expectations.” A Chicago Defender editorial echoed Jackson’s sentiments. “There needs to be a tempering of expectations” because “it is vital that Obama not be considered the next John F. Kennedy or the next Martin Luther King Jr. or the next Jesse Jackson Sr. He should be given the time and opportunity to stand on his own two feet and put forth a legislative agenda and record that will do us proud.”

At a Monday lunch with Tribune journalists, Barack conceded that on Iraq, “there’s not that much difference between my position and George Bush’s position at this stage.” Conservative columnist John Kass confessed, “I couldn’t help but be impressed by the man,” calling Barack “the real thing.” The reporters described how “nearly everywhere he goes” in Boston, Barack “is mobbed by well-wishers, reporters and others who want a moment of his time. ‘It’s getting incrementally harder to move him through crowds,’” Jim Cauley told them. Late that afternoon Barack’s buddy Marty Nesbitt witnessed the same phenomenon. “We were walking down the street in Boston, and this crowd was growing behind us. . . . I turned to Barack, and I said, ‘This is incredible. You’re like a rock star.’ And he looked at me and said, ‘If you think it’s bad today, wait till tomorrow.’ And I said, ‘What do you mean?’ and he said, ‘My speech is pretty good.’”

In Honolulu, Madelyn Dunham told a caller that she was “a little overwhelmed,” because “this has all come on the national level really fast.” In a recent phone call, “I told him to smile when he’s on TV,” and “of course, I’m proud of him.” At a sunny, early-evening outdoor reception hosted by Rod Blagojevich, Barack ran into former law student Lisa Ellman, an Illinois delegate, who recalled him saying, “I’m excited but I’m not nervous,” explaining that giving the keynote speech would not be as tough as teaching a U of C law class because there would no hard questions from smart students.

On Tuesday morning, newspapers on both sides of the Atlantic all featured the same phrase. New Jersey senator Jon Corzine told the Boston Globe that Barack was “a rising star,” and the Philadelphia Inquirer, Toronto’s Globe and Mail, and Britain’s Guardian all applied that label too. In Chicago’s suburban Daily Herald, DuPage County Democratic chairman Gayl Ferraro remarked that “it would be great for Illinois if he was to become the first African-American president,” and a column in Britain’s Independent asked, “Can Obama Be First Black President?” and emphasized that by 2012, Barack would have eight years experience as a U.S. senator.

Barack was up before 6:00 A.M. on Tuesday for appearances on ABC’s, CBS’s, CNN’s, and NBC’s morning shows, plus PBS and NPR tapings. ABC’s Diane Sawyer introduced Barack as a “rising star” on Good Morning America, as did Hannah Storm on CBS’s Early Show. Welcoming Barack to NBC’s Today, Katie Couric told viewers that “some are already saying he could be the first African American president.” ABC and NBC interviewed Michelle as well. “Don’t screw it up” was her advice for tonight, and “I still remind him, ‘You still have to win my vote, buddy.’ And when I get mad at him, ‘I’m not voting for you.’” When NPR’s Melissa Block asked Barack about his late father, Barack responded, “I think in some ways I still chase after his ghost a bit, but also I think I try to balance the importance of family with my career in ways that he wasn’t able to accomplish.”

Barack spent the rest of the morning and early afternoon doing remote interviews with ten Illinois TV stations as well as speaking at a League of Conservation Voters rally. For lunch he got a packaged sandwich from a convenience store, and in search of personal privacy, he happily chose a port-a-potty. “When I go into the regular restroom, all these people want to shake my hand, and that’s not the place I want to be shaking hands,” he told David Mendell.

A little before 3:00 P.M., Barack headed back to the Fleet Center for his final rehearsal session with Michael Sheehan. On the way, word arrived that John Kerry’s speechwriting team wanted Barack to remove five sentences from his text because they too closely echoed a line in the acceptance speech Kerry would deliver on Thursday night. “Obama was furious,” David Axelrod recalled. Cauley remembered that “Axelrod was in the van, I was in the van when we thought John Kerry was stealing a piece of the speech, and Barack said, ‘Fuck him. That fucker is trying to steal a line from my speech. They didn’t have that in Kerry's speech. They saw it, they liked it, and now they're stealing it.' Barack was real frustrated with that," and Jimmy had never seen Barack so angry.

The Kerry team was divided, with speechwriting chief Vicky Rideout believing that Kerry's personal speechwriters were overreaching about what they wanted Barack to delete. "It was the emotional peak of the speech," Rideout realized, and when Barack called her "and made the case of why it was important to him to keep it in there" and pressed as to whether Kerry himself was requesting the change, Rideout was entirely sympathetic. "There was really not a very good reason for them wanting him to take it out," and Vicky pushed back. "Do you really understand what you're asking of Obama here?" she told Kerry speechwriter Josh Gottheimer. Rideout called Barack back. "It's Kerry's convention," Vicki explained, but she thought Barack could deal with the perceived overlap by rewording one sentence in his text rather than removing the entire paragraph.

Soon Barack was back in the Fleet Center's "blue room," almost directly underneath the stage where six hours later he would speak to a national audience. A dour David Axelrod, a pensive Robert Gibbs, and a glum Michelle Obama sat along the wall and watched as Barack went through his final rehearsal with Sheehan. Then the juniormost member of Kerry's speechwriting team, Jon Favreau, arrived to ask if the offending sentence—"We're not red states and blue states; we're all Americans, standing up for the red, white, and blue"—had indeed been dropped. Favreau remembered that Barack "kind of looked at me, kind of confused, like 'Who is this kid?'" before evenly asking, "Are you telling me I have to cut this line out?" Sheehan recalled that Favreau told him, "We'd like you to take it out," and Barack replied, "No. It's staying in."

Axelrod asked Favreau to join him in the hallway to see if they could work out a compromise. Kerry's text stated, "Maybe some just see us divided into those red states and blue states, but I see us as one America: red, white, and blue." Looking at Barack's "not red states and blue states," Axelrod instead wrote, "We are one people, all of us pledging allegiance to the stars and stripes, all of us defending the United States of America." Favreau concurred, remaining in the hallway with Rideout as Barack's session continued. Then Gottheimer called to say that he wanted Barack's entire paragraph removed. Rideout recalled, "I was standing outside of the rehearsal room" when Gottheimer called Favreau. "He was on the phone with them when they're saying, 'No, actually it has to be the whole paragraph that comes out.'" Then Rideout instructed Favreau, "Tell him you can't hear him," and then she took the phone herself. "I just did an 'I can't hear you,'" she said. "'Are you there? Hanging up now.'" The battle was over, and thanks to Rideout, Barack had won. "It stayed in," she self-effacingly explained.

Barack was due back at the Fleet Center that evening for a 9:45 P.M. curtain call. Illinois senator Dick Durbin would introduce him, but DNC officials had caviled when Barack said that he wanted Michelle with him backstage. DNC officials also resisted when Darrel Thompson from Barack's campaign had protested the DNC's initial provision of only four floor passes. With Darrel, Joe McLean, and Robert Gibbs all working the phones, a podium pass for Michelle materialized along with a DNC apology and the offer of John Kerry's personal skybox for that evening for Barack's friends and donors. On the way back to the Fleet Center, Barack called Madelyn Dunham in Honolulu. Backstage, Chicago political consultant Kevin Lampe, the Podium Operations Team's "speaker tracker" assigned to Barack, was ready with a large-type hard copy of Barack's text in case the teleprompter failed. Debating with Michelle and several aides which of several ties to wear, Michelle's dislike of the entire lot led someone to suggest the one Robert Gibbs was wearing. Everyone agreed, and Gibbs removed his tie and Barack put it on. Only seven years later would he ceremonially return it. As Durbin delivered his introduction, Michelle hugged her husband and invoked her favorite line: “Just don’t screw it up, buddy!”<sup>81</sup>

Walking out onto the thrust stage that almost put speakers among the crowd, Barack shook Durbin’s hand and hugged him before turning to the podium. He repeatedly thanked the audience of five thousand for their cheers and applause before the venue finally quieted. In each cutaway shot, white-on-blue Obama signs bobbed everywhere on the convention floor. Barack began by telling the story of his parents. Jack Corrigan and a “really deathly nervous” Vicky Rideout stood just offstage. She thought Barack “seemed nervous to me at first,” and up in a skybox, Mary Beth Cahill recalled feeling that Barack “seemed quite nervous,” and “he started out a little shaky.” But when Barack mentioned his mother’s Kansas birth, that delegation’s audible reaction made Barack pause. He looked their way, gestured and smiled, and appeared to relax. “I saw a moment where he took a breath, and his shoulders went back,” Vicki recalled. “Then he just hit his stride and got going,” Cahill explained. Up in the Obama team’s temporary box, Terry Link and Darrel Thompson realized it too. “After that, it’s another speech. That’s when the speech takes off,” Darrel remembered.

Barack explained his African name, asserting that “in a tolerant America, your name is no barrier to success.” The crowd reaction built, and to television viewers, Obama signs were everywhere. “It was awesome,” Tom Lindenfeld remembered. “That’s what we’re doing this whole thing for,” this “big orchestration,” because “without the signs, he would not have had the punch.” Barack declared that “my story is part of the larger American story, that I owe a debt to all of those who came before me, and that in no other country on earth is my story even possible.” The crowd erupted in applause, with the TV cameras again showcasing the Obama signs. The crowd’s energy and the speaker “feed off each other,” as Lindenfeld put it, and Mary Beth Cahill recalled that in the arena “it was riveting” with “the people in the hall reacting so viscerally to him.” Barack described Americans’ faith “that we can say what we think, write what we think, without hearing a sudden knock on the door,” that “we can participate in the political process without fear of retribution.”

Barack spoke about Illinoisans both downstate and in the collar counties before declaring that in inner-city neighborhoods, “children can’t achieve unless we raise their expectations and turn off the television sets and eradicate the slander that says a black youth with a book is acting white.” Then he turned to praise the character and courage of John Kerry, stating that Kerry “believes in the constitutional freedoms that have made our country the envy of the world.” The broadcast camera cut away to show Jesse Jackson Sr. standing and applauding. Barack told of meeting a young marine enlistee in East Moline and praised America’s troops, with the next cutaway shot showing Hillary Rodham Clinton standing and clapping. Asserting that Americans are “all connected as one people,” Barack said that “if there’s a child on the South Side of Chicago who can’t read, that matters to me, even if it’s not my child,” and that “if there’s an Arab American family being rounded up without benefit of an attorney or due process, that threatens my civil liberties.”

Barack warned of “those who are preparing to divide us, the spin masters, the negative ad peddlers who embrace the politics of anything goes. Well, I say to them tonight, there’s not a liberal America and a conservative America, there’s the United States of America.” As the crowd erupted, Barack’s pace accelerated, and his voice strengthened. “There’s not a black America and a white America and Latino America and Asian America, there's the United States of America." The television broadcast again cut away to Jesse Jackson Sr. rising and applauding. "The pundits like to slice and dice our country into red states and blue states: red states for Republicans, blue states for Democrats. But I've got news for them too: we worship an awesome God in the blue states, and we don't like federal agents poking around in our libraries in the red states. We coach Little League in the blue states and, yes, we've got some gay friends in the red states." Barack's voice had intensified, and the power of his words crescendoed. On the convention floor, Robert Gibbs turned to David Axelrod and asked, "Are you seeing what I'm seeing?" and Axelrod, standing just behind a pair of broadcasters, heard CNN's Jeff Greenfield tell ABC's George Stephanopoulos, "This is a great fucking speech!"

When Barack rhetorically asked, "Do we participate in a politics of cynicism, or do we participate in a politics of hope?" the crowd immediately answered, "Hope." Barack sustained that theme, invoking the phrase he first had heard from Jeremiah Wright: "the audacity of hope. In the end, that is God's greatest gift to us, the bedrock of this nation, a belief in things not seen, a belief that there are better days ahead." He closed by declaring that if John Kerry was elected president, "out of this long political darkness, a brighter day will come." The hall erupted as Michelle hugged him and cutaway TV shots again pictured Hillary Rodham Clinton and Jesse Jackson Sr. Dick Durbin and his wife Loretta joined Barack and Michelle onstage as cheers and applause continued.

On the convention floor, tears flowed freely in the Illinois delegation. "Some of the most hardened politicians that I ever met, people who wouldn't hesitate to knock their mothers over to get whatever it is they wanted, had tears streaming down their cheeks," state senator Jeff Schoenberg recounted. "I had tears in my eyes," Senate president Emil Jones Jr. confirmed. "It was electrifying." To comptroller Dan Hynes, "it was surreal."

Up in the Obama team's skybox, "almost everybody in the room was crying," state senator Terry Link remembered, including Valerie Jarrett and Penny Pritzker. When Link's cell phone rang, it was Republican Tommy Walsh: "Our buddy hit a home run tonight." Backstage, everyone was ecstatic. For Jack Corrigan, "it exceeded my wildest expectations," and "right after the speech," Vicky Rideout turned to Jack to say, "'We just elected our first black president.' 'Yeah, you might be right in twelve years or so,'" Corrigan replied. Then Barack appeared, whom Corrigan had never met. Vicky took the initiative. "I introduced him to Corrigan, and I said, 'This is the person who selected you for this.'"

On MSNBC's live telecast, host Chris Matthews said, "I have to tell you, a little chill in my legs right now. That is an amazing moment in history right there. A keynoter like I have never heard." Matthews's guest, Representative Dick Gephardt, agreed. "A star is born." Matthews concurred: "A star is born," highlighting Barack's "strong language" about how black families needed to take responsibility for their children's education. On CNN, Jeff Greenfield praised Barack's remarks as "one of the really great keynote speeches of the last quarter century."

On the convention floor, a Latina delegate from Nevada spoke to veteran Washington Post reporter David S. Broder. "Look at the energy he brought to this room," she remarked. "He is definitely a rising star." Watching Barack's performance from his nearby home, John Kerry "was rightly blown away," one aide recalled. Barack's own team fully appreciated what had just occurred. "I realized at that moment that his life would never be the same," David Axelrod recalled. Jim Cauley put it similarly: "he was born that night," as it was "the transformational moment."

Backstage, NBC's Brian Williams asked both Barack and Michelle to join him for a live appearance on Matthews's MSNBC show. "You are, after all, a state senator from Illinois," Williams began, "so it's fair to ask you, when you get up there and see all those signs with your name on them and hear the chant that happens to match your name, what must that feeling be like?" Barack replied that "it's an enormous honor to be able to address a convention like this, to have the opportunity to speak to the country about the values that I care about . . . and it's especially nice to do it in front of my wife." Williams sought Michelle's reaction. "I was incredibly proud. And I am tough on him. And all I have to say is, honey, you didn't screw up, so good job!" Michelle said, "I was the bigger ball of nerves, even though I tried to act like I wasn't," but Barack "was terrific" and "he brought me to tears. . . . He was fabulous." Williams asked Barack what came next, saying he had "just heard a pundit behind me refer to the White House." Barack cited a multiday downstate swing his campaign had scheduled. "As soon as this convention is over, we are loading up our kids in an RV. We are traveling around to county fairs, eating ice cream . . . and meeting voters along the way." The media "is fickle," and voters want to know "is this a guy who delivers," who can "actually help my life in some concrete way?" Then Michelle said, "I am just hoping that our kids watched the whole thing." She had told her mother Marian "they can only stay up as long as they keep it on this channel, and that if they want to see Mom, they have to wait until Dad finishes."

Minutes later, NBC's Andrea Mitchell declared, "the real breakout tonight is Obama," that "Obama is a rock star," with Chris Matthews adding, "I've just seen the first black president." Across the nation, any number of TV viewers who had known Barack—or "Barry"—years earlier had trouble grasping what they had just seen. One Haines Annex friend from twenty-four years earlier thought "maybe that's Barry's brother." Phil Boerner's cousin Pern Beckman, who had shared beers with Barack in Morningside Heights, "watched the entire 2004 convention speech and never made the association. I'd said to my wife, 'Why isn't this guy running for president?'" and only long after did Phil tell Pern whom he had seen. "About six months later it turns out that I've known him all along. That's how much of a transformation took place from this shy kid" he had known in the early 1980s. In New York, Business International's Barry Rutizer was "completely dumbfounded" when he realized who the speaker was. "I practically fell out of my chair." In Honolulu, Madelyn Dunham called Barack's cell phone and left a message. "That was a very nice speech, Barack. You did well." State Senate colleague James Clayborne left an archly congratulatory message recalling their unhappy sojourn to Los Angeles. "Something's wrong. Four years ago, we were at the convention together, and four years later I'm sitting on my couch watching you give the keynote. Something's wrong." In Chicago, most of Barack's campaign staffers who had not gone to Boston gathered at Trinity United Church of Christ to watch the speech. In Springfield, the man who had done more than any other person to bring Barack to this point in his political career, Dan Shomon, watched the speech at the VFW post on Old Jacksonville Road.<sup>82</sup>

Barack's campaign team had booked a three-hour after-party at a large downtown restaurant, Vinalia, and worries that too few people would show up were proven terribly wrong when a crowd of thousands descended on the venue. "It was mayhem," Claire Serdiuk recalled, with Jim Cauley and Darrel Thompson having trouble getting Barack inside. "He made some short remarks at that event, even better than on the convention floor," Illinois delegate David Munar remembered. "He said something like 'you're expecting another speech, I am going to disappoint you. But I am glad I moved you, inspired you, I'm happy with it. I just want to remind you that they're just words. It is our job to make those words reality. The hard work is not making a speech, the hard work is living up to the speech.' He was so eloquent and so on point. . . . It moved me more than anything, that he had that self-awareness. He checked himself immediately."

Tuesday's Chicago Tribune commended Barack for "a brilliant, passionate and heartening speech," and USA Today christened him "a rising Democratic star." At campaign headquarters, things were "crazy," with hundreds of people calling to volunteer and tens of thousands of dollars arriving in Internet contributions. "I don't think any of us had any idea that it would be like it was," national finance director Susan Shadow remembered. "We were just overwhelmed." A number of staffers had seen an advance text of Barack's speech, "but none of us was prepared for the reaction it got," young press assistant Tommy Vietor recalled. On paper, Barack's words were "nowhere close to the way he delivered it," as Vicky Rideout also appreciated. "The words are not amazing in any way. They're somewhat routine." What had captivated television viewers was the passionate intensity of Barack's delivery as he responded to the crowd in the hall. His performance had been rousing, but it was not because of "the words on the page."

In Boston, plaudits rained down. Chicago mayor Rich Daley told reporters that Barack "hit a grand slam home run. He had passion and emotion, and that's what it's all about." Congressman Lane Evans told the Journal-Register's Bernie Schoenburg that "there's already people talking about Barack being a presidential candidate," and USA Today quoted a Pennsylvania delegate saying, "I think he could be our first black president." Even a Republican National Committee spokeswoman acknowledged that "Obama is a rising star," and she was echoed by Salim Muwakkil, who years earlier had publicized black nationalists' hostility toward Barack. Now he was "a genuine rising star" who "literally embodies our multicultural future."

Just like the night before, Barack took the acclaim in stride while weighing other concerns. "Malia is six, and I can't believe it, but a third of her childhood is over already," Barack told David Mendell. How much of her young life had he missed because of politics? "Too much," Barack answered. By midday Wednesday, Barack was running forty minutes behind schedule, but he took the time to speak to a Massachusetts state capitol gathering of 165 high school students. "We've got to call an audible and skip some of these things," journalists heard him say. "I've got to see my wife." That evening, when the national networks commenced their live coverage, NBC anchor Tom Brokaw told viewers he wondered "who will be remembered most" once the convention ended, "Kerry or Obama?" Thursday's Christian Science Monitor said Barack "could be one of the most exciting and important voices in American politics in the next half century," and the Boston Globe understandably noted that he "seemed to have the term 'rising star' formally appended to his name."

At a Science Monitor-hosted breakfast, Barack again endorsed Bill Cosby's critique of black America, saying his "underlying premise was right on target," that Cosby's "underlying idea . . . that we have young people who aren't disciplined, that we have a strain of anti-intellectualism . . . is absolutely true." Barack also cited his own family's financial worries, saying they had recently taken out a second mortgage on their East View condominium and that the challenge of living in both Chicago and Washington on a U.S. senator's salary of $158,100 "is a source of concern."

Filming an interview with African American broadcaster Tavis Smiley, Barack stressed that "I'm very clear that I've got to stay focused on Illinois, and that . . . the worst thing that I could do is start taking all this hype and all this press seriously." While magazine editor Tina Brown mused in the Washington Post about “Obama-mania” and Barack’s “genderless air,” the drumbeat of “rising star” accolades continued apace, with Friday’s Boston Globe, the Harvard Crimson, and Massachusetts’s black weekly, the Bay State Banner, all adopting the label. On Friday Barack and Jim Cauley headed to Boston’s Logan Airport because the candidate’s five-day downstate tour would get under way first thing on Saturday. At security, the new rock star was selected for an additional pat-down, and then “we had to hide him in the lounge because we couldn’t move him through the airport. It was a little bit Beatle-ish,” Cauley recalled.

One by-product of Barack’s newfound national fame was an intense spurt of interest in his soon-to-be-reissued Dreams From My Father. Less than forty-eight hours after Barack’s keynote speech, Dreams ranked number 10 on Amazon’s bestseller list, and Crown quickly accelerated its schedule, aiming to get forty thousand copies into stores by August 10 rather than at the end of the month. Editor Rachel Klayman of course called Barack “a rising political star,” and New York Post gossip columnist Cindy Adams and Crain’s New York Business both reported that Jane Dystel was talking with publishers about what Crain’s called “a mid-six-figure advance” for a new book about Barack’s “ideas and beliefs.” Dystel confirmed “we are already talking about it,” adding drily that “this one should make some money.” Within a month’s time, the new paperback of Dreams would appear on the New York Times’ paperback nonfiction bestseller list, remaining there for fourteen of the next eighteen weeks.<sup>83</sup>

Only on Friday evening, back home in Hyde Park, did Barack realize just how demanding this downstate tour would be. Thirty-nine stops were scheduled over the next five days. After the rented RV pulled up at East View Saturday morning, the first stop was a Hyde Park event, which would be followed by seven more, with the long day ending four hundred miles later in DeKalb after an evening cookout in the Moline backyard of downstate campaign director Jeremiah Posedel, who remembered that Barack “called my cell phone the night before the tour started and he was very pissed.” Barack’s staff had little sympathy for the candidate’s unhappiness. Chief scheduler Peter Coffey recalled that “Jeremiah put together a great schedule,” one that now was all the more important after Barack’s five-day celebrity circuit in Boston. “He needed to see these towns, he needed to be in these communities,” Peter knew, “to remind him that this is the job he’s running for” on behalf of regular Illinoisans, not broadcast interviewers.

With Michelle, Malia, and Sasha on board and a fifteen-passenger van filled with reporters following behind, the RV left Hyde Park for an eighty-mile drive to Ottawa, in Democrat-rich LaSalle County. Posedel had expected the rapid-fire small-town stops to draw approximately one hundred people each, but in Ottawa a crowd of more than five hundred welcomed Barack. Then it was on to Granville, then DePue, and there were another five hundred people in Kewanee, followed by Monmouth and Oquawka. The crowd of hundreds there was “electrified and energized” by the late-afternoon appearance of “a rising star,” who “was swamped by those seeking autographs.” In Moline, more than three hundred people crowded into Posedel and girlfriend Anita Decker’s backyard before the RV headed back eastward to overnight in DeKalb. At 9:00 A.M. Sunday morning, fourteen hundred people awaited Barack in a DeKalb park, even in ninety-degree heat. Then it was on to Marengo, Belvidere, and Rockford, where a crowd of a thousand gathered in a riverfront park. Barack took the time to greet hundreds of people, which meant that by Freeport the RV was running an hour late. In Galena, Malia and Sasha finally got their promised ice cream before the tour made Sunday’s seventh and last stop in Mount Carroll.

Tribune reporter David Mendell felt that “Obama fever” had given the tour “the feel of a coronation.” Barack hesitated to articulate his own feelings about it. “This is all so, well, interesting. But it’s all so ephemeral,” he told Mendell. “I don’t know how this plays out, but there is definitely a novelty aspect to it all.” But “it can’t stay white hot like it is right now.” Both the Boston experience and now people’s reactions across central Illinois left Michelle thinking about Barack’s security. “You have to achieve a balance between looking out for his safety and not looking like he is afraid of the community he is serving.” They began Monday in Rock Falls, then Dixon, Rochelle, Lacon, Pekin, Normal, and Clinton. “Barack seems to become energized at every stop by the people that he meets,” young press assistant Tommy Vietor blogged, but by Monday’s final stop at a $100-per-person Danville fund-raiser that drew seven hundred, Barack was ninety minutes late.

Tuesday, day 4, again featured what Vietor called a “fast and furious” pace, beginning at 8:30 A.M. in Champaign. Local state representative Naomi Jakobsson introduced Barack as “Illinois’s rising star,” and at the day’s second stop, in Tuscola, retired farmer Boyd Stenger told Barack, “You need to run for president in the next election.” When Chicago Sun-Times reporter Dave McKinney remarked to Barack about “the stunning amount of positive press” he was getting, Barack’s cool reply was “Don’t jinx me.” They forged on to Mattoon, Neoga, Mount Vernon, Fairfield, Mount Carmel, Lawrenceville, and Olney, where five hundred people greeted Barack even though he was more than an hour late. Tuesday’s tenth and final stop was Salem, where another crowd of five hundred awaited. Wednesday was Barack’s forty-third birthday, and it featured a stop in Taylorville before the RV turned northeastward and headed back toward Chicagoland. A $50-per-person evening birthday party at the Matteson Holiday Inn featured Representative Jesse Jackson Jr. serenading Barack with “Happy Birthday” before Barack praised Jackson and Senate president Emil Jones Jr. as his “two rocks of Gibraltar.” As the celebration wore down, Barack turned to tour architect Jeremiah Posedel. “You did a great job, but don’t ever fucking do that to me again!”<sup>84</sup>

While Barack was traversing central Illinois’s small towns, David Axelrod and John Kupper had been revising the general election plan. “Barack could spend not a penny on advertising and still win,” they noted, but “Barack remains relatively unknown,” so his newfound national fame created a new hurdle. “We need to meet and exceed expectations. A 55–45 win in November will now be read as a disappointing showing. . . . We need to drive up Barack’s margin as high as we reasonably can to cement his standing—both state-wide and nationally—and help discourage a more credible challenger six years from now.” But given how long Barack had gone without an opponent, the earlier game plan of spending more than $8 million on paid media could be scaled back to “about half that amount, with the focus on Downstate.”

The weeks since Jack Ryan’s withdrawal had been quiet for those Obama staffers who did not go to Boston or have to cope with the postconvention deluge, and policy director Amanda Fuchs had used the time to produce a comprehensive “Defensive Research Book” on Barack’s Springfield record. “Soft on crime” was the top vulnerability, but Amanda’s desire to have a long, comprehensive interview with Barack about his life’s record beyond the state legislature was repeatedly brushed aside by the candidate and David Axelrod.

By the first week of August, Illinois Republicans’ desperation to find a plausible stand-in candidate reached new depths as the nineteen-member State Central Committee began interviewing a motley collection of applicants. Rockford state senator Dave Syverson had the odd idea of asking Alan Keyes, an outspoken African American abortion opponent who in 1988 and 1992 had lost Senate races in his home state of Maryland before launching quixotic presidential runs in 1996 and 2000. Keyes agreed to apply, and flew to Chicago on August 3. Calling Barack “a radical ideologue,” Keyes interviewed with the Republican committee for ninety minutes on August 4 and garnered two-thirds support. Keyes requested several days to decide, during which time Barack told the Tribune, “I think he’ll need to explain how he can best represent the people of Illinois, not having ever lived here.” Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller dismissed Keyes as “an arrogant blowhard,” and the Tribune discovered that Keyes had $524,000 in unpaid debts from his two presidential quests plus a $7,400 income tax lien he quickly settled.

Barack and his family were headed to Canada to see his sister Maya, her husband Konrad, and their new baby Suhaila, who were visiting Konrad’s parents in Burlington, Ontario. A visit to nearby Niagara Falls was de rigueur, and while Barack was enjoying a weekend away from politics, Alan Keyes returned to Chicago to accept the Republican nomination before a small crowd at a suburban restaurant. Reading Monday’s news stories on his return, Barack told the Tribune that Keyes “did not say a word about jobs, he didn’t say a word about health care—the two issues that when I travel around the state people seem to be talking about all the time.”

Barack joked that his old offer of six debates with Jack Ryan was a “special for in-state residents,” but his campaign’s insistence that three face-offs with Keyes in the fall would be more than enough met with criticism from Chicago editorialists. With a CBS Chicago poll showing Barack leading Keyes 67–28, and the Chicago Defender denouncing Keyes as “a political hit man” intent on “a character assassination campaign,” Barack’s desire to minimize his personal exposure made sense. Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller wrote that Republicans hoped to keep Barack “pinned down in Illinois” for the fall, but by refusing six debates, Barack had been “knocked off his game for the first time this year.” Miller noted that “Obama isn’t accustomed to negative publicity, to put it mildly,” and wondered how well Barack would cope with the rhetorical onslaught everyone expected from Keyes, who already had made “the ‘rock star’ frontrunner look like a mope.”

Suburban Daily Herald political writer Eric Krol noted that Barack “has gone out of his way to sound more like a moderate since the March primary.” Appearing on NPR’s Fresh Air, Barack predicted that “people are just weary of . . . slash-and-burn politics that demonizes whoever doesn’t agree with you.” Yet “ruthless” and “cynical” political professionals stoked such tactics, because they have “a monetary stake in the outcomes.” At Saturday’s annual Bud Billiken Parade in Bronzeville, Barack, Michelle, and Congressman Jesse Jackson Jr. rode on top of a float. “Obama was treated to a king’s welcome” on account of his “super celebrity status,” wrote the Tribune’s David Mendell, while the Defender declared that a “serene” Barack “looked more like a film star than a senatorial candidate.” In contrast, when Alan Keyes appeared, he was met with cries of “Go back to Maryland!” and he “was loudly booed by the crowd.” When the parade MC reprimanded the crowd, “the disapproval grew louder and was taken over by chanting Obama’s name.”

The next morning Barack and Keyes appeared separately on ABC’s This Week, with host George Stephanopoulos stating that at the DNC, Barack “convinced a lot of those delegates that he’s got the makings of a future president.” Barack predicted that “there are going to be some trying moments” in facing off against Keyes, and he understood Republicans wanted to “bloody me up a little bit before I got to Washington.” When Stephanopoulos asked Barack about Keyes’s position “that life begins at conception,” Barack parried. “Well, I as a Christian might agree with that, but if I agree with that it’s based on a religious premise, and not one that I think is subject to scientific proof.” Barack added that Democrats err if they believe “that only secularism could express tolerance,” because “part of my job as a Christian is to recognize that I may not always be right, that God doesn’t speak to me alone.”

At midday Sunday, Barack headed to Rogers Park for the annual Indian Independence Day Parade. Also on the northwest corner of Devon and Western Avenues was Alan Keyes, whose wife Jocelyn was Indian American. Meeting for the first time, Barack approached his opponent to shake hands. Keyes made some remark about the number of debates, and Barack shot back, “I guarantee we’re going to debate, because you’ve been talking a lot.” Keyes replied that “I have the very bad habit of telling the truth,” then adding that “the sad truth of the matter is, one test of a candidate, I believe, is that you say what you mean and mean what you say.” Barack replied, “I always do.”

Sun-Times reporter Natasha Korecki stood close by as the two men “frequently interrupted each other, continuing to grasp hands as they exchanged barbs only inches from the other’s face.” Barack told Keyes, “Don’t just go and keep on talking. You’ve got to do a little listening. You’re not a very good listener.” Finally they parted, with Barack telling a Tribune journalist that Keyes’s “entire premise is that people that don’t share his convictions are bad people.” Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller wrote that “the alleged rock star lost his famously unflappable cool” when confronted by Keyes in the flesh. “Both men shouting at each other and pointing fingers” was “par for the course for Keyes” but “not a good thing at all for Senator Suave,” who “needs to get his act together.” Privately, David Axelrod agreed, reprimanding Barack for a scene that left Axelrod “shocked” by his candidate’s behavior. Barack replied, “I just wasn’t going to let him punk me.”

Following campaign stops in Peoria and Decatur, Barack “was greeted with wild enthusiasm at every appearance” when he arrived at the huge Illinois State Fair in Springfield on what was nominally “Governor’s Day.” “The star of the day was Obama, not Gov. Rod Blagojevich,” the Tribune stated, with Barack’s Senate buddy Denny Jacobs declaring, “it’s an Obamafest!” As if any further evidence was needed, several days later a Tribune poll showed Barack with a 65 to 24 percent statewide lead over Keyes. Barack’s favorable-to-unfavorable margin was 62 to 14, with 24 percent uncertain. Regarding Keyes’s signature issue, only 28 percent of voters wanted greater restrictions on abortion. In contrast, 56 percent said Jack Ryan should not have dropped out, and, of all people in Illinois, Rod McCulloch now agreed with them. “Honestly, if I’d have known they were going to bring in Alan Keyes, I might have kept my mouth shut, because an October surprise [about Ryan] would have been better than Alan Keyes.”<sup>85</sup>

Barack and his family slipped out of Chicago for a late-August vacation on Martha’s Vineyard, staying with Valerie Jarrett at her home in Oak Bluffs, long a summer destination for privileged African Americans. Barack made a surprise appearance at a forum in an Edgartown church, but otherwise relaxed, playing golf with Chicago friend Allison Davis. After going out to jog one morning, he returned to Jarrett’s with what she called “a look of complete disbelief on his face. ‘You aren’t going to believe what happened to me,’ he said. ‘A guy took my picture as I jogged by.’”

While Barack was away, his campaign team debuted his first general election TV ad in downstate markets from Rockford to Springfield. Focused on his REAL USA Corporations bill, it featured Barack stating, “I came to Illinois nineteen years ago to work in a community torn apart by the closing of a steel plant.” Saying, “we need some common sense,” Barack called for ending “tax breaks for corporations who move job overseas,” giving them instead to “companies who create jobs here.” At the same time, Paul Harstad conducted the campaign’s second general election poll, focusing particularly on downstate voters and Republican women in the Chicago media market. Only 62 percent of respondents knew about Barack’s DNC speech, and while his lead over Keyes was a whopping 64–20, a hypothetical pairing of Barack versus former governor Jim Edgar showed Barack with just a modest 49–40 percent advantage.

Once Barack returned, he made a quick trip to Birmingham, Alabama, for a $1,000-per-person fundraiser at the Civil Rights Institute, and afterward he walked across 6th Avenue North to visit Sixteenth Street Baptist Church. “Let’s say a little prayer, because I believe in the power of prayer,” Barack told pastor Rev. Arthur Price. Back in Chicago, his consultants met to absorb Harstad’s polling results and to discuss how Barack could be deployed nationally to help raise money for Democratic Senate candidates who were facing tougher races than his, particularly minority leader Tom Daschle. At the same time, David Axelrod, John Kupper, and David Plouffe gave Barack a twelve-page “Transition” memo outlining what he should do after he won election to the Senate on November 2. “You are permitted to hire two transition staff to work from the time of your election until your swearing-in,” and they expressly recommended Robert Gibbs as “a solid choice” to remain as Barack’s communications director. In addition, Daschle’s chief of staff, Pete Rouse, was “someone with whom you should develop a peer relationship.” Noting “the galvanizing national presence you created through your keynote address,” Barack’s team said he needed to formulate his own policy agenda, and “one issue we’d suggest you focus on is healthcare reform.”

Making his first campaign swing through Metro East since the DNC, Barack told a mostly black crowd at East St. Louis’s Mount Zion Baptist Church that visiting the Birmingham church where four young girls had been killed in a 1963 Klan bombing had put his newfound fame in perspective. “It’s easy to get swept up in the hoopla, to read your name in the papers and to see yourself on TV. And all of that is fun. But standing in that church in Birmingham, Alabama, I realized and I reminded myself that the reason you get into public service is not for yourself. It’s not about your family. It’s not about your vanity. It’s not about your ambition. If you want to be first, you have to be first in service.”

At his next appearance, before an almost entirely white crowd at a Waterloo VFW hall, Barack joked about his DNC speech. “My wife, I asked her for a little support. She said, ‘Don’t screw it up.’” That afternoon in Benton, Barack spoke frankly about his opponent. “I don’t just want to win, I want to give this guy who is running against me a spanking. The reason I do is because he exemplifies the kind of scorched-earth, slash-and-burn negative campaign that has become the custom in Washington, and it is the reason why we can’t get anything done. Ordinary people just don’t act like that, they don’t call people names all the time.”

Responding to downstate reporters’ questions, Barack measured his remarks accordingly. “On some issues I’m quite conservative. I believe in the death penalty. I believe that there is an important place for the Second Amendment in this state. I believe that it is important that we don’t think we can solve all our problems with government programs. I’ve said that publicly and repeatedly, and I’ve voted in that fashion.” Barack called abortion “a deeply difficult moral issue” and declared, “I’m not in favor of gay marriage.” He remained firmly critical of the Patriot Act, stating that “we have to make sure that we don’t get so swept up in our fears that we throw overboard those constitutional protections that make this country so special.”

Appearing before the Rock Island County NAACP on Labor Day, Barack was greeted “more like he was a rock star than a politician,” the Quad-City Times reported. Barack stressed that “I wouldn’t be standing here today if it were not for Lane Evans,” the local congressman who early on had endorsed Barack. In Chicago, Alan Keyes called a press conference to criticize Barack’s “spanking” remark, but made bigger headlines by proclaiming that “Christ would not vote for Barack Obama” because of abortion. Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller noted Keyes’s “continuing bizarre behavior,” but Barack calmly told Springfield reporters that “I leave it up to God to judge how good of a Christian I’m going to be. I leave it up to the voters to judge how good of a U.S. senator I’m going to be. I don’t concern myself too much with Mr. Keyes’s judgment on either matter,” and “I will leave Mr. Keyes to the theological speculations. My job is to focus on the issues the voters care about: jobs, health care, education.”<sup>86</sup>

Chicago Sun-Times reporter Lynn Sweet publicly castigated Barack’s “manipulative, cagey campaign” for “hiding practically all of Obama’s out-of-state treks” to fund-raisers from the press. Barack also was attending a ramped-up schedule of Chicagoland fund-raisers, such as a Tuesday-evening one at Raghuvver Nayak’s home in Oak Brook. Michael Parham, Jeff Cummings’s attorney friend who had attended one of Barack’s earliest state Senate fund-raisers before leaving Chicago for Seattle, offered to have his RealNetworks colleagues host a fund-raiser, and Barack called to confirm. “When are we going to get you back to Chicago?” he asked. “You know, your governor wants me to come right now,” Parham replied. “For what?” Barack asked. “To be his general counsel,” Michael said. “Without skipping a beat,” Barack forcefully declared, “Don’t do it. Don’t take that job. Stay away from him. You don’t need him. Don’t take that job.” Parham was taken aback by Barack’s “instinctual reaction,” but followed his advice.

Meeting with newspaper editorial boards prior to their endorsement decisions, Barack mentioned to Daily Herald journalists his disappointment that Republican colleague Steve Rauschenberger had criticized him over the summer. Called for comment, Steve praised Barack personally while asserting that in Springfield he had been “a show horse, not a workhorse.” Barack is “brilliant, his potential is unlimited,” and his ambition knew no bounds. “I don’t think even the U.S. Senate will be enough for Barack,” Rauschenberger exclaimed. Speaking with Tribune editors about foreign policy dangers, Barack said that “launching some missile strikes into Iran is not the optimal position for us,” but “on the other hand, having a radical Muslim theocracy in possession of nuclear weapons is worse.” Barack felt similarly about Pakistan’s nuclear arsenal. If “certain elements” gained power, “I think we would have to consider going in and taking those bombs out.” Yet Barack said that health care reform, not foreign policy, would be his top Senate priority.

A justifiably proud Emil Jones Jr. told Tribune reporters that “Obama’s the future” and that Barack “embodies all that I dream for and work for.” An essay in the leftist weekly In These Times said that Barack’s Senate “campaign points toward a new era . . . of progressive politics in search of a new majority,” and when Barack appeared at a Saturday event in suburban Bolingbrook, the Joliet Herald News reported that he was “greeted like a film star.” Campaigning in Philadelphia for Pennsylvania Democratic Senate candidate Joe Hoeffel, Barack attracted a fervent crowd. “I am quite confident he could be the first African American president,” one college student told a Philadelphia Inquirer reporter, and an undergraduate journalist for the Daily Pennsylvanian was struck by how Barack “stayed and mingled with the crowd for more than 30 minutes.” Back in Illinois, a St. Louis Post-Dispatch poll showed Barack leading Keyes 68–23, with 54 percent of Illinois voters viewing Keyes unfavorably. A Tribune poll gave Barack a 51-point lead, 68–17, with 39 percent of Republicans viewing Barack favorably and 38 percent calling Keyes “too extreme.” Rich Miller wrote that at one otherwise-unreported event in Quincy, “Keyes led the crowd in a chant of ‘Obama been lyin’,’ which sounded to some ears like ‘Osama bin Laden.’” Miller believed that “‘arrogant’ is perhaps too soft a word to describe Mr. Keyes,” and former governor Jim Edgar recounted a similar reaction that month from the president of the United States. “I ran into Bush, and he said, ‘I’m not coming to Illinois. You guys are nuts out there. Alan Keyes?’”<sup>87</sup>

Barack continued to receive more fawning profiles than tough questions. Black Enterprise magazine put him on its cover, heralding “the birth of a new political star” who may “one day become America’s first African American president.” Chicago Sun-Times reporter Scott Fornek got both Michelle and Barack’s sister Maya to describe Barack’s behavior during their annual Christmastime games of Scrabble. Michelle called him “a big trash talker,” and Maya termed her brother “an indelicate winner” who “would crow like a rooster and flap his wings and make slam-dunk motions.” Barack confessed that “when it comes to Scrabble I just can’t help myself. . . . I’ve got a competitive nature.”

Television host Oprah Winfrey interviewed Barack and Michelle, telling him that when he had called out “the slander that says a black youth with a book is acting white” in his DNC speech, “I stood up and cheered.” Michelle told Oprah that if she had met the Ryan campaign’s video stalker, “I would’ve punched him,” and in the face of Barack’s many accolades, she emphasized that “we’re clear on the fact that we have to stay humble and prayerful.” Barack lamented “the people I meet in these little towns who have lost their jobs” and “are struggling and occasionally slipping into bitterness,” but he also revealed that “I’ve had ten days off in the last three years, and that includes weekends. My workdays are often sixteen hours.” Barack told Winfrey, “I think the biggest mistake politicians make is being inauthentic.”

Traveling north to Madison to praise Wisconsin’s Russ Feingold, the sole U.S. senator to vote against the Patriot Act, Barack said, “I like to think that, had I been in the Senate, I would have cast the second vote against the Patriot Act,” although “I wasn’t there in the pressure of that moment.” A Cleveland reporter who had first met Barack eight years earlier was now struck by Barack’s “detached skepticism.” Barack told him that “there is value to considering the possibility that you may be wrong,” but in his Tribune questionnaire, Barack bluntly declared that “the global community cannot tolerate nuclear technology in the hands of a radical theocracy.”

Barack continued to spend a disproportionate amount of time downstate, appearing at events like Macoupin County’s thirtieth annual Country Fun Day on a farm just west of Gillespie. Top Democrats like Dick Durbin, Rod Blagojevich, and Emil Jones Jr. were all there that Sunday, and Jones recalled an elderly white woman, in what was an almost all-white corner of Illinois, turning to him after Barack finished speaking and saying, “This young man is going to be president of the United States some day. I just hope I live long enough to vote for him.” On Monday, speaking at the University of Illinois College of Law in Champaign a day before his first debate with Alan Keyes, Barack vented some of the anger he felt toward his challenger. “When they’re not being bombarded by messages from Michael Moore or Fox News, citizens today have to deal with politicians who habitually lie, blatantly mischaracterize their opponents, and do other things that would not be accepted at all in any other aspect of society” beyond politics.

The fifty-three-minute, radio-only debate turned out to be a major letdown for Illinois journalists. “Not only were there no fireworks, there weren’t even many sparks,” wrote Sun-Times reporter Scott Fornek. Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller lambasted the questioners for posing “almost nothing but softballs” and failing to confront Keyes with any of his outlandish prior statements. A Los Angeles Times correspondent found Barack’s performance “calm and analytical,” and his most notable statement was that “with terrorists I have a very hawkish position. I think we should hunt them down, kill them, dismantle their operations.” Miller reported that “several of Obama’s advisors privately admitted disappointment with their guy’s performance,” and by now David Axelrod and John Kupper knew all too well that Barack was “a guy who just never really took debates seriously.”

National and Chicago journalists marveled that “Obama Extends Reach Beyond Illinois Race,” as a USA Today headline put it. The paper said Barack had campaigned in fourteen states since the DNC, raising more than $1.2 million for the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee. A Tribune analysis showed that Barack had donated at least $268,000 from Obama for Illinois to other Democratic candidates, including $53,000 to embattled Senate minority leader Tom Daschle, but with contributions to Barack’s campaign now totaling more than $14 million, such generosity came easily.

Michelle now was making campaign appearances of her own, despite having just lost valued babysitter Sonja Hawes, with a young African American U of C student, Marlease Bushnell, taking her place. Michelle told an Edwardsville audience that “I grew up as a poor girl” and described how she had to escape black anti-intellectualism as a youngster. “I confronted it growing up. I had to duck and dodge to cover up the fact that I enjoyed school and excelled in it so I didn’t get my butt kicked on the way home from school.” In a Springfield conversation, Michelle again emphasized the centrality of religion in her and her husband’s lives. “We’ve been guided by faith throughout the course of this political campaign, a faith that says to whom much is given, much is expected . . . a faith that says we’re all put on this earth for a higher purpose, a faith that tells us that we can always do better.” In place of the disdain with which Michelle had viewed Barack’s political aspirations in earlier years, she now seemed to embrace a loftier mission. “Winning is just a small part,” she told the Journal-Register. “This campaign is about so much more—it’s about changing the tone of politics.”<sup>88</sup>

Since his primary win, Barack also exhibited a greater religious faith than close acquaintances had ever previously sensed. After the DNC, Tribune reporter David Mendell covered Barack almost everywhere in Illinois, noticing that “along his Senate campaign trail, Obama would never fail to carry his Christian Bible. He would place it right beside him, in the small compartment in the passenger-side door of the SUV, so he could refer to it often.” When Mendell asked Barack about his “ever-present Bible,” he was “a bit hesitant to answer” and was “uncharacteristically short” in saying he read it a “couple times a week.” “It’s a great book and contains a lot of wisdom,” Barack added.

Campaigning in Denver for Democratic Senate candidate Ken Salazar, Barack was christened a “rising star” by the Denver Post, the same phrase Soledad O’Brien used to introduce him to viewers of CNN’s American Morning. Barack told O’Brien that all of the attention is “a little over the top” because “I know how hard it is to actually get stuff done in politics,” but in the Denver crowd, one African American woman told her children, “Look hard, honey. That man might be your president someday.”

The Chicago Tribune commented on what an artfully balanced position Barack took on affirmative action. “Promoting diversity is a compelling national interest, but it has to be done in a way that is not a back-door use of quotas and takes into account the full record of the students, not just race and test scores,” Barack stated. Barack’s increasing fame attracted a number of attempts to plumb the impact of his racial identity. St. Louis Post-Dispatch correspondent Kevin McDermott observed that Barack “often seems like a different man from setting to setting, depending on his audience,” but McDermott took special note when Barack told a group of black students, “You’ve got to have a higher standard of excellence than the scumbag folks back in the neighborhood expect of you.”

Even before his DNC speech, the Springfield State Journal-Register had run an editorial observing that Barack “could just as easily be considered white” as black, and as his election as the first-ever black male Democrat in the U.S. Senate neared, additional commentators weighed in. Political figures like Colin Powell and Barack “give off the sense that they have transcended traditional racial categories” by virtue of “their speech and demeanor, their personal narratives and career achievements,” Benjamin Wallace-Wells wrote in the Washington Monthly. For them, “race had been an advantage because whites see in them confirmation that America, finally, is working.” An idiosyncratic African American commentator, emphasizing what he believed was Barack’s “substantially more dominant white heritage,” argued that “Obama has adopted a bizarre practice that might be most accurately described as passing in reverse” by asserting his African American identity.

Veteran black journalist Don Terry interviewed Barack and a number of other Chicagoans before concluding that Barack “is a Rorschach test. What you see is what you want to see.” Barack understood that dynamic. “I’d describe myself as coming from several cultures, and feel I belong to all of them,” he told Terry. “I think people project a lot of their racial questions onto me.” Barack nicely captured the complexity of American blackness when telling an Ebony magazine writer that “All of us had parents or grandparents who were the subject of much greater discrimination. That’s true whether they were from the Caribbean, or Africa or Mississippi.” When Don Terry asked Chicago black activist Bamani Obadele about Barack, he answered that “to black people he’s black. To some whites, they don’t see him as a black man. They see him almost as one of them.” A middle-aged white female told Terry that Barack could well be the first “minority” president. Why that rather than black, Terry asked. “I guess it’s because I don’t think of him as black.”<sup>89</sup>

All across Illinois, newspapers endorsed Barack for election to the U.S. Senate. The Chicago Sun-Times lauded his “meteoric rise” as “a walking advertisement for the American dream,” and Bloomington’s Pantagraph, which had backed Dan Hynes in the primary, praised Barack’s “pragmatic, bipartisan approach to problem solving.” The Chicago Tribune embraced him as “a rare example of someone who is able to rise above ethnic and racial divides and political partisanship,” and the Chicago Defender proclaimed that “Obama Will Do Us Proud” in the U.S. Senate. Speaking to voters east of the Mississippi River, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch commended Barack’s “nuanced understanding of the issues facing the nation” and said that “over the course of the long senatorial campaign, Mr. Obama has skyrocketed from an obscure northern Illinois legislator to national celebrity.”

Only on October 19 did Barack’s campaign begin running its first Chicagoland TV ad, a thirty-second spot featuring his DNC keynote declaration that “there is not a liberal America and a conservative America, there is the United States of America.” The prepaid $2 million expenditure demonstrated “we are not taking any vote for granted,” David Axelrod told the Sun-Times. On Thursday night, October 21, Barack and Alan Keyes met for their first televised debate, though the viewing audience was modest given that the St. Louis Cardinals, whom most downstate baseball fans rooted for, were hosting the Houston Astros for Game 7 of the National League Championship Series at the same time. Early on, Barack emphasized his legislative goal of “setting partisanship aside and seeking common ground.” After Keyes at almost endless length spoke about Christianity and the Lord, Barack expressed exasperation in what journalists unanimously thought was the night’s best statement. “I’m not running to be the minister of Illinois. I’m running to be its United States senator.” Barack also declared that “everyone who lives in the United States knows that race still matters. It matters powerfully. I think that we still suffer from the legacies of slavery and Jim Crow, and this has been the single biggest blight on the history of this nation.”

In a long preelection profile in the Tribune, David Mendell called Barack “the voice of a new generation of politicians” and potentially “the country’s first black president.” David Axelrod acknowledged that “Barack has been shot out of a cannon” and that “I think Barack understands that he has been on an incredible ride.” In a similar piece in the Daily Herald, Barack joked about Dreams From My Father’s presence on the New York Times bestseller list. “I was feeling pretty good about that until I read that actually the fastest-growing best seller on the list was Jenna Jameson’s How to Make Love Like a Porn Star,” which showed that “there’s not necessarily any correlation between celebrity and accomplishment.”

Associated Press correspondent Chris Wills, citing Michelle’s “unusually high-profile role” in the fall campaign, devoted a story to her as well. “Barack was not as cynical about politics as I was. Unlike me, Barack always had faith in the American people,” Michelle told him. Speaking at Illinois State University, Michelle reprised her Springfield remarks that “this race means much more to us than winning,” because “it’s about changing the tone of politics.” Barack “wasn’t going to do this if he couldn’t tell the truth, if he couldn’t operate with dignity, if he couldn’t treat his opponents with some respect and if he couldn’t change the discourse.” Sounding multiple notes, Michelle stated that “the only thing I’m telling people in Illinois is that Barack is not our savior. I want to tell it to the whole country, and I will if I get the opportunity.” She added that “Barack can’t do a thing if Bush is in office,” but that if the Democrats won the presidency, and “Barack gets in under Kerry, the possibilities are endless.”

On CNN, Barack praised Michelle as “tougher” than him. “I love to write,” he told host Carlos Watson. “I love fiction. I love to read fiction, but I’m not sure I have enough talent to write fiction,” and he attributed Dreams’ phoenixlike rebirth to “luck, happenstance, God’s blessings.” Barack said, “I think there’s a direct line between Harold Washington, to Carol Moseley Braun, to myself,” emphasizing that “I stand on the shoulders of Harold Washington. I got the Ivy League degrees because somebody in Selma, Alabama, or Birmingham was willing to make enormous sacrifices.”

In Kenya, a New York Times correspondent visited the “rising star’s” relatives in Nyang’oma, and with just ten days to go before the November 2 election, a Tribune poll showed Barack leading Keyes 66 to 19 percent. Among Republicans, 32 percent said they would vote for Barack, and among African Americans only 3 percent favored Keyes. Given such an overwhelming lead, Barack spent that Sunday speaking first in Orangeburg, South Carolina, and then stoking Democratic GOTV efforts in Daytona Beach, Florida, one of the most tightly contested states in John Kerry’s close race against George Bush.<sup>90</sup>

WTTW’s assertive Phil Ponce moderated the third and final debate between Barack and Keyes on Tuesday evening, October 26. Whenever Barack spoke, Keyes exhibited a smirky smile that many viewers might have found inappropriate. Ponce put Barack on the defensive by asking if as a public official, his children would attend public school. Barack responded by saying they attended the Lab School at the U of C, “where I teach, and my wife works, and we get a good deal for it,” which was witty enough to draw laughter from the studio audience. “We’re gonna choose the best possible education for our children,” Barack replied. Asked about gay equality, Barack said, “we have an obligation to make sure that gays and lesbians have the rights of citizenship,” the “same set of basic rights.” On an easier note, Ponce asked Barack where his family would live after his election. “We haven’t decided yet,” Barack replied. “My priority is gonna be making sure I’ve got as much time as possible with my wife and children,” and he lauded Michelle as “an extraordinary wife who carries more than her load.”

After a brief postdebate press conference, Barack appeared on Fox News’s Hannity & Colmes with Sean Hannity, who introduced him as “the new rock star of the Democratic Party.” Barack said, “we can disagree without being disagreeable,” and declared that “the most important thing that we have to do in improving our politics is not assuming bad faith on the part of other people.” With opponents of legal abortion, for example, “I don’t assume that they’re automatically trying to oppress women.” The next day, in an implicit reflection of just how uncompetitive the Senate race was, Barack spoke at two Naperville high schools, where the proportion of eligible voters among his listeners was very modest. A St. Louis Post-Dispatch poll showed a lead of 67 to 25 percent, and on the final Friday before election day, Barack enjoyed a leisurely lunch with Chicago mayor Richard Daley at Manny’s Deli on the Near South Side, David Axelrod’s favorite eatery.

Barack campaigned for real on Saturday and Sunday before returning home to join his daughters for Halloween trick-or-treating in Hyde Park. Meanwhile, Alan Keyes had declared that any Roman Catholic voting for Barack would be committing “a mortal sin.” Barack responded, “I think everyone is accustomed now to Mr. Keyes’s histrionics, and I don’t think it is going to have much of an impact on this election.” On Monday, Barack headed downstate for a Springfield rally at state AFL-CIO headquarters and another stop in Madison County’s Granite City before returning home. On election morning, the whole family was up early, with Barack and Michelle arriving to vote at 7:58 A.M. at Hyde Park’s Catholic Theological Union, two blocks west of their home. Then all eyes turned toward that evening’s victory celebration at the downtown Hyatt Regency Chicago.<sup>91</sup>

Close to two thousand people, including 167 journalists, filled the Hyatt’s Grand Ballroom once Illinois’s polls closed at 7:00 P.M. Only the precise extent of Barack’s victory was in question, and as results came in, it was clear that Barack’s landslide win reached from Chicago’s suburbs to all but a few small, heavily Republican downstate counties. In Chicago, Barack received 88 percent of the vote, winning at least 75 percent in all fifty wards. In nearby Will County, Barack’s huge ninety-thousand-vote margin helped Senate colleague Larry Walsh win a “stunning upset” in his race for county executive. Across downstate, Barack carried 61 percent of the vote, with Keyes winning only ten of Illinois’s 102 counties. In the final statewide tally, Barack trounced Keyes by a margin of 3,597,456 to 1,390,690, or 70 to 27 percent, with two minor candidates receiving the balance. It was, unsurprisingly, the most overwhelming U.S. Senate victory in Illinois history.

At the Hyatt Regency, an exasperated Robert Gibbs received a series of apologetic phone calls from Keyes aide Dan Proft, who was trying without success to persuade his candidate to call Barack and concede defeat. Keyes never called. “I’m supposed to make a call that represents the congratulations toward that which I believe ultimately stands for and will stand for a culture evil enough to destroy the very soul and heart of my country?” Keyes told a Christian radio station. “I can’t do this. And I will not make a false gesture.”

Realizing there was no point in waiting for Keyes to concede, Barack appeared onstage at the Hyatt to thank “the best political staff that has been put together in this state.” Singling out only “my pastor Jeremiah A. Wright Jr. of Trinity United Church of Christ” for thanks by name, Barack “most of all” thanked his family members who had joined him onstage, including sister Maya and brother-in-law Craig Robinson. In remarks that the suburban Daily Herald called “eloquent,” Barack made no reference to his defeated opponent, but he did praise retiring senator Peter Fitzgerald for serving “ably and with integrity.”

It had been a long and grueling campaign since Barack had formally announced his candidacy in a far smaller room at the Hotel Allegro twenty-one months earlier, on January 21, 2003—so grueling that Barack got the math wrong, saying that was “656 days ago,” when actually it was 650. “This is really just the end of the beginning,” Barack stressed, emphasizing that “in the ultimate equation we will not be measured by the margin of our victory” but by “whether we are able to deliver concrete improvements to the lives of so many” Illinoisans who were struggling. Barack’s answer to that challenge was the same slogan he had trumpeted in his first television ad: “Yes we can!”

Barack’s 70 percent landslide certainly lived up to journalists’ expectations, but across the rest of the United States, election night results were not what he had hoped for. In South Dakota, Senate Democratic leader Tom Daschle lost his seat to Republican John Thune by forty-five hundred votes. Five other previously Democratic seats also went to Republicans, and with Colorado’s Ken Salazar representing the only other Democratic pickup, Republican control of the Senate jumped from 51–49 to a healthy 55–45. Even more crucially, only well after midnight did it become clear that President George W. Bush had narrowly carried Ohio, thereby defeating John Kerry, who formally conceded the race at 11:00 A.M. Wednesday.

By then Barack, after only two hours’ sleep, had already appeared on all three networks’ morning news shows. Accepting congratulations, he told Today Show host Matt Lauer that as a politician “the most difficult thing is dealing with the lack of time for my family.” A bit later, Barack told broadcaster Tavis Smiley that “I am taking my wife out on a date this weekend, and I’m going to take the kids to the park.” Gently rebuffing Smiley’s suggestion that as the only African American senator, he would be representing black America, Barack stressed that “my first obligation is to my family, my second obligation is to the people of Illinois.” Once “I get more experience,” Barack added, “then hopefully I can also be an important voice at the national level.” Citing the efforts he had made on behalf of Democratic Senate candidates nationwide, Barack believed he would be “getting some good committee assignments,” but Democrats’ failure to capture the presidency showed that “we haven’t perfected a language that describes our values as effectively as the Republicans have.”

President Bush called Barack to congratulate him on his election, and Barack thanked him, saying, “I’m not rooting for your failure. I’m rooting for your success” in Iraq and elsewhere. The president said he was eager to collaborate on tax reform, and Barack assured him, “I hope we can find common ground.”

On Wednesday afternoon Barack met with reporters at his campaign office. “I want to be seen as a workhorse and not a show horse,” Barack told them, because “ultimately what is most important is your ability to shape the world around you.” He became “slightly testy” when Lynn Sweet of the Chicago Sun-

Times pestered him repeatedly about his presidential possibilities. “It’s a silly question,” Barack insisted. “I’m a state Senator. I was elected yesterday. I have never set foot in the U.S. Senate. I have never worked in Washington. And the notion that somehow I am going to start running for higher office, it just doesn’t make sense.” When Sweet persisted, Barack declared, “I can unequivocally say I will not be running for national office in four years, and my entire focus is making sure that I’m the best possible Senator on behalf of the people of Illinois.” For Sweet’s benefit, Barack repeated his insistence three times. “I am not running for president. I am not running for president in four years. I am not running for president in 2008.”<sup>92</sup>

---

DISAPPOINTMENT AND DESTINY

---

THE U.S. SENATE

NOVEMBER 2004–FEBRUARY 2007

On Thursday, November 4, less than forty-eight hours after his election victory, Barack resigned his Illinois Senate seat, ended his affiliation with Miner, Barnhill & Galland, and went on indefinite leave from the U of C Law School. He also formally retained prominent Washington lawyer Robert Barnett as his new literary representative, ending his fourteen-year relationship with Jane Dystel. Weeks earlier, Dystel had secured a two-book contract for Barack, one of which would lay out “What I Believe,” but Washington attorney Vernon E. Jordan had told Barack to consider Barnett prior to signing. Eleven years earlier, Dystel had all but saved Barack’s life when she succeeded in reselling “Journeys in Black and White” following Poseidon’s cancellation of his initial contract, but Barnett was Washington’s superagent for political stars, charging an hourly rate for his services rather than taking a traditional 10 or 15 percent agency commission on a contract’s total value.

On Saturday, the Democratic ward committeemen from the 13th Senatorial District met to elect Barack’s successor. Barack’s young protégé Will Burns, now back on Senate staff, was one of several highly qualified applicants, and Barack and Senate president Emil Jones Jr. both supported his candidacy. Fourth and Fifth Ward aldermen Toni Preckwinkle and Leslie Hairston effectively controlled the choice, and neither felt that Barack or Jones had gone out of their way to be helpful to their wards. Forty-year-old attorney Kwame Raoul, a Haitian American Hyde Park native and Trinity UCC member who had twice challenged Preckwinkle and possessed a $60,000 campaign bankroll, was Burns’s top competitor. “I was Barack’s guy,” Will recalled, but Barack did not press Preckwinkle or Hairston to select Burns. “Barack stayed out of the competition,” Kwame confirmed, and when the committeemen cast their votes, Raoul was their almost unanimous choice. Barack’s disinterest infuriated Burns’s closest friends, and when Kwame called Barack on his cell phone a few hours later to ask his advice, Barack semiseriously responded, “Stay out of jail!” Barack added that Raoul should be very careful about who worked in his district office, but then quickly said he was at a theater and ended the call by saying, “Hey, man, this is family time. I have to see a movie with my daughters, so I have to let you go.” Many in the audience applauded when they saw Barack with Malia and Sasha.

Jennifer Mason handled the district office transition to Kwame. Within days she and Cynthia Miller discarded all of Barack’s old files, but on Tuesday, Barack returned to Springfield for several send-off events with his ex-colleagues. Emil Jones introduced a resolution congratulating Barack, saying that his DNC speech represented “my proudest moment in politics.” Then Barack took the podium, acknowledging that it was “a bittersweet moment” and saying “I have to give special credit to President Jones for his friendship and support, because if it weren’t for him, I don’t think I would be standing here today.”

Those in the know throughout the statehouse and all of Illinois politics unanimously concurred. “Emil was more instrumental in him winning that U.S. Senate race than anybody,” lobbyist and poker buddy Mike Lieteau stressed. Chicago civic powerhouse Eden Martin said, “I think Emil played a much bigger role in his career than anybody knows.” Dan Shomon emphasized that Emil “was critical,” and even top donors acknowledged that Jones was “actually the most critical person to Barack’s success.” Barack happily acknowledged that Emil was his “political godfather,” but on the floor of the state Senate, even Republican leader Frank Watson warmly wished Barack “good luck” while humorously adding that “if you need any humility, you know where you can find it, right back here.” After an evening reception, his closest Springfield friends held a special poker game to drive home Watson’s point. “We brought him down to earth real quick,” explained Terry Link, describing how they worked together so that Barack lost every hand. By night’s end he had “lost everything he had,” Mike Lieteau remembered, and had to write someone a personal check. “He didn’t throw his cards or take a swing at anybody, but he wasn’t a happy person,” Terry recalled.

Barack told reporters that the Senate committees he was most interested in were Finance, Foreign Relations, and Agriculture, and senior Illinois senator Dick Durbin stressed that Barack had “really helped himself immeasurably” with his out-of-state fund-raising work. “He’s contributed to every single Senate candidate, and that goes a long way. People really appreciate it.” Barack had already called Republican Foreign Relations Committee chairman Richard Lugar to express interest, and old Harvard Law School friend Cassandra Butts took charge of setting up Barack’s Capitol Hill office while other former classmates warned him against taking a seat on the often-contentious Judiciary Committee. Postponing for the moment any decision about whether the whole family would move to Washington, Barack said he would commute back and forth from Chicago at least until the end of the school year.<sup>1</sup>

On Sunday morning, November 7, Barack appeared on both ABC’s This Week and NBC’s Meet the Press. Saying that “George Bush and I shared a million voters” across Illinois, Barack called for people to “disagree without being disagreeable.” Asked if he would serve his full six-year Senate term, Barack answered, “Absolutely . . . I expect to be in the Senate for quite some time.” Barack devoted the next week to a five-day “Thank You, Illinois” tour, holding town hall meetings in Peoria, Moline, Belleville, and other cities. In Peoria, Barack met with Republican congressman Ray LaHood to talk about “how we would work together for Illinois.” In Moline, Quad-City Times reporter Ed Tibbetts listened as one man told another, “You better get his autograph. He may be president one day.” A woman interjected, “He will be president someday.” In Belleville Barack declared, “it’s irresponsible to add more debt onto future generations,” while in Bloomington, the Pantagraph advised him to “stay humble” and “don’t forget you were sent to Washington, D.C. to represent Illinois.” Time magazine ran an eight-page Obama profile that described him as “charismatic” and “meticulously self-aware.” George Galland from Miner Barnhill said, “There aren’t many blindingly talented people, and most of them are pains in the ass. Barack is the whole package.” Former Virginia governor Doug Wilder said, “Obama could be president. There’s nothing to stop him.”

Later on Sunday, Barack flew to Washington for the Senate’s four-day orientation for new senators. A temporary basement office with two desks and two telephones was an inauspicious start for a U.S. senator, and Barack told one reporter he and Michelle had “a lot of big decisions to make on how to protect our kids and keep our marriage strong.” On a more mundane level, Barack also had to decide how to allocate the significant staff budget he would have once he was officially sworn into office on January 4, 2005. “I’m tapping into friends and colleagues who have worked in Washington before to give me some sense of how to shape the office.” Most important was Cassandra Butts’s outreach to Pete Rouse, Tom Daschle’s longtime chief of staff. “I had thirty years in the federal retirement system, so I figured this was a time to go,” Rouse explained, but Cassandra had other plans, and asked Pete to meet her and Barack one evening in the Mandarin Oriental Hotel restaurant, southwest of the Capitol.

“We talked for the first hour about how he should approach getting organized and getting established and getting set up,” Rouse recalled. Then Barack asked “would I be interested in being his chief of staff.” Pete first said no, but Barack and Cassandra persisted. “It was very much us selling Pete on why he’d want to work for a freshman senator who was like ninety-ninth in seniority,” Cassandra remembered. Barack explained how invaluable Pete could be. “I know what I’m good at. I know what I’m not good at. I know what I know, and I know what I don’t know,” Barack told Pete. “I can give a good speech. . . . I know policy. I know retail politics in Illinois. I don’t have any idea what it’s like to come into the Senate and get established in the Senate. . . . I want to get established and work with my colleagues and develop a reputation as a good senator.” Also, “I don’t know how to build a large staff and negotiate the potential pitfalls of being a relatively high-profile newcomer to the Senate. I have no intention of running for president in 2008.” Barack stressed, “I don’t want to be a black senator, I want to be a senator who happens to be black.” Given Pete’s unique level of respect within the Senate, Barack wanted him “to partner with me to make sure I get off on the right foot.” As Rouse warmed toward Barack’s request, Barack told Pete he wanted to hire a staff that was diverse in multiple ways, and would leave most of the D.C. hiring decisions to him. “It was really important to bring Pete on board,” Cassandra explained, because with Rouse as chief of staff, it all but eliminated Barack’s learning curve as a newcomer to Capitol Hill. Pete “knew the Senate. He knew what it took to be a good senator,” especially how representing one’s home state well was crucial to building a great reputation.

To oversee what would be multiple offices across Illinois, Barack asked first Paul Williams and then Ray Harris to take charge, but both turned him down. “Barack, this only makes sense to me if you’re going to be president in the next few years,” Paul responded, and Barack said that would not be so. Before flying back to Chicago to take his daughters to the circus, Barack met with Peter Fitzgerald and joined him for lunch in the Senate Dining Room. Fitzgerald had given up his seat by choice, and he told Barack about “all the downsides of life in the Senate.” Barack asked, “‘Do you ever have time to think?’ and I said ‘No,’” whereas in Springfield, “in the state Senate, you did have time to think.”<sup>2</sup>

Barack stressed to journalists that “I don’t intend to be a major spokesman for the Democrats,” but a two-day visit to Manhattan to help promote Dreams From My Father’s paperback sales turned into a media blitz. Speaking on WNYC’s Leonard Lopate Show, Barack noted, “I’ve got to set up a good constituent service office” for Illinoisans and said that New York senator “Hillary Clinton has been a terrific model for me.” On CBS’s The Early Show, host Hannah Storm told Barack, “you are such a big star. Everyone’s calling you the future, the savior of the Democratic Party,” and said that “you’ve been compared to everyone from Tiger Woods to Abe Lincoln.” Barack told Charlie Rose, “I was surprised by the degree to which” his DNC speech had resonated but admitted having “what my wife considers probably too strong a sense of self-esteem.” On The Late Show, Barack joked to host David Letterman that “the main reason my wife married me was I still had family in Hawaii,” but in a subsequent radio interview Barack said, “I’ve been broke for the last ten years.” Billionaire investor Warren Buffett invited Barack to have lunch with him and his daughter Susan, and Barack chartered a private jet to fly from Chicago to Omaha for the luncheon and then back.

In Washington the next weekend, Barack joined Massachusetts governor Mitt Romney as one of the two keynote speakers for the exclusive Gridiron Club's humorous winter dinner. Barack joked that his 70 percent statewide victory had included "102 percent in Chicago," and offered an update on his DNC speech. "Since the election, that gay couple I knew in the red states? They've moved back to the blue states." A low-key announcement indicated that Barack's committee assignment hopes had been met only in part: Foreign Relations and Environment and Public Works were his two major ones, with Veterans Affairs as a third. But the media and Gridiron hoopla produced some pushback, with congressional prognosticator Stuart Rothenberg writing in Roll Call that he was "a bit tired of the fawning" over Barack. Noting that "I've even heard his name floated as a potential Democratic presidential nominee in 2008," Rothenberg exclaimed, "C'mon, let's get real. It's silly to be talking about him as a national figure—or for higher office—at this point."

A few days later, Barack and his family flew to Honolulu for a three-week vacation. Madelyn Dunham was hospitalized but was soon released, and a week passed before Barack made the first of two public appearances, addressing an enthusiastic crowd of 850 at a $100-per-person Democratic fund-raiser in Waikiki following a tearful introduction by his father's old friend U.S. representative Neil Abercrombie. Barack autographed scores of copies of Dreams From My Father, telling reporters, "this is a place where I always replenish my spirits." The next day he spoke to four hundred students at Punahou, telling them to "dream big" and recalling his eighth-grade ethics class. At much the same time, Crown Publishers in New York issued a press release announcing that Barack was well on his way to becoming a millionaire. The new paperback of Dreams had more than three hundred thousand copies in print, and Crown had now signed Barack to a new contract that would pay him $850,000 apiece for two future books, the first of which would appear in 2006. The proceeds of a third volume, for children, would go to charity.

On Christmas Day, Michelle and Maya Soetoro-Ng cooked breakfast for all the family members at Madelyn's tenth-floor apartment at 1617 South Beretania Street, where Barack had lived throughout high school. Following their annual game of Scrabble, everyone except Madelyn then went to the beach, followed by dinner at a nice restaurant. All the downtime allowed Barack and Michelle to discuss the challenges that lay ahead, particularly whether the family should remain in Chicago once the school year ended or move to Washington. The new January issue of Vanity Fair had a two-page photo spread featuring Barack and Michelle, and on the Monday after Christmas, Barack graced the cover of Newsweek. Michelle told reporter Jonathan Alter that Barack "is not a politician first and foremost. He's a community activist exploring the viability of politics to make change." Michelle also said she believed her husband had no hidden skeletons. "We've been married thirteen years, and I'd be shocked if there was some deep, dark secret." Barack declared that Democrats need to "reassert in very explicit language that our best ideas rise out of communal values," and dismissed talk of being on the 2008 Democratic ticket. "This speculation is almost comically premature for an incoming senator."<sup>3</sup>

On the day after New Year's, Barack and his family were in Washington preparing for his official swearing in on Tuesday, January 4. Half a dozen Illinois reporters were in town to cover the ceremony, and when Barb Ickes of the Quad-City Times asked Barack to autograph her copy of Dreams From My Father, she reminded him, "You wrote in here that Congress is 'compliant and corrupt.' What if you were right?” Wielding his pen, Barack replied, “I suspect it is.” On Monday morning, he signed a six-month lease on an unfurnished one-bedroom apartment at 300 Massachusetts Avenue NW, a building populated mostly by Georgetown University law students, and asked a staffer to help him buy a mattress. Meeting with thirty journalists in his temporary basement office, Barack said again, “I will not be running for president in 2008.” When one reporter asked him what he thought his place in history was, Barack caviled. “I don’t think I have a place in history yet. I’ve just been elected. I haven’t done anything yet. Making a speech and getting elected isn’t historical. When you start talking about history, that’s measured over decades, over a lifetime of accomplishment.”

Expected at the White House for a meeting between President Bush and the newly elected legislators, Barack’s unfamiliarity with Capitol Hill led him to miss the bus that would take them down Pennsylvania Avenue. “I’ve got to figure out how to get to the White House. Should I be driving on my own? I don’t want Bush to think I’m blowing him off,” he told a staffer before an SUV materialized. Smoking a cigarette en route, Barack arrived just in time. Except for Madelyn Dunham, all of Barack’s family was arriving in Washington for Tuesday’s events, and Monday evening, they all had dinner together. Malik Abon’go and Granny Sarah flew in from Nairobi, Auma from London, and Maya and Konrad from Honolulu. “When you have relatives all over the planet, and you can’t afford to get together on a regular basis, this is an excellent excuse to get them together,” Michelle observed. Representative Jesse Jackson Jr. told the Chicago Tribune that “if we keep faith and keep hope alive, they will be the First Family of the United States,” and Tuesday’s Tribune described Barack as “an almost unprecedented national celebrity,” someone “akin to an African-American version of JFK” and representing “a new Camelot.”

Emil Jones Jr., Jeremiah Wright, and several relatives joined the Obama family for Tuesday’s festivities. At midday Barack took the formal oath of office from Vice President Dick Cheney on the Senate floor. As family and friends then walked across the Capitol grounds to a reception at the Library of Congress, Malia asked her father, “Are you going to try to be president? Shouldn’t you try to be the vice president first?” Taking a far more dyspeptic view was Michelle, who remarked within journalists’ earshot that “Maybe one day he will do something to warrant all this attention.” As Chicago Sun-Times reporter Lynn Sweet wrote that evening, “on Google, enter ‘Barack Obama’ and ‘rising star’ and out will pop about 15,500 entries.”

Before heading back to Chicago, Barack and Michelle looked at several homes for sale in the posh Maryland suburb of Chevy Chase and spoke with a school principal or two, but Michelle was strongly inclined to stay in Hyde Park rather than move to Washington. Her mother Marian, still living in nearby South Shore, enjoyed helping out with Malia and Sasha, and both girls were doing well at the U of C Lab School. Barack, who initially had wanted his family to join him in D.C. in the summer, now agreed. “This is a healthier environment to raise kids in,” he explained. “Everybody in the neighborhood knows us, and they knew us before, and they knew the girls before, and they’re not going to start acting different with them.”<sup>4</sup>

With $330,000 soon coming in royalties from Dreams’ republication, the Obamas could afford to move from their East View condominium to a larger family home. Along with Miriam Zeltzman, the real estate agent who had sold them the condo twelve years earlier, Michelle looked at almost a dozen houses that were for sale in Hyde Park and in neighboring Kenwood. Narrowing that group to four, she asked Barack to look at them, including her favorite, a grand house at 5046 South Greenwood Avenue whose asking price, $1.95 million, “was above what we’d originally intended to pay,” Barack recalled. “So I went with Miriam to take a look at the house. It was a wonderful house.”

Originally built in 1910, 5046 South Greenwood had once been the home of the founder of Chess Records, the legendary blues label. By the late 1990s, when former hospital executive F. Scott Winslow bought it, the huge home was in “terrible, unlivable disrepair,” its third floor full of old vinyl records and the autographed master discs used to produce them. Winslow oversaw a painstaking, yearlong, $1 million restoration, subdivided the large property into two separate lots, and late in 1999 put the 6,199-square-foot house on the market for $1.8 million. “The restored mansion,” the Chicago Tribune reported, “has six bedrooms, a 28-foot-long glass conservatory, three fireplaces, a formal library with built-in Honduran mahogany glass-door bookcases, double red oak pocket doors, a 30-foot-by-40-foot entertainment loft with a 15-foot-high cathedral ceiling and several large stained glass windows.” It also featured “brand new windows, a whole-house stereo and video system . . . oak floors, a 600-bottle wine and cigar cellar, a new four-car garage with an indoor, half-court basketball court and an 800-square-foot roof deck.” On the new southerly lot, which buffered the big home from busy 51st Street, a second house could eventually be built.

In the summer of 2000, Fredric Wondisford and Sally Radovick, two Harvard endocrinologists who were joining the U of C’s medical faculty, purchased both properties, paying $1,650,000 for the mansion and $621,000 for the adjoining lot. By January 2005, Wondisford and Radovick had accepted new appointments at Johns Hopkins University, beginning in the fall, and put both up for sale, at $1.95 million and $625,000, specifying simultaneous closings in June. Listing agent Donna Schwan Jackson was well acquainted with Tony Rezko, who maintained an apartment just across 51st Street at 5109 South Ellis, and Barack asked Tony to join him and Zeltzman on a second tour of the home. “He thought it was a good house,” Barack recalled, and Rezko asked about the adjoining lot, which Barack said was not worth its $625,000 asking price to him and Michelle. Tony said he might be interested in acquiring it, and Barack replied, “That would be fine.” As Barack later explained, “my basic view at that time was having somebody who I knew, a friend of mine, who would be developing the lot if he could, would be great. It would be somebody who we know.”

“We were eager to make a purchase, make a decision,” and with Miriam Zeltzman believing that the $1.95 million asking price was too high, Barack and Michelle on January 15 made an initial lowball offer of $1.3 million, agreeing to a delayed June closing. Rezko wanted to involve another close friend’s wife, Patti Blagojevich, a part-time real estate agent, in the transaction, her husband Rod remembered. “Rezko was talking to Patti about a property, a friend of his, who was buying a house in Hyde Park,” and “actually almost had Patti do the real estate deal for Obama’s house,” but was unable to interject her into the sale. The sellers responded to Barack and Michelle’s initial offer with a counteroffer, and on January 21, the Obamas increased their bid to $1.5 million. The sellers immediately replied, and on January 23, the Obamas again increased their offer, this time to $1.65 million, the same price Wondisford and Radovick had paid five years earlier. The sellers accepted, and soon after they accepted a list-price offer of $625,000 for the adjoining lot from Rita Rezko, Tony’s wife. Neither Barack nor the sellers knew how deeply troubled Rezko’s finances were, with GE Commercial Finance Corporation having obtained an unreported $3.5 million judgment against him just two months earlier. The $1.65 million price was significantly more than the Obamas had intended to pay, but Michelle’s enthusiasm for 5046 South

Greenwood carried the day. After the previous eight years, and especially the past two, “Barack felt he owed Michelle the home,” David Axelrod explained.<sup>5</sup>

With Senate business getting off to a slow start, Barack spent much of January in Illinois. Opening a Springfield office, Barack also visited the state capitol, telling House members that “the Democrats are better-looking here than they are in Washington. The Republicans are tougher here than they are in Washington.” At a town hall meeting in Lockport, Barack received a greeting “usually reserved for movie and rock stars,” the Tribune reported, and a Daily Herald journalist who watched a second one in Waukegan wrote that the “sharp, engaging and often witty” yet “humble” senator “hasn’t lost any of the charisma and energy he exuded” during the 2004 campaign. Returning to Washington for his first Senate hearing, Barack said “how grateful I am” to join the Foreign Relations Committee given its “wonderful reputation for bipartisanship.”

In Chicago, Oprah Winfrey took a camera crew to East View to spend a day with the Obamas. When the show was broadcast, Winfrey introduced Barack as “a man for our time” and “our electrifying new senator” who “is fast becoming America’s favorite son.” Oprah told Barack that his DNC speech had “felt monumental and momentous to me,” but Barack was self-deprecating, worrying “if you don’t have people around you who can remind you that actually ‘What you just said makes no sense,’ and fortunately I have my wife to do that continually.” Michelle joined in, telling Winfrey, “Barack is absolutely the messiest person in the household,” and reminding him, “You had dirty clothes on top of the basket this morning. And I’m just like, ‘There’s a basket with a lid. Lift it up, put it in.’” Michelle reminisced that “Friday night was always date night,” but “we’re too tired now to do a dinner and a movie, so it’s usually just dinner.” Barack agreed. “Yeah. We’re getting too old to do both.”

The next day Tribune columnist Eric Zorn, the lead voice in the takedowns of Blair Hull and Jack Ryan, published a piece predicting that “Obama Will Run for President” in 2008 and would win. Dismissing Hillary Clinton as “a poisonously polarizing figure who will build a bridge back to the 20th century and those dreadful Clinton Wars,” Zorn noted that “among average Democrats, Obama’s is the only name that doesn’t tend to provoke either a yawn, a puzzled look or an anguished cry of ‘Please, God, not again!’” On the Republican side, “John McCain’s time will have passed.” While Barack’s communications director Robert Gibbs “denied again Wednesday that Obama will run in 2008,” Zorn told readers, “Don’t you believe it.”

After holding additional town hall meetings at VFW posts in Evergreen Park and Springfield, Barack was soon back in Washington, where he used his seat on the Veterans Affairs Committee to grill a Bush administration nominee about a seeming disparity in how much funding Illinois veterans were receiving. When the nomination of Condoleezza Rice for secretary of state came to the Senate floor, Barack joined thirty-two other Democrats in voting to confirm her. Thirteen Democrats, including California’s outspoken Barbara Boxer, Illinois’s Dick Durbin, and Massachusetts’s Ted Kennedy and John Kerry, voted against Rice. When progressive Illinois representative Jan Schakowsky asked Barack about his vote, citing Rice’s role in instigating the war in Iraq, Barack explained, “I want to be able to cross party lines. . . . I don’t want to just be a Barbara Boxer.”<sup>6</sup>

In late January, Barack launched his own individual PAC, Hopefund, as a vehicle for political fundraising and contributing to other Democrats’ campaigns. Former Senate campaign fund-raisers Jenny Yeager and Jordan Kaplan, plus staffers Nate Tamarin and Tarak Shah, came on board, with Valerie Jarrett serving as the PAC's treasurer. On February 1 Barack had a long private conversation about life as a famous yet junior U.S. senator with New York's Hillary Rodham Clinton, and two days later Barack joined Clinton and thirty-four other Democrats in voting against the nomination of Alberto Gonzales to be U.S. attorney general. "If we are willing to rationalize torture through legalisms and semantics," no longer would the U.S. represent "a higher moral standard" in the world. The next week Barack was one of nineteen Democrats joining unanimous Senate Republicans in approving President Bush's Class Action Fairness Act by a 72–26 margin.

In Barack's Senate office, chief of staff Pete Rouse sketched out a "Strategic Plan" for Barack's first year as a U.S. senator. The top priority "was demonstrating that he was serious about being a senator for Illinois and delivering for Illinois." Most weeks Barack flew back to Chicago on Thursday afternoons to hold regular town hall meetings across the state while also spending at least Sundays at home with his family. At one session in Naperville, Republican state senator Kirk Dillard introduced Barack, telling the crowd that working with him in Springfield had been "one of the highlights of my life."

Rouse and Barack were in firm agreement that he should modulate his national profile by limiting his national speechmaking and declining interviews to appear on television talk shows. Rouse's second focus was for Barack "to fit into the Senate and to . . . show that he was a team player, that he was not a headline hunter, that he deserved better committee assignments, that he could help the leadership." Barack "was very aware of the importance of being a team player and not raising people's hackles." As Barack told his aides, "I think it's important to take it slow. I want to be liked." Only a year or more in would Barack begin to seek a national stage, but in reviewing Rouse's game plan with other aides, Barack complained that his busy weekly schedule already allowed him insufficient time to study the major issues coming before the Senate.

Barack's newfound wealth led him to dip a toe into the stock market, with wealthy black investor George W. Haywood recommending a broker who purchased about $90,000 worth of stock in SkyTerra Communications and about $10,000 in AVI BioPharma for Barack. Haywood and his wife Cheryl were major investors in both firms, as were two other men, John J. Gorman of Texas and Jared Abbruzzese of New York, both of whom had contributed generously to Barack's 2004 Senate race. In Chicago, it took Barack and Michelle less than two weeks to obtain an attractive rate commitment from Northern Trust for the 80 percent, $1.32 million mortgage their purchase of 5046 South Greenwood would require, but Tribune stories busily detailed how Barack's friend Tony Rezko was the beneficiary of insider dealings that had led the Illinois Tollway to award its fast-food franchises to two chains closely linked to Tony and his friend Chris Kelly, Rod Blagojevich's top fund-raiser.<sup>7</sup>

Barack made a special exception to his low-national-profile stance to fly to Atlanta to address a $500-per-person sixty-fifth-birthday fund-raiser for Congressman John Lewis, but Barack's next three speaking appearances were at town hall meetings in Columbus, Rock Island, and Bloomington, Illinois. A Washington Post Style Section profile of the "rising star" proclaimed that Barack's "signature quality is the ease with which he inhabits his charisma," but it was senior senator Ted Kennedy's comment in the story—"He seems to be keeping his head down and doing everything right"—that most pleased Pete Rouse and Barack's other aides, who now finally moved into his permanent offices on the top floor of the Hart Senate Office Building. Further good news came when U of C Hospitals' president Michael Riordan promoted Michelle to a new post as one of seventeen vice presidents. With Michelle now ready to resume full-time work, and her mother Marian reducing her work hours to pick Malia and Sasha up from school each weekday, the promotion promised to raise Michelle's annual salary from $120,000 to upward of $300,000.

In mid-March a further deluge of critical news coverage hit Tony Rezko. The Tribune revealed that Tony operated two O'Hare Airport fast-food outlets that a minority-set-aside program had awarded to Rezko's longtime business partner Jabir Herbert Muhammad, the seventy-six-year-old son of Nation of Islam founder Elijah Muhammad. Those outlets had grossed $15.7 million from 1999 through 2002, but as the Chicago Sun-Times underscored, the city ordinance governing the set-aside program "requires that a minority not just own, but actually control and operate the business day-to-day." Tony's close relationship to Cook County Board president John Stroger and his championing of his large extended family were both reflected by the presence of "six Rezkos on Cook County payrolls." Tony and Muhammad also owned another minority-set-aside firm that operated one thousand pay phones controlled by Cook County, but the Tribune discovered that Deloris Wade, its supposed African American chief executive, had actually died fourteen months earlier.<sup>8</sup>

In a long Tribune profile, Barack told reporter Jeff Zeleny that in the Senate, "I feel very humble about what I don't know" and said that his voting record "won't be as easy to categorize as many people expect." Barack expressed open ambivalence, saying that "it's more fun being a governor or president" because in the Senate "one of the difficulties is that you're constantly confronted with these votes that may not reflect your views." At the end of March, Barack conducted a three-day statewide tour of college campuses to promote his first bill, the Higher Education Opportunity Through Pell Grant Expansion or "HOPE" Act. Highlighting how "college tuition is rising at a stunning rate of almost 10 percent a year," the bill would increase need-based Pell Grants from a maximum of $4,050 a year to $5,100, a figure President Bush had embraced five years earlier. At SIU Edwardsville students "mobbed" Barack, "asking him for autographs," and when his Hopefund team used his name to e-mail members of the progressive MoveOn.org network seeking donations to conservative West Virginia Democrat Robert Byrd, the results were astonishing. "In less than 24 hours, more than 15,000 contributors gave $634,000 to Byrd's campaign," a West Virginia newspaper reported.

On April 15, with their modest, pre-royalties 2004 income totaling only $207,000, Barack and Michelle received a $6,200 IRS refund. Four days later Barack joined President Bush and other political luminaries to celebrate the opening of Springfield's Abraham Lincoln Presidential Library and Museum. At a grand dinner the evening before the public ceremony, Barack introduced old friends to Tony Rezko, and in his own remarks the next day, Barack complained that "image all too often trumps substance" while lauding Lincoln as "this man who was the real thing." After hitching a ride back to Washington with President Bush on Air Force One, Barack told a National Press Club audience he already had held nineteen town hall meetings across Illinois and said that "Democrats have to be able to talk about faith and family and community in ways that resonate with the American people but also embrace tolerance and diversity." He warned that "if the Democrats are dismissive or patronizing toward people's genuine concerns about faith, family and community, we will lose."

Introducing his second and third bills, Barack demonstrated his desire to address important issues that had not received widespread attention. The E-85 Fuel Utilization and Infrastructure Development Incentives Act aimed to increase the small number of gas stations available for flexible fuel vehicles, and the Attacking Viral Influenza Across Nations (AVIAN) Act sought to prevent an avian flu pandemic. Sitting down with WTTW's Phil Ponce in Chicago, Barack explained that he was receiving "about three hundred invitations a week" but was rigorously limiting his speaking appearances outside Illinois. "Most of the time that I'm spending right now is on policy," he explained, and asked about the 2008 presidential race, Barack replied, "I've ruled that out."<sup>9</sup>

In the Chicago Tribune and Chicago Sun-Times, Tony Rezko was receiving far more coverage than Barack. Governor Rod Blagojevich's estranged father-in-law, 33rd Ward alderman Dick Mell, had publicly alleged that the administration was trading state appointments for campaign donations, triggering investigations that led to grand jury subpoenas to gubernatorial fund-raisers like Chris Kelly and Rezko. One top Democratic lawmaker told the Tribune that Tony "seems to have a hand in everything Rod Blagojevich does," and a front-page profile of Rezko noted that he had raised funds for Barack and Cook County Board president John Stroger as well as for the governor. "Tony's the type of guy who is always helping host fundraisers and getting his friends to give you money," Stroger told the Tribune. "But he's real upfront with you, and I've never known him to ask for favors, which is unusual in this business."

Keeping up a busy speaking schedule all across Illinois, Barack expressed shock when he learned at a Thornton Township youth summit that south suburban high schools ended classes at 1:30 P.M. Such an abbreviated school day could spur youthful criminality, and Barack warned that a criminal record was often "an economic death sentence" for young adults' job prospects. At Knox College's commencement in Galesburg, Barack told graduates that "focusing your life solely on making a buck shows a poverty of ambition. . . . It's only when you hitch your wagon to something larger than yourself that you will realize your true potential." Recycling some of those remarks at the University of Chicago's Pritzker School of Medicine's commencement, Barack used that setting to bemoan how "the crushing cost of health care in America" as well as the nation's "lack of collective will to ensure that every single American has access to effective, affordable health care" represented "a moral shame," "an economic disaster," and "a national crisis."

Barack and Republican Foreign Relations Committee chairman Richard Lugar coauthored a New York Times op-ed warning of the danger of an avian flu epidemic, and speaking at Jesse Jackson Sr.'s Operation PUSH, Barack decried what he had learned in Thornton Township. "You've got high schools in the south suburbs that are letting children out at 1:30 P.M. because they can't afford to keep them until 3:00 P.M. These young people were saying that they know they are being shortchanged and no one seems to be concerned about them."

When USA Today asked Barack about his life as a freshman senator, he expressed disappointment that "there very rarely is real debate" in the Senate. "Each of us is speaking to an empty floor and to C-SPAN and giving stock speeches." Barack later explained, "I think fairly quickly I realized that it was going to be hard to get things done in the minority. But that wasn't a surprise. That was true when I was in the state legislature." But Washington nonetheless was a disappointment as compared to Springfield. "I was surprised by the slow pace of the Senate. In the state legislature, we could get a hundred bills passed during the course of a session. In the Senate, it was maybe twenty. And that I think made me realize how resistant to change Washington is."

With the Senate badly divided over several conservative appellate court nominees put forward by President Bush, Barack voiced disappointment that "this argument we have been having over the last several weeks about judicial nominations has been an enormous distraction from some of the work that is most important to the American people.” Highlighting that he was “speaking to an empty chamber for the benefit of C-SPAN,” Barack said, “the last thing I would like to be spending my time on right now is talking about judges.” Barack made clear his limited interest in the composition of the federal bench, but he did “express, in the strongest terms, my opposition to the nomination of Janice Rogers Brown,” a California African American whom Barack termed “a political activist who happens to be a judge.” When Barack’s Illinois seatmate Dick Durbin drew Republican criticism for comparing interrogation techniques used upon U.S. detainees at Guantánamo Bay, Cuba, to those employed by the Nazis, Barack rose in support after Durbin returned to the Senate floor to apologize. “We have a tendency, perhaps because we don’t share as much time on the floor as we should, perhaps because our politics seemed to be ginned up by interest groups and blogs and the Internet, we have a tendency to demonize and jump on and make a mockery of each other across the aisle. That is particularly pronounced when we make mistakes.”

In late June, a front-page Tribune story examined Barack’s role as the Senate’s sole African American. “One of the things that I’m trying to be mindful of is not starting to get so comfortable or risk-averse that I end up sounding like everyone else,” Barack told reporter Jeff Zeleny. “One of the scripts for black politicians is that for them to be authentically black they have to somehow offend white people,” which Barack rejected. Zeleny believed that Barack “has purposely refrained from being a leading voice” on racial issues, and “he doesn’t want to be seen as the black conscience of the Senate.” When Zeleny asked Barack whether he believed the United States was ready for a black president, Barack said yes. “I think an African American candidate—if he’s the best candidate—can be president.”<sup>10</sup>

In midsummer Barack rented a new D.C. apartment, this one on the second floor of a town house at Massachusetts Avenue and 6th Street NE. When his Hopefund PAC’s finance report covering the first half of 2005 was released, it showed that more than $851,000 had been raised, of which $406,000 had been spent, leaving a healthy balance of $445,000. About $234,000 in contributions came from within Illinois, and Hopefund had contributed $2,000 toward Dan Hynes’s 2004 Illinois campaign debt plus $10,000 to Virginia gubernatorial candidate Tim Kaine. Barack also gave $4,200 to every Democratic senator who was up for reelection in 2006, including Florida Democrat Bill Nelson. In early July, Barack flew to Orlando to join Nelson at a black Baptist church, and his Senate colleague introduced Barack as “a rock star who carries himself with dignity and humility and is so smart.” Back in Washington before the Senate’s August recess, Barack outspokenly attacked “the misplaced priorities of the Senate leadership” on the floor. Warning that “we are not focusing on the problems that truly matter,” Barack asked “is giving liability protection to gun manufacturers really more important than passing the Department of Defense authorization bill during a time of war?” Barack sounded a similar theme the next day, highlighting “one of the most pressing problems of our time, our dependence on foreign oil” and calling “energy independence” a national priority.

By August, Barack and Michelle had sold their East View condo to jazz musician Kurt Elling for $415,000—a nice return on their $277,500 1993 investment—closed on their $1.6 million purchase of 5046 South Greenwood, and moved to the spaciously luxurious new home. Michelle had further burnished her income by joining the board of TreeHouse Foods, which, along with its parent company, Bay Valley Foods, would pay her $45,000 annually in director’s fees. In mid-August, Barack joined former president

Bill Clinton and other dignitaries in speaking at a lengthy memorial service for longtime Ebony publisher John H. Johnson and then sandwiched two days of downstate town hall meetings around Governor's Day at the Illinois State Fair in Springfield. Most citizens asked about soaring gasoline prices and rising health care costs, but in Champaign a group of antiwar protesters were waiting in the parking lot with signs criticizing Barack's unwillingness to call for an immediate withdrawal of U.S. troops from Iraq. At the forum, Barack's responses left one critic complaining that "he dodged a lot of questions by giving noncommittal answers," but when Barack remarked, "I am not the president—yet," the crowd responded with "loud cheers."

Foreign Relations Committee chairman Richard Lugar had long pursued the decommissioning of obsolete Soviet weapons of mass destruction, annually visiting Soviet bloc sites to monitor progress. Soon after joining the committee, Barack expressed interest in nuclear proliferation challenges, and Lugar readily agreed when Barack asked if he could join the chairman's 2005 ten-day trip. On August 24 their fourteen-member group, including Barack's new foreign policy staffer Mark Lippert and communications director Robert Gibbs, boarded a government DC-9 to fly to Moscow. From there they flew first to Saratov and then on to Perm, where aging nuclear warheads were being destroyed. Russian space agency officials greeted Lugar's party with vodka toasts, but when the time came for them to fly to Ukraine, Russian border guards sought to search the U.S. aircraft.

A standoff ensued, with Lugar, Barack, and their aides, minus their passports, locked in an airport lounge while frantic phone calls bounced between Washington, Moscow, and Perm. Barack napped on a sofa while Lugar remarked to Jeff Zeleny of the Chicago Tribune, the only journalist on the trip, that "it makes you wonder who really is running the country." Diplomatic niceties were restored when the "Rod Blagojevich of Perm," as Barack described the regional governor, took charge, and the U.S. group flew on to Kiev, where the senators toured a "dilapidated building" where bioterror viruses "were locked behind thin padlocks or not at all." From Kiev, they headed to Donetsk, then southward to Baku, Azerbaijan, before making a final stop in London. Lugar and Barack called upon British prime minister Tony Blair at 10 Downing Street and then flew back to Washington.<sup>11</sup>

By the time of their return, Hurricane Katrina had caused what Barack called a "crisis of biblical proportions" along the Gulf Coast, with massive flooding in low-lying areas of New Orleans leading to a disproportionately poor and African American death toll that topped eighteen hundred. On September 5 Barack joined Oprah Winfrey and Jesse Jackson Sr. to travel to Houston, where former presidents George H. W. Bush and Bill Clinton, along with Barack's Senate colleague Hillary Clinton, greeted evacuees who were being housed at the Astrodome. As commentators debated the extent to which the federal government's tardy response to the disaster reflected disinterest in poor communities of color, Barack took to the Senate floor to denounce the "unconscionable ineptitude." He said, "I think the ineptitude was colorblind," and he quickly introduced a trio of bills aimed at helping refugees and those assisting them. Launching a series of podcasts, Barack spoke of "communities that had been abandoned before the hurricane" and called for the country to "close this divide between the wealthy and the poor." Accepting a Sunday TV show invitation for the first time since his swearing-in, Barack told ABC's George Stephanopoulos that the Bush administration's response was "so detached from the realities of inner-city life" that it reflected the government's "historic indifference" toward poor communities that "are disproportionately African American." Federal officials exhibited "a terrific spin operation, but not the kind of soul-searching that I think you'd want to see from any administration, Democrat or Republican."

Barack emphasized to the Tribune's Jeff Zeleny that "it is way too simplistic just to say this administration doesn't care about black people," but "I think it is entirely accurate to say that this administration's policies don't take into account the plight of poor people in poor communities." Visiting Harvard to deliver keynote remarks at the law school's "Celebration of Black Alumni," Barack chided the criticism directed at President Bush. "We haven't displayed the kind of cool, focused outrage that Charles Hamilton Houston displayed" when launching the NAACP's legal campaign against school segregation. "In fact, our anger at Bush and the administration lets us off the hook. It allows us to say, 'Well, I didn't vote for him. I wrote John Kerry a check, so it's not my problem.' But of course it is our problem." Barack's friends joked about how Harvard president Larry Summers twice mispronounced his name as "Bare-ack" when introducing him, but Barack joked too about his colleagues in the U.S. Senate. "There are some folks there who you're wondering, 'How'd you get here?'"

Out of public view, private fund-raisers were a staple of Barack's schedule. A Philadelphia one featuring Barack produced more than $500,000 for Pennsylvania Democratic Senate candidate Bob Casey, and during Barack's Harvard visit, a $1,000-per-person event increased Hopefund's coffers. David Axelrod and his wife Susan were deeply devoted to an epilepsy research organization their daughter Lauren's illness had led them to found, and for the second time since his election to the Senate, Barack headlined a CURE fund-raiser, this one a roast of Chicago congressman Rahm Emanuel, a onetime ballet dancer who had lost part of a finger in a youthful accident. Rahm was "the first to adapt Machiavelli's The Prince for dance," Barack joked. "As you can imagine, there were a lot of kicks below the waist." The loss of much of Emanuel's middle finger "rendered him practically mute," Barack asserted. "Has he ever flashed that little stubby thing at you?"<sup>12</sup>

But Katrina's aftermath remained the foremost national issue, with Barack telling NPR listeners that "most of the effects of race have to do with institutional and structural barriers to opportunity." He explained that "we've got to see this as a twenty-, thirty-, forty-year project," but "the last presidential election" had not included any "conversations about poverty." Just as in his foreign affairs partnership with Indiana Republican Richard Lugar, so too on Katrina Barack partnered with conservative Oklahoma Republican freshman Tom Coburn to introduce a bill requiring careful oversight of federal recovery spending. Barack and Coburn had met during Senate orientation, and "our wives hit it off, and we became friends," Coburn explained. "We both share a philosophy that whatever money is spent by the federal government should be well spent," and Barack struck Coburn as "a very honest and sincere man."

When the Chicago Tribune's Jeff Zeleny asked Barack how work on his forthcoming book was progressing, Barack answered "slowly," saying it would be very different from the still-best-selling Dreams. "It will be less autobiographical and be more focused on public policy and the direction I think the country should be going." Following the September 3 death of Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and President Bush's September 5 nomination of conservative circuit judge John G. Roberts Jr. as Rehnquist's successor, Roberts met privately with Barack and other senators. Impressed with Roberts's sterling credentials and judicial demeanor, Barack was "sorely tempted" to support his confirmation, telling David Axelrod that "If I become president someday, I don't want to see my own, qualified nominees for the Court shot down because of ideology."

Chief of staff Pete Rouse vehemently disagreed, eventually changing Barack's mind. "I will be voting against John Roberts's nomination. I do so with considerable reticence," Barack said on the Senate floor before Roberts was confirmed by a 78–22 margin, with Democrats splitting evenly for and against. "It was a close call," Barack told broadcaster Tavis Smiley, because "I do not think that John Roberts is Antonin Scalia or Clarence Thomas," the two most conservative justices. Yet Barack objected strenuously to "the sort of broad-brush dogmatic attacks" that interest groups launched against Senate Democrats like Vermont's Patrick Leahy who voted to confirm Roberts. In a long essay on the progressive Daily Kos Web site, Barack criticized "vilifying good allies" and said he was "convinced that . . . the strategy driving much of Democratic advocacy, and the tone of much of our rhetoric, is an impediment to creating a workable progressive majority in this country." Most Americans "don't think George Bush is mean-spirited or prejudiced," but they are "aware that his administration is irresponsible and often incompetent." John Roberts was "a conservative judge who is (like it or not) within the mainstream of American jurisprudence, a judge appointed by a conservative president who could have done much worse (and probably, I fear, may do worse with the next nominee)." Attacks on Democrats who supported Roberts "make no sense," because "to the degree that we brook no dissent within the Democratic party, and demand fealty to the one, 'true' progressive vision for the country, we risk the very thoughtfulness and openness to new ideas that are required to move this country forward." Barack warned that "by applying such tests, we are hamstringing our ability to build a majority. We won't be able to transform the country with such a polarized electorate. . . . Whenever we exaggerate or demonize, or oversimplify or overstate our case, we lose. Whenever we dumb down the political debate, we lose. A polarized electorate that is turned off of politics, and easily dismisses both parties because of the nasty, dishonest tone of the debate, works perfectly well for those who seek to chip away at the very idea of government because, in the end, a cynical electorate is a selfish electorate." But Barack was no centrist, because "on issues like health care, energy, education and tackling poverty, I don't think Democrats have been bold enough," and boldness will "require us to admit that some existing programs and policies don't work very well" while also appreciating that "the tone we take matters."

In early October, Barack spoke on the Senate floor in fervent support of an amendment offered by Arizona Republican John McCain to prohibit torture. "Torture is morally reprehensible" and "the use of torture does not enhance our national security," Barack declared. "We must make it absolutely clear . . . that the United States does not and will not condone this practice." In the heavy schedule of often ponderous committee hearings convened by the trio of panels on which he sat, Barack usually exhibited an easygoing manner. While Foreign Relations was far more interesting than Environment and Public Works, Barack also enjoyed a highly active role on Veterans Affairs, partly because of the friendly bipartisan style that chairman Larry Craig, an Idaho Republican, and Hawaii Democrat Danny Akaka, the ranking minority member, jointly cultivated. Bantering with one witness, Barack referred to the self-confident Robert Gibbs in joking that "my communications director would insist that he is the most important person in my office." After Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice refused to give a timeline for U.S. withdrawal from Iraq during a testy Foreign Relations Committee hearing, an unhappy Barack called her responses "entirely unsatisfactory." When Centers for Disease Control and Prevention director Julie Gerberding offered bureaucratic doublespeak when questioned about avian flu preparedness, Barack expressed irritation—"that doesn't make sense to me"—before becoming even more exasperated by Gerberding's obfuscatory answers: "I have to say I'm now confused again."<sup>13</sup>

With Barack's post-Katrina emergence on the national stage drawing no discernible criticism in either Illinois or the Senate, he and Pete Rouse decided that the rigorous self-restraint that had characterized Barack's first eight months in Washington could be relaxed. But with Barack in D.C. no more than three evenings a week, Rouse realized that Barack was not able to "spend a lot of time building relationships" on Capitol Hill and around town. Barack "was off in Chicago most of the time because of his family," and while Barack "could have developed much deeper personal relationships" if he was spending "more time in D.C.," that was difficult "when you're living in Chicago and that's not your natural inclination."

With Michelle, Malia, and Sasha ensconced in the grand mansion on South Greenwood, Barack was "home more now than when he was running" for the U.S. Senate in 2002–2004, Michelle explained. Yet with town hall meetings and other events all over Illinois, Barack remained "a weekend dad. They see him on Sundays and Saturdays. That's been what they know." Michelle recounted that "it's been all of their lives that it's rare to have Dad at home for dinner, to see him in the mornings before you go to school, to have him there when you go to bed at night." Most days she remained a single parent, although now one with more extensive household help and far greater financial resources. When Michelle was in Washington, she refused to stay in Barack's modest apartment on Massachusetts Avenue NE. "When she came, I had to get a hotel room," Barack explained.

But there was no denying that Barack was deeply disappointed by life in the U.S. Senate. Pete Rouse called those feelings "the freshman blues," but David Axelrod remembered Barack musing that perhaps he, just like Peter Fitzgerald, should give up on the Senate after one term and run for governor of Illinois in 2010. Visiting Springfield to speak to the Illinois Press Association, Barack decried the tenor of D.C. "What you have in Washington all too often are a Fox News version of the world and a New York Times version of the world talking past each other," he told the Journal-Register's Bernie Schoenburg. In by far the most revealing of the weekly podcasts he was recording, Barack described life as a U.S. senator to whoever listened in on his Obama.Senate.gov Web site. "Being away from your family" remained "the most difficult" challenge, but in other ways Capitol Hill was a letdown compared to Springfield. "You don't really have genuine debate in the U.S. Senate in the ways that I had become accustomed to" in the statehouse, where "maybe one out of five, one out of ten bills that came up would actually be modified as a consequence of the debates" on the state Senate floor. "People would start asking the sponsor of a bill questions and maybe as a consequence of those questions the sponsor might withdraw the bill or he might promise to amend it." Outcomes could be altered, and "it happened frequently enough to get a sense that . . . people were still listening to the merits" of whatever was being debated. In contrast, "here in Washington that doesn't happen very much," Barack observed. "I've seen a lack of independence on the part of my colleagues . . . on a lot of major issues."<sup>14</sup>

Barack's Hopefund PAC held an all-day "policy workshop" at the Hyatt Regency Chicago to allow over one hundred donors who had given $2,500 or more to interact with Barack. Two days later Barack flew to Omaha for a private fund-raiser hosted by billionaire investor Warren Buffett and his daughter Susie. Buffett had been impressed with Barack ever since watching his 2004 DNC speech and told the Omaha World-Herald, "I'm as enthusiastic about him as I am about anybody in political life." Barack's "very smart and articulate" and "a natural leader." Susie Buffett added that "I want him to be president," and Barack told the Tribune's Jeff Zeleny that "the wonderful thing about Warren Buffett—similar to my relationship with Oprah—it's somebody who doesn't need anything from me."

In late October, Barack traveled to Virginia to campaign for Democratic gubernatorial nominee Tim Kaine, and two weeks later a family vacation in Phoenix enabled him to appear with a Democratic Senate candidate before a large crowd at Arizona State University. An invitation to speak at civil rights heroine Rosa Parks's funeral in Detroit preceded an appearance on the Comedy Channel's Daily Show, where Barack told host Jon Stewart that the most pressing foreign affairs challenge was "how fast can we get our troops home without causing all-out chaos in Iraq."

A Kaiser Family Foundation report decrying the extent of "Sex on TV" occasioned an unusual broadside in which Barack decried "a mass media culture that saturates our airwaves with a steady stream of sex, violence, and materialism. . . . As we're spending more free time immersed in this media culture, the amount of questionable content spilling across our screens is growing by the year." Barack believed that "mass media is contributing to an overall coarsening of our culture," and for children "the content of their viewing is not enriching their minds, but numbing them" by "trivializing the important and desensitizing us to the tragic." Since "mindless violence and macho aggression on television begets the same behavior in our kids," everyone should "start by turning off the TV altogether." Particularly "as parents, we have an obligation to our children to turn off the TV, pick up a book, and read to them more often," as Barack regularly did with his daughters. Yet he wished for a culture "that has a higher calling than simply peddling indecency and materialism for profit."

One search for profit that instead produced a $13,000 loss came to a quick end when Barack sold all of his SkyTerra Communications and AVI BioPharma stock, liquidating the "Freedom Trust" that attorney Bob Bauer had created six months earlier to oversee Barack's holdings. Speaking at a commemoration of Robert F. Kennedy's eightieth birthday, his widow Ethel called Barack "our next president," and two days before Thanksgiving, Barack for the first time since his election formally addressed the Iraq war in a lengthy speech to the Chicago Council on Foreign Relations. Looking back to 2003, "at the very least, the administration shaded, exaggerated and selectively used the intelligence available in order to make the case for invasion." Now "we have to manage our exit in a responsible way," starting with "a limited drawdown of U.S. troops" and adopting "a time-frame" for "a phased withdrawal." At bottom, "we need to say that there will be no bases in Iraq a decade from now."<sup>15</sup>

Two days before Thanksgiving, Barack devoted his eleventh weekly podcast to describing how this would be the first time his family would celebrate the day at their new home rather than at Marian Robinson's. His mother-in-law would still take charge of the turkey, mashed potatoes, string beans, and macaroni and cheese. "I try to sneak off with my brother-in-law to watch the football game," and that evening Barack and his daughters visited old family friend Allison Davis's home, just two blocks northward. Malia did an impromptu demonstration of what she had learned at ballet class, "and poor Barack just started crying," Allison remembered. "'I'm never at home,' and 'They're growing up, and I'm missing out,'" he tearfully complained. When Michelle a few days later consented to a telephone interview with her alma mater's undergraduate newspaper, she brushed aside a question about Barack's next step. "Some day, he may take on a more influential role in politics. For now, our future is our kids."

Following a quick trip to Montgomery, Alabama, to attend a fiftieth-anniversary commemoration of the famous bus boycott, Barack sat down with first the Chicago Tribune's editorial board and then the suburban Daily Herald's. He expressed disquiet about Judge Samuel Alito, President Bush's newest Supreme Court nominee. "There's an amazing consistency in which he is ruling for the more powerful against the less powerful, across the board. And that concerns me. That makes me suspicious.” With the Daily Herald journalists, Barack explained that in early January he would make a brief visit to Baghdad, with additional stops in Doha, Amman, Jerusalem, and Ramallah. Looking back on his first eleven months as a U.S. senator, “I got more done than I expected,” so “I think this year exceeded expectations.” He had held thirty-nine town hall meetings across Illinois, and his vote against Chief Justice John Roberts was clearly his toughest. “I did not want to put my imprimatur on a set of decisions he’ll be making that I think won’t be good for the American people.” Asked what had changed in his life, “I guess the biggest change is that I’m no longer a private person,” because “I can’t go to a restaurant now with my wife or go to a movie without a majority of the people knowing who you are and then a large portion of the people coming up to you. And everybody has cameras now.” Barack admitted that he was still smoking and unable to quit, but he explained that he thought his remarkable popularity was because people “think that I’m not overly calculating.”

In The New Republic, Washington correspondent Ryan Lizza published a piece entitled “Why Barack Obama Should Run for President in 2008.” Obama “is the most promising politician in America, and eventually he is going to run for president.” Asserting that “experience is an overrated asset in presidential politics,” Lizza argued that additional years in the U.S. Senate would not benefit Barack. “Obama must strike while he is hot.” Two days later, Daily Herald columnist Burt Constable, citing his own March 2, 2004, column as the first published item touting Barack as a future presidential candidate, seconded Lizza’s argument. Barack “should be president,” and Constable wished that George W. Bush would “outsource the next three years of presidential duties to Obama.” Asserting that “he’s ready now,” Constable recounted that when someone at the Herald had cited the downside of accumulating a lengthier Senate voting record prior to a presidential run, Barack had replied, “I’m not unmindful of that.” Constable concluded, “Let’s hope Obama changes his mind about running for president in 2008. The country needs him.”<sup>16</sup>

On December 8, Barack’s celebrity got a further unexpected boost when it was announced that he was one of five nominees for a Grammy Award—“best spoken word album”—for his audiobook edition of Dreams. His competition was stiff: George Carlin, Al Franken, Garrison Keillor, and Sean Penn, and by chance Barack already was scheduled to appear on Franken’s syndicated radio show the next day. Barack joked, “I told my wife this morning that I wanted to be referred to from now on as ‘The Artist Formerly Known as Barack Obama,’” and “she told me to go shovel snow.” Barack was looking forward to two weeks in Hawaii before heading to Iraq, and when Franken told him “you would be the strongest nominee in 2008” for Democrats, Barack responded that “I’m not there yet.” Franken jokingly riffed on Ryan Lizza’s line: “There’s a time when you’re hot, and remember President Cuomo.”

At the behest of Senator Bill Nelson, Barack flew to Orlando to speak to the Florida Democratic Party’s annual convention. Back in D.C., Barack coauthored a Wall Street Journal op-ed on immigration reform with Florida Republican senator Mel Martinez and a few days later coauthored a Washington Post one on Darfur with extremely conservative Kansas Republican senator Sam Brownback. As the Senate moved toward adjournment for the holidays, Barack joined with almost all other Democrats to block a renewal of the Patriot Act amid press reports that government electronic surveillance programs illegally exceeded what even that statute generously authorized. “Before I ever arrived in the Senate, I began hearing concerns from people of every background and political leaning that this law” was “threatening to violate our rights and freedoms as Americans,” Barack said on the Senate floor. The Patriot Act gave government “powers it didn’t need to invade our privacy,” and the pending renewal was “legislation that puts our own Justice Department above the law” by allowing it to “go on a fishing expedition through every personal record,” including phone calls and e-mails. Saying “this is just plain wrong,” Barack warned that “doing it without any real oversight seriously jeopardizes the rights of all Americans and the ideals America stands for.”

The Senate’s ongoing business delayed Barack’s departure to Honolulu, but on a podcast version of his floor statement opposing the Patriot Act, Barack explained that the rest of his family was already en route. “My wife basically said, ‘Well, I hope you can make it, buddy,’ and took off.” Several journalists used the extra time to prepare end-of-the-year stories on Barack’s freshman experience, with Oklahoma Republican Tom Coburn telling the St. Louis Post-Dispatch that Barack was a “phenomenal young man who will go to great heights.” Arizona Republican John McCain added that Barack is “very impressive, he’s thoughtful, he’s centrist.” When the Chicago Tribune’s Jeff Zeleny interviewed him, Barack confessed, “I’m subject like everyone else to vanity and what Dr. King called ‘the drum major instinct’ of wanting to lead the parade.” He explained that “one sort of measure of my own wisdom is the degree to which I can clear my mind of ego and focus on what’s useful, and I’m not always successful at that.” Asked about his smoking, Barack admitted that “it’s an ongoing battle” because “the flesh is weak,” and when Zeleny inquired about how work on his second book was going, Barack responded, “Don’t ask.” He added that “it’s not coming as fast as I would like. It needs to be done by March. I feel like I do have to write it myself. I would feel very uncomfortable putting my name to something that was written by somebody else or co-written or dictated. If my name is on it, it belongs to me.”

Zeleny revealed that in Barack’s “early months in Washington, a handful of friends and close advisers wondered whether Obama actually enjoyed being a senator.” When Zeleny spoke with Michelle, she said, “it’s a tough choice between ‘Do you stay for Malia’s basketball game on Sunday or do you go to New Jersey and campaign for [Jon] Corzine,’” who in November had won the governorship there. “It’s a constant pull to say, ‘Hey guys, you have a family here,’” but her “hope is that that is going to change, and we’re going to go back to our normal schedule of keeping Sundays pretty sacred.” On balance, “this has been a good year, but it’s still overhyped,” Michelle remarked. “If we don’t mature, Barack Obama is going to fall and fall hard because he’s going to have to make some decisions that people will not agree with. That’s the nature of politics.”<sup>17</sup>

On Wednesday, January 4, Barack, Senators Evan Bayh (D-IN) and Kit Bond (R-MO), and Representative Harold Ford (D-TN) departed Washington en route to Kuwait City. After playing basketball and eating with some Illinois troops at Camp Arifjan and a brief visit to Qatar, Barack and his colleagues proceeded on to Baghdad on a U.S. C-130 that performed evasive maneuvers before landing. Fitted out in Kevlar vests and helmets, the group climbed into a Black Hawk helicopter to fly to the U.S.-controlled Green Zone. There Barack lunched with additional Illinois soldiers before the delegation dined with Iraqi president Jalal Talabani. Housed in a former Saddam Hussein pool house, Barack spoke by conference call with a trio of Illinois reporters. The next morning, again clad in vests and helmets, the delegation boarded a Black Hawk and flew to first Fallujah and then Kirkuk. Hours earlier another army Black Hawk had crashed in northwestern Iraq, killing all twelve Americans on board.

Returning to Kuwait City, Barack proceeded on to Amman, Jordan, recording by phone another semiweekly podcast in which he praised the U.S. military as “probably the most capable institution on the planet.” From Amman Barack traveled to Israel, where the Jewish Federation of Metropolitan Chicago hosted his five-day visit. A planned meeting with Israeli prime minister Ariel Sharon was canceled after Sharon suffered a serious stroke, and Barack met instead with foreign minister Silvan Shalom. The next day Barack boarded an Israeli Black Hawk for a visit to the remote Arab Catholic village of Fassouta on the Lebanese border, where he was welcomed at the century-old Mar Elias Church. “Thank you so much. I extend greetings from my pastor. He’s like my priest. His name is Jeremiah Wright,” Barack remarked as Chicago newsman Chuck Goudie stood nearby. On Thursday Barack crossed into the West Bank to meet both Palestinian president Mahmoud Abbas and a group of Palestinian students in Ramallah. On Friday, Barack met with AIPAC officials in Jerusalem before visiting the Yad Vashem Holocaust memorial. “In stark silence, Obama placed a wreath next to the eternal flame,” Goudie reported, and on Saturday Barack headed home to Chicago.

Michelle had been especially on edge during Barack’s time in Iraq, but back at 5046 South Greenwood for three days with his family, Barack turned his attention to a lingering property concern. An old swing set sat astride the boundary between their home and Tony Rezko’s adjoining lot, but construction of a new one for Malia and Sasha would require a bit more space than where the property line now fell. “That’s what triggered my thinking that it would be nice to widen the lot,” Barack explained, and he called Tony to ask if he would be amenable to such a deal as well as the construction of a fence between the two properties. Rezko quickly agreed to sell Barack a ten-foot strip of land and to pay for erecting a fence. Tony offered to convey the land at the appraised value of $40,000, but Barack, leery of accepting a large monetary favor, instead offered to pay $104,500, or about one-sixth of the $625,000 that Rezko and his wife had paid for the entire lot, and Tony agreed.<sup>18</sup>

Returning to Washington, Barack accepted Senate minority leader Harry Reid’s offer to be Democrats’ point man on a new push for stronger congressional ethics reform. Also awaiting him was a memo from Pete Rouse. “It makes sense for you to consider now whether you want to use 2006 to position yourself to run in 2008 if a ‘perfect storm’ of personal and political factors emerges in 2007,” Rouse recommended. “If making a run in 2008 is at all a possibility, no matter how remote, it makes sense to begin talking and making decisions about what you should be doing ‘below the radar’ in 2006 to maximize your ability to get in front of this wave should it emerge and should you and your family decide it is worth riding.”

David Axelrod and Robert Gibbs shared Rouse’s view, and Axelrod remembered Barack jotting “This makes sense” on Pete’s memo. As fund-raising totals for 2005 emerged into public view, Barack’s fiscal stature among his colleagues was again underscored. Filings revealed that he had raised a total of $6.55 million: $2.1 million for his own Hopefund, $300,000 of which he had donated to other Democrats, plus $4.4 million that he had raised for others. At least twenty-three flights on private jets had helped him rack up those totals. Chicago Sun-Times correspondent Lynn Sweet tallied those numbers and surveyed reactions to Barack’s first year in Washington. Progressives both nationally and in Chicago expressed disappointment that Barack had not been a more outspoken figure, with veteran activist Marilyn Katz telling Sweet that “people project on him their own politics.” But New York senator Hillary Rodham Clinton gave Sweet a very different verdict. “He and I have talked often about how to get off on the right foot in the Senate, and he has done a superb job this year. He is a careful, thoughtful, effective person, and he is doing what is right for him.”

Speaking with Fox News about his Iraq trip, Barack confessed that “I am probably less optimistic” now than he was before. “There is no military solution to the problems in Iraq” and “only political solutions are going to bring about some semblance of peace.” Appearing two days later on NBC’s Meet the Press, Barack explained that thanks to the continuing presence of U.S. forces, “we help spur the insurgency.” When host Tim Russert challenged him about his future plans, Barack vowed, “I will serve out my full six-year term” in the Senate. “So you will not run for president or vice president in 2008?” Russert asked. “I will not,” Barack answered.

Barack announced that he indeed would vote against Judge Samuel Alito’s nomination to the Supreme Court, and when he and other senators visited the White House to discuss Iraq with President Bush, what Barack called “a frank exchange of views” ensued. “We need to bring our troops home as quickly as possible, but to do so in a way that does not precipitate all-out civil war in Iraq,” Barack stated in a same-day podcast. As Barack’s ethics reform role drew greater attention, he told a lobbying reform summit that “how extensively money influences politics is the original sin of everyone who’s ever run for office, myself included.”

Returning to Illinois for another round of town hall meetings, Barack sat down for a lengthy conversation with the Quad-City Times’ editorial board. “I’m actually surprised at how slow things move in the Senate,” Barack explained, but “I’ve gotten more done than I expected” and “the things I think I’m proudest of” were “some excellent work on veterans” and improving the VA’s responsiveness. With the Patriot Act, “the key principle in my mind is making sure that there’s somebody watching the watchers,” but ethics reform took up much of the discussion. “Over the last five years” congressional “corruption has gotten worse,” Barack told the editorial board, “and I don’t think, by the way, that the Democratic leadership is strong enough on this front.” What was needed was “some sort of independent commission that examines these issues, an Office of Public Integrity that is empowered to field complaints and investigate them,” Barack explained. He admitted that “Democrats aren’t without sin,” and said that “sometimes what my party does is uncomfortable to me, but I know that it has to be defended because it’s part of the job of being a member of a party.”

Appearing two days later on ABC’s This Week, Barack on national television refused to acknowledge that Senate Democratic leader Harry Reid had insisted that Barack take a more partisan stance on ethics reform than he wanted to. “The only way we’re going to get something passed is to make sure that we work with Republicans who are interested in serious reform,” Barack acknowledged, but “I do think that the Democrats can create a contrast by making sure that the ethics bill we present is big and meaningful and bold and not just tinkering around the edges.”<sup>19</sup>

On Wednesday, February 1, following a phone invitation from Arizona Republican John McCain, Barack met with nine other senators—seven Republicans and two Democrats—to discuss possible ways forward on lobbying reform legislation. Republican majority leader Bill Frist of Tennessee had suggested that a task force, rather than Senate committees, might be a way to proceed, but on Thursday a letter was drafted over Barack’s signature, addressed to McCain, citing “the culture of corruption that has permeated the nation’s capital” as reason for moving ahead with legislation rather than forming a task force. McCain had left for a quick trip to Germany, but on Friday Democratic minority leader Harry Reid’s staff e-mailed the Obama letter to reporters. McCain learned of the missive over the weekend during a phone conversation with Mark Salter, his speechwriter and closest staffer, and he told Salter to compose a response. "Brush him back," McCain instructed.

Monday afternoon, February 6, the Salter-McCain reply arrived in Barack's office as a political letter bomb.

I would like to apologize to you for assuming that your private assurances to me regarding your desire to cooperate in our efforts to negotiate bipartisan lobbying reform legislation were sincere. When you approached me and insisted that despite your leadership's preference to use the issue to gain a political advantage in the 2006 elections, you were personally committed to achieving a result that would reflect credit on the entire Senate and offered the country a better example of political leadership, I concluded your professed concern for the institution and the public interest was genuine and admirable. Thank you for disabusing me of such notions with your letter to me dated February 2, 2006, which explained your decision to withdraw from our bipartisan discussions. I'm embarrassed to admit that after all these years in politics I failed to interpret your previous assurances as typical rhetorical gloss routinely used in politics to make self-interested partisan posturing appear more noble. Again, sorry for the confusion, but please be assured I won't make the same mistake again.

Three paragraphs then summarized McCain's long-standing support for bipartisan reform legislation. It closed with this:

I understand how important the opportunity to lead your party's effort to exploit this issue must seem to a freshman Senator, and I hold no hard feelings over your earlier disingenuousness. Again, I have been around long enough to appreciate that in politics the public interest isn't always a priority for every one of us. Good luck to you, Senator.

Barack was astonished. "The perception in our office was that this was a very innocuous boilerplate letter," Barack said of his initial missive. He immediately called McCain's office, but McCain was not back from Germany. Barack and Robert Gibbs quickly set to work drafting a defensive response that sought to dial down the temperature on what was already a Capitol Hill e-mail sensation. "I am puzzled by your response," and "I have no idea what has prompted your response," Barack's Monday-evening reply stated. "The fact that you have now questioned my sincerity and my desire to put aside politics for the public interest is regrettable." By Tuesday, reporters were all over the story, with Barack explaining to the Sun-Times' Lynn Sweet that McCain had misunderstood his initial letter. "I think there was confusion over the reference to a task force. We were specifically referring to the proposal that Bill Frist had had, to set up a formal task force to do this," not McCain's more informal bipartisan meetings. Tuesday afternoon Barack and McCain spoke briefly by phone, and Barack told the Chicago Tribune's Jeff Zeleny that while the tone of the Arizonan's letter "was a little over the top . . . John McCain's been an American hero and has served here in Washington for twenty years, so if he wants to get cranky once in a while, that's his prerogative." In private, Barack was more scathing: "I'm not interested in being bitch-slapped by John McCain."

On Wednesday Barack and McCain both testified about lobbying reform before the Senate Rules Committee. "I'm particularly pleased to be sharing this panel with my pen pal, John McCain," Barack joked. Republicans declined to embrace Barack's call for an independent "Congressional Ethics Enforcement Commission," and afterward Barack told Sheryl Gay Stolberg of the New York Times that since Congress is "a clubby institution . . . the idea that there might be a watchdog process outside of it . . . will be tough to achieve." That evening Barack got an emotional lift when he was awarded the spoken word Grammy, and Thursday on his semiweekly podcast he praised McCain as "a good and decent man." The news cycle quickly moved on, with McCain aide Mark Salter realizing he had overdone his boss's "brush him back" instruction. "I guess I beaned him instead."<sup>20</sup>

The McCain tiff aside, Barack continued to win plaudits. Vermont Democrat Patrick Leahy told the Associated Press, "I've been here 31 years and seen a small handful of people that have made as much of an impression as he has, and he has done it by working hard." In a five-page profile in Time magazine, Barack remarked that "I probably always feel on some level I can persuade anybody I talk to," but reporter Perry Bacon Jr. noted that "liberals in particular have often projected onto him views he doesn't have." The Chicago Tribune's Jeff Zeleny agreed that "Obama remains largely undefined on a broad spectrum of issues," but he realized that "Obama is purposely increasing his visibility as he steps beyond an early strategy of political caution." Barack joined thirty-three other Democrats in supporting a compromise extension of the Patriot Act that won Senate approval by a vote of 89–10, but well-known liberal Democrats like Patrick Leahy, Tom Harkin, and Ron Wyden, plus conservative Robert Byrd, joined longtime opponent Russ Feingold in voting no.

A front-page USA Today headline proclaimed that "Democrats See Obama as Face of 'Reform and Change,'" and Barack explained to the New York Times's Sheryl Stolberg his recent decision to stop flying on corporate jets. "This is an example where appearances matter," because "very few of my constituents have a chance to travel on a corporate jet." Under Senate rules, Barack had been reimbursing the planes' owners the normal first-class fare, rather than actual cost, and "I said to my staff, 'We may be following the rules but it's hard for me to reconcile this.'" On March 11, Barack was the Democratic headliner at the annual Gridiron Club dinner, turning in what New York Times columnist Maureen Dowd called "a smooth, funny performance" that included singing the lyrics "If I only had McCain" to the Wizard of Oz tune "If I Only Had a Brain." The next morning on CBS's Face the Nation, Bob Schieffer gushed to Barack that "you were the absolute star of last night's Gridiron show." Barack replied that "in my family, my wife is the funny one," and that if asked, Michelle "could've done a rip on me that would've lasted twenty minutes." Barack cited energy independence, health care, and education as his top issues beyond drawing down U.S. forces in Iraq, but he also addressed abortion. "I think the Democrats historically have made a mistake in just trying to avoid the issue, or pretend that there's not a moral component to it. There is," as he had known going back eighteen years. "I also think that it's important, even as I indicate that I'm prochoice, to say this is not a trivial issue."

African American syndicated columnist Leonard Pitts Jr. bluntly warned readers that "Barack Obama is not Jesus." Pitts explained, "I feel the need" to say that given how "seemingly every exhalation of his name" is "accompanied by angels singing hosannas and sighs of adoration from a congregation of Democrats looking to him for political salvation. Or, if you prefer, resurrection." Pitts plaintively wondered, "Is it asking too much that people wait until he actually does something before they start chasing his name with a hallelujah chorus?" The Times's Maureen Dowd, so impressed by Barack's Gridiron performance, told Democrats that instead of nominating Hillary Rodham Clinton for president in 2008, they “should find someone captivating with an intensely American success story—someone like Senator Obama,” but whoever wrote Dowd’s headline—“What’s Better? His Empty Suit or Her Baggage?”—inserted an insult where none was intended.<sup>21</sup>

Barack consented to two long interviews with the National Journal’s Kirk Victor for what became a ten-page profile in the widely read D.C. weekly. “I am surprised by the lack of deliberation in the world’s greatest deliberative body,” Barack again stressed, drawing a contrast to Springfield, “where every bill had to be defended and subject to questions. Here, there is a lot more of competing press releases, and I think that contributes to some of the partisanship and lack of serious negotiation” he had witnessed in the Senate. Barack again denied that minority leader Harry Reid had made him take a more partisan position on ethics reform than he wanted. “Is there some tension there between my role as a member of the Democratic Caucus and how I might operate as an entirely free agent? Yes . . . that is the role that I have been placed in,” but “I was very explicit that I wouldn’t do something like this if the ultimate objective was not to actually get a bill passed that would move the country forward,” rather than score political points. Barack again cited his work on the Veterans Affairs Committee as his most consequential work to date, and said that the 2008 Democratic presidential ticket was “not something that I am spending a lot of time thinking about.” He also obliquely highlighted how out of place he felt in the Senate because most of his colleagues “are significantly older” and “have raised their families here in Washington.” In contrast, “I am not a part of the Washington social set. A lot of the interactions . . . I just can’t participate in because I want to get home to see my wife and two daughters.”

Back in Chicago for a weekend with his family, Barack joined Congressman Jesse Jackson Jr. at an antiviolence service at Englewood’s Fellowship Missionary Baptist Church that drew more than two thousand people. Two young neighborhood girls, one aged ten and the other fourteen, had recently been killed by stray bullets from gang members’ shootouts. The gunmen “don’t have a sense of self-respect,” and “if we don’t change how we raise our children,” gang violence would continue, Barack warned. “There’s a reason they shoot each other, because they don’t love themselves, and the reason they don’t love themselves is we are not loving them, we’re not paying attention to them, we’re not guiding them, we’re not disciplining them. We’ve got work to do.”<sup>22</sup>

The next day was Illinois’s 2006 primary election. Back in December, Barack had publicly endorsed twenty-nine-year-old basketball buddy Alexi Giannoulias for state treasurer. Early in Barack’s U.S. Senate race, Giannoulias had begun introducing Barack to potential contributors in Chicagoland’s vibrant Greek community, and Dan Shomon had agreed to move Obama for Illinois’s bank account to Alexi’s well-regarded, family-owned Broadway Bank. State Democratic Party chairman and House Speaker Michael Madigan had tapped Paul Mangieri, a little-known state’s attorney from Galesburg, for the Treasurer’s race, but Barack told Greg Hinz of Crain’s Chicago Business that “if someone has stepped out on my behalf, I think it’s important to reciprocate.” Asked if Giannoulias had sufficient experience to be treasurer, Barack said, “Alexi is qualified,” but “it’s important for you and others to put him through his paces and ask tough questions.” By early March, Barack was starring in a thirty-second Giannoulias TV ad, telling viewers “he’s one of the most outstanding young men that I could ever hope to meet. He’s somebody who cares deeply about people. He got that from his family. They really exemplify and embody the American dream. . . . Alexi Giannoulias—he’s going to be an outstanding treasurer.”

Then, eight days before the primary, Hinz revealed that Broadway Bank had made loans to a man named Michael Giorango, whom the Miami Herald in 2002 had labeled an “alleged Chicago organized crime figure” and who in early 2004 had been convicted in Miami federal court of running a multistate prostitution ring. Two days later the Tribune reported that Giorango, a “Chicago crime figure” nicknamed “Jaws,” had also been convicted of bookmaking and gambling violations in 1989 and 1991. Still, Giorango had received more than $6 million in loans from Broadway Bank since the 1990s. Thanks to his TV campaign, Giannoulis easily defeated Mangieri, 62 to 38 percent. In another race, David Axelrod’s close friend and former partner Forrest Claypool had challenged Cook County Board president John Stroger.

Axelrod had pressed Barack to endorse Claypool, who had volunteered his help during Barack’s 2004 Senate campaign, whereas Stroger had backed Dan Hynes. But Claypool’s past role as a top aide to Mayor Richard Daley made many black aldermen leery, and even progressives like the 5th Ward’s Leslie Hairston supported Stroger, whom everyone in black Chicago politics viewed as “a good soldier.” Fully aware of the racial divide, Barack had rebuffed Axelrod’s insistent pleading with a “flash of anger,” David recalled. A week before the primary Stroger suffered a massive stroke, and on election eve Barack told a newscaster he would vote for Claypool. On Tuesday the incapacitated Stroger eked out a 53–47 victory, and the contrast between Barack’s kingmaker role in Giannoulis’s victory and his hands-off stance in the Claypool-Stroger contest offended many progressives. One Claypool friend, Sunil Garg, wrote a strongly worded Tribune op-ed asserting that Barack “has weakened his moral authority by seemingly safeguarding his political career” rather than endorsing Claypool. “I—and many others—cannot understand how someone can be considered presidential when he refuses to take a stand on the most important race in recent memory in his own backyard.”<sup>23</sup>

Back in Washington, Barack took to the Senate floor to say that he “didn’t anticipate the deafening silence” that had greeted his bill to create an independent congressional ethics watchdog. When a far weaker bill was called for a vote, Barack was one of eight senators—including Democrats Russ Feingold and John Kerry as well as Republicans John McCain and Tom Coburn—who voted no in protest. Every night when he was in Washington, Barack returned to his modest apartment to put in as much time as he could drafting chapters for his forthcoming book. His deadline for submitting a complete manuscript was March 31, but Barack was going to miss that by at least a month. Each time he completed a chapter, the draft was passed off to staff members and a few old friends for fact-checking and political vetting. Rob Fisher, who had contributed so much editorial help on Dreams, was among them, and Rob remembered that “we got into a deep back and forth about global warming.” After Rob left Barack a voice mail warning him that one chapter was “a mess,” Rob’s wife Lisa was the first to hear the message Barack left in response: “You don’t call a U.S. senator who has a deadline for a book and tell him his book’s a mess!”

Barack’s hefty initial advance for that book, plus robust royalties from Dreams’ strong paperback sales, skyrocketed the Obamas’ annual income for 2005 to $1,670,000, more than they had earned in the previous seven years combined. In addition to Barack’s $1.2 million in author’s royalties, Michelle’s U of C Hospitals salary had jumped from $121,000 to $316,000, and she took in an additional $45,000 from her service on TreeHouse Foods’ two boards. The Obamas had upped their charitable contributions to $77,000, including $5,000 to Trinity Church, and were in the process of contributing a further $22,500 to Trinity in 2006, but in mid-April the Obamas’ 2005 windfall had Barack writing a check for a whopping $430,000 to the IRS.

Barack remained often on the road, speaking at a Hartford dinner for Senate colleague Joseph Lieberman, who was facing a progressive primary challenger, and defending Lieberman even though he had supported the Iraq war. “I know that some in the party have differences with Joe. I’m going to go ahead and say it. It’s the elephant in the room. And Joe and I don’t agree on everything. But what I know is that Joe Lieberman’s a man with a good heart, with a keen intellect, who cares about the working families of America.” A week later, traveling to Minnesota to speak on behalf of Democratic Senate candidate Amy Klobuchar, a Minneapolis Star Tribune reporter covering Barack’s appearances wrote that some attendees were “talking about an Obama presidency as if it were a sure thing.”

Barack’s full-throated support for Alexi Giannoulias’s candidacy reemerged as an issue when the Chicago Tribune reported that his family’s Broadway Bank had made additional loans totaling $11.8 million to convicted felon Michael Giorango in 2005. One of them, for $3.6 million, went to Giorango and a second convicted felon, Demitri Stavropoulos, for the purchase of a floating casino in Myrtle Beach, South Carolina. In 1994 Stavropoulos had been convicted of explosives possession, and a 2004 bookmaking conviction had had him in federal prison since that time. The “senior loan officer” and Democratic candidate for treasurer told reporters, “It’s a loan that I don’t know the details of,” as “I don’t cultivate the relationships. I don’t bring these deals in.” A Tribune editorial asked whether Giannoulias’s defense “is that he was clueless as to what his bank was doing?” and at a town hall meeting in Elmhurst, Barack told reporters, “I’m going to ask Alexi directly what is happening.” Several days later Barack said he had told Giannoulias that “appearances matter,” but “so long as these loans were legal” and “were not financing illegal activities . . . I’m not going to pass judgment on how the bank handled its loan portfolio.” Alexi finally told reporters that “I probably should have looked into it more,” and although journalists doubted the viability of Giannoulias’s candidacy, Barack’s support for him dipped from public view.<sup>24</sup>

Across Illinois, Barack continued to hold town hall meetings that often drew overflow crowds. At Loyola University in Chicago he warned more than two thousand people that because of the country’s dependence on Middle Eastern oil, “we’re financing both sides of the war on terrorism through our SUVs.” He told cable-TV interviewer Jeff Berkowitz, “I don’t think there’s any doubt that Iran is seeking nuclear weapons.” Illinois seatmate Dick Durbin told the State Journal-Register’s Bernie Schoenburg that he liked Barack’s judgment, style, and sense of humor. “He’s a bright guy. Being mixed-race, people feel comfortable with him,” and “he gets along well not only with our side of the aisle but with the other side as well.” In contrast, a Time magazine item asserted that Barack “has reached so often across the aisle . . . that some Democrats complain he won’t be their firebrand,” but Durbin had privately already told friends he believed Barack should run for president in 2008. To Schoenburg, Durbin hinted at just that. “Hanging around the Senate for an extra term may not make him a change agent.” Instead, “it may make him a person with a long voting record,” and Barack “shouldn’t rule out any possibility at this point.” When Harvard law professor Martha Minow ran into Barack at a May 5 Chicago dinner, she asked him directly, “Are you going to run?” and Barack’s response was anything but discouraging. “He said, ‘There’s one answer: It’s up to Michelle. Go talk to her.’” Minow did just that. “I said, ‘So, is Barack going to run?’ and she said, ‘We’re having serious family discussions about it.’” Minow replied, “It would be so great for the country,” and Rob Fisher recalled a long telephone conversation about that possibility while they were still wrestling with Barack's book manuscript. Rob recalled that "when he made the decision to run for the presidency, he called me up" and "we talked for two or three hours. He was mostly concerned about his family," but "we both came to the conclusion at the end of it that we thought he could win."

The morning after his exchange with Minow, Barack flew to Omaha to speak at the Nebraska Democratic Party's annual dinner. Before that event, Barack addressed a cheering crowd of a thousand people at Salem Baptist Church, declaring that the Bush administration's largesse in Iraq had left the United States with a national debt now totaling "$30,000 from every man, woman, and child in America" as well as inner-city "neighborhoods where rats outnumber computers." At the evening dinner, which conservative Nebraska senator Ben Nelson had asked Barack to keynote, Nelson introduced Barack as "one of the most effective members of the U.S. Senate," and Barack returned the compliment by telling the crowd that Nelson was the body's most popular member. Pete Rouse was struck by Nelson's private comment that Barack was the only national Democrat Nelson had considered inviting, and Barack told a local interviewer that Democrats "tend to talk in bullet points as opposed to telling the story of where we want to take the country and what our vision is for this country's future."

Back in Washington, Barack continued to criticize the ballooning national debt, complaining on the Senate floor that the federal government's behavior "simply passes the burden to our children and grandchildren" and spontaneously adding that "this place never ceases to amaze me." On May 20 Barack told the Chicago Sun-Times' Lynn Sweet that he finally had completed his book manuscript and now had time to work on it further. "The copyeditor needs it at the end of June. So I'm good. I have a month and a half to tool around with it and make changes." Then a quick flight to Springfield allowed Barack to address the SIU School of Medicine's commencement, and he warned the new doctors that "there is something fundamentally broken about our health care system." The good news was that "Massachusetts just signed into law a groundbreaking plan that would cover most of its citizens," and it was incumbent upon politicians and physicians alike to "ensure that every American has routine checkups and screenings and information about how to live a healthy lifestyle."<sup>25</sup>

In late May, when Barack hired former Blair Hull strategist Anita Dunn to head up his Hopefund PAC, journalists wondered what that said about his political plans, with a front-page Chicago Tribune headline asking "Obama in '08?" Later that same day, Dick Durbin invited reporters to his Springfield home to tell them he hoped Barack would run. "People like Barack don't come along very often," and "he should seriously consider it. I think he could bring a great deal to the national race for the presidency." Durbin's statement drew little press attention, but other top Senate Democrats told Barack they felt the same. Minority leader Harry Reid had been impressed with Barack since soon after he first arrived on Capitol Hill. Reid recalled that after an early address on the Senate floor, Reid approached the new freshman and told him, "'That speech was phenomenal, Barack.'" Then, "without the barest hint of braggadocio or conceit, and with what I would describe as deep humility, he said quietly: 'I have a gift, Harry.'"

After Durbin's announcement, Reid and New York senator Chuck Schumer each told Barack he should run. "It was interesting that they felt as strongly as they do," Barack told David Axelrod. In Chicago, Axelrod's friend Eric Zorn, the Tribune columnist who had predicted an Obama presidential candidacy sixteen months earlier, echoed Durbin in saying, "if he's ever going to run for president, 2008 is his year." Zorn believed Barack was "bored and disillusioned by the Senate," and the longer he remained a senator the more opportunities he would have “to alienate his core supporters with clumsy political moves such as turning his back on former close ally Forrest Claypool in the Democratic primary for the presidency of the Cook County Board, playing both sides of the gay marriage issue while more courageous Democrats in the Senate come out in support, and endorsing the lightweight, ethically obtuse Alexi Giannoulias in the Democratic primary for state treasurer as apparent payback for Giannoulias’ earlier financial help.”

The Bloomington Pantagraph advised differently, asserting in an editorial headlined “Obama Presidential Talk Quite Premature” that “it takes more than an engaging smile and oratorical gifts to make a good president.” Time columnist Joe Klein reported that “close friends of Obama’s say he really doesn’t know yet what he’s going to do in 2008,” but “the discussions have grown more serious in recent months.” Klein believed that “the best reason for Obama to run is . . . that he is young and everybody else seems so old,” but in the left-wing Nation, blogger David Sirota warned that “because the media have not looked as closely at his political positions, Obama has taken on the quality of a blank screen on which people can project whatever they like.” Sirota understood that Barack “hasn’t discouraged this,” but a formal interview left Sirota admitting that “Obama has an impressive control of the issues and a mesmerizing ability to connect with people.” Barack also demonstrated “a remarkable ability to convince you that his positions are motivated purely by principles, not tactical considerations,” and Barack revealingly stressed to Sirota that “I don’t think in ideological terms. I never have.”<sup>26</sup>

Barack seemed to exhibit how profoundly he was reflecting on his life’s course in a remarkably self-revealing commencement address he delivered at the University of Massachusetts Boston on June 2. He returned to the summer of 1985 and his two-day drive toward his new future in Chicago, and he recalled how he had “stopped for the night at a small town in Pennsylvania whose name I can’t remember anymore.” Barack proceeded to describe how the motel owner—Bob Elia—had told him to go into broadcasting rather than community organizing because “You can’t change the world, and people will not appreciate you trying.” Barack told his Boston audience that “objectively speaking, he made some sense . . . but I knew that there was something in me that wanted to try for something bigger.” What that “something bigger” would entail reached all the way back to Barack’s intimately revelatory comments first to Sheila and then to Lena in 1987–88, but what he had first envisioned as his destiny two decades earlier was now a reality that even long-experienced politicians like Dick Durbin and Harry Reid were telling him it was time to pursue.

A few days later, Barack took to the Senate floor to oppose a constitutional amendment aimed at prohibiting gay marriages. “Decisions about marriage,” Barack stated, “should be left to the states,” but he stressed that “personally, I do believe that marriage is between a man and a woman,” period. In mid-June, Michelle’s brother Craig, who had just been named head basketball coach at Brown University, married his longtime girlfriend Kelly McCrum in a ceremony at Chicago’s Hotel Allegro that Barack, Michelle, and their daughters happily attended. The next day a front-page Washington Post story announced that “Obama’s Profile Has Democrats Taking Notice.” Dick Durbin said, “I don’t believe there is another candidate I’ve seen, or an elected official, who really has the appeal that he does.” Durbin revealed he recently had told Barack, with reference to 2008’s first state, “‘Why don’t you just kind of move around Iowa and watch what happens?’ I know what’s going to happen,” Durbin asserted, “and I think it’s going to rewrite the game plans of a lot of presidential candidates if he makes that decision.” New York senator Chuck Schumer concurred. “I haven’t seen a phenomenon like this, where someone comes in so new and is so dazzling.” Barack told the Post that “at this stage, I haven’t changed my mind from previous demurrals,” although he confirmed that “we’ve visited 25 states since taking office.”

Even a conservative Wall Street Journal contributor argued that Barack’s running for president in 2008 might be “the smartest thing he ever does,” because his “political stock may never be higher than it is right now.” At present, Barack was “part Clinton, part Roosevelt, part JFK and MLK, but in eight or twelve or sixteen years, he might be John Kerry.” In the Senate, Barack declined to join Kerry, Russ Feingold, and eleven other liberal Democrats in voting to withdraw U.S. forces from Iraq within twelve months’ time, instead supporting a more widely backed measure calling for a withdrawal to begin before the end of 2006. In late June, Barack used a chapter on religious faith from his forthcoming book as the basis for a keynote address he delivered to a progressive believers’ symposium. It recounted Barack’s 2004 discomfort when Dr. Farr Curlin had e-mailed him to complain about how Obama for Illinois’s Web site dismissed abortion opponents as “right-wing ideologues.” Barack’s “Call to Renewal” speech attracted more press attention than anything he had done since his 2004 DNC keynote, with Washington Post columnist and fellow Saguaro Seminar alumnus E. J. Dionne heralding it as “the most important pronouncement by a Democrat on faith and politics since John F. Kennedy’s Houston speech in 1960,” in which Kennedy had discussed his own Roman Catholicism. Fellow Post columnist Dana Milbank warned that Barack “is enormously charismatic—and utterly undefined.” In the Chicago Defender, a left-wing contributor upbraided Barack for his Iraqi war stance, claiming “he was against it before he was for it,” and stating that “it is amazing that Obama is the recipient of so much praise when he says so little.”<sup>27</sup>

The day after his “Call to Renewal” address, Barack sat down with journalist Jacob Weisberg for an interview that was as remarkably revealing as his commencement speech in Boston four weeks earlier. Barack mentioned that “I kept a journal basically from my junior year in college until I went to law school,” and when former president Lyndon B. Johnson’s name came up, Barack remarkably stated that “there’s a piece of him in me—that kind of hungry, desperate to win, please, succeed, dominate—I don’t know any politician who doesn’t have some of that reptilian side to him. Or any person for that matter. But that’s not the dominant part of me.” Barack blamed his Hawaii childhood for how “there’s a big part of me that’s pretty lazy,” and when Weisberg asked whether it was a belief in God that had led Barack to join Trinity Church, Barack replied that “it wasn’t an epiphany. I didn’t have a revelation. It was a very quiet process where I came to understand many of the things I cared about in a religious way and as part of the tradition of the Christian church.” Barack went on to explain that “there was a voice inside me that I could hear that was true—a kernel of myself—this is from a Borges poem—sort of a love poem to a mistress of his,” one that Jorge Luis Borges had written in 1934. “He says ‘I offer you that kernel of myself that is basically untouched, doesn’t traffic in the trivial or the petty or is just there’” (a close rendition of Borges’s declaration, “I offer you that kernel of myself that I have saved, somehow—the central heart that deals not in words, traffics not with dreams, and is untouched by time, by joy, by adversities”). Barack told Weisberg, “I felt that. That sounds like god to me,” and “to me god is connection . . . making connections, and in that connection, that’s where I find god.” Barack admitted that “I don’t know what happens to us after we die,” but “when I tuck in my kids, I have a little piece of heaven . . . I genuinely mean that in a religious way. When I look at them at night sleeping, it is a religious experience. It’s miraculous to me.”

Barack mentioned that Jeremiah Wright “was just here two weeks ago” and cited his own “frustrations of being here as opposed to being in the state legislature,” although “I actually find Congress identical to the state legislature.” When Weisberg asked about the presidency, Barack said, “my attitude about something like the presidency is that you don’t want to just be the president. You want to change the country. You want to make a unique contribution. You want to be a great president,” Barack emphasized. “There are what, maybe ten presidents in our history out of forty-something who you can truly say led the country? And then there are thirty-odd who just kind of did their best. And so I guess my point is, just being the president is not a good way of thinking about it.”

Weisberg also spoke with Michelle Obama, who said, “politics is a completely unappealing way to live your life. There’s nothing that makes this attractive to go through as a family. But I also know very deeply and much more intimately than anyone out there how truly gifted Barack is. Anyone wondering, ‘Is he the real deal?’ and I know it.” She also said that “Barack would walk away from it tomorrow if I said so,” but “part of me looks at my children and the world that I want my kids and grandkids to live in and says, ‘How can I stand in the way?’ But I struggle with it every day.”<sup>28</sup>

In early July, Barack’s office announced that he would take a two-week trip to Africa, including several stops in Kenya, in late August. On July 20, it was announced that Barack would attend Iowa senator Tom Harkin’s twenty-ninth annual “steak fry” on September 17, one of the state’s premier political events. At the invitation of Louisiana senator Mary Landrieu, Barack joined her and other senators on a brief trip to New Orleans, which was still struggling to rebuild from Hurricane Katrina almost a year earlier. Barack said he “was astonished by what I saw” and by “the terrible reality and scope of the destruction.”

Sitting down at a D.C. event with NBC’s Tim Russert, Barack called for the “creation of nonpartisan maps” in federal and state legislative districting so as to “encourage and reward more bipartisanship.” Barack voiced disappointment that most members of Congress were so attached to “the status of office” that “they don’t want to take any risks” for fear of being defeated. “A good 50 percent of what’s wrong with Washington has to do with fear,” Barack explained. Being an elected official “puts a severe strain on your family,” and “the biggest challenge and the biggest strain on me has been the fact that I didn’t move my family to Washington, and so I’m away from my wife and kids three days, four days a week, and that’s very difficult, and it’s much more difficult for my wife.” In a similar conversation with John Patterson of suburban Chicago’s Daily Herald, Barack stressed that as a senator representing a large state “the schedule is relentless” and now “people recognize me” all the time. “The only time when it’s tough is when I’m with my kids,” because “a lot of times people will come up, and it kind of intrudes a little bit on our time together.” Barack believed he remained unchanged by all the public and media attention. “I really credit . . . the seven years of laboring in almost total obscurity in Springfield for a healthy attitude and healthy skepticism about this.” When Patterson mentioned the presidency, Barack said, “I think what you look for in presidents is good judgment and knowledge of the issues and the ability to make decisions.” “Do you think you could do a better job than the current president?” Patterson asked. “No comment,” Barack replied.

After taking several days in early August to record the audio version of his new book in a Chicago studio, Barack held eight town hall meetings during a two-day downstate swing before attending Governor’s Day at the Illinois State Fair. House Speaker and state Democratic chairman Michael Madigan remained unwilling to support treasurer nominee Alexi Gianoullias, and communications director Robert Gibbs told Kristen McQueary of the Daily Southtown that “Barack cautioned the speaker that he might be viewed as petty and vindictive if he’s not united behind the party’s ticket in the fall.” In response, Madigan sarcastically dismissed Barack by telling McQueary, “There’s been no word from the messiah.” Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller later wrote that “sources close to the usually easy-going Obama say he has an enmity for Madigan unlike that for anyone else.”<sup>29</sup>

On Friday, August 18, Barack, accompanied by Gibbs, foreign policy aide Mark Lippert, and three military officers, flew from Washington to Amsterdam’s Schiphol Airport. Barack had specifically invited air force major general Scott Gration, who had spent much of his childhood in Africa and was fluent in Swahili. Also on the plane was a trio of reporters—Jeff Zeleny of the Tribune, Lynn Sweet of the Sun-Times, and Bill Lambrecht of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, as well as a pair of documentary filmmakers who had begun filming Barack off and on three months earlier. At Schiphol, Barack visited the meditation room before the whole party boarded a second KLM flight en route to Cape Town, South Africa, where they arrived on Saturday night. Barack told the reporters that “my goal is less personal and more about public policy, and my hope is that my visit can shine a spotlight on the enormous challenges Africa faces,” particularly the AIDS crisis and how its spread was fostered by “the lack of control women have over sex” in Africa. On Sunday Barack visited Nelson Mandela’s former prison cell on Robben Island, and on Monday he toured an AIDS treatment facility. “There needs to be a sense of urgency and an almost clinical truth-telling about AIDS,” Barack warned. “If it is not addressed in an unambiguous fashion, the percentage of people who are infected is going off the charts.” That afternoon, Barack met Archbishop Desmond Tutu, who told him “you’re going to be a very credible presidential candidate.” On Tuesday Barack toured Soweto and one of its anti-apartheid museums, telling journalists, “if it wasn’t for some of the activities that happened here, I might not be involved in politics and might not be doing what I am doing in the United States.”

On Thursday, August 24, Barack and his party flew to Nairobi, Kenya, where Michelle and their daughters joined him for a six-day stay. Barack’s group got an immediate introduction to Kenya’s endemic corruption when airport customs officials extorted more than $1,700 from the party’s videographers. The next morning Barack mentioned the rip-off to Kenyan president Mwai Kibaki, telling reporters afterward that “at every level, the people of Kenya suffer through corruption of political offices.” That evening, a Kenyan official gave Barack’s aide Mark Lippert “wads of cash in brown envelopes” to repay the camera crews.

Barack drew huge crowds and ecstatic greetings everywhere he went in Nairobi, and on Saturday he, his family, and their traveling press corps boarded an East African Airlines flight to Kisumu on their way to Granny Sarah’s family homestead in Kogelo. In Kisumu, Barack and Michelle visited a mobile AIDS center to get tested for HIV, with Barack telling onlookers, “I just want everybody to remember that if a senator from the United States can get tested, and his wife can get tested, then everybody in this crowd can get tested, and everyone in the city can get tested.” Michelle was stunned by the mass enthusiasm for her husband. “It’s rare that I’m speechless, but it’s hard to interpret what all this means to me and means to us,” she told the Tribune’s Jeff Zeleny, who described Kenyans greeting Barack “more like a prophet than a politician.” The nineteen-car motorcade made the one-hour drive to Kogelo, where crowds forced the planned two-hour visit to be cut to hardly forty-five minutes before the return trip to Nairobi began. Villagers presented Barack with a well-fed three-year-old goat, but Barack declined the gift, explaining,

“I don’t think they’d let me take it on the plane.”

Back in Nairobi, Barack visited the huge Kibera slum, where an estimated 20 percent of the 700,000 residents were HIV-positive. On Monday Barack delivered an outspoken anticorruption speech at the University of Nairobi that was broadcast live by Kenya’s largest television station. “Where Kenya is failing is in its ability to create a government that is transparent and accountable, one that serves its people and is free from corruption,” Barack declared. Citing his own hometown, Barack said that “while corruption is a problem we all share, here in Kenya it is a crisis—a crisis that’s robbing an honest people of the opportunities they have fought for, the opportunity they deserve.” Terming corruption “one of the great struggles of our time,” Barack called for the Kenyan government to “downsize the bureaucracy” and channel the savings to higher salaries for the remaining officials. He also said that “ethnic-based tribal politics has to stop. It is rooted in the bankrupt idea that the goal of politics or business is to funnel as much of the pie as possible to one’s family, tribe, or circle with little regard for the public good.” In contrast, “when people are judged by merit, not connections, then the best and brightest can lead the country.”<sup>30</sup>

Sitting down with two journalists from the Nation, Kenya’s largest newspaper, Barack answered a question about President Kibaki by saying that “sometimes in an environment where there’s a lot of pressure . . . maybe you forget what exactly you were trying to do in the first place, which is something all of us in politics have to contend with.” When they asked how could Kenyans “push our leaders toward being more accountable,” Barack returned to his Roseland roots in responding that “ultimately it’s going to come from the ground up, not the top down. . . . There’s got to be a very systematic organizing at the grassroots level in order for politicians to ultimately respond.” Barack stressed that “one of the dangers is that those who start out idealistic get pulled into the system,” and that in any multiethnic society, “the only way to have a strong grassroots movement is if it cuts across the different communities.” With 56 percent of Kenyans living below the poverty line, “Kenya can’t afford to be divided” along tribal lines, and knowingly or unknowingly, Barack invoked his father’s legacy by highlighting the mistreatment of Kenyan women. “An entire segment of the population is continuing to suffer sexual violence and abuse,” and Kenyans needed to appreciate that “the single biggest indicator of whether a country develops or not is how well it treats and educates its women.”

On Tuesday Barack and his party flew from Nairobi to the Masai Mara National Reserve in southern Kenya for a safari tour, during which they saw a lion devouring a wildebeest. The next evening, minus Barack’s family, the group left Nairobi on a U.S. military aircraft bound for Djibouti. Barack had the page proofs of his book to read and correct, and at Crown Books in New York, an assistant editor answered her phone to hear Barack report, “I’m calling from Djibouti” and was wondering where he could find a fax machine. On Thursday, August 31, Barack visited a tent camp in eastern Ethiopia filled with people displaced by flooding. On Friday he flew to N’Djamena to meet with Chadian president Idriss Déby, and the next morning Barack’s group flew to a dirt airstrip in eastern Chad to join a UN convoy for a one-hour drive to a Darfur refugee camp just inside Chad’s border with Sudan. Barack’s visit to the sprawling, fifteen-thousand-person camp, one of a dozen in Chad housing some 235,000 Sudanese refugees, lasted only ninety minutes, but he told accompanying journalists that “it is important that these folks here are not forgotten.” On Sunday morning, Barack’s military aircraft departed N’Djamena for Frankfurt, from where Barack and his aides returned to the U.S. A Chicago Sun-Times editorial praised his trip as “admirable and honorable,” and Barack told the paper’s Lynn Sweet that meeting Desmond Tutu and fellow Noble Peace Prize winner Wangari Maathai had been two high points of the journey. “There is something about when people serve; somehow it enriches them in all sorts of ways. They just seemed like happy, fulfilled people, even though they are not particularly wealthy.”<sup>31</sup>

Two days after Barack returned to Washington, the Senate without recorded objection passed his and Tom Coburn’s Federal Funding Accountability and Transparency Act, sending the measure aimed at ending no-bid federal contracting to the House. Recording a podcast, Barack welcomed that move in seeming amazement, remarking that “every once in a while, you actually get something done around here.” Three days before Barack was due at Iowa senator Tom Harkin’s much-heralded steak fry, former Illinois competitor Dan Hynes called to give ten minutes’ advance notice that he was about to tell the press he believed Barack should run for the presidency. “Well, Dan, I’m flattered,” Barack replied, but “Michelle will never forgive you.” Hynes told reporters “what we need to do is both create a real movement for those of us who believe he’s the right man for the presidency and to give him a better understanding of just how broad and deep and emotional the support is for him across the state.”

Sun-Times reporter Lynn Sweet observed that “the charismatic Obama is now on a pedestal,” and she believed Barack already was giving “answers that suggest the thought of running for president has crossed his mind.” Indeed, within days of his return from Africa, Barack told David Axelrod that “with so many folks talking to me about running, I feel like I have an obligation to at least think about this in a serious, informed way.” In Newsweek, African American journalist Ellis Cose called Barack “a political phenomenon unlike any previously seen” and described him as “the perfect mirror for a country that craves to see itself as beyond race, beyond boundaries, beyond the ugly parts of its past.” On the same morning that Barack arrived in Iowa for the Harkin event, the nearby St. Louis Post-Dispatch reported Illinois poll results showing Barack with “an unheard-of 70 percent approval rating” and cited Cose’s essay as a prime example of the “runaway train of gushing publicity” Barack was receiving.

Pete Rouse had recruited veteran Democratic operative Steve Hildebrand, who had managed Al Gore’s 2000 Iowa campaign, to squire Barack to the Harkin steak fry, at the Warren County Fairgrounds in Indianola. “I thought, let’s have a little fun with this. I wanted to create a little buzz,” Rouse explained, and political reporters immediately took notice. Tom Harkin introduced Barack by citing the U2 musician Bono: “I couldn’t get him, so I settled for the second biggest rock star in America today!” as the huge turnout of thirty-five hundred attested. But “Obama turned in a rare mediocre performance,” David Mendell of the Tribune reported, offering only what Salon’s Walter Shapiro called “an artful pastiche of earlier rhetoric” and speaking for far too long—thirty-eight minutes. Still, Barack received what influential Des Moines Register political columnist David Yepsen called “a nearly unprecedented response,” and as he was “mobbed by fans,” another Register reporter caught Barack’s self-satisfied reaction: “I’m going to have to come back to Iowa. This is all right!” When Shapiro asked whether this meant he would change his thinking about 2008, Barack said, “nothing has changed in my mind. But you never know.” Shapiro immediately interrupted: “You mean things can change?” “Yeah, things can change,” Barack replied.

On the drive back to Des Moines’s airport, Steve Hildebrand told Barack how remarkable the Iowans’ excitement had been. “What does all this mean?” Steve asked. “I am not sure,” Barack answered. But Hildebrand, who had not previously met him, was now convinced that Barack was the Democrats’ best possible presidential candidate for 2008, and he began e-mailing friends to promote an Obama candidacy. Several days later, David Yepsen wrote that the steak fry crowd had included “a lot of people I’d never seen at a Democratic event. Young people. People of color. Most old pros will tell you that attracting new people to your campaign is one sign of a winner.” Yepsen believed “Obama’s got to look at the reception he got and think there just might be some chemistry happening” with Iowa Democrats. “Maybe I didn’t want to make the run this soon in life,” Yepsen imagined Barack thinking, “but the presidency is up for grabs, and I’ve got to take my chances now, not later. As the old saying goes: He who hesitates—is lost.”

As Barack’s remarks to David Axelrod even before his Iowa reception indicated, Barack thought there should be a serious discussion once the November 7 midterms took place. “We ought to see how this goes and after the election just talk about whether or not we ought to consider running,” Barack told his aides. Within a few days Pete Rouse sent a memo to Barack’s closest political advisers recommending they all assemble in Chicago on November 8.<sup>32</sup>

Barack resumed his jam-packed schedule of speaking appearances and congressional business. A weekend return to Illinois saw him hold his fifty-seventh town hall meeting, drawing a Friday-night crowd of more than thirteen hundred in Joliet. On September 26 Barack and Tom Coburn visited the White House to watch President Bush sign their Transparency Act into law. When journalists the next day asked Chicago mayor Richard Daley about Barack running for president, Daley responded that “everybody wants him. If he wants to run, he should run. I mean, why not?” The day after that, Oprah Winfrey, who was reading an advance copy of Barack’s book, chimed in to say, “I do wish he would run. And if he would run, I would do everything in my power to campaign for him,” because Barack’s “sense of hope and optimism for this country and what is possible for the United States is the kind of thing that I would like to get behind.”

In Washington, Barack spoke up in support of an amendment aimed at curtailing military tribunal proceedings for captured terrorists. “We don’t know when this war against terrorism might end” but “the fundamental human rights of the accused should be bigger than politics.” The procedure the U.S. was using for captives held at Guantánamo Bay, Cuba, “allows them no real chance to prove their innocence” and thus represented a “betrayal of American values.” Instead, Barack called for “a real military system of justice that would sort out the suspected terrorists from the accidentally accused” who had ended up in U.S. custody.

A pair of weekend town hall meetings back in Illinois also allowed Barack to hop across the Mississippi River and campaign for a Democratic congressional candidate in Davenport, Iowa. National journalists like Time magazine’s Joe Klein were in tow, and in Rockford, Register Star political editor Chuck Sweeny told Klein, “Obama is reaching out. He’s saying the other side isn’t evil. You can’t imagine how powerful a message that is for an audience like this.” In the Quad Cities, longtime Democratic activist Bill Gluba told Klein that people’s reactions to Barack reminded him of when he had driven New York senator Robert F. Kennedy around Davenport in May 1968. “I’ll never forget the way people reacted to Kennedy. Never seen anything like it since—until this guy.”

When a local reporter asked Barack if he would run in 2008, he responded, “I’ll let you know.” Speaking privately with Klein, Barack said that once his upcoming book tour and the November 7 election were over, “I will think about how I can be most useful to the country and how I can reconcile that with being a good dad and a good husband . . . I haven't completely decided or unraveled that puzzle yet." Klein was struck by "the elaborate intellectual balancing mechanism" that Barack "applies to every statement and gesture, to every public moment of his life." Barack, like fellow African Americans Colin Powell, Tiger Woods, Oprah Winfrey, and Michael Jordan, all "transcend racial stereotypes," Klein wrote. Black academic John McWhorter believed that race was the very core of Barack's appeal. "The key factor that galvanizes people around the idea of Obama for president is, quite simply, that he is black," McWhorter stated. Absent his blackness, Barack would just be "some relatively anonymous rookie," and thus "Obama is being considered as presidential timber not despite his race, but because of it."

But to Joe Klein, watching people's reactions to Barack in Rockford, Rock Island, and Davenport, Barack was "an American political phenomenon," who was "the political equivalent of a rainbow—a sudden preternatural event inspiring both awe and ecstasy." Klein's Time cover story stressed that Barack was "not a screechy partisan. Indeed, he seems obsessively eager to find common ground with conservatives." Oklahoma's Tom Coburn agreed, telling another journalist that "Barack's got the capability . . . and the pizzazz and the charisma to be a leader of America, not a leader of Democrats."<sup>33</sup>

Sitting down with Oprah Winfrey to tape a long interview for broadcast during his book tour, Barack expressed dismay at "this celebrity culture" that "gobbles you up." Barack worried about saying "what they want to hear, as opposed to you trying to stay in touch with that deepest part of you, that kernel of truth inside," invoking again the Borges phrase he had recited to Jacob Weisberg three months earlier. "I think what's happened is that we are so interested in spin and we're less interested in facts," but "the country is not as divided as Washington . . . not as divided as those cable news shows make it out to be." Barack complained about seeing erectile dysfunction ads during hours when children could be watching television and noted that "one of the tragedies of Africa is that the relationship between men and women, I think, has broken down. There's a lot of sexual violence, a lot of AIDS is caused by women whose husbands are bringing it home to them." Michelle told Oprah that the Kenya "trip was overwhelming for me," but that their daughters "just sort of took it all in stride." The girls were so "patient" that "we have to be careful to really structure boundaries for them" because if not "they'd let their time be eaten up by other things. So it's really up to us to protect that time, to make sure that we demand for them what they don't demand for themselves." But Michelle saw her family's greatest challenge as "how do you make sure . . . that you don't . . . get swept up in this celebrity, that you don't get caught up in the hype . . . that you remain centered and focused."

In Illinois, headlines like "'Obama Fever' Grips Peoria" attested to Barack's popularity as he campaigned for local candidates. The Peoria Journal Star lauded Barack as "a veritable national celebrity," and the Champaign News-Gazette complimented him as "an attractive, intelligent guy who conducts his politics in a gentlemanly fashion" and "shows great promise." But the News-Gazette cited questions concerning Alexi Giannoulias's "family links to organized crime figures" as an example of Barack's "lack of experience and seasoned judgment" and said it would be "the height of folly" for Barack to run for president. When Barack campaigned in Kansas City for Democratic Senate candidate Claire McCaskill, a local columnist praised him as "an icon of the American Dream," but back in Metro East the Belleville News-Democrat took note of that coverage and complained that "Obama always seems to be making headlines in places other than Illinois."

The next day, following a media advisory that U.S. attorney Patrick Fitzgerald would be holding a 1:00 P.M. press conference, Illinois headlines focused not on Barack but on his friend Tony Rezko: “Top Blagojevich Adviser Indicted.” Six days earlier a federal grand jury had returned a twenty-four-count, sixty-five-page criminal indictment against Rezko, charging him with trying to extort more than $7.5 million in contract kickbacks and campaign contributions to Illinois’s governor. With Tony out of the country and his whereabouts unknown, the indictment initially was issued under seal, but the U.S. attorney labeled the crimes committed by Rezko a “pay-to-play scheme on steroids.”

Chicago journalists had expected this shoe to drop ever since Tony’s pal Stuart Levine had been indicted months earlier, but the charges focused white-hot attention on Rezko’s political patrons, especially Rod Blagojevich. Tony’s former business partner Dan Mahru told the Tribune that the man he first met in 1989 had for years “worked so hard” to help his extended family. “But the Tony Rezko I knew after the governor got elected was not the same person. He changed,” Mahru explained. A quick Tribune tally showed that Rezko and his companies had contributed at least $385,000 to Illinois politicians since 1994, and Barack’s communications director Robert Gibbs immediately announced that Barack’s federal campaign fund would divest itself of the $11,500 that Tony had donated to Barack’s 2004 Senate race.

A Sun-Times gossip columnist wrote that “Rezko is hurt by Obama’s lack of support since reports surfaced” of the federal probe, and competing newspapers struggled to collate just how much Tony had raised for Barack from friends and business associates, with reliable tallies reaching as high as $200,000. Eight days later, FBI agents took Rezko into custody at Chicago’s O’Hare Airport as soon as his plane taxied to the gate. One Democratic legislator noted that even two years earlier “it wasn’t a secret that Tony Rezko was a very connected moneyman in the Blagojevich administration who was coming under increased scrutiny.” Asked about Barack’s friendship with Tony, Illinois campaign reform advocate Cindi Canary expressed dismay. “It surprised me that late in the game he continued to take contributions from somebody who was under a rather dark cloud in the state.”<sup>34</sup>

The same morning that the Rezko headlines dominated Chicago newspapers’ front pages, the Tribune ran a page-3 story previewing Barack’s new book, The Audacity of Hope—its title echoing a Jeremiah Wright sermon first preached years earlier. An advance review in Publishers Weekly had dismissed the book as a “sonorous manifesto” offering “muddled, uninspiring proposals” that represented only “tepid Clintonism.” With its official publication date set for Tuesday, October 17, Barack on Monday made a quick trip to Indianapolis for a fund-raising luncheon before returning to Chicago for an evening book party at the home of Valerie Jarrett’s parents, Jim and Barbara Bowman—just like eleven years earlier with Dreams. When radio executive Melody Spann Cooper asked Barack about a presidential race, he said, “I don’t think Michelle is going to let me do this.” Jarrett remembered that when the time came for Barack to offer some brief remarks, he “started to say he was sorry to have been away from his family so much . . . and began crying so hard he couldn’t go on.”

In Tuesday morning’s New York Times, Michiko Kakutani wrote that portions of Audacity “read like outtakes from a stump speech” and that the book “occasionally slips into . . . flabby platitudes” that were “little more than fuzzy statements of the obvious.” A Los Angeles Times review was somewhat kinder, calling Audacity “an easy-reading, congenial book that is halfway successful,” but adding that too many of Barack’s proposals “are incremental, timid, tangential—anything but audacious.” But early reviewers often missed those brief occasions when Audacity offered refreshing political honesty—“much of what ails the inner city involves a breakdown in culture that will not be cured by money alone”—and bracing self-criticism: “as a consequence of my fund-raising I became more like the wealthy donors I met.” Barack acknowledged that “I serve as a blank screen on which people of vastly different political stripes project their own views,” and “for the broad public at least, I am who the media says I am. I say what they say I say. I become who they say I’ve become.” Barack conceded that “I don’t consider George Bush a bad man” and admitted that “it is my obligation . . . to remain open to the possibility that my unwillingness to support gay marriage is misguided.”

But without a doubt by far the most outspoken of Audacity’s nine topical chapters was the one on race. “The collapse of the two-parent black household,” with 54 percent of African American children now living in single-parent homes, “is occurring at such an alarming rate” that black America’s divergence from the rest of the United States “has become a difference in kind, a phenomenon that reflects a casualness toward sex and child rearing among black men.” Warning that “conditions in the heart of the inner city are spinning out of control,” Barack wrote that “liberal policy makers and civil rights leaders” have “tended to downplay or ignore evidence that entrenched behavioral patterns among the black poor really were contributing to intergenerational poverty.” Barack suggested that “perhaps the single biggest thing we could do to reduce such poverty is to encourage teenage girls to finish high school and avoid having children out of wedlock.” More broadly, Audacity also insisted that “proposals that solely benefit minorities . . . can’t serve as the basis for the kinds of sustained, broad-based political coalitions needed to transform America.”<sup>35</sup>

As Barack’s book tour commenced, Illinois seatmate Dick Durbin renewed his call for Barack to run. “I said to him, ‘Do you really think sticking around the Senate for four more years and casting a thousand more votes will make you more qualified for president?’” Barack responded that “it’s a family decision,” but other voices echoed Durbin. A Chicago Sun-Times reporter wrote, “Why wait? Obama’s stock has never been higher,” even though “he is very untested. He has never even had a tough, adversarial press conference.” Springfield’s State Journal-Register agreed, citing Barack’s “ability to inspire and touch people,” and advising “Run, Sen. Obama, run.” The Chicago Tribune, praising Barack for “beautifully” handling his first nineteen months as a U.S. senator, singled out how he had “not strayed from his early message that America must rise above angry partisanship.”

In the national press, conservative New York Times columnist David Brooks echoed the Journal-Register in a column headlined “Run, Barack, Run.” Declaring that “Obama is a new kind of politician” and “a mega-hyped phenomenon that lives up to the hype,” Brooks asserted that “the times will never again so completely require the gifts that he possesses.” Fellow Times columnist Frank Rich concurred, saying “of course he should run,” because Barack “is Bill Clinton without the baggage.” African American columnist Clarence Page advised “Seize the day . . . I hope you run . . . you may never again see this many people who are this eager for you to run. Just don’t expect us to be nice to you after you decide to do it.”

On October 19, Barack blanketed the airwaves from dawn until midnight, beginning with NBC’s Today show. Barack rued the impact of the nation’s capital. “The minute you arrive in Washington, suddenly there are all these forces, whether it’s the media or parties or the need to raise money, that kind of tamp down those basic human responses that you have towards other people.” On NPR’s All Things Considered, Barack told host Michele Norris that “there’s a strong impulse when you’re in public life to try to control your image as much as possible.” Regarding Audacity, Barack said, “I’m sure that if you asked my wife whether I adequately listed my failings in the book she would say no, that she could supplement it substantially.” Fund-raising was a never-ending problem. “My preference would be that we’ve got public financing of campaigns, and nobody has to raise money whatsoever.” Failing that, “the question then you constantly have to ask yourself is, are the means that you’re using to make sure you’re competitive in elections in any way undermining those core values that brought you into politics in the first place? I feel confident that hasn’t happened, but it’s something you constantly have to monitor.” A presidential run has “got to be based on you feeling that somehow you can be useful, that you can offer something that is unique and will help create a better life for the people you seek to represent. And those are questions that I’m constantly asking myself.”

On CNN’s Larry King Live, Barack explained that “I’ve got a wife at home who is more interested in whether I rinsed out the dishes and put them in the dishwasher” than in his public acclaim. “This has been a very unproductive Congress since I’ve arrived,” but Barack thought his Africa trip and public HIV test had been highly valuable. “I thought that was probably the best investment of fifteen minutes that I’d ever make,” because across Africa “men continue to oftentimes abuse woman, have multiple partners, and so there’s a whole situation in terms of how men treat women that has to be dealt with.” Barack told King that “faith is very important in my life on a daily basis,” and that after November 7 he would focus on 2008. “I love that idea of deciding what will be most useful.”

With PBS late-night TV host Charlie Rose, Barack explained that “what I’m really trying to do here is to see, can I change the political culture? . . . What we have now is a surplus amount of conflict that is manufactured. It’s manufactured in television ads, it’s manufactured in terms of how the parties portray each other.” Regarding 2008, “when you decide to run for president . . . you are saying to the American people, ‘I am giving my life to you’ . . . and that’s not a decision that I think you can or should make solely on the basis of ambition. It transcends ambition.”

The next day, when a questioner asked Barack what his greatest fear was as a politician, he answered, “my greatest fear, I think, is that I lose track of that voice: who I am and what my values are and what I care most deeply about.” At a Kennedy Library Q&A in Boston, New York Times columnist Bob Herbert cited Barack’s previous night appearances with King and Rose. “It’s a bit much, isn’t it?” Barack replied as the audience laughed. “That’s what my wife says, anyway: ‘I am fed up with reading about you.’” Barack explained, “I actually find the attention and seeing my name in the papers and the stuff that feeds your ego less satisfying as time goes on.” Concerning the presidency, “that office is so different from any other office on the planet that you have to understand that if you seek that office, you have to be prepared to give your life to it. . . . The bargain that any president, I think, strikes with the American people is ‘You give me this office, and in turn my fears, doubts, insecurities, foibles, need for sleep, family life, vacations, leisure is gone. I am giving myself to you,’” and “you don’t make that decision unless you are prepared to make that sacrifice, that trade-off, that bargain.”

As he had before, Barack explained to Herbert how the U.S. Senate was less satisfying than his years in Springfield. “When I was in the state legislature in Illinois, every senator had to be on the floor on every bill. And the sponsor would stand up and present it, and anybody could ask questions . . . so you’d actually have a sense of deliberation.” On Capitol Hill, “that almost never happens on the floor of the Senate” and that was a “disappointment.”<sup>36</sup>

As Barack traveled the country for book signings and Democratic campaign rallies, two Philadelphia events on October 21 produced an Inquirer news story telling readers that Barack was “as handsome as John F. Kennedy and as charismatic as Bill Clinton.” He offered “a schoolboy’s charm and a movie star’s smile,” and reporter Christine Schiavo quoted a fifty-three-year-old man as explaining, “You feel like you’re in the presence of greatness when you’re around him.” Scheduled to appear the next morning on NBC’s Meet the Press, Barack spoke by conference call with Robert Gibbs, David Axelrod, and Axelrod’s partner David Plouffe about the likelihood that host Tim Russert would confront him with his January declaration that he would not run in 2008. Barack told his aides he considered such a race “unlikely,” but “Why don’t I just tell the truth? Say I had no intention of even thinking about running when I was on the show in January, but things have changed, and I will give it some thought after the 2006 election.”

On the air with Russert, Barack said it was “important not to buy into your own hype,” and “I’ve got a wife who knocks me down a peg any time I start thinking what they’re writing about me is true.” When Russert raised the presidency, Barack explained that “most of the time it seems that the president has maybe 10 percent of his agenda set by himself and 90 percent of it set by circumstances.” Asked about greatness, Barack replied that “when I think about great presidents, I think about those who transformed how we think about ourselves as a country in fundamental ways,” who “transformed the culture and not simply promoted one or two particular issues.” The presidency “can’t be something that you pursue on the basis of vanity and ambition. I think there’s a certain soberness and seriousness required when you think about that office that is unique.”

As he had with Bob Herbert, Barack reiterated that as a candidate, “the bargain you’re making with the American people is that ‘You put me in this office and my problems are not relevant. My job is to think about your problems.’” Just as expected, Russert presented Barack with the videotape of his January denial. “Given the responses that I’ve been getting over the last several months, I have thought about the possibility, but I have not thought about it with the seriousness and depth that I think is required. . . . After November 7, I’ll sit down and consider it.” Russert pressed the point. “It’s fair to say you’re thinking about running for president in 2008?” “It’s fair, yes,” Barack agreed. “I am still at the point where I have not made a decision to pursue higher office, but it is true that I have thought about it over the last several months.” “So it sounds as if the door has opened a bit,” Russert observed. “A bit,” Barack replied.

On Monday morning every major newspaper headlined Barack’s comments to Russert. The New York Times quoted Steve Hildebrand recounting how “the reaction that Obama got in Iowa was like nothing I’ve ever seen before with another politician.” Times columnist Bob Herbert, reflecting on his Boston Q&A with Barack, warned he would have to “develop the kind of toughness and savvy that are essential in the ugly and brutal combat of a presidential campaign.” Beginning a West Coast swing that would take him from Phoenix to Denver, San Francisco, Seattle, and Los Angeles, Barack told a magazine editors’ conference that his family might well not be prepared for a presidential race. “It’s not clear that they are ready for it, or that I even want to put them in a position where they’ve got to make that decision.” Michelle “cares more about whether I’m a good father and a good husband than she does about whether I’m a U.S. senator.”

In a lengthy television taping, Barack told host Tavis Smiley that on Meet the Press, it would have been “foolish of me to pretend that somehow I hadn’t thought about it.” Yet “the presidency is a unique position,” one “that consumes you, it consumes your family,” and “you have to feel that you are prepared in a very internal conversation between you and your maker, and your family.” Barack confessed that “I haven’t even thought through the process to think it through. . . . I need to take a look at what message do I have that would be unique, and am I the right messenger for it? Most profoundly, I’d have to talk to Michelle and my two little girls and find out whether this is something that they’re signed up for.” On the issues, “the most important area where we have not made serious efforts is when it comes to serious inner-city poverty,” especially with regard to opportunities for ex-offenders. Barack twice cited “the capacity to disagree without being disagreeable,” and while he stressed avoiding “the demonization of the other side,” he nonetheless attacked the “radically ideological Bush administration.”<sup>37</sup>

In Denver, more than five hundred people began lining up as early as 5:00 A.M. to have Barack autograph their copies of Audacity. “We need healing, and this man can bring it about,” one customer told a reporter. Back in Chicago, longtime cheerleader Newton Minow penned a Tribune op-ed headlined “Why Obama Should Run for President.” Up until Minow happened to see a rebroadcast of Barack’s Iowa steak fry appearance on C-SPAN, “I did not think he should run for president,” Minow explained. But watching Iowans’ enthusiasm for Barack had changed his mind, and Minow called him, saying, “You ought to go for it now.”

In the Washington Post, conservative columnist Charles Krauthammer also called for Barack to run, predicting that while he would not win in 2008—“the country will simply not elect a novice in wartime”—a loss would “put him irrevocably on a path to the presidency,” in part because “there are more Americans who would take special pride in a black president than there are those who would reject one because of racism.” Writing in the Financial Times, Jacob Weisberg, who had so memorably interviewed Barack four months earlier, asserted that the nationwide acclaim that had greeted Barack’s book tour “has overthrown much of the conventional wisdom about what is likely to happen in the 2008 U.S. presidential campaign.” If Barack announced his candidacy, he “will rapidly become the de facto Democratic frontrunner,” eclipsing Senate colleague Hillary Rodham Clinton and former vice presidential nominee John Edwards.

In Marin County, north of San Francisco, eleven hundred people paid $125 per person for a copy of Audacity and the opportunity to hear Barack address a noontime charity fund-raiser. The following morning in Seattle, more than two thousand people heard Barack tell a political rally, “We’ve got to have hope. We’ve got to have a belief in things not seen.” Later that day, a book signing attracted a sellout crowd of twenty-five hundred. On Saturday morning in Austin, Texas, people began lining up at 6:00 A.M. for a Barack book signing in the Texas capitol. Barack made it back to Chicago in time to tardily join Michelle at a gala sixty-fifth-birthday celebration for Rev. Jesse Jackson at the South Shore Cultural Center. CNN correspondent Don Lemon buttonholed an exuberant Michelle. “I love this man. I grew up in this man’s house. I’ve seen it all,” exclaimed Michelle in recalling her childhood friendship with Jackson’s daughter Santita. Then Lemon asked, “Are you ready to be first lady?” and Michelle clammed up. “No comment.”

Barack complained to Chicago Tribune books editor Elizabeth Taylor that “I never get a chance to read anymore,” and when Taylor asked what books had most impacted him, Barack cited Gandhi’s Truth, calling Erik Erikson’s psychoanalytic biography “a great book.” On Monday morning, Barack was at a Borders in downtown Minneapolis, where the store quickly sold out of its one thousand copies of Audacity. “I saw him on Oprah,” one student told a reporter. “I’m not really into politics, but I like inspiring people, and he inspires me.” At a subsequent rally in suburban Rochester, Minnesota, Barack was “mobbed for autographs,” and on Tuesday in Milwaukee fifteen hundred people braved a chilly wind at a riverfront park to hear Barack speak on behalf of Democratic Wisconsin governor Jim Doyle. U.S. senator Herb Kohl told the crowd “we might just have a future president in town,” and Milwaukee mayor Tom Barrett said the enthusiasm was “something we haven’t seen for decades.” An older woman told a journalist that Barack was “our Jack Kennedy,” and a New York Times correspondent called Barack “the prize catch of the midterm campaign.”<sup>38</sup>

But trouble was brewing back in Chicago as Tribune reporters discovered that the vacant lot adjoining Barack’s new home was owned by newly indicted Tony Rezko. Barack later recounted, “I called him to let him know that ‘Look, you may be getting inquiries about this, and so it’s important for you to be able to talk to folks about your intentions in terms of development and so forth,’” but now Tony was not taking anyone’s questions. Chicago columnists came down hard. Revisiting the purchase prices of the two properties, the Tribune’s John Kass concluded that “Obama bought his home at a $300,000 discount. Rezko bought the adjoining lot from the same sellers at full price. One got a juicy bargain. The other overpaid.”

Appearing on NPR’s Talk of the Nation, Barack alluded to the criticism, saying, “there’re going to be some days where” as a politician “you get knocked around a little bit,” and the next morning a Tribune editorial called for Barack “to explain, fully and quickly” whether Rezko “in effect subsidized Obama’s purchase of the opulent house and also provided an abutting private preserve that adds to its ambience.” Late Friday Barack told the Sun-Times he had not spoken with Tony for more than six months, and that neither he nor Michelle had ever represented Rezko or his various companies. In a written statement, Barack said “it was a mistake to have been engaged with him at all in this or any other personal business dealing that would allow him, or anyone else, to believe that he had done me a favor.” Barack added that “I consider this a mistake on my part, and I regret it,” but a Crain’s Chicago Business editorial criticized the conjoined purchases as “a colossally stupid move.”

But Barack’s hectic schedule of Democratic campaign rallies, especially in states where Senate challengers were waging competitive races against incumbent Republicans, left him little time to ponder the Rezko criticism. In Richmond, Virginia, he “received a rock star’s welcome” and “thunderous cheers” when speaking on behalf of Democrat Jim Webb. A State Journal-Register poll of Illinois voters showed that 59 percent would vote for Barack for president, although only 50 percent believed he should run in 2008. Appearing in Cleveland with Ohio Senate candidate Sherrod Brown on Saturday, Barack told Brown’s wife Connie Schultz that a 2008 race was doubtful. “You know, Michelle really does not want me to do this.” Indeed, when Barack first told Michelle about the upcoming Wednesday meeting to discuss a run, “I said ‘No way. Absolutely not.’ The last thing I wanted was for my girls to have their worlds turned upside down. It broke my heart just to think about it,” Michelle recalled. “Let’s not do this now,” she told her husband.

But on Sunday, November 5, two days before Election Day, Barack made his third trip that fall to Iowa, giving “a boisterous speech” on behalf of Democratic gubernatorial candidate Chet Culver. “After the election, I’m going to sit down and give the possibility the serious consideration it deserves,” Barack told reporters, and discuss it “with my family, with my pastor.” A Washington Post story surveying the fall campaign efforts of possible 2008 contenders stated that “Obama has generated rapturous enthusiasm among Democrats,” and that “his success on the campaign trail in recent weeks has added to his cachet.” The Post also calculated that Barack’s fund-raising efforts had raised a total of $3.6 million for Democratic candidates. On Tuesday, Barack spent the evening watching election returns and making congratulatory calls to Democratic winners. As the hours passed, it became clear that Democrats had won control of the Senate, defeating six Republican incumbents to take a 51–49 majority. Democrats also won control of the House, seizing thirty Republican seats, and in Illinois young Alexi Giannoulias won election as state treasurer. Savoring how his party now controlled both houses of Congress, Barack told the New York Times, “Democrats have a wonderful opportunity to show that we have an agenda for change.”<sup>39</sup>

On Wednesday Barack headed to David Axelrod’s office in River North to have lunch with mayoral brother and former commerce secretary Bill Daley, who told him, “You gotta run.” But the day’s main event was still ahead: an afternoon meeting in Axelrod’s conference room that Pete Rouse had begun pulling together weeks earlier. In attendance were Axelrod’s partner David Plouffe, the enthusiastic Steve Hildebrand, Robert Gibbs, former Senate staffer Alyssa Mastromonaco, who was now at Hopefund, close friends Marty Nesbitt and Valerie Jarrett, and Michelle. Rouse had prepared a six-point memo to guide the discussion, but Barack had three uppermost questions. Number one, “Could I win?” especially against Hillary Rodham Clinton. “How would you organize a campaign against the best brand name in Democratic politics?” Second, what would be the impact on his family? “What would the schedule look like? How much money would I have to raise?” Michelle asked whether Barack could get home to see his daughters each weekend. Hildebrand eagerly said yes, but Plouffe, who thought that running was very unlikely, interjected a firm no. “If you run, you’ll never see your family, you’ll be under pressure the likes of which you can’t imagine, and it will be absolutely miserable from a personal standpoint.” Marty Nesbitt reacted jokingly to that litany: “I’m so glad I’m not running for president.” Barack immediately corrected him: “Oh, but you are. This is going to affect your life, too.”

But Barack’s third question was the toughest: “Should I win? Is there some unique message, something distinct enough from the other candidates, that would justify me running this soon?” Over the past three weeks, Barack had come to believe that the answer to this question was yes. From the Iowa steak fry onward, throughout all of his book tour and campaign events, “there was just this remarkable, visceral response” crowds had shown toward him. “What it told me was that people really were looking for something different.” Yet Michelle worried that even if she could be convinced that a campaign would still allow Barack to be the father she wanted her daughters to have, “can we actually chart a course to victory? I want you to show me how you’re going to do this. You need to show me that this is not going to be a bullshit, fly-by-night campaign,” one participant recalled. Barack spoke up, but Michelle cut him off. “We’re talking about you right now.” Barack finally said that the question going forward was “whether we can build not a winning campaign, but a credible one,” yet his tone was measured. “Well, I think it’s highly unlikely that I’m going to do this, but we should go and do due diligence on this and have another meeting in a month.”

Barack, Michelle, Nesbitt, and Jarrett headed to a nearby Italian restaurant for dinner. Plouffe left the meeting thinking that a race remained improbable, but Barack “was more serious about running than I had anticipated.” David Axelrod agreed: “I think he wants to run,” but “Michelle is the wild card.” At dinner,

Michelle voiced her doubts and worries to Jarrett and Nesbitt, especially regarding Barack's physical safety plus the impact on their daughters. Eventually Valerie pushed back. "Let's try this from a different perspective. Michelle, let's say Barack answers all your questions to your full satisfaction," that "he's got an answer for every one of them. Are you in?" Michelle's reply surprised her husband: "I'm in a hundred and ten percent," but she quickly turned to Barack. "You're going to be really specific with me. You're going to tell me exactly how we're going to work it out" before she would give her blessing for a race.<sup>40</sup>

The next morning the New York Times reported that The Audacity of Hope would be the number 1 hardback nonfiction bestseller in the newspaper's next Sunday rankings. Calling the book "something of a publishing stunner," the paper reported that to date Audacity had sold 182,000 copies. With 860,000 copies in print, the book's success promised to increase Barack's royalty income even further. But his focus was elsewhere. Buoyed by the previous afternoon's discussion, Barack was on the phone to Democratic activists in Iowa and New Hampshire, asking what John Norris, who had run John Kerry's 2004 Iowa campaign, called "earnest" questions about the Democratic race. In New Hampshire, state party chairman Kathy Sullivan and Jim Demers, Dick Gephardt's former New Hampshire campaign chair, received calls. "Kathy, this is Barack Obama. I might be coming to New Hampshire." Sullivan had been thinking about holding a December event to celebrate Democrats' November victories, and she immediately invited Barack to address it.

Returning to Washington, Democrats' new Senate majority allowed Barack to trade in his membership on the Environment and Public Works Committee while adding two more appealing ones—Health, Education, Labor and Pensions, and Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs—while retaining Foreign Relations. Meeting privately with a dozen or so D.C. friends, many of whom he had known since Harvard, Barack found the group hesitant about his presidential prospects. One African American expressed doubt that the country was ready to elect a black president, and several comments obliquely touched on Barack's safety. Speaking with the Associated Press, Barack remarked that "the people who are most hesitant about this oftentimes are African-Americans because they feel protective of me."

Appearing on CNBC with Tim Russert, Barack said that "the way we gerrymander congressional districts now has a big impact on the inability of the parties to get together, because if every district is drawn 70 percent Republican or 70 percent Democratic, then the congressional representatives in those districts don't really feel rewarded by working with the other side" and instead fear a primary challenge. Barack favored "nonpartisan line-drawing" that would "make all these districts competitive." Similarly, "reducing the impact of money on politics would have an impact because I think that part of the incentive here in Washington is to please the best-organized and most vocal interest groups. And they oftentimes aren't representing the common good," most strongly backing legislators "who are most orthodox in how they approach problems."

When Russert asked about his family, Barack explained "this is probably the one area of my life where I feel the most nagging doubt because I'm gone from home a lot. I like to tell myself that it's worth the sacrifice," that "the good that I'm doing in public office offsets" missing his daughters' ballet recitals and soccer games. Describing Michelle as "a tough woman" who "constantly keeps me in line," Barack said, "she's not somebody who's naturally political" but "tolerates it." With "as much guilt as I already feel sometimes about being away, running for president" promised to be "extraordinarily stressful" for his family, "so that's at the center of my considerations." As he had told his aides in Chicago, seeking to be

Americans' president would require "a particular message" as well as "a belief in how you can improve their lives that is unique" and that he could "execute better than anybody else out there." His newfound status, Barack emphasized, is "something that has happened very rapidly. It's not something that's gone according to my own internal clock and timetable." Russert asked, "Has it changed you?" "So far it hasn't, I don't think," Barack replied. "I ask my wife and I ask my close friends whether it has, and their estimation is that no, I'm still recognizably me."<sup>41</sup>

David Axelrod told an AP reporter that "if he decides to run," Barack "can put the money together, and he can attract the talent." In fact, Pete Rouse and Steve Hildebrand already had already reached out to Julianna Smoot, the finance director for Tom Daschle's unsuccessful 2004 reelection race, to ask her to head up Barack's fund-raising if he indeed ran. In a major speech to the Chicago Council on Global Affairs, Barack addressed "a way forward in Iraq," "a conflict that grows more deadly and more chaotic with each passing day. A conflict that has only increased the terrorist threat it was supposed to help contain." Noting that "al Qaeda is successfully using the war in Iraq to recruit a new generation of terrorists," Barack called for "a strategy no longer driven by ideology or by politics, but one that's based on a realistic assessment of the sobering facts on the ground." Any belief that Iraq would become a "flourishing democracy" was "an ideological fantasy," and "my deepest suspicions about this war's inception have been confirmed and exacerbated."

With Iraq now "quickly spiraling out of control," there are "no good options left in this war," and Barack called for a withdrawal of U.S. forces, to begin within four to six months. He also warned that Afghanistan was "backsliding . . . toward chaos" on account of "our lack of focus and commitment." Appearing live on CNN right after his address, Barack asserted that "almost every problem that we've confronted is one that I anticipated" in his October 2002 antiwar speech. "I seem to have gotten it right," Barack told correspondent Don Lemon, who then asked about 2008. "I don't have a particular timetable," Barack replied, but when Lemon said "Very soon?" Barack responded, "absolutely."

Eight days later David Axelrod gave Barack a twelve-page memo making the case for why he should run. George W. Bush had been a "hyper-partisan, ideological, and unyielding" president, and voters were yearning for the opposite:

You are uniquely suited for these times. No one among the potential candidates within our party is as well positioned to rekindle our lost idealism as Americans and pick up the mantle of change. No one better represents a new generation of leadership, more focused on practical solutions to today's challenges than old dogmas of the left and right. That is why your convention speech resonated so beautifully. And it remains the touchstone for our campaign moving forward.

All told, "this is a splendid time to be an outsider. That's one of the principal reasons to run now." Hillary Clinton "is a formidable candidate," but "she is not a healing figure" and "will have a hard time escaping the well-formulated perceptions of her among swing voters as a left-wing ideologue." Then Axelrod turned up the volume. "History is replete with potential candidates for the presidency who waited too long rather than examples of people who ran too soon. . . . You will never be hotter than you are right now" and "there are many reasons to believe that if you are ever to run for the presidency, this is the time."

Axelrod warned that with Dreams, “the disarming admissions of weakness in your book will become fodder for unflattering, irritating inquiries,” such as “How many times did you use cocaine . . . When did you stop?” Such questions will be more than an unpleasant inconvenience. It goes to your willingness and ability to put up with something you have never experienced on a sustained basis: criticism. At the risk of triggering the very reaction that concerns me, I don't know if you are Muhammad Ali or Floyd Patterson when it comes to taking a punch.

You care far too much what is written and said about you. You don't relish combat when it becomes personal and nasty. When the largely irrelevant Alan Keyes attacked you, you flinched.

In conclusion, Axelrod contended that “all of this may be worth enduring for the chance to change the world. And many, many people who believe in you are ready to march because we think the world so badly needs the change and leadership you have to offer. . . . If you pull the trigger, I am confident that we can put together a great campaign and campaign message of which we can all be proud.”<sup>42</sup>

The next day, New Hampshire Democrats announced that Barack would visit the state to speak at their December 10 rally. Evangelical pastor Rick Warren invited Barack to join him and ultraconservative Kansas senator Sam Brownback for a World AIDS Day summit at his Orange County megachurch. When Brownback greeted Barack by saying, “Welcome to my house,” Barack demonstrated his bona fides to the crowd: “Sam, this is my house too. This is God's house.” Telling the audience, “I don't demonize other folks,” Barack exclaimed that “faith is not just something you have, it's something you do.” The crowd was impressed, with one Christian journalist explaining that Barack “almost speaks here like a pastor. That's why he gets a standing ovation from an ardently, ardently pro-life audience” despite Barack's prochoice position.

In a front-page New York Times story headlined “Early ‘Maybe’ from Obama Jolts '08 Field,” Republican political consultant Mark McKinnon called Barack “the most interesting persona to appear on the political radar screen in decades.” Barack was “a walking, talking hope machine, and he may reshape American politics.” That evening liberal billionaire George Soros hosted a Manhattan session at which Barack met with a dozen top Democratic donors. In an editorial “Obama Should Run,” Barack's hometown Chicago Tribune joined the chorus. “When a leader evokes the enthusiasm that Obama does, he should recognize that he has something special to offer, not in 2012 or 2016, but right now.” Stating that Barack has “an approach that transcends party, ideology and geography,” the Tribune declared, “no one else has shown a comparable talent for appealing to the centrist instincts of the American people.” With “a voice that celebrates our common values instead of exaggerating our differences,” Barack's “magnetic style and optimism would draw many disenchanting Americans back into the political process. . . . He and the nation have little to lose and much to gain from his candidacy.”

Returning to Washington, Barack met privately with former secretary of state Colin Powell, who a decade earlier had refused to run for the presidency because of his wife's opposition. Barack also met former senator Tom Daschle for dinner at his favorite restaurant, Tosca, where they “took the kitchen table in the back where nobody could see us. We had a bottle of wine and a great meal and what was supposed to be a conversation that lasted about an hour I think went over three,” Daschle recalled. “I told him that I thought his lack of Washington experience was one of his greatest assets” and “that windows of opportunity for running for the presidency close quickly, and that he shouldn’t assume, if he passes up this window, that there will be another. I had that experience” and Daschle did not want “to see the same thing happen to him.”<sup>43</sup>

As Barack prepared to fly to New Hampshire for his Sunday Democratic event, he told the Associated Press “the whole prospect of a presidential race for me is not something I’ve engineered. I was on a different internal clock,” and “it’s only been in the last couple of months that the amount of interest in a potential candidacy reached the point where I had to consider seriously” actually running. Barack told the state’s largest newspaper that he believed people “are looking for somebody who is authentic,” for “a pragmatic politician rather than an ideologue.” David Axelrod told another journalist that Barack was doing “a lot of soul searching” in wrestling with multiple questions. “Some are very personal. Some are political. And some are the largest questions, about the contribution he thinks he can make.” Just as he had in his memo, Axelrod stressed that “I think this country is very hungry for new leadership that will take us past the kind of hyper-partisanship and hyper-ideological kind of politics we’ve seen” over the last decade.

On Saturday evening, December 9, Barack stayed in Chicago to attend Malia’s ballet recital before flying to Manchester and arriving close to midnight. A bookstore appearance in Portsmouth and a private reception at the state’s top law firm were on Sunday’s schedule in addition to the sold-out, two-thousand-person Democratic rally. New Hampshire governor John Lynch introduced Barack, telling the cheering crowd that “we originally scheduled the Rolling Stones . . . but then we canceled them when we realized Senator Obama would sell more tickets.” More than 150 journalists and twenty-two camera crews covered Barack’s remarks, with former Dover mayor Jack Buckley telling the Boston Globe that “I have never seen anything like this in my forty years of being active in politics.” He added that “if I were Hillary, I would be more than a little concerned,” and in Monday’s New York Times, reporter Adam Nagourney wrote that Barack had received “the kind of reception typically afforded a movie star,” one that was “nothing short of a spectacle.” Taking questions afterward, Barack said, “I want to take my time” on making a decision and brushed aside an inquiry about “Hussein”: “the American people are not concerned with middle names.” One journalist observed that Barack was “a politician who happens to be black, not a black politician,” and a conservative columnist warned that Barack was “an uncommonly opaque rock-star politician.” But veteran political reporter Walter Shapiro stated “something is happening around Obama that we have not seen in American politics for decades.”<sup>44</sup>

On Monday morning, David Axelrod’s warning about “unflattering, irritating inquiries” proved prescient when Crain’s Chicago Business ran a story headlined “Sen. Obama Sees No Hypocrisy in His Wife’s Post at a Firm That Does Business with Wal-Mart.” Three weeks earlier, in a gesture covered only by the Associated Press, Barack had endorsed the efforts of a union-backed group called Wake Up Wal-Mart, which was attacking the giant employer’s salaries and health benefits for its workers. TreeHouse Foods, whose board Michelle served on, sold more of its products to Wal-Mart than to any other retailer, and also had recently closed a pickle plant in La Junta, Colorado, costing 153 workers their jobs. Crain’s reporter Greg Hinz, noting Michelle’s $45,000-a-year board fee and the CEO’s $26 million annual salary, called TreeHouse a “company that pays its executives a very hefty amount of money while laying off mostly minority workers in an economically-deprived area.” Contacted by Hinz, Michelle claimed that “my income is pretty low compared to my peers,” and told Hinz “you wouldn’t ask that question if, like some people in politics, we had trust funds and were rich.” Four months later, the Obama’s IRS Form 1040 would show that Michelle’s 2006 income had totaled $324,000—$273,00 from the U of C Hospitals and an additional $51,000 from TreeHouse. La Junta mayor Don Rizzuto told Hinz that “if she and her husband are the champions of the little guy, it’s amazing what they’re doing.”

With a second and potentially decisive meeting of Barack’s closest advisers scheduled for Wednesday, December 13, Barack sat down with his brother-in-law Craig Robinson to talk about the pending decision. “Barack asked if I minded talking to Michelle about how this window of opportunity might not ever be available again,” Craig recounted. “He didn’t expect me to convince her, since he himself hadn’t been able to do that yet,” but Craig realized that a second, preliminary obstacle loomed too: Marian Robinson, who was among the many people who worried about Barack surviving a presidential run. Speaking first to his mother, Craig won her over to reluctant acceptance, but “you’ll never get Michelle to agree to it,” she told her son. Then Craig spoke with Michelle. “Just let him take his shot. You can’t deprive him of that. He wouldn’t hold you back if the roles were reversed.”

Over the course of more than an hour, Craig gradually wore down his younger sister’s opposition. As Michelle remembered her change of heart, she explained, “I would have felt guilty not doing it. I would have felt I was being selfish.” In the end she came to believe “I had no choice,” and Craig privately exulted over what he remembered as “that long but ultimately successful phone call.”<sup>45</sup>

On Monday Barack taped a special surprise appearance for that evening’s Monday Night Football telecast:

Good evening. I’m Senator Barack Obama. I’m here tonight to answer some questions about a very important contest that’s been weighing on the minds of the American people. This is a contest about the future, a contest between two very different philosophies, a contest that will ultimately be decided in America’s heartland. In Chicago they’re asking, ‘Does the new guy have the experience to lead us to victory?’ In St. Louis they’re wondering, ‘Are we facing a record that’s really so formidable, or is it all just a bunch of hype?’ Let me tell you, I’m all too familiar with these questions, so tonight I’d like to put all the doubts to rest. I would like to announce to my hometown of Chicago and all of America that I am ready for the Bears to go all the way, baby!

Barack put a Chicago Bears cap on his head during the last sentence. On Tuesday morning the segment was replayed on NBC’s Today show, with host Matt Lauer saying it “shows he’s got a sense of humor.”

The next day Barack’s closest advisers reconvened in David Axelrod’s conference room. Valerie Jarrett already had given Barack her verdict: “I think it’s a go. I think it’s your moment.” Pete Rouse recalled that Barack told the group, “I’m still inclined not to do this, but I’ve talked to Michelle about it, and if we’re going to do this at some point, this may be the best time. I’m worried about my daughters, how this will affect them.” Michelle concurred, but said that the family issues were manageable, and David Plouffe presented a draft budget, an early strategy outline, and a list of issues that would have to be tackled before any actual kickoff. Then Michelle turned to her husband to pose a bigger question. “You need to ask yourself why do you want to do this? What are you hoping to uniquely accomplish by getting the presidency?” Barack had a ready answer. “There are a lot of things I think I can accomplish, but two things I know. The first is, when I raise my hand and take that oath of office, there are millions of kids around this country who don’t believe that it would ever be possible for them to be president of the United States, and for them the world would change on that day. And the second thing is, I think the world would look at us differently the day I got elected. . . . I think I can help repair the damage that’s been done” to America’s international reputation during George Bush’s presidency. Some of Barack’s aides were more hesitant than Axelrod, Jarrett, and even Barack himself, but over the course of the discussion, it became clear that in Barack’s mind the odds were shifting modestly but perhaps decisively toward an affirmative decision. As the meeting ended, Barack said, “I think I’ve moved past the 50-50 mark and I’m inclined to do it.” His aides should continue planning, and “I’m going to go to Hawaii to think about it” during his family’s annual winter vacation.<sup>46</sup>

In Thursday morning’s Washington Post, conservative columnist George Will joined the chorus: “Run Now, Obama.” Will termed Hillary Rodham Clinton “the optimal opponent” for a challenger who “offers a tone of sweet reasonableness,” but in the conservative Washington Times, chief political correspondent Don Lambro warned that Barack seems “deeply risk-averse to getting into a principled fight about anything larger than himself.” In Chicago, Barack met with Mayor Richard Daley and then the editorial boards of the Tribune and the Sun-Times. At the Trib, Barack voiced the same question that Michelle had posed to him a day earlier: “Do I have something that is sufficiently unique to offer the country that it is worth putting my family through a presidential campaign?” Politically, “I think I would be a viable candidate. So that’s a threshold question, and I wouldn’t run if I didn’t think I could win.” Asked about Tony Rezko’s adjoining lot, Barack called the purchase of the ten-foot strip “stupid,” “a boneheaded move,” but the discussion focused on the questions he was pondering. “Do I have a particular ability to bring the country together around a pragmatic, commonsense agenda for change that probably has a generational element to it as well?”

African American columnist Clarence Page came away from the conversation reminding readers that “hardly anyone knows much about” Barack, but there was no question he was “sounding very much like a candidate.” Columnist John Kass saw Barack sneak outside to smoke and realized “I’d never see Obama alone again” if he ran. At the Sun-Times, Barack said he would have “a pretty good chance of winning the nomination” over Hillary Clinton and John Edwards, but conceded that his safety was “something that is on Michelle’s mind, and the minds of many of my friends.” Barack drolly added that “being shot, obviously . . . is the least attractive option.”

Barack also met with ABLE’s group of black entrepreneurs and with éminences grises Newton Minow and Abner Mikva at Minow’s office. “What Barack wanted to talk about was his concern about the impact of a run on Michelle and the girls. He was worried that he would not be able to spend time with them, and that the campaign could be disturbing for them. That was the biggest question in his mind,” Minow recounted. He and Mikva had helped raise three daughters apiece, and both men told Barack they thought he should run. “We both said to him that, as fathers, we thought that if he was going to run for president, this was the best time,” because it was “better to be away when your daughters are very young than when they’re teenagers, because our experience is that when a daughter really needs a father is when they’re teenagers.” Barack welcomed their advice. “That’s very interesting. I’m going to tell that to Michelle.” Minow added, “Besides, if you’re elected, you’ll be with your family all the time, because you'll all be living in the same place." In retrospect, "I think he'd made up his mind before he ever asked us," Minow explained. "I just think he wanted some reassurance," as "I could see he wanted to do it."<sup>47</sup>

Illinois seatmate Dick Durbin told reporters he was optimistic about Barack running, and Newsweek's Jonathan Alter, a Chicagoland native, heard reliable chatter that there were "certainly no red flags" from Michelle. Barack invited David Plouffe to his South Greenwood home one night to ask him to become campaign manager. "I won't make a final decision until the Hawaii trip. But I think it is all but a certainty that I'll run," Barack told him. Plouffe needed to mull the impact that job would have on his own young family, and the day before the Obamas headed to Honolulu, Barack met with Plouffe, Axelrod, and Gibbs at Axelrod's office. "I am 90 percent certain I am running. Maybe even higher. You guys should proceed quietly as if I am, and keep making progress on planning and sizing up potential personnel. . . . I want to mull it over a bit more while I'm away" and "when I get back in early January, I'll give you the final green light."

As a Wall Street Journal story noted, "the grass roots excitement" about an Obama candidacy, exemplified by Barack's "rock-star-like reception last week in New Hampshire," forced Hillary Rodham Clinton's campaign to consider how to respond if Barack did run. Even two months earlier, top strategist Mark Penn had called Barack "the biggest" potential surprise in the race, and now he gave Clinton an eleven-page memo, warning that "the national press is relatively hostile," "want to be king makers," and are looking for "someone 'new' who can be their own." Thus "Obama represents a serious challenge because at least for the moment he represents something big—an inspirational movement. But the more you analyze what he says, the more you wonder what is behind the hype. No big original ideas. No incredible accomplishments for others, only for himself. No one could fill the expectations that have been built up for him" and "all politics is an expectations game." Clinton's campaign should "research his flaws, hold our powder, see if he fades or does not run. Attacking him directly would backfire. His weakness is that if voters think about him [for] five minutes, they get that he was just a state senator and that he would be trounced by the big Republicans," because "Obama has not the experience to be a serious challenger to" Republican John McCain.

Calling for Obama to run but echoing Penn, New York magazine political writer John Heilemann observed that "for all his promise, Obama is basically an empty vessel." In the Senate, "the legislation he has offered has been uniformly mundane, marginal, and provincial." Barack's second bill to pass Congress—providing $104 million to promote democracy in the Congo—would be signed into law three days before Christmas without ceremony and with hardly a mention in the press. "How many times has he used his megaphone to advance a bold initiative or champion a controversial cause?" Heilemann asked. "Zero." The excitement about Barack "isn't issue-based: It's stylistic. His popularity is rooted in his calm, consensus-seeking deliberative demeanor and in his calls to common purpose."<sup>48</sup>

In Honolulu, Barack, Michelle, and their daughters, plus Chicago buddies Marty Nesbitt and Eric Whitaker, stayed at the Hyatt Regency in Waikiki. On December 19 Maya Soetoro-Ng told an AP reporter that Barack is "going to make his decision here and announce it to us." Playing almost daily at the Olomana Golf Links in Waimanalo, "it's a much needed time for reflection" for Barack, Maya explained. "He's got to figure out what he's going to do," and "I think he's trying to reconnect with family and get away from the excessive demands of his schedule." Maya said that she had "discussed the pros and cons of running for president" with her brother, "but he hasn't indicated his decision yet." On December 24 an unwelcome Chicago Tribune story highlighted how a prized internship in Barack's Senate office had gone to a daughter of Joseph Aramanda, who in 2004 had contributed $10,000 of Tony Rezko's money to Barack's Senate campaign. Other reports showed Barack tied for the lead with other Democratic contenders in early polls in both Iowa and New Hampshire. David Plouffe called Barack to accept his offer to manage the campaign, but over the phone "I thought I was hearing a guy experiencing huge second thoughts," Plouffe remembered. "He said he was still much more likely than not but would need to spend more time thinking about it during the remaining days of his vacation." Staying in a huge Waikiki hotel had turned out to be a mixed blessing, for now scores of strangers recognized Barack, even in Honolulu. "I really can't go down the street. This feels different," Barack told Plouffe, who replied that if Barack ran, "your life is going to change forever. You'll lose all privacy."

Michelle got her husband to once again promise he would quit smoking if he ran, but Barack spent as much time golfing as focusing on his big decision. Playing at Waialae Country Club on December 27, Barack "was very relaxed and he had a great time on the golf course," club president and state appellate judge James Burns told the Advertiser for a story headlined "Obama's Visit All About Golfing, Not Presidency." "He had some good shots and some bad shots. He's very friendly and everyone wanted to say hello to him, meet him and take pictures with him." By phone with Valerie Jarrett in Chicago, Barack signaled that he was leaning strongly toward a run, saying "this is pretty much done," but Maya now declined to tell the AP that any decision would be made while Barack remained in Hawaii, explaining that "the world will find out soon enough."<sup>49</sup>

By New Year's Day, 2007, Barack and his family were back in Chicago. In the Sun-Times, African American columnist Laura Washington advocated "run, Barack, run," and on Tuesday, January 2, Barack turned up unannounced at David Axelrod's office. "I think I want to do this," but he had still not decided for sure: "I'm going to give it a few more days." David said, "My main concern is that you're not obsessive enough to run for president," that "you may be too normal to run." Leaving Axelrod's office, Barack ran into Forrest Claypool. "It may not be exactly the time I would pick," Barack remarked, "but sometimes the times pick you." Speaking with Plouffe, Axelrod thought a final decision remained uncertain, but during a January 3 podcast in which Barack called any "surge" of U.S. forces in Iraq "a chilling prospect," he said his two weeks in Hawaii had left him feeling "renewed and refreshed."

On January 4 Barack returned to Washington, telling one journalist he believed "there is a weariness with the ideological battles and cultural wars of the past," especially given how George W. Bush's presidency "has been the most ideological administration in my lifetime, even more so than" Ronald Reagan's. Along with other senators, Barack met with Bush at the White House to express strong opposition to any "surge" in Iraq. "I said definitively that I thought it was a bad idea," Barack told reporters. To Pete Rouse, Barack said he was close to a final decision. "I've decided to do it, you can plan that we're going to do it, but don't do anything yet because I want to go home to Chicago this weekend and make sure I don't have buyer's remorse." In his own mind, "the way I thought about it was more of a sense of duty" to run, Barack explained. "It was more the sense of, given what's been given to me, I should probably just give it a shot and see whether in fact there's something real there." In retrospect, "I gave myself 25 percent odds, maybe 30," but absent a run he would face continued boredom in the Senate. A conference call was scheduled with all of Barack's closest family members—Maya, Auma, Craig and Kelly Robinson—plus Marty Nesbitt, to alert them to the upcoming news. "Okay. I think we're going to do this. It looks like this thing is going forward. But before we go for sure, I feel obligated to let you guys know how considerably hard this is going to be on all of you." No one replied until Auma broke the silence with "I think this is wonderful," and everyone agreed.

Late that Saturday night Barack phoned David Plouffe: "It's a go." Then he called Axelrod: "Axe, I just called Plouffe and told him it's a go." On Sunday Barack called Tom Daschle to give him the confidential news, and plans were made for Barack and Michelle to make a quick, unpublicized trip to Nashville to speak with former vice president Al Gore and his wife Tipper about the rigors of a race.<sup>50</sup>

In Washington, reporters who showed up for a press conference on ethics legislation instead sought Barack's reaction to a People magazine photo spread titled "Beach Babes" that included a picture of a shirtless, clearly fit Barack taken on some Hawaiian beach. "I really appreciate you toting that around," an "uncharacteristically flustered" Obama told them. "It's embarrassing," he added. "It's paparazzi. Stop looking at it." Robert Gibbs wisecracked that next on Barack's schedule was "photo shoot on South Beach," but instead Barack made a quick trip to Manhattan to speak at the annual dinner of Rev. Jesse Jackson's Wall Street Project. "I owe him a great debt," Barack told the crowd. "I would not be here had it not been for 1984, had it not been for 1988," the two times Jackson had run for president.

Meeting privately in Washington with his top aides, Barack stressed that "We're all in this together. We're going to rise or fall together. No sharp elbows. No big egos. I want us to be a team," and "I want a campaign that is buttoned up like a business," with "no drama" and "no leaks." Reporters gleaned that David Plouffe would be the campaign manager if Barack went forward, but no word that the actual decision to run already had been made reached reporters. Barack met privately with Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice prior to her testimony before the Foreign Relations Committee to defend President Bush's "surge" in Iraq. At the hearing, Barack bluntly challenged her. "Essentially, the administration repeatedly has said, 'We're doubling down. We're going to keep on going. You know, maybe we lost that bet, but we're going to put a little more money in, and because now we've got a lot in the pot, and we can't afford to lose what we've put in the pot.' And the fundamental question that the American people have and I think every senator on this panel, Republican and Democrat, are having to face now is at what point do we say 'enough'?" Barack asked.

Appearing on CBS's Face the Nation, Barack said, "we'll be making an announcement fairly soon" about 2008, and the next morning, prior to an MLK holiday event in south suburban Harvey, Barack updated it to "very soon" while complaining about the People picture. "Finding out that there was a photographer lurking in the bushes while I was playing on the beach with my kids is a source of concern." With even the local Daily Southtown calling Harvey a "corruption-plagued, crime-ridden town," Barack took the opportunity to lecture city officials that public office was not supposed to be "a place where they can help their family and their friends instead of helping the people who elected them. We don't need that kind of leadership. You want to make a lot of money, go start a business. Don't run for office."<sup>51</sup>

Twenty-four hours later, on January 16, Barack finally declared his candidacy via a three-minute Web video, with a formal announcement set for February 10 in Springfield. "I certainly didn't expect to find myself in this position a year ago," Barack admitted. Emphasizing "how hungry we all are for a different kind of politics," he noted that "today our leaders in Washington seem incapable of working together in a practical, commonsense way. Politics has become so bitter and partisan, so gummed up by money and influence, that we can't tackle the big problems that demand solutions." Above all, "we have to change our politics and come together around our common interests and concerns as Americans.” The New York Times called the video “a blue-sky plan of optimism, offering few specifics,” but Barack told the Times’ Jeff Zeleny that “one thing that I’m convinced of is that people want something new.” Speaking with Zeleny again the next day, Barack said that “there are moments in American history where there are opportunities to change the language of politics or set the country’s sights in a different place, and I think we’re in one of those moments.” Barack paused. “Whether I’m the person to help move that forward or somebody else is, is not for me to determine.”

The Washington Post welcomed Barack’s candidacy by commending “his willingness to try to understand rather than to dismiss the arguments of the other side.” In Chicago, the Tribune’s John Kass warned that Barack was an “empty vessel,” and when Barack fulsomely endorsed Mayor Richard M. Daley for reelection, one opinionated reporter said the move “puts to rest any doubt that Obama is anything but at the center of the same old machine.” Capitol Fax’s Rich Miller expressed amazement at what was happening. “This Obama phenomenon is not rational in any form. It is, in fact, almost completely irrational . . . the average Obama supporter knows very little about the man he or she adores,” but “the more exposure he gets, the more people swoon over him.” Several national commentators noted how Barack, like retired general Colin Powell a decade earlier, “is a child of immigration” who “doesn’t sound or look too black” and had “succeeded at a prestigious white institution.” Indeed, unreported November 1996 nationwide exit polling data showed that had Powell, rather than Kansas senator Bob Dole, been the Republican nominee challenging President Bill Clinton, Powell’s 50 percent of the vote would have easily defeated Clinton. Thus “America has for some time been ready to elect a black president,” and Eric Krol of the suburban Daily Herald warned that Barack’s “opponents would be foolish to underestimate him. His ability to inspire a popular groundswell among regular people could well carry him to his party’s nomination.”<sup>52</sup>

Attending Sunday’s NFC championship game, in which the Chicago Bears defeated the New Orleans Saints 39–14, Barack told friends that if he could win the first-in-the-nation Iowa caucuses on January 3, 2008, then “I’m credible.” That was David Plouffe’s view too. “We thought we had a path to the nomination, but it was a very narrow path,” Plouffe explained. “We had to win Iowa.” Yet Barack’s four-person campaign team was starting totally from scratch. Working from a temporary office on Connecticut Avenue NW before securing permanent office space in Chicago, staffers purchased a wireless router and then a printer soon after Barack’s Web video went live. “It was definitely seat of the pants,” Plouffe recalled. “It was a start-up in every sense of the word,” and “getting the campaign up and running was a huge challenge.”

For Barack, President Bush’s decision to ramp up U.S. military efforts in Iraq remained a top target. “I originally opposed this war precisely because I thought that, once we were in, it would become a morass,” he remarked on CBS. At a D.C. symposium, Barack also vowed that “universal health care for every single American must not be a question of whether, it must be a question of how.” He declared, “I am absolutely determined that by the end of the first term of the next president we should have universal health care in this country.” Considering that “one out of four health care dollars is spent on non-medical costs, mostly bills and paperwork,” eliminating that morass was simply “a problem of political will.”

On January 29 Barack joined other senators for a quick trip to New Orleans to hold a hearing on reconstruction since Katrina. The next day, he introduced his own bill to address the Iraq war, calling for the withdrawal of U.S. combat forces to begin on May 1 and to be fully complete by March 31, 2008. In a lengthy interview with a young blogger, Barack cited his Iraq proposal, his health care stance, and the need to eliminate partisan gerrymandering, “which discourages the kind of robust debate that we need to have. If people feel like this is a 90 percent Democratic district or a 90 percent Republican district, then at a certain point folks start opting out of the process.” But health coverage was uppermost in his mind. “You have to run on the notion that by the end of your first term you’re going to have health care for all. That then would give you, should you win, a mandate, and you have to use that mandate quickly in the first one hundred days before the corrosive process of Washington starts setting in.”<sup>53</sup>

On February 1, Barack’s nascent campaign notified the Federal Election Commission that both major parties’ presidential nominees should commit to accept public funding and limit their general election spending. This would “facilitate the conduct of campaigns freed from any dependence on private fundraising,” but New York Times reporter David K. Kirkpatrick predicted that “a candidate with a much bigger bank account at the start of the general election would be reluctant to relinquish that advantage.” The next day Barack spoke at a student-organized rally at George Mason University in Fairfax, Virginia, that drew thirty-five hundred young people. That weekend Barack’s staff moved from D.C. to Chicago, with David Plouffe explaining that “it was brutal to try to get this set up and running in a matter of weeks. We had to find office space, we had to get accounts up and running, we had to raise some initial seed money, we had to get staff hired.” An initial fund-raiser was scheduled at Chicago’s Hyatt Regency for the day after Barack’s Springfield announcement, and a second was set for Beverly Hills nine days later. New staffers were told that discipline was paramount. “The culture of the organization from the get-go was, a leak could not be tolerated,” and if one occurred, Plouffe warned, “corrective action” would be taken.

Michelle Obama took part-time leave from her U of C job, and Barack told the Chicago Tribune’s Christi Parsons that “I’ve got an ironclad demand from my wife” to stop smoking. “I’ve been chewing Nicorette strenuously,” but while Barack claimed, “I’ve never been a heavy smoker,” his long-standing inability to quit, plus his repeated denials of how much he smoked, reflected his embarrassment about being a smoker and the strength of his addiction. Norman Mailer once confessed that “Smoking cigarettes insulates one from one’s life, one does not feel as much, often happily so,” and an insightful observer explained that Barack tried to hide and minimize his smoking so as “to deny . . . that he relies on a . . . nicotine addiction to manage his fears.”

David Axelrod told the Washington Post’s Anne Kornblut that Barack “is very focused on the fact that he doesn’t want to lose his essential self in this process, and if he does—if what he projects and delivers is just more of the kind of politics people have become accustomed to—it would be a disappointment to him.” In a pair of February 7 interviews, Barack said that “what I dread most is being away from my kids,” but he believed “there is this enormous hunger for a new kind of politics . . . a politics that brings us together.” “I think we are in a moment where there is a possibility” that his campaign “could reshape the political landscape.” He emphasized that he was running “to win. But it’s also to transform the country.”<sup>54</sup>

At 4:00 A.M. Thursday, Barack e-mailed a final draft of his Saturday announcement speech to his advisers. On Friday afternoon, he and his campaign team climbed into multiple vans for the drive to Springfield, where, at 10:00 A.M. Saturday, Jeremiah Wright was scheduled to deliver an invocation before Barack took the podium. During the trip southward, David Axelrod got a call alerting him to a forthcoming Rolling Stone cover story headlined “The Radical Roots of Barack Obama.” Those “radical roots” were Trinity Church, which author Ben Wallace-Wells labeled “a leftover vision from the sixties of what a black nationalist future might look like.” Calling Jeremiah Wright “a sprawling, profane bear of a preacher,” one who “has a cadence and power that make Obama sound like John Kerry,” Wallace-Wells quoted at length from a Wright sermon that actually had been delivered in 1993 at Washington’s Howard University, not at Trinity. “We are deeply involved in the importing of drugs, the exporting of guns and the training of professional killers,” Wright declared. “We care nothing about human life if the ends justify the means,” and “God has got to be sick of this shit!”

Wallace-Wells asserted that Trinity represented “as openly radical a background as any significant American political figure has ever emerged from, as much Malcolm X as Martin Luther King Jr.” Wallace-Wells quoted a characterization Barack had given the Tribune, that Wright was “a sounding board for me to make sure that I’m not losing myself in some of the hype and hoopla and stress that’s involved in national politics.” Wallace-Wells added that “when you read” Dreams, “the surprising thing—for such a measured politician—is the depth of radical feeling that seeps through, the amount of Jeremiah Wright that’s packed in there.”

In the van headed southbound on I-55, Axelrod “looked stricken” as he read the article, David Plouffe recalled. “‘This is a fucking disaster,’ he said. ‘If Wright goes up on that stage, that’s the story. Our announcement will be an asterisk.’” Axelrod, Plouffe, and Robert Gibbs called Barack in his van, and Barack asked them to forward him the story. Barack soon called back, expressing agreement: the article featured “some pretty incendiary language” from Wright, and “we can’t afford to let this story hijack the day. I’ll call him and tell him it will overshadow everything. I still want him to come; maybe he can do a private prayer with my family before I go out to speak.”

In Amherst, Massachusetts, Jeremiah Wright’s cell phone rang. Barack cited the Rolling Stone article, telling Wright, “You can kind of go over the top at times” and “get kind of rough in the sermons, so it’s the feeling of our people that perhaps you’d better not be out in the spotlight, because they will make you the focus, and not my announcement. Now, Michelle and I still want you to have a prayer with us. Can you still come and have prayer, before we go up?” Wright was puzzled at what sermon Rolling Stone had unearthed, but he already was scheduled to catch an early-morning flight out of Boston to O’Hare and then on to Springfield. Two years earlier, Wright had said Barack “is not a person to compromise,” so he was disappointed by this turn of events, but he quickly agreed and also concurred with Barack’s suggestion that Wright’s associate pastor and designated successor, Otis Moss III, be asked to give the invocation instead. Jerry gave Barack Moss’s cell number and immediately called Moss to tell him he had done so. To Jerry’s astonishment, Moss said that Barack’s buddy Eric Whitaker, also a Trinity member, had already called to invite him to Springfield. Moss told Wright he would decline, as he barely knew Barack, and after a brief night’s sleep, Saturday morning Wright flew to Springfield.<sup>55</sup>

Saturday dawned exceptionally cold in Springfield. Michelle warned that “there’s no way anyone is going to come out and stand in the bitter cold to hear you,” but Obama’s aides brushed aside her plea that they hold the event indoors rather than in front of the picturesque Old State Capitol where Abraham Lincoln had served 150 years earlier. Anticipating the weather, Alyssa Mastromonaco’s advance team had a strong heater hidden inside Barack’s outdoor podium. The temperature was just 12 degrees, but by

10:00 A.M. a crowd of up to seventeen thousand people filled the streets and plaza surrounding the Old State Capitol. Inside the historic structure, Jeremiah Wright led a prayer before Barack headed outside. Standing nearby, David Axelrod “caught Wright’s withering glare as he walked by.” After being introduced by Illinois seatmate Dick Durbin, Barack confessed, “it’s humbling to see a crowd like this.” Some of Barack’s early stanzas echoed his 2004 DNC speech, and he said his three years in Roseland had sent him first to Harvard and then to Springfield. Pushing back against any suggestion that his Senate service was too brief to qualify him for the presidency, Barack declared, “I’ve been there long enough to know that the ways of Washington must change,” a line crafted by Axelrod and one that won the crowd’s loudest cheers. Barack blamed “the failure of leadership” for “our chronic avoidance of tough decisions, our preference for scoring cheap political points instead.” President after president had campaigned on promises of change, but time and again, “after the election is over, and the confetti is swept away, all those promises fade from memory, and the lobbyists and special interests move in, and people turn away, disappointed as before.” Barack vowed he would be different, and asked his listeners to join him “if you feel destiny calling.”

After his twenty-minute speech, Barack’s party headed to Springfield’s airport, where a chartered aircraft waited to fly them to Cedar Rapids, Iowa. There, more than two thousand people packed Barack’s first campaign event in 2008’s first state. “I want to win,” Barack told them, “but I don’t just want to win. I want to transform this country.”<sup>56</sup>

---

THE PRESIDENT DID NOT ATTEND, AS HE WAS GOLFING

---

In Chicago, Barack's growing campaign staff set up shop in February 2007 on the eleventh floor at 233 North Michigan Avenue. Barack's first campaign swing took him to South Carolina and Virginia. "Body man" Reggie Love, a former Duke University basketball player who had been on Barack's Senate staff, and trip director Marvin Nicholson, who had been on Senator John Kerry's staff, became Barack's two closest traveling aides. Michelle was now campaigning too, having reduced her U of C job to one day a week, but her introduction of Barack at a Hollywood fund-raiser drew critical attention after New York Times columnist Maureen Dowd brought Michelle's remarks to a wide readership. "I have some difficulty reconciling the two images I have of Barack Obama," Michelle said. "There's Barack Obama the phenomenon. He's an amazing orator . . . best-selling author, Grammy winner. Pretty amazing, right? And then there's the Barack Obama that lives with me in my house, and that guy's a little less impressive. For some reason this guy still can't manage to put the butter up when he makes toast, secure the bread so that it doesn't get stale, and his 5-year-old is still better at making the bed than he is." Dowd suggested that Michelle's "chiding was emasculating, casting her husband . . . as an undisciplined child." But Barack was unoffended. "I think creating a life for children that is stable and in which they have reliable, regular adult figures in their lives that they can look up to is important," he told Times columnist Nick Kristof.<sup>1</sup>

Speaking at the annual commemoration of Selma, Alabama's 1965 voting rights campaign, Barack said that because of those protests, his parents "got together and Barack Obama Jr. was born." Reporters quickly noted, as the New York Times put it, "that he was born in 1961, four years before the confrontations at Selma took place." Barack responded that "I meant to say the whole civil rights movement," not Selma. The focus on Barack's biographical misstatement led reporters to ignore his comment that "we've still got a lot of economic rights that have to be dealt with." A Washington Post columnist who read Dreams warned that Barack's "tendency to manipulate facts may bear watching," since "we hardly know him."

To another Post columnist, Barack said that beyond winning the presidency, "there's the possibility" he could "also transform the country in the process, that the language and the approach I take to politics is sufficiently different that I could bring diverse parts of this country together in a way that hasn't been done in some time." One possible example, at least in Barack's mind, came in a CNN appearance. "I think that 'marriage' has a religious connotation in this society, in our culture, that makes it very difficult to disentangle from the civil aspects of marriage." Thus for gay Americans Barack supported "civil unions that provide all the civil rights that marriage entails."

On March 6, the New York Times reported how Barack had disinvited Jeremiah Wright from taking the stage at his February 10 announcement. "When his enemies find out that in 1984 I went to Tripoli" with Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan, Wright told reporter Jodi Kantor, "a lot of his Jewish support will dry up quicker than a snowball in hell.” Five days earlier, Wright had appeared on Fox News’ Hannity & Colmes, and when Sean Hannity had peppered him with aggressive questions, Wright responded with insistent anger. “How many of Cone’s books have you read? How many of Cone’s books have you read?” he repeated, citing the well-known founder of black liberation theology, James H. Cone. “How many books of Dwight Hopkins’s have you read?”—a Cone student and Trinity member.

In Chicago, African American Sun-Times columnist Mary Mitchell cited Wright’s comment to the Times about Farrakhan in arguing that “Obama took some bad advice from campaign staff who underestimated the impact such a slight could have” in producing “hurt feelings.” Wright prophetically told a PBS interviewer that if “you think it’s ugly now, it’s going to get worse. It’s going to get much worse,” and Sun-Times columnist Laura Washington observed that “hell hath no fury like a preacher scorned.”

Asked by one CNN interviewer, Barack said he and Wright had spoken, and Wright told Trinity’s congregation that Barack had apologized for the disinvitation, explaining that he had gotten “some bad advice from his own campaign people.” On another CNN show, Barack claimed he had stopped smoking because of “how scared I am of my wife,” but when the New York Times’ Jodi Kantor continued to pursue the Wright story, Barack disingenuously told her that “I’ve never had a thorough conversation with him about all aspects of politics.” Kantor observed that “it is hard to imagine” how “Obama can truly distance himself from” his pastor, but Wright told her that “if Barack gets past the primary, he might have to publicly distance himself from me,” and that Barack had said, “yeah, that might have to happen.”<sup>2</sup>

In the midst of the Wright contretemps, Barack received an unexpected call from a long-forgotten schoolmate: Keith Kakugawa, his closest friend when Barry was a Punahou tenth grader, had just been released from a California prison. Barack “was utterly amazed,” Keith said, and “I told him how proud I am of him.” Keith had endured multiple convictions for cocaine possession with intent to sell, plus one for auto theft. “I’m really sorry,” Barack said. “How bad is it for you?” Keith knew all too well that as a felon “you can’t get a decent job, college education or not, once you have a record,” that “you’re not eligible for almost any kind of state assistance, and you have very few places to turn.” Barack told Keith, “Hey, I’d rather you not talk to reporters,” but within days first the Wall Street Journal and then the Chicago Tribune ran front-page stories about him. “Please don’t put Senator Obama in a bad light for knowing me,” Keith e-mailed the Journal’s Jackie Calmes. Barack was not enthused by the stories. “This is something I’m not enjoying about the presidential race,” he told the Trib. “Me getting screwed I’m fine with. Suddenly everybody who’s ever touched my life is subject to a colonoscopy on the front page of the newspaper.”

In Chicago, Barack’s former friendship with Tony Rezko was drawing sustained press attention. The Sun-Times was doggedly pursuing the details, with columnist Carol Marin writing that “this gleaming presidential hopeful and paragon of new politics behaves just like any other dissembling, dismissive Chicago pol” after Barack’s aides physically shielded him from insistent Sun-Times reporter Tim Novak as his SUV pulled away. “Maybe it was the image of that getaway, played on the 5 o’clock news, that finally persuaded Obama to hastily call a news conference to which Novak was not invited,” Marin explained. The Sun-Times editorialized that Barack’s efforts to dodge Novak “make it appear as if he has something to hide,” and Barack refused to discuss Tony with the New York Times. In an ensuing front-page story, the Times accurately concluded that “the two men were closer than the senator has indicated.”

When Times columnist David Brooks caught him in a Senate hallway, Barack responded eagerly when Brooks asked if he had ever read Reinhold Niebuhr. “I love him. He’s one of my favorite philosophers.” What had Barack learned from Niebuhr? “I take away the compelling idea that there’s serious evil in the world,” that “we should be humble and modest in our belief that we can eliminate those things.” Brooks was impressed, but he was also frustrated. Barack “loves to have conversations about conversations. You have to ask him every question twice, the first time to allow him to talk about how he would talk about the subject, and the second time so you can pin him down to the practical issues at hand.” The result was “Bromide Obama, filled with grand but usually evasive eloquences about bringing people together and showing respect.”

All of the journalistic interest in Barack’s past led new readers to absorb Dreams. Many erroneously presumed that the book predated any interest in a political career, but Washington Monthly blogger Kevin Drum offered a remarkably perceptive reading. A striking detachment between the author and his retrospective self was “clearest in the disconnect between emotions and events: Obama routinely describes himself feeling the deepest and most painful emotions imaginable . . . but these feelings seem to be all out of proportion to the actual events of his life, which are generally pretty pedestrian.” Readers “get very little sense of what motivates him,” for “there’s very little insight into what he believes and what really makes him tick.” Drum concluded that “by the time I was done, I felt like I knew less about him than before.” Likewise, in the Weekly Standard Andrew Ferguson discussed how in Dreams Barack “was making it up, to an alarming extent,” while creating “a fable . . . far bigger and more consequential” than Barack’s actual life. In private, Barack told his aides that “there’s a certain ambivalence in my character that I like about myself. It’s part of what makes me a good writer,” but “it’s not necessarily useful in a presidential campaign.”<sup>3</sup>

In early May, responding to entreaties from Senators Dick Durbin and Harry Reid, the Secret Service assigned agents to Barack and his family, replacing the private security guards his campaign had hired. A front-page Washington Post story quoted Barack as telling black officials in South Carolina that sometimes in Chicago “when I talk to the black chambers of commerce, I say ‘You know what would be a good economic development plan for our community would be if we make sure folks weren’t throwing their garbage out of their cars.’” In response, a Chicago Defender contributor wrote that “all this sounds very derogatory, à la Amos ’n’ Andy or Stepin Fetchit.”

Garnering more attention was a front-page New York Times profile of Michelle, which quoted her brother Craig as explaining that “everyone in the family is afraid of her.” The Times also quoted Barack saying that “she’s a little meaner than I am,” and a nationwide Associated Press story revisited Michelle’s fund-raiser comments describing how the man with whom she lived differed so much from Barack’s media image. Only the Chicago papers covered Michelle’s resignation from the board of TreeHouse Foods, but Michelle told ABC’s Good Morning America that Barack “is very able to deal with a strong woman, which is one of the reasons why he can be president: because he can deal with me.” When the Capitol Hill town house where Barack stayed suffered a minor fire, Michelle’s reaction was almost gleeful. “I was like, I told you it was a dump!” Then Esquire magazine named Barack as one of the “Best Dressed Men in the World,” citing him for “sharply tailored two-piece suits offset by a peerless collection of light-blue ties.” Michelle was astonished. “He’s got like five white shirts and three black suits,” and “he’s like ‘Mr. GQ’ all of a sudden.”

Barack found the relentless schedule of a nationwide presidential campaign daunting. “I like a certain brand of green tea” and “I’m a big trail mix guy,” he told the Today show. “But the main thing is to get my workouts in . . . you’ve got to block out an hour somewhere.” In another interview, he confessed that “you never get over the sacrifice of being away from your family. I was home one day this week and rode bikes with my daughters, went to the dentist last week, and took them to dinner.” Asked if he dreamed of the White House, Barack said no. “I don’t dream of the White House. I dream of the beach. I dream of playing basketball. I dream about my kids.”<sup>4</sup>

At a forum televised by CNN, Barack volunteered that “I am where I am today because of the education that I received,” and he appeared to have Keith Kakugawa in mind when he cited how “we have ex-offenders who are coming out of prisons constantly—thousands each and every day. We’re going to have to make a commitment to provide them a second chance,” which “will require a government investment in transitional jobs because” ex-offenders were such anathema to the private sector.

In the Senate, on June 6 Barack offered a controversial floor amendment to a delicately crafted bipartisan immigration reform bill. The pending measure included a “points” system to prioritize visas for skilled immigrants over those with family ties for the next fourteen years. Barack wanted to “sunset” that factor, which liberals viewed with distaste, at five years. “I am willing to defer to those Senators who negotiated this provision and say we should give it a try, but I am not willing to say this untested system should be made virtually permanent.” That made South Carolina Republican Lindsey Graham, one of the architects of the bipartisan compromise, “very, very mad,” Graham recalled, and his floor response reflected that. “Some people, when it comes to tough decisions, back away, because when you talk about bipartisanship, some Americans on the left and right consider it heresy, and we are giving in if we adopt this amendment,” Graham warned. “It means that everybody over here who has walked the plank and told our base you are wrong” in opposing compromise would be shafted. “You are going to destroy this deal,” for “some people don’t want to say to the loud folks ‘No, you can’t have your way all the time.’” Then Graham directly addressed Barack. “So when you are out on the campaign trail, my friend, telling about why we can’t come together, this is why.”

Obama “briefly appeared stunned” by Graham’s comment, the Associated Press reported, and replied meekly. The amendment, he said, says that “we will go forward with the proposal that has been advanced by this bipartisan group. It simply says we should examine after five years whether the program is working.” Barack asked senators to “consider the nature of the actual amendment that is on the floor as opposed to the discussion that preceded mine.” Just before the vote, Barack spoke again. “The authors of this legislation deserve credit for working diligently and coming up with a carefully balanced bill,” but the new system would be “a radical departure from the one we have had in the past” and his amendment “simply says that after five years, we will reexamine the bill.” Graham disagreed. “If we sunset the merit-based system at five years, there is no vehicle left,” he warned. Barack’s amendment was defeated 42–55, with eight Democrats, including lead negotiators Dianne Feinstein and Ted Kennedy, joining all but one Republican in voting against it. Immediately after the vote, Barack and Graham got into a “heated exchange” just off the Senate floor. “They were going at it,” Florida Republican Mel Martinez told the AP. “We could hear them inside.” Graham told the AP, “I said, ‘I’m very disappointed in you,’” explaining that Barack “gave in to pressure from the left, and the pressure from the left and right was enormous.” Barack said “it’s a matter of too much coffee and people being on the floor too long,” but

Graham later remarked that Barack had “folded like a cheap suit.”<sup>5</sup>

In mid-June, Barack reacted with unusual fury when the New York Times revealed that his campaign had given journalists a not-for-attribution document attacking Hillary Clinton’s close ties to the Indian American community and mocking her as “(D-Punjab).” Close friends like Hasan Chandoo had purposely kept a low profile once Barack announced. “We all disappeared. The last thing he needs is a bunch of Paki friends,” Hasan explained, but following the Times story Barack recounted that “I had to go and call some of my best friends and explain why my campaign was engaging in xenophobia. That was the most angry I’ve been in this campaign.” The following morning, a Chicago Tribune story headlined “Obama Team Can Play Rough” cited the Times’ “Punjab” story as one reflection of how “Obama has surrounded himself with operatives skilled in the old-school art of the political back-stab.”

The Tribune also previewed a forthcoming biography of Barack by Tribune reporter David Mendell, who had covered his 2004 Senate campaign. The Trib said Mendell portrayed Barack as “a far more calculating politician than his most ardent supporters might imagine,” citing how Barack had given his October 2002 antiwar speech in part “to curry favor” with rally organizer and wealthy donor Bettylu Saltzman. “Barack was not happy,” Saltzman recalled, and when she told him she was submitting a letter of rebuttal, Barack’s response was “You better.” Early in the book Mendell highlighted Barack’s “imperious, mercurial, self-righteous and sometimes prickly nature” and said that after compiling an “aggressively liberal” record in Springfield, Barack in Washington had taken “a dramatic turn toward calculation and caution.”<sup>6</sup>

On the campaign trail, Barack vowed that “I will sign a universal health care plan that covers every American by the end of my first term as president.” In Iowa, Barack cited how his childhood years in Indonesia and his Kenyan roots informed his opposition to the Iraq war, because they had taught him “how powerful tribal and ethnic sentiments are.” Journalists were astonished when Barack’s first Iowa television ad featured Illinois Republican state senator Kirk Dillard. “Senator Obama worked on some of the deepest issues we had and was successful in a bipartisan way. Republican legislators respected Senator Obama. His negotiation skills and an ability to understand both sides would serve the country well.” Dillard told reporters he supported Republican John McCain for the presidency, but said that Barack’s candidacy, “whether he wins or loses, is good for Illinois and it’s good for the United States.”

Barack told an NPR host that “it’s important to make sure that I don’t lose my core honesty with myself and that I don’t start trimming my sails or biting my tongue in order to get elected.” Finishing a “downright tentative” speech to a predominantly black female audience at New Orleans’s Superdome, Barack had trouble finding an exit through the stage curtain as his lapel mike captured him telling himself, “If I can just find which way to go.” Back in Chicago, speaking to yet another South Side antiviolence rally, Barack noted that “in this last school year, thirty-two Chicago public school students were killed,” more deaths “than the number of soldiers from this whole state who were killed in Iraq. Think about that. At a time when we’re spending $275 million a day on a war overseas, we’re neglecting the war that’s being fought in our own streets.” To a black audience in Washington’s most forlorn neighborhood, Barack cited the millions of Americans who “cannot write thousand-dollar campaign checks to make their voices heard. They suffer most from a politics that has been tipped in favor of those with the most money.”<sup>7</sup>

Appearing before the National Association of Black Journalists, Barack made fun of the number of commentators who had wondered whether he was “black enough” by arriving twenty minutes late. “I want to apologize for being a little late, but you guys keep on asking whether I'm black enough," Barack began as the audience convulsed in laughter. "Uh-huh, that's right—so I figured I'd stroll in about ten minutes after deadline. I've been holding that in my pocket for a while." Then Barack turned serious. "The day I'm inaugurated, the racial dynamics in this country will change to some degree. If you've got Michelle as first lady, and Malia and Sasha running around on the South Lawn, that changes how America looks at itself. It changes how white children think about black children, and it changes how black children think about black children."

Michelle too was now an almost full-time public figure. "As the campaign has moved along, her speeches have become stronger, funnier and more personable," a Chicago Sun-Times correspondent wrote. "She speaks with more emotion than her husband; you feel she is the power propelling him, that she has the psychological mettle, the tough skin, the searing ambition." As for campaigning, "the little sacrifice we have to make is nothing compared to the possibility of what we could do if this catches on," Michelle now believed. Barack likewise said that "Michelle and I would not be doing this if we didn't think that at some level it's worth it. . . . You're doing this because you genuinely think that you can bring the country together. . . . If I didn't think I was going to be able to do that, then this wouldn't be worth it. It exacts a high toll."

Reporter Ryan Lizza, who had begun covering Barack in 2004, expressed his "realization that Obama . . . is more of an old-fashioned pol than you think," that "underneath the inspirational leader who wants to change politics . . . is an ambitious, prickly, and occasionally ruthless politician." Judd Miner confessed to Lizza that "his biggest disappointment was that Obama hired as his top strategist David Axelrod," whom Judd and other Harold Washington-era progressives rightly viewed as a Daley machine operative pretending to be something better. Washington Post columnist David Ignatius wrote that Barack's "almost eerie self-confidence" reflected a persona that is "closer to a rock star than a typical politician." Without naming Axelrod, Ignatius quoted "a top Obama adviser" as explaining that Barack "is totally pragmatic. He asks what would work and what wouldn't."

An enterprising Denver reporter visited the Hyde Park Hair Salon to ask barber Abdul Karim about Barack. "He's changed a little bit. I'll be honest with you. He's not as vocal. He's not as natural as he used to be. There's two Baracks now. There's the Barack who comes in on a Sunday when we're all busy and he can't be himself. He has to be the politician, shake all the hands. And then there's the Barack who comes in here late on Saturday, nobody here. That's the guy we always knew. Talk a little basketball, talk about the Bulls, the fight that was on last night. You know what I'm saying? I know that Barack. I don't necessarily know the other one."

Old friend Rob Fisher explained that Barack was coming to realize "that the public image of who he is is not who he actually is." Another unnamed friend made the same point to The New Yorker's Larissa MacFarquhar: "I think sometimes he feels phony to himself." Barack has "to struggle with . . . being a regular guy who has become a persona named Barack Obama. The persona is going to get . . . more and more distant from him and the way he used to live his life." Barack himself later acknowledged how "there's me, and then there's this character named 'Barack Obama.'" A wide range of longtime acquaintances now saw a "veneer" that had not existed before 2004. "There's a little bit of a wall there. You don't really get to know him," explained a Law Review colleague who continued to host fund-raisers for Barack. There is a "wall that's up," or a "drawbridge" marking "as close as Barack lets you get to him,” explained another old friend. Prior to his fame, Barack “was much more accessible emotionally,” former Chicago aide Cynthia Miller explained. “To everyone.”<sup>8</sup>

Barack’s campaign had outdone all other candidates in both parties by raising over $58 million during the first half of 2007, but by mid-September, with national polls showing Hillary Clinton maintaining a commanding lead, nervousness among donors led Barack and Michelle to ask Valerie Jarrett to assume an active role in his campaign. Although Jarrett had known Barack since 1991, she had played almost no role in his 2000 congressional race and became an active presence in his U.S. Senate campaign only in early 2004. With no campaign experience, to staffers and reporters alike Jarrett seemed like an odd addition, but Valerie’s regard for Barack knew no bounds. “He’s always wanted to be president,” she told The New Yorker. “He didn’t always admit it, but oh, absolutely. The first time he said it to me, he said ‘I just think I have some special qualities, and wouldn’t it be a shame to waste them.’” To New Yorker editor David Remnick, Jarrett went even further. “I think Barack knew that he had God-given talents that were extraordinary. He knows exactly how smart he is. . . . He knows how perceptive he is. He knows what a good reader of people he is. And he knows he has that ability—the extraordinary, uncanny ability—to take a thousand different perspectives, digest them, and make sense of them, and I think that he has never really been challenged intellectually.” Jarrett told another interviewer that Barack was “really by far smarter than anybody I know,” and to Remnick she emphasized that Barack was “somebody with such extraordinary talents . . . he’s just too talented to do what ordinary people do.” In another conversation, Valerie emphatically stated that Barack “is a man who is devoted to his wife. There aren’t going to be any skeletons in his closet in terms of his personal life at all. Period.”

Following a pair of mid-September news stories, a more critical evaluation came from someone who had once known Barack far better than even Jarrett. On September 20, reports quoted Jesse Jackson Sr. as privately complaining that Barack was “acting like he’s white” given his disinterest in a racial controversy in Jena, Louisiana. Later that day the Senate debated a resolution denouncing a MoveOn.org ad that had mocked General David Petraeus as “General Betray Us.” Barack declined to vote for or against it, saying that “the focus of the United States Senate should be on ending this war, not on criticizing newspaper advertisements. . . . By not casting a vote, I registered my protest against this empty politics.” A Washington Post politics blog ran a story on the contretemps, and by 11:00 A.M. the following morning logged-in readers had posted eleven comments on the report. Then came a twelfth:

I can’t believe the excuses the Obamamanics give their gutless leader. He should have taken a stand—yea or nay—on the Moveon.org ad. He claims he’s above such politics but his decision not to vote was motivated by politics: he doesn’t want to alienate the Moveon.org people since he needs to compete in the Democratic primaries, but he still wants to be seen as a moderate in the general elections. It was a political move, not a courageous one. Leadership is about courage. If he’s too pure for dirty politics, then what does he want to be President for? And where was he in Jena, by the way??

The commenter signed off as “Recovered Obamamanic,” but her Web log-in showed that it was “Posted by: sheila.jager.” Six years had passed since she and Barack had last been in touch; Barack had launched his presidential campaign without contacting her. Sheila later explained, “I remember being really, really upset at this time over the ‘Betray Us’ ad and really mad at Barack for not being courageous enough to smack them down.” Courage had been “a big issue between us”; “it was a passing fury, though. I’ve forgiven him since.”<sup>9</sup>

Barack’s campaign manager David Plouffe admitted to one reporter that winning “Iowa—that’s the whole shebang!” before adding, “I guess I’m not supposed to say that.” On October 11, all of Barack’s top aides gathered in Chicago for a comprehensive review of strategy and messaging. Voters wanted a president “who can unite the country and restore our sense of purpose,” an overview memo said. Barack’s “change you can believe in” slogan was aimed at creating a character contrast with Hillary Clinton, who was “driven by political calculation, not conviction.” Appearing on Tavis Smiley’s television show, Barack acknowledged that for many people his appeal “has to do less with the positions I’m taking than the tone I’m taking.”

On October 30, Barack turned in his best debate performance to date. That same day, however, Sheila Jager weighed in with yet another biting critique, this time in response to a Washington Post story detailing how Barack “has changed his position” on Social Security since last May. “Obama had moved from being open to a solution that might include raising the retirement age or indexing benefits to prices rather than wages . . . to one of making the protection of benefits one of his three core principles,” the Post stated. “Obama’s decision to wall off benefits might be interpreted as a political calculation,” and “Obama now owes it to voters to explain his own evolution.” Sheila was similarly disappointed:

One cannot help but feel Obama’s desperation, especially when his stance on the issues are now presented in stark contrast to what he said before (e.g. on Iran and now Social Security). Does he think that the electorate is too dumb to remember his earlier pronouncements or that we cannot see political maneuvering when he does it in our face? Is this the politics of hope? What happened to the Obama of old? Where did he go????<sup>10</sup>

Barack took the next evening off to go trick-or-treating with his daughters in Hyde Park, a Halloween mask disguising his identity from most passersby. Old CCRC colleague Bob Klonowski nonetheless recognized him, and Barack jokingly explained, “it’s the only way I can go out now.” The Chicago Sun-Times’ Lynn Sweet mounted an insistent effort to find out what had become of Barack’s state Senate records that had been discarded three years earlier, but a far bigger milestone was Barack’s energetic performance at Iowa Democrats’ all-important Jefferson-Jackson Dinner on November 10. “Fucking home run,” David Axelrod told David Plouffe.

On Meet the Press the following morning, Barack seemingly bragged about his friendship with billionaire investor Warren Buffett, who “made $46 million last year” while acknowledging that “money is the original sin in politics and I am not sinless.” Host Tim Russert asked him about the discarded state Senate records and about Tony Rezko, whom Barack said he had not spoken with since his indictment. Talking with a writer for Oprah Winfrey’s O Magazine who was profiling Michelle, Barack explained, “I’m more easygoing than she is” and “I don’t get as tense or stressed. I’m probably more comfortable with uncertainty and risk.” He also expressed pleasant surprise at how much campaigning Michelle was doing. “She has been much more enthusiastic than I expected, much more engaged and involved.” Michelle’s friend Cindy Moelis agreed, noting what a change it was from Barack’s previous races. “This is the first time in all these elections that I’ve seen her be as passionate and committed as she has been.”

In a long interview on MSNBC, Michelle talked about how well her daughters were doing thanks to their grandmother Marian Robinson. “This wouldn’t be possible without her,” and the girls were happy “to stay in their world, in their lives. They want to be with their friends, and we allow that to happen.” For Michelle and Barack, “we always wonder whether politics changes people, and one of the things we’ve desperately tried to do is not to allow our political lives to change who we are fundamentally.” Michelle also stressed that “the point isn’t winning, it’s changing the country, it’s changing America, it’s changing the way you live. It’s throwing this game out, shaking it up and throwing it out the window, because it’s not just playing it better than the people who played it before.”

Michelle also spoke about the pervasiveness of black self-doubt. “There’s always that doubt in the back of the minds of people of color . . . deep down inside you doubt that you can really do this because that’s all you’ve been told is ‘No, wait.’ That’s all you hear and you hear it from people who love you, not because they don’t care about you and because they’re afraid. . . . I would not be where I am” and “neither would Barack if we listened to that doubt. . . . There are a lot of kids who I know aren’t pushing themselves or going for what they know they can do because of that doubt.” But “Barack has been doing stuff he’s not supposed to, I’m doing stuff that people told me I wasn’t supposed to do—that’s my whole life!”<sup>11</sup>

A few days before Christmas, Barack answered a question from CBS’s Harry Smith by explaining that the “last thing I do at night, I say a prayer. I say a prayer. I ask that my family is protected and that I’m an instrument of God’s will.” With the all-important Iowa caucuses less than two weeks away, on January 3, Barack felt confident that David Plouffe’s all-Iowa strategy was building toward an upset victory. Barack stepped away from the campaign trail for just thirty-six hours to celebrate Christmas at home in Chicago, with his sisters Maya and Auma and their daughters plus Maya’s husband joining the Obamas for a non-Hawaii gathering. On Christmas morning they invited Barack’s Secret Service detail in as the girls opened presents, and following dinner at a downtown hotel they played their annual game of Scrabble. Maya described to NPR how Barack won a come-from-behind victory, “which was maddening, and then he gloats.”

Barack returned to Iowa on December 26 with all of his relatives in tow. On New Year’s Eve, Michelle told a crowd in Grinnell that “Barack is one of the smartest people you will ever encounter who will deign to enter this messy thing called politics,” and on Thursday evening, January 3, an “extraordinary turnout” of Iowa Democrats—239,000 voters as compared to 124,000 in 2004—carried Barack to a decisive 38 percent victory. John Edwards barely edged Hillary Clinton for second place, 29.8 to 29.5 percent. Barack gloried in his triumph. “Thank you, Iowa . . . they said this day would never come. . . . But on this January night, at this defining moment in history, you have done what the cynics said we couldn’t do. . . . We are one nation. We are one people. And our time for change has come . . . to move beyond the bitterness and pettiness and anger that’s consumed Washington.” Barack vowed to be “a president who finally makes health care affordable and available to every single American, the same way I expanded health care in Illinois, by bringing Democrats and Republicans together to get the job done,” a claim that prompted double takes by Illinois reporters. “My journey began on the streets of Chicago” and “sometimes, just sometimes, there are nights like this, a night that, years from now,” when America is “a nation less divided and more united, you’ll be able to look back with pride and say that this was the moment when it all began. . . . This was the moment. Years from now, you’ll look back and you’ll say that this was the moment, this was the place” for people “who are not content to settle for the world as it is, who have the courage to remake the world as it should be.”<sup>12</sup>

Forty-eight hours later, during a Democratic debate, Barack told Hillary Clinton, “You’re likable enough,” a choice of words that led many commentators to criticize what one called Barack’s “dismissive condescension” toward the female front-runner. Two days later, on ABC’s Good Morning America, Barack told Diane Sawyer, “I’m doing this stuff not for me, but for something bigger than me. There’s an aspect of politics that’s about me, but then there’s an aspect of politics that is larger than me. And you have to have a certain amount of megalomania to think that you should be president of the United States, but I think you have to cross a certain threshold when you say this is not about my ambition and it’s about something bigger.” Responding with irritation to Clinton’s assertions that he was too inexperienced to be president, Barack used a basketball analogy in telling Newsweek’s Richard Wolffe that “at some point people have to stop asserting that because I haven’t been in the league long enough I can’t play. It’s sort of like Magic Johnson or LeBron James—[they] keep on scoring thirty, and their team wins, but people say they can’t lead their team because they’re too young.”

Nonetheless, when New Hampshire Democrats went to the polls on January 8, Clinton squeaked by with a surprising seventy-five-hundred-vote win over Barack, defeating him 39.1 to 36.5 percent, with Edwards a distant third. Clinton likewise won a narrow victory in Nevada’s caucuses, while Barack triumphed in South Carolina, and with Edwards’s exit from the race the Democratic contest moved toward the twenty-three states that would select 1,681 Democratic convention delegates on “Super Tuesday,” February 5. In a pair of interviews with religious periodicals, Barack spoke of “the sacredness of sex” while distancing himself from Jeremiah Wright, who was scheduled to give his final pre-retirement sermon at Trinity on February 10. “Sometimes he’s provocative in ways that I’m not always comfortable with and in ways that I deeply disagree with occasionally.” Yet “I am proud of Reverend Wright and what he’s done in his life.” Michelle spoke similarly, saying “there are plenty of things he says that I don’t agree with, that Barack doesn’t agree with.” But “your pastor is like your grandfather,” she added. “You can’t disown yourself from your family because they’ve got things wrong.”

After Hillary Clinton brought up Barack’s long relationship with Tony Rezko during a televised debate, Barack faced a new gauntlet of questions about their friendship. “Nobody had any indications that he was engaged in wrongdoing” while he was still interacting with Tony, Barack claimed, yet both Chicago newspapers had begun publicizing Rezko’s dubious dealings in mid-July 2004, months before the Obamas’ purchase of 5046 South Greenwood. In late January the Tribune endorsed Barack for the Democratic presidential nomination while nonetheless stating that Barack’s account concerning Rezko “strains credulity.”

On Super Tuesday, the two Democratic finalists battled to a tie, with Barack and Clinton each winning over eight hundred delegates. Throughout a dozen mid-February primaries and caucuses, Barack won modest but consistent delegate gains over Clinton. New York Times columnist Paul Krugman warned that “the Obama campaign seems dangerously close to becoming a cult of personality,” and in the Washington Post Robert Samuelson observed that Barack “seems to have hypnotized much of the media and the public with his eloquence and the symbolism of his life story. The result is a mass delusion that Obama is forthrightly engaging the nation’s major problems,” for in actuality “the contrast between his broad rhetoric and his narrow agenda is stark.” When Tony Rezko’s criminal trial began on March 3, questions again intensified, and Barack ended one tense press conference that campaign manager David Plouffe called “a disaster” by saying, “we’re running late.”<sup>13</sup>

On March 4, Hillary Clinton bested Barack in both Ohio and Texas, and the two candidates remained neck-and-neck in the delegate race with the next big primary, in Pennsylvania, seven weeks away. Then, early on March 13, ABC News reported that Jeremiah Wright’s videotaped sermons that were available for purchase at Trinity Church included both his September 16, 2001, one in which he had said that the 9/11 attacks reflected how “America’s chickens are coming home to roost,” and his April 13, 2003, one declaring “God damn America.” Barack first learned of that quotation during a phone interview with a Pittsburgh reporter. “I haven’t seen the line” and “I profoundly disagree,” but this is “what happens when you just cherry-pick statements from a guy who had a forty-year career as a pastor.” Back in Chicago, campaign manager David Plouffe was aghast. “We were seeing the clips for the first time” and the campaign’s failure to research what the public might learn about Wright “was unforgivable,” Plouffe realized. By Friday morning, more and more attention was focusing on the Wright tapes, but Barack was scheduled to have a pair of hour-plus meetings that afternoon with first the Tribune and then the Sun-Times to finally answer each and every question the newspapers wanted to put to him about Tony Rezko. Barack gave each paper a set of documents detailing the purchase of 5046 South Greenwood, and he told the Tribune group that his campaign has “a mentality of let’s be very protective of information.” With the Sun-Times journalists, Barack recalled Tony as “a very gracious individual,” but Barack’s willingness to respond to every question the two papers asked about Rezko represented a major turn in the road. “Obama should have had Friday’s discussion 16 months ago,” the Tribune editorialized, and Sun-Times columnist Mark Brown observed that “Obama can be too obstinate when he feels under attack.”

Soon after Barack left the Sun-Times, his campaign had a comment, “On My Faith and My Church,” up on Huffington Post. “I vehemently disagree and strongly condemn” Wright’s statements, and “I categorically denounce any statement that disparages our great country.” The two video clips “were not statements I personally heard him preach” or “utter in private conversation.” That evening, Barack spoke with MSNBC’s Keith Olbermann, Fox News’ Major Garrett, and CNN’s Anderson Cooper, emphasizing that same point: “they were not statements that I heard when I was in church.” But “I would not repudiate the man,” and “one thing that I hope to do is to use some of these issues to talk more fully about the question of race in our society.” Barack had long been wanting to deliver a major speech about race, and with campaign manager David Plouffe realizing that the I-wasn’t-there-that-day explanation “was a woefully inadequate response,” he and David Axelrod reluctantly concurred when Barack later that evening said the time for that speech had come. “Wright will consume our campaign if I can’t put it into a broader context,” Barack told Plouffe, who responded that time was of the essence. With Barack campaigning in Pennsylvania in advance of that state’s April 22 primary, Plouffe recommended Philadelphia’s National Constitution Center, on Tuesday morning—just four days hence. Barack would have to devote every offstage moment to crafting the speech.<sup>14</sup>

In front of a small audience of supporters and against a backdrop of eight American flags, Barack stressed that Wright “has been like family to me,” saying “I can no more disown him than I can disown my white grandmother . . . a woman who loves me as much as she loves anything in this world, but a woman who once confessed her fear of black men who passed her by on the street, and who on more than one occasion has uttered racial or ethnic stereotypes that made me cringe.” Seeking to place both Wright and Madelyn Dunham in the broader context of America’s painful racial history, Barack painted a broad canvas of resentment and reconciliation. Immediate praise came from former Democratic presidential candidate Senator Joe Biden, who termed the address “an important step forward in race relations.” Laudatory editorials quickly followed, with the Washington Post calling the speech “compelling,” “eloquent,” and “an extraordinary moment of truth-telling.” The New York Times labeled it “powerful and frank,” reflecting “an honesty seldom heard in public life.” Obama’s “eloquent speech should end the debate over his ties to Mr. Wright,” the Times opined, and “it is hard to imagine how he could have handled it better.”

The political impact of Barack’s address suggested that the speech had remedied the controversy that had threatened to torpedo his campaign, but listeners in Honolulu did not share the Post and Times’ enthusiasm. Maya Soetoro-Ng declined comment to a reporter, but a family friend explained that “she was furious” over Barack’s comments about their grandmother. His characterization of her “seemed completely gratuitous, even cruel,” one critic rightly thought, and one of the late Stanley Dunham’s close friends acidly remarked, “I have a far better opinion of both Stan and Madelyn than I have heard from Barry’s speeches.” His anger was shared by “the people who worked for Madelyn” during her years at the Bank of Hawaii, who thought Barack’s “disgusting” remarks represented “absolute pandering.” To them, Barack represented the utter fulfillment of Stan and Madelyn’s dreams. “When folks look at Barack Obama, most people see a black man running for president. I see Stan Dunham,” his friend Rolf Nordahl explained.<sup>15</sup>

Barack created a minor controversy when he called Madelyn “a typical white person” during a Philadelphia interview while denying that “my grandmother harbors any racial animosity.” Then remarks that Barack made at a private fund-raiser in San Francisco drew criticism because he had cited “bitter” Pennsylvanians who “cling to guns or religion.” In Pittsburgh, Barack asserted that as a community organizer, “block by block, we helped turn those neighborhoods around,” a claim that no one in Roseland or Altgeld Gardens would affirm. To ABC’s Terry Moran, Barack confessed that “during the course of campaigning” “sometimes you lose” your “core truthfulness” and “it becomes a performance,” as it had that day in Pittsburgh. Now half empty, Altgeld “reeks of decay, fear and despair,” one journalist wrote, and Hazel Johnson’s daughter Cheryl stated that “Obama left no real legacy behind.”

In early April, Barack reached out to Jeremiah Wright and got a blistering reception. “I cussed him out. ‘You pronounced judgment on my sermon and you never heard the sermon. You don’t know what the sermon was about ’cause you didn’t hear it.’” Barack asked to speak with Wright in person at a “secure location,” and on Saturday, April 12, Barack went to Wright’s home in suburban Tinley Park. It was “just Barack and me. I don’t know if he had a wire on him,” but the reason for Barack’s visit soon became clear: he told Wright, “I really wish you wouldn’t do any more public speaking until after the November election.” Wright had upcoming engagements in Detroit and Washington, and he dismissed the request: “How am I supposed to support my family? I have a daughter and a granddaughter in college whose tuition I pay. I’ve got to earn money.” Barack was insistent. “I really wish you wouldn’t. The press is going to eat you alive.” Barack left empty-handed, but before long Wright received an e-mail from Barack’s close friend Eric Whitaker, also a Trinity member, offering Wright $150,000 “not to preach at all” in the months ahead. Wright refused and mentioned the offer to his friend Father Mike Pflieger, and “when Father Mike went off on Eric, Eric went back and told Barack,” Wright explained.

On April 16, just hours before the final televised debate preceding Pennsylvania’s April 22 vote, Barack's campaign released his and Michelle's 2007 Form 1040, showing that he had received more than $4 million in royalty income the previous year. The Obamas had upped their charitable giving to a total of $240,000, including $26,270 to Trinity Church, and owed the IRS $1,059,000. At that night's debate, ABC News moderators Charles Gibson and George Stephanopoulos pressed Barack about his "bitter" and "cling" remark, and repeatedly about Reverend Wright, before asking Barack what his relationship was with long-ago Weather Underground bomber turned education professor Bill Ayers. Barack called Bill "a guy who lives in my neighborhood . . . who I know," who's "not somebody who I exchange ideas from on a regular basis." Ayers had "engaged in detestable acts forty years ago, when I was eight years old," but the implication that that "somehow reflects on me and my values, doesn't make much sense, George. The fact is, is that I'm also friendly with Tom Coburn, one of the most conservative Republicans in the United States Senate, who during his campaign once said that it might be appropriate to apply the death penalty to those who carried out abortions. Do I need to apologize for Mr. Coburn's statements? Because I certainly don't agree with those either."<sup>16</sup>

Fortunately for Barack, his comparison of Senate colleague Coburn to the now-controversial Ayers, similar to his pairing of Madelyn and Wright in his Philadelphia speech, attracted little press comment, and Barack called Coburn to apologize. "I said, 'Fine with me,'" Coburn recalled, but he still wondered, "Why answer a question by throwing a friend under a bus?" Come April 22, Hillary Clinton easily won Pennsylvania, defeating Barack 55 to 45 percent, but a more ominous problem loomed when Jeremiah Wright returned to the public stage on April 25. Speaking with sympathetic television host Bill Moyers, Wright argued that "we have supported state terrorism against the Palestinians" and complained that the media "paint me as some sort of fanatic" who is "un-American" and has "a cult at Trinity United Church of Christ. . . . I felt it was unfair. I felt it was unjust. I felt it was untrue," but it was being disseminated to millions of Americans "who know nothing about the prophetic theology of the African American experience." When Moyers asked about Barack's Philadelphia speech, Wright answered that Barack "does what politicians do," a comment that Barack felt impugned his motives. "How could he say that about me?" Barack asked Valerie Jarrett. "He knows that's not true. He knows I wasn't being a politician."

Speaking with Fox News' Chris Wallace, Barack mentioned his private conversation with Wright and his apology to Coburn, "who I consider a close friend." Later that day, speaking to the Detroit NAACP, Wright contended that African American and European American children learn differently, with the former having a "right-brained, subject-oriented" learning style, and the latter "a left-brained, cognitive object-oriented learning style." Then, the next morning, Wright, his wife, and his eldest daughter joined a trio of black journalists for an appearance at the National Press Club.

"This is not an attack on Jeremiah Wright, it is an attack on the black church," Wright asserted. "Black preaching is different from European and European American preaching. It is not deficient. It is just different. It is not bombastic. It is not controversial. It's different." Wright reiterated his notion that "black learning styles are different from European and European American learning styles," but far more usefully mentioned that Trinity has "sent thirty-five men and women through accredited seminaries." When the session turned to Q&A, Wright brushed aside some inquiries. "You haven't heard the whole sermon? That nullifies the question." He noted, "I served six years in the military. Does that make me patriotic?" Returning to his main point, Wright insisted that "this is not an attack on Jeremiah Wright. It has nothing to do with Senator Obama. This is an attack on the black church.” He recklessly declared that Louis Farrakhan “is one of the most important voices in the twentieth and twenty-first century,” adding that “I said to Barack Obama last year, ‘If you get elected, November the 5th I’m coming after you, because you’ll be representing a government whose policies grind under people.’” Then Wright made reference to two books, Emerging Viruses, by Leonard Horowitz, whom serious scholars viewed as an “AIDS conspiracy theorist,” and Harriet Washington’s Medical Apartheid, a credible, mainstream work of history detailing how government programs had victimized black patients.

By nightfall, excerpts of Wright’s comments flooded cable news. In Chapel Hill, North Carolina, Barack knew he would have to denounce Wright far more bluntly than before if his candidacy was to survive. “The person that I saw yesterday was not the person I met twenty years ago,” Barack told a Winston-Salem press conference on Tuesday. Still smarting from Wright’s characterization of his Philadelphia speech, Barack said “he doesn’t know me very well,” and, given his Monday remarks, “I may not know him as well as I thought, either.” Wright “has done enormous good in the church. He has built a wonderful congregation. The people of Trinity are wonderful people, and what attracted me has always been their ministries’ reach beyond the church walls.” But Wright’s embrace of AIDS conspiracies and Louis Farrakhan are “ridiculous propositions” which “should be denounced. And that’s what I’m doing very clearly and unequivocally here today. . . . When I say that I find these comments appalling, I mean it. It contradicts everything that I am about and who I am.”

Replying to a question, Barack explained that “upon watching it, what became clear to me was that it was more than just defending himself. What became clear to me was that he was presenting a worldview that contradicts who I am and what I stand for. And what I think particularly angered me was his suggestion somehow that my previous denunciation of his remarks were somehow political posturing.” Furthermore, “the insensitivity and the outrageousness of his statements and his performance in the question and answer period yesterday, I think, shocked me. . . . In some ways what Reverend Wright said yesterday directly contradicts everything that I’ve done during my life.” Uttering “a bunch of rants that aren’t grounded in truth” was “a show of disrespect to me,” and given how Wright “caricatured himself . . . that made me angry, but also made me saddened.”<sup>17</sup>

The forcefulness of Barack’s statements allayed the burgeoning controversy. The Washington Post thought “the whole sorry episode raises legitimate questions about his judgment,” but the New York Times saluted Barack’s “powerful, unambiguous denunciation” as “the most forthright repudiation of an out-of-control supporter that we can remember.” Barack and his aides were deeply fearful of the impact Wright’s behavior would have in the decisive Indiana and North Carolina primaries on May 6, and on NBC’s Meet the Press Barack again addressed the issue. By employing “divisive, hateful language,” Wright demonstrated “that he did not share my fundamental belief and my fundamental values in terms of bringing the country together and moving forward.” Barack confessed, “I feel a great loyalty to that church,” yet with Wright he insisted that “I never sought his counsel when it came to politics. . . . My commitments are to the values of that church, my commitment is to Christ, it’s not to Reverend Wright.” To Newsweek, Barack even claimed that “I cannot recall a time where he and I sat down and talked about theology or we had long discussions about my faith.”

The night before Indiana and North Carolina voted, Barack was as despondent as Valerie Jarrett had ever seen him. “How could someone I knew, sometime I trusted, do this to me?” Barack vented, fearing that Wright might have sunk his candidacy. When David Axelrod reported that polling showed Barack losing Indiana and neck-and-neck in North Carolina, Barack responded acerbically. “Get Axelrod out of here. He’s a downer.” But twenty-four hours later, the actual vote totals were vastly better: Barack won North Carolina by 15 points, and Hillary Clinton’s margin over him in Indiana was just a single point. The overall delegate race remained tight, but now it looked virtually certain that Barack could narrowly clinch the Democratic nomination in four weeks’ time, following the last six small-state primaries.

In private, Jeremiah Wright reassured old friend Tim Black, “I support Barack one hundred percent. I believe in his vision, and I believe that he is the best qualified candidate to offer us the hope of going in a different direction as a country.” Across black Chicago, scores of people who knew both men were pained beyond words, for as one of the city’s wisest African American voices emphatically emphasized, “Jeremiah Wright was the black male father figure for Barack,” someone whose long-term influence upon Barack should not be underestimated. Then, on the last Sunday in May, Father Mike Pfleger mocked Hillary Clinton while guest-preaching at Trinity, and Barack’s campaign was forced to disassociate him from those remarks too. Two days later, Barack announced that “with some sadness,” he and Michelle were withdrawing as members of Trinity. “This was one I didn’t see coming,” Barack told reporters.<sup>18</sup>

On June 3, as expected, delegates won in the two final Democratic primaries, in Montana and South Dakota, allowed Barack to clinch the Democratic nomination. The final lines of Barack’s victory speech were remarkable:

I am absolutely certain that generations from now, we will be able to look back and tell our children that this was the moment when we began to provide care for the sick and good jobs to the jobless; this was the moment when the rise of the oceans began to slow and our planet began to heal; this was the moment when we ended a war and secured our nation and restored our image as the last, best hope on Earth. This was the moment—this was the time—when we came together to remake this great nation so that it may always reflect our very best selves, and our highest ideals

Very few U.S. newspapers took note of those words, but Barack also took the time to call Madelyn Dunham in Honolulu. “She just said she was really proud,” Barack told ABC’s Charles Gibson the next morning. “She’s going blind, so to hear in her voice what this meant to her, that was a pretty powerful moment.” Madelyn “is a very steady person,” Barack told another interviewer. “She never gets too high, and never gets too low. And I think a lot of my temperament comes from her.” In a speech discussing how he had grown up fatherless, Barack said, “I resolved many years ago that it was my obligation to break the cycle—that if I could be anything in life, I would be a good father to my children.”

In a mid-June videotaped message, Barack announced that his campaign would reject public financing, which “was set up to reduce the influence of private donations in the political process,” a front-page New York Times story noted. “His decision to break an earlier pledge to take public money will quite likely transform the landscape of presidential campaigns, injecting hundreds of millions of dollars into the race and raising doubts about the future of public financing for national races.” The Times added that “the decision means that Mr. Obama will have to spend considerably more time raising money . . . at the expense of spending time meeting voters.” Times columnist David Brooks eviscerated Barack, writing that “Obama didn’t just sell out . . . the primary cause of his professional life” to win “a tiny political advantage” over Republican John McCain, but did so in “a video so risibly insincere that somewhere down in the shadow world” the notorious late Republican hatchet man “Lee Atwater is gaping and applauding.”<sup>19</sup>

In early July, Barack told a religious magazine that “we can prohibit late-term abortions” so long as “there is a strict, well-defined exception for the health of the mother. Now, I don’t think that ‘mental distress’ qualifies as health of the mother. I think it has to be a serious physical issue that arises in pregnancy, where there are real, significant problems to the mother carrying that child to term.” Citing both that and the campaign finance U-turn, Chicago Tribune columnist John Kass reminded readers that “Obama is a Chicago politician” who “has flip-flopped again and again.” Progressive Chicago author Paul Street stressed how in Springfield, “Obama was more interested in having his name associated with resume-padding legislative victories than with attaining ‘progressive’ victories.”

When a pair of interviewers from a women’s magazine asked Barack about Michelle earning more than him thanks to her high-paying U of C Medical Center job, Barack replied that “that wasn’t much of an issue, because the truth is, for eleven out of the thirteen years we were married, I was making substantially more than her, and during the two years that I wasn’t, I was running for the United States Senate, which had its own gratifications. So it wasn’t as if I felt inadequate. . . . I didn’t feel threatened by that at all,” Barack insisted.

The weeks leading up to the Democratic National Convention in Denver at the end of August featured scores of news features examining various aspects of Barack’s life, but journalists found Barack’s campaign far from helpful. A New York Times reporter complained that “they attacked me like I’m a political opponent” when one of his stories drew the campaign’s ire, and The New Republic noted that communications director Robert Gibbs “has built a particularly large reservoir of ill will” among journalists. “Reporters who have covered Obama’s biography or his problems with certain voter blocs have been challenged the most aggressively,” Gabriel Sherman wrote. “‘They’re terrified of people poking around Obama’s life,’ one reporter says. ‘The whole Obama narrative is built around this narrative that Obama and David Axelrod built, and, like all stories, it’s not entirely true. So they have to be protective of the crown jewels.’”<sup>20</sup>

As Barack’s nomination drew near, more and more journalists attempted to gauge his character. New York magazine noted that thanks to Barack’s “calm, collected nature . . . he has been able to completely defang the stereotype of the angry black male.” In The New Republic, John B. Judis, who had interviewed Barack’s community organizing mentors, warned that Obama is “a politician of vision, not interests” and has “fashioned a political identity in near-total opposition to the core principles of his one-time profession.” Former U of C Law School colleague Cass Sunstein pronounced Barack “a minimalist” whose “pragmatism is heavily empirical.” In one of the most perceptive readings ever of Dreams, the well-known writer David Samuels pinpointed Barack’s “distanced and writerly view of a self as something that is summoned through a creative act of will.” Noting “the painful process of self-formation” that Barack went through, Samuels highlighted “Obama’s uncharitable treatment of his white family” and “his distaste for his mother” while pointing out the “many structural parallels” that Dreams shared with Ralph Ellison’s Invisible Man. Barack claimed to Time that as an undergraduate, “I was reading Milton Friedman and Friedrich Hayek,” famous conservative economists, and Barack told the Tribune that “I had to scratch and claw my way to the point I am now, and I think I’ve done so without cutting corners or compromising my integrity.”<sup>21</sup>

On August 23, Barack announced his selection of Senate Foreign Relations Committee colleague Joe Biden as his vice presidential running mate, and five days later Barack accepted the Democratic Party’s nomination for president of the United States. As his campaign against the Republican ticket of Senator John McCain and Alaska governor Sarah Palin got under way, Barack spoke haltingly with ABC’s Diane Sawyer about the absence of his father from his life. What would Barack ask him? Sawyer queried. “I’d like to ask him what he felt about his wives. There was no sense of real commitment there. Not just me, but many of his subsequent wives and their children. And I’d like to know what it was that led him to miss that aspect of what a marriage should be about.”

With grandmother Madelyn Dunham dying of cancer and requiring surgery for a broken hip, Barack broke off from campaigning on October 23 to make the long flight to Honolulu to see her in the same apartment where he had grown up. “I’m still not sure whether she makes it to Election Day,” Barack told ABC’s Good Morning America. “I wanted to make sure . . . that I had a chance to sit down with her and talk to her. She’s still alert and she’s still got all her faculties, and I want to make sure that I don’t miss that opportunity right now,” as he had thirteen years earlier with his mother.

Ten days later, early on Monday morning, November 3, Madelyn died in her apartment at age eighty-six, with Maya Soetoro-Ng by her bedside. Maya called Barack with the news, and at a campaign rally in Charlotte, North Carolina, Barack spoke somberly about her role in his life. Madelyn’s body was cremated, and the next evening, Maya watched the election returns with Madelyn’s urn by her side. At 11:00 P.M. the networks declared Barack the next president of the United States, and the final tally showed him defeating John McCain by almost 10 million votes, 53 to 46 percent. Barack carried twenty-eight of the fifty states, with his Electoral College margin over McCain a whopping 365 to 173.<sup>22</sup>

In New York, former Business International Corporation vice president Lou Celi spoke for everyone who had known Barack prior to 1985. “There was no clue. . . . You would never think in a million years that this was going to be the president of the United States.” In Chicago, Emil Jones Jr. thought back to how Alice Palmer’s supporters had filed such inept petition signatures in December 1995. “That was a fatal mistake which would change the course of history.” Across Illinois, multiple Democrats thought about someone who was absent from election night celebrations. “Barack Obama is not where he is today without Dan Shomon, and I don’t think anyone can or will dispute that.” Another Obama supporter put it more pungently. “If it wasn’t for Dan Shomon, Barack Obama wouldn’t be shit.” In San Francisco, DNC speechwriting coordinator Vicky Rideout recalled July 27, 2004: “if it weren’t for that moment, he wouldn’t be president.”

In Chicago, David Plouffe and David Axelrod knew that January 3, 2008, had been crucial. If Clinton “had been able to prevent us from winning Iowa, she would have been the nominee,” Plouffe explained. The Iowa victory had been essential in a second way too: at the campaign’s outset, “the biggest race problem we had to start was not with the white voters,” Axelrod felt, “but with African American voters” who had “a deep sense of skepticism” that a black candidate could win. Among black observers, there was little disagreement about why Barack had won the support of 43 percent of white voters. Barack’s “racial idealism” touched “a deep longing . . . on the part of whites to escape the stigma of racism,” and many whites “literally longed for ways to disprove the stigma” by supporting Barack. “Voting for Obama was like reparations on the cheap,” African American law professor Richard Thompson Ford cogently explained. Yet even conservative commentator Shelby Steele predicted that “the profound disparity between black and white Americans . . . will persist even under the glow of an Obama presidency.”

Barack immediately was faced with a major economic crisis he would be inheriting from George W. Bush, as well as the need to make scores of crucial personnel decisions. Appearing on CBS’s 60 Minutes alongside Michelle, Barack pledged, “I intend to close Guantánamo, and I will follow through on that”; in a subsequent interview, Barack also emphasized “my broad commitment: no torture.” On December 20, the Obama family flew to Honolulu for their annual holiday getaway, and three days later, following a memorial service, Barack and Maya traveled to Lanai Lookout to scatter Madelyn Dunham’s ashes into the Pacific at the same spot where they had scattered Ann’s in 1995.<sup>23</sup>

In advance of Barack’s inauguration on January 20, 2009, former Harvard Law classmate Frank Hill Harper wrote in Essence that “President Obama has sparked a transformation in the psyche, self-esteem and aspiration of young black males. His positive impact will be seen for generations to come,” but on inauguration day itself, some of Barack’s most important black supporters, like Chicago’s Jim Reynolds, were all but left in the lurch. “Do you realize that Jim took a bus to the inauguration?” another unhappy black donor complained. Some of Barack’s old friends and advisers, like Berkeley Law dean Chris Edley, had strongly opposed his decision to name Chicago congressman Rahm Emanuel as White House chief of staff, and even in the first week of Barack’s presidency it became starkly apparent that “Rahm wanted Obama out in public constantly,” as David Axelrod put it. Hardly a week passed before Wall Street Journal columnist Peggy Noonan nailed the problem. “When the office is omnipresent, it is demystified. Constant exposure deflates the presidency, subtly robbing it of power and making it more common.” Robert M. Gates, whom Barack had asked to stay on as secretary of defense, soon came to agree. “When it comes to the media, often less is more. . . . If one appears infrequently, then people pay more attention when you do appear.” In time Axelrod concurred. “We used him way too much. It robbed him of his power as the narrator of a larger story.”

By March, close observers worried that “Obama’s White House was slipping into a kind of dysfunction,” with Emanuel and National Economic Council director Larry Summers, the former president of Harvard University, playing more dominant roles than Barack. “The president was concerned about showing his uncertainty, or his lack of acquired knowledge on lots of these policies, to his own advisers,” one of them told Pulitzer Prize–winning journalist Ron Suskind. On March 11, Barack reluctantly signed into law the $410 billion Omnibus Appropriations Act of 2009, which included more than eighty-five hundred congressional “earmarks” totaling over $7.7 billion. The earmarks had a richly deserved reputation for reflecting what the Washington Post called “a connection between campaign contributions and spending programs,” and the Post’s front-page news story called Barack’s signing of the bill “an early blow to his attempt to change how business is done in Washington.” The Wall Street Journal reported that David Axelrod had strongly but unsuccessfully argued for a veto, with Emanuel and House Speaker Nancy Pelosi prevailing. The Post detailed how “Obama backed away from bolder proposals” for earmarks reform advocated by Senate reformer Russ Feingold, and NBC News’ Chuck Todd rued how “one of Obama’s core principles was jettisoned for the sake of expediency.”<sup>24</sup>

Speaking with Steve Kroft of CBS’s 60 Minutes, Barack revealed that “the hardest thing about the job is staying focused.” He was very concerned about “making sure that . . . we start getting a handle on our long-term structural deficit,” a point he reiterated to C-SPAN’s Steve Scully. “The long-term problem is Medicaid and Medicare. If we don't reduce long-term health care inflation significantly, we can't get control of the deficit." On a brighter note, living above the office could not be beat. "The White House has been terrific for our family life compared to some of our other previous situations like campaigns, because we are all in the same place," and each evening Barack could go upstairs at six thirty for dinner with his daughters before retiring to his study.

On Monday night, May 25, Barack made one of his most consequential decisions when he called federal appellate judge Sonia Sotomayor to tell her that on Tuesday he would nominate her for the Supreme Court seat from which Justice David H. Souter was retiring. "He asked me to make him two promises. The first was to remain the person I was, and the second was to stay committed to my community," Sotomayor recalled a few months later, after winning Senate confirmation and being sworn into office.

By mid-July Barack had turned his attention toward his long-envisioned health care reform measure, telling ABC's Terry Moran that "we can get this done by the fall" and that "we also do want to reform the insurance industry." Polls showed that over the course of Barack's first six months in the White House, his disapproval rating had risen from an initial 20 percent to 39, but journalists continued to be impressed—and worried—by the sort of support that Barack attracted. The Economist's Lexington column stated that "Obama has inspired more passionate devotion than any modern president," but warned of how "the personality cult that surrounds him . . . has stoked expectations among its devotees to such unprecedented heights" that disappointment was certain.

Inside the West Wing, decision-making remained troubled, with a Wall Street Journal headline calling Barack "a micromanager." The former law professor would ask aides "to do justice to a view other than their own," saying "I want more than what's in this room" when they could not do so. But "the president had lost control of his White House," Ron Suskind learned from his interviewing. Obama "had almost no process to translate his will into policy on the occasions when he could decide on a coherent path. But such decisions were rare," and the tenor of debate was often fouled by chief of staff Rahm Emanuel, who decried liberals as "fucking retards" in one large meeting. "We are treated as though we are children," a leader of one progressive group told a reporter.<sup>25</sup>

On Thursday morning, August 6, in Oberlin, Ohio, Sheila Miyoshi Jager opened her e-mail. Sheila had long worried that her identity could prove "politically explosive given the nature of our relationship," but now she was happy to reminisce about Barack. "So you see, this is really, really sensitive stuff" since "we did not go our separate ways after 1988" and "I do not think Michelle knows."<sup>26</sup>

In mid-September, the administration's health reform plan, the Affordable Care Act, was introduced into Congress, and Barack told CBS's Steve Kroft that "once this bill passes, I own it. And if people look up and say, 'You know what? This hasn't reduced my costs. My premiums are still going up 25 percent, insurance companies are still jerking me around,' I'm the one who's going to be held responsible." Barack again noted that "the only way I can get medium- and long-term federal spending under control is if we do something about health care." On November 7, the Affordable Care Act was approved by the House of Representatives, but passage came on a vote of 220 to 215, with only one Republican in favor and 39 Democrats opposed.

Writing in New York magazine, John Heilemann lamented how the White House had "badly botched the job of presenting reform to the country” and seemed “more interested in passing something, anything, no matter how ineffectual, that could be labeled reform than in making sound policy.” As one Democratic senator told Heilemann, “We’ll get a health care bill, but we’ve squandered the ability to change America.”

On December 1 Barack approved a “surge” of thirty thousand U.S. troops in Afghanistan. Barack told Steve Kroft that authorizing that deployment was “absolutely” the most difficult decision he had made as president. In Afghanistan, his hope was “to scale this down to a point where it is manageable and we are protecting American lives. . . . That is my ultimate job.”

When Oprah Winfrey asked him in a pre-Christmas interview how he would grade his first year in office, Barack gave himself a “good, solid B+.” Stating he had “inherited the biggest set of challenges of any president since Franklin Delano Roosevelt,” Barack said he had “stabilized the economy” and prevented “a significant financial meltdown. . . . We are on our way out of Iraq. I think we’ve got the best possible plan for Afghanistan. . . . We have achieved an international consensus around the need for Iran and North Korea to disable their nuclear weapons. And I think that we’re going to pass the most significant piece of social legislation since Social Security, and that’s health insurance for every American. . . . If I get health care passed,” Barack would up his grade to A-, and on December 24 the Senate passed a bill slightly different from the House one with sixty affirmative votes, the minimum number needed to foil a filibuster. One day before the first anniversary of Barack’s inauguration, Massachusetts voters upended his political game plan for final approval of the Affordable Care Act by electing Republican Scott Brown to fill the seat of the late Edward M. Kennedy, thereby reducing to fifty-nine the Democrats’ Senate majority.

Barack granted a trio of first-anniversary interviews. He expressed pleasure in how well his daughters had adjusted to life in the White House, but disappointment that “what I haven’t been able to do . . . is bring the country together. . . . That’s what’s been lost this year—that whole sense of changing how Washington works.” Barack told Time’s Joe Klein he had hoped “that health care wouldn’t take this long” and that “if there’s one thing I have learned” it’s that things “always take longer than you think.” To ABC’s Diane Sawyer, Barack said, “one thing I’m clear about is that I’d rather be a really good one-term president than a mediocre two-term president. . . . The easiest thing for me to do . . . would be to go small bore . . . just make sure that everybody’s comfortable and we only propose things that don’t threaten any special interests. . . . I don’t want to look back on my time here and say to myself, all I was concerned about was nurturing my own popularity.”

Barack’s one-year anniversary also offered commentators a chance to assay his presidency to date. CBS News’ assiduous Mark Knoller reported there had been only twenty-one days when Barack “did not have a public or press appearance,” and that he had golfed twenty-nine times. With Barack relying heavily upon the quartet of Rahm Emanuel, David Axelrod, Valerie Jarrett, and Robert Gibbs, the Financial Times’ Edward Luce rued how not since Richard Nixon’s presidency had there been “an administration that has been so dominated by such a small inner circle.” Given the all-but-complete partisan divide over health reform, Luce quoted an academic as observing that Barack “totally lost control of the narrative in his first year in office.”<sup>27</sup>

On March 21, by a vote of 219 to 212, the House of Representatives passed the Senate’s previously approved version of the Affordable Care Act, with no Republicans in favor and thirty-four Democrats voting nay. Two days later, Barack signed it into law, and the White House celebrated what it viewed as the greatest achievement of Barack's presidency to date. As Neera Tanden, one of Barack's top aides on the measure, emphasized, "there was never an issue that was in the bill that was more important than just passing the bill." Yet as NBC's Chuck Todd stated, "the Affordable Care Act can hardly qualify as the universal health care Obama promised," and he believed it exemplified "a familiar Obama pattern: grandly proclaim a bold new direction, then move to the establishment middle."

In April, David Remnick's The Bridge, the first serious biography of Barack, was published to mixed reviews. Some critics were disappointed by Remnick's "idolatrous" and "all but starry-eyed" view of Obama, ruing how in Remnick's portrait "Obama emerges as nearly flawless." Others objected to Remnick's "defining Mr. Obama largely through the prism of race," with veteran New York Times reporter Howard W. French writing that Remnick's "insistence on race" represented "an approach that all but declares the man's race is the most interesting thing about him." Another reaction was equally fundamental. New York Times critic Michiko Kakutani lamented that The Bridge does "not really explain how this young, rootless outsider acquired the self-confidence that fueled his ascent in national politics." In the New York Review of Books, former Times executive editor Joseph Lelyveld complained that "no one can pin down exactly when the young Obama first thought seriously of running for president." Salon editor in chief Joan Walsh zeroed in on a lengthy comment Barack had made to Remnick about his 1980s transformation, which he dated to moving to New York City rather than to Chicago. "Obama's answer is weirdly unsatisfying, disembodied and impersonal, like he's narrating someone else's story."

The Bridge also drew the attention of Sheila Jager, who took issue with how it spoke of Barack's unnamed girlfriend as being "a white University of Chicago student." "I don't consider myself exclusively white, as I am half Asian," and "what Remnick wrote is wrong. Race and identity being a central theme of the book, I think Remnick completely missed what I believe was the most important factor that led Barack to resolve his torment over this central issue of his life." Sheila felt that Remnick "seems to take things too much at face value," especially Dreams.

But for Sheila The Bridge reopened a deep emotional wound. "The nature of the relationship" and how "it continued post-Chicago . . . is the real problem," for "in fact there is a lot to hide." Indeed, "our relationship was a tragedy that has weighed and haunted my life," such that "I hoped so much for Clinton to be the nominee and then that McCain would win not for politics or policy positions, but only because I feared this would happen. And now, what I had feared more than anything, feared because I didn't know exactly how it would affect me, only that I knew it would affect me in a manner that would bring out all the pain that I had worked so hard to put past me" had indeed come to pass.<sup>28</sup>

As a trio of valuable books emerged covering the first year of Barack's presidency—Jonathan Alter's The Promise, Bob Woodward's Obama's Wars, and Richard Wolffe's Revival—press commentary on how to understand Barack continued. Writing that "the president seems to stand foursquare for nothing much," Washington Post columnist Richard Cohen asked, "Who is this guy? What are his core beliefs?" A month later, Cohen repeated his plaintive call: "Who Is Barack Obama?" Given how the president "has opined on virtually everything in hundreds of public statements," as the Los Angeles Times put it, many analysts' remained puzzled about Barack's core beliefs.

On August 4, Senate Republican minority leader Mitch McConnell visited the Oval Office for his first one-on-one conversation with Barack, more than eighteen months into his presidency. Reporters learned that the invitation had been extended only after former Senate Republican leader Trent Lott asked former Senate Democratic leader Tom Daschle to complain to the White House about Barack's disinterest in developing personal relationships with congressional leaders. The following day, with only five Republicans voting yes, the Senate confirmed Barack's second Supreme Court nominee, Solicitor General Elena Kagan, to replace the retiring John Paul Stevens by a tally of 63–37.

While journalistic commentary on his presidency grew increasingly critical, one problem Barack faced was beyond his control. A July CNN poll found that 27 percent of Americans believed Barack likely was born outside the United States, and an early August Time one showed that 24 percent of respondents, and 46 percent of Republicans, thought Barack was a Muslim. Speaking with Rolling Stone's Jann Wenner, Barack boasted that “here I am, halfway through my first term, and we’ve probably accomplished 70 percent of the things that we said we were going to do.” Granted “Afghanistan is harder than Iraq,” but “we have been very successful in recruiting and beginning to train Afghan security forces.” Barack also emphasized that “we are not going to use a shroud of secrecy to excuse illegal behavior on our part.” He repeated his “70 percent” claim to the New York Times's Peter Baker while explaining that “we probably spent much more time trying to get the policy right than trying to get the politics right.” That would remain Barack's view going forward. “In those first two years, I think a certain arrogance crept in, in the sense of thinking as long as we get the policy ready, we didn’t have to sell it,” he recounted in 2015.<sup>29</sup>

But Washington's best-connected journalists offered portraits of Obama's presidency far more critical than Barack's own rosy image. In the style he had mastered for more than three decades, Bob Woodward described how top Democratic insider John Podesta believed that “Obama's approach was so intellectual” and that “sometimes a person's great strength, in this case Obama's capacity to intellectualize, was also an Achilles' heel.” The national security adviser, General Jim Jones, who was leaving the White House, found Barack “cerebral and distant,” Woodward wrote, and Defense Secretary Bob Gates would recount that “one quality I missed in Obama was passion.” But “the only military matter, apart from leaks, about which I ever sensed deep passion on his part was ‘Don't Ask, Don't Tell,’” concerning gay service members. As someone whose government service reached back forty years, Gates also appreciated how Barack's “White House was by far the most centralized and controlling in national security of any I had seen since Richard Nixon and Henry Kissinger.”

Liberal commentators took some solace when Rahm Emanuel resigned as chief of staff in order to run for mayor of Chicago. Pete Rouse temporarily replaced Emanuel before former commerce secretary Bill Daley took up the post. In a long and comprehensive New York Times Magazine cover story titled “The Education of President Obama,” Peter Baker wrote that Barack “rarely reaches outside the tight group of advisers” led by Jarrett; “he's opaque even to us,” a top White House aide told Baker. “Except maybe for a few people in the inner circle, he's a closed book.” Baker revealingly described how “on long Air Force One flights,” Barack “retreats to the conference room and plays spades for hours, maintaining a trash-talking contest all the while, with the same three aides,” Reggie Love, Marvin Nicholson, and presidential photographer Pete Souza.

One of the president's top economic aides described to Ron Suskind “the Barack Obama he first met in 2007. He felt there was a clarity of thought and purpose to that earlier version that was increasingly difficult to find in the years he was the president . . . somehow the president had lost ownership of his words and, eventually, his deeds.” The New York Times’ Sheryl Stolberg, building on her colleague Peter Baker’s story, quoted Democratic policy maven William Galston: “I can’t believe that he wants to go down in history as the president who promised to overcome polarization and ended up intensifying it.” Nebraska Republican senator Mike Johanns told Stolberg that Barack “needs to build friendships and he needs to build trust” in order to work more successfully with Congress.<sup>30</sup>

When the midterm elections took place on November 2, Republicans gained six seats in the U.S. Senate and sixty-three in the House, seizing control of the latter chamber. In Newsweek, Eleanor Clift wrote that Barack’s problem was that “there’s too much hero worship around him” and that “if his aides weren’t so in love with him and wrapped up in the idea of him as a transformational president, they might have seen this coming.”

Speaking with CBS’s Steve Kroft, Barack expressed regret over having signed the earmark-laden 2009 appropriations bill. “That’s an example of where I was so concerned about getting things done that I lost track of the reason I got elected, which was we were to change how business was done here.” Barack said that “in terms of setting the tone and how this town operates . . . that’s an aspect of leadership that I didn’t pay enough attention to.” In addition, passing the Affordable Care Act was “actually a little more costly than we expected, politically,” particularly one-offs like the “Cornhusker kickback,” necessary for Nebraska senator Ben Nelson’s vote, which “really hurt us politically.” Acknowledging that “part of my promise to the American people when I was elected was to maintain the kind of tone that says we can disagree without being disagreeable,” Barack admitted that “over the course of two years, there have been times where I’ve slipped on that commitment.”

Following New Year’s, first David Axelrod and then Robert Gibbs exited the White House. Axelrod “was pushed out” in what wired-in journalist Richard Wolffe called “a wrenching expression of disaffection from the president he had fallen for,” and Wolffe purposely used the exact same words to characterize Gibbs’s departure, too. “The president broke Axe’s and Robert’s hearts,” a “member of Obama’s inner circle” told Wolffe. “Axe and Gibbs were effectively fired,” that person explained, and David Plouffe moved into Axelrod’s former office while former Time reporter Jay Carney succeeded Gibbs.

In Chicago, unhappiness with the Obama White House was widespread. African American publisher Hermene Hartman sarcastically congratulated Emanuel on taking the first black president and making him non-black, and retiring mayor Richard Daley complained that “we’ve got a Chicago guy in Washington and he’s forgotten Chicago.” In March 2011, Hartman went public about black Chicago’s disappointment with Barack, telling Chicago Magazine’s Carol Felsenthal that Barack “has not been loyal to some of the people who were there for him from day one,” like Jim Reynolds. “Did you outgrow us, or did you forget?” Hartman asked.

Sentiments like Hartman’s could also be found in Roseland’s modest bungalows. Barack “forgot where he came from,” longtime Reformation Lutheran custodian John Webster said, his voice full of tears. “I don’t forget people who help me,” but “he lost his soul,” and “it hurts me so bad.” On Roseland’s decrepit South Michigan Avenue shopping strip, one young woman, asked what she would tell Barack, had an easy reply: “Just take all the guns away. The guns are ridiculous.” Pastors whose churches abutted Palmer Park, across from what once had been Barack’s office at Holy Rosary, warned that the park was entirely unsafe after dark. Data showed that Chicago’s public schools were serving black students no better than they had twenty years earlier, with only one in two graduating high school. That of course helped explain why black unemployment in Chicago was 24.2 percent; in 1987 it had been 17.2. “Chicago remains the most racially segregated city in the country,” the Tribune noted, but across the South Side everyone’s uppermost fear was the “escalating violence.” Visiting Roseland, a journalist described “the barren, empty feel of the streets,” and a thirty-nine-year-old native said that “things in Roseland were pretty bad when I was growing up . . . but they are much worse today.”<sup>31</sup>

In Washington, the president refused to embrace the proposals of a bipartisan panel he had appointed to address the United States’ burgeoning deficit. The following day, in a budget speech to which Republican lawmakers had been specially invited, Barack used what the Washington Post called “a sharp, partisan tone” to accuse Republicans of seeking to “end Medicare as we know it.” Furious House Budget Committee chairman Paul Ryan warned a presidential aide that “You just poisoned the well,” and dismayed congressional Republicans told the Post that “Obama’s partisan tone made no sense.” Panel cochairs Erskine Bowles and Alan Simpson were similarly upset. Bowles called the speech harsh, and Simpson said, “I thought it was like inviting a guy to his own hanging.”

Visiting 5046 South Greenwood for only the third time in two years, Barack discovered a Kapiolani Hospital booklet documenting his August 4, 1961, birth among his late mother’s papers. Charmed by the keepsake, Barack directed his attorneys to ask Hawaiian officials to release his long-withheld “long form” birth certificate. Five days later, in a far more consequential surprise, U.S. special operations troops confronted and killed Osama bin Laden in what promised to be the signature accomplishment of Barack’s presidency. Speaking again with Steve Kroft, Barack said the time that U.S. forces were inside bin Laden’s compound in Abbottabad, Pakistan, was “the longest forty minutes of my life with the possible exception of when Sasha got meningitis . . . and I was waiting for the doctor to tell me that she was all right.”

In midsummer, in the aftermath of a golf game with Republican House Speaker John Boehner, Barack appeared to be “within a handshake” of a bipartisan “grand bargain” on deficit reduction before suddenly altering his stance. “There appeared to be a very different president in attendance” than three days earlier, a superb Washington Post “tick tock” reported, and Boehner said no, but forty-eight hours later Barack reverted to his prior position. “His message: I’ll take your last offer,” the Post wrote, but by then the deal was dead. “White House advisers conceded that the collapse of the debt talks was a disaster from a policy perspective,” the Post reported. In the wake of the debt deal collapse, one of Barack’s “closest friends” told Richard Wolffe that “I have never seen him this mad,” as Barack “cursed the media and what he saw as its gross inadequacies and failings.”

A scathing verdict came from distinguished African American Harvard Law professor Randall Kennedy. Barack’s “lists of retreats from progressive commitments is considerable,” Kennedy wrote, and “Obama’s much-vaunted pragmatism degenerates at key moments into mere expediency.” Barack’s less than persuasive fence-straddling on gay marriage “is a sad spectacle: the prevarication of a decent politician impelled by his perception of electoral realities to adopt an indecent position with which he disagrees.” There now was no question that “Obama is a professional politician first and last. For the sake of attaining and retaining power, he is willing to adopt, jettison, or manipulate positions as evolving circumstances require.”<sup>32</sup>

In late September, after a U.S. drone strike ordered by Barack killed Anwar al-Awlaki, an American-

born al Qaeda leader in Yemen, the president met with his top aides. “Turns out I’m really good at killing people. Didn’t know that was gonna be a strong suit of mine,” Barack remarked before launching into an extended self-critique, the first one any of them had ever heard him voice. Barack questioned his carefully calibrated political stances on many issues, particularly gay marriage, but chief of staff Bill Daley was worried that word of Barack’s comments would leak out. Six weeks later, just before another meeting, David Plouffe informed Barack that New York magazine’s John Heilemann knew about Barack’s earlier comments. “How could someone do this to me?” Barack asked, telling his assembled aides, “I can’t trust anybody here anymore,” as Heilemann again soon learned. Barack demanded that the guilty party apologize and stalked out. Vice President Joe Biden echoed Barack’s anger before likewise leaving. The aides all agreed that Barack’s presidency was under siege.

In his annual round of pre-Christmas television interviews, a visibly defensive Barack insisted to CBS’s Steve Kroft that “our deficit problems are completely manageable.” Barack boastfully claimed, “I would put our legislative and foreign policy accomplishments in our first two years against any president” except perhaps Lyndon Johnson, Franklin Roosevelt, and Abraham Lincoln, although he conceded that “when it comes to the economy, we’ve got a lot more work to do.” When ABC’s Barbara Walters asked him, “What’s the trait you most deplore in yourself?” Barack answered “laziness,” explaining that “deep down, underneath all the work I do, I think there’s a laziness in me” that he attributed to “growing up in Hawaii.”

As 2011 headed toward its close, Barack’s closest personal aide, Reggie Love, left the White House to finish his MBA at the Wharton School of Business. Reporting Love’s departure, the New York Times’ Jodi Kantor, whose forthcoming book The Obamas had White House aides worried, called Barack “a private, solitary president who allows few people to grow close to him,” but Kantor was unaware that in the wake of the Affordable Care Act’s passage, Barack had finally, after years of failure, completely given up smoking. Her book’s portrait of Barack was far from warm, and she wrote that Barack’s “self-confidence often made him lazy.” Aides believed “there was nothing spontaneous or vulnerable about the president,” and Kantor emphasized how even after three years “they could not fully read their boss.” The most notable controversy generated by The Obamas concerned a quotation that Barack’s friend Allison Davis had given Kantor, which he said was off-the-record, but she nonetheless published: “When I leave office there are only two things I want. I want a plane and I want a valet,” Barack had told Davis.

In the Atlantic Monthly, James Fallows quoted an unnamed administration official as explaining how “Obama’s extra-high intellectual capacity is simply not matched by his emotional capacity . . . he does not seem to have the ability to connect with people.” Noting how multiple tomes all detailed Barack’s “emotional distance from all but a handful of longtime friends and advisers,” Fallows described Barack as an “incrementalist operator” whose interpersonal demeanor was “cool to the point of chilly.”<sup>33</sup>

In late January, Office of Management and Budget director Jack Lew was named chief of staff, replacing Bill Daley, whose one-year tenure Richard Wolffe termed “a walking disaster.” Both the New York Times and then the Washington Post published long stories detailing how the previous summer’s debt deal had failed, with the Times’ Jackie Calmes saying that Barack’s “partisan turn undercuts a central promise of his 2008 campaign, to rise above the rancor,” and that “Obama arguably failed to show leadership on perhaps the country’s biggest problem.”

Barack had known since November that a forthcoming book on his parents and his own young adulthood would “out” both Alex McNear and Genevieve Cook. Author David Maraniss had learned about Alex’s private life from an old Oxy acquaintance, and at the behest of a mutual friend she spoke with Maraniss by phone, telling him that “he could not read the letters” Barack had written her in 1982–83 while giving him “a handful of quotes . . . that I didn’t think would in any way embarrass” Barack. Maraniss had also gotten Genevieve Cook on the phone, and Genevieve later explained that her “main motivation in my desire to talk to Maraniss was anger/indignation: I thought it was exclusively about having a venue to respond to Barack’s decision to conflate (and thus misrepresent) the girlfriend in NYC” in Dreams. Genevieve shared with Maraniss some excerpts from her journals, and one photo of her and Barack, but she made no mention of the letters Barack had written her.

With Vanity Fair scheduled to release in early May an excerpt from the book featuring Alex and Genevieve, Barack’s deep fear about a vastly more explosive revelation led him to pick up an aide’s phone to do something that he had not done in over twenty years. As Sheila Jager related, “Barack called me out of the blue a few weeks ago. Of course it was a surprise,” and Barack said he was “disgusted” by Maraniss’s interest in his sexual history. “I told him that Maraniss had contacted me,” as he had another 1980s U of C anthropology student also named Sheila, “but that I had . . . cut him off. Barack seemed relieved.” Sheila was ecstatic that Barack had contacted her, for that showed “it never ended badly” and reflected “the warm feelings we still have for one another.”

The Vanity Fair excerpt previewed the only two newsworthy nuggets in Maraniss’s book, and reviewers panned the volume’s shortcomings. “Obama does not really emerge in Maraniss’s biography,” complained Darryl Pinckney in the New York Review of Books, and “Maraniss can’t find in Obama’s story the scene when he revealed to someone that he possessed a sense of having an extraordinary destiny.” In The New Republic, Nicholas Lemann dismissed Maraniss’s book as “raw and under-processed.” Lemann appreciated that “Obama’s childhood circumstances were more emotionally difficult than he has made them out to be,” but he found it “remarkable and unexplained” that Barack “wound up with both an unstoppable drive to power and complete self-control.”<sup>34</sup>

On May 9, three days after Vice President Joe Biden publicly voiced his support for same-sex marriage, Barack tardily admitted that he agreed. “I’ve just concluded that for me personally it is important for me to go ahead and affirm that I think same-sex couples should be able to get married,” he told ABC’s Robin Roberts in a hastily scheduled interview. It was now all but official that former Massachusetts governor Mitt Romney would be Barack’s Republican opponent come November, yet America’s increasingly widespread acceptance of gay equality made Barack’s long-standing political pusillanimity appear embarrassingly outdated. Among onetime supporters, expressions of profound disappointment with Barack’s presidency continued apace. “Obama must be defeated in the coming election. He has failed to advance the progressive cause in the United States,” declared Roberto Mangabeira Unger, once Barack’s favorite teacher.

In the African American community, Columbia University professor Fredrick Harris observed that “Obama stopped talking about racial inequality once he solidified support from black voters.” Similarly, “campaign ads highlighting Obama’s white heritage . . . constantly reminded voters of the candidate’s not-completely-black identity.” Equally bad, “instead of pressuring Obama to move on certain policies, black leaders and black voters act more as cheerleaders than players.”

Speaking with Barack’s best-known black supporter, Michelle Obama agreed with alacrity when

Oprah Winfrey asked Barack, “So you can compartmentalize?” “Oh, he’s very good at that,” Michelle immediately volunteered. Barack’s younger brother Mark believed Barack “compartmentalizes his life into the private and public spheres,” but Mark explained that Barack “is so impenetrable” that “he remains an enigma.” Chicago friends acknowledged Barack’s “deep compartmentalizing,” but to Winfrey Barack said, “I’m in constant conversation with God and that voice that is true about doing the right thing.”<sup>35</sup>

Barack’s renomination for a second term on September 6 offered journalists and insiders an opportunity to judge his first. “He doesn’t feel he needs to thank his friends,” Valerie Jarrett admitted to Jonathan Alter, and an unnamed big donor complained to The New Yorker’s Jane Mayer that Jarrett herself “seemed to think she was blessing me by breathing in the same space.” Politico’s John Harris and Jonathan Martin judged Barack “a man of conventional instincts, practicing conventional politics,” and people who were disappointed failed to “understand the arc of Obama’s career before the presidency.” Barack “has presented no set of ideas that collectively represent anything that might last beyond his term,” and in addition, “Obama’s cultural impact has been virtually nil.”

The day after Barack’s renomination, Bob Woodward’s second book on the Obama presidency appeared, with former National Economic Council director Larry Summers saying of Barack, “I don’t think anybody had a sense of his deep feelings about things. I don’t think anybody has a sense of his deep feelings about people. I don’t think people have a sense of his deep feelings around his public philosophy.” In his autobiography, the late Paul Simon had emphasized that “a strong president has to have strong convictions,” but in Summers’s eyes Barack’s fundamental problem was his “excessive pragmatism.”

Speaking once again with Steve Kroft, Barack admitted that “the spirit that I brought to Washington, that I wanted to see instituted . . . I haven’t fully accomplished that. Haven’t even come close in some cases . . . If you ask me what’s my biggest disappointment, it’s that we haven’t changed the tone in Washington as much as I would have liked.” Unlike Winfrey, Kroft posed some challenging questions. “The national debt has gone up 60 percent in the four years that you’ve been in office,” he accurately told Barack, who responded that that was 90 percent George W. Bush’s fault. “I said I’d end the war in Iraq. I did,” Barack declared.

In New York in mid-September, Barack attended a $40,000-per-person fund-raiser hosted by hip-hop stars Jay Z and Beyoncé that raised $4 million for his campaign. “Let me just begin by saying to Jay and Bey, thank you so much for your friendship,” Barack told the one hundred guests as they imbibed “$800-per-bottle Armand de Brignac champagne.” The White House declined to schedule a New York meeting with visiting Israeli prime minister Benjamin Netanyahu, “telling Netanyahu that Obama was too busy to see him,” USA Today reported. In response, Chicago’s Susan Crown, once a major Obama donor, switched her support to Mitt Romney. “I am so embarrassed that our current President, instead of taking a meeting with Netanyahu, is going to New York and hanging out with Jay Z and Beyoncé,” Crown stated. “Why Jay Z and Beyoncé are your priority?”

Similarly unhappy was veteran Industrial Areas Foundation organizer Arnie Graf, whom Barack twenty-six years earlier had quizzed about the realities of interracial marriage during his IAF training. In 2003 Graf had been favorably impressed with Mitt Romney when he dealt with him in Massachusetts, but now both presidential contenders “are not the equals of their own former selves,” Graf wrote. Citing “the errors and lapses that have made his first term a disappointment,” Graf said, “I’d like to hear the Obama of 1986 comment on the Obama of 2012.” With both Romney and Obama, “their ambition to be president has overwhelmed their core beliefs,” and “the earlier version of each man would never have supported the current version—or even recognized him.”<sup>36</sup>

When the tightly contested presidential race ended late on November 6, Barack narrowly won reelection, receiving 51 percent of the popular vote and carrying 26 states. Overall Barack topped Romney by almost 5 million votes, and his Electoral College margin was a healthy 332 to 206. Reacting to Barack’s victory, Sheila Jager recounted how he “always said to me that becoming the president wasn’t the goal in and of itself,” that “he wanted to be a great one.”

Speaking with Time magazine, Barack stressed how as president “the amount of power you have is overstated.” In addition, “anything we do is going to be somewhat imperfect . . . so what we try to do is just tack in the right direction.” Yet in a remarkable implicit comparison, Barack also stated that as president one was no longer who one had been previously. “The Lincoln who is a lawyer in Springfield, Illinois isn’t the same Lincoln as the one who addresses Gettysburg. For that matter, the Lincoln who’s elected President is not the same as the Lincoln who delivers the second inaugural. They’re different people.”

Soon after New Year’s, an unusual poll reported that many Americans believed that Barack Obama was a different person too. Indeed, 36 percent thought that Obama is “hiding important information about his background and early life,” New Jersey’s Fairleigh Dickinson University reported. Since “among Republicans . . . more knowledge leads to greater belief in political conspiracies,” that 36 percent figure masked how 64 percent of Republicans, and 42 percent of whites, but only 17 percent of blacks, agreed that it was “probably true” that Barack was hiding something crucial.<sup>37</sup>

As Barack prepared to take the oath of office for a second time, CBS News’ Mark Knoller summarized the statistical record of Barack’s first term. Unemployment had remained static at 7.8 percent, but the national debt had risen from $10.6 to $16.4 trillion, “the largest increase in the national debt under one president.” Over the course of four years, Barack had delivered 1,852 public speeches and had granted 591 media interviews, 104 of which had been with national television networks. Barack had taken thirteen vacations, totaling 83 days, and had played 113 rounds of golf. Some months earlier Barack had told Oprah Winfrey that in 2008 “I promised I wouldn’t be a perfect president, but I’d wake up every single day working as hard as I could . . . and that promise I’ve kept.”

NBC’s Chuck Todd believed that even before his second inauguration, Barack “set himself on a path to failure” by embracing a conflictual policy agenda on top of his lack of outreach to members of Congress. Without expressly naming his source, Todd reported that moderate West Virginia Democratic senator Joe Manchin, elected to office in 2010, received his first telephone call from Barack more than two years later. But “Obama didn’t call many senators, period.”

Speaking in unusually personal terms at Morehouse College’s commencement, Barack said, “I sure wish I had had a father who was . . . involved” in his life, and “I’ve tried to be for Michelle and my girls what my father was not for my mother and me.” He described what he called “the special obligation I felt, as a black man . . . to help those who need it most, people who didn’t have the opportunities that I had.”

In early June, Edward Snowden’s astonishing revelations about the depth and extent of U.S. government electronic surveillance programs shook Obama’s administration and all of American politics.

European anger at the U.S. executive branch was especially acute, and as an aura of failure began to settle over Barack's presidency, old friends struggled to come to terms with why things had gone so wrong. "Barack is a tragic figure: so much potential, such critical times," but "such failure to perform . . . like he is an empty shell," one longtime Hyde Park friend lamented. "Maybe the flaw is hubris, deep and abiding hubris, as if his touch, his deep understanding, will clear the path. . . . How else could he possibly be so . . . unruffled" despite what was happening? Yet no one alive brought deeper insight into the tragedy of Barack Obama than Sheila Jager.

*I think the seeds of his future failings were always present in Chicago. He made a series of calculated decisions when he began to map out his life at that time and they involved some deep compromises. There is a familiar echo in the language he uses now to talk about the compromises he's always forced to make and the way he explained his future to me back then, saying, in effect, I *wish* I could do this, but pragmatism and the reality of the world has forced me to do that. From the bailout to NSA to Egypt, it is always the same. The problem is that "pragmatism" can very much look like what works best for the moment. Hence, the constant criticism that there is no strategic vision behind his decisions. Perhaps this pragmatism and need to just "get along in the world" (by accepting the world as it is instead of really trying to change it) stems from his deep-seated need to be loved and admired which has ultimately led him on the path to conformism and not down the path to greatness which I had hoped for him.<sup>38</sup>*

In late August, Barack unexpectedly reversed course about launching military strikes against the Syrian regime of Bashar al-Assad, which was continuing to murder thousands of Syrian civilians. His sudden change of heart, which occurred following a one-on-one conversation with Denis McDonough, who seven months earlier had succeeded Jack Lew as White House chief of staff, stunned other top aides and world leaders alike. Jeffrey Goldberg, Obama's most-favored foreign policy commentator, wrote that National Security Adviser Susan Rice was "shocked" and believed that "the damage to America's credibility would be serious and lasting. Others had difficulty fathoming how the president could reverse himself." One Middle Eastern head of state told Goldberg that Obama was "untrustworthy," and even Barack's former CIA director and defense secretary Leon Panetta spoke disparagingly of him. "Once the commander in chief draws that red line, then I think the credibility of the commander in chief and this nation is at stake if he doesn't enforce it." Former Clinton administration aide William Galston rued how Barack's "allergy to the use, or even the threat, of force has rendered U.S. diplomacy all but toothless."

At the end of September, as the Affordable Care Act's new Web site, HealthCare.gov, prepared to debut, Barack promised that "any American out there who does not currently have health insurance can get high-quality health insurance." But as it soon became clear that the Web site was a dysfunctional disaster, journalists like NBC's Chuck Todd wondered "how could a president so powerfully make a law so central to his legacy and then fail so miserably to make it real?" Politico's Michael Grunwald observed that "the crash of the Obamacare website" was "a debacle that seemed to confirm every attack ever leveled at Obama's competence." Simultaneously, press anger at Barack's White House increasingly spilled into public view. Veteran New York Times reporter David Sanger said that "this is the most closed, control-freak administration I've ever covered," and longtime CBS newsman Bob Schieffer concurred:

“Whenever I’m asked what is the most manipulative and secretive administration I’ve covered, I always say it’s the one in office now.”

In mid-October, in his third book on Obama’s campaigns and presidency, Richard Wolffe zinged Barack’s “lack of preparation and disengagement at vital times,” a failing that a Washington Post story soon highlighted. “Former Obama administration officials said the president’s inattention to detail has been a frequent source of frustration,” and even after almost five years in the White House, “Obama has yet to master the management of information within his administration.”

The negative commentary kept on coming. A front-page New York Times story on Democratic fund-raising stated that “more than a dozen Obama supporters . . . described the president as an introvert,” and in a new book on the 2012 campaign, Mark Halperin and John Heilemann wrote that stories of Barack’s “aloofness and inattentiveness to his donors were legion.” In the Wall Street Journal, the distinguished foreign affairs commentator Fouad Ajami wrote that what energized opposition to Barack “wasn’t his race” but “his exalted view of himself” as “above things, a man alone and anointed.”<sup>39</sup>

A seeming culmination of all the months of negative commentary came in early November when Vanity Fair published former New York Times reporter Todd S. Purdum’s profile of Barack, “The Lonely Guy.” Purdum believed “Obama has always been alone,” since “he was abandoned not only by his black African father . . . but also by his white American mother.” Longtime Chicago friends agreed that Barack “is the functional equivalent of an orphan,” someone who “craved acceptance” as a result of his abandonment. Purdum thought that “Obama’s resolute solitude—his isolation and alienation from the other players . . . has emerged as the defining trait of his time in office,” for “self-possession is the core of his being.”

Purdum highlighted “Obama’s persistent assumption that supporters (and staffers, for that matter) don’t need to be thanked.” In Chicago, that behavior was well known, but as Barack’s time in the presidency lengthened with few former aides and friends hearing anything at all from the White House, feelings of disappointment hardened into anger. Barack “doesn’t feel indebted to people,” a once-close assistant explained, but among friends who had known Michelle as well as or even better than Barack, the surprise and pain at the extent to which both Obamas had “gone Hollywood,” as with Jay Z and Beyoncé, was pronounced. Friends had believed that “Michelle will always be there to keep him in check,” because “she grounded him,” but now the evidence was undeniable that “she’s more caught up” in celebrity hobnobbing than Barack was. “She’s an even bigger disappointment than he is,” one black Chicagoan remarked. In New York too friends of many years expressed anger over how “they just fucked all these people who were so loyal to them.” Yet conversations about “all the people that Barack has burned” were most common in Chicago, with once-fervent campaign volunteers explaining how they no longer supported Barack “because of how he was treating all of those people.” One former protégé had realized “that’s what he’s about,” but “you don’t treat people like that,” he exclaimed, his voice full of emotion. “I don’t think people know who politicians are versus who they project.” Todd Purdum wondered “how someone wired the way Obama is got so far in politics,” yet Purdum concluded that the absence of any “strong intellectual rivals” in Barack’s inner circle reflected “a basic insecurity” on the part of the president.<sup>40</sup>

As 2013 ended, Politico quoted longtime Washington observer David Gergen criticizing how, as with the Affordable Care Act and HealthCare.gov, “there’s enormous value placed, within the White House, upon winning” but “there’s less and less value placed upon executing the law itself.” Barack’s team is “much, much better at campaigning . . . than they are in governing and in management,” Gergen explained. Speaking with New Yorker editor David Remnick, Barack once again minimized his role, saying that “as president . . . you are essentially a relay swimmer in a river full of rapids, and that river is history.” The president, he emphasized, “cannot remake our society,” but congressional expert Charlie Cook reported that “on Capitol Hill, few Democrats love, fear, or even respect their president.” In part that was because “this administration has delivered very little,” and the New York Times’ Peter Baker concurred that Democrats also blamed Barack “for not doing more to work across the aisle.”

By late February 2014, progressive Afro-English Guardian journalist Gary Younge wondered if any purpose whatsoever remained in Barack’s presidency. Health care reform is “not likely to be remembered as transformational,” Younge rightly pointed out, and if Barack “can’t reunite a divided political culture . . . then what is the point of his presidency?” Barack’s “presence in power . . . lacks purpose,” Younge believed. A front-page New York Times story about Barack’s impact documented “the gap between what his supporters expected and what they now see.” As a young arts activist explained, “there are a lot of people being let down by a president they were very enthusiastic about. There’s a big sense of betrayal.” A subsequent Politico profile labeled Barack’s presidency “a remarkable descent,” contrasting his “lack of engagement” with Congress to how “Obama spent 46 days on the golf course in 2013” and “follows obsessively” the NBA playoffs. A friend described Barack as “fatigued,” but the piece powerfully conveyed people’s “disappointment for what might have been.”<sup>41</sup>

On April 7, Barack’s aunt Zeituni Onyango, the closest living link to his late father, died in Boston at age sixty-one. Her sudden passing surprised friends, for just weeks earlier she had still been sending e-mails whose upbeat tone—“With fondest joy and love, Auntie Zeituni”—belied her penurious circumstances and made no mention of her health problems. Omar Onyango and Malik Abon’go hosted a wake, with the New York Times’ Jason Horowitz reporting that Barack “helped pay funeral expenses and sent a condolence note” but “did not attend, as he was golfing.”

Aboard Air Force One in late April, a president peeved at news stories highlighting what one journalist called his “flaccid responses” to “global turmoil” told his traveling press corps that “I can sum up my foreign policy in one phrase. Don’t do stupid shit.” New York Times reporter Mark Landler felt Obama’s remark “seemed crude, almost juvenile,” but it quickly threatened to become “perhaps the signature slogan of his presidency” as it was “roundly mocked for its blinkered message about American power.” The Times’ editorial board protested Barack’s “maddeningly bland demeanor” and his “frustratingly cautious” foreign policy. Picking up on his paper’s editorial, Landler wrote of Barack’s “shrunken vision” for U.S. foreign policy and observed that “Obama’s instinct when he gets into a difficult situation has always been to deliver a speech.”

In Foreign Policy, former Defense Department counselor Rosa Brooks apologized to Hillary Clinton for supporting Barack in 2008. “In the Obama White House, innovation became reactivity, discipline became rigidity, and a tight circle of campaign aides and Chicago pals tried to micro-manage the entire executive branch,” Brooks explained. It was readily apparent that “Obama’s an introvert. . . . Look at his tight body language; listen to the undertone of irritation in his voice. Barack Obama is a man who almost always looks and sounds like he’d prefer to be somewhere else. He’s a politician who hates politics.”<sup>42</sup>

The chorus continued. In an op-ed headlined “Barack Obama’s Presidency Is Spiraling Downward,”

U of C political science professor Charles Lipson told Chicago Tribune readers that Barack “is a poor manager. He doesn’t pay attention to crucial details, surrounds himself with sycophants and doesn’t hold anyone accountable.” In Politico, Harvard law professor Randall Kennedy asked, “Did Obama Fail Black America?” Kennedy’s answer was that “for many African-Americans, he has been a hero—but also a disappointment. On critical matters of racial justice, he has posited no agenda, unveiled no vision,” and seemed “virtually mute.” Although “blacks as a whole have fared badly during Obama’s tenure,” the latest Gallup Poll showed Barack with 87 percent approval among blacks as compared to only 35 percent among whites. With his “serious” and “dignified” demeanor, plus his marriage to a black woman, for African Americans Barack was “the antithesis of The Black Man as Failure,” Kennedy wrote. In contrast, Cornel West, another well-known black voice, intensified his long-standing criticism of Barack. “He posed as a progressive and turned out to be a counterfeit. We ended up with a Wall Street presidency, a drone presidency, a national security presidency . . . we ended up with a brown-faced Clinton: another opportunist.”

Back in Chicago, libertarian Tribune columnist Steve Chapman complained about how “Obama led Americans to believe that he would be far more sensitive to privacy and civil liberties than George W. Bush was. But more often than not, he reflexively indulges the demands of law enforcement agencies. . . . In clashes between government and the individual, the president almost invariably sides with the former.” Similarly, the New York Times’ Maureen Dowd quoted her courageous colleague James Risen calling Barack “the greatest enemy to press freedom in a generation.”

In the Wall Street Journal, Peggy Noonan complained that Barack “seems unserious, frivolous, shallow. He hangs with celebrities, plays golf,” and “seems disinterested, disengaged almost to the point of disembodied. He is fatalistic, passive, minimalist,” the former Reagan speechwriter lamented. Presidents are “not supposed to check out psychologically,” and “it is weird to have a president who has given up. . . . It is unprecedented and deeply strange” plus “unbelievably dangerous.” A Politico tally showed that as of midsummer, Barack had played golf on more than 180 days as president, about two-thirds of the time with White House “body man” Marvin Nicholson. “His lonely golfing sojourns should be seen as a reflection of the man as well as the president,” wrote Politico editor Michael Hirsh.

Even Washington Post columnist Ruth Marcus, a consistently supportive voice, admitted that “this has been a disappointing presidency” and wondered “whether a more experienced hand in the Oval Office might have done a better job,” especially on foreign policy. Marcus warned that if Barack “leaves office with the country in more danger than it was eight years earlier, the rest of the legacy will be for naught.”<sup>43</sup>

In Oberlin, Ohio, Sheila Jager worried about the man whom she still loved. “My past with Barack still seems very present and I think that’s true for both of us. I still care for him very deeply as you already know; our relationship was so complex and deep and filled with so many contradictions.” Seven years earlier, when she had posted those critical Web comments, “I was angry that he hadn’t contacted me and had left me, so to speak, in the lurch . . . that he wrote me completely out of his memoir, which I thought was a deliberate effort to avoid confronting some painful truths. I was really angry about that.” Sheila’s “feelings have evolved” since 2007 “because some of the issues between us have since been resolved” once Barack began calling her. In retrospect, Sheila wished Barack had read history, rather than literature. “I think if he had, he’d have much less faith in the ‘arc of history’ or ‘21st century behavior and norms’ and a better understanding that we lead blessed lives not because it is the natural order of things but precisely because it is so very unnatural, and that people have had to fight and die to attain and maintain it. I think that history teaches us that evil is much more a prevalent force in the world than goodness and peace.”

In retrospect, Sheila believed “that something changed in him after we went our separate ways after Harvard, as if the part of him that was so vulnerable and open (and sensual?) went underground and something else—raging ambition, quest for greatness, whatever just took over instead.” But her feelings for Barack remained unchanged. “You of course know how deeply I loved him, and will always love him, and . . . I feel a sense of protectiveness toward him.” Barack “is almost always the brightest person in the room, and he knows that.” Yet “he is also stubborn and prone to think he is always right.”<sup>44</sup>

Appearing on NBC’s Meet the Press and CBS’s 60 Minutes in September, Barack was visibly defensive when first Chuck Todd and then Steve Kroft posed tough questions about U.S. strategy for combating Daesh’s expanding presence in Syria and Iraq. When former CIA director and defense secretary Leon Panetta published a memoir of his time in government, coverage immediately focused on his statement that Barack sometimes “avoids the battle, complains, and misses opportunities.” In an interview with USA Today’s Susan Page, Panetta contended that Barack as president had “kind of lost his way.”

Most eyes focused on November 4’s upcoming midterm elections, with Republicans appearing poised to win enough Democratic Senate seats to easily seize control of the upper chamber. Come election night, the Republican sweep was overwhelming: thirteen Democratic House seats and a decisive seven Senate seats were lost, a number that soon grew to nine as ones in Alaska and Louisiana also switched hands. Mitch McConnell replaced Harry Reid as majority leader, and a Washington Post headline stated “Midterm Disaster Rips Apart Awkward Ties Between Obama and Senate Democrats.” Post reporter Paul Kane wrote that Barack’s “approach to social engagement with lawmakers is almost nonexistent.”

Chicago Magazine columnist Carol Felsenthal took to Politico with a call that many Obama friends would echo: “Fire Valerie Jarrett!” Felsenthal’s sources detailed how “Jarrett micromanages guest lists . . . hangs out in the private quarters and often joins the Obamas for dinner” upstairs at the White House. Felsenthal knew that the reason for Jarrett’s seemingly all-powerful role lay in how “it was important to Michelle that Valerie be in the room.” Yet Jarrett “seems to isolate” Barack “from people who might help him,” Felsenthal wrote. A New Republic profile of Valerie by Noam Scheiber emphasized “Jarrett’s obsessiveness about control.” The piece described how Jarrett rebuffed helpful criticism. “She just cuts off. It’s stone cold,” one source told Scheiber, who thought Jarrett was as responsible as anyone for how “Obama has become even more persuaded of his righteousness as the years have gone on.”<sup>45</sup>

On CBS’s Face the Nation, host Bob Schieffer asked Barack the most astonishing questions. “Do you like politicians? Do you like politics? Do you like this job?” and “Is it what you thought it would be?” Barack’s response was unchanged from years prior. “There are times,” he explained, when “we have not been successful in going out there and letting people know what it is that we are trying to do and why this is the right direction. So there is a failure of politics.” The following week, Foreign Policy publisher David Rothkopf’s book National Insecurity targeted Barack’s relationships with foreign leaders. An unnamed Latin American president contrasted Barack to George W. Bush, who “was always direct and a man of his word. I cannot say the same for Obama.” Indeed, out of “three dozen or so” heads of state, “not a single one of those foreign leaders with whom I spoke preferred Obama to Bush,” a devastating verdict.

An even more telling blow was landed by General Michael Hayden, CIA director under George W. Bush, who was pleased that “there was surprising continuity between the 43rd and 44th presidents of the United States . . . despite the campaign rhetoric” Barack had used in 2008. “He ran against Bush 43.1 and governed like Bush 43.2 in terms of security issues,” Hayden stated. Even Barack’s signature accomplishment—killing Osama bin Laden—“did not actually reduce the terrorist threat in any material way,” Rothkopf noted.<sup>46</sup>

Public criticism of Barack’s all-out support of U.S. intelligence agencies burgeoned. New York Times reporter James Risen lamented how six years earlier Barack “had a mandate to do something different, and he didn’t do it.” As president, Barack “surrounded himself with a lot of the Bush people,” like now-CIA director John Brennan, and “he normalized the war on terror. He took what Bush and Cheney kind of had started on an emergency, ad hoc basis and turned it into a permanent state and allowed it to grow much more dramatically than it ever had under Bush or Cheney, and part of that . . . was his attack on whistleblowers and journalists.”

Retiring Democrat Jay Rockefeller of West Virginia, a member of the Senate Intelligence Committee, forcefully criticized “the White House’s strong deference to the CIA. . . . While aspiring to be the most transparent administration in history, the White House continues to quietly withhold from the committee more than 9,000 documents” detailing the CIA’s use of torture during the Bush years. “I am simply disappointed, rather than surprised, that even when the CIA inexplicably conducted an unauthorized search of the committee’s computer files and e-mails at an offsite facility,” Rockefeller added, that “the White House’s support for the CIA’s leadership was unflinching.” His Intelligence Committee colleague, California Democrat Dianne Feinstein, likewise denounced the CIA’s surveillance of the committee as “a separation of powers violation.” Lame-duck Colorado Democrat Mark Udall, who had lost in November, took to the Senate floor to protest “the unprecedented actions that some in the intelligence community and administration have taken in order to cover up the truth. . . . One would think this administration is leading the efforts to right the wrongs of the past and ensure the American people learn the truth about the CIA’s torture program. Not so.” Instead, Barack’s White House “continues to try to cover up the truth” by supporting “the Agency leadership’s persistent and entrenched culture of misrepresenting the truth to Congress and the American people.” Decrying “the White House’s willingness to let the CIA do whatever it likes,” even when “barbaric programs” in which “real actual people engaged in torture” were involved, Udall issued a personal challenge. “The President needs to purge his administration of high-level officials who were instrumental to the development and running of this program. He needs to force a cultural change at the CIA” and take “real action to live up to the pledges he made” when first campaigning for the presidency.

A front-page New York Times story endorsed Udall’s attack and focused on CIA director John Brennan. “In the 67 years since the CIA was founded, few presidents have had as close a bond with their intelligence chiefs as Mr. Obama has forged with Mr. Brennan,” Peter Baker and Mark Mazzetti wrote. “The result is a president who denounces torture but not the people accused of inflicting it.” Retiring Michigan Democratic senator Carl Levin joined the chorus of critics, telling the Times that “Brennan has gotten away with frustrating congressional oversight. He shouldn’t have gotten away with it.” Writing in Politico, Lindsay Moran, a former undercover officer who had resigned in disgust, termed the CIA “a morally bereft wasteland,” explaining that even in 2003 she knew “that to stay with the Agency would be to end up on the wrong side of history.” In retrospect, she realized that “our enemies’ principal triumph may” be “in what they prompted us to become.” As 2014 came to a close, another front-page New York Times story said the CIA was “an agency that has been ascendant since President Obama came into office.” One of Barack’s former cabinet members explained that “presidents tend to be smitten with the instruments of the intelligence community. I think Obama was more smitten than most,” for “this has been an intelligence presidency in a way we haven’t seen maybe since Eisenhower.”<sup>47</sup>

As 2015 dawned, public colloquy about Barack’s shortcomings continued apace. Arizona Republican John McCain, now chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, recounted to the New York Times how sixteen months earlier he had endorsed Barack’s plan to intervene militarily in Syria before the president reversed course. “When somebody looks you in the eye in the Oval Office and says they’re going to do something, don’t you take their word for it? I did. I took his word for it. And obviously I shouldn’t have.” In an even more remarkable statement, former presidential adviser David Axelrod told the New York Times that the Obama presidency had failed to accomplish its uppermost goal. “We didn’t achieve what we set out to achieve. We clearly haven’t changed the tone in Washington.”

Inside the White House, stasis reigned, with Washington Post columnist Dana Milbank ruing how “for far too long, this president has surrounded himself with yes men, living in a self-congratulatory world of affirmation.” Milbank cited what he called “the twin pillars of detachment that have underpinned his presidency: insularity and secrecy.” He noted how after Barack had offered up “some contemptuous remarks about Democratic critics” on Capitol Hill, “Obama went to play golf . . . not with lawmakers but with old friends and staffers.” A Politico survey of the White House press corps found almost 75 percent agreement that “President Obama dislikes the press,” and when asked which administration was “the least press-friendly,” Barack outpointed George W. Bush 65 to 11 percent. Looking back to 2008, CBS’s Bob Schieffer struck an apologetic note, remarking that “maybe we were not skeptical enough” about Barack’s candidacy.<sup>48</sup>

More than a continent away, Genevieve Cook pondered why Barack’s presidency had gone so badly wrong. Just like Sheila Jager, Genevieve too remembered how the Barack whom she once loved “was afraid of consigning himself to a life where he cut off his emotional side in the name of his political ambitions.” Now she grasped “what a political animal Barack is,” so “ruthlessly ambitious,” papering over “a great deal of self-doubt” with “arrogance . . . some degree of self-glorification, and a strong dislike for being embarrassed, losing status, or having his reputation tarnished.” Underlying everything was “a willingness to be insincere in order to bolster his need to be on top and in control . . . a personality where the need to win . . . trumps all the other stuff.”

In midsummer, soon after a white gunman killed nine black people inside Charleston’s Emanuel AME Church, Barack told an interviewer that gun violence “has been the one area where I feel that I’ve been most frustrated and most stymied.” But Barack understood that “in the absence of a movement politically in which people say ‘enough is enough,’ we’re going to continue to see, unfortunately, these tragedies take place.” He rightly pointed out that “Americans are not more violent than people in other developed countries. But they have more deadly weapons to act out their rage, and that’s the only main variable that you see between the U.S. and these other countries.”

In late July, with almost eighteen months left in his second term, Barack astonishingly admitted, “I’ll be honest with you—I’m looking forward to life after being president.” Asked whether his daughters felt likewise, Barack intriguingly answered “not as much as Michelle, but certainly ready,” without explaining his wife’s eagerness to leave the White House. Barack revealingly confessed that his favorite television program was a Golf Channel reality show, Big Break, in which the winner gets to join the professional tour, and reporters highlighted how golf had become “something of an obsession” for him. Barack “now lets few weekends go by without hitting the links,” and by early fall CBS’s careful tally showed that “Obama has played 256 rounds since becoming president.” As the New York Times’ Mark Landler noted, Barack’s meetings with foreign leaders at various resorts rather than in the White House “have seemed an elaborate excuse to hit the links.”<sup>49</sup>

Behind the scenes, many Democrats were just as eager for Barack to exit the White House as he himself now seemed. “No president in modern times has presided over so disastrous a stretch for his party, at almost every level of politics,” wrote the historically savvy journalist Jeff Greenfield. When Barack took office, Democrats held sixty seats in the U.S. Senate; they now held forty-six. In the House of Representatives, there were sixty-nine fewer Democrats than there had been in January 2009. “The decimation of the Democratic Party nationally” had begun in 2010 with the loss of Ted Kennedy’s Massachusetts Senate seat, and “when you look at the states, the collapse of the party’s fortunes are worse,” with nine—and soon ten—more Republican governors in office than in 2009. Democrats had then controlled twenty-seven state legislatures; now that number was reduced to eleven, with Republicans up to thirty from fourteen in 2009.

Following Greenfield’s lead, a lengthy New York Times story cataloged how Barack “today presides over a shrinking party whose control of elected offices at the state and local levels has declined precipitously” since he took office. “Democratic losses in state legislatures under Mr. Obama rank among the worst in the last 115 years, with 816 Democratic lawmakers losing their jobs” and Republicans controlling more legislative chambers than at any time in American history.

With interviewers like Steve Kroft, Barack’s defensiveness was now greater than ever. “I feel like I’m being filibustered,” an exasperated Kroft remarked during an early October taping, and Barack continued to minimize how much influence a president had. “What I didn’t fully appreciate, and nobody can appreciate until they’re in the position, is how decentralized power is in this system,” Barack claimed. When asked about his signature domestic achievement, Barack asserted that the Affordable Care Act “is working better than even I thought it was going to work,” a statement that a trio of New York Times stories shredded. The headlines depicted Obamacare as underwhelming: “Many Say High Deductibles Make Their Health Care All but Useless,” “Many See IRS Fines as More Affordable Than Insurance,” and “Lost Jobs, Houses, Savings: Even Insured Often Face Crushing Medical Debt.”

One New Jersey man told the Times that “we have insurance, but can’t afford to use it,” since “the deductible, $3,000 a year, makes it impossible to actually go to the doctor.” Many people were “paying for insurance I could not afford to use,” like an Illinois family who were paying $1,200 a month in premiums for coverage whose annual deductible was $12,700. A Kaiser Family Foundation study found that “more than seven million people who are eligible for exchange coverage would pay less in penalties than for the least expensive insurance available to them,” such as a couple who were paying $455 a month but faced a $6,000 deductible. “It literally covered zero medical expenses,” the wife explained. “I do not believe it serves the public good to entrench private insurance programs that put actual care out of reach for those they purport to serve.”

Journalists reacted with dismay but not surprise when Marilyn Tavenner, who had been “chiefly responsible for” the administration’s rollout of HealthCare.gov, was named “the top lobbyist for the nation’s health insurance industry,” as the Times worded its story. Tavenner’s appointment “highlights how federal health programs have become a priority for insurers, which increasingly depend on revenues from Medicare and Medicaid and the new public insurance marketplaces,” reporter Robert Pear wrote. Politico confirmed that “the insurance industry has largely made peace with Obamacare,” and the Times highlighted how the United States remained “the most expensive place in the world to get sick.”<sup>50</sup>

Overseas, Barack’s foreign policy legacy was faring worse than his domestic one. The Washington Post’s Jackson Diehl wrote that thanks to Barack, all around the world “the dictators are winning.” Post columnist Richard Cohen mocked Barack’s “ringing call to do as little as possible” in Syria, and Cohen’s colleague David Ignatius highlighted how “Obama’s failure to develop a coherent strategy left the field open” for Russian dictator Vladimir Putin to wreak bloody havoc. Barack’s “policy of minimalism” was one that he defended “with an off-putting petulance,” Cohen complained, yet Cohen understood how Syria was “a foreign policy debacle in which the measure of Obama has been taken. He’s been bullied off the playground,” or as someone might once have put it in Springfield, punked by Putin.

In early December, the weightiest and most widely respected voice of all joined the chorus of critics, albeit without using Barack’s name. Decrying “self-serving politicians more concerned with getting reelected than with the nation’s future,” former defense secretary Robert Gates wrote that the next president must be resolute. He or she must be very cautious about drawing red lines in foreign policy, but other leaders must know that crossing a red line drawn by the president of the United States will have serious—even fatal—consequences. The public, members of Congress and foreign leaders alike must know that the president’s word is his or her bond, and that promises and commitments will be kept and threats will be carried out. The next president must hold people in government accountable; when programs or initiatives are bungled, senior leaders should be fired. He or she needs to have the courage to act in defiance of public opinion and polls when the national interest requires it.

Gates also wrote that “we desperately need a president who will strive tirelessly to identify and work with members of both parties in Congress interested in finding practical solutions to our manifold problems,” someone who would be a “true unifier of Americans.” Gates added that “we need a president who is restrained . . . in rhetoric, avoiding unrealistic promises, exaggerated claims of success and dire consequences if his or her initiatives are not adopted exactly as proposed. Restrained in expanding government when so much of what we have works so poorly . . . Restrained from questioning the motives of those who disagree and treating them as enemies with no redeeming qualities.” It was a devastating verdict on Barack’s presidency from a figure of unchallenged international stature who for over two years had worked alongside him for better and for worse.

As 2015 turned to 2016, denunciations of the United States’ glaring failure in Syria increased even further. The Post’s Jackson Diehl thought Barack’s stubbornness had reached the point of being “untethered from reality.” The Post’s editorial board decried how “Putin is reveling in the geopolitical victory handed to him by the Obama administration,” whose “passivity” allowed Putin “to act as he chooses.” Lamenting “the absence of American leadership,” former Democratic senator Joe Lieberman dramatically disclosed what one European head of government had told him the United States needed to do: “Elect a president who understands the importance of American leadership in the world.”<sup>51</sup>

As if Bob Gates’s Washington Post op-ed was not enough, Barack’s other former Republican cabinet member, four-year secretary of transportation Ray LaHood, weighed in as well. In a memoir of his years in politics, LaHood wrote, “I do not believe the White House ever committed fully to a genuine bipartisan approach to policy making.” As president, “Obama depended almost exclusively on a handful of folks” inside the White House, and Barack “rarely sought counsel outside that group. . . . As time passed, the president seemed to me to become more isolated, more insulated from those outside the in-group, less engaged with others.” In Politico, another once-supportive Republican rued “the ugly partisanship” that had permeated “these long, bitter, brutal years” of Barack’s presidency. But “I don’t think he really tried all that hard” to remedy that, “and even if he did, he failed spectacularly.”

On February 10, 2016, the ninth anniversary of his announcement for the presidency outside the Old State Capitol, Barack returned to Springfield to address the Illinois General Assembly and visit briefly with old friends of both parties from years past. “When he saw me, he gave me a big hug,” former Republican state senator Dave Sullivan recounted, and perhaps only in Springfield could Barack find a Republican whom he would hug. Speaking to the legislature, Barack warmly recalled former Senate president James “Pate” Philip and commended still-sitting Republican senators Christine Radogno and Dave Syverson for how they had all worked well together years earlier. Barack conceded “my inability to reduce the polarization and meanness in our politics,” but when old friends Kirk Dillard, Denny Jacobs, and Larry Walsh joined Barack for a public Q&A at a nearby arts center, Barack disclaimed responsibility for why the nation’s politics were now so much more vile than the Illinois statehouse’s fifteen years earlier. “It’s not like I changed. I’m the same guy now that I was then,” Barack asserted. “The interpersonal stuff makes a huge difference,” Barack rightly noted. “I’ve gotten to know George W. Bush quite well” and “he’s a good man.” Even in the U.S. Senate, “I had very good relationships and friendships with” Republican senators “who now can’t take a picture with me. It wasn’t like I changed,” Barack insisted, yet his years in the White House had witnessed virtually none of the bipartisan outreach he had practiced once upon a time with Sullivan and Dillard, nor any of the non-ideological Wednesday-night poker games he had played with conservative Democrats Jacobs and Walsh.

More than five decades earlier, Norman Mailer had pinpointed the “elusiveness” of another president, “the detachment of a man who was not quite real to himself,” one who would come to epitomize presidential toughness while achieving what success he did thanks to a rich cast of senatorial friends and journalistic buddies. In Washington, Richard Wolffe, who had by far the best camaraderie with Barack of any reporter, had come to grasp what Genevieve and Sheila had realized about Barack years earlier, “that he willed himself into being.” In Springfield too a perceptive woman understood how Barack “is an invention of himself.” But it was essential to appreciate that while the crucible of self-creation had produced an ironclad will, the vessel was hollow at its core. “You didn’t let anyone sneak up behind you to see emotions—like hurt or fear—you didn’t want them to see,” Barack long ago had taught himself, yet hand in hand with that resolute self-discipline came a profound emptiness. “I had no idea who my own self was,” Barack had realized at Punahou, and while he had indeed “willed himself into being”—as an African American man, as a loving father, and as a successful politician—eight years in the White House had revealed all too clearly that it is easy to forget who you once were if you have never really known who you are.<sup>52</sup>

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

---

More than twenty years ago, in the acknowledgments for Liberty and Sexuality, I wrote that books like that, and this, fundamentally depend on “the kindness of strangers.” Many of the more than one thousand people who took the time to speak with me for Rising Star are no longer strangers, and a number of the most important and most helpful have become personal friends, yet there is no gainsaying how a book as long and detailed as this one comes into existence only because of the assistance of hundreds and hundreds of people—interviewees, research assistants, and especially librarians and archivists worldwide.

Unlike some authors, I do one hundred percent of my own interviewing, reading, and note taking, and I will not repeat here the names of everyone listed in the bibliography who was kind enough to speak with me, whether in person, by telephone, or by e-mail. Early on in this nine-year project, thanks to Chris Stansell and Jane Dailey, Alix Lerner became my first Chicago-based research assistant, contributing invaluable—never more so than when she perused the old phone directories sitting on the shelves of Regenstein Library. When Alix left Hyde Park to begin graduate study at Princeton, Chris thankfully introduced me to U of C Ph.D. candidate Ali Lefkovitz, now an assistant professor of history at Rutgers University–Newark, who suffered through hours and hours of microfilm review in obscure libraries but who also accompanied me on an utterly unforgettable interviewing trip southward from Cook County.

Thanks again to Jane, after Ali completed her doctorate, U of C Ph.D. candidate Sarah Miller-Davenport stepped in in Ali’s stead, and after Sarah accepted a lectureship at the University of Sheffield, my dear friend Dennis Hutchinson recruited Italia Patti—a 2014 U of C Law School J.D. who is now clerking on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit—to complete my Chicago research work. Very early on, Mike Klarman kindly lent me his Harvard Law School research assistant, Jenn Schultz (now a senior associate at Goodwin Procter LLP), for Harvard library work, and some years later wonderful Beryl Satter recruited Christopher Witrak to do some very savvy library work for me in New York City. Very late in the game, superb Steve Smith from Montreal performed yeoman picture-taking in central Harlem.

Many journalists, writers, and scholars whose earlier works have touched on one or another part of this huge story shared information and advice. Liza Mundy, Janny Scott, and Sally Jacobs top this list, but it is long indeed: Jim Kloppenberg, Rachel Swarns, Jim Meriwether, Tom Shachtman, Tenisha Armstrong, Edgar Tidwell, Phil Dougherty, Verica Jokic, John Conroy, Nancy Hewitt, Alan Brinkley, Dick Powers, Evan Gahr, Jim Sleeper, Nan Rubin, Al Brophy, Scott Helman, Larry Gordon, Serge Kovaleski, Bob Sexter, Hank DeZutter, David Moberg, Ted McClelland, Eleanor Kerlow, Kurt Andersen, Randy Kryn, Becca Williams, Mark Johnson, Nancy Benac, Peter Wallsten, Lawrence Hurley, Will Saletan, Jacob Weisberg, David Shribman, Ken Gormley, Mike Leahy, Stanley Kurtz, and Jerome Corsi. Jamie Weinstein shared with me some invaluable files, and Robert Draper kindly gave me his notes from some pioneering, early interviews.

From Amsterdam, Arlette Strijland at Atria sent me copies of Ann Dunham’s unpublished writings; in Hawaii, Carlyn Tani and Kylee Mar at Punahou were especially helpful, as were Bron Solyom and Ellen Chapman at the University of Hawaii at Manoa. Ian Mattoch, Emme Tomimbang, Joanne Corpuz, Andrew Walden, and multiple staff members at the Hawaii State Library all aided me too as did Mark Davis and Fred Whitehead. Susan Corley, Alec Williamson, Tom Topolinski, Mark Hebing, Keith Peterson, and Pete Vayda all provided instructive items, and archivists at a trio of institutions—Nicole Dittrich and Nicolette Dobrowski at Syracuse University; Peter Berg and Peter Limb at Michigan State University; and Steven Fullwood, Mary Yearwood, and Chris McKay at the Schomburg Center—all helped provide invaluable documents concerning Barack H. Obama Sr.

Of all the people who devoted scores of hours to aiding and coaching me on this huge project, none revealed a more pure spirit than the late Zeituni Onyango Obama, who welcomed me to her modest Boston abode and then patiently showered me with scores of e-mails, explaining the intricacies of her family's history in Kenya and beyond, prior to her untimely passing in April 2014 at age sixty-one. I recall her voice fondly, and with tears.

In Eagle Rock, the kindness of Jean Paule and the efforts of Jim Jacobs were especially helpful, as were the contributions of Dale Stieber, Vanessa Zendejas, Debra Plummer, and Kyle Herrera. Adam Sherman, Susan Keselenko Coll, and John Drew all shared items from long ago, but my greatest Occidental debts without question are owed to Margot Mifflin and Phil Boerner, both of whom time and again shared with me memories and reached out to others on my behalf, easing my path with people who had learned all too well that many callers came with hidden agendas either political or pecuniary.

Beginning in May 2010, Alex McNear extended to me her trust, welcoming me into her home and sharing with me almost in full the letters she had retained from 1982 to 1984. In September 2012, Genevieve Cook (whose present-day surname is omitted from this book) similarly entrusted me, hosting me and my spouse at her and her partner's home, and then sharing in toto the letters she had retained from 1985 to 1986. Andy Roth and Keith Patchel were invaluablely helpful, as were Jeremy Feinberg and Greg Poe. Jocelyn Wilks and Tara Craig at Columbia University, Sydney Van Nort and Samuel Sanchez at City College, and Derick and Jeremy Schilling all aided my research as well. If there was a gold medal for reference librarians, it would go to Theresa McDevitt at Indiana University of Pennsylvania, who found the rarest thing of all, and Glee Murray then unearthed similar items.

In Chicago, my innumerable debts stretch literally from Altgeld Gardens and Hegewisch to the Evanston border. Greg Galluzzo, Mike Kruglik, Jerry Kellman, Paul Scully, and especially Ken Rolling all willingly gave me hours of their time on multiple occasions, and no single comment has more enriched this book than Greg's recommendation that I contact Mary-Ann Wilson, whose file folder from 1986 to 1987 introduced me to a new world of wonderful people. Roberta Lynch, Dick Poethig, Robin Rich, Adrienne Jackson, Eva Sturgies, Rick Williams, David Kindler, Ed Grossman, Joan Keleher, and Gabriela Franco at St. Victor Parish all unearthed items from years past. Jeremiah Wright, Mike Pflieger, and terrific Hermene Hartman all kindly vouched for me to parishioners and colleagues, and when Jeremiah first referred to me as "Brother Garrow," I knew once again who was still blessing me. Ivey Matute-Brooks and Charles Lofton likewise helped me, as did Anita Beard, Gregory Callaway, Pandwe Gibson, Lisette Spraggins, Mary Pat White, Father Robert Cooper, Rachel Mikva, Dorothy Shipps, Niaz Dorry, Charlie Cray, Ben Gordon, and Robert T. Gannett. Glenn Humphreys and especially Teresa Yoder were wise guides at the Harold Washington Library, as were Michael Flug and Beverly Cook at the Harsh Collection on 95th Street. Valerie Harris does a superb job at the University of Illinois at Chicago, as did Debbie Vaughan at the Chicago Historical Museum. May the ghost of Archie Motley take revenge. Tom Joyce and Malachy McCarthy showed me the riches at the Claretian Missionaries Archives, as did Rod Sellers at the Southeast Side Historical Society, and a very special thank you goes out to now-Justice Mary Yu. Kathryn DeGraff and Kelly Gosa aided me at DePaul University, as did Harry Miller at the State Historical Society of Wisconsin; Ashley Howdeshell at Loyola University Chicago; Nicole Gotthelf at the Center for Neighborhood Technology; Lisa Jacobson, David Koch, and Quincina Jackson at the Presbyterian Historical Society; Nancy Carroll at Wartburg Theological Seminary; Julie Satzik and Jac Treanor at the Archdiocese of Chicago; and Wm. Kevin Cawley at the University of Notre Dame. Regina McGraw and Carmen Prieto valuably helped me at the Wieboldt Foundation, as did Deborah Harrington at the Woods Funds, Barbara Denmark Long at the Chicago Community Trust, Richard Kaplan at the MacArthur Foundation, and Katherine Litwin at the Donors Forum. It is unfortunate how the present-day Joyce Foundation stands apart from the helpful traditions of Chicago's philanthropic community.

For years and years forward from August 2009, Sheila Miyoshi Jager responded helpfully and often enthusiastically to my many queries, notwithstanding how some of them caused her to revisit or experience deep emotional pain. As a dedicated scholar herself, Sheila understood from day one the importance of historical accuracy, even when she understandably rued how it eventually would intrude on her and her family's privacy. I believe that in keeping Sheila's many confidences from 2009 until 2017, the best possible balance between a rightful desire to live one's life free from paparazzi scum while accommodating the demands of history has been struck.

From January 2010 onward, no one has been a more encouraging and buoyant historical companion than Rob Fisher. From the discovery of the first half of a long-forgotten book manuscript to his mother's serendipitous unearthing of the second half, Rob has been tremendously helpful again and again and again. Mark Kozlowski, Gina Torrielli, Jackie Fuchs, Radhika Rao, Brad Berenson, John Parry, Adam Charnes, Trent Norris, William Terry Fisher, Joel Freid, and my Pitt Law colleague Debbie Brake all likewise unearthed valuable items from years earlier. At Harvard Law School, Nicola Seaholm, Margaret Peachy, and especially Lesley Schoenfeld were very helpful, as was Fran O'Donnell at Harvard Divinity School. Karen Cariani and Keith Luf at WGBH; Jen Christensen at CNN; Peter Filardo, Alison Lotto, and Janet Bunde at New York University; and Jeff Flannery at the Library of Congress all helped uncover previously unknown materials. Special thanks also go to David Wigdor, Steve Wermiel, Laura Demanski, Dale Carpenter, and Celeste Moses.

My longtime friend and academic colleague Dennis Hutchinson warmly welcomed me to the University of Chicago Law School again and again, and I thank many members of the law school's support staff for their assistance when I was working in one or another office in that wonderful building. Great Geof Stone and Tom Rosenblum both aided my Chicago research, as did Adam Gross, Michael Risch, Marty Chester, Lisa Ellman, and Peter Steffen, as well as Julia Gardner and Barbara Gilbert at the U of C Library. Jesse Jackson Jr. and Martin King were exceptionally helpful and forthcoming, and John Levi, Judd Miner, Jeff Cummings, Scott Lynch-Giddings, Marilyn Katz, Katrina Browne, Stephen Heintz, Sandy O'Donnell, Tracy Leary, Ellen Schumer, Tom Johnson, Alan and Lois Dobry, and Rob Mitchell all located valuable items from years past, as did Lindsay Booker at Echoing Green, Maggie Bertke at the Appleseed Network, and Andrew Mooney at LISC.

No one could have been a more relentlessly helpful and instructive guide to the world of Illinois politics than Dan Shomon, who scores and scores of times introduced me to people who had never before recounted their memories. Likewise, Dave Sullivan, Carter Hendren, Jo Johnson, and Patty Schuh all invaluablely aided my outreach to others. In Springfield, Kathleen Bloomberg at the Illinois State Library enthusiastically arranged the greatest interlibrary loan feat of all time, and Mike Lawrence dug through old computer files to discover invaluable memos. Vicki Thomas, Claire Eberle, and Rita Messinger at JCAR; Walter Ray and Matt Baughman at Southern Illinois University; Dave Joens at the Illinois State Archives; Terry Martin at the Illinois Channel; Yvonne Davis at WTTW; Bruce DuMont and John Gieger at the Museum of Broadcast Communication; and Angela White at Indiana University–Purdue University Indianapolis all helped unearth valuable old materials. William Atwood, Tim Blair, Karen Maggio, and Linsey Schoemehl all helped with my many FOIA requests to different Illinois state government entities. Judy Byrd, Ellen Chube, Jai Winston, Tara Zavagnin, and Donna Anderson all deserve special thanks, as does Arthur Miller at Lake Forest College.

Chris Sautter, Andrew Gruber, Laura Hunter, Eden Martin, Fred Lebed, Ed Wojcicki, Jonathan Goldman, Stephen Pugh, Don Wiener, and Marv Hoffman all searched through old files to locate important items. John Kupper shared a large box of invaluable files, and Rick Ridder proved that gold can be found in Colorado basements. Terry Walsh, Pete Giangreco, Terrie Pickerill, Paul Harstad, Joe McLean, Jim Cauley, Mark Blumenthal, and Ann Bertell all likewise shared instructive items from 2002 to 2004, and Peter Fitzgerald was especially helpful.

When this book first began in 2008–2009, Kate Pretty and John Gray at Homerton College at Cambridge University extended tangible and crucial support. My affection for Homerton remains unequalled, and I thank so many of my former Fellows, especially Peter Raby, Louise Joy, and Rich Williams for their deeply supportive friendship. Stuart Marcelle has eased my work as much as anyone, and both the Cambridge Blue and the Live and Let Live remain wonderful real ale freehouses. At the University of Pittsburgh School of Law, Dean Chip Carter supported my work on this book to a degree one would find in few places in academia. Law librarian extraordinaire Marc Silverman has contributed as much to this book as Alix and Ali, and never more so than when he unearthed Bob Elia's identity from old property records. At Pitt, I have benefited again and again from the wonderful assistance of Patty Blake, and from the help of Sue Leroy, Amy Change, LuAnn Driscoll, Sarah Lynn Barca, Kim Getz, and Mike Dabrishus. Tom Ross, Jessie Allen, Larry Frolik, and Doug Branson have been especially supportive colleagues, as have Ed McCord and Pat Gallagher; and Tony Infanti, Nancy Burkoff, Tony Novosel, and John Stoner have greatly aided my teaching.

Many longtime friends—my wonderful former spouse, Susan Newcomer; Kim Fellner; Charles Kaiser; Ellen Chesler; Steve Fayer; Keith Miller; Jim Cone; Rachelle Horowitz; JoBeth McDaniel; and Marland Buckner; as well as Pete and Matt Kurzweg, and Carole and Tom Horowitz in Pittsburgh, Catherine O'Brien in D.C., and Patrick Parr—have all been wonderfully supportive in manifold ways. Gary Pomerantz, Laura Hunter, Charles and Brenda Eagles, and Mark Bradley and Liza Mundy all willingly devoted hours of their time to reading this book in final manuscript form, and I remain undyingly grateful to them all.

Andrew Wylie has been unstinting in his support for this complicated endeavor, and Jackie Ko and Lauren Rogoff have been superb as well. Steve Wasserman and especially Scott Moyers provided valuable advice for which I remain deeply indebted. At HarperCollins, Henry Ferris and Nick Amphlett have been repeatedly helpful, and assistant general counsel Trina Hunn made the legal review as pleasant as possible. Throughout the final months of this herculean endeavor, senior production editor Dale Rohrbaugh oversaw a process whose complexity was exceeded only by its scale. Greg Villepique performed an excellent copyedit; Sarajane Herman conducted an astonishingly impressive proofread; and Cynthia Crippen produced a far better index than the author could have. Publicist Sharyn Rosenblum demonstrated her savvy even months prior to publication.

Beginning in July 2013, Bob Bauer has striven impressively to balance an appreciation of the scholarly mission against the professional demands of representing the world's busiest client, and both Judy Casey and Ferial Govashiri have been unstintingly helpful. Barack Obama devoted dozens of hours to reading the first ten chapters of this manuscript, and his understandable remaining disagreements—some strong indeed—with multiple characterizations and interpretations contained herein do not lessen my deep thankfulness for his appreciation of the scholarly seriousness with which I have pursued this project and for what became eight full hours of always-intense “off-the-record” conversations.

No one has sacrificed more of their own personal happiness on account of this nine-year undertaking than has Darleen Opfer. There were scores of enjoyable experiences along the way, whether in New Zealand or Chicago, but there were also hours alone in a rental car in a CBS Studios parking lot and evenings when talkative interviewees made dinner a notional concept. Her support, from early on in Cambridge through her painstaking edit of the epilogue, has again and again made this a better book.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

---

SELECTED BOOKS

- Abramsky, Sasha. Inside Obama's Brain. Portfolio, 2010.
- Almanac of Illinois Politics*. Institute of Public Affairs, University of Illinois at Springfield, 1996, 1998, 2000, 2002, 2004.
- Alter, Jonathan. The Promise: President Obama, Year One. Simon & Schuster, 2010.
- Alter, Jonathan. The Center Holds: Obama and His Enemies. Simon & Schuster, 2013.
- Altgeld-Carver Alumni Association. History of Altgeld Gardens, 1944–1960. Taylor Publishing, 1993.
- Andersen, Christopher. Barack and Michelle: Portrait of an American Marriage. William Morrow, 2009.
- Atlas, John. Seeds of Change: The Story of ACORN, America's Most Controversial Antipoverty Community Organizing Group. Vanderbilt University Press, 2010.
- Axelrod, David. Believer: My Forty Years in Politics. Penguin Press, 2015.
- Baim, Tracy. Obama and the Gays. Prairie Avenue Productions, 2010.
- Balz, Dan, and Haynes Johnson. The Battle for America 2008. Viking, 2009.
- Barkley, Charles. Who's Afraid of a Large Black Man? Penguin Press, 2005.
- Bell, Derrick. Confronting Authority: Reflections of an Ardent Protester. Beacon Press, 1994.
- Bensman, David, and Roberta Lynch. Rusted Dreams: Hard Times in a Steel Community. McGraw-Hill, 1987.
- Berry, Mary Frances, & Josh Gottheimer, eds. Power in Words: The Stories Behind Barack Obama's Speeches. Beacon Press, 2010.
- Black, Timuel D., Jr. Bridges of Memory. Northwestern University Press, 2003.
- Burgess, Dave. A Tale of Two Brothers: The Keith Kakugawa Story. Lulu Press, 2009.
- Chait, Jonathan. Audacity. HarperCollins, 2017.
- Chambers, Edward T., with Michael A. Cowan. Roots for Radicals: Organizing for Power, Action, and Justice. Continuum, 2005.
- Clavel, Pierre, and Wim Wiewel. Harold Washington and the Neighborhoods: Progressive City Government in Chicago, 1983–1987. Rutgers University Press, 1991.
- Cobb, William Jelani. The Substance of Hope: Barack Obama and the Paradox of Progress. Walker & Co., 2010.
- Coleman, Ray A. The Obama Phenomenon. Prioritybooks Publications, 2009.
- Dahm, Charles W. Power and Authority in the Catholic Church: Cardinal Cody in Chicago. University of Notre Dame Press, 1981.
- D'Antonio, Michael. A Consequential President. St. Martin's Press, 2017.
- Darling, Diana. Tanjung Sari: A Magical Door to Bali. Editions Didier Millet, 2012.
- Davis, Frank Marshall. Living the Blues: Memoirs of a Black Journalist and Poet, ed. John Edgar Tidwell. University of Wisconsin Press, 1992.
- [Davis, Frank Marshall] "Bob Greene." Sex Rebel: Black. Greenleaf Classics, 1968.

- Dorrien, Gary. The Obama Question: A Progressive Perspective. Rowman & Littlefield, 2012.
- Dorson, Richard M. Land of the Millrats. Harvard University Press, 1981.
- Dunham, S. Ann. Surviving Against the Odds. Duke University Press, 2009.
- Eleveld, Kerry. Don't Tell Me to Wait. Basic Books, 2015.
- Falk, Avner. The Riddle of Barack Obama: A Psychobiography. Praeger, 2010.
- Feinberg, Gerald. What Is the World Made Of? Atoms, Leptons, Quarks, and Other Tantalizing Particles. Doubleday, 1977.
- Firstbrook, Peter. The Obamas: The Untold Story of an African Family. Preface Publishing, 2010.
- Fisher, Robert M. The Logic of Economic Discovery: Neoclassical Economics and the Marginal Revolution. New York University Press, 1986.
- Fisher, Robert M., and Bella the Dog. Field of Gourds: A Guide to Intellectual Rebellion. CreateSpace, 2012.
- Foster, Nelson, ed. Punahou: The History and Promise of a School of the Islands. Punahou School, 1991.
- Frank, Justin A. Obama on the Couch. Free Press, 2011.
- Freddoso, David. The Case Against Barack Obama. Regnery Publishing, 2008.
- Fremon, David K. Chicago Politics Ward by Ward. Indiana University Press, 1988.
- Fuechtmann, Thomas G. Steeple and Stacks: Religion and the Steel Crisis in Youngstown. Cambridge University Press, 1989.
- Fuerst, J. S. When Public Housing Was Paradise: Building a Community in Chicago. Praeger, 2003.
- Gates, Robert M. Duty. Knopf, 2014.
- Gecan, Michael. Going Public: An Organizer's Guide to Citizen Action. Beacon Press, 2002.
- Geoghegan, Thomas. Which Side Are You On? Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 1991.
- Gertzel, Cherry. The Politics of Independent Kenya 1963–8. Northwestern University Press, 1970.
- Glauberman, Stu, and Jerry Burris. The Dream Begins: How Hawaii Shaped Barack Obama. Watermark Publishing, 2008.
- Go, Julian, ed. Rethinking Obama. Emerald Group, 2011.
- Goldsworthy, David. Tom Mboya: The Man Kenya Wanted to Forget. Heineman, 1982.
- Grant, Carl A., and Shelby J. Grant. The Moment: Barack Obama, Jeremiah Wright, and the Firestorm at Trinity United Church of Christ. Rowman & Littlefield, 2013.
- Grimshaw, William J. Bitter Fruit: Black Politics and the Chicago Machine, 1931–1991. University of Chicago Press, 1992.
- Haas, Michael, ed. Barack Obama, The Aloha Zen President. Praeger, 2011.
- Halperin, Mark, and John Heilemann. Double Down: Game Change 2012. Penguin Press, 2013.
- Halvorson, Debbie. Playing Ball with the Big Boys. Solutions Unlimited, 2012.
- Harris, Fredrick C. The Price of the Ticket: Barack Obama and the Rise and Decline of Black Politics. Oxford University Press, 2012.
- Haskins, Ron, and Greg Margolis. Show Me the Evidence: Obama's Fight for Rigor and Results in Social Policy. Brookings Institution Press, 2015.
- Hart, Stephen. Cultural Dilemmas of Progressive Politics: Styles of Engagement Among Grassroots Activists. University of Chicago Press, 2001.

- Hartley, Robert E. Paul Powell of Illinois: A Lifelong Democrat. Southern Illinois University Press, 1999.
- Heilemann, John, and Mark Halperin, Game Change. HarperCollins 2010.
- Helgeson, Jeffrey. Crucibles of Black Empowerment: Chicago's Neighborhood Politics from the New Deal to Harold Washington. University of Chicago Press, 2014.
- Hendon, Rickey. Black Enough/White Enough: The Obama Dilemma. Third World Press, 2009.
- Hess, G. Alfred, Jr. School Restructuring, Chicago Style. Corwin Press, 1991.
- Hess, G. Alfred Jr., Restructuring Urban Schools: A Chicago Perspective. Teachers College Press, 1995.
- Hirsch, Arnold R. Making the Second Ghetto: Race and Housing in Chicago, 1940–1960. University of Chicago Press, 1983.
- Hoerr, John P. And the Wolf Finally Came: The Decline of the American Steel Industry. University of Pittsburgh Press, 1988.
- Hogan, William T. Steel in the United States: Restructuring to Compete. D. C. Heath & Co., 1984.
- Holder, R. Ward, and Peter B. Josephson. The Irony of Barack Obama: Barack Obama, Reinhold Niebuhr and the Problem of Christian Statecraft. Ashgate Publishing, 2012.
- Holli, Melvin G., and Paul M. Green. Bashing Chicago Traditions: Harold Washington's Last Campaign. Wm. B. Eerdmans, 1989.
- Horne, Gerald. Fighting in Paradise: Labor Unions, Racism, and Communists in the Making of Modern Hawaii. University of Hawaii Press, 2011.
- Horwitt, Sanford D. Let Them Call Me Rebel: Saul Alinsky, His Life and Legacy. Alfred A. Knopf, 1989.
- Hunt, D. Bradford. Blueprint for Disaster: The Unraveling of Chicago Public Housing. University of Chicago Press, 2009.
- Jackson, Jesse L., Jr., with Frank E. Watkins. A More Perfect Union: Advancing New American Rights. Welcome Rain Publishers, 2001.
- Jacobs, Ron. Obamaland: Who Is Barack Obama? Trade Publishing, 2009.
- Jacobs, Sally H. The Other Barack. Public Affairs, 2011.
- Janowitz, Rebecca. Culture of Opportunity—Obama's Chicago: The People, Politics, and Ideas of Hyde Park. Ivan R. Dee, 2010.
- Joravsky, Ben, and Eduardo Camacho. Race and Politics in Chicago. Community Renewal Society, 1987.
- Kahlenberg, Richard D. Broken Contract: A Memoir of Harvard Law School. Hill & Wang, 1992.
- Kammen, Douglas, and Katharine McGregor, eds. The Contours of Mass Violence in Indonesia, 1965–68. University of Hawaii Press, 2012.
- Kantor, Jodi. The Obamas. Little, Brown, 2012.
- Kengor, Paul. The Communist—Frank Marshall Davis. Simon & Schuster, 2012.
- Kennedy, Randall. The Persistence of the Color Line: Racial Politics and the Obama Presidency. Pantheon Books, 2011.
- Kerlow, Eleanor. Poisoned Ivy: How Egos, Ideology, and Power Politics Almost Ruined Harvard Law School. St. Martin's Press, 1994.

- Klein, Edward. The Amateur: Barack Obama in the White House. Regnery, 2012.
- Kleppner, Paul. Chicago Divided: The Making of a Black Mayor. Northern Illinois University Press, 1985.
- Kloppenber, James T. Reading Obama: Dreams, Hope, and the American Political Tradition, 2nd ed. Princeton University Press, 2012.
- Knoepfle, Peg, ed. After Alinsky: Community Organizing in Illinois. Illinois Issues, 1990.
- Korecki, Natasha. Only in Chicago. Midway, 2013.
- Kornblum, William. Blue Collar Community. University of Chicago Press, 1974.
- Kurtz, Stanley. Radical-in-Chief: Barack Obama and the Untold Story of American Socialism. Simon & Schuster, 2010.
- Kyle, Charles L., and Edward R. Kantowicz. Kids First—Primero Los Ninos: Chicago School Reform in the 1980s. Illinois Issues, 1992.
- LaHood, Ray. Seeking Bipartisanship. Cambria Press, 2015.
- Landler, Mark. Alter Egos. Random House, 2016.
- Leahy, Michael Patrick. What Does Barack Obama Believe? Harpeth River Press, 2008.
- Leeman, Richard W. The Teleological Discourse of Barack Obama. Lexington Books, 2012.
- Loudon, Trevor. Barack Obama and the Enemies Within. Pacific Freedom Foundation, 2011.
- Lumpkin, Beatrice. "Always Bring A Crowd!" The Story of Frank Lumpkin, Steelworker. International Publishers, 1999.
- Lumpkin, Beatrice. Joy in the Struggle: My Life and Love. International Publishers, 2013.
- Lynd, Staughton. The Fight Against Shutdowns: Youngtown's Steel Mill Closings. Singlejack Books, 1982.
- MacDonogh, Stephen. Pioneers: The Frontier Family of Barack Obama. Brandon, 2010.
- MacDougal, Gary. Make a Difference: How One Man Helped Solve America's Poverty Problem. St. Martin's Press, 2000.
- Macneil, Ian R. Contracts: Exchange Transactions and Relations, 2nd ed. Foundation Press, 1978.
- Mahon, Leo T., with Nancy Davis. Fire Under My Feet: A Memoir of God's Power in Panama. Orbis Books, 2007.
- Mann, James. The Obamians. Viking, 2012.
- Maraniss, David. Barack Obama: The Story. Simon & Schuster, 2012.
- McClelland, Edward. Young Mr. Obama: Chicago and the Making of a Black President. Bloomsbury Press, 2010.
- McKnight, John. The Careless Society: Community and Its Counterfeits. Basic Books, 1995.
- Mendell, David. Obama: From Promise to Power. HarperCollins, 2007.
- Merriner, James L. The Man Who Emptied Death Row: Governor George Ryan and the Politics of Crime. Southern Illinois University Press, 2008.
- Miller, Alton. Harold Washington: The Mayor, the Man. Bonus Books, 1989.
- Miller, Matthew. The 2% Solution: Fixing America's Problems in Ways Liberals and Conservatives Can Love. Public Affairs, 2003.
- Mundy, Liza. Michelle. Simon & Schuster, 2008.
- Ndesandjo, Mark Obama. Nairobi to Shenzhen. Aventine Press, 2009.

- Ndesandjo, Mark Obama. An Obama's Journey. Lyons Press, 2014.
- Obama, Abon'go Malik, and Frank Koyoo. Barack Obama Sr.: The Rise and Life of a True African Scholar. Xlibris, 2012.
- Obama, Auma. And Then Life Happens. St. Martin's Press, 2012.
- Obama, Barack. Dreams From My Father. Times Books, 1995.
- Obama, Barack. The Audacity of Hope. Crown Books, 2007.
- Obama, Barack. Public Papers of the Presidents, 2009–. USGPO, 2010–.
- Obama, Barack H. Otieno: The Wise Man. Book 2. Wise Ways of Farming. East African Literature Bureau, 1959.
- Obama, George, with Damien Lewis. Homeland: An Extraordinary Story of Hope and Survival. Simon & Schuster, 2010.
- O'Connell, Mary. School Reform Chicago Style: How Citizens Organized to Change Public Policy. Center for Neighborhood Technology, 1991.
- Onyango, Zeituni. Tears of Abuse. Afripress Publishing, 2012.
- Pellow, David N. Garbage Wars: The Struggle for Environmental Justice in Chicago. MIT Press, 2002.
- Pillemer, David B. Momentous Events, Vivid Memories. Harvard University Press, 1998.
- Plouffe, David. The Audacity to Win. Viking, 2009.
- Presta, John. Mr. and Mrs. Grassroots: How Barack Obama, Two Bookstore Owners, and 300 Volunteers Did It. Elevator Group, 2010.
- Rahming, Melvin B., ed. Critical Essays on Barack Obama. Cambridge Scholars Publishing, 2012.
- Raines, John C., et al., eds. Community and Capital in Conflict: Plant Closings and Job Loss. Temple University Press, 1982.
- Ramos, Constance F., ed. Our Friend Barry: Classmates' Recollections of Barack Obama and Punahou School. Lulu Press, 2008.
- Ranney, David. Global Decisions, Local Collisions. Temple University Press, 2003.
- Redfield, Kent D. Money Counts: How Dollars Dominate Illinois Politics and What We Can Do About It. Institute for Public Affairs, University of Illinois at Springfield, 2001.
- Reitzes, Donald C., and Dietrich S. Reitzes. The Alinsky Legacy: Alive and Kicking. JAI Press, 1987.
- Remnick, David. The Bridge: The Life and Rise of Barack Obama. Alfred A. Knopf, 2010.
- Renshon, Stanley A. Barack Obama and the Politics of Redemption. Routledge, 2012.
- Rivlin, Gary. Fire on the Prairie: Chicago's Harold Washington and the Politics of Race. Henry Holt & Co., 1992.
- Robinson, Craig, with Mim Eichler Rivas. A Game of Character. Gotham Books, 2010.
- Rock, Philip J., with Ed Wojcicki. Nobody Calls Just to Say Hello: Reflections on Twenty-Two Years in the Illinois Senate. Southern Illinois University Press, 2012.
- Roosa, John. Pretext for Mass Murder: The September 30th Movement & Suharto's Coup d'État in Indonesia. University of Wisconsin Press, 2006.
- Rosen, Louis. The South Side: The Racial Transformation of an American Neighborhood. Ivan R. Dee, 1998.
- Ross, Jini Kilgore, ed. What Makes You So Strong? Sermons of Joy and Strength from Jeremiah A. Wright, Jr. Judson Press, 1993.

- Rothkopf, David J. National Insecurity. PublicAffairs, 2014.
- Satter, Beryl. Family Properties: Race, Real Estate, and the Exploitation of Black Urban America. Metropolitan Books, 2009.
- Savage, Charlie. Power Wars. Little, Brown, 2015.
- Schmitz, Paul. Everyone Leads. Jossey-Bass, 2012.
- Schutz, Aaron, and Mike Miller, eds. People Power: The Community Organizing Tradition of Saul Alinsky. Vanderbilt University Press, 2015.
- Scott, Janny. A Singular Woman: The Untold Story of Barack Obama's Mother. Riverhead Books, 2011.
- Sellers, Rod, and Dominic A. Pacyga. Chicago's Southeast Side. Arcadia Publishing, 1998.
- Shane, Scott. Objective Troy. Tim Duggan Books, 2015.
- Sharma, Dinesh. Barack Obama in Hawaii and Indonesia: The Making of a Global President. Praeger, 2011.
- Shippo, Dorothy. School Reform, Corporate Style: Chicago, 1880–2000. University Press of Kansas, 2006.
- Slevin, Peter. Michelle Obama: A Life. Alfred A. Knopf, 2015.
- Smith, Susan Williams. The Book of Jeremiah: The Life and Ministry of Jeremiah A. Wright Jr. Pilgrim Press, 2013.
- Soetendro, Haryo “Pongky,” Sonny Trisulo, et al. A Gift from Your Family: For Barack, Michelle, Malia and Sasha on the Occasion of Your Visit to Indonesia During November 2010. Saraswati Papers, 2010.
- Speller, Julia M. Walkin' the Talk: Keepin' the Faith in Africentric Congregations. Pilgrim Press, 2005.
- Squires, Gregory D., ed. From Redlining to Reinvestment: Community Responses to Urban Disinvestment. Temple University Press, 1992.
- Stanage, Niall. Redemption Song—Barack Obama: From Hope to Reality. Liberties Press, 2009.
- Stephens, Robert F. Kenyan Student Airlifts to America, 1959–1961: An Educational Odyssey. Kenway Publications, 2013.
- Suskind, Ron. Confidence Men: Wall Street, Washington, and the Education of a President. HarperCollins, 2011.
- Swarns, Rachel. American Tapestry. Amistad, 2012.
- Takara, Kathryn Waddell. Frank Marshall Davis: The Fire and the Phoenix—A Critical Biography. Pacific Raven Press, 2012.
- Todd, Chuck. The Stranger: Barack Obama in the White House. Little, Brown, 2014.
- Travis, Dempsey J. An Autobiography of Black Politics. Urban Research Press, 1987.
- Travis, Dempsey J. Harold: The People's Mayor. Urban Research Press, 1989.
- Turow, Scott. Ultimate Punishment: A Lawyer's Reflections on Dealing with the Death Penalty. Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 2003.
- United States Senate, Committee on Environment and Public Works, Hearings, 2005–2006. (USS, EPW)
- United States Senate, Committee on Foreign Relations, Hearings, 2005–2007. (USS, CFR)
- United States Senate, Committee on Health, Education, Labor and Pensions, Hearings, 2007. (USS, HEL)
- United States Senate, Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs, Hearings, 2007. (USS, HSGA)

- United States Senate, Committee on Veterans' Affairs, Hearings, 2005–2007. (USS, CVA)
- Vaillant, George E. Adaptation to Life. Little, Brown, 1977.
- Walley, Christine J. Exit Zero: Family and Class in Postindustrial Chicago. University of Chicago Press, 2013.
- Wear, Michael. Reclaiming Hope. Thomas Nelson, 2017.
- Whelan, Patrick. The Catholic Case for Obama. Catholic Democrats, 2008.
- Wolffe, Richard. Renegade: The Making of a President. Crown Publishers, 2009.
- Wolffe, Richard. Revival: The Struggle for Survival Inside the Obama White House. Crown, 2010.
- Wolffe, Richard. The Message: The Reselling of President Obama. Twelve, 2013.
- Woodward, Bob. Obama's Wars. Simon & Schuster, 2010.
- Woodward, Bob. The Price of Politics. Simon & Schuster, 2012.
- Wright, Jeremiah A. Jr. A Sankofa Moment: The History of Trinity United Church of Christ. Saint Paul Press, 2010.
- Yanes, Nicholas A., and Derrais Carter, eds. The Iconic Obama, 2007–2009. McFarland & Co., 2012.
- Zeigler, James. Red Scare Racism and Cold War Black Radicalism. University Press of Mississippi, 2015.

SELECTED ARTICLES AND BOOK CHAPTERS

- Alter, Peter T. "Mexicans and Serbs in Southeast Chicago: Racial Group Formation During the Twentieth Century." Journal of the Illinois State Historical Society 94 (Winter 2001–02): 403–19.
- Bradford, Calvin. "Financing Home Ownership: The Federal Role in Neighborhood Decline." Urban Affairs Quarterly 14 (March 1979): 313–35.
- Bradford, Calvin. "Never Call Retreat: The Fight Against Lending Discrimination." In Credit by Color: Mortgage Market Discrimination in Chicagoland, 5–18. Chicago Fair Housing Alliance, January 1991.
- Bradford, Calvin, and Leonard S. Rubinowitz. "The Urban-Suburban Investment-Disinvestment Process: Consequences for Older Neighborhoods." The Annals 422 (November 1975): 77–87.
- Bradford, Calvin, and Anne B. Shlay. "Assuming a Can Opener: Economic Theory's Failure to Explain Discrimination in FHA Lending Markets," Cityscape 2 (February 1996): 77–87.
- Carl, Jim. "Harold Washington and Chicago's Schools: Between Civil Rights and the Decline of the New Deal Consensus, 1955–1987." History of Education Quarterly 41 (Fall 2001): 311–343.
- Carotenuto, Matthew, and Katherine Luongo. "Dala or Diaspora? Obama and the Luo Community of Kenya." African Affairs 108 (April 2009): 197–219.
- Clark, Gordon L. "Corporate Restructuring in the Steel Industry: Adjustment Strategies and Local Labor Relations." In America's New Market Geography, edited by George Sternlieb and James W. Hughes, 179–214. Rutgers Center for Urban Policy Research, 1988.
- Clark, Gordon L. "Piercing the Corporate Veil: The Closure of Wisconsin Steel in South Chicago." Regional Studies 24 (October 1990): 405–20.
- Colman, Jeffrey D., and Michael T. Brody. "Ketchum v. Byrne: The Hard Lessons of Discriminatory Redistricting in Chicago." Chicago-Kent Law Review 64 (1988): 497–530.
- Conroy, John. "Mill Town." Chicago, November 1976, 164–82; December 1976, 162–63, 210–19, 304; January 1977, 114–25, 189; February 1977, 106–15, 185; March 1977, 114–15, 132–46.

- Conroy, John. "Cardinal Sins." Chicago Reader, 4 June 1987.
- Cruz, Wilfredo. "UNO: Organizing at the Grass Roots." Illinois Issues, April 1988, 18–22.
- DeZutter, Hank. "What Makes Obama Run?" Chicago Reader, 8 December 1995, 1, 12, 14, 16, 18, 20, 22, 24.
- Draper, Robert. "Barack Obama's Work in Progress." GQ, November 2009, 154ff.
- Drizin, Steven A., and Beth A. Colgan. "Let the Cameras Roll: Mandatory Videotaping of Interrogations Is the Solution to Illinois' Problem of False Confessions." Loyola University Chicago Law Journal 32 (Winter 2001): 337–424.
- Drummond, Tammerlin. "Barack Obama's Law—Harvard Law Review's First Black President Plans a Life of Public Service." Los Angeles Times, 12 March 1990, E1–2.
- Engel, Lawrence J. "The Influence of Saul Alinsky on the Campaign for Human Development." Theological Studies 59 (December 1998): 636–61.
- Gahagan, Stacey Marlise, and Alfred L. Brophy. "Reading Professor Obama: Race and the American Constitutional Tradition." University of Pittsburgh Law Review 75 (2014): 495–581.
- Giloth, Robert, and Kari Moe. "Jobs, Equity, and the Mayoral Administration of Harold Washington in Chicago (1983–87)." Policy Studies Journal 27 (February 1999): 129–46.
- Goldberg, Jeffrey. "The Obama Doctrine." The Atlantic, April 2016, 70–90.
- Granfield, Robert, and Thomas Koenig. "From Activism to Pro Bono: The Redirection of Working Class Altruism at Harvard Law School." Critical Sociology 17 (April 1990): 57–80.
- Granfield, Robert, and Thomas Koenig. "Learning Collective Eminence: Harvard Law School and the Social Production of Elite Lawyers." Sociological Quarterly 33 (Winter 1992): 503–20.
- Granfield, Robert, and Thomas Koenig. "The Fate of Elite Idealism: Accommodation and Ideological Work at Harvard Law School." Social Problems 39 (November 1992): 315–31.
- Greeley, Andrew M. "The Fall of an Archdiocese." Chicago, September 1987, 128–31, 190–92.
- Hammack, Phillip L. "The Political Psychology of Personal Narrative: The Case of Barack Obama." Analyses of Social Issues and Public Policy 10 (December 2010): 182–206.
- Heathcott, Joseph. "Urban Activism in a Downsizing World: Neighborhood Organizing in Postindustrial Chicago." City & Community 4 (September 2005): 277–94.
- Hirsch, Arnold R. "Massive Resistance in the Urban North: Trumbull Park, Chicago, 1953–1966." Journal of American History 82 (September 1995): 522–50.
- Homel, Michael W. "The Lilydale School Campaign of 1936: Direct Action in the Verbal Protest Era." Journal of Negro History 59 (July 1974): 228–41.
- Hopkins, Dwight N. "Race, Religion, and the Race for the White House." In The Obama Phenomenon, edited by Charles P. Henry et al., 181–99. University of Illinois Press, 2011.
- Hunt, D. Bradford. "What Went Wrong with Public Housing in Chicago? A History of the Robert Taylor Homes." Journal of the Illinois State Historical Society 94 (Spring 2001): 96–123.
- Jager, Bernd. "Memories and Myths of Evil: A Reflection on the Fall from Paradise." Collection du Cirp 1 (2007): 211–230.
- Jager, David. "Conversing with My Father." Collection du Cirp 1 (2007): 12–16.
- Joravsky, Ben. "Dumpers Swamp City's Southeast Side with Noxious, Toxic Waste." Chicago Reporter, August 1983, 1–5.

- Kelleher, Keith. "ACORN Organizing & Chicago Homecare Workers." Labor Research Review 8 (April 1986): 33–45.
- Kelleher, Keith. "Growth of a Modern Union Local: A People's History of SEIU Local 880." Just Labour 12 (Spring 2008): 1–15.
- Kelly, James G. "Contexts and Community Leadership: Inquiry as an Ecological Expedition." American Psychologist 54 (November 1999): 953–61.
- Kelly, James G., L. Sean Azelton, et al. "On Community Leadership: Stories About Collaboration in Action Research." American Journal of Community Psychology 33 (June 2004): 205–16.
- King, Richard H. "Becoming Black, Becoming President." Patterns of Prejudice 45 (2011): 62–85.
- Kloppenber, James T. "Barack Obama and Progressive Democracy." In Making the American Century, edited by Bruce J. Schulman, 267–87. Oxford University Press, 2014.
- Lawrence, Mike. "Mission Impossible." Illinois Issues, September 1998, 38–41.
- Levinsohn, Florence Hamlish. "The Street Scrapper and the Rhodes Scholar." Chicago Reader, 8 March 1990.
- Lewis, George. "Barack Hussein Obama: The Use of History in the Creation of an 'American' President." Patterns of Prejudice 45 (2011): 43–61.
- Loizeau, Pierre-Marie. "Barack Obama's Autobiography: A Quest for Personal and Political Identity?" In Autobiography as a Writing Strategy in Postcolonial Literature, edited by Benaouda Lebdaï, 53–65. Cambridge Scholars Publishing, 2015.
- Lynd, Staughton. "The Genesis of the Idea of a Community Right to Industrial Property in Youngstown and Pittsburgh, 1977–1987." Journal of American History 74 (December 1987): 926–58.
- McAdams, Dan P. "What Psychobiographers Might Learn from Personality Psychology." In Handbook of Psychobiography, edited by William T. Schultz, 64–83. Oxford University Press, 2005.
- McKersie, William S. "Fostering Community Participation to Influence Public Policy: Lessons from the Woods Fund of Chicago, 1987–1993." Nonprofit and Voluntary Sector Quarterly 26 (March 1997): 11–26.
- Mirel, Jeffrey. "School Reform, Chicago Style: Educational Innovation in a Changing Urban Context, 1976–1991." Urban Education 28 (July 1993): 116–49.
- Moore, Donald R. "Voice and Choice in Chicago." In Choice and Control in American Education, Volume 2, edited by William H. Clune and John F. Witte, 153–98. Falmer Press, 1990.
- Mulder, Mark T. "Mobility and the (In)Significance of Place in an Evangelical Church: A Case Study from the South Side of Chicago." Geographies of Religions and Belief Systems 3 (2009): 16–43.
- Mulder, Mark T. "Evangelical Church Polity and the Nuances of White Flight: A Case Study from the Roseland and Englewood Neighborhoods in Chicago." Journal of Urban History 38 (January 2012): 16–38.
- Murphy, John M. "Barack Obama, the Exodus Tradition, and the Joshua Generation." Quarterly Journal of Speech 97 (November 2011): 387–410.
- Obama, Barry. "The Old Man." Ka Punahou, 15 December 1978, 5, and reprinted in Ka Wai Ola, May 1979, 65.
- Obama, Barry. "Winner." Oahuan 1979, 104.
- Obama, Barack. "Breaking the War Mentality." Sundial: The Weekly Newsmagazine, 10 March 1983, 2– 3, 5.

Obama, Barack. "Why Organize? Problems and Promise in the Inner City." Illinois Issues, August–September 1988, 40–42.

[Obama, Barack]. "Tort Law—Prenatal Injuries—Supreme Court of Illinois Refuses to Recognize Cause of Action Brought by Fetus Against Its Mother for Unintentional Infliction of Prenatal Injuries." Harvard Law Review (January 1990): 823–28.

Obama, Barack. "Review President Explains Affirmative Action Policy." Harvard Law Record, 16 November 1990, 4, 7.

Obama, Barack. "Help Needed to Change Springfield." Hyde Park Herald, 19 February 1997, 4, 9.

Obama, Barack. "Rethinking Approach to Juvenile Crime." Hyde Park Herald, 16 April 1997, 4.

Obama, Barack. "Legislature Squandered Opportunity." Hyde Park Herald, 18 June 1997, 4, 15.

Obama, Barack. "Illinois Needs a Fairer Tax System." Hyde Park Herald, 25 February 1998, 4.

Obama, Barack. "Education Most Important Town Hall Issue." Hyde Park Herald, 29 April 1998, 4.

Obama, Barack. "Progress on Campaign Finance Reform." Hyde Park Herald, 26 August 1998, 4.

Obama, Barack. "Keep Church and State Separate." Hyde Park Herald, 7 April 1999, 4.

Obama, Barack. "A Life's Calling to Public Service." Punahou Bulletin, Fall 1999, 28–29.

Obama, Barack. "Why Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. is Important to Me." Chicago Defender, 15 January 2000, 18.

Obama, Barack. "State-Wide Meetings Focus on Uninsured." Hyde Park Herald, 2 October 2002, 4.

Obama, Barack. "Weighing the Costs of Waging War in Iraq." Hyde Park Herald, 30 October 2002, 5, 6.

Obama, Barack H. "Terror in the Congo." Honolulu Star-Bulletin, 8 June 1960, 8.

Obama, Barak [sic] H. "Problems Facing Our Socialism." East Africa Journal, July 1965, 26–33.

Peterson, Gayle. "We Are the People: The Fight Against Toxic Waste." Health & Medicine 2 (Winter 1983–84): 13–22.

Pines, Sharon. "Public Housing Residents Fight for Their Health." The Neighborhood Works, March 1985, 14–17.

"Principales Publications du Professeur Bernd Jager." Collection du Cirp 1 (2007): 291–301.

Protess, David L. "The Vrdolyak Chronicles." Chicago Lawyer, June 1988, 1, 16–20.

Purdum, Todd S. "Raising Obama." Vanity Fair, March 2008, 314ff.

Ranney, David C. "The Closing of Wisconsin Steel." In Grand Designs: The Impact of Corporate Strategies on Workers, Unions, and Communities, edited by Charles Craypo and Bruce Nissen, 65–91. ILR Press, 1993.

Rawlings, Charles W. "Steel Shutdown in Youngstown: Ecumenical Response to the Opening Hand of Globalization." Church & Society, January–February 2003, 71–91.

Reiff, Janice L. "Rethinking Pullman: Urban Space and Working-Class Activism," Social Science History 24 (Spring 2000): 7–32.

Reitzes, Donald C., and Dietrich S. Reitzes. "Alinsky in the 1980s: Two Contemporary Chicago Community Organizations." Sociological Quarterly 28 (1987): 265–83.

Robinson, Michelle. "Minority and Women Law Professors: A Comparison of Teaching Styles." BLSA Memo Special Edition, Spring–Fall 1988, 30–33.

Rolling, Ken. "Reflections on the Chicago Annenberg Challenge." In School Reform in Chicago: Lessons on Policy and Practice, edited by Alexander Russo, 23–28. Harvard Education Press, 2004.

Siker, Jeffrey S. “President Obama, the Bible, and Political Rhetoric.” Political Theology 13 (September 2012): 586–609.

Sullivan, Jerry. “Paradise Doomed.” Chicago, August 1985, 142–45, 160–61.

Sullivan, Jerry. “Of Dumps, Chicago Politics & Herons.” Audubon, March 1987, pp. 122–26.

Tandon, S. Darius, L. Sean Azelton, James G. Kelly, and Debra A. Strickland. “Constructing a Tree for Community Leaders: Contexts and Processes in Collaborative Inquiry.” American Journal of Community Psychology 26 (August 1998): 669–96.

Walley, Christine J. “Deindustrializing Chicago: A Daughter’s Story.” In The Insecure American, edited by Hugh Gusterson and Catherine Besteman, 113–39. University of California Press, 2010.

Wright, Jeremiah A., Jr. “The Significance of Harold Washington.” In The Black Church and the Harold Washington Story, edited by Henry J. Young, 1–9. Wyndham Hall Press, 1988.

Wright, Jeremiah A., Jr. “A Black Congregation in a White Church: Trinity United Church of Christ, Chicago.” In Good News in Growing Churches, edited by Robert L. Burt, 37–63. Pilgrim Press, 1990.

Wright, Jeremiah A., Jr. “An Underground Theology.” In Black Faith and Public Talk: Critical Essays on James H. Cone’s Black Theology and Black Power, edited by Dwight N. Hopkins, 96–102. Baylor University Press, 1991.

Wright, Jeremiah A., Jr. “Doing Black Theology in the Black Church.” In Living Stones in the Household of God, edited by Linda E. Thomas, 13–23. Fortress Press, 2004.

SELECTED MOVIES, VIDEOS, AND TAPE RECORDINGS

An American Boyhood: Barack Obama in Hawaii. Gloria Borland and Kris Anderson, 2008.

Barack Obama, Oral Argument in Baravati v. Josephthal, Lyon & Ross, Inc. #93-3647 (7th Cir.), 7 April 1994.

<http://www.suntimes.com/images/cds/MP3/obama.mp3>.

<http://web.archive.org/web/20081009195106/>.

Barack Obama, “Community Revitalization.” Nebraska Wesleyan University Forum, Lincoln, NE, 9 September 1994.

Barack Obama, remarks at the Cambridge (MA) Public Library. 20 September 1995, Cambridge Municipal Television.

Barack Obama, “Cities and Economic Revitalization.” National Issues Forum, Brookings Institution, Washington, D.C., 8 June 1998.

Barack Obama, “Public Policy in the 21st Century.” Loyola University Chicago, 19 October 1998.

Barack Obama, “Inside Illinois Government.” University of Illinois at Springfield TV, 3 December 1998.

Barack Obama, “Politics, Race and the Common Good.” Black History Month Convocation, Carleton College, MN, 5 February 1999.

Barack Obama, Youth Government Day Remarks. Simon Institute, Southern Illinois University, Carbondale, 21 October 2000.

Barack Obama, Illinois Center for the Book presentation. Illinois State Library, Springfield, 7 March 2001.

Barack Obama, Check, Please! WTTW, 14 August 2001.

Barack Obama, Commencement Address, North Kenwood/Oakland Charter School, 13 June 2002.

Barack Obama, Commencement Address, Chicago-Kent College of Law, 25 May 2003.

Barack Obama, Commencement Address, Pritzker School of Medicine, University of Chicago, 10 June 2005.

Barack Obama, Commencement Address, University of Massachusetts at Boston, 2 June 2006.

Barack Obama, Commencement Address, Northwestern University, Evanston, 16 June 2006.

Barack Obama, Commencement Address, Xavier University, New Orleans, 11 August 2006.

Barack Obama, Commencement Address, Wesleyan University, Middletown, 25 May 2008.

“Barack Obama: An Agenda for the 21st Century.” Joe Green, YouTube, 20–21 October 1999.

Barack Obama: Hawaii Roots. Emme Tomimbang, 8 February 2008.

Barack Obama: Made in Hawaii. Demo reel. Gloria Borland, 2011.

“Barack Obama’s Days at Occidental.” Huell Howser, KCET, 25 November 2008.

“Barack Obama’s Occidental College Days.” Huell Howser, California Gold, 13 November 2008.

Becoming Barack: Evolution of a Leader. [Zeke Gonzalez, originally recorded 27 October 1993], 2009.

“Buzz and Alice Palmer,” Chuck O’Bannon and David Robinson, YouTube, 2012.

By the People: The Election of Barack Obama. Amy Rice and Alicia Sams, Pivotal Pictures, 2009.

Chicago Tonight Archive. WTTW, Chicago.

Eight Forty-Eight Archive, WBEZ Radio, Chicago.

Have You Heard of the City? A Roseland Christian Ministries Story. 2005.

Illinois Lawmakers Archive. Museum of Broadcast Communications, Chicago.

Introducing Barack Obama. Chicago Video Project, 2003.

“Keeping the Faith” [Trinity United Church of Christ], Roger Wilkins, Frontline, WGBH, 16 June 1987.

Museum of Broadcast Communications Archives (MBC), Chicago.

“The Novel and Ideology.” Class recording, Columbia University. Lennard J. Davis, [June 1983].

Odyssey Archive, WBEZ Radio, Chicago.

Punahou School Commencement, 2 June 1979, YouTube.

Turner Broadcasting System (WTBS) Archive, Atlanta.

WGBH Archives, Boston.

Wrapped in Steel—Neighborhoods of Southeast Chicago. Jim Martin, 1985.

SELECTED UNPUBLISHED WORKS

Azelton, L. Sean. “Boundary Spanning and Community Leadership: African American Leaders in the Greater Roseland Area.” M.A. thesis, University of Illinois at Chicago, 1996.

Baron, Michael. “Tug of War: The Battle Over American Policy Toward China.” Ph.D. dissertation, Columbia University, 1980.

Betancur, John, et al. “Roseland: Needs Assessment and Organizational Infrastructure, An Introduction.” Center for Urban Economic Development, University of Illinois at Chicago, June 1985.

Carey, Curtis D. “Barack Obama’s Transnational Translation: A Rhetoric of Postmodern Unity.” Ph.D. dissertation, Howard University, August 2008.

Carriere, Michael H. “Building a New House of Hope: The Rise of the African-American Megachurch in Postindustrial Chicago.” Breslauer Symposium Paper, University of California, 2006.

Chicago Foundation for Women. “Caught in the Crossfire: Illinois Roundtable on Welfare Reform, Women of Color and Reproductive Health,” 13 October 1999.

Clavel, Pierre, and Sara O’Neill-Kohl. “Losing Out on Industrial Policy: The Chicago Case.” Cornell University City and Regional Planning working paper, January 2010.

Cohen, David William. "Perils and Pragmatics of Critique: Reading Barack Obama Sr.'s 1965 Review of Kenya's Development Plan." Seminar paper, 24 March 2010.

Colten, Craig E. "Industrial Wastes in the Calumet Area, 1869–1970: An Historical Geography." Illinois Department of Energy and Natural Resources, September 1985.

Cook, Genevieve. "Dancing in Doorways." B.A. thesis, Swarthmore College, May 1981.

Cook, Genevieve. "Third Culture Kids." Personal essay, December 2014.

Coughlin, Kathryn I. "A Fund Development Strategic Plan for the Gamaliel Foundation." M.S. thesis, DePaul University, February 1999.

Coursey, Don, et al. "Environmental Racism in the City of Chicago: The History of EPA Hazardous Waste Sites in African-American Neighborhoods." Harris School working paper, University of Chicago, October 1994.

Cruz, Wilfredo. "The Nature of Alinsky-Style Community Organizing in the Mexican-American Community of Chicago: United Neighborhood Organization." Ph.D. dissertation, University of Chicago, December 1987.

Ehr, Rev. Donald, et al. "Communities of the Word—Stories of the Chicago Province: The Midwest District Story, 1925–2012." Society of the Divine Word, 2012.

Faraone, Dominic E. "Urban Rifts and Religious Reciprocity: Chicago and the Catholic Church, 1965–1996." Ph.D. dissertation, Marquette University, May 2013.

Feins, Judith D. "Urban Housing Disinvestment and Neighborhood Decline: A Study of Public Policy Outcomes." Ph.D. dissertation, University of Chicago, March 1977.

George, Christine C. "The Chicago Annenberg Challenge: The Messiness and Uncertainty of Systems Change." Philanthropy & Non-Profit Sector Program, Loyola University Chicago, 2007.

Greetham, David. "Chicago's Wall: Race, Segregation and the Chicago Housing Authority." Senior thesis, College of Wooster, Spring 2013.

Hall, Dorothy I., and Judy Meima. "Economic Development in Southeast Chicago." Voorhees Center for Neighborhood and Community Improvement, University of Illinois at Chicago, 1983.

Haney, LeViis A. "The 1995 Chicago School Reform Amendatory Act and the CPS CEO: A Historical Examination of the Administration of CEOs Paul Vallas and Arne Duncan." D.Ed. dissertation, Loyola University Chicago, May 2011.

Hawking, James. "Political Education in the Harold Washington Movement." D.Ed. dissertation, Northern Illinois University, August 1991.

Illinois Campaign Finance Project. "Tainted Democracy: How Money Distorts the Election Process in Illinois and What Must Be Done to Reform the Campaign Finance System." Institute for Public Affairs, University of Illinois at Springfield, 29 January 1997.

Jackson, John S. "The Making of a Senator: Barack Obama and the 2004 Illinois Senate Race." Paul Simon Public Policy Institute, Southern Illinois University, August 2006.

Jager, Sheila Miyoshi. "Narrating the Nation: Students, Romance and the Politics of Resistance in South Korea." Ph.D. dissertation, Department of Anthropology, University of Chicago, December 1994.

Jones, Edwina Leona. "From Steel Town to 'Ghost Town': A Qualitative Study of Community Change in Southeast Chicago." M.A. thesis, Loyola University Chicago, May 1998.

- Kelliher, Thomas G., Jr. "Hispanic Catholics and the Archdiocese of Chicago, 1923–1970." Ph.D. dissertation, University of Notre Dame, December 1996.
- Kennedy Communications. "State Senator Barack Obama, Candidate for U.S. Senate: Background Report, Analysis Only." April 2003.
- Levin, Rebekah, et al. "Community Organizing in Three South Side Chicago Communities: Leadership, Activities, and Prospects." Center for Impact Research, September 2004.
- Mahmood, Mahboob. "Readings with Barack." 30 September 2008.
- Mahmood, Mir Mahboob. "Mahatma Gandhi: Saint vs. Visionary." B.A. thesis, Princeton University, 1981.
- Mangcu, Xolela MacPherson. "Harold Washington and the Cultural Transformation of Local Government in Chicago, 1983–1987." Ph.D. dissertation, Cornell University, January 1997.
- McKersie, William S. "Strategic Philanthropy and Local Public Policy: Lessons from Chicago School Reform, 1987–1993." Ph.D. dissertation, University of Chicago, March 1998.
- McKnight, John L. "The Future of Low-Income Neighborhoods and the People Who Reside There." Center for Urban Affairs and Policy Research, Northwestern University, June 1987.
- Melaniphy & Associates. Chicago Comprehensive Neighborhood Needs Analysis, Volume I: Citywide Needs Analysis; Volume II: Roseland Community Area, Volume II: Washington Heights Community Area, Volume II: West Pullman Community Area. January 1982.
- Miller, Edwin L., Jr. "Waste Management, Inc." Final report, San Diego County (CA) District Attorney, March 1992.
- Mills, Linda. "Illinois Prisoner Reentry: Building a Second Chance Agenda." Annie E. Casey Foundation, July 2004.
- Mock, Lynne Owens. "Validation of an Instrument to Assess the Personal Values of African-American Community Leaders." M.A. thesis, University of Illinois at Chicago, 1994.
- Mock, Lynne. "The Personal Vision of African American Community Leaders." Ph.D. dissertation, University of Illinois at Chicago, 1999.
- Obama, Barack, and Robert Fisher. "Plant Closings: Creative Destruction and the Viability of the Regulated Market," March 1991, 103 pp., Rob Fisher Papers.
- Obama, Barack, and Robert Fisher. "Race and Rights Rhetoric," April 1991, 144 pp., Rob Fisher Papers.
- O'Donnell, Sandra, Yvonne Jeffries, Frank Sanchez, and Pat Selmi. "Evaluation of the Fund's Community Organizing Grant Program." Woods Fund of Chicago, April 1995.
- Palmer, Alice J. "Concepts and Trends in Work-Experience Education in the Soviet Union and the United States." Ph.D. dissertation, Northwestern University, June 1979.
- Putterman, Julie S. "Chicago Steelworkers: The Cost of Unemployment." Steelworkers Research Project, January 1985.
- Reardon, Kenneth M. "Local Economic Development in Chicago 1983–1987: The Reform Efforts of Mayor Harold Washington." Ph.D. dissertation, Cornell University, 1990.
- Rich, Robin. "Explaining Historical Change: The Development of Christian Base Communities in Latin America." March 1991, Robin Rich Papers.
- Robinson, Michelle LaVaughn. "Princeton-Educated Blacks and the Black Community." B.A. thesis, Princeton University, 1985.

- Sadlowski, Edward A. "Deindustrialization and Displacement: Southeast Chicago's Basic Steel Neighborhoods and the Community Response." Ca. 1991, Frank Lumpkin Papers, Chicago History Museum.
- Shippo, Dorothy. "Big Business and School Reform: The Case of Chicago 1988." Ph.D. dissertation, Stanford University, February 1995.
- Shippo, Dorothy, and Karin Sconzert with Holly Swyers. "The Chicago Annenberg Challenge: The First Three Years." Consortium on Chicago School Research, March 1999.
- Similly, Leslie E. "Black Vernacular English and the Rhetoric of Jeremiah Wright." M.A. thesis, University of Central Oklahoma, 2008.
- Simpson, Dick, et al. "The New Daley Machine: 1989–2004." Paper presented at The City's Future Conference, Chicago, July 2004.
- Smith, Mansfield I. "The East African Airlifts of 1959, 1960, and 1961." Ph.D. dissertation, Syracuse University, June 1966.
- Smylie, Mark A., Stacy A. Wenzel, et al. "The Chicago Annenberg Challenge: Successes, Failures, and Lessons for the Future." Consortium on Chicago School Research, August 2003.
- Speller, Julia M. "Unashamedly Black and Unapologetically Christian: One Congregation's Quest for Meaning and Belonging." Ph.D. dissertation, University of Chicago, December 1996.
- Stewart, Felicia Ratliff, "The Urban School Superintendency: A Case Study of Ruth Love in Chicago." Ph.D. dissertation, Northern Illinois University, December 1996.
- [Sunflower Management]. "Research—State Sen. Barack Obama." 2 vols., 12 June 2003.
- Sutoro, Ann Dunham. "Civil Rights of Working Indonesian Women." Institute for Legal Aid, Jakarta, 10 December 1982. Atria Institute.
- Sutoro, Ann Dunham. "The Effects of Industrialization on Women Workers in Indonesia." Lecture, Indonesian Society of Development, [1982]. Atria Institute.
- Sutoro, Ann D. "Program Statement: Women and Employment (Indonesia)." [1983]. Atria Institute.
- Sutoro, Ann D. "Women's Economic Activities in North Coast Fishing Communities: Background for a Proposal from PPA." Ford Foundation, 22 May 1983. Atria Institute.
- Thompson, Keriann B. "Explaining the Audacity of Hope: The Rhetoric of Illinois Senator Barack Obama." M.A. thesis, Pepperdine University, July 2007.
- Wojcicki, Ed. "Still the Wild West?: A 10-Year Look at Campaign Finance Reform in Illinois." Paul Simon Public Policy Institute, Southern Illinois University, September 2006.
- Wright, Jeremiah A., Jr. "Black Church Renewal," in Perspectives: A View from Within. A Compendium Text for Churchwide Study. Trinity United Church of Christ, September 1982, pp. 32–42.
- Wright, Jeremiah A., Jr. "The Day of Jerusalem's Fall," Trinity United Church of Christ, Chicago, 16 September 2001, <http://blakfacts.blogspot.com/2008/03/day-of-jerusalems-fall.html>.
- Wright, Jeremiah A., Jr. "Confusing God and Government," Trinity United Church of Christ, 13 April 2003, <http://www.blackpast.org/2008-rev-jeremiah-wright-confusing-god-and-government>.
- Zurbuchen, Mary S. "Ann Dunham Sutoro and the Ford Foundation's International Philanthropy." Paper presented at American Anthropology Association annual meeting, December 2009.

ARCHIVAL COLLECTIONS AND PERSONAL PAPERS

Abraham Lincoln Presidential Library Oral History Collections, Springfield, IL (ALPL)

African American Students Foundation Papers, Michigan State University, East Lansing, MI (AASF)
AFSCME Council 31 Papers, Chicago
Atria Institute Archives, Amsterdam, NL
Derrick Bell Papers, New York University Archives, New York, NY
Brad Berenson Papers, Fairfield, CT
Arthur L. Berman Papers, Loyola University of Chicago Archives
Joseph Cardinal Bernardin Papers, Archives of the Archdiocese of Chicago
Timuel D. Black Papers, Harsh Collection, Chicago Public Library (TBP)
Mark Blumenthal Papers, Washington, DC (MBP)
Phil Boerner Papers, Sacramento, CA
Mark Bouman Papers, Chicago
Deborah Brake Papers, Pittsburgh, PA
William J. Brennan Papers, Manuscript Division, Library of Congress, Washington, DC
Betty Brown-Chappell Papers, Chicago History Museum (BBCP)
Katrina Browne Papers, Cambridge, MA
Dave Brubeck Papers, University of the Pacific, Stockton, CA
Margaret Burroughs Papers, DuSable Museum, Chicago
CARPLS (Coordinated Advice & Referrals Program for Legal Services) Papers, Chicago
Jim Cauley Papers, Louisville, KY
Adam Charnes Papers, Dallas, TX
Martin Chester Papers, Minneapolis
Chicago Annenberg Challenge Papers, University of Illinois at Chicago Archives (CACP)
Chicago Community Trust Papers, Chicago
Citizens for Rush, Federal Election Commission (FEC) Filings
City College of New York Archives, New York, NY
Claretian Social Development Fund Papers, Claretian Missionaries Archives, Chicago (CSDF)
John Cardinal Cody Papers, Archives of the Archdiocese of Chicago
Susan Keselenko Coll Papers, Washington, DC
Columbia University Archives, New York, NY
Genevieve Cook Papers, "Norfolk, VT" Crossroads Fund Papers, University of Illinois at Chicago Archives
Frank Marshall Davis FBI HQ Main File 100-328955, FOIA
Frank Marshall Davis Papers, DuSable Museum, Chicago
Laura Demanski Papers, Chicago
Democratic Socialists of America Papers, Tamiment Library, New York University, New York, NY
Alan and Lois Dobry Papers, Chicago
John Drew Papers, Laguna Niguel, CA
Ann Dunham Papers, Bronwyn Solyom, Honolulu
Stanley Ann Dunham State Department Passport File, FOIA
Echoing Green Papers, New York, NY
John "Jack" Egan Papers, University of Notre Dame Archives

Jeremy Feinberg Papers, New York, NY
Rob Fisher Papers, Arlington, VA (RFP)
William “Terry” Fisher Papers, Cambridge, MA
Joel Freid Papers, Oakland, CA
Friends of Alice Palmer, Federal Election Commission (FEC) Filings
Friends of Barack Obama, Illinois State Board of Election (ISBE) Filings
Jackie Fuchs Papers, Los Angeles, CA
Greg Galluzzo Papers, Chicago (GGP)
Gamaliel Foundation Papers, Chicago
Gery Chico for Senate, Federal Election Commission (FEC) Filings
Jonathan Goldman Papers, Chicago
Erwin N. Griswold Papers, Harvard Law School Archives (EGP)
Adam Gross Papers, Chicago
Ed Grossman Papers, Chicago
Andrew Gruber Papers, Salt Lake City (AGP)
Paul Harstad Papers, Boulder, CO (PHP)
Harvard Law School Archives (HLSA), Cambridge, MA
Harvard-Radcliffe Alumni Against Apartheid Papers, Michigan State University Archives, East Lansing, MI (HRAAA)
Harvard University Archives (HUA), Cambridge, MA
Mark Hebing Papers, Mill City, OR Stephen Heintz Papers, New York, NY (SHP)
[Blair] Hull for Senate Federal Election Commission (FEC) Filings
Hull Opposition Research Papers (HORP), “East Middleton,” WI
Human SERVE Papers, Columbia University Archives, New York, NY
Laura Russell Hunter Papers, Washington, DC (LHP)
[Dan] Hynes for Senate Federal Election Commission (FEC) Filings
Illinois ACORN Papers, State Historical Society of Wisconsin (IAP)
Illinois Department of Commerce and Economic Opportunity Files (ILDCEO), FOIA
Illinois General Assembly, State Senate Floor Transcripts, 90th, 91st, 92nd & 93rd Sessions, 1997–2004
Illinois State Archives Materials, Springfield, IL
Illinois State Board of Investment Papers (ISBI), Chicago, FOIA
Illinois State Senate Republican Caucus Files, Springfield, IL
Industrial Areas Foundation (IAF) Papers, University of Illinois at Chicago Archives Institute on the Church in Urban Industrial Society Papers (ICUIS), University of Illinois at Chicago Archives
Adrienne Bitoy Jackson Papers, Chicago (ABJP)
Jesse Jackson Jr. Papers, Chicago (JJJP)
Sally Jacobs Papers, Boston
Thomas E. Johnson Papers, Chicago
Joint Committee on Administrative Rules (JCAR) Papers, Springfield, IL

Tom Joyce Papers, Claretian Missionaries Archives, Chicago (TJP)
Marilyn Katz Papers, Chicago
Patrick J. Keleher Papers, Wilmette, IL
David T. Kindler Papers, Oak Park, IL
Tom Knutson Papers, Harvey, IL
Jeff Kobrick Papers, San Mateo, CA
Mark Kozlowski Papers, New York, NY (MKP)
John Kupper Papers, Wilmette, IL (JKP)
James Landing Papers, University of Illinois at Chicago Archives (JLP)
Latino Institute Papers, DePaul University Archives, Chicago (LIP)
Frank Laubach Papers, Syracuse University Archives, Syracuse, NY (FLP)
LawMBG.com, Internet Archive Wayback Machine, 2000–2004
Mike Lawrence Papers, Carbondale, IL (MLP)
Law.UChicago.edu, Internet Archive Wayback Machine, 1997–2004
Tracy Leary Papers, New York, NY
LISC (Local Initiatives Support Corporation) Papers, Chicago
Frank Lumpkin Papers, Chicago History Museum (FLP)
Roberta Lynch Papers, Chicago (RLP)
Scott Lynch-Giddings Papers, Blue Island, IL
Mahboob Mahmood Papers, Singapore
Eden Martin Papers, Chicago
Ian Mattoch Papers, Honolulu
Tom Mboya Papers, Hoover Institution Archives, Palo Alto, CA
Joe McLean Papers, Washington (JMP)
Alex McNear Papers, Sag Harbor, NY (AMP)
Judson Miner Papers, Chicago
Newton Minow Papers, Chicago History Museum
Liza Mundy Papers, Arlington, VA
Glee Murray Papers, Washington, DC
Trent Norris Papers, San Francisco, CA
NYPIRG Papers, New York, NY
Barack H. Obama [Sr.] INS File, FOIA
Obama Family Papers, University of Hawaii at Manoa, Honolulu.
ObamaBlog.com, Internet Archive Wayback Machine, 2004
ObamaForIllinois.com, Internet Archive Wayback Machine, 2002–2004
Obama for Illinois, Federal Election Commission (FEC) Filings
Obama.Senate.gov, Internet Archive Wayback Machine, 2005–2007
Obama 2000, Federal Election Commission (FEC) Filings
Occidental College Archives, Los Angeles
Sandy O'Donnell Papers, Chicago (SOP)
Alice Palmer Papers, Harsh Collection, Chicago Public Library

Maria Pappas for U.S. Senate Federal Election Commission (FEC) Filings John Parry Papers, Portland, OR Keith Peterson Papers, Denver, CO
Phelps Stokes Fund Papers, Schomburg Center, New York, NY (PSFP)
Terrie Pickerill Papers, Chicago (TPP)
Frances Fox Piven Papers, Smith College Archives, Northampton, MA
Gregory Poe Papers, Washington, DC. (GPP)
Richard Poethig Papers (RPP), University of Illinois at Chicago Archives
Richard Poethig Papers, Chicago
Stephen Pugh Papers, Chicago
Pullman Christian Reformed Church Papers, Chicago (PCRC)
Punahou School Archives, Honolulu
Radhika Rao Papers, San Francisco
Robin Rich Papers, Gary, IN Rick Ridder Papers, Denver, CO (RRP)
Michael Risch Papers, Villanova, PA
Andrew Roth Papers, San Francisco
Jack Ryan for U.S. Senate Opposition Research Files, Washington, DC (JRORF)
St. Victor Parish Records, Calumet City, IL
Chris Sautter Papers, Washington, DC
Eugene Sawyer Papers, Chicago Public Library Archives
William X. Scheinman Papers, Hoover Institution Archives, Palo Alto, CA
Ellen Schumer Papers, Chicago (ESP)
Paul Simon Papers, Southern Illinois University Archives, Carbondale, IL (PSP)
Lolo Soetoro INS File, FOIA
State Universities Retirement System of Illinois Papers (SURSIP), Champaign, IL, FOIA
Peter Steffen Papers, Chicago
Eva Sturgies Papers, Chicago
Teachers Retirement System of Illinois Papers (TRSIP), Springfield, IL, FOIA
Carol B. Thompson and Bud Day Papers, Michigan State University Archives, East Lansing, MI
Gina Torielli Papers, Lansing, MI (GTP)
Trotter for Congress, Federal Election Commission (FEC) Filings
United Steelworkers Local 1033 Papers, Chicago History Museum
University of Chicago Law School Files, Chicago
University of Chicago Library Special Collections, Chicago
University of Washington Files, Seattle, WA
Terry Walsh Papers, Evanston, IL (TWP)
Harold Washington Papers, Chicago Public Library Archives (HWP)
Washington Administration Neighborhood & Economic Development Policy Papers, Chicago History Museum
[Joyce] Washington for Senate Federal Election Commission (FEC) Filings

Wieboldt Foundation Papers, Chicago
Mary-Ann Wilson Papers, Chicago
Ed Wojcicki Papers, Springfield, IL
Woods Fund Papers, Chicago

PERIODICALS

Alton Telegraph (AT)
Atlanta Journal Constitution (AJC)
Atlantic
Aurora Beacon (AB)
Austin Weekly News (AWN)
Barrington Courier-Review (BCR)
Bay State Banner (BSB)
Beachwood Reporter (BR)
Belleville News-Democrat (BND)
Birmingham News (BN)
Black Enterprise (BE)
Black Issues in Higher Education (BIHE)
Bloomington Pantagraph (BP)
Boston Globe (BG)
Bureau County Republican (BCR)
Business International Money Report (BIMR)
Business International Weekly Report (BIWR)
Canton Daily Ledger (CDL)
Capital City Courier (CCC)
Capitol Fax (CF)
Catalyst Chicago
Catholic New World (CNW)
Champaign News-Gazette (CNG)
Charleston Times-Courier (CTC)
Check-In [Public Allies Chicago]
Chicago Bar Association Record
Chicago Catholic
Chicago Citizen (CC)
Chicago Daily Herald (CDH)
Chicago Daily Law Bulletin (CDLB)
Chicago Daily Observer (CDO)
Chicago Defender (CD)
Chicago Independent Bulletin (CIB)
Chicago Jewish News (CJN)
Chicago Lawyer (CL)
Chicago Life

Chicago Magazine (CM)
Chicago Maroon
Chicago Reader (CR)
Chicago Reporter
Chicago Sun Times (CST)
Chicago Tribune (CT)
Chicago Weekend (CW)
Chicago Weekly News (CWN)
Christian Science Monitor (CSM)
Clinton Herald (CH)
Columbia College Chronicle [Chicago]
Columbia Spectator (CU)
Community Jobs
Congressional Record (CRec)
Cook-Witter Report [Springfield, IL] (CWR)
Crain's Chicago Business (CCB)
Daily Calumet (DC)
Daily Egyptian [SIU] (DE)
Daily Illini [UICU] (DI)
Daily Northwestern [NU] (DN)
Daily Southtown (DS)
Daily Vidette [ISU] (DV)
Dallas Morning News (DMN)
Danville Commercial News (DCN)
Daytona Beach News-Journal (DBNJ)
Decatur Herald & Review (DHR)
DeKalb Daily Chronicle (DDC)
Denver Post (DP)
Des Plaines Times (DPT)
DL21C Report [Chicago]
East African Standard [Nairobi] (EAS)
Edwardsville Intelligencer (EI)
Elgin Courier-News (ECN)
Elmhurst Press (EP)
Evanston Review (ER)
Feast [Occidental College]
Financial Times (FT)
Financing Foreign Operations (FFO)
Freeport Journal Standard (FJS)
Galesburg Register-Mail (GRM)
Galesburg Zephyr (GZ)

Harrisburg Daily Register (HDR)
Harvard Crimson (HC)
Harvard Law Bulletin (HLB)
Harvard Law Record (HLRec)
Harvard Law Review (HLR)
Harvard Law Revue
Harvard Law School Adviser (HLSA)
Harvard Magazine
Hawaii Business
Hawaii Magazine (HM)
Health & Medicine
Hegewisch News (HN)
Honolulu Advertiser (HA)
Honolulu Record
Honolulu Star Bulletin (HSB)
Hyde Park Citizen (HPC)
Hyde Park Herald (HPH)
Illinois Issues (II)
Illinois Leader (IL)
Illinois Lutheran
Illinois Politics
Illinois Times (IT)
In These Times (ITT)
Jakarta Post (JP)
Jersualem Post
Jewish Daily Forward (JDF)
Joliet Herald News (JHN)
Journal of Blacks in Higher Education (JBHE)
Ka Leo O Hawaii [UHM] (KLOH)
Ka Punahou (KP)
Kankakee Daily Journal (KDJ)
Kansas City Star (KCS)
Kewanee Star Courier (KSC)
Labor Letter [Illinois AFL-CIO] (LL)
LaSalle News Tribune (LNT)
Los Angeles Sentinel (LAS)
Los Angeles Times (LAT)
LRU First Reading [Legislative Research Unit, ILGA]
Macomb Journal (MJ)
Madison Capital Times (MCT)
Madison County Record (MCR)

Marion Daily Republican (MDR)
Mattoon Journal Gazette (MJG)
Miami Herald (MH)
Midweek [Honolulu]
Minneapolis Star Tribune (MST)
Moline Dispatch (MD)
Monmouth Review Atlas (MRA)
Morris Daily Herald (MDH)
Mount Vernon Register News (MVRN)
Mt. Carmel Register (MCR)
Nairobi Times
Naperville Sun (NS)
Nation [Nairobi]
National Catholic Reporter (NCR)
National Journal (NJ)
National Review (NR)
N'Digo
New Ground [Chicago DSA]
New York Amsterdam News (NYAN)
New York Beacon (NYB)
New York Daily News (NYDN)
New York Magazine (NYM)
New York Observer (NYO)
New York Post (NYP)
New York Sun (NYS)
New York Times (NYT)
NHI Shelterforce
Northwest Herald (NH)
Northwest Indiana Times (NIT)
Northwest Side Press [Chicago] (NSP)
Occidental Magazine
Olney Dail Mail (ODM)
Oprah Magazine
Orange County Register (OCR)
Ottawa Daily Times (ODT)
Pekin Daily Times (PDT)
People's Weekly World (PWW)
Peoria Journal Star (PJS)
Philadelphia Inquirer (PI)
Pittsburgh Tribune Review (PTR)
Politico

Progressive
Providence Journal (PJ)
Punahou Bulletin
Quad-City Times (QCT)
Quincy Herald Whig (QHW)
Reconstruction
Residents' Journal [Chicago]
River Cities Reader (RCR)
Rock Island Argus (RIA)
Rockford Register Star (RRS)
Roll Call (RC)
Salt Magazine
Sauk Valley Newspapers (SVN)
South End Citizen (SEC)
South Street Journal (SSJ)
Southern Illinoisan (SI)
Southtown Economist (SE)
Southtown Star (SS)
State Journal-Register [Springfield, IL] (SJR)
St. Louis Post-Dispatch (SLPD)
St. Paul Pioneer Press (SPPP)
Standard (Nairobi)
Steel Shavings
Telegraph Herald (Dubuque, IA) (TH)
1033 News and Views [USW Local]
The Hill (TH)
The May Report (TMR)
The Nation (TN)
The Neighborhood Works (TNW)
The New Republic (TNR)
The Occidental (TO)
The Paper [CCNY]
The Phoenix [UCLS]
The Solon [Illinois General Assembly Retirement System]
The Star [South Suburban]
Third Coast Press [Chicago]
Third World Voice [Occidental College]
Three Speech [HLS] (TS)
Trumpet [Trinity United Church of Christ]
University of Chicago Chronicle (UCC)
University of Chicago Law School Record (UCLSR)

University of Chicago Magazine (UCM)
Upturn [Association of Chicago Priests]
USA Today (USAT)
Wall Street Journal (WSJ)
Washington Post (WP)
Washington Times (WT)
Waterloo-Cedar Falls Courier (WCFC)
Waukegan News Sun (WNS)
West Frankfort Daily American (WFDA)
Wilmette Life (WL)
Windy City Times (WCT)
Work in Progress [Joyce Foundation]

INTERVIEWS AND ORAL HISTORIES

Andrew Abrams (DJG), 7 March 2014, Chicago (T)
Michael Ackerman (DJG), 8 and 13 December 2011 (E); 14 December 2011 (T); 20 February 2012 (E),
Los Angeles
Eric Adelstein (DJG), 10 November 2011, Chicago
Asif Agha (DJG), 24 January 2010, Philadelphia
Geraldine Alexis (DJG), 30 April 2013, San Francisco
Salim Al Nurridin (DJG), 14 January 2010, 10 November 2010, Chicago
Frank Amanat (DJG), 19 October 2010, Washington, DC
Hisham Amin (DJG), 6 March 2014, Baltimore (T)
John T. "Jack" Anderson (DJG), 13 March 2014, Naples, FL (T)
Paul Anderson (DJG), 10 February 2013 (E); 15 February 2013 (T), Minneapolis
Arthe Anthony (Oby Okpalanmma), 21 March 2014, Los Angeles, Occidental College
William Araiza (DJG), 11 October 2010, Brooklyn, NY
Ted Aranda (DJG), 14 March 2013, Chicago
Blanca (Labunog) Araujo (DJG), 4 January 2010, Poway, CA (E)
Dan Armstrong (DJG), 29 January 2010, New York, NY
Daniel Armstrong (DJG), 6 December 2011, Los Angeles (E)
Susan Arterian (DJG), 28 September 2010, White Plains, NY (E)
Catherine Askew (DJG), 17 September 2009, Chicago
Stephanie Askew (DJG), 17 September 2009, Chicago
Andrea Atkin (DJG), 22 October 2010, Raleigh, NC
David Attisani (DJG), 25 February 2013, Boston (T)
William Atwood (DJG), 25 June 2013, Chicago
Loretta Augustine-Herron (DJG), 9 May 2009; 17 May 2010 (T) Calumet City, IL
Alma Avalos (DJG), 14 November 2010, Chicago
David Axelrod (Jim Gilmore), 20 June 2008, Chicago (Frontline)
David Axelrod (Robert Draper), 2009, Washington, DC
Bill Ayers (DJG), 10 September 2009, Chicago

John Ayers (DJG), 9 December 2011; 1 May 2012 (E), Palo Alto, CA
Gloria Jackson Bacon (Julieanna Richardson), 10 July 2002, Chicago (TheHistoryMakers.com)
Gloria Jackson Bacon (DJG), 10 March 2014, New Orleans (T)
Margaret Bagby (DJG), 20 May 2010, South Holland, IL
Douglas Baird (DJG), 18 September 2009, Chicago
Deborah Baker, 15 (2) June 2015, Brooklyn, NY (E)
Casey Banas (Felicia Ratliff Stewart), 26 June 1996, Chicago
Brian Banks (DJG), 16 January 2010; 12 December 2010 (E), Chicago
Arthur Barnes (DJG), 18 October 2016, New York (T)
Chuck Barnhill (DJG), 24 July 2012, Madison, WI
Hal Baron (DJG), 3 May 2011; 11 June 2011, 6 June 2014 (E), Chicago
Michael Baron (DJG), 14 March 2014, Sarasota, FL (T)
Peter Baroni (DJG), 1 June 2010, Western Springs, IL
Susannah Baruch (DJG), 19 March 2014, Washington, DC (E)
Emmett and Priscilla Bassett (Joseph Mosnier), 21 July 2011, Grahamsville, NY
Maria (Stathis) Batty (DJG), 20 March 2013, Atlanta (T)
Gideon Baum (DJG), 29 June 2013, Chicago
Jennifer Borum Bechet (DJG), 28 October 2010; 28 October 2010 (E), New Orleans
Leon Bechet (DJG), 29 October 2010, New Orleans (T)
Scott Becker (DJG), 11 May 2010, Chicago
Peregrine “Pern” Beckman (DJG), 8 January 2010, Burbank, CA (T)
John Belcaster (DJG), 18 September 2009; 22 July 2010 and 25 June 2015 (E), Chicago
Derrick Bell (DJG), 26 January 2010 (E); 28 January 2010, New York, NY
Ellen Benjamin (DJG), 11 January 2010, Chicago
Joseph R. Bennett (DJG), 20 March 2013, Hazel Crest, IL (T)
Robert Bennett (DJG), 2 November 2010; 3 November 2010 (E), Chicago
Deanne Benos (DJG), 20 November 2015, Chicago (T)
Brad Berenson (DJG), 22 January 2010, 25 April 2011, Washington, DC
Steven Berkow (DJG), 22 April 2013, Washington, DC
Arthur L. Berman (DJG), 12 November 2011, Chicago
Mary Bernstein (DJG), 5 December 2011, Oakland, CA
Brian Bertha (DJG), 2 December 2011, San Francisco
Maggie Bertke (DJG), 4 and 8 April 2011, Washington, DC (E)
David Bird (DJG), 6 May 2014, Pittsburgh, PA
Timuel Black (DJG), 6 May 2009, Chicago
Margaret Blackshere (DJG), 12 November 2011, Niles, IL
Robert Blackwell Jr. (DJG), 7 May 2009, Chicago
Robert Blackwell Jr. (John Page), 2012, Chicago
Susan (Botkin) Blake (DJG), 3 January 2012, Mercer Island, WA (T)
Mark Blumenthal (DJG), 22 July 2013; 7 August 2013 (E), Washington, DC
Phil Boerner (DJG), 26 (2) and 28 (2) March 2009 and 5 April 2009 (E); 17 April 2009; 18 (2), 19, 20, 21, 22 (2), 23, and 24 (2) April 2009, 1, 20 (2), 22, 27, 28, 29, and 31 May 2009, 2, 28 (3), and 29 (2) June 2009, 12, 28 (3), 29 (2), and 30 (2) July 2009, 24, 25, 30, and 31 (2) August 2009, 2 and 3 September 2009, 13 and 21 December 2009, 7, 8, 11, 22 (3), 23, 24 (3), and 26 February 2010, 30 (2) March 2010, 1, 2, and 26 April 2010, 11 June 2010, 19, 20, 21, and 22 July 2010, 14 August 2010, 12 January 2011, 9, 10, and 12 February 2011, 29 March 2011, 16 May 2011, 5 June 2011, 1 May 2012, 15 and 16 August 2012, 16 September 2012, 16 October 2012, 13 (2), 17, 20, 23, 24, and 25 November 2014, 3 (2), 6, and 31 December 2014 (E), Sacramento

Roger Boesche (DJG), 8 April 2009, Los Angeles

Lionel Bolin (DJG), 28 July 2012, Beverly Shores, IN

Larry Bomke (DJG), 9 May 2011, Springfield, IL

Adam C. Bonin (DJG), 28 February 2014, Philadelphia (E)

Roger Boord (DJG), 16 April 2013, Chicago (T)

Ilisabeth Bornstein (DJG), 4 April 2014, Pittsburgh, PA

Andrew Boron (DJG), 13 August 2013, Chicago

Caroline Boss (DJG), 4 January 2012, Friday Harbor, WA

John Bouman (DJG), 3 April 2009, Chicago

Mark Bouman (DJG), 19 February 2010 (E), Chicago

Evelyn Bowles (DJG), 14 March 2013, Glen Carbon, IL (T)

John Boyer (DJG), 21 December 2011, Honolulu

Keith Boykin (DJG), 13 October 2010, New York, NY

Chris Boyster (DJG), 7 November 2011, Springfield, IL

Joannie Braden (DJG), 21 April 2014, Denver, CO

Bill Brady (DJG), 18 November 2010, Springfield, IL

Deborah Brake (DJG), 26 March 2013, Pittsburgh, PA (T)

Carol Moseley Braun (Julian Bond), 16 March 2005, Charlottesville, VA (Institute for Public History, UVA)

Carol Moseley Braun (DJG), 14 May 2010, Chicago

Arthur Brazier (David Axelrod), 28 January 2004, Chicago (TPP)

Renee Brereton (DJG), 9 and 15 September 2009, Washington, DC (T)

David Brint (DJG), 30 March 2014, Northbrook, IL (T)

Rudy Broad (DJG), 14 May 2011, Springfield, IL (T)

Dan Bromberg (DJG), 9 December 2011; 9 December 2011 (E), Redwood Shores, CA

Julia Bronson (DJG), 26 March 2014, New York, NY (T)

Rosellen Brown (DJG), 8 July 2015 (T), 15 July 2015 (E), Chicago

Katrina Browne (DJG), 19 April 2011; 29 May 2011 (E), Newton, MA

Kenneth Brucks (DJG), 11 July 2012, Chicago

Paul Burak (DJG), 13 January 2010, Orland Park, IL

Dan Burkhalter (DJG), 16 July 2012, Madison, WI

Deloris Burnam (DJG), 17 September 2009, Chicago

Deborah Burnet (DJG), 4 April 2009, Chicago

Will Burns (Jim Gilmore), 25 July 2008, Chicago (Frontline)

Will Burns (DJG), 8 September 2009, Chicago
Roland W. Burris (DJG), 16 March 2014, Chicago (T)
Brad Burzynski (DJG), 24 March 2014, Clare, IL (T)
Gerrard Bushell (DJG), 28 and 30 January 2010, New York, NY
Lewis Butler (Ann Lage), 16 April 2009, Stinson Beach, CA (Bancroft Library, University of California, Berkeley)
Cassandra Butts (Jim Gilmore), 10 July 2008, Washington (Frontline)
Cassandra Butts (DJG), 28 April 2011, Washington, DC
Judy Byrd (DJG), 3 September 2013; 18 September 2013 (T), New York, NY
Manford Byrd Jr. (Felicia Ratliff Stewart), 8 May 1995, Chicago
Marian Byrnes (Rod Sellers), 14 February 2001, Chicago (Mark Bouman)
Mary Beth Cahill (Robert Draper), 2009, Washington, DC
Mary Beth Cahill (DJG), 6 February 2014, Washington, DC
Kristen B. Caldwell (Jim Gilmore), 27 June 2012, Sunnyvale, CA (Frontline)
John Calicott (DJG), 13 January 2010, Country Club Hills, IL
David Callahan (DJG), 14 October 2010, New York, NY
Mary Ellen Callahan (DJG), 13 March 2014, Washington, DC (T)
John Cameron (DJG), 8 November 2010; 8 November 2010 (E), Chicago
Robert Campbell (Philip Bracy), 28 April 1981, Youngstown, OH (Youngstown State University)
Cindi Canary (DJG), 4 May 2011, Chicago
Rachel Cano (DJG), 20 February 2013, San Diego (E)
Nora Moreno Cargie (DJG), 15 March 2013, Chicago
Judith Pinn Carlisle (DJG), 12 February 2013 (E); 13 February 2013 (T), Flint, MI
Dominic Carmon (DJG), 30 October 2010, New Orleans
Paul Carpenter (DJG), 16 December 2011, Santa Monica, CA
Howard Carroll (DJG), 22 March 2013, Lincoln-wood, IL (T)
Marlies Carruth (DJG), 15 January 2010, Chicago
Sheryll Cashin (DJG), 22 January 2010; 30 March 2010 (E), Washington, DC
Jim Cauley (DJG), 26 October 2010, Louisville, KY
Maria B. Cerda (DJG), 12 May 2010, Chicago (T)
Lou Celi (DJG), 28 January 2010, New York, NY
Warren Chain (DJG), 24 March 2014, Lumberton, NJ (T)
Hasan Chandoo (DJG), 19 September 2013, Armonk, NY
Raazia Chandoo (DJG), 19 September 2013, 18 December 2014 (E), Armonk, NY
Shirley Chappell (DJG), 5 February 2015 (E), Chicago
Elvin Charity (DJG), 15 September 2009, Chicago
John Charles (DJG), 9 May 2011, Springfield, IL
Adam Charnes (DJG), 23 October 2010, Winston-Salem, NC
Micki Chen (DJG), 20 October 2010, Arlington, VA
Marty Chester (DJG), 6 March 2014, Minneapolis (T)
Jack Chorowsky (DJG), 20 April 2011, New York, NY

Dino Christenson (DJG), 18 December 2013, Boston (T)
A. Marisa Chun (DJG), 26 April 2011, Washington, DC
Thomas Cima (DJG), 13 May 2010, Chicago
Chapin Cimino (DJG), 30 April 2014 (T); 30 April 2014 (E), Philadelphia
Michael Claffey (DJG), 26 June 2013 (T); 27 June 2013 (E), Urbana, IL
Judith Clain (DJG), 9 December 2014, New York, NY (E)
Frank Clark (DJG), 8 August 2013, Chicago
Carin Clauss (DJG), 16 July 2012, Madison, WI
James Clayborne (DJG), 17 November 2010, Springfield, IL
Forrest Claypool (DJG), 27 June 2013, Chicago
Richard Cloobek (DJG), 23 February 2013 (E); 24 February 2013 (T), Las Vegas
Delmarie Cobb (DJG), 13 August 2013, Chicago (T)
Kieth Cockrell (DJG), 11 February 2013, Detroit (E)
Peter Coffey (DJG), 26 June 2013, Chicago
Tom Coffey (DJG), 2 March 2015, Chicago (E)
Julie E. Cohen (DJG), 29 April 2010, Cambridge, MA
Michael L. Cohen (DJG), 15 December 2011, Los Angeles
Sherry Colb (DJG), 27 February 2013, Ithaca, NY (T)
Carl Coleman (DJG), 7 January 2011, Lancy, France (T)
Susan Keselenko Coll (DJG), 9 October 2013, Washington, DC
Eric Collins (DJG), 9 September 2014, London, UK (T)
Jacqueline Y. Collins (DJG), 11 May 2011, Springfield, IL
James M. Collins (DJG), 10 May 2011, Springfield, IL
Jennifer Collins (DJG), 23 October 2010, Winston-Salem, NC
Scott Collins (DJG), 7 December 2010, London, UK
Les Coney (DJG), 24 June 2013, Chicago
Danna Cook (DJG), 14 April 2009, Los Angeles (E)
Genevieve Cook (DJG), 4 and 5 September 2012 (E); 5 September 2012 (T); 6, 7, 8, 19, 22, 23, 26, 27, 28, and 30 September 2012, 15 November 2012 (E); 9, 10, and 11 December 2012; 6 February 2013, 3, 5, and 17 October 2013, 21, 22, and 23 October 2014, 12 (5), 13 (3), 15 (2), 19 (4), and 20 (4) December 2014, 20 (2) January 2015, 24, 26, and 28 February 2015 (E), "Norfolk, VT"
Frank Cooper (DJG), 10 December 2010, Armonk, NY (T)
Nancy Cooper (DJG), 21 December 2011, Honolulu
Leslie Corbett (DJG), 30 April 2014, Chicago (T)
Jacqueline Scott Corley (DJG), 2 December 2011, San Francisco
Susan (Williamson) Corley (DJG), 12 May 2010, Scottsdale, AZ (T)
Jack Corrigan (Daniel Urman), 2013, Brookline, MA (Northeastern University)
Jack Corrigan (DJG), 18 March 2014, Brookline, MA (T)
John Corrigan (DJG), 9 September 2009, Chicago
Sharon Corrigan (DJG), 16 July 2012, Madison, WI Ernesto Cortes Jr. (Lynnell J. Burkett), 27 May 1994, San Antonio, TX (University of Texas at San Antonio)

Jim Covington (DJG), 12 May 2011, Springfield, IL
David Craven (DJG), 29 June 2013, 10 August 2013, Chicago
Bob Creamer (DJG), 30 June 2013, Evanston, IL
Dan Cronin (DJG), 10 November 2011, Wheaton, IL
Megan Crowhurst (DJG), 7 May 2013, Portland, OR Lori Joyce Cullen (DJG), 7 November 2011, Springfield, IL
John Cullerton (DJG), 12 November 2010, Chicago
Jeffrey Cummings (DJG), 9 September 2009; 28 September 2009 and 14 June 2015 (E), Chicago
Barbara Flynn Currie (DJG), 9 September 2009, Chicago
Lacey Curry (DJG), 12 May 2010, Chicago (T)
Charles U. Daly (DJG), 5 March 2014, West Palm Beach, FL (T)
Jack Darin (DJG), 8 November 2011, Springfield, IL
Tom Dart (DJG), 1 July 2013, Chicago
Tom Daschle (Jim Gilmore), 10 June 2008, Washington, DC (Frontline)
Cindy (Huebner) Davidsmeyer (DJG), 13 May 2011, Springfield, IL
H. Ron Davidson (DJG), 2 (2) April 2014, Miami, FL (E)
Allison S. Davis (Robert Draper), 2009, Chicago
Allison S. Davis (DJG), 12 May 2010, Chicago
Andrew Davis (DJG), 26 July 2012, Chicago
Danny K. Davis (David Axelrod), 29 September 2003, Chicago (JKP)
Danny K. Davis (Terence Sims), 10 May 2010, Chicago (CAAMC, Columbia College)
Frank Marshall Davis (Chris Conybeare and Joy Chong), May 1987 (?), Honolulu (UH CLER) Jennifer Davis (William Minter), 12 December 2004, Washington, D. (NoEasyVictories.org)
Lennard Davis (DJG), 13 and 14 December 2009 (E); 12 January 2010, 6 (2) December 2014 (E), Chicago
Rochelle Davis (DJG), 5 August 2013, Wilmette, IL
Michael Dawson (DJG), 5 November 2010, Chicago (E)
Michael Dees (DJG), 12 September 2012, Reno, NV (T)
Steve Delaney (DJG), 2 February 2010, Needham, MA
William Delgado (DJG), 13 May 2011, Springfield, IL
Tiffanie Cason De Liberty (DJG), 3 April 2014, Santa Rosa, CA (T)
Beth DeLisle (DJG), 5 May 2014, Boston (T)
Yvonne Delk (DJG), 5 March 2013, Norfolk, VA (E)
Michelle (Jacobs) DeLong (DJG), 27 February 2013, Scarsdale, NY (T)
Miguel del Valle (DJG), 27 May 2010, Chicago
Laura Demanski (DJG), 12 March 2004 (T), 29 March 2014 (E), Chicago
Steve Derks (DJG), 2 November 2010, Chicago
Mark Dery (DJG), 20 January 2010 (E); 30 January 2010, New York, NY
Diana Derycz-Kessler (DJG), 13 December 2011, Los Angeles
Alba De Souza (DJG), 26 June 2009, Cambridge, UK

Kurt DeWeese (DJG), 14 May 2011, Springfield, IL
Alice Dewey (DJG), 20 December 2011, Honolulu
Nathan Diament (DJG), 28 April 2011, Washington, DC
Kelly Dietrich (DJG), 25 June 2013, Chicago
Todd Dietterle (DJG), 26 June 2013, Chicago
Kirk Dillard (Mark DePue), 9 November 2009, Springfield, IL (ALPL)
Kirk Dillard (DJG), 18 November 2010, Springfield, IL
Marlene Dillard (DJG), 14 September 2009, Chicago
Greg Dingens (DJG), 1 November 2010, Chicago
Paolo DiRosa (DJG), 15 February 2013, Washington, DC (T)
Mary Dixon (DJG), 17 November 2010, Springfield, IL
Doug Dobmeyer (DJG), 12 March 2013, Chicago
Alan Dobry (DJG), 8 September 2009, Chicago
Lois Dobry (DJG), 8 September 2009, Chicago
Jim Dodge (DJG), 11 May 2011, Springfield, IL
Bernardine Dohrn (DJG), 28 June 2013, Chicago
Peter Dolotta (DJG), 16 September 2014, New York, NY (T)
Mark Donahue (DJG), 8 November 2011, Springfield, IL
Michael Dorf (DJG), 2 May 2011, Chicago
Michael Dorf (DJG), 15 February 2013, Ithaca, NY (T)
Kevin Downey (DJG), 19 October 2010, Washington, DC
John Drew (DJG), 14 December 2011 (T); 16 December 2011, Laguna Niguel, CA
Liz Drew (DJG), 25 July 2013, Washington, DC
Benjamin Dreyer (Robert Draper), 2009, New York, NY (E)
Timothy Driscoll (DJG), 13 March 2013, Mineola, NY (T)
Steven A. Drizin (DJG), 24 and 27 (2) October 2011, Chicago (E)
Tammerlin Drummond (DJG), 17 March 2014, Cambridge, MA (T)
Len Dubi (DJG), 18 March 2013, Homewood, IL
Jan Anne Dubin (DJG), 25 June 2013, Chicago
Walter Dudycz (DJG), 25 March 2014, Chicago (T)
Jim Duffett (DJG), 8 November 2011, Springfield, IL
Ralph Dunham (DJG), 28 April 2011, Springfield, VA
Anita Dunn (DJG), 22 July 2013, Washington, DC
Marv Dyson (DJG), 2 June 2015, Chicago (T)
Jane Dystel (Robert Draper), 2009, New York, NY (E)
John "Vince" Eagan (DJG), 17 May 2009, Covington, GA (T)
John Eason (DJG), 6 March 2014, College Station, TX (T)
Claire Eberle (DJG), 13 May 2011, Springfield, IL
Barack Echols (DJG), 2 April 2014 (E); 29 April 2014 (T), 6 November 2014 (E), Chicago
Romelle Rowe Ecung (DJG), 6 December 2014, Los Angeles (T)
Jim Edgar (Mark DePue), 28 May, 2 September, 9 September, 8 November, 18 November and 14

December 2010, Urbana, IL (ALPL)

Jim Edgar (DJG), 10 March 2014, Tempe, AZ (T)

Christopher Edley (DJG), 5 December 2011, Berkeley, CA

Erin Edmonds (DJG), 21 September 2014, Salt Lake City (T)

Nathaniel Edmonds (DJG), 20 March 2014 (E); 2 September 2014 (T), Washington, DC

Michael Edney (DJG), 13 March 2014, Washington, DC (T)

Joella Edwards (Jack McAdoo), 1, 4, and 10 November 2010, Orlando, FL (JMacRadio.com)

Joella Edwards (Earl Yates), 15 and 23 January 2011, Hilton Head, SC (Low Country View, YouTube)

Pal Eldredge (DJG), 21 December 2011, Honolulu

Robert Elia (DJG), 29 March, 2 April, and 17 October 2014, Warren, OH (T)

Mo Elleithee (DJG), 23 July 2013, Washington, DC

Jeffrey Ellman (DJG), 19 March 2013, Atlanta (T)

Lisa Ellman (DJG), 19 December 2014, Washington, DC

Leif Elsmo (DJG), 11 March 2013, Chicago

Susan Epstein (DJG), 30 March 2014, Santa Barbara, CA (T)

Jason Erkes (DJG), 4 May 2011, Chicago

James Esseks (DJG), 13 October 2010, New York, NY

Timothy C. Evans (DJG), 7 June 2011, Chicago

Barbara Eyman (DJG), 5 October 2010, Washington, DC (E)

Stanley Farier (DJG), 13 January 2010, South Holland, IL (T)

Ruth Fecych (DJG), 29 May 2015 (E), 1 June 2015 (T), New York, NY

Lynn Feekin (DJG), 7 May 2010, Eugene, OR

Brent Feigenbaum (DJG), 11 October 2010, New York, NY

Jeremy Feinberg (DJG), 26 December 2010 (T), 29 December 2010 (E), New York, NY

Leonard Feldman (DJG), 19 February 2013, Seattle (T)

Stephen Feldman (DJG), 17 April 2014, Raleigh, NC (T)

Dave Feller (DJG), 12 August 2013, Chicago

Edward Felsenthal (DJG), 5 September 2013, New York, NY (T)

Julie Fernandes (DJG), 21 March 2014, Washington, DC (T)

Henry Ferris (DJG), 28 May 2015, New York, NY (T)

Lew Finfer (DJG), 1 February 2010, Boston

Jim Finley (DJG), 6 February 2013, Henderson, NV (E)

Tom Finnegan (DJG), 17 May 2010, Blue Island, IL (T)

Sunny Fischer (DJG), 15 March 2013, Chicago

Lisa Fisher (DJG), 20 January 2010, Arlington, VA

Rob Fisher (DJG), 12 (2), and 13 (2) January 2010 (E); 20 January 2010; 29, and 31 July 2010, 2 (2), 3, 5 (2), and 24 August 2010, 6 September 2010 (E); 20 November 2010 (T); 27 April 2011; 29 April 2011, 12 September 2011, 12 February 2012, 17 May 2012, 17 (2), and 18 (3) February 2013, 27 (2), 29, and 29 March 2013, 11 and 21 May 2013 (E); 24 July 2013; 28 March 2015, 7 (2), 21, and 23 (2) April 2015, 24 May 2015, 16 August 2015 (E), Arlington VA and Washington, DC

William "Terry" Fisher (DJG), 10 April 2015, Cambridge, MA (E)

Peter G. Fitzgerald (DJG), 10 March 2014 (E); 14 March 2014 (T), McLean, VA
Tom FitzGibbon (DJG), 2 September 2014, Indianapolis, IN (T)
Jeremy Flynn (DJG), 30 March 2014, Springfield, IL (T)
Lula Ford (DJG), 27 March 2014, Chicago (T)
Fred Fortier (DJG), 16 August 2013, Oak Park, IL (T)
Andy Foster (DJG), 9 December 2011, Palo Alto, CA
Bunny Fourez (DJG), 17 November 2010, Springfield, IL
Homer D. Franklin (DJG), 6 February 2015, Pearland, TX (T)
Joel Freid (DJG), 6 April 2015 (E), 6 April 2015 (T), Oakland, CA
Susan Freiwald (DJG), 3 December 2011; 4 and 6 December 2011 (E), San Francisco
Charles Fried (DJG), 7 and 8 May 2015, Cambridge, MA (E)
Joe Frolik (DJG), 24 July 2015, Cleveland, OH (T)
Wilson Frost (Marie Scatena), 13 November 2014, Palm Desert, CA (T)
Gerald Frug (DJG), 18 April 2011, Cambridge, MA
Jackie Fuchs (DJG), 5 July 2010, Cambridge, UK
James Fugate (Robert Draper), 2009, Los Angeles
Bill Fuhry (DJG), 14 April 2014, Evanston, IL (T)
Kelli Furushima (DJG), 20 December 2011, Honolulu
George Galland (DJG), 19 May 2010, Chicago
Greg Galluzzo (Don Elmer), January 2009, Detroit, MI (Community Organizer Genealogy Project)
Greg Galluzzo (DJG), 31 March 2009, 2 November 2010, 16 May 2011, Chicago
Steve Ganis (DJG), 18 April 2011; 2 May 2011 (E), Boston
Robert T. Gannett (DJG), 3 November 2010, Chicago (E)
Jesus "Chuy" Garcia (Dale Rosen), 15 April 1989, Chicago (Blackside)
Jesus "Chuy" Garcia (Betty Brown-Chappell), 11 January 1990, Chicago (BBCP)
Jesus "Chuy" Garcia (DJG), 11 March 2013, Chicago
Romeo Garcia (DJG), 5 December 2011, Oakland, CA
Randon Gardley (DJG), 12 November 2010, Chicago
Edward G. Gardner (Davis Lacy Jr.), 1 June 1989, Chicago (Blackside)
Edward G. Gardner (Julieanna Richardson), 12 August 2002, Chicago (TheHistoryMakers.com)
Joseph Gardner (James A. DeVinney), 14 April 1989, Chicago (Blackside)
Molly Garhart (DJG), 17 March 2014, San Francisco (T)
Betty Garrett (DJG), 17 September 2009, Chicago
Selmo "Lucky" Garrett Jr. (DJG), 17 September 2009, Chicago
John Geanuracos (DJG), 4 December 2010, London, UK (E)
Michael Gecan (DJG), 1 October 2010 (E); 15 October 2010, Princeton, NJ
Julius Genachowski (DJG), 25 April 2011, Washington, DC
Harry Gendler (DJG), 14 September 2009, Chicago
Tom Geoghegan (DJG), 26 July 2012, Chicago
Christine Gervais (DJG), 12 May 2010, Monticello, IN (T)
Pete Giangreco (DJG), 12 March 2013, Evanston, IL

Jeanne M. Gills (DJG), 21 March 2014, Chicago (T)
Robert Ginsburg (DJG), 25 May 2010, Chicago
Douglas Glick (DJG), 21 September 2009; 22 September 2009 (E), Binghamton, NY
Virginia Dunham Goeldner (DJG), 20 November 2010, Maumelle, AR (T)
David Goldberg (DJG), 26 January 2010, New York, NY
Michael Golden (DJG), 26 June 2013, Chicago (E)
Jonathan Goldman (DJG), 25 June 2013, Chicago
Mary Gonzales (DJG), 7 May 2011, Chicago
Tasneem Goodman (DJG), 31 March 2014, Chicago (T)
Kent Goss (DJG), 1 (E) and 6 April 2009, Los Angeles
Josh Gottheimer (DJG), 18 September 2013, Ridgewood, NJ (T)
Arnie Graf (DJG), 20 October 2010, Silver Spring, MD
Patricia A. Graham (DJG), 23 January 2010 (E); 2 May 2010; 1 November 2010 (E), Cambridge, MA, and Denver, CO
Tom Grauman (DJG), 4 January 2012; 9 January 2012, 11 January 2013 (E), Friday Harbor, WA
Donita Powell Greene (DJG), 9 February 2015, Alexandria, VA (T)
Nadyne Griffin (DJG), 14 January 2010; 9 February 2015 (T), Chicago
Jacky Grimshaw (Betty Brown-Chappel), 23 October 1989, Chicago (BBCP)
Bill Grimshaw (DJG), 26 May 2010, Chicago
Jacky Grimshaw (DJG), 26 May 2010, Chicago
Erwin N. Griswold (Victoria L. Radd), 13 January 1992, Washington, DC (DCCHS.org)
Adam Gross (DJG), 12 November 2010, Chicago
Dave Gross (DJG), 16 November 2010, Springfield, IL
Ed Grossman (DJG), 27 June 2013, Chicago
Andrew Gruber (DJG), 19 March 2013, Salt Lake City (T)
Carlton Guthrie (DJG), 19 March 2014, Chicago (T)
Michael Guzman (DJG), 20 October 2010, Washington, DC
Bill Haine (DJG), 17 November 2010, Springfield, IL
Marc Haine (DJG), 22 December 2011, Honolulu
Leslie Hairston (DJG), 14 May 2010, Chicago
Dodie Hajra (DJG), 22 February 2013, Orlando, FL (T)
Dan Hale (DJG), 19 October 2010, Falls Church, VA
Jay Halfon (DJG), 16 September 2011, New York, NY
Anne Hallett (DJG), 29 April 2009, Chicago
Charles Halpern (DJG), 5 December 2011; 6 December 2011 (E), Berkeley, CA
Debbie Halvorson (DJG), 5 May 2011, Homewood, IL
Charles V. Hamilton (DJG), 14 March 2013, Chicago (T)
Ian Haney-Lopez (DJG), 24 December 2011, Waiialua, HI
Gary Hannig (DJG), 15 March 2014, Litchfield, IL (T)
Don Harmon (DJG), 9 May 2011, Springfield, IL
(Frank) Hill Harper (DJG), 14 December 2011, Studio City, CA

Monica Harris (DJG), 25 October 2016, Bigfork, MT (T)
Ray Harris (DJG), 20 May 2010, Chicago
Paul Harstad (DJG), 2 April 2014 (T); 22 April 2014, Boulder, CO
Brett Hart (DJG), 15 April 2014, Chicago (T)
Chester Hartman (DJG), 5 April 2012, Washington, DC (E)
Hermene Hartman (DJG), 30 March 2010, 12 April 2010, 4 November 2010 (E); 14 November 2011, 21 June 2013, 8 August 2013, Chicago
Carol Harwell (DJG), 28 April 2009, Chicago
Linda Hawker (DJG), 10 May 2011, Springfield, IL
Derek Hawkins (DJG), 28 October 2010, Newark, NJ (E)
Carl Hawkinson (DJG), 19 November 2010, Galesburg, IL
Lisa Hay (DJG), 19 March 2010 (E); 5 May 2010, Portland, OR Tom Hazen (DJG), 14 November 2010, Evanston, IL Joann Hebing (DJG), 30 December 2011, Mill City, OR Mark Hebing (DJG), 30 December 2011; 31 December 2011, 1 January 2012, 30 April 2013 (E), Mill City, OR Philip Hebing (DJG), 30 December 2011, Mill City, OR Steven Heinen (DJG), 19 February 2013, Tulsa, OK (T)
Stephen Heintz (DJG), 16 September 2011, 5 September 2013, New York, NY
Beverly Helm-Renfro (DJG), 29 May 2010, Springfield, IL
Beverly Helm-Renfro (Mark DePue), 13 July 2010, Springfield, IL (ALPL)
Sondra A. Hemeryck (DJG), 1 November 2010; 1 November 2010 (E), Chicago
Rickey Hendon (Terry Martin), 13 January 2009, Springfield (Illinois Channel)
Rickey Hendon (Peter Slen), 12 June 2010, Chicago (C-Span Book TV)
Carter Hendren (Mark DePue), 28 April 2009, Springfield, IL (ALPL)
Carter Hendren (DJG), 8 November 2011, Springfield, IL
Sim Heninger (DJG), 22 October 2010; 12 and 13 January 2011, 14 (2) May 2011 (E), Durham, NC
Lisa (Shachtman) Hennessey (DJG), 29 January 2010, New York, NY
Mike Henry (DJG), 28 April 2011, Washington, DC
Paul Herrmannsfeldt (DJG), 16 and 21 May 2010, Santa Fe, NM (E)
Eileen Hershenov (DJG), 25 January 2010, Yonkers, NY
Marcie Hershman (DJG), 14 July 2015, Brookline, MA (T)
Bethann Hester (DJG), 25 June 2013, Chicago
Clyde Higa (DJG), 25 February 2013, Honolulu (E)
Susan M. Higgins (DJG), 24 October 2010, Charlotte, NC
Tracy Higgins (DJG), 14 October 2010, New York, NY
David Hill (DJG), 20 October 2010, Arlington, VA
Jay Hines-Shah (DJG), 3 March 2014 (E); 24 March 2014 (T), Chicago
Jeff Hoberman (DJG), 14 March 2014 (E); 20 March 2014 (T), San Paulo, Brazil
Glenn Hodas (DJG), 10 July 2012, Springfield, IL
Mike Hoffmann (DJG), 18 November 2010, Springfield, IL

Larry Hogue (DJG), 9 January 2010, San Diego, CA
Barbara Holt (DJG), 11 November 2011; 12 November 2011 (E), Chicago
James D. Holzhauer (DJG), 2 January 2010, Chicago (E)
John Hooker (DJG), 12 August 2013, Chicago
Elaine Horn (DJG), 27 March 2014, Washington, DC (T)
George M. Houser (Lisa Brock), 19 July 2004, Rockland County, NY (NoEasyVictories.org)
Desta Houston (DJG), 26 May 2010, Chicago
Jim Howard (DJG), 24 July 2013; 25 July 2013 (E), Washington, DC
Anne Howells (DJG), 22 April 2009, Seattle
Josh Hoyt (DJG), 9 November 2010, Chicago
Yi-Fun Hsueh (DJG), 23 February 2013, Bethesda, MD (T)
Craig Huffman (DJG), 25 July 2012, Chicago
Blair Hull (DJG), 7 May 2014 (T); 9 May 2014 (E), Chicago
Laura Russell Hunter (DJG), 24 July 2013, Washington, DC
Mattie Hunter (DJG), 9 November 2011, Springfield, IL
Chuck Hurley (DJG), 7 March 2014, Annapolis, MD (T)
Dennis Hutchinson (DJG), 4 February 2009, 9 (2) April 2014, Chicago (E)
Lee Hwang (DJG), 7 December 2011; 17 February 2012 (T), San Francisco
Dan Hynes (DJG), 7 May 2009, Chicago
James Iams (DJG), 22 December 2011 (E); 22 December 2011 (T), Honolulu
Scott Inoue (DJG), 30 October 2014, Stockton, CA (E)
Michael Isbell (DJG), 4 October 2010, New York, NY (E)
Adrienne Bitoy Jackson (DJG), 10 September 2009; 12 and 13 September 2009 (E), Chicago
Jesse Jackson Jr. (David Axelrod), 17 February 2004, Chicago (JKP and TPP)
Jesse Jackson Jr. (DJG), 1 May 2011, Chicago
Denny Jacobs (DJG), 16 November 2010, Springfield, IL
Sharon Jacobson (DJG), 5 November 2011, Houston, TX (T)
Sheila Miyoshi Jager (DJG), 6 (2), 7 (3), 8 (2), and 9 (2) August 2009, 8 (2), 9, 12, and 13 April 2010, 7
September 2011, 9 (2), 10, and 22 January 2012, 1 (3), 3, and 30 May 2012, 20 (4), 21 (2), 24, and 28
(2) June 2012, 28 July 2012, 9 and 29 August 2012, 12, 13, and 14 September 2012, 7 (2) November 2012, 3 and 4 December 2012, 29 (4) May 2013, 17, 20, and 21 August 2013, 23 March 2014, 30 and 31 August 2014, 12 (2) and 13 (2) September 2014, 10 (7) and 14 November 2014, 20 (2), 21 (2), 22
(2), and 23 January 2015, 7, 8 (2), 9, 11 (3), 12 (2), and 17 February 2015, Oberlin, OH, and Seoul,
South Korea (E)
David James (DJG), 28 November 2011 (E); 7 March 2014 (T), Los Angeles Ken Jania (DJG), 15 November 2010, Hammond, IN Valerie Jarrett (Robert Draper), 2009, Washington, DC
Valerie Jarrett (Jim Gilmore), 20 August 2012, Washington, DC (Frontline)
Laura Jehl (DJG), 18 October 2010, Washington, DC
Alan Jenkins (DJG), 6 September 2013, New York, NY
Tim Jessup (DJG), 18 and 19 February 2015 (E), 21 February 2015 (T), 3 March 2015 (E), Jakarta,

Indonesia

Dave Joens (DJG), 9 May 2011, Springfield, IL
Al Johnson (Betty Brown-Chappell), 14 December 1989, Chicago (BBCP)
Cheryl Johnson (DJG), 19 September 2009, Chicago
Don Johnson (DJG), 29 June 2013, Chicago
Hazel Johnson (DJG), 19 September 2009, Chicago
Jo Johnson (DJG), 13 May 2011, Springfield, IL
Thomas E. Johnson (DJG), 13 September 2009, Chicago
Dan Johnson-Weinberger (DJG), 10 May 2011, Springfield, IL
Kevin Jokisch (DJG), 11 (2) and 12 (3) February 2015, St. Louis, MO (E)
Brad Jonas (DJG), 6 July 2015, Chicago (T)
Alma Jones (DJG), 13 January 2010, Chicago
Emil Jones Jr. (Julieanna Richardson), 6 and 18 January 2000, Chicago (TheHistoryMakers.com)
Emil Jones Jr. (Bernard Sieracki), 23, February 2006, Springfield, IL (IllinoisChannel.org)
Emil Jones Jr. (DJG), 1 May 2009, Chicago
John Paul Jones (DJG), 26 May 2010, Chicago
Linzey Jones (DJG), 6 May 2011, Bridgeview, IL
Matt Jones (DJG), 18 November 2010, Springfield, IL
Nancy Jones (DJG), 18 May 2010, Chicago (T)
Ben Joravsky (Betty Brown-Chappell), 6 December 1989, Chicago (BBCP)
Gwendolyn M. Jordan (DJG), 2 June 2015, Washington, DC (T)
James V. Jordan (DJG), 19 September 2009, Chicago
Tom Joyce (DJG), 17 May 2010, Chicago
Asad Jumabhoy (DJG), 11 January 2011, London, UK
Scott Kaiser (DJG), 7 November 2011, Springfield, IL
Keith Kakugawa (DJG), 17 May 2009, Sacramento, CA (T)
Keith Kakugawa (Jack McAdoo), 28 and 29 October 2010, 4 and 10 November 2010, Sacramento
(JMacRadio.com)
Tom Kaminski (DJG), 11 September 2009, Chicago
Nancy Kao (DJG), 25 April 2011, Washington, DC (E)
Sokoni Karanja (Larry Crowe), 7 January 2005, Chicago (TheHistoryMakers.com)
Sokoni Karanja (DJG), 6 May 2009, Chicago
Doris Karpel (DJG), 14 March 2013, Carol Stream, IL (T)
Marilyn Katz (DJG), 7 May 2011, Chicago
Jan-Michele Lemon Kearney (DJG), 15 February 2013, Cincinnati, OH (T)
Joan F. Keleher (DJG), 24 February 2015 and 28 May 2015, Wilmette, IL (T)
Keith Kelleher (DJG), 7 May 2011; 8 and 9 June 2012 (E), Chicago
Alison Kelley (DJG), 27 January 2010, Brooklyn, NY
Jerry Kellman (Jim Gilmore), 24 July 2008, Chicago (Frontline)
Jerry Kellman (DJG), 17 (2) and 24 March 2009 (E); 3 April 2009; 6 April and 13 May 2009, 3
September 2009, 8 December 2009, 30 March 2010 (E); 15 September 2011 (T); 22 and 23 August

2014, 28 and 29 September 2014 (E), Winnetka, IL
John Kelly (DJG), 7 June 2011, Chicago
Mark Kende (DJG), 18 May 2010, Des Moines, Iowa (T)
Randall Kennedy (DJG), 23 November 2010, Cambridge, MA
Scott Kennedy (DJG), 25 July 2012, Chicago
Janis Kestenbaum (DJG), 26 April 2011, Washington, DC
Amy F. Kett (DJG), 28 April 2011, Washington, DC
Mona Khalidi (DJG), 6 September 2013, New York, NY
Joe Khan (DJG), 2 and 11 March 2014 (E); 24 March 2014 (T), Philadelphia
Julius G. Kiano (Harry Kreisler), 14 September 1989, Berkeley, CA Lauren Kidwell (DJG), 23 July 2013, Washington, DC
Al Kindle (DJG), 28 April 2009, Chicago
David Kindler (DJG), 2 April 2009; 11 and 12 February 2015 (E), Oak Park, IL
Martha Kindred (DJG), 24 May 2010, Chicago
Jonathan Z. King (DJG), 26 February 2013, New York, NY (T)
Kraig King (DJG), 22 November 2014, Minneapolis (T)
Martin "Marty" King (DJG), 1 May 2011, Chicago
Tim King (DJG), 10 November 2011, Chicago
Ben Kiningham (DJG), 14 March 2003, Petersburg, IL (E)
Kathy Kish (DJG), 26 June 2013, Crete, IL (T)
Lauren Ezrol Klein (DJG), 1 March 2013, New York, NY (T)
Robert Klonowski (DJG), 4 April 2009, Chicago
Michael Klonsky (Mark Larson), July 2014, Chicago (AmericanStoriesContinuum.com)
Diana Mitsu Klos (DJG), 18 May 2010, Reston, VA (T)
Eddie L. Knox (DJG), 7 February 2015, Chicago (T)
Thomas Knutson (DJG), 14 January 2010, Harvey, IL
Jeffrey W. Kobrick (DJG), 21 and 24 May 2013 (E); 31 May 2013 (T), San Mateo, CA
Alex Kotlowitz (DJG), 15 June 2015, Oak Park, IL (E)
Madhuri Kommareddi (DJG), 6 September 2013, New York, NY
Mark Kozlowski (DJG), 26 January 2010; 26 February 2010 (E), New York, NY
Tom Krause (DJG), 20 October 2010, Falls Church, VA
Raja Krishnamoorthi (DJG), 25 June 2013, Chicago
Mike Kruglik (DJG), 1 April 2009, 5 May 2009; 12 May 2009 (E); 16 January 2010, 1 June 2010, 10
March 2015, Chicago and Phoenix, AZ
Mike Kulisheck (DJG), 22 April 2014, Boulder, CO
John Kupper (DJG), 30 June 2013; 10 July 2013 (E); 5 August 2013; 1 September 2014 (E), Wilmette, IL
Paula Miyashiro Kurashige (DJG), 23 December 2011 (E); 24 December 2011, Honolulu
Kitty Kurth (DJG), 11 November 2011, Chicago
Eric Kusunoki (DJG), 19 December 2011, Honolulu
Phil Lackman (DJG), 28 May 2010, Springfield, IL
Nicole Lamb-Hale (DJG), 11 September 2014, Washington, DC (T)

Leonard Lamkin (DJG), 8 July 2012 (E); 13 July 2012 (T), Evanston, IL
Bethany A. Lampland (DJG), 17 March 2014, New York, NY (T)
Ian Larkin (DJG), 21 June 2013, Chicago
Clinton Latimore Jr. (DJG), 12 April 2014, Chicago (T)
Mike Lawrence (Mark R. DePue), 2 and 3 July 2009, Carbondale, IL (ALPL)
Mike Lawrence (DJG), 29 May 2010, Springfield, IL
Cathy Lazere (DJG), 29 January 2010; 30 January 2010, 10 (3) and 11 February 2010, 7 and 8 December
2010, 18 (2) and 26 September 2012 (E), New York, NY
Howard Learner (DJG), 16 July 2013, Chicago (T)
Tracy Leary (DJG), 29 January 2010, Long Island City, NY
Fred Lebed (DJG), 3 May 2011; 3 May 2011 (E), Chicago
David Le Breton (DJG), 25 July 2012, Chicago
Christine M. Lee (DJG), 22 October 2010, Roanoke, VA
Daniel Lee (DJG), 15 January 2010, Chicago
Deborah Leff (DJG), 20 January 2010, Washington, DC
Sean Lev (DJG), 23 June 2011, Washington, DC
Lois Leveen (DJG), 19 March 2014, Portland, OR (T)
John Levi (DJG), 12 January 2010; 3 February 2010, 22 March 2010, 17 July 2013 (E), Chicago
Deneese Walia Levin (DJG), 20 March 2014, Chicago (T)
Beth Noymer Levine (DJG), 14 May 2010 (T); 7 November 2010, 5 and 8 December 2010 (E), Salt Lake City
Saul Levmore (DJG), 6 January 2016, Chicago (E)
Susan (Pierson) Lewers (DJG), 11 April 2014, Chicago (T)
Ted Liazos (DJG), 11 April 2014, Washington, DC (T)
Carol Platt Liebau (DJG), 14 March 2014, New Canaan, CT (T)
Mike Lieteau (DJG), 18 November 2010, Springfield, IL
Kimberly Lightford (Adele Hodge), 1 September 2000, Chicago (TheHistoryMakers.com)
Kimberly Lightford (DJG), 16 November 2010, Springfield, IL
Kevin Limbeck (DJG), 11 May 2010, Chicago
Daniel Lin (DJG), 3 March 2014, San Francisco (E)
Tom Lindenfeld (DJG), 5 February 2014; 7 April 2014 (E), Washington, DC
Tom Lininger (DJG), 25 (2) December 2011, Eugene, OR (E)
Terry Link (DJG), 17 November 2010, Springfield, IL
Kevin G. Little (DJG), 12 February 2013, Fresno, CA (T)
Yvonne Lloyd (DJG), 19 September 2009, Nashville, TN (T)
Tondra L. Loder-Jackson (DJG), 5 February 2013, Birmingham, AL (E)
Dario Longhi (DJG), 12 August 2009, Olympia, WA (T)
Richard C. Longworth (DJG), 22 February 2010, Chicago (E)
Ann F. Lopez (DJG), 11 February 2010, Boston (E)
Lourdes Lopez-Isa (DJG), 20 October 2010, Arlington, VA
John R. Lott Jr. (DJG), 8 March 2014, Burke, VA (T)

Ronald Loui (Jack McAdoo), 4 and 10 November 2010, Cleveland, OH (JMacRadio.com)
Debbie Lounsberry (DJG), 10 May 2011, Springfield, IL
Alvin Love (DJG), 2 April 2009, Chicago
Ruth Love (Felicia Ratliff Stewart), 6 January 1995, Chicago
Bernard Loyd (DJG), 6 May 2011, Chicago
Dave Luechtefeld (DJG), 11 May 2011, Springfield, IL
William Luking (DJG), 2 May 2014, Springfield, IL (T)
Alan Lum (DJG), 19 December 2011, Honolulu
Beatrice Lumpkin (DJG), 24 May 2010, Chicago
Lyndell Luster (DJG), 25 March 2014, Chicago (T)
Freddrenna Lyle (DJG), 15 March 2013, Chicago
Roberta Lynch (DJG), 9 September 2009; 23 February 2010, 10 August 2010 (E), Chicago
Scott Lynch-Giddings (DJG), 9 August 2013; 11 August 2013 (E), Chicago
Harvey Lyon (DJG), 26 June 2013, Beverly Shores, IN (T)
Kelly Jo MacArthur (DJG), 6 January 2012, Seattle
Kenneth Mack (DJG), 21 January 2010, Washington, DC
Kenneth Mack (Jim Gilmore), 13 June 2012, Cambridge, MA (Frontline)
Lisa Madigan (DJG), 1 June 2010, Chicago
Michael J. Madigan (Robert V. Remini), 10 August 2009, Chicago (UIC)
Mahboob “Beenu” Mahmood (DJG), 9 August 2010 (T); 24 and 26 September 2011 (E), Islamabad, Pakistan, and Singapore
Robert Mahnke (DJG), 12 March 2014, San Jose, CA (T)
Leo Mahon (Greg Sakowicz), 25 January 2008, Chicago (Catholic Community of Faith)
Leo Mahon (DJG), 22 May 2010, Chicago
Darwin Malloy (DJG), 9 December 2011, San Jose, CA
Ed Maloney (DJG), 26 June 2013, Chicago (T)
Steven Mange (DJG), 18 November 2010, Springfield, IL
Dave Manning (DJG), 16 November 2010, Springfield, IL
Samuel Yaw “Kofi” Manu (DJG), 24 March 2009, Cincinnati, OH (T)
Adelmo Marchiori (DJG), 13 March 2013, Edwardsville, IL (T)
Michael Marrs (DJG), 12 July 2012; 13 July 2012 (E), Chicago
Lawrence Marshall (DJG), 27 October 2011, Chicago (E)
Karla Martin (DJG), 25 April 2013, San Francisco
R. Eden Martin (DJG), 2 July 2013, Chicago
Iris Martinez (DJG), 12 May 2011, Springfield, IL
Luz Martinez (DJG), 2 and 4 February 2013, Quezon City, Philippines (E)
Peter Martinez (DJG), 10 May 2010, Chicago
Mark S. Martins (DJG), 22 February 2013, Alexandria, VA (T)
Connie Martinson (Robert Draper), 2009, Los Angeles
Paul Massari (DJG), 14 March 2014, Cambridge, MA (T)
Chris Mather (DJG), 21 June 2013, Chicago

Ian Mattoch (DJG), 8 December 2011 (E); 21 December 2011, Honolulu

Darin McAtee (DJG), 14 October 2010, New York, NY

Amy (Christian) McCormick (DJG), 12 February 2013 (E); 16 February 2013 (T), East Lansing, MI

Rod McCulloch (DJG), 2 July 2013, Chicago

Nancy McCullough (DJG), 6 January 2010, Los Angeles (T)

Michael McGann (DJG), 24 June 2013, Pittsfield, IL (T)

John McKnight (DJG), 5 August 1983, 20 February 1984; 5 April 2009 (T); 14 November 2010, Evanston, IL

Chris McLachlin (DJG), 23 December 2011, Honolulu

Joe McLean (DJG), 2 (2) October 2013 (E); 10 October 2013; 11 October 2013 (E), Washington, DC

William McNary (DJG), 17 November 2010, Springfield, IL

Alex McNear (DJG), 19 May 2010, 30 (2) July 2010 (E); 12 October 2010; 13 October 2010 (E); 17 September 2011; 18 November 2011 (E); 20 November 2011 (T); 20 and 21 November 2011, 27 January 2012, 8 April 2012, 1 May 2012, 19 and 20 June 2012 (E), 17 (T), 20 and 30 November 2014, 1 and 2 December 2014 (E), Sag Harbor and New York, NY

James Meeks (David Axelrod), 30 September 2003, Chicago (JKP)

Salil Mehra (DJG), 18 March 2014, Philadelphia (T)

David Melton (DJG), 26 March 2014, Chicago (T)

David Mendell (Jim Gilmore), 19 June 2008, Chicago (Frontline)

Peggy Mendelow (DJG), 20 March 2013, New York, NY (T)

Chris Meyer (DJG), 25 January 2010, Yonkers, NY

Rob Mier (Betty Brown-Chappell), 17 November 1989, Chicago (BBCP)

Margot Mifflin (DJG), 18, 19 (4), and 20 January 2010, 7 February 2010, 26 September 2010 (E); 16 September 2011; 18 September 2011, 5, 7 and 8 (2) May 2012, 29 June 2012, 28 (2) and 29 September 2012, 10, 11, and 12 January 2013, 2 April 2013, 22 (3) November 2014, 12 (2) and 13 (2) December 2016 (E), New York, NY

Abner Mikva (Stephen J. Pollak), 23 May 1996–19 May 1999, Washington, DC (DCCHS.org)

Abner Mikva (Harry Kreisler), 12 April 1999, Berkeley, CA (IIS, UCB)

Abner Mikva (DJG), 18 September 2009, Chicago

Abner Mikva (Mark DePue), 22 October 2014, Chicago (ALPL)

Amanda Fuchs Miller (DJG), 11 October 2013, Washington, DC

Arnie Miller (DJG), 2 February 2010; 2 February 2010 (E), Newton, MA

Cynthia K. Miller (DJG), 15 September 2009, Chicago

John Millner (DJG), 11 May 2011, Springfield, IL

Linda Mills (DJG), 28 December 2013 (E); 30 December 2013 (T), Chicago

Judson Miner (Betty Brown-Chappell), 22 February 1990, Chicago (BBCP)

Judson Miner (DJG), 5 May 2009; 18 April 2014 (E), Chicago

Chin See Ming (DJG), 5 May 2010, Portland, OR

Martha Minow (Liza Mundy), 3 May 2007, Cambridge, MA (T) (LMP).

Martha Minow (DJG), 12 January 2010 (E); 2 February 2010, Cambridge, MA

Newton Minow (Jim Gilmore), 19 June 2008, Chicago (Frontline)

Newton Minow (DJG), 12 January 2010, Chicago
Ned Mitchell (DJG), 14 March 2013, Sesser, IL (T)
Rob Mitchell (DJG), 11 July 2015, Concord, MA (T)
Kari Moe (Betty Brown-Chappell), 3 January 1990, Chicago (BBCP)
Robert Molaro (DJG), 10 May 2011, Springfield, IL
Jon Molot (DJG), 27 April 2011, Washington, DC
Mary Ellen Montes (DJG), 20 May 2010, "Arthurville, IL"
Alex Montgomery (DJG), 12 March 2004, Chicago (T)
James Montgomery (David Axelrod), 28 January 2004, Chicago (JKP and TPP)
Don Moore (DJG), 1 June 2010, Chicago
Eric Moore (DJG), 6 April 2009; 29 July 2009 (T); 30 March 2010 (E), Los Angeles
Eric Moore (Jim Gilmore), 29 June 2012, Los Angeles (Frontline)
Robert Moriarty (DJG), 19 May 2010, Chicago
John Morillo (DJG), 31 August 2010 (E); 22 October 2010; 28 October 2010 (E), Raleigh, NC
Eugene Morris (DJG), 13 August 2013, Chicago (T)
Jerry Morrison (DJG), 16 May 2011, Chicago
Bill Moyers (DJG), 22 January 2010, New York, NY (E)
Tom Moyes (DJG), 8 January 2010, Temecula, CA (T)
J. Herbert Muhammad (Sam Pollard), 4 June 1989, Chicago (Blackside)
Katrina (Emmons) Mulligan (DJG), 21 July 2013, Alexandria, VA
Phil Mullins (DJG), 10 September 2009, Chicago
George Munoz (DJG), 18 February 2013, Arlington, VA (E)
Glee Murray (DJG), 6 October 2014, Washington, DC (T)
Judith Myers (DJG), 14 March 2013, Danville, IL (T)
Verna Myers (DJG), 23 November 2010, Cambridge, MA
David Nahmias (DJG), 9 December 2010, Atlanta (T)
David Narefsky (DJG), 24 March 2014, Chicago (T)
Greg Naylor (DJG), 9 April 2014, Philadelphia (T)
Kim (Jones) Nelson (DJG), 15 March 2013, Minneapolis (T)
Marty Nesbitt (Robert Draper), 2009, Chicago
Felton Newell (DJG), 18 March 2014, Los Angeles (T)
Eric Newhall (DJG), 8 April 2009, Los Angeles
Sandy Newman (DJG), 22 January 2010, Washington, DC
John Nicolay (DJG), 8 November 2011, Springfield, IL
Bonnie Nitsche (DJG), 13 January 2010, Mokena, IL
Walter Nitsche (DJG), 13 January 2010, Mokena, IL
Lars Noah (DJG), 13 February 2013, Gainesville, FL (E)
Jane (Catler) Nober (DJG), 20 February 2013, Ft. Worth, TX (T)
Sean Noble (DJG), 1 July 2013, Chicago
Duane Noland (DJG), 18 March 2014, Blue Mound, IL (T)
Laura (Mullens) Nolen (DJG), 1 May 2014, Houston, TX (T)

Rolf Nordahl (DJG), 18 December 2011, Honolulu
Cynthia Norris (DJG), 1 April 2014, Silver Spring, MD (T)
Trent Norris (DJG), 2 January 2013, San Francisco
Courtney Nottage (DJG), 17 November 2010, Springfield, IL
Patricia Novick (DJG), 6 May 2011, Chicago
Juleigh Nowinski (DJG), 8 August 2013, Chicago
Barack Obama (Zeke Gonzalez), 27 October 1993, Chicago (Becoming Barack: Evolution of a Leader)
Barack Obama (Bill Thompson), 9 August 1995, Washington, DC (eyeonbooks.com) Barack Obama (Connie Martinson), 11 August 1995, Van Nuys, CA (Connie Martinson Talks Books, United Artists Cable Television)
Barack Obama (Marc Strassman), 11 August 1995, Studio City, CA (Book Channel) Barack Obama (Jack Van Der Slik), 3 December 1998, Springfield, IL (Inside Illinois Government, University of Illinois at Springfield)
Barack Obama (Edward McClelland), 4 February 2000, Chicago
Barack Obama, (Julieanna Richardson), 16 February 2001, Chicago (TheHistoryMakers.com)
Barack Obama (Jeff Berkowitz), 27 June 2002, 25 November 2002, 24 July 2003, and 18 July 2004, Chicago (Public Affairs with Jeff Berkowitz)
Barack Obama (Chinta Strausberg), 1 July 2002, Chicago (The Strausberg Report)
Barack Obama (Bruce Dumont), 17 August 2003, Chicago (Beyond the Beltway, MBC)
Barack Obama (David Axelrod), 2 October 2003, Chicago (JKP)
Barack Obama (Terry Martin), 6 November 2003, Springfield, IL (IllinoisChannel.org)
Barack Obama (David Axelrod), 7 February 2004, Chicago (JKP and TPP)
Barack Obama (Cathleen Falsani), 27 March 2004, Chicago (Beliefnet.com)
Barack Obama (Dave Davies), 10 August 2004, Philadelphia (Fresh Air, NPR, 12 August 2004)
Barack Obama (Jacob Weisberg), 29 June 2006, Washington, DC
Barack Obama (Anthony Mason), 17 August 2011, Washington, DC (CBSNews.com)
Barack Obama (David Blum), 30 July 2013, Chattanooga, TN (Amazon.com)
Michelle Obama (John Kupper), 6 February 2004, Chicago (JKP)
Michelle Obama (Jacob Weisberg), July 2006, Chicago (T)
Michelle Obama (Robert Draper), 2009, Washington, DC
Patrick O'Brien (DJG), 9 December 2011, Redwood Shores, CA
Maurice Obstfeld (DJG), 19 March 2015 and 4 April 2015, Washington, DC (E)
Margaret O'Dell (DJG), 28 June 2013, Chicago
Nia Odeoti-Hassan (DJG), 12 May 2011, Springfield, IL
Sandy O'Donnell (DJG), 27 April 2009 (2), Chicago (E)
Ursula Dudley Oglesby (DJG), 22 October 2010, High Point, NC
Chad Oldfather (DJG), 26 May 2010; 27 May 2010 (E), Chicago
Zeituni Onyango (DJG), 29 April 2010; 30 June 2011, 7 and 20 July 2011, 3 September 2011, 5 and 6
February 2012, 17 April 2012, 15, 18, 22, and 27 May 2012, 8 and 19 June 2012 (E), South Boston
Bruce Orenstein (DJG), 13 May 2010; 10 March 2015 (T), Chicago and Durham, NC
Peter Osnos (Robert Draper), 2009, New York, NY

Peter Osnos (DJG), 2 June 2015, New York, NY (E)

Andrea Dolan Owen (DJG), 12 May 2010 (E); 12 May 2010 (T), Coto de Caza, CA

John Owens (DJG), 30 April 2009; 7 December 2009 (E); 1 June 2010; 24 August 2010 (E), Chicago

Martha Pacold (DJG), 19 March 2014, Chicago (T)

Kaleshia Page (DJG), 10 November 2010, Chicago

Lisa Paget-Kahn (DJG), 26 February 2013, Chappaqua, NY (T)

Alice Palmer (Julieanna Richardson), 9 June 2000, Chicago (TheHistoryMakers.com)

Alice Palmer (Kate McAuliff), 29 March 2010, Chicago (CAAMC, Columbia College)

Alice Palmer (DJG), 17 May 2011, Chicago

Lu Palmer (Davis Lacy Jr.), 14 April 1989, Chicago (Blackside)

Michael Parham (DJG), 6 January 2012, Seattle

Kathleen Parker (DJG), 24 July 2012, Northbrook, IL

Richard Parker (DJG), 4 March 2013, Little Compton, RI (T)

John Parry (DJG), 6 May 2010; 6 and 10 May 2010 (E), Portland, OR

Tyrone Partee (DJG), 4 November 2011, Hawthorne, CA (T)

Keith Patchel (DJG), 4 September 2013; 5 September 2013 (E), New York, NY

Carl Patten (DJG), 5 March 2014, Jacksonville, FL (T)

Ann Patty (DJG), 10 March 2014, Rhinebeck, NY (T)

Charles T. Payne (DJG), 7 June 2011, Chicago

Richard A. Pearson (DJG), 7 November 2011, Springfield, IL

Eric Pelander (DJG), 8 February 2013, Cleveland, OH (T)

Josh Pemstein (DJG), 7 March 2014, Boston (T)

Aurie Pennick (DJG), 3 May 2010 (E); 10 May 2010, Chicago

Deno Perdiou (DJG), 30 April 2014, Springfield, IL (T)

Bill Perkins (DJG), 19 May 2010, Chicago

Stephen Perkins (DJG), 2 May 2011, Chicago

Barry Perlstein (DJG), 12 December 2011, Santa Monica, CA

Tom Perrelli (DJG), 27 April 2011, Washington, DC

Howard Peters (Mark DePue), 25 November 2009, Springfield, IL (ALPL)

Howard Peters (DJG), 28 May 2010, Springfield, IL

Keith M. Peterson (DJG), 2 May 2010, Denver, CO

Tony Peterson (DJG), 27 October 2010, Nashville, TN

William "Bill" Peterson (DJG), 18 March 2014, Buffalo Grove, IL (T)

Ed Petka (DJG), 12 November 2011, Chicago

Alice Peurala (Elizabeth Balanoff), 30 September 1977, Chicago (Roosevelt University Labor Oral History Project)

Michael Pflieger (David Axelrod), 28 January 2004, Chicago (TPP)

Michael Pflieger (DJG), 9 November 2010, Chicago

Earl Martin Phalen (DJG), 18 April 2011, Boston

James "Pate" Philip (DJG), 12 November 2011, Chicago

James "Pate" Philip (Mark DePue), 11 July 2012, Springfield, IL (ALPA)

Terrie Pickerill (DJG), 14 April 2014, Chicago (T)
Greg Pierce (DJG), 17 April 2013, Chicago (E)
Matt Piers (Betty Brown-Chappell), 1 November 1989, Chicago (BBCP)
Matt Piers (DJG), 11 July 2012, Chicago
Bernard Pietrzak (DJG), 24 July 2012, Barrington, IL
Nat Piggee (DJG), 25 March 2014 (T); 27 March 2014 (E), Chicago
Richard Pildes (DJG), 26 January 2010, New York, NY
Alberta Pillows (DJG), 17 September 2009, Chicago (T)
Eugene Pincham (David Axelrod), 28 January 2004, Chicago, IL (TPP)
Steuart Pittman (DJG), 6 October 2011, Davidsonville, MD (T)
Gregory L. Poe (DJG), 5 March 2013 (T); 15 April 2013 (E), Washington, DC
Richard Poethig (DJG), 11 November 2010, Chicago
Jan Poledziewski (DJG), 4 September 2009 (E); 8 September 2009 (T); 9 (2) September 2009, 3 and 5
November 2009 (E), Munster, IN Wendy Pollack (DJG), 2 May 2014, Chicago (T)
Jef Pollock (DJG), 3 September 2013, New York, NY
Rachael Pontikes (DJG), 10 March 2014, Chicago (T)
Julian Posada (DJG), 12 March 2013, Chicago
Jeremiah Posedel (DJG), 3 May 2011, Chicago
Glenn Poshard (DJG), 16 November 2010, Springfield, IL
Eric Posner (DJG), 12 May 2010, Chicago
Alison Powell (DJG), 14 January 2010, Country Club Hills, IL
Ernest Powell Jr. (DJG), 14 January 2010, Country Club Hills, IL
Shirley Powell (DJG), 14 January 2010, Country Club Hills, IL
Steve Preckwinkle (DJG), 7 November 2011, Springfield, IL
Toni Preckwinkle (DJG), 5 May 2009, Chicago
Alonzo C. Pruitt (DJG), 10 and 13 (2) March 2014, Richmond, VA (E)
Preston Pugh (DJG), 1 July 2013, Chicago
Stephen Pugh (DJG), 1 July 2013
Paula Purdue (DJG), 9 May 2011, Springfield, IL
Sue Purrington (DJG), 16 August 2013, Chicago (T)
Jonathan Putnam (DJG), 11 March 2014, Larchmont, NY (T)
Sheila Quinlan (DJG), 6 December 2011, San Francisco (T)
Dan Rabinovitz (DJG), 3 February 2010; 11 August 2010, 10 August 2014, 5 April 2015 (E), Cambridge, MA
Al Raby (DJG), 8 March 1984, Washington, DC
Christine Radogno (DJG), 12 May 2011, Springfield, IL
Mike Ragen (DJG), 6 March 2014 (E); 11 March 2014 (T), Springfield, IL
Edith Ramirez (DJG), 26 April 2011, Washington, DC
Jorge Ramirez (DJG), 15 February 2013, Lubbock, TX (T)
Gregory J. Ramos (DJG), 30 April 2010, Denver, CO

Michael J. Ramos (DJG), 30 April 2010, Denver, CO
Jane Ramsey (DJG), 25 July 2012, Chicago
Linda Randle (DJG), 28 April 2009, Chicago
Barbara Ransby (DJG), 8 December 2014, Chicago (E)
Susan Shadow Ransone (DJG), 18 March 2014, 7 April 2014 (T); 8 April 2014 (E), Tampa, FL
Radhika Rao (DJG), 25 April 2013, San Francisco Miles Rapoport (DJG), 14 October 2010, New York, NY
Geoffrey Rapp (DJG), 9 September 2013, Toledo, OH (E)
Morris Ratner (DJG), 25 April 2013, San Francisco
Steve Rauschenberger (DJG), 16 May 2011, Elgin, IL
Chuck Rawlings (DJG), 31 August 2010, San Jose, CA (E)
Jim Rea (DJG), 15 March 2013, Christopher, IL (T)
Mark Real (DJG), 22 August 2013, Columbus, OH
Adolph Reed Jr. (DJG), 2 February 2009, Philadelphia (E)
Jim Reed (DJG), 7 November 2011, Springfield, IL
Thomas Reed (DJG), 23 July 2013, Washington, DC
Alan Reger (DJG), 13 November 2015, Chantilly, VA (T)
Mitchell Reich (DJG), 18 April 2011; 20 April 2011 (E), Cambridge, MA
Jessica Reighard (Robert Draper), 2009, Baltimore, MD
Boro Reljic (DJG), 16 November 2010, Springfield, IL
Ben Reyes (DJG), 9 and 13 July 2012, Chicago (E)
Tynia Richard (DJG), 30 January 2010, Brooklyn, NY
Maury Richards (DJG), 13 January 2010; 1 April 2010 (E), Chicago
Rick Ridder (DJG), 21 April 2014, Denver, CO
Vicky Rideout (DJG), 3 December 2011, San Francisco
Dale Righter (DJG), 13 May 2011, Springfield, IL
Diane Ring (DJG), 19 April 2011, Newton, MA
Michael Risch (DJG), 2 (2) March 2014 (E), Villanova, PA
Rebecca Rivera (DJG), 24 January 2010 (E); 1 February 2010, Cambridge, MA
Charlie Robb (DJG), 14 March 2013, Menlo Park, CA (T)
Janis Robinson (DJG), 10 November 2010, Chicago
Mary Beth Roche (Robert Draper), 2009, New York, NY
Jillayne Rock (DJG), 7 November 2011, Springfield, IL
Byron Rodriguez (DJG), 6 March 2014, San Francisco, CA (T)
Gwendolyn (LaRoche) Rogers (DJG), 3 November 2010, Chicago
Joel Rogers (DJG), 16 July 2012, Madison, WI
John W. Rogers Jr. (Julieanna Richardson), 13 June and 17 July 2002, Chicago (TheHistoryMakers.com)
John W. Rogers Jr. (DJG), 7 June 2011, Chicago
Ken Rolling (DJG), 7 May 2009, 10 November 2010; 16 November 2012 (E); 21 June 2013; 11 July 2013, 2 September 2014, 28 May 2015 (E), Chicago
Katie Romich (DJG), 18 January 2011 (E); 11 March 2011 (T), Rocky River, OH

Carol Ronen (DJG), 25 May 2010, Chicago
Don Rose (DJG), 15 September 2009, Chicago
Mark Rosen (DJG), 8 November 2010, Chicago (T)
David Rosenberg (DJG), 2 February 2010, Cambridge, MA
Neal Rosenstein (DJG), 29 January 2010, New York, NY
Andrew Roth (DJG), 5 December 2011; 3, 6, and 16 May 2012, 24, 25, and 26 September 2012 (E), San Francisco
Kenneth Rothwell (DJG), 10 April 2015, Newton, MA (T)
Pete Rouse (Jim Gilmore), 11 July 2008, Washington (Frontline)
Peter J. Rubin (DJG), 26 February 2013, Boston (E)
Jean Rudd (DJG), 25 March 2009 (E); 30 April 2009 and 28 July 2012, Chicago and Beverly Shores, IN
John G. Ruggie (DJG), 18 February 2012, Cambridge, MA (E)
Jesse Ruiz (DJG), 1 June 2010, Chicago
Bobby Rush (Terry Rockefeller), 20 October 1988, Chicago (Blackside)
Bobby Rush (Julieanna Richardson), 22 August 2000 and 18 January 2001, Chicago (TheHistoryMakers.com)
Bobby Rush (Julian Bond), 15 December 2005, Washington, DC (Institute for Public History, UVA)
Thomas D. Rush (DJG), 26 March 2014, Asheboro, NC (T)
Barry Rutizer (DJG), 28 January 2010, New York, NY
Mary Ryan (DJG), 2 February 2015, Hinsdale, IL (T)
Indira Saladi (DJG), 7 March 2014, Chicago (T)
Kathy Saltmarsh (DJG), 12 May 2011, Springfield, IL
Bettylu Saltzman (DJG), 12 January 2010, Chicago
Al Sampson (Julieanna Richardson), 19 August 2002, Chicago (TheHistoryMakers.com)
Al Sampson (DJG), 13 August 2013, Chicago (T)
Martin Sandoval (DJG), 10 May 2011, Springfield, IL
Sima Sarrafan (DJG), 5 January 2012, Redmond, WA
Greg Sater (DJG), 13 February 2013, Los Angeles (T)
Chris Sautter (DJG), 21 January 2010, Washington, DC
Eugene Sawyer (Betty Brown-Chappell), 18 December 1989, Chicago (BBCP)
Jan Schakowsky (David Axelrod), 17 February 2004, Chicago (JKP and TPP)
Jan Schakowsky (DJG), 30 June 2013, Evanston, IL
Andrew Schapiro (DJG), 12 November 2010, Chicago
Scott Scheper (DJG), 14 March 2013, San Diego (T)
Lisa (Hertzer) Schertler (DJG), 13 October 2010, Washington, DC (E)
Robbin Schiff (Robert Draper), 2009, New York, NY
Derick Schilling (DJG), 4 and 8 December 2014, New York, NY (E)
Jeanne Reynolds Schmidt (DJG), 5 February 2013, Augusta, GA (T)
John Schmidt (DJG), 27 April 2009; 27 April and 1 August 2009 (2) (E), Chicago
Paul Schmitz (DJG), 13 July 2012, Milwaukee, WI
Shannon Schmoyer (DJG), 26 February 2013, San Antonio, TX (T)

Barbara Schneider (DJG), 13 February 2013, Durham, ME (T)

Jeff Schoenberg (DJG), 11 May 2011, Springfield, IL

Bernard Schoenburg (Mark DePue), 9 March 2009, Springfield, IL (ALPL)

George Schopp (DJG), 16 January 2010, Chicago, IL

Patty Schuh (DJG), 12 May 2011, Springfield, IL

Ellen Schumer (DJG), 18 September 2009, Chicago

Michael Schwartz (DJG), 22 February 2013, Denver, CO (T)

Karen Schweickart (DJG), 24 March 2014, Chicago (T)

Janny Scott (DJG), 22 September 2011, New York, NY (E)

Jason Scott (DJG), 3 September 2013, New York, NY

Rob Scott (DJG), 31 July 2015, Springfield, IL (T)

Paul Scully (DJG), 5 May 2009; 6, 22, and 25 May 2009, 5 August 2009, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 9 March 2015 (E), Chicago

Scott Sederstrom (DJG), 6 (2) December 2010, Chicago (E)

Kristen Seeger (DJG), 20 March 2014, Chicago (T)

Jay Seidenstein (DJG), 20 December 2011 (E), 21 December 2011 (T), Honolulu

Gary Seidman (DJG), 3 January 2012, Seattle

Jeffrey Selbin (DJG), 5 December 2011, Berkeley, CA

Joseph Seliga (DJG), 1 July 2013, Chicago

Orin Sellstrom (DJG), 30 April 2013, San Francisco

Claire Serdiuk (DJG), 8 November 2010, Chicago

George Shadid (DJG), 29 May 2010, Peoria, IL

Tarak Shah (DJG), 6 February 2014, Arlington, VA

Carolyn Shapiro (DJG), 9 November 2010, Chicago (T)

David Shapiro (DJG), 9 March 2014, Cambridge, MA (E)

Robert Y. Shapiro (DJG), 14 March 2013, New York, NY (T)

John Sharick (Philip Bracy), 14 April 1981, Youngstown, OH (Youngstown State University)

Al Sharp (DJG), 28 June 2013, Chicago

Michael Sheehan (DJG), 6 February 2014, Washington, DC

Susan Sher (Robert Draper), 2009, Washington, DC

Adam Sherman (DJG), 27 March 2014 (T); 28 March 2014 and 20 November 2014 (E), Tulsa, OK

Scott Sherman (DJG), 19 February 2013, Houston, TX (T)

Nancy Shier (DJG), 12 May 2011, Springfield, IL

Helen Shiller (Jacob Ligan), 22 April 2010, Chicago (CAAMC, Columbia College)

Evie Shockley (DJG), 9 March 2014 (E); 17 March 2014 (T), New Brunswick, NJ

Dan Shomon (Jen Christensen), 22 July 2008, Chicago (CNN)

Dan Shomon (DJG), 2 and 13 November 2010; 12 December 2010 (E); 30 March 2011 (T); 2 and 10 May 2011, 12 July 2012, 21 June 2013; 19 (2) January 2014, 16 (2) August 2015, 17 August 2015 (E), 17 August 2015, 30 October 2015 (T), 3 December 2015 (E), Chicago and Springfield, IL

Sohale Siddiqi (Jim Gilmore), 30 June 2012, Seattle (Frontline)

Todd Sieben (DJG), 19 March 2014, Geneseo, IL (E)

Martin Siegel (DJG), 13 March 2013, Houston, TX (T)
Scott Siff (DJG), 20 October 2010, Washington, DC
Dina Silva (DJG), 1 March 2013, Hartford, CT (T)
Ira Silverstein (DJG), 17 November 2010, Springfield, IL
Fred Simari (DJG), 11 January 2010, Oak Park, IL
Adele Simmons (DJG), 4 May 2011, Chicago.
Monice Mitchell Simms (DJG), 30 June 2015, Los Angeles (T)
Linda Simon (DJG), 6 May 2014, Chicago (E)
Sheila Simon (DJG), 11 May 2011, Springfield, IL
Linda Singer (DJG), 18 October 2010, Washington, DC
Gerry Singsen (DJG), 13 November 2009, Watertown, MA (E)
Joe Sinsheimer (DJG), 30 October 2013, Saskatoon, SK, Canada (T)
Chris Sipes (DJG), 28 April 2011, Washington, DC
Sarah Siskind (DJG), 16 July 2012, Madison, WI
Chris Slaughter (DJG), 17 and 18 November 2011, Chicago (E)
Daniel Slifkin (DJG), 20 April 2011, New York, NY
David Smail (DJG), 19 February 2013, New York, NY (T)
Callie Smith (DJG), 14 July 2012, Chicago (E)
Kenny Smith (DJG), 24 October 2010, Charlotte, NC
Nathan Smith (DJG), 26 March 2014, Houston, TX (T)
Pam Smith (DJG), 21 November 2010, Chicago
Scott Smith (DJG), 5 May 2010, McMinnville, OR (T)
Tristé Lieteau Smith (DJG), 17 March 2014, Chicago (T)
Bill Snider (DJG), 23 October 2010, Greensboro, NC
Dan Sokol (DJG), 6 March 2014, Gainesville, FL (T)
Danny Solis (DJG), 26 May 2010, Chicago
Aaron Solomon (DJG), 3 March 2014, Denver, CO (E)
Donald M. Solomon (DJG), 5 April 2012, Boston (E)
Elysia Solomon (DJG), 9 and 17 March 2014, Louisville, KY (T)
Alan Solow (DJG), 21 June 2013, Chicago
Bronwen Solyom (DJG), 19 and 21 December 2011; 12 July 2015 (E), Honolulu
Garrett Solyom (DJG), 19 and 21 December 2011, Honolulu
Unmi Song (DJG), 1 July 2013, Chicago
Whitman Soule (DJG), 24 July 2012, Evanston, IL
Richard Speicher (Philip Bracy), 31 March 1981, Youngstown, OH (Youngstown State University)
David Spiegel (DJG), 23 June 2013, Chicago
Jennifer Amdur Spitz (DJG), 1 November 2010, Chicago
Bruce Spiva (DJG), 18 October 2010, Washington, DC
Howard Stanback (Betty Brown-Chappel), 31 October and 20 November 1989, Chicago (BBCP)
Howard Stanback (DJG), 5 November 2010 (T); 9 November 2010 (E), Hedgesville, WV
David Starrett (DJG), 2 February 2013, Springfield, IL (T)

Jeff Stauter (DJG), 14 March 2013, Dixon, IL (T)
Richard Steele (DJG), 1 November 2011, Chicago (E)
Peter Steffen (DJG), 11 March 2014 (E); 12 March 2004 (T), Chicago
Kathryn Stell (DJG), 19 April 2014, Chicago (T)
Bill Stenzel (DJG), 29 April 2009; 30 November 2011 (E), Oak Lawn, IL
Judy Stevens (DJG), 25 July 2013, Washington, DC
Ryan Stoll (DJG), 12 July 2012, Chicago
Adam Stolorow (DJG), 4 September 2013, New York, NY
Geoffrey Stone (DJG), 15 January 2010, Chicago
Dave Stover (DJG), 7 March 2014, Springfield, IL (T)
Ron Stradt (DJG), 28 July 2015, Springfield, IL (E)
Chinta Strausberg (DJG), 14 March 2013, Chicago
David Strauss (DJG), 27 March 2014, Chicago (T)
Paul Strauss (DJG), 15 January 2010, Chicago
Aletha Strong (Gibson) (DJG), 30 October 2010, New Orleans
Aleeza Strubel (DJG), 15 March 2014, Chicago (T)
Sarah (Eaton) Stuart (DJG), 26 February 2013, Canton, MA (T)
Eva Sturgies (DJG), 17 September 2009, Chicago
Stephen Subrin (DJG), 20 March 2015, Boston (E)
Larry Suffredin (DJG), 22 June 2013, Evanston, IL Sung-Hee Suh (DJG), 21 March 2014, New York, NY (T)
Dave Sullivan (DJG), 18 November 2010, 9 November 2011, Springfield, IL
Greg Sullivan (DJG), 7 November 2011, Springfield, IL
Heather Sullivan (DJG), 9 September 2014, Kittery Point, ME (T)
John Sullivan (DJG), 12 May 2011, Springfield, IL
Julianne Alfred Sullivan (DJG), 24 March 2014, Portland, ME (T)
Kenneth Sulzer (DJG), 6 January 2010, Los Angeles
Ron Sunshine (DJG), 5 February 2013 (E); 6 February 2013 (T), Allentown, PA
Chuck Supple (DJG), 11 March 2014, Sacramento (T)
Pam Sutherland (DJG), 16 November 2010, Springfield, IL
Nathan Sutton (DJG), 20 March 2014, Washington, DC (T)
Dave Syverson (DJG), 16 November 2010, Springfield, IL
Madeline Talbott (DJG), 7 May 2011, Chicago
Nate Tamarin (DJG), 24 July 2013, Washington, DC
Larry Tavares (DJG), 20 December 2011, Honolulu
Kerry Taylor (DJG), 21 May and 13 June 2009, Charleston, SC (E)
Thom Thacker (DJG), 10 August 2010, Sleepy Hollow, NY (E)
Regina (Foran) Thibeau (DJG), 13 March 2013, Libertyville, IL (T)
Capril Bonner Thomas (Robert Draper), 2009, Los Angeles
Liisa M. Thomas (DJG), 19 March 2014, Chicago (T)
Rosa Thomas (DJG), 20 May 2010, Hobart, IN

Darrel Thompson (DJG), 15 December 2015, Washington, DC (T)

Kevin Thompson (DJG), 1 January 2012, Seattle

Laura Tilly (DJG), 9 September 2009, Chicago

Narankiri Tith (DJG), 17 and 23 January 2012, 23 October 2014, Washington, DC (E)

Anne S. Toker (DJG), 13 October 2010, New York, NY

Laurie Tom (DJG), 20 December 2011 (E); 22 December 2011, Honolulu

Tom Topolinski (DJG), 2 January 2012; 11 March 2012 and 18, 19 and 20 November 2014 (E), Everett, WA

Tom Topolinski (Jim Gilmore), 30 June 2012, Everett, WA (Frontline)

Gina Torielli (DJG), 15 February 2013 (T); 15, 18 (2), 19, and 22 February 2013, 4 March 2013 (E), Lansing, MI

Bob Torrey (DJG), 20 December 2011, Honolulu (T)

R. Kent Torrey (DJG), 16 February 2013, Carmel, CA (T)

Andrew Trask (DJG), 21 and 22 May 2014, London, UK (E)

Carole Travis (DJG), 28 April 2013; 29 April 2013 (E), Pleasant Hill, CA

Laurence H. Tribe (DJG), 18 April 2011, Cambridge, MA

Laurence H. Tribe (Jim Gilmore), 12 June 2012, Cambridge, MA (Frontline)

Donne Trotter (DJG), 11 November 2010, Chicago

David Troutt (DJG), 27 January 2010, Newark, NJ

Jennifer (Radding) Gardner Trulson (DJG), 13 February 2013, New York, NY (T)

Stacy Monahan Tucker (DJG), 3 (2) March 2014, Redwood City, CA (E)

Arthur Turner (Julieanna Richardson), 9 June 2000, Chicago (TheHistoryMakers.com)

Philip Turner (DJG), 15 (2) June 2015, New York, NY (E)

Scott Turow (Robert Draper), 2009, Evanston, IL

Scott Turow (DJG), 1 July 2013, Evanston, IL

Kevin Tyson (DJG) 4 November 2010 (E), 8 November 2010, Chicago

Howard Ullman (DJG), 30 April 2013, San Francisco

Roberto Mangabeira Unger (David Remnick), 1 and 6 March 2009, Cambridge, MA (E)

Roberto Mangabeira Unger (DJG), 2 and 3 February 2010, Cambridge, MA

Amiekoleh (Kim Kimbrew) Usafi (DJG), 6 January 2010, Los Angeles

Todd Vandermyde (DJG), 31 October 2011 (E); 7 November 2011, Springfield, IL

John (Doyle) Van Fossen (DJG), 19 and 20 February 2013, 26 September 2014, Naples, ID (E)

Donna Van Zanten (DJG), 14 September 2009, Chicago

Tony Van Zanten (DJG), 14 September 2009, Chicago

Andrew "Pete" Vayda (DJG), 6 March 2015 (E), 8 March 2015 (T), 8 March 2015 (E), New York, NY

Brenda Vinson (DJG), 13 October 2010, New York, NY (T)

Louis Viverito (DJG), 18 November 2010, Springfield, IL

Andrew Walder (DJG), 4 (2) March 2013, Palo Alto, CA (E)

Isabella Waller (DJG), 17 September 2009, Chicago

Larry M. Walsh (DJG), 21 May 2010, Joliet, IL

Terry Walsh (DJG), 7 August 2013, Evanston, IL

Tom Walsh (DJG), 17 November 2010, Springfield, IL
Pauline Wan (DJG), 4 December 2011, Saratoga, CA
Ty Wansley (DJG), 23 September 2014, Chicago (T)
Mark Warnick (DJG), 17 March 2014, Seattle (T)
Mark Warnsing (DJG), 13 May 2011, Springfield, IL
Kenneth Warren (DJG), 28 September 2011, Chicago (E)
Laura Washington (DJG), 12 January 2010, Chicago
Tom Wathen (DJG), 19 October 2010, Washington, DC.
Frank Watson (DJG), 9 November 2011, Springfield, IL
Frank Watson (Mark DePue), 10 October 2012, 8 and 13 May 2013, Springfield, IL (ALPA)
Kevin J. Watson (DJG), 1 June 2010, Chicago
Dawna Weatherly-Williams (DJG), 30 October 2014, Honolulu (T)
Shelley Marks Weathers (DJG), 13 February 2013, Houston, TX (T)
Lori-Christina Webb (DJG), 18 October 2010, Rockville, MD
Brad Weber (DJG), 17 May 2010, Los Angeles (E)
Rebecca Weber (DJG), 29 January 2010, New York, NY
John Webster (DJG), 30 November 2011, Chicago (T)
Wayne P. Weddington III (DJG), 25 March 2014, New York, NY (T)
Wayne Weightman (DJG), 13 February 2013 (E), 2 July 2015 (T), Phnom Penh, Cambodia, and Richmond, VA
Michael Weinberger (DJG), 13 October 2010, New York, NY
David Weisbaum (DJG), 11 April 2014, Springfield, IL (T)
Pat Welch (DJG), 11 May 2011, Springfield, IL
Randy Wells (DJG), 12 May 2011, Springfield, IL
G. Christopher Welton (DJG), 19 May 2014 (E); 26 May 2014, Rueil Malmaison, France
Ann West (DJG), 6 December 2012, Sydney, NSW, Australia
Robin West (DJG), 17 October 2010, Princeton, NJ
Tommy West (DJG), 16 January 2010, Chicago
Stephanie (Fulks) Westerman (DJG), 18 February 2013, Buffalo, NY (T)
Wayne Whalen (DJG), 12 July 2012, Chicago
Eric Whitaker (Robert Draper), 2009, Chicago
Gordon Whitman (DJG), 19 and 20 October 2010, Washington, DC
Sarah Leah Whitson (DJG), 18 February 2013, Brooklyn, NY (T)
Brad Wiegmann (DJG), 26 April 2011, Washington, DC
Don Wiener (DJG), 28 and 29 (2) May 2013 (E); 29 May 2013 (T); 30 (2) and 31 (2) May 2013, 2 and 11 (2) June 2013, 20 July 2013, 27 October 2013 (E), Madison, WI
David Wilhelm (DJG), 23 August 2013, Gahanna, OH
David Wilkins (DJG), 16 November 2010, Cambridge, MA (E)
Marni Willenson (DJG), 8 November 2010, Chicago
Grant Williams (DJG), 24 March 2014, St. Louis, MO (T)
Michael Williams (DJG), 12 February 2013 (T); 13 February 2013 (E), Geneva, Switzerland

Paul Williams (DJG), 14 January 2010, Chicago
Richard “Rick” Williams (DJG), 14 September 2009, Chicago
Vince Williams (DJG), 20 November 2010, Chicago
Alec Williamson (DJG), 12 May 2010 (T); 12 May 2010 (E), Central Point, OR Audra Wilson (DJG), 2 November 2010, Chicago
Mary-Ann Wilson (DJG), 3 April 2009, Chicago
F. Scott Winslow (DJG), 15 January 2016 (2), Chicago (E)
Ed Wojcicki (DJG), 12 May 2011, Springfield, IL
Paula Wolff (DJG), 8 November 2010, Chicago
Robert Paul Wolff (DJG), 9 April 2012, Amherst, MA (E)
Carolyn Wortham (DJG), 14 March 2013, Chicago (T)
Jeremiah A. Wright Jr. (Julieanna Richardson), 11 January 2002, Chicago (TheHistoryMakers.com)
Jeremiah A. Wright Jr. (John Kupper), 6 February 2004, Chicago (JKP)
Jeremiah A. Wright Jr. (Arlen Parsa), 24 March 2009, Chicago (CAAMC, Columbia College)
Jeremiah A. Wright Jr. (DJG), 3 November 2010; 4, 5 and 8 November 2010 (E), Chicago
Jeremiah A. Wright Jr. (Ed Klein), 11 November 2011, Chicago
Timothy W. Wright III (Jonathan Vogel), 25 November 2009, Chicago (CAAMC, Columbia College)
Timothy W. Wright III (DJG), 18 May 2010, Chicago
Addie L. Wyatt (Elizabeth Balanoff), 16 March 1977, Chicago (Roosevelt University Labor Oral History Project)
Addie L. Wyatt (Joan McGann Morris), 14 December 2002, Chicago (Working Women’s History Project)
Alicia (Rubin) Yamin (DJG), 21 February 2013, Dar Es Salaam, Tanzania (T)
Annette Yee (DJG), 19 February 2013 (E); 22 February 2013 (T), Carmel, CA
Jonathan Yi (DJG), 11 March 2004, Atlanta (T)
Quentin Young (DJG), 11 November 2010, Chicago
Mary Yu (DJG), 6 January 2012, Seattle
Pake Zane (DJG), 17 December 2011 (E); 20 December 2011, Honolulu
Jonathan Zimmerman (DJG), 28 February 2013, Narberth, PA (T)
Joseph H. Zwicker (DJG), 31 January 2010, Boston (E)

NOTES

---

CHAPTER ONE: THE END OF THE WORLD AS THEY KNEW IT

1. This account of Wisconsin Steel's downfall draws from scores of sources, some of which contradict others regarding particular details and timing. As a general rule, more contemporaneous accounts are relied upon more than subsequent recollections years later. The three best sources for Frank Lumpkin's experiences on March 28 are Larry Galica, "Wis. Workers Mark Closing," DC, 29 March 1984, p. A1; Bill Gleason, "Steelyard Blues," CT Magazine, 13 June 1982, pp. 13–21; and Michael Flannery, "Plant Closing Wrecks Plans," CST, 25 May 1980, p. 66. Barber Tony Mastronardi is quoted in C. D. Matthews, "Stream of Customers Now Only a Trickle," DC, 28 March 1985, p. A5. Other sources on Frank and Bea Lumpkin are copious, including Frank Lumpkin, Keep Strong, August 1980, p. 25, Richard Poethig Papers [RPP] Box 25; Lisa Newman, "So. Chicago's Man of Steel," DC, 11 April 1988, p. 1; Studs Terkel, "I'm Saying Racism Is Unnatural," The Nation, 6 April 1992, pp. 448–52 (an interview with Frank which later appeared in Terkel's book Race); Laurent Belsie, "Southeast Chicago," CSM, 20 October 1993, p. 10; R. C. Longworth, "Man of Steel—Frank Lumpkin's Boxing Days Are Over, but There's Plenty of Fight—and Heart—Left in Him," CT, 31 May 1995, p. T1; Cheryl Ross, "Love Is a Battlefield," CR, 4 May 2000; Beatrice Lumpkin's two books, "Always Bring a Crowd!"—The Story of Frank Lumpkin, Steelworker (International Publishers, 1999) and Joy in the Struggle: My Life and Love (International Publishers, 2013); and memorial items from the time of Frank's death at age ninety-three: Trevor Jensen, "Frank Lumpkin, 1916–2010, Fought for Rights of Workers at Wisconsin Steel," CT, 6 March 2010; Phil Ponce on Chicago Tonight, WTTW, 9 March 2010; and John Bachtell, "Frank Lumpkin, 'Saint of Chicago,' Dies at 93," People's World, 10 March 2010, which acknowledges that Frank was "a longtime member of the CPUSA's National Committee."

Sources on the history of the Southeast Side's neighborhoods and the history of the steel industry there are copious, too, but anyone seeking a rich sense of that history must begin with Rod Sellers and Dominic A. Pacyga, Chicago's Southeast Side (Arcadia Publishing, 1998). Also crucial are John Conroy's impressively rich, five-part series of articles, all titled "Mill Town," CM, November 1976, pp. 164–82, December 1976, pp. 162–63, 210–19, 304, January 1977, pp. 114–25, 189, February 1977, pp. 106–15, 185, and March 1977, pp. 114–15, 132–46; the late Jerry Sullivan's beautifully written "Paradise Doomed," CM, August 1985, pp. 142–56, 160–61; Peter T. Alter, "Mexicans and Serbs in Southeast Chicago: Racial Group Formation During the Twentieth Century," Journal of the Illinois State Historical Society 94 (Winter 2001–2002): 403–19; and David Bensman, "South Deering," Encyclopedia of Chicago, 2004. Essential books include Paul A. Tiffany, The Decline of American Steel: How Management, Labor, and Government Went Wrong (Oxford University Press, 1988); William Kornblum, Blue Collar Community (University of Chicago Press, 1974); Richard M. Dorson, Land of the Millrats (Harvard University Press, 1981), a wonderful folklore ethnography of Indiana's steel towns and plants; and, first and foremost, David Bensman and Roberta Lynch's powerful and pioneering Rusted Dreams: Hard Times in a Steel Community (McGraw-Hill, 1987), esp. p. 69 (Wisconsin's shutdown "was the beginning of the end of an era"). See also Lance Trusty, "End of an Era: The 1980s in the Calumet," in James B. Lane, ed., “Life in the Calumet Region During the 1980s,” Steel Shavings 21 (1992), pp. 1ff. On Edward R. Vrdolyak’s career up through the mid-1980s, the essential sources are the November 1976, February 1977, and March 1977 installments of John Conroy’s “Mill Town” articles, Robert J. McClory, “Is There Political Gold in Vrdolyak?,” II, October 1979, pp. 9–12, and David L. Protes, “The Vrdolyak Chronicles,” CL, June 1988, pp. 1, 16–20; see also Michael Miner, “Fast Eddie’s Editor: An Unabashed Confession,” CR, 16 June 1988.

The crucial, prescient story predicting Wisconsin’s closing was Tom O’Boyle, “Steel Firm Faces Bankruptcy, Crippled by Harvester Strike,” CCB, 10 March 1980, pp. 1, 28. Richard Longworth’s subsequent pair of stories, “Wisconsin Steel Scrambles for Financial Aid to Stay Alive,” CT, 17 March 1980, p. D10, and “Wisconsin Steel Seeks New Funds to Avoid Bankruptcy,” CT, 27 March 1980, p. C7, are likewise essential, as are Charles Storch and Pam Sebastian, “Wisconsin Steel Fights to Survive,” CT, 6 April 1980, p. D5; R. C. Longworth, “Steel Union Understated Dues Income in Reports to U.S.,” CT, 27 April 1980, p. 6; R. C. Longworth, “Shutdown of Bankrupt Steel Mill Leaves U.S. Creditors Holding Bag,” CT, 4 May 1980, p. M3; and Longworth’s invaluable later essay, “Winners and Losers in Steel Firm Collapse,” CT, 8 June 1980, pp. M1–2.

Essential sources for understanding Envirodyne’s acquisition of Wisconsin Steel from International Harvester are William Gruber, “Fearless Buying: Tiny Firm Tackles Ailing Steel Outfit,” CT, 7 August 1977, pp. B1, B14; Carol J. Loomis, “A Lot of Losers at Wisconsin Steel,” Forbes, 19 May 1980, p. 94; Barbara Marsh and Sally Saville’s stunningly impressive duo of stories, “International Harvester’s Story: How a Great Company Lost Its Way,” CCB, 8 November 1982, pp. 21–43, and “A McCormick’s Mission: Revive the Sleeping Giant,” CCB, 15 November 1982, pp. 19–42; Gordon L. Clark’s extremely valuable “Piercing the Corporate Veil: The Closure of Wisconsin Steel in South Chicago,” Regional Studies 24 (October 1990): 405–20 (which observes that “Harvester sold its steel division hoping that the new owner would be held responsible in whole or in part for the pension liabilities”); Circuit Judge Walter J. Cummings Jr.’s opinion in Lumpkin v. Envirodyne Industries, 933 F. 2d 449 (7th Cir.), 17 May 1991; and David C. Ranney, “The Closing of Wisconsin Steel,” in Charles Craypo and Bruce Nissen, eds., Grand Designs: The Impact of Corporate Strategies on Workers, Unions, and Communities (ILR Press, 1993), pp. 65–91. See also John F. Wasik, “Waiting for the Brimstone,” Progressive, March 1984, pp. 28–30; Patricia Moore, “Once-Proud Harvester Plowed Deep Furrows,” CST, 2 December 1984, p. B1; James Fallows, “America’s Changing Economic Landscape,” Atlantic, March 1985, pp. 47ff. (agreeing that for Wisconsin’s workforce March 28 “was the end of the world”); Gregory D. Squires et al., Chicago: Race, Class, and the Response to Urban Decline (Temple University Press, 1987); and Judith Stein, Running Steel, Running America (University of North Carolina Press, 1998), esp. pp. 249–50.

George Harper’s recollections of March 28 appear in Bonita Brodt, “Steel Firm’s Collapse Was Quick, Painful,” CT, 21 August 1980, p. M2, and workers’ recollections of that day appear in News from Calumet Community Religious Conference Vol. 1, #1, 9 November 1980 (“We got no warning”), and “Five Years and Fighting Hard,” Labor Today, April 1985, p. 4 (FLP Box 5 Fld. 1). Contemporaneous stories include Storer Rowley, “Steel Mill Closes; 3,400 Idled,” CT, 29 March 1980, p. M2; Dave Schneiderman, “Agency That OK’d Loan to Study Plant Closing,” CT, 30 March 1980, p. 3; and John Wasik, “Wisconsin Steel Closes,” DC, 31 March 1980, p. 1. See also Maury Richards, “Wisc. Steel Bankrupt,” 1033 News & Views, April 1980, pp. 1, 3. And last, but most certainly not least, the most emotionally powerful commentary of all on March 28—and the morning of March 29—is Christine J. Walley’s account in “Deindustrializing Chicago: A Daughter’s Story,” in Hugh Gusterson and Catherine Besteman, eds., The Insecure American (University of California Press, 2010), pp. 113–39, esp. pp. 113 and 124, and Exit Zero: Family and Class in Postindustrial Chicago (University of Chicago Press, 2013), esp. pp. 1–2. Exit Zero can bring tears to your eyes each time you open it. This account benefits as well from DJG’s interviews with Alma Avalos, Tom Geoghegan, Ken Jania, and Beatrice Lumpkin.

2. Longworth, “Winners and Losers in Steel Firm Collapse,” CT, 8 June 1980, p. M2; CT, 1 April 1980, p. C6; DC, 1 April 1980, p. 1; John Wasik, “Court to Decide Wisconsin Fate,” DC, 2 April 1980, p. 1; Editorial, “Wisconsin Mess A Danger to Us All,” DC, 2 April 1980, p. 4; John Wasik, “Wisconsin Woes in Bankruptcy Court,” DC, 3 April 1980, p. 1; Wasik, “Order Loan Release to Protect Coke Ovens,” DC, 4 April 1980, p. 1; Wasik, “Wisconsin Lenders Seek Payments” and Wasik, “Layoff, Forms Mar Jim’s Easter Weekend,” DC, 5 April 1980, p. 1; Charles Storch and Pam Sebastian, “Wisconsin Steel Fights to Survive,” CT, 6 April 1980, p. D5; John Wasik, “Insurance Benefits, Certainty Elude Wisconsin Workers,” DC, 8 April 1980, p. 1; Editorial, “Save Wisconsin Bill Needs Support,” DC, 8 April 1980, p. 4. Only come spring 1981 were workers allowed in to clean out their old lockers. Lynn Emmerman, “Lives Built on Steel Rust with Idleness,” CT, 14 September 1986, p. T1.

3. John Wasik, “Wisconsin Workers Prompt Investigation into PSW Union,” DC, 17 April 1980, p. 1; Amelia Forglia, “Unemployment Compensation Wanted Now,” CT, 18 April 1980, p. D2 (letter to the editor); Leonard Roque to Dear Member, “Progressive Steel Workers Union Membership Meeting,” 18 April 1980, FLP Box 2 Fld. 4; R. C. Longworth, “Plan to Reopen Steel Firm Studied,” CT, 23 April 1980, p. C1; R. C. Longworth, “Harvester Will Pay Wisconsin Steel Benefits,” CT, 26 April 1980, p. 6; Longworth, “Steel Union Understated Dues Income in Reports to Feds,” CT, 27 April 1980, p. 6; Longworth, “Plan to Sell Steel Mill Inventory Is Approved,” CT, 29 April 1980, p. B6; Longworth, “Strike May Kill Wisconsin Steel,” CT, 2 May 1980, p. C8; Longworth, “Shutdown of Bankrupt Steel Mill Leaves U.S., Creditors Holding Bag,” CT, 4 May 1980, p. M3; Longworth, “Firm Owning Wisconsin Steel Asks $750,000 ‘to Protect’ Its Assets,” CT, 7 May 1980, p. E3; John McCarron, “Bleak Future Seen for Wisconsin Steel,” CT, 17 November 1980, p. 3.

4. DJG interviews with Tom Joyce and Dick Poethig; Richard P. Poethig, “Telling the Story: The Role of Information-Sharing in Urban and Industrial Mission,” International Review of Mission 87 (January 1998): 113–22; National Conference on Religion and Labor, 13–14 May 1980, St. Thomas More College, Covington, KY, pp. 3–5, RPP Box 20; and Chuck Rawlings e-mail to DJG.

Sources on the Youngstown shutdown and its immediate aftermath are copious, but Staughton Lynd’s excellent The Fight Against Shutdowns (Singlejack Books, 1982), Thomas G. Fuechtmann, Steeple and Stacks: Religion and Steel Crisis in Youngstown (Cambridge University Press, 1989), and Charles W. Rawlings’s own subsequent “Steel Shutdown in Youngstown: Ecumenical Response to the Opening Hand of Globalization,” Church & Society, January–February 2003, pp. 71–91, are the richest historical overviews. Also valuable are Lynd’s contemporary essay, “The Fight to Save the Steel Mills,” NYRB, 19 April 1979; Roger T. Wolcott, “The Church and Social Action,” Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion 21 (March 1982): 71–79; Terry F. Buss and F. Stevens Redburn, “Religious Leaders as Policy Advocates: The Youngstown Steel Mill Closing,” Policy Studies Journal 11 (June 1983): 640–47; and Lynd’s later article, “The Genesis of the Idea of a Community Right to Industrial Property in Youngstown and Pittsburgh,” Journal of American History 74 (December 1987): 926–58.

Charles W. Rawlings’s initial memo was “The Steel Crisis and Growing Unemployment,” 29 September 1977 (ICUIS 3700); his subsequent writings on Youngstown include “The Religious Community and Economic Justice,” in John C. Raines et al., eds., Community and Capital in Conflict: Plant Closings and Job Loss (Temple University Press, 1982), pp. 136–51; “New Challenges for the Church and Labor,” Radical Religion 5 (June 1981): 69–73; and “U.S. Steel vs. the People,” Christianity & Crisis, 29 March 1982, pp. 75–80. NCEA’s first two contributions were Gar Alperovitz, “Preliminary Observations: Youngstown, Ohio,” 9 October 1977 (ICUIS 3698), and Alperovitz and Jeff Faux, “Youngstown Lessons,” NYT, 3 November 1977, p. 25. ECMV’s “A Religious Response to the Mahoning Valley Steel Crisis,” 29 November 1977 (ICUIS 3796), is most easily available in Feuchtman, Steeple and Stacks, pp. 137–45; Alperovitz summarized his preliminary report in “The Youngstown Experience,” Challenge, July–August 1978, pp. 21–24, and his subsequent view is presented in Alperovitz and Faux, “When Steel Goes Cold,” NYT, 12 December 1979, p. A31. Three oral histories conducted by Philip Bracy in early 1981 with ECMV members—Robert Campbell, John Sharick, and Richard Speicher—are available online, and the Ohio Historical Society possesses two small collections (MSS 793 and YHC MSS 0008) of ECMV Papers.

Contemporaneous journalism includes Gene Smith, “Youngstown Steel to Pare Operations,” NYT, 20 September 1977, p. 1; William K. Stevens, “Shutdown of Steel Works Stuns Youngstown,” NYT, 21 September 1977, p. A1; Robert A. Dobkin (AP), “Steel Workers Urge U.S. Restrictions on Imports,” WP, 24 September 1977, p. D9; Agis Salpukas, “Steel Towns Hit by Layoffs Face Hard Times,” NYT, 13 October 1977, p. D1; Salpukas, “U.S. Funds Available to Reopen Plants, Steel Group Is Told,” NYT, 26 November 1977, p. 38; William H. Jones, “Steel Plant Reopening Is Possible, Report Says,” WP, 16 December 1977, p. E9; AP, “Coalition Unveils Proposal to Reopen Idled Steel Plant,” WP, 18 December 1977; Robert Reinhold, “H.U.D. Rushing to Revive an Ohio Steel Works,” NYT, 31 December 1977, p. 27; Bill Peterson, “Closed Steel Plant Model for HUD Recovery Effort,” WP, 31 December 1977, p. A2; Paula L. Cizmar, “Steelyard Blues,” Mother Jones, April 1978, pp. 36–42; Edward Cowan, “Steel Merger? Debate Grows in Youngstown,” NYT, 10 April 1978, pp. D1–2; Agis Salpukas, “Hope Glimmers for Reopening Campbell Steel Works,” NYT, 12 April 1978, p. D1; Susanna McBee, “Desperate Jobless City Seeks to Buy Failing Steel Plant,” WP, 9 May 1978, p. A2; Reginald Stuart, “Youngstown Seeks a Grasp on Its Fading Steel Industry,” NYT, 20 June 1978, p. B10; Edward Cowan, “U.S. Approves Merger of LTV with Lykes, Creating Steel Giant,” NYT, 22 June 1978, pp. A1, D13; Agis Salpukas, “At Youngstown Steel, Relief but No Joy,” NYT, 22 June 1978, p. D13; Richard Brookhiser, “Mr. A Goes to Youngstown,” NR, 7 July 1978, p. 835; Susanna McBee, “Youngstown Group Presses to Reopen Steel Mill,” WP, 19 September 1978, p. A3; Marjorie Hyer, “Religious Leaders Backed in Plan to Reopen Steel Mill,” WP, 28 September 1978, p. A28; Ivar Peterson, “Public Money and Private Ambition Clash over Future of Steel in Ohio’s Mahoning Valley,” NYT, 8 December 1978, p. A18; Agis Salpukas, “Steel Union, Making Concession, Backs Plant’s Reopening in Ohio,” NYT, 30 March 1979, p. A10; Roger Wilkins, “Carter Rejects a Plan to Reopen Steel Plant in Ohio,” NYT, 31 March 1979, p. 46; Wilkins, “Reopening a Steel Plant in Ohio: Reaction to the Federal Rejection”; Robert Howard, “Going Bust in Youngstown,” Commonweal, 25 May 1979, pp. 301–5; Nick Kotz’s excellent overview, “Youngstown’s Tragedies: A Legacy for Other Cities,” WP, 17 June 1979, pp. B1, B4–B5; and John Logue, “When They Close the Factory Gates,” Progressive, August 1980, pp. 16–23. Note as well Judge George C. Edwards’s opinion in Local 1330 United Steelworkers v. United States Steel Corp., 631 F. 2d 1264 (6th Cir.), 25 July 1980.

5. On Leo T. Mahon, Leo’s own wonderful and impressive autobiography, coauthored with Nancy Davis, Fire Under My Feet: A Memoir of God’s Power in Panama (Orbis Books, 2007), is an essential starting point; Thomas G. Kelliher Jr.’s rich dissertation, “Hispanic Catholics and the Archdiocese of Chicago, 1923–1970” (University of Notre Dame, December 1996), esp. pp. 131–35, 181–84, 197, 203, 311–12, 339, and Robin Rich’s unpublished paper, “Explaining Historical Change: The Development of Christian Base Communities in Latin America,” March 1991 (RRP), which is based upon a May 1990 interview with Leo, are essential, too. DJG’s interviews with Leo Mahon, Bill Stenzel, Bernie Pietrzak, Jan Poledziowski, Fred Simari, and Christine Gervais, as well as Greg Sakowicz’s 2008 interview with Leo, all inform this account; Leo’s support of the ERA appears in “From the Pastor’s Desk,” St. Victor Parish Sunday Bulletin, 4 May 1980, p. 2. See also Leo Mahon, “Law and Creativity,” Upturn, February–March 1985, p. 13, Leo T. Mahon, Jesus and His Message: An Introduction to the Good News (ACTA Publications, 2000), and his Chicago archdiocesan obituary, “Archdiocesan Priest, Msgr. Leo T. Mahon, Dies,” 22 May 2013.

On Saul Alinsky, and von Hoffman’s work with him as well, the definitive biography is Sanford D. Horwitt, Let Them Call Me Rebel: Saul Alinsky, His Life and Legacy (Alfred A. Knopf, 1989); see also Lawrence J. Engel, “Saul D. Alinsky and the Chicago School,” Journal of Speculative Philosophy 16 (2002): 50–66. On John Cardinal Cody, Charles W. Dahm’s authoritative Power and Authority in the Catholic Church: Cardinal Cody in Chicago (University of Notre Dame Press, 1981); Andrew M. Greeley, Confessions of a Parish Priest: An Autobiography (Simon & Schuster, 1986), pp. 133, 406–19; John Conroy’s remarkable “Cardinal Sins,” CR, 4 June 1987; Andrew M. Greeley’s “The Fall of an Archdiocese,” CM, September 1987, pp. 128–31, 190–92; Bill Clements, “Uncovering the Cardinal,” CM, December 2002, pp. 66–87; and Roy Larson, “In the 1980’s, A Chicago Newspaper Investigated Cardinal Cody,” Nieman Reports, Spring 2003, are essential; see also Alexander L. Taylor III, “God and Mammon in Chicago,” Time, 21 September 1981, and Linda Witt and John McGuire, “A Deepening Scandal over Church Funds Rocks a Cardinal and His Controversial Cousin,” People, 28 September 1981. Roy Larson, Bill Clements, and Gene Mustain’s pioneering CST stories on Cody, which debuted on September 10, 1981, are accessible only on microfilm.

6. DJG interviews with Tom Joyce, Dick Poethig, and Leo Mahon; “Present at the Meeting at St. Victor’s, Calumet City, on the Closing of the Area Steel Mills,” [6 June 1980], Tom Joyce to the Committee to Follow Up on the St. Victor’s Meeting Concerning the Closings in the Steel Mills, [7 June 1980], “Steering Committee Minutes,” 23 June 1980, Ensign Leininger to Dick Poethig, 23 June 1980, “Meeting of the Steering Committee on the Steel Crisis in the Calumet Region,” 7 July 1980, all RPP Box 20.

7. “Wisconsin Workers Meeting,” 7 July 1980, FLP Box 2 Fld. 4; R. C. Longworth, “Union May Try to Block Steel Inventory Removal,” CT, 19 July 1980, p. 6; Leo T. Mahon, “From the Pastor’s Desk,” St. Victor Parish Sunday Bulletin, 27 July 1980, p. 2; Bob Gehring et al., to Dear Pastor & Church Member, 28 July 1980, RPP Box 19; “Planning Committee Meeting . . .,” 4 August 1980, RPP Box 20. See also Larry Galica, “Wisconsin Steel Five Years Later, Closure Still Haunts Community,” DC, 28 March 1985,

8. Mary Gonzales Weekly Schedule, Latino Institute Papers (LIP), Box 4; DJG interviews with Mary Gonzales, Greg Galluzzo, Bob Creamer, Tom Cima, and Bea Lumpkin; Constantine Angelos, “Feisty Activist Group Disbanding—The Power-Tweaking SESCO Has Long List of Accomplishments,” Seattle Times, 17 September 1991; Minutes, “Administrative Staff Meeting,” Latino Institute, 17 January 1980 and 5 March 1980, LIP Box 5; Mary Gonzales, “A Proposal Presented by United Neighborhood Organization of Southeast Chicago,” June 1980, LIP Box 103 Fld. 15; Minutes, “Administrative Staff Meeting,” Latino Institute, 3 July 1980, LIP Box 5; Donald C. Reitzes and Dietrich S. Reitzes, “Alinsky in the 1980s: Two Contemporary Chicago Community Organizations,” Sociological Quarterly 28 (1987): 265–83; Wilfredo Cruz, “The Nature of Alinsky-Style Community Organizing in the Mexican-American Community of Chicago: United Neighborhood Organization,” Ph.D. dissertation, University of Chicago, December 1987; Wilfredo Cruz, “UNO: Organizing at the Grass Roots,” II, April 1988, pp. 18–22; Danny Westneat, “Obama Won Race from Ground Up,” Seattle Times, 4 June 2008, p. B1.

9. Leo T. Mahon, “From the Pastor’s Desk,” St. Victor Parish Sunday Bulletin, 17 August 1980, p. 2, and 24 August 1980, p. 2; “Clergy Focus on Steel Layoffs,” CT, 23 August 1980, p. N10; Mark Kiesling, “Churches Fight Steel Pullout,” [Lansing] Sun Journal, 26 August 1980 (RPP Box 20); [Dick Poethig], “Meeting of the Calumet Religious Community,” 23 August 1980, and “Organizing Committee for the Calumet Religious Community Conference,” 26 August 1980, both RPP Box 20; and DJG interviews with Leo Mahon, Dick Poethig, Tom Joyce, and Roberta Lynch.

10. R. C. Longworth, “Steel Workers Reject Chase Back Pay Offer,” CT, 5 August 1980, p. C4; Pam Sebastian, “Wis. Steel Gets $1.6 Million,” CT, 26 August 1980, p. C7; “Marchers Protest Wis. Steel Pay Deal,” CT, 30 August 1980, p. 5. On Walt Palmer, see Pam Sebastian, “Wis. Steel Hopes Rise Just a Bit,” CT, 31 August 1980, p. M5; “Black Activist Trying to Revive Steel Concern,” WSJ, 23 September 1980, pp. 29, 32; Frank Lumpkin to Anthony Roque, 1 October 1980, FLP Box 2 Fld. 4; R. C. Longworth, “Aid Coming to Reopen Mill: Byrne,” CT, 7 October 1980, p. M1; John Wasik, “Byrne Vows November Mill Opening,” DC, 7 October 1980, p. 1 (FLP); R. C. Longworth and Pam Sebastian, “Wisconsin Steel Won’t Reopen Soon,” CT, 12 October 1980, p. M5; John McCarron and Richard Longworth, “Byrne Tells Plan for Wisconsin Steel,” CT, 1 November 1980, p. M3.

11. Minutes, CCRC, 30 September 1980, “Toward a Founding Convention of the CCRC,” 30 September 1980, Minutes, CCRC, 14 October 1980, all RPP Box 20; Leo T. Mahon to Dear Sirs (Inland Steel), Richard P. Poethig to Sarah Cunningham, 17 October 1980, both RPP Box 24; Minutes, CCRC, 28 October 1980, RPP Box 20; “We Face Today a Crisis of Unprecedented Dimensions,” CCRC trifold flyer, n.d., Roberta Lynch Papers (RLP); News from Calumet Community Religious Conference, Vol. 1, #1, 9 November 1980, RLP; [Roberta Lynch], “Director’s Report,” 10 November 1980 and “Agenda,” CCRC, 11 November 1980, RPP Box 20; Richard P. Poethig, “The Church’s Response to Plant Closings,” 12 November 1980, RPP Box 19 and ICUIS Box 74 Fld. 1295; Richard P. Poethig, “A Strategy Paper for the Participation of Protestant Congregations in the CCRC,” 17 November 1980, RPP Box 19; Minutes, CCRC, 25 November 1980, News from Calumet Community Religious Conference Vol. 1 #2, 28 November 1980, RLP, “Steering Committee and Who It Represents,” n.d., “1981 January–December CCRC Budget Proposal,” n.d., Minutes, CCRC, 16 December 1980, all RPP Box 20; News from Calumet Community Religious Conference Vol. 1, #3, 19 December 1980, RLP; Roberta Lynch to Dick Poethig et al., 29 December 1980, Poethig Papers; "CCRC 1981 Program," n.d., RPP Box 20; Richard Poethig, "Crisis in Steel Industry," A. D., January 1981.

12. Minutes, Administrative Staff Meeting, 31 October 1980, LIP Box 5; DJG interviews with Mary Gonzales, Greg Galluzzo, Tom Cima, and Ted Aranda; Lynn Emmerman, "Picketing Steelworkers Claim Byrne Broke Vow," CT, 28 November 1980, p. B6; [Tom Joyce], "Claretian Social Development Grants for 1981," December 1980, CSDF Papers; Wieboldt Foundation, 1980 Annual Report, p. 14; Woods Charitable Fund, Report for the Years 1979 and 1980, pp. 3, 12.

13. CCRC Research Committee Meeting, 5 January 1981, RPP Box 20; Samuel Ayyub Bilal, "Look at Steel Employee's Crisis," Bilalian News, 9 January 1981, pp. 7, 28; [Roberta Lynch], "Organizing in 1981," [13 January 1981]; Minutes, CCRC Steering Committee, 13 January 1981, both RPP Box 20; News from Calumet Community Religious Conference Vol. 1, #4, 16 January 1981, RLP; Roberta Lynch and John Beckman to CCRC Steering Committee, 19 January 1981, RPP Box 20; Leo Mahon to Jack Egan, 26 January 1981, Egan Papers Box 151 Fld. 21; News from Calumet Community Religious Council Vol. 1, #5, 6 February 1981; and Richard P. Poethig, "The Calumet Steel Economy and the Church's Response," 9 February 1981, both RPP Box 19; Richard P. Poethig, ed., "Plant Closings: The Church's Response," Justice Ministries: Resources for Urban Mission 10 (Fall 1980) [actually post-6 February 1981], 54pp., esp. p. 16; CCRC, "Training Session for Local Congregation Seminars," [16 February 1981], 8pp., RLP and RPP Box 19; News from Calumet Community Religious Conference Vol. 1, #6, 20 February 1981, RLP; Roberta Lynch to Steering Committee, "CCRC Progress," 26 February 1981; News from Calumet Community Religious Conference Vol. 1, #7, 6 March 1981; Minutes, CCRC Steering Committee, 10 March 1981; [Dick Poethig Notes], 10 March 1981; Leo Mahon to Dear Pastor, 19 March 1981, all RPP Box 20; News from Calumet Community Religious Conference Vol. 1, #8, 20 March 1981, RLP; News from Calumet Community Religious Conference Vol. 1, #9, 3 April 1981, RPP Box 20. See also Robert McClory, "Alinsky Lives," CR, 3 April 1981, pp. 1, 28–36; and James Balanoff, "U. S. Steel Cons the Congress and Union," ITT, 20–26 January 1982, p. 11.

14. Pam Sebastian, "U.S. Agency Buys Wisconsin Steel," CT, 21 January 1981, p. C3; "Relief Office to Assist Idle Steelworkers," CT, 22 January 1981, p. B1; Pam Sebastian, "No Fast Revival Seen at Wisconsin Steel Despite Role of U.S.," CT, 25 January 1981, p. M5; Mitchell Locin, "200 March on CTA, Win Concessions," CT, 30 January 1981, p. M6; "How to Organize Friends and Influence People—Salt Interviews Greg Galluzzo," Salt, June 1983, pp. 21–25; Pam Sebastian, "New Cloud Clings to Wisconsin Steel," CT, 22 February 1981, p. M5; Sebastian, "Pritzkers May Help Revive Steel Mill," CT, 15 March 1981, pp. 1, 4; Eileen Ogintz, "Laid-Off Workers Plan Lobby Effort," CT, 16 March 1981, p. C6; CRec, 9 April 1981, pp. HR7172–75. Unemployment benefits ended after thirty-nine weeks. Lynn Emmerman, "Lives Built on Steel Rust with Idleness," CT, 14 September 1986, p. T1. On mini-mills, see Christopher Scherrer, "Mini-Mills: A New Growth Path for the U.S. Steel Industry?," Journal of Economic Issues 22 (December 1988): 1179–1200, and Breandan O'Huallachain's excellent "The Restructuring of the U.S. Steel Industry," Environment and Planning A 25 (September 1993): 1339–59.

15. Minutes, CCRC Steering Committee, 14 April 1981; Roberta Lynch to CCRC Steering Committee, 24 April 1981, News from Calumet Community Religious Conference Vol. 1, #10, 1 May 1981; Roberta Lynch to File, "Illinois Presbyterians," 1 May 1981; Roberta Lynch to File, "Other Denominations," 5 May 1981; Minutes, CCRC Steering Committee, 12 May 1981; Minutes, CCRC Steering Committee, 9

June 1981; Minutes, CCRC Steering Committee, 12 August 1981, all RPP Box 20; Calumet Reporter, September 1981, RLP; Calumet Reporter, October 1981, Poethig Papers; Minutes, CCRC Steering Committee, 13 October 1981, RPP Box 20; Calumet Reporter, January 1982, RLP and Poethig Papers; Minutes, CCRC Steering Committee, 12 January 1982, RPP Box 20; “Latinos Get Child-Care Grant,” CT, 30 April 1981, p. M4; Minutes, Administrative Staff Meeting, Latino Institute, 15 May 1981, LIP Box 5; Chicago Community Trust, Annual Report Fiscal Year 1981; Wieboldt Foundation, 1981 Annual Report; Father John F. Moriarty to Cardinal Cody, 24 March 1981 and 6 May 1981, CHD Files, Cody Papers; Chicago Catholic, 20 November 1981, p. 18; Mary Gonzales Weekly Schedule, LIP Box 4 (12 November 1981 “Breakfast w/ Jean Rudd”); Minutes, UNO Convention Committee, 18 November 1981, 1 and 15 December 1981, 5 and 19 January 1982, LIP Box 101; Latino Institute, “Community-Based Advocacy Leadership: A Proposal to the Ford Foundation,” 24 December 1981, LIP Box 102; Leon M. Despres to Frank Lumpkin, 4 May 1981, FLP Box 3 Fld. 5; R. C. Longworth and Pam Sebastian, “Workers Ask Day in Court vs. IH,” CT, 6 September 1981, p. V1; Frank Lumpkin to Crossroads Fund, “Grant Proposal for Wisconsin Steelworkers Save Our Jobs Committee,” 15 February 1982, Crossroads Fund Papers (CFP), Box 38 Fld. 476; Jackie Schad to Greg Galluzzo, 8 June, 27 September, and 1 November 1982, all CFP Box 38 Fld. 476; Thomas Geoghegan, Which Side Are You On? (Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1991), pp. 91–121; DJG interview with Tom Geoghegan. Steve Gorecki, “CHD Funds Help Hispanics Help Themselves,” Chicago Catholic, 16 December 1983, pp. 42, 44, 45, reports that UNO of Southeast Chicago received $34,000 in 1981 and $24,000 in 1982 from national CHD funds. See also “Some Peacemakers—Working for Justice,” Chicago Catholic, 18 November 1983, p. 11, and William T. Poole and Thomas W. Pauken, The Campaign for Human Development (Capital Research Center, 1988), p. 123.

On CHD, also see Chicago Catholic, 10 July and 17 July 1981, p. 1; Robert T. Reilly, “CHD: ‘Perhaps the Best Thing the Church Has Done in Decades,’” Salt, November–December 1981, pp. 12–18; Joseph Cardinal Bernardin, “The Story of the Campaign for Human Development,” 25 August 1995 (reprinted in CRec, 11 September 1995, pp. S13174–76); Jim Castelli, “How the Church Passes the Buck to the Poor,” U.S. Catholic, October 1996, pp. 21–26; Lawrence J. Engel, “The Influence of Saul Alinsky on the Campaign for Human Development,” Theological Studies 59 (December 1998): 636–61; and Joel R. Schom, “Catholic Campaign for Human Development Faith-Based Grantmaking,” Philanthropy & Nonprofit Sector Program, Loyola University Chicago, 2007.

16. DJG interviews with Greg Galluzzo, Mary Gonzales, Jerry Kellman, and Leo Mahon; Donald C. Reitzes and Dietrich S. Reitzes, “Alinsky in the 1980s: Two Contemporary Chicago Community Organizations,” Sociological Quarterly 28 (1987): 265–83, esp. 271; Phil Davidson, “Obama’s Mentor,” II, March 2009; Don Walton, “Obama Mentor Was Here,” Lincoln Journal Star, 26 April 2010; Connie Bolt to CCRC Steering Committee Members, 1 February 1982, Minutes, CCRC Steering Committee, 9 February 1982, CCRC Financial Report, 9 March 1982, all RPP Box 20; Jerry Kellman, Mary Gonzales, and Greg Galluzzo to Leo Mahon, “Our Suggestions for a Church-Based Organization in the Calumet Region,” 13 April 1982, Poethig Papers and RPP Box 20.

17. Leo Mahon to Dear CCRC Member, 28 May 1982, RPP Box 20; Leo T. Mahon, “From the Pastor’s Desk,” St. Victor Parish Sunday Bulletin, 18 April 1982, p. 2; R. C. Longworth, “Working to Save What’s Theirs,” CT, 30 June 1982, p. B1; Tom Cima, “From the Shadows to New Spirit,” Upturn, March–April 1983, p. 3; Monroe Anderson, “100 Jobless March in Loop, Protest Lack of Job Creation,” CT, 29 July 1982, p. 17. In the absence of any true biography of Joseph Bernardin, the best existing source is Eugene Kennedy, My Brother Joseph: The Spirit of a Cardinal and the Story of a Friendship (St. Martin’s Press, 1997). The full extent to which the economic crisis of the Calumet region did radicalize Leo Mahon’s political views is most starkly revealed in Mahon, “From the Pastor’s Desk,” St. Victor Parish Sunday Bulletin, 30 January 1983, p. 2, where he began by asking “is it possible that there is something wrong with our system?” and queried of people who live off of investment income, “do they not tend to be useless and unproductive parasites?” Questioning “the basic tenet of Capitalism that says that the one real owner of an industry is the investor and that the money invested has prior rights,” Leo declared that “we should consider changing our economic system so that the workers who manufacture the product will also be considered owners, owners with rights equal or even superior to the stockholders who do not work. . . . I am well aware that I shall be called a socialist or even a communist” on account of those comments.

18. DJG interviews with Bob Moriarty and John McKnight; McKnight, “The Medicalization of Politics,” Christian Century, 17 September 1975, pp. 785–87 (reprinted in McKnight, The Careless Society [Basic Books, 1995], pp. 55–62); McKnight, “Professionalized Service and Disabling Help,” in Ivan Illich et al., Disabling Professions (Marion Boyars, 1977), pp. 69–91 (reprinted in Careless Society, pp. 36–52); McKnight, “The Need for Oldness,” St. Croix Review 10 (February 1979): 22–31 (reprinted in Careless Society, pp. 26–35), McKnight, “The Professional Problem,” Institutions 2 (September 1979) (reprinted in Careless Society, pp. 16–25), McKnight, “A Nation of Clients?,” Public Welfare 38 (Fall 1980): 15–19 (reprinted in Careless Society, pp. 91–100). See also John L. McKnight, “Service Growth Changing Society,” CT, 2 January 1981, p. B4. Powerful evidence of McKnight’s influence appears in Stanley Hallett, “The Limits of a Model Community Bank,” TNW, August 1983, pp. 10–16: “political action must be taken to transform the flows of resources from maintaining people in a welfare trap to enabling them to get the tools and techniques needed to become productive.” A harmful institution, Hallett wrote, is one that “convinces people that they should be passive recipients of its services” and thereby “inhibits the formation of strong community organizations”; “such an institution stands in the way of needed political change.”

19. DJG interviews with Bob Moriarty, Kevin Limbeck, Mary Ellen Montes, Ellen Schumer, Danny Solis, Phil Mullins, George Schopp, Alma Avalos, and Bob Ginsburg. Moriarty warmly recalled Lena and Alma: “Those two were the stars. They were real leaders. They had and they could produce a following, and they had nerve.” Also Robert Ginsburg, “The Dirt Comes Out from Under the Carpet,” CBE Environmental Review, March–April 1983, pp. 3–5ff.; Gayle Peterson, “We Are the People: The Fight Against Toxic Waste,” Health & Medicine 2 (Winter 1983–84): 13–22; Jerry Sullivan, “Of Dumps, Chicago Politics & Herons,” Audubon, March 1987, pp. 122–26; Casey Bukro, “‘Health Hazard’ Waste Heads for Chicago,” CT, 8 September 1982, pp. 1, 8; Bukro, “Toxic Waste Destroyer to Get a Trial by Fire,” CT, 12 September 1982, p. 4. On Foster Milhouse, see his 30 July 2012 CST obituary.

On the Trumbull Park riots, see Robert Gruenberg, “Chicago Fiddles While Trumbull Park Burns,” Nation, 22 May 1954, pp. 441–43, and “Trumbull Park: Act II,” Nation, 18 September 1954, pp. 230–32; Ben Joravsky and Eduardo Camacho, Race and Politics in Chicago (Community Renewal Society, 1987), pp. 21–29; Arnold R. Hirsch, “Massive Resistance in the Urban North: Trumbull Park, Chicago, 1953–1966,” Journal of American History 82 (September 1995): 522–50; Edwina Leona Jones, “From Steel Town to ‘Ghost Town’: A Qualitative Study of Community Change in Southeast Chicago” (M.A. thesis, Loyola University Chicago, May 1998), pp. 82–84; Alter, “Mexicans and Serbs in Southeast Chicago,” and D. Bradford Hunt, Blueprint for Disaster: The Unraveling of Chicago Public Housing (University of Chicago Press, 2009), pp. 102–3.

20. Hank DeZutter, “Battle Cry of the Southeast Side: Don’t Dump on Us,” CR, 11 March 1983, pp. 3, 34; Thomas J. Murphy to Harold Washington, 26 August 1983, Harold Washington Papers (HWP) Public Safety Box 12 Fld. 11. The Tribune failed to cover Washington’s visit to Bright School. See Thom Shanker and David Axelrod, “Mayoral Candidates Gain More Support,” CT, 30 March 1983, p. 9. On Washington’s election, the richest sources are Paul Kleppner, Chicago Divided: The Making of a Black Mayor (Northern Illinois University Press, 1985), esp. p. 217; Dempsey J. Travis, An Autobiography of Black Politics (Urban Research Press, 1987), pp. 489–610; Travis, Harold: The People’s Mayor (Urban Research Press, 1989), pp. 153–97; and James Hawking, “Political Education in the Harold Washington Movement,” D.Ed. dissertation, Northern Illinois University, August 1991, pp. 52–139.

21. R. C. Longworth, “Union Chief Enters Steel Saga,” CT, 18 October 1982, pp. 10–11; John Kass, “Roque Counters Save Our Jobs’ Charges,” DC, 19 October 1982, p. 1; R. C. Longworth, “System Foundered on Lies, Selfishness,” CT, 17 February 1988, p. B3; David Bensman and Roberta Lynch, “The Workers Who Wouldn’t Go Away,” Nation, 30 April 1988, p. 606; Geoghegan, Which Side Are You On? p. 96; Wisconsin Steelworkers Save Our Jobs Committee to Crossroads Fund, “Grantee Fiscal and Progress Report,” 27 January 1983, CF Box 38 Fld. 476; Thomas Hardy, “Hanging Tough in Tough Times,” CT, 10 April 1983, p. K3; Jackie Schad to Gregory Galluzzo, 20 May 1983, CFP Box 38 Fld. 475; CCRC Research Committee Meeting, 5 January 1981, RPP Box 20; Mary Schmich, “A Union Leader Who Wasn’t Made of Steel,” CT, 25 August 1985, Terry Atlas, “U.S. Steel Gives Go-Ahead to New S. Side Rail Mill,” CT, 18 September 1982, p. M1; Robert Kearns, “Steel Woes Show on South Side,” CT, 20 September 1982, p. B10; Michael Tackett, “Steelworkers Accept Contract: ‘We’re Working,’” CT, 2 March 1983, p. 5; Robert Kearns, “South Works May Close, U.S. Steel Chief Says,” CT, 3 May 1983, p. C1; Jesse Auerbach, “Jobs for Displaced Workers,” TNW, May 1983, pp. 1, 8–12; Linnet Myers, “A Saga of Hard Times Set in Cold Steel,” CT, 29 August 1983, p. T1. See also Elizabeth Balanoff’s 1977 interview with then-USW Local 65 president Alice Peurala.

22. DJG interviews with Bob Moriarty, Mary Ellen Montes, Alma Avalos, Ed Grossman, George Schopp, Bob Ginsburg, Phil Mullins, and Danny Solis; Hank Greenberg and Steve Kerch, “Protesters Rally at Meeting of Waste Company,” CT, 21 May 1983, p. 1; Jose L. Rodriguez, “17 Arrested at South Side Landfill Rally,” CT, 17 June 1983, p. B3; Kenan Heise, “Churches Battle in Behalf of Jobless,” CT, 10 June 1983, p. 3; “The Future of Calumet City,” St. Victor Parish Sunday Bulletin, 26 June 1983, p. 4; Casey Bukro, “Mayor to Block 2 Dump Projects, Pending Review,” CT, 24 August 1983, p. B1; Thomas J. Murphy to Harold Washington, 26 August 1983, HWP Public Safety Box 12 Fld. 11; Thom Shanker and David Axelrod, “Washington Invades Ald. Vrdolyak’s 10th Ward Turf,” CT, 25 August 1985, p. B1; Scott Buckner, “Mayor Vows ‘No More Dumps’—600 Pack St. Kevin’s Meeting,” DC, 25 August 1983, p. A1; John Kass and Mark Eissman, “Washington Tells Crowd Waste Management Permits ‘Wrong,’” DC, 25 August 1983, p. A1; Kass and Eissman, “Washington Promises a Zoning Board Revamp,” DC, 25 August 1983, p. A2; Dennis Geaney, “From the Editor’s Notebook,” Upturn, October–November 1983, p. 7; DeZutter, "Battle Cry of the Southeast Side"; Lee Botts, "Women Form Backbone of City Environmental Groups," TNW, July 1984, p. 17; Sullivan, "Of Dumps, Chicago Politics & Herons"; Jerry Sullivan, "Field & Street," CR, 1 March 1990; Jim Schwab, Deeper Shades of Green (Sierra Club Books, 1994), p. 176. Benny Scheid's 1981 letter is quoted in John Conroy, "Cardinal Sins," CR, 4 June 1987, and Scheid's brief obituary appears in CST, 2 May 1987 and CT, 3 May 1997; also see Steve Gorecki, "Through Good Times and Bad St. Kevin Still 'Family,'" Chicago Catholic, 30 October 1981, p. 23, and George Schopp, "Tying Together the Telephone Lines," Upturn, March–April 1983, p. 2. Harold Washington indeed had served thirty-six days in the Cook County jail in 1972 for failure to file tax returns for at least four years. See James L. Merriner, Grafters and Goo Goos (Southern Illinois University Press, 2004), pp. 219–20. The most thorough review of WMI's history is Edwin L. Miller Jr., "Waste Management, Inc.," Final Report, March 1992, San Diego (CA) County District Attorney.

23. DJG interview with George Schopp; Benny [Scheid], "An Open Letter to Dennis Geaney," Upturn, January–February 1984, p. 14; Joravsky, "Dumpers Swamp City's Southeast Side"; Steve Kerch and Monroe Anderson, "Dumping Ban Called Threat to Business," CT, 21 September 1983, pp. B1, B4; Michael Arndt, "Firm Permitted to Burn PCBs on Southeast Side," CT, 5 October 1983, p. 1.

24. William T. Hogan, Steel in the United States: Restructuring to Compete (D. C. Heath & Co., 1984), esp. pp. 25–26, Hogan, "The Steel Industry Today," Iron and Steel Engineer, April 1987, pp. 50–52, John P. Hoerr, And the Wolf Finally Came: The Decline of the American Steel Industry (University of Pittsburgh Press, 1988), esp. pp. 100, 425–26, and Gordon L. Clark, "Corporate Restructuring in the Steel Industry: Adjustment Strategies and Local Labor Relations," in George Sternlieb and James W. Hughes, eds., America's New Market Geography (Rutgers Center for Urban Policy Research, 1988), pp. 179–214, primarily inform the initial summary of the steel industry's decline; Robert Kearns, "Plan Offered for New South Works," CT, 12 August 1983, p. D1; Kearns, "U.S. Steel Puts Off Decision on Rail Mill," CT, 13 August 1983, p. B6; Linnet Myers, "Hopes Vanish Along with Steel Mills," CT, 23 October 1983, p. C1; Steven Greenhouse, "U.S. Steel May Keep Plant Open," NYT, 9 November 1983, p. D1; Robert Kearns, "South Works Talks 'At a Standstill,'" CT, 10 November 1983, p. 1; Kearns, "U.S. Steel Plan Irks Union," CT, 11 November 1983, p. 1; Kearns, "The South Works Political Football," CT, 14 November 1983, p. C1; Kearns, "U.S. Steel Irks Workers with New Demands," CT, 8 December 1983, p. 1; Linnet Myers, "South Works Concessions Rejected," CT, 22 December 1983, p. 1; Myers, "Unions at Mills No Longer Strong as Steel," CT, 25 December 1983, p. C1; Myers, "South Works Dream Dies," CT, 28 December 1983; Sam Smith, "U.S. Steel Reneged, Rostenkowski Says," CT, 30 December 1983, p. 1; Linnet Myers, "Steelworkers Find Unity in Defeat," CT, 1 January 1984, p. 1; Editorial, "South Works Fate Heads Things to Watch For as 1984 Rolls In," DC, 1 January 1984, p. A4; Larry Galica, "U.S. Sues for Rail Mill," DC, 11 January 1984, p. A1; R. C. Longworth, "A Betrayal on South Works," CT, 11 January 1984, p. P19; Larry Galica, "USS to Demolish 2 Blast Furnaces," DC, 26 January 1984, p. A1; "Keep South Works Open, Bernardin Asks U.S. Steel," CST, 31 January 1984, p. 6; Fr. Dennis J. Geaney, "Loss of Steel Plant Jobs," CT, 3 February 1984, p. 18; Larry Galica, "So. Works Story Is Tale of Woe," DC, 6 February 1984, p. A2; Linda Wolohan (UPI), "South Works Employees Are Struggling in the Face of a Very Uncertain Future," DC, 6 February 1984, p. B2; Larry Galica, "Reaction Mixed to USS Decision," DC, 13 March 1984, p. A2; Joseph Cardinal Bernardin, "The Need for Collaboration," CT, 21 March 1984, p. 15; Larry Galica, "Local 65 May Sell Its Union Hall," DC, 29 March 1984, p. A2; Galica, "Rumors of South Works Closing Denied by Firm," DC, 10 May 1984, p. B3; Galica, "Unemployment Rate Drops," DC, 2 June 1984, p. A1; Galica, "U.S. District Court to Hear South Works Demolition Suit," DC, 28 June 1984, p. A1; Galica, "U.S. Court Rejects Suit," DC, 30 June 1984, p. A1; Galica, "City May Join Suit to Stop Dismantling at South Works," DC, 17 July 1984, p. A2.

25. Ann Grimes, "UNO: Catholic Clergy Up Front in Back of the Yards Organizing Effort," CR, 1 April 1983, pp. 3, 31; Latino Institute 1984 Annual Report, LIP Box II-4; Untitled selective list of 1983 Chicago CHD Applications, n.d. [spring 1983], Joseph Cardinal Bernardin Papers; "Claretian Social Development Grants Awarded," July 1983, "1984 Claretian Social Development Grants Awarded," June 1984, p. 93 (renumbered p. 61), Claretian Social Development Fund 1974–1993, Report to the Eastern Province Assembly from the Peace and Justice Committee, June 1993, p. 12, all TJP; Julie Kemble Borths, "Five Local Projects Awarded National CHD Grants," Chicago Catholic, 30 September 1983, p. 2; Woods Charitable Fund, Report for the Year 1984, p. 11 (noting a $15,000 1984 grant to CCRC "to expand staff"); [Draft] "By Laws of the Calumet Community Religious Conference," n.d. [1983], RPP Box 20; Paul Burke, "Time for Twelve," Upturn, October–November 1983, pp. 6, 8; Leo T. Mahon, "From the Pastor's Desk," St. Victor Parish Sunday Bulletin, 12 February 1984, pp. 2–3; Suzanne Carter, "Eight Local Projects Get Development Funds," Chicago Catholic, 6 and 13 July 1984, p. 22; Wilfredo Cruz, "UNO: Organizing at the Grass Roots," Illinois Issues (II), April 1988, pp. 18–22; M. W. Newman and Lillian Williams, "People Power: Chicago's Real Clout," CST, 8 April 1990, pp. 12–14; Graciela Kenig, "For Veteran Organizer, Education Is Power," CST, 2 October 1991, p. 30; Helen Sundman, "UNO: Taking Organizing to a New Level, or Leaving the Community Behind?," Chicago Reporter, May 1994; Carol Felsenthal, "Danny Solis," CM, 29 March 2011; DJG interviews with Jerry Kellman, Greg Galluzzo, Mary Gonzales, Ellen Schumer, Kevin Limbeck, Josh Hoyt, Peter Martinez, Leo Mahon, Tom Joyce, Bernie Pietrzak, Fred Simari, Jan Poledziowski, Christine Gervais, Bill Stenzel, Bonnie Nitsche, Wally Nitsche, Ken Jania, Alma Avalos, Tom Kaminski, and Betty Garrett; "History of Hegewisch," HN, 25 January 1984; Linnet Myers, "Grim Reality Hits Steel Mill Community," CT, 15 June 1984, p. B8; Robert Bergsvik, "Film Captures True Spirit of Southeast Side," DC, 15 October 1984, p. A1; Walley, "Deindustrializing Chicago," pp. 128–30, and Walley, Exit Zero, pp. 57, 63–70, 74, 117, 153; Silvio DeAntoni et al., "Holy Rosary—The Last 26 Years," in Holy Rosary Parish 1882–2008, pp. 19–21. On Bill Stenzel's timeline, see St. Victor Parish Sunday Bulletin, 7 June 1981, p. 2, William Stenzel, "Revival Week at St. Helena's," Upturn, November–December 1982, p. 5, and Bill Stenzel, "1990 in Roseland," Upturn, April–May 1985, p. 4. On Fred Simari, see Leo T. Mahon, "From the Pastor's Desk," St. Victor Parish Sunday Bulletin, 6 May 1984, p. 2. On Raymond P. Nugent, see his 28 October 1995 CST and CT obituaries.

26. This brief history of Greater Roseland draws on dozens of sources, beginning first and foremost with Janice L. Reiff's rich and authoritative "Rethinking Pullman: Urban Space and Working-Class Activism," Social Science History 24 (Spring 2000): 7–32, as well as her "Roseland" and "West Pullman" essays in the Encyclopedia of Chicago (2004) and Clinton E. Stockwell's "Washington Heights" essay in that same project; also Arnold R. Hirsch's Making the Second Ghetto: Race and Housing in Chicago, 1940–1960 (University of Chicago Press, 1983), esp. pp. 3–4, 46–47, 54–55; Melaniphy & Associates' Chicago Comprehensive Neighborhood Needs Analysis [CCNNA]: Volume I: Citywide Needs Analysis, January 1982, and particularly their incredibly rich CCNNA: Volume II:

Roseland Community Area, 1982, CCNNA: Volume II: West Pullman Community Area, 1982, and CCNNA: Volume II: Washington Heights Community Area; and Local Community Fact Book, Chicago Metropolitan Area (Chicago Review Press, 1984), p. 129. Lilydale's history is best presented in Michael W. Homel, "The Lilydale School Campaign of 1936: Direct Action in the Verbal Protest Era," Journal of Negro History 59 (July 1974): 228–41; see also Homel's Down from Equality: Black Chicagoans and the Public Schools, 1920–41 (University of Illinois Press, 1984), esp. p. 166. The richest account of the 1947 riots is John Bartlow Martin, "Incident at Fernwood," Harper's, October 1949, pp. 86–98. Mark T. Mulder's "Mobility and the (In)Significance of Place in an Evangelical Church: A Case Study from the South Side of Chicago," Geographies of Religions and Belief Systems 3 (2009): 16–43, and especially his superb "Evangelical Church Polity and the Nuances of White Flight: A Case Study from the Roseland and Englewood Neighborhoods in Chicago," Journal of Urban History 38 (January 2012): 16–38, esp. pp. 17, 24, dramatically outclass Robert P. Swierenga, Dutch Chicago (Eerdmans Publishing, 2002), pp. 35–38, 295–349. A fifth CRC congregation, Pullman Christian Reformed Church, established as a mission church in late 1972 and by 1977 located at 103rd Street and South Vernon Avenue, eight blocks east of South State Street, is not addressed by Mulder but is very much located in Roseland. Anthony Van Zanten, "Worship in Pullman CRC: An Interview with Rick Williams," Reformed Worship, March 1988; Sonya Jongsma Knauss, "Van Zanten Eases Out of Decades in Inner City Ministry, The [Dordt College] Voice, Winter 2004; "Have You Heard of the City?—A Roseland Christian Ministries Story" (DVD, 2005); DJG interviews with Donna and Tony Van Zanten and Rick Williams.

27. Calvin P. Bradford and Leonard S. Rubinowitz, "The Urban-Suburban Investment-Divestment Process: Consequences for Older Neighborhoods," The Annals 422 (November 1975): 77–87, esp. 83–84; Bradford, "Financing Home Ownership: The Federal Role in Neighborhood Decline," Urban Affairs Quarterly 14 (March 1979): 313–35, esp. 326, 328; Bradford, "Never Call Retreat: The Fight Against Lending Discrimination," in Credit by Color: Mortgage Market Discrimination in Chicagoland (Chicago Area Fair Housing Alliance, 1991), pp. 5–18, esp. pp. 9–10; Bradford and Anne B. Shlay, "Assuming a Can Opener: Economic Theory's Failure to Explain Discrimination in FHA Lending Markets," Cityscape 2 (February 1996): 77–87, esp. 80–81. Also see Judith D. Feins, "Urban Housing Disinvestment and Neighborhood Decline: A Study of Public Policy Outcomes," Ph.D. dissertation, University of Chicago, March 1977, esp. p. 278 regarding FHA Commissioner Letter 68–8, 2 August 1968; Gregory D. Squires, "Community Reinvestment: An Emerging Social Movement," in Squires, ed., From Redlining to Reinvestment: Community Responses to Urban Disinvestment (Temple University Press, 1992), pp. 1–37, esp. 6, and Squires, "Friend or Foe? The Federal Government and Community Reinvestment," in W. Dennis Keating et al., eds., Revitalizing Urban Neighborhoods (University Press of Kansas, 1996), pp. 222–34, esp. 223.

28. Greater Roseland Newsletter, Fall 1970, CHM; "U.S. to Renovate 100 Homes Abandoned in Roseland," CT, 9 September 1979, p. XIV-1; Greater Roseland Organization, Constitution of Umbrella Organization, 17 September 1982, CRF Box 17 Fld. 207; Father John F. Moriarty to Cardinal Cody, 19 and 27 March 1980, 12 May 1980, 23 February 1981, and 2 March 1981, CHD Files, Cody Papers; William Mullen, "Teen-Aged Terror Stalks Fenger High," CT, 7 June 1981, p. III-1; David Ibata, "Formulas Traced for Urban Revival," CT, 25 October 1981, p. 1; Steve Gorecki, "Pilsen Benefits from CHD," Chicago Catholic, 20 November 1981, p. 31; Chicago Community Trust, Annual Report FY 1982, pp. 24–25; Melaniphy & Associates, CCNNA, Volume I, pp. 55–56, 398, CCNNA, Volume II: Roseland Community Area, pp. 19, 23, 26, 46, 82, 92, 94, 133, CCNNA, Volume II: West Pullman Community Area, pp. 29–31; Julie S. Putterman, “Chicago Steelworkers: The Cost of Unemployment” (Steelworkers Research Project, January 1985), esp. pp. 15, 45; John Williams Jr., “GRO Moves into Housing Area,” SEC, 15 April 1982, p. 1; Kathleen Myler, “Jobs, Gangs Major Roseland Problems,” CT, 18 April 1982, p. M2; GRO, “Report for Chicago Community Trust 2nd Quarter,” ca. 5 January 1983, CRF Box 17 Fld. 207; Lenora Rodgers to Crossroads Fund, 1 February 1983, CRF Box 17 Fld. 207; “West Pullman . . . Called Home By 40,900 People,” CT, 22 February 1983, p. B1; Stanley Ziemba, “Federal Mortgage Aid Asked,” CT, 18 March 1983, p. B1; GRO Community Memo, May 1983, Jackie Schad to Lenora Rodgers, 9 May 1983, CRF Box 17 Fld. 207; Stanley Ziemba, “FHA Mortgage Defaults in Black Neighborhoods Top 81%,” CT, 4 November 1983, p. A19; Jackie Schad to Ronald Carter, 3 April 1984, CFP Box 17 Fld. 207; Bernard C. Taylor, “The Study of Community Development Block Grant Funds of the City of Chicago,” 16 April 1984, HWP Central Office Files Box 9 Fld. 91; Rev. Robert C. Behnke and Mary Margaret Moran to Superintendent Fred Rice, 27 August 1984, HWP Central Office Files Box 42 Fld. 6. Also see Robert A. Slayton, “Foreclosure in Chicago: The Differing Impact on Race,” Chicago Urban League, May 1987, esp. pp. 4–5; David Moberg, “Can Chicago Be Saved?,” Inc. Magazine, March 1988; Isabel Wilkerson, “Small Inner-City Hospitals in U.S. Face Threat of Financial Failure,” NYT, 21 August 1988; Don DeBat, “Roseland, Pullman Get Second Wind,” CST, 28 June 1991, p. 3; “Congratulations Extended to Mr. & Mrs. Theodis Rodgers Sr. on Their Fiftieth Wedding Anniversary,” Chicago City Council Journal, 11 September 1991, p. 5362; Isabel Wilkerson, “Black Neighborhood Faces White World with Bitterness,” NYT, 22 June 1992; South Street Journal [SSJ], 29 September–12 October 1994, p. 12; Kristin Ostberg, “Can This Neighborhood Be Changed?,” CR, 9 October 1997; Judith McCray, “One Man’s Vision Puts Economic Goals in Focus for Community,” CST, 9 July 1993, p. BE3; Ray Quintanilla, “Black Expo’s Key Man,” Chicago Reporter, September 1993; “The Rev. Bernard C. Taylor, 46, Black Expo Chairman,” CST, 23 November 1994, p. 75 (obituary); Chuck McWhinnie, “Mary Bates, Community Activist,” CST, 22 February 1999, p. 51 (obituary at age eighty); SSJ, 25 March–7 April 1999, p. 2; Grant Pick, “Stayin’ Alive,” CR, 16 November 2000; Mark Konkol, “Roseland’s Only Steak House Survives Tough Times,” DNAInfo.com, 19 October 2015.

29. Thomas Maier, “Study Finds Little S. E. Side Toxic Hazard,” CST, 9 January 1984, p. 19; Diana Strzalka, “Residents Protest Landfill Request,” DC, 14 January 1984, p. A1; Scott Buckner, “Waste Ban Vote Next Week,” DC, 25 January 1984, p. A2; Buckner, “Council OKs Waste Ban,” DC, 31 January 1984, p. A1; Buckner, “Waste Ban Prompts Debate,” DC, 31 January 1984, p. A2; Harry Golden Jr., “Panel Urges Ban on New Dumps,” CST, 31 January 1984, p. 6; Mark Kiesling, “Simon Visits South Deering Landfill,” DC, 14 February 1984, p. A1; “Waste Dumps Hurt Area, Simon Says,” CT, 14 February 1984, p. A4; Mark Kiesling, “Landfill Moratorium Passed,” DC, 16 February 1984, p. A1; “Waste Fight Not Over,” DC, 17 February 1984, p. A4; Scott Buckner, “South Deering Landfill Expansion Denied by ZBA,” DC, 25 February 1984, p. A1; Mark Kiesling, “Right-to-Know Bill Garners Support,” DC, 2 March 1984, p. A1; Bob Kostanczuk, “Nature Park Meetings Set,” DC, 3 March 1984, p. A1; “More News in Waste War,” DC, 5 March 1984, p. A4; John Kass and Mark Eissman, “Waste Hill in Plan for Southeast Side,” CT, 13 March 1984, p. B2; Kass and Eissman, “Landfill Proposal Thorn in Lake Calumet’s Side,” CT, 23 March 1984, p. B3; Bob Kostanczuk, “Critics Rip Landfill Plan,” DC, 28 March

1984, p. A1; “Reject Waste Management’s Offer,” DC, 29 March 1984, p. A4; Robert Bergsvik, “SE Side Residents Skeptical of Dump,” Columbia College Chronicle, 2 April 1984, p. 1; Bill Bero, “Waste Firm’s Official Clarifies Position on Proposed Nature Park,” DC, 9 April 1984, p. A5; Steve Kerch, “Home-Grown Experts Crusade Against Waste Dumps,” CT, 15 April 1984, p. B2; Illinois EPA, “The Southeast Chicago Study: An Assessment of Environmental Pollution and Public Health Impacts,” HWP DS Box 5 Fld. 8; Harlan Dragor, “Far S. Side Pollution No Threat, Says Study,” CST, 25 April 1984, p. 12; Casey Bukro, “S. Side’s High Cancer Rate Cited,” CT, 25 April 1984, p. D1; Bukro, “Study Finds Cancer High, Downplays Risk,” CT, 26 April 1984, p. D14; Mark Kiesling, “South Deering Landfills Must Obtain Permits or Shut Down,” DC, 26 April 1984, p. A1; Kiesling, “Confusion Surrounds SD Landfill,” DC, 1 May 1984, p. A1; Kiesling, “Right-to-Know Bill Is in Trouble,” DC, 2 May 1984, p. A3; Bob Kostanczuk, “Waste Management Calls for Environmental Impact Study,” DC, 15 May 1984, p. A2; Mark Brown, “Calumet Landfill Foes Win Delay,” CST, 15 May 1984, p. 15; Mark Kiesling, “Community Right-to-Know Bill Fails to Pass,” DC, 1 June 1984, p. A3; Kiesling, “Waste Firm Merger Questioned,” 14 June 1984, p. A1; Patrick Barry, “The Trash Clash,” CST, 15 June 1984, p. N1; Mark Kiesling, “PCB Monitoring Station Is to Be Installed Soon,” DC, 16 June 1984, p. A3; Judy Freeman, “Beating Down the Waste Dumps,” TNW, July 1984, pp. 1, 15–19; Mark Kiesling, “Environmental Legislation Has Some Success,” DC, 6 July 1984, p. A3; Larry Galica, “Study of Area Pollution Will Come Under Scrutiny,” DC, 13 July 1984, p. A1; Casey Bukro, “U.S. Study Urged for Lake Calumet,” CT, 14 July 1984, p. 5; Mark Kiesling, “Pollution Monitors to Be Installed,” DC, 14 July 1984, p. A3; Harlan Dragor and Clem Richardson, “SE Siders Ask EPA Help on Toxins,” CST, 14 July 1984, p. 18; Mark Kiesling, “More Pollution Monitoring Approved for Lake Calumet,” DC, 21 July 1984, p. A1; Casey Bukro, “Firm Seeks to Ship PCBs to S. Side,” CT, 23 July 1984, pp. 11–12; Mike Nolan, “Waste Firm Has No Plans to Bring PCBs to Chicago,” DC, 24 July 1984, p. A1; Judy Freeman, “Bulging Landfills Breed New Trash Crisis,” TNW, August 1984, pp. 1, 15–18; Mark Kiesling, “Decision on SCA Operation Is Not Expected Until Fall,” DC, 15 August 1984, p. A2; Kiesling, “Lake Calumet Monitors Due,” DC, 30 August 1984, p. A1; Kiesling, “Paxton Landfill Will Ask for Contempt of Court Order,” DC, 1 September 1984, p. A1.

30. Larry Galica, “Wis. Steel to Be Scrapped,” DC, 26 January 1984, p. A1; Helene McEntee, “Pact Signed to Scrap Most of Wis. Steel,” CST, 26 January 1984, p. 75; Larry Galica, “Bids Sought to Develop Wis. Steel’s No. 6 Mill,” DC, 27 January 1984, p. A1; Galica, “Ex-Wis. Workers Hope Demolition Will Provide Jobs,” DC, 6 February 1984, p. A1; Larry Galica, “Mayor to Rap Reagan, Thompson at Rally for Wisconsin Steel Works,” DC, 15 March 1984, p. A1; Galica, “Tempers Flare at Wis. Steel Rally,” DC, 16 March 1984, p. A1; Galica, “Wis. Workers Mark Mill Closing,” DC, 28 March 1984, p. A1; Galica, “Wis. Workers Mark Closing,” DC, 29 March 1984, p. A1; U.S. House of Representatives, Committee on Agriculture, Subcommittee on Domestic Marketing et al., Hearings—Hunger in the United States and Related Issues, Serial No. 98-63, pp. 62–64, 70–71, 2 March 1984, Chicago; Larry Galica, “2 SC Businesses Closing,” DC, 5 May 1984, p. A1; James Strong and Linnet Myers, “Wrecker Crushing Hopes at Idle Wisconsin Steel,” CT, 11 May 1984, p. 1; Larry Galica, “UNO Meeting on Jobs Draws 500 to So. Chicago Church,” DC, 12 May 1984, p. A2; “UNO Is Sponsoring Registration Drive,” DC, 21 August 1984, p. A6. Also see Frank Lumpkin to Crossroads Fund, 20 December 1983, Lumpkin, “Grantee Fiscal and Progress Report,” 4 January 1984, Jackie Schad to Greg Galluzzo, 19 April 1984, and “Statement of Frank Lumpkin,” 13 August 1984, all CRF Box 38 Fld. 474.

31. Mark Kiesling, “Thornton Township Will Get Share of Job Retraining $,” DC, 1 August 1984, p. A2; “1984 Claretian Social Development Grants Awarded,” June 1984, p. 93 (renumbered p. 61), TJP; DJG interviews with Jerry Kellman, Fred Simari, Jan Poledziewski, Christine Gervais, Bill Stenzel, Bonnie and Wally Nitsche, Betty Garrett, Paul Burak, Cathy Askew, Dan Lee, Tommy West, Tom Kaminski, Eva Sturgies, Joe Bennett, Adrienne Jackson, Marlene Dillard, John Calicott, Stanley Farier, Dominic Carmon, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Yvonne Lloyd, Len Dubi, Tom Knutson, Ken Jania, and Mike Kruglik; Edward McClelland, Young Mr. Obama (Bloomsbury Press, 2010), p. 9; Donald Ehr, “The Midwest District Story, 1925–2012,” in Communities of the Word—Stories of the Chicago Province (Society of the Divine Word, 2012), available at www.divineword.org; Donna Ulanowski, “Calumet College Adopts Elementary School,” DC, 15 December 1984, p. A5, clearly places the late Father Elmer Powell, who died in 1989, at Our Lady in 1984, but the Ehr essay makes no mention of Father Powell, instead indicating a direct succession from Farier to Carmon. On Tony Vader, see Dahm, Power and Authority, pp. 180–82, also see Catholic New World, 16 February 2003; on Joe Bennett, see Jon Yates and Charles Sheehan, “Parishioners Reeling Amid Abuse Inquiries” and “Priest Investigated in Sex Abuse,” both CT, 6 February 2006, and Manya Brachear et al., “Cardinal Lifts the Veil on Abuses,” CT, 13 August 2008.

32. By far the richest source on the history of Altgeld Gardens is J. S. Fuerst’s superb and absolutely wonderful When Public Housing Was Paradise: Building a Community in Chicago (Praeger, 2003), esp. pp. 34–35, 57–60, 78, 92–93, 114–16, 137–38, 153. Also informing this account are Altgeld-Carver Alumni Association, History of Altgeld Gardens, 1944–1960 (Taylor Publishing, 1993); Devereux Bowly Jr., The Poorhouse: Subsidized Housing in Chicago, 1895–1976 (Southern Illinois University Press, 1978), esp. pp. 42–45, 85, 175; Janice L. Reiff, “Riverdale,” Encyclopedia of Chicago, (2004); Hunt, Blueprint for Disaster, pp. 3–4, 58, 61, 62–63, 127; Jeffrey Helgeson, Crucibles of Black Empowerment (University of Chicago Press, 2014), pp. 3–6; Craig E. Colten, “Industrial Wastes of the Calumet Area, 1869–1970: An Historical Geography” (Illinois Department of Energy and Natural Resources, September 1985), esp. p. 71; “CHA Management Offices & Developments,” n.d., HWP Financial & Administration Box 2 Fld. 19; Julianna Richardson’s History Makers interview with Gloria Jackson Bacon; DJG’s interviews with Alma Jones, Gloria Jackson Bacon, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Yvonne Lloyd, Martha Kindred, Dan Lee, Salim al-Nurridin, Hazel Johnson, Cheryl Johnson, and James V. Jordan; Larry Hawkins’ CT obituary, 3 February 2009; Pam Belluck, “End of a Ghetto: Razing the Slums to Rescue the Residents,” NYT, 6 September 1998 (“In 1969 . . . Congress changed public housing policy with disastrous results for projects nationally. Instead of a fixed rent, tenants would pay a percentage of their income”), and D. Bradford Hunt’s account of a similar decline at the CHA’s infamous Robert Taylor Homes: “Between 1967 and 1974, the percentage of working-class families fell from 50% to 10%, while reliance on ADC [Aid to Families with Dependent Children] shot up from 36% to 83%. The mass exodus of two-parent, working-class families and their replacement with non-working, female head families caused the bulk of the change.” Hunt, “What Went Wrong with Public Housing in Chicago? A History of the Robert Taylor Homes,” Journal of the Illinois State Historical Society 94 (Spring 2001): 96–123, at 109.

The contemporaneous journalism is “Calumet Area House Project to Open Soon,” CT, 6 August 1944, p. S1; “Altgeld Gardens Housing Dedicated Before 5,000,” CT, 27 August 1945, p. 13; Albert G. Barnett, “Chicago Negroes Fight Housing Shortage,” CD, 7 June 1947, p. 13; “Cover Drainage Ditch, Altgeld Residents Ask,” CT, 12 August 1951, p. S1; Gladys Priddy, “Figures Tell Tale of Change in Riverdale,” CT, 3 April 1955, p. S4; Frank Starr, “Poverty ‘Inner Ring’ Grips South Side,” CT, 13 August 1964, p. 1; Gail Stockholm, “Hearings Continue on Altgeld Gardens Bus Fare Increase,” CT, 14 March 1968, p. 3A; “Altgeld Obtains New Health Facility,” Greater Roseland Newsletter, Fall 1970, p. 5, CHM; Donald Yabush, “Embattled Church Will Be 25,” CT, 20 August 1972, p. S5; Constance Lauerma, “Altgeld Gardens Wins Dope Fight, Faces Bigger One,” CT, 19 November 1982, p. S7; James Jackson, “Altgeld Dreams Reverting to Nightmares,” CT, 22 March 1973, p. S1.

Regarding Altgeld, also see Judy Freeman, “Where Have All the Toxins Gone?,” TNW, June 1985, pp. 1, 6–9; Craig E. Colten, “Industrial Wastes in Southeast Chicago: Production and Disposal 1870–1970,” Environmental Review 10 (Summer 1986): 93–105; Colten, “Chicago’s Waste Lands: Disposal and Urban Growth, 1840–1990,” Journal of Historical Geography 20 (April 1994): 124–42; Don Coursey et al., “Environmental Racism in the City of Chicago: The History of EPA Hazardous Waste Sites in African-American Neighborhoods” (Harris School Working Paper, University of Chicago, October 1994); and David N. Pellow, Garbage Wars: The Struggle for Environmental Justice in Chicago (MIT Press, 2002).

33. Emmett George and Dave Schneiderman, “Thousands Flee Acid Fumes,” CT, 27 April 1974, p. 1; George and Joseph Sjostrom, “‘Man, This Stuff Is Poison; The People Are All Scared,’” CT, 27 April 1974, p. W1; Dave Schneiderman and Jack Fuller, “Workers Draining Acid Tank; Vapors Gone,” CT, 28 April 1974, p. 1; Jon Van, “Gas Victims Help Each Other; Kept in Dark, They Assert,” CT, 28 April 1974, p. 2; “250 Altgeld Residents Meet,” CT, 3 May 1974, p. 7; Frank Zahour, “Fume Victims Still Feeling Symptoms,” CT, 5 May 1974, p. 22; John O’Brien, “Acid Leak Starts in Confusion, Ends in Probe,” CT, 6 May 1974, p. 3; Casey Bukro, “Acid Leak: Could It Reoccur?,” CT, 26 May 1984, p. 31; Melaniphy & Associates, CCNNA, Volume II: Riverdale Community Area, 1982, esp. pp. 17, 25, 30; Michael Arndt, “Mom’s Dream: Moving 2 Sons from Gang Terror,” CT, 13 December 1982, p. A19; Monroe Anderson & Casey Bukro, “An Air of Mystery at Carver,” CT, 23 January 1983, p. 4; DJG interviews with Dan Lee, Salim al-Nurridin, and Alma Jones.

Sharon Pines, “Public Housing Residents Fight for Their Health,” TNW, March 1985, pp. 14–17; Hazel Johnson to Jackie Schad, 6 June 1986, CRF Box 30 Fld. 368; Deborah Nelson, “‘Hotspot’ Air Smells, Kills,” CST, 3 June 1987, p. 10; Virginia Mullery, “Hazel Johnson,” Salt, July–August 1988, pp. 4–6; and DJG’s interviews with Hazel Johnson, Cheryl Johnson, Martha Kindred, and Bob Ginsburg most inform this brief sketch of PCR, whose surviving records are now part of the Harsh Collection at the Chicago Public Library’s very rich 95th Street branch. The April 1984 draft report and the ensuing stories were Illinois EPA, “The Southeast Chicago Study: An Assessment of Environmental Pollution and Public Health Impacts,” HWP DS Box 5 Fld. 8; Harlan Dragor, “Far S. Side Pollution No Threat, Says Study,” CST, 25 April 1984, p. 12; Casey Bukro, “S. Side’s High Cancer Rate Cited,” CT, 25 April 1984, p. D1; and Bukro, “Study Finds Cancer High, Downplays Risk,” CT, 26 April 1984, p. D14. Also see Robert Ginsburg, “Multiple Exposure—A New Approach to Pollution Control,” CBE Environmental Review, Winter 1984, pp. 3–4, 15.

Other accounts discussing Johnson’s work include Michael H. Brown, The Toxic Cloud (Harper & Row, 1987), pp. 65–92; Jim Ritter, “A Nose for Woes on S. E. Side,” CST, 22 April 1990, p. 1; John Elson, "Dumping on the Poor," Time, 13 August 1990, p. 46; Leslie Ansley, "Homesick—From the Fumes," USA Weekend, 17–19 April 1991, pp. 17, 19; Linc Cohen, "Waste Dumps Toxic Traps for Minorities," Chicago Reporter, April 1992; Josh Getlin's excellent "Fighting Her Good Fight," LAT, 18 February 1993; Michael Lipske, "Hazel Johnson: Protecting a Community's Health," National Wildlife, October–November 1993; Heather M. Little, "Toxin Shock," CT, 15 January 1995, p. WN3; Jennifer Peltz, "Living at CHA Site Called Health Hazard," CT, 24 October 1999, p. 1; Fuerst, When Public Housing Was Paradise, pp. 189–90; Frank Sennett, "An Urban Refusal," TNW, October–November 1993, pp. 9–13; three obituaries: Robert D. Bullard, "Environmental Justice Movement Loses Southside Chicago Icon Hazel Johnson," OpEdNews.com, 14 January 2011, Margaret Ramirez, "Hazel M. Johnson, 1935–2011," CT, 16 January 2011, Mary Mitchell, "Champion of Environment a Quiet Hero," CST, 16 January 2011; and Dawn Turner Trice, "Final Tribute Sought for Environmental Activist," CT, 18 July 2011. An impressive account of a CHA Local Advisory Council that did represent tenants, at the Wentworth Gardens project, is Roberta M. Feldman and Susan Stall, The Dignity of Resistance: Women Residents' Activism in Chicago Public Housing (Cambridge University Press, 2004).

34. DJG interviews with Madeline Talbott, Keith Kelleher, Grant Williams, and Stuart Pittman; Illinois ACORN to Dear Neighbors, September 1983, and ACORN News, October 1983, both Illinois ACORN Papers [IAP] Box 3, Fld. 76; Cynthia-Val Jones, "Fear CTA Service Cut for Altgeld Gardens," CD, 8 March 1984, p. 1; Jones, "Altgeld Claims Victory in CTA Fight," CD, 3 April 1984, p. 3; Illinois ACORN, South Side Toxics Project Budget," ca. August 1984, IAP Box 3, Fld. 47; "South Side United Neighbors—Transition from Grant Williams to Stuart Pittman," 20 September 1984, IAF Box 2, Fld. 33. On ACORN's history, see Gary Delgado, Organizing the Movement: The Roots and Growth of ACORN (Temple University Press, 1986), and particularly John Atlas, Seeds of Change: The Story of ACORN, America's Most Controversial Antipoverty Community Organizing Group (Vanderbilt University Press, 2010), esp. pp. 48–53, 99–101. On Eden Green, see Bowly, The Poorhouse, p. 175; Melaniphy & Associates, CCNNA Analysis, Volume II: Riverdale Community Area, p. 29; Reiff, "Riverdale," Encyclopedia of Chicago; and Rebekah Levin et al., "Community Organizing in Three South Side Chicago Communities: Leadership, Activities, and Prospects," Center for Impact Research, September 2004, pp. 19–23.

35. DJG interviews with Jerry Kellman, Bob Klonowski, Tom Knutson, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Len Dubi, Jan Poledziowski, and Fred Simari; Robert Bergsvik, "Jobless Group Making Comeback," DC, 2 August 1984, p. A2; Mark Kiesling, "Thornton Township's Share of Jobs Grant Is Still Not Decided," DC, 3 August 1984, p. A2; Kiesling, "2 Named to Task Force," DC, 10 August 1984, p. A1; Kiesling, "Job Retraining Classes to Be Conducted at TCC," DC, 6 September 1984, p. A3; C. D. Matthews, "Aid for Jobless Is Available," DC, 1 January 1985, p. A2; Naomi Schreier, "Job Retraining Program Offered," DC, 11 January 1985, p. A2. On Father Len Dubi, also see Dolores Madlener, "The Lord's Maverick," Catholic New World, 17 January 2010. On what was officially called "Prairie State 2000," see Duane E. Leigh, "Possible Alternative Uses of UI Trust Funds: A Survey of Recent State Initiatives," Washington State Institute for Public Policy, October 1986, p. 15; Robert G. Sheets and Yuan Ting, "Determinants of Business Response to Government Tax Incentives for Privately Financed Termination Benefit Programs," Policy Studies Review 11 (Autumn/Winter 1992): 222–40; and Paul Osterman and Rosemary Batt, "Employer-Centered Training for International Competitiveness: Lessons from State Programs,” Journal of Policy Analysis and Management 12 (Summer 1993): 456–77, esp. pp. 472–73.

36. Casey Bukro, “Southeast Siders Reject State Health Assurances,” CT, 21 September 1984, p. A4; Leslie Baldacci, “S. E. Siders Confront Public Health Officials,” CST, 21 September 1984, p. 6; Charlotte Chun to Robert Buchanan, “Wells in the 9th Ward,” 10 August 1984, HWP Community Services Box 16 Fld. 18; Press Release, “Cyanide Found in Southeast Side Water Wells,” TNW, 19 September 1984, HWP Development Box 5 Fld. 8 & Community Box 16 Fld. 18; Juanita Salvador Burris to Benjamin Reyes, “Concerns About Water in the 9th Ward,” 20 September 1984, HWP Development Box 16 Fld. 31; Harlan Draeger, “Cyanide in Well Water Here,” CST, 21 September 1984, p. 6; Casey Bukro, “Fear Flows over Tainted Wells,” CT, 24 September 1984, p. II-1; Benjamin Reyes to Commissioners John Corey and Jesse Madison et al., “Contaminated Water Wells in Maryland Manor (134th Place),” 25 September 1984, HWP Development Box 5 Fld. 8; Judy Freeman, “We’ve Got da Sulfur Water Blues,” TNW, October 1984, pp. 1, 17–20; Thom Clark, “From the Editor,” TNW, October 1984, p. 2; Judy Freeman, “Residents Challenge EPA Findings,” TNW, November 1984, pp. 8–9; Pines, “Public Housing Residents Fight,” TNW, March 1985, pp. 14–17; “Percy Skips S.E. Side Meeting, Riles Crowd,” CST, 24 October 1984, p. 7; Robert Bergsvik, “Percy Absence Angers UNO,” DC, 25 October 1984, p. A3; DJG interviews with Hazel and Cheryl Johnson, Mary Gonzales, Danny Solis, Phil Mullins, and Mary Ellen Montes. See also Robert Bergsvik, “Voter Drives Head into Last Busy Weekend,” DC, 27 September 1984, p. A2.

On Marian Byrnes, see Hank DeZutter, “War of the Wetlands,” CR, 5 February 1982, pp. 3, 30; Michael Abramowitz, “Chicago’s ‘Toxic Wasteland’ Breeds Blue-Collar Environmentalism,” WP, 8 November 1992, p. A3; Rod Sellers’s class presentation interview with Byrnes from February 2001; Arthur M. Pearson, “Marian Byrnes: Conscience of the Calumet,” Chicago Wilderness Magazine, Fall 2001; Illinois House Joint Resolution 16, 21 February 2003, honoring Byrnes’s work; and her 30 May 2010 CT obituary: Duaa Eldeib, “Southeast Side Activist Fought for Environment.”

37. Naomi Schreier, “State EPA Reviewing Hazardous Waste Sites,” DC, 15 October 1984, p. A5; Manuel Galvan, “Teamwork Urged to Counter Ground-Water Contamination,” CT, 29 October 1984, p. 17; Susan Salter, “S. Side Well Tests Urged Following Cyanide Find,” CST, 29 October 1984, p. 10; Mark Kiesling, “EPA Denies Petition Requesting Probe into Environmental Risks,” DC, 31 October 1984, p. A2; JSB [Juanita Salvador-Burris] to Ben [Reyes], 1 November 1984, HWP Development Box 16 Fld. 31; Mark Kiesling, “Cleanup of S. Deering Waste Site Begins,” DC, 16 November 1984, p. B2; Casey Bukro, “State to Clean Up South Side Dump,” CT, 21 November 1984, p. A4; Robert Bergsvik, “South Deering Residents Leery About Bright School Adoption,” DC, 22 November 1984, p. A2; Bergsvik, “Adoption of Bright School Is Halted,” DC, 26 November 1984, p. A1; Bergsvik, “Bright School Adoption Nixed,” DC, 1 December 1984, p. A2; Bergsvik, “Community Group Renews Its Push for Jobs Center,” DC, 1 December 1984, p. A1; “Jobs Center Closer,” DC, 6 December 1984, p. A1; Wisconsin Steelworkers SOJC, “Progress Report,” 9 December 1984, FLP Box 4 Fld. 9 and CFP Box 38 Fld. 473; Larry Galica, “Ex-Wis. Steel Workers Still Hoping,” DC, 28 January 1985, p. A2.

38. “South Side United Neighbors—Transition from Grant Williams to Steuart Pittman,” 20 September 1984, IA Box 2 Fld 33; “ACORN Organizing Committee Meeting,” 20 September [1984], “Altgeld Tenants United (ATU)–ACORN Second Organizing Committee Meeting,” 4 October 1984, both IA Box 3 Fld. 58; Press Release, “Altgeld Tenants Demand Sewer Repairs,” 10 October 1984, IA Box 3 Fld. 59;

Esther Wheeler to ATU/ACORN, 11 October 1984, IA Box 4 Fld. 60; "Odors Protested by CHA Residents," CT, 12 October 1984; "Last Organizing Committee Meeting, Altgeld Tenants Union-ACORN," 29 October 1984, "First Neighborhood Meeting of Altgeld Tenants United-ACORN," 30 October 1984, "What Is ACORN?," ca. 1 November 1984, all IAP Box 2 Fld. 32 and Box 3 Fld. 58; Press Release, "ACORN Members in Altgeld Gardens Demand Sewer Repairs," 8 November 1984, Carl Taylor, "ACORN Members Protest Sewers in Altgeld," 12 November 1984, ACORN-Altgeld Tenants United, "Facts About Our Campaign to Get the Sewers Fixed," [14 November 1984], ACORN "Press Release," 14 November 1984, all IA Box 3 Fld. 59; Altgeld Tenants United News, n.d., IA Box 2 Fld. 32; Juanita Bratcher, "CHA Hit on Sewer Crisis at Altgeld," CD, 15 November 1984, p. 1; Bratcher, "Cite $6 Mil Altgeld Repairs," CD, 20 November 1984, p. 1; Agenda, ACORN-ATU Planning Meeting, 26 November 1984, IA Box 2 Fld. 32; Perry H. Hutchinson to Superintendent Fred Rice, 28 November 1984, HWP Central Office Files Box 42 Fld. 6; Agenda, ACORN Altgeld Tenants United Neighborhood Meeting, 29 November 1984, IA Box 2 Fld. 32; Steuart Pittman, "Status Report," 17 December 1984, IA Box 2 Fld. 62; ACORN Altgeld Tenants United Monthly Meeting, 20 December 1984, IA Box 2 Fld. 58; Madeline Talbott, "Year End-Year Begin Report and Plan, Illinois ACORN," 1 January 1985, IA Box 2 Fld. 63; Leon Despres to William Walls, 16 January 1985, and Seborn E. Blackburn to Leon Despres, 21 February 1985, both HWP Central Office Files Box 1 Fld. 20; "ACORN Planning Meeting for Tour of Waste Management, Inc.," 21 January [1985], IA Box 3 Fld. 56; Illinois ACORN, "Notes on March 26 [1985] Board Meeting," IA Box 1 Fld. 10; ACORN-Altgeld Tenants United Meeting, 27 March 1985, IA Box 2 Fld. 72; Steuart Pittman, "Transition Notes," Altgeld Tenants United-ACORN, March 1985, IA Box 2 Fld. 33; Steuart Pittman to Wade Rathke, 27 October 1984, IA 2003-072 Box 1; DJG interviews with Steuart Pittman, Madeline Talbott, and Keith Kelleher. On Esther Wheeler, also see Cheryl W. Thompson, "Altgeld Gardens, City and Parks Join to Give Children a Place of Their Own," CT, 6 June 1993, Flynn McRoberts, "CHA Tries a Blend of Management," CT, 16 November 1994, and Obama, Dreams From My Father, p. 229 ("Mrs. Reece").

39. PCR Press Release, "Southeast Side Resident Release Health Survey and Call on City to Ban New Landfills on the Southeast Side," 16 January 1985, CRF Box 30 Fld. 368; "Southeast Siders Back Waste Ban," CT, 17 January 1985, p. C6; "Statement by Mayor Harold Washington," 23 January 1985, HWP Development Box 15 Fld. 26; Casey Bukro, "Mayor Urges Banning New Dumps, Tighter Rules," CT, 24 January 1985, p. A3; Harry Golden Jr., "Mayor Asks New Restrictions on Waste Disposal Facilities," CST, 24 January 1985, p. 34; Mark Kiesling and Robert Bergsvik, "City Council Extends Ban on Landfill Development," DC, 24 January 1985, p. A1; Solid Waste Management Task Force list, 6 February 1985, HWP Press Secretary Box 4 Fld. 28; "Waste Management Earns $142 Million," DC, 22 February 1985, p. B2; "City Extends Landfill Moratorium," TNW, March 1985, p. 16; Juanita Salvador-Burris to Benjamin Reyes et al., "Request for Meeting by Coalition for Appropriate Waste Disposal," 11 March 1985, and "Briefing Summary," ca. 17 April 1985, both HWP Development Box 16 Fld. 40; Robert Bergsvik, "Elimination of Landfill Is Sought," DC, 26 April 1985, p. A2; "Tough Talk," DC, 29 April 1985, p. A3; Robert Bergsvik, "Timing Not Right for UNO Protest," DC, 9 May 1985, p. A3; "MSD Takes Dump Off Its Agenda," HN, 16 May 1985, p. 1; James E. Landing, "Things You Should Know," HN, 16 May 1985, pp. 1, 5; Casey Bukro, "U.S. to Sniff Out Calumet," CT, 10 June 1985, p. 1; "Take Urgent Action Against New Dump," HN, 13 June 1985, p. 1; Violet T. Czachorski, "We Stand Alone in MSD Fight," HN, 20

June 1985, p. 1; Robert Bergsvik, "Sludge: Mounting Problem Forces MSD Land Action," DC, 20 June 1985, p. A3; Bergsvik, "MSD Agrees to Open Talks with Waste Management," DC, 28 June 1985, p. A1; Vi Czachorski, "MSD to Begin Dump Talks," HN, 4 July 1985, p. 1; and Hazel Johnson to Jackie Schad, 6 June 1986, CRF Box 30 Fld. 368. On the O'Brien Lock & Dam, see especially John Kass and Mark Eissman, "Waste Hill in Plan for Southeast Side," CT, 13 March 1984, p. B2; and also Mark J. Bouman, "A Mirror Cracked: Ten Keys to the Landscape of the Calumet Region," Journal of Geography 100 (May–June 2001): 104–10; on HN publisher Vi Czachorski, see her 11 July 2013 CT obituary: Joan Kates, "Violet Czachorski, Publisher of Hegewisch News."

40. DJG interviews with Ellen Benjamin and Roberta Lynch; "Agenda—Meeting with Mayor Washington, February 5, 1985," HWP Central Office Files Box 9 Fld. 41; Robert Mier to Benjamin Reyes, "Monthly Management Plan Status Report," 13 March 1985, HWP DS Box 2 Fld. 18; "Roseland Community" Notes, ca. 28–29 April 1985 and "Roseland" 3x5 card, n.d., both HWP DS Box 8 Fld. 9; John Betancur et al., "Roseland: Needs Assessment and Organizational Infrastructure, An Introduction," Center for Urban Economic Development, University of Illinois at Chicago, June 1985.

On Ronald Nelson's murder, see Jerry Thornton, "Gunman Kills Iowa Professor Outside Church," CT, 18 March 1985, p. A7; "Iowan Dies in Robbery on S. Side," CST, 18 March 1985, p. 22; "Police Issue Sketch of Professor's Killer," CT, 21 March 1985, p. A4; William Recktenwald, "Suspect Held in Church Lot Killing," CT, 15 April 1985, p. 6; Leon Pitt, "Sketch in Sun-Times Leads to Murder Suspect's Arrest [sic]," CST, 15 April 1985, p. 54; "Ex-Convict Charged in Slaying at Church," CT, 16 April 1985, p. A4; Tom Fitzpatrick, "Senseless Murder Haunts Courtroom," CT, 11 September 1986, p. 7; Linnet Myers, "Robber Convicted in Prof's Slaying," CT, 12 September 1986, p. A4; Rosalind Rossi, "Ex-Con Guilty of Professor's Murder," CST, 12 September 1986, p. 16; Myers, "Robber Gets Death in Slaying," CT, 9 October 1986, p. B2; Rossi, "Ex-Con Due to Die for Killing Prof," CST, 9 October 1986, p. 34. People v. Hayes, 564 N. E. 2d 803 (Ill. S. Ct.), 21 November 1990, offers a detailed recounting of the crime and Hayes's trial; subsequent affirmances of his conviction are Hayes v. Illinois, 499 U.S. 967 (cert. denied), 15 April 1991, Hayes v. Carter, U.S.D.C.N.D. Ill., 22 May 2003 (2003 USD Lexis 8650), Hayes v. Battaglia, 403 F. 3d 935 (7th Cir.), 13 April 2005, and People v. Hayes, Ill. App. 1st Dist., 4 November 2013 (2013 WL 5940308). Also see Illinois Department of Corrections Inmate Search (also providing current, full-color photos of Hayes).

41. "EDA Approves Way to Sell Wis. Number 6 Mill," DC, 7 March 1985, p. A1; Larry Galica, "Wisconsin Steel: Five Years Later, Closure Still Haunts Community," DC, 28 March 1985, p. A5; C. D. Matthews, "Ex-Employees Remember the Painful Past," DC, 28 March 1985, p. A7; Linnet Myers, "Good Times Ceased Rolling with the Steel," CT, 28 March 1985, p. C1; Frank Lumpkin to Crossroads Fund, 31 March 1985 and 4 April 1985, Lumpkin, "Grant Agreement," 26 June 1985, all CRF Box 38 Fld. 473; Tom Geoghegan to Josh Gotbaum, 5 April 1985, FLP Box 4 Fld. 12; Susan Gallagher, "Steelworkers Seek Justice," TNW May 1985, pp. 1, 6–7; R. C. Longworth, "It's Almost Over for Wisconsin Steel Plant," CT, 24 June 1985, p. C1; "Meeting Planned to Save Steel Mill," DC, 25 June 1985, p. A3; Larry Galica, "Ex-Wis. Steel Workers Told of Efforts to Save No. 6 Mill," DC, 27 June 1985, p. A1; Galica, "Wis. Steel Vigil is Planned," DC, 29 June 1985, p. A1; R. C. Longworth, "Final Days Close in at Wisconsin Steel," CT, 5 July 1985, p. II-1; "Reaction Is Mixed to GM Plant Loss," DC, 11 July 1985, p. A1; and Ranney, "The Closing of Wisconsin Steel," p. 80.

On South Works, see Larry Galica, "Union Will Try to Stop Demolition," DC, 25 October 1984, p. A1; Robert Bong, "South Works Is Finished," DC, 29 October 1984, p. A4; Larry Galica, "Demolition Begins at South Works," DC, 15 December 1984, p. A1; "So. Works Closed Until Jan. 2," DC, 27 December 1984, p. A2; Helene McEntee, "S. Works Planning Beam Output Boost," CST, 24 January 1985, p. 83; "Quit Foot-Dragging in USS Suit," DC, 18 February 1985, p. A4; Larry Galica, "Action Expected on So. Works Suit," DC, 22 February 1985, p. A1; James Warren, "Alice Peurala Regains Reins of Steel Union Local," CT, 1 May 1985, p. 3; "USS Demolition Ban Continued," DC, 13 June 1985, p. A1; Larry Galica, "USS Demolition Delayed," DC, 19 July 1985, p. A1; Robert Mier to Father George Schopp, 24 July 1985, Schopp to Frank [Lumpkin], 30 July 1985, and Paul W. Bateman (EDA) to Schopp, 2 August 1985, all FLP Box 4 Fld. 12; and Hoerr, And the Wolf Finally Came, pp. 425–26.

On Republic, see DJG interview with Maury Richards; Conroy, "Mill Town," November 1986, p. 173; 1033 News & Views, May 1982, p. 1; Linnet Myers, "Hopes Vanish Along with Steel Mills," CT, 23 October 1983, p. C1; Larry Galica, "150 to Lose Jobs at Republic Steel," DC, 6 January 1984, p. 1; Mark Kiesling, "Local 1033 Rejects Richards," DC, 26 January 1984, p. A2; Kiesling, "Local 1033 Votes to Back Richards," DC, 2 February 1984, p. A1; Larry Galica, "Republic–J&L Merger Rejected," DC, 17 February 1984, p. A8; Mark Kiesling, "Unemployment, Dumps Concerning Richards," DC, 6 March 1984, p. A2; "Richards Not Down," DC, 23 March 1984, p. A2; Larry Galica, "Union Leader Not Surprised by Republic–LTV Merger OK," DC, 23 March 1984, p. B3; Galica, "Local 1033 Leader Optimistic About Republic–LTV Merger," DC, 2 June 1984, p. A2; "Merger Combines Major Bar Producing Facilities," LTV Steel Reporter, July 1984, p. 1; Robert Bergsvik, "LTV Won't Deny Layoff Rumors for Mill," DC, 6 September 1984, p. A1; Larry Galica, "Union Griever Tosses Hat into Local 1033 Ring," DC, 26 October 1984, p. A8; Frank Guzzo, "Outlook for South Chicago Plant Dim," 1033 News & Views, November 1984, p. 1; Larry Galica, "Guzzo, LTV Officials Meet," DC, 27 November 1984, p. A1; Galica, "Union Membership Angry over Death at LTV Plant," DC, 30 November 1984, p. A1; Galica, "LTV Meeting Rocky but 'Constructive,'" DC, 1 December 1984, p. A1; Raul Hernandez et al., "Work for Less Dues," DC, 19 December 1984, p. A4; Hogan, Steel in the United States, p. 63; Larry Galica, "Protesters Demand Jobs," DC, 19 January 1985, p. A2; Galica, "Local 1033 Members Reject Job Cuts," DC, 28 January 1985, p. A1; Frank Guzzo, "Are We Satisfied with the Progress," Labor Management Plan Talk, April 1985, p. 6; Larry Galica, "Richards Ousts Guzzo in USW Local 1033 Election," DC, 29 April 1985, p. 1; 1033 News & Views, May 1985; Larry Galica, "Narrow 1033 Races Settled," DC, 4 May 1985, p. A2; "New Leader," DC, 31 May 1985, p. A2; Robert Bong, "LTV Seeks State Bail-Out," DC, 3 June 1985; Larry Galica, "LTV Tax Relief Request Rapped," DC, 11 June 1985, p. A1; 1033 News & Views, July 1985; and Hoerr, And the Wolf Finally Came, pp. 496–502, 507–12.

42. DJG interviews with Jerry Kellman, Ken Jania, Fred Simari, Len Dubi, Mike Kruglik, Tom Kaminski, Nadyne Griffin, Betty Garrett, Marlene Dillard, Adrienne Jackson, Dan Lee, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Yvonne Lloyd, John Calicott, Jan Poledziewski, Bill Stenzel, Bonnie Nitsche, Cathy Askew, Bob Klonowski, and Glee Murray; Robert L. Johnston, "In Defense of CHD," Chicago Catholic, 3 and 10 August 1984, p. 8; Marianne Comfort, "New CHD Grants Announced; Fund Effort Defended," Chicago Catholic, 14 September 1984, p. 3; Mary Claire Gart, "5 Local Projects Get National CHD Grants," Chicago Catholic, 19 October 1984, p. 7 (stating the amount was $50,000); Robert L. Johnston, "Deanery Project Links Parishes, Community," Chicago Catholic, 14 December 1984, pp. 1, 14 (citing

$42,000 rather than $50,000); “Time for ‘Time,’” Chicago Catholic, 14 December 1984, p. 8; “Time for XII Lay Ministry Training Program,” St. Victor Parish Sunday Bulletin, 10 February 1985, p. 3; Thomas Casaletto, “CHD Attacks Poverty’s Causes,” Chicago Catholic, 17 May 1985, p. 15; Renee Brereton, “CHD Proposal Evaluation Form—The Developing Communities Project,” #86-D-02-02, 7 March [1986], Joseph Cardinal Bernardin Papers (citing $42,000 rather than $50,000); Poole and Pauken, The Campaign for Human Development, p. 95 (citing $40,000); Woods Charitable Fund, Report for the Year 1985, pp. 3, 15; Marty [Adams] to Ben [Reyes], 16 April [1985], HWP DS Box 16 Fld. 47; “Woods Fund Supports Citizen Involvement,” TNW, May 1985, p. 19; Woods Charitable Fund 1985 Form 990-PF, Part XVI, 14 May 1986; Mother Jones, March 1983, p. 47, April 1983, p. 43, and May 1983, p. 52; and most crucially, of course, “Two Minority Jobs, Chicago,” Community Jobs, June 1985, p. 3. The assertion that “half” of CCRC’s budget came from church dues was an aspiration rather than reality. Kellman had advertised in Community Jobs ten months earlier, before he hired Mike Kruglik, but that ad—identical in both the July–August and September 1984 issues—had simply sought an “Organizer” or “Trainee,” with no references at all to “Minority,” “95 percent black,” “experience in the black community,” or “Affirmative action position.” “Organizer Chicago,” Community Jobs, July–August 1984, p. 7, and September 1984, p. 4. Multiple published assertions circa 2008 that Kellman also advertised in the New York Times are incorrect, as is easily confirmable: the only “community organizer” ads that appear in the Times during the first six months of 1985 are on 17 and 24 February for South Bronx People for Change and on 31 March for the Community Family Planning Council of New York City; no CCRC ad whatsoever appeared in the Times.

On San Antonio, see Donald C. Reitzes and Dietrich S. Reitzes, The Alinsky Legacy: Alive and Kicking (JAI Press, 1987), pp. 117–26. On Father John W. Calicott, see his essays “Black Priestly Vocations,” Upturn, December 1980–January 1981, pp. 12, 14; “A Practical and Real Necessity,” Upturn, November–December 1982, pp. 6, 8; “Another Beginning,” Upturn, December 1984–January 1985, p. 8; and “Church and Young People,” Upturn, August–September 1986, p. 14. In 1994, Calicott was removed from ministry on account of two allegations of sexual misconduct dating from 1976. He was reinstated in 1995, then removed again in 2002 solely on account of a change in U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops policy regarding prior allegations. See Scott Fornek and Philip Franchine, “Pastor of Holy Angels Accused of Sex Abuse,” CST, 12 April 1994, p. 4; Ingrid E. Bridges, “Controversial Priest Makes Official Return to Holy Angels,” CD, 16 October 1995, p. 3; Cathleen Falsani and Ana Mendieta, “Accused Priest Lecturing Kids About Sex,” CST, 22 January 2004, p. 8; Falsani, “Priest Ran Afoul of Policy on Abusers, Archdiocese Says,” CST, 23 January 2004, p. 9; and Cheryl V. Jackson, “Church Defrocks Popular Ex-Priest Accused of Abuse,” CST, 28 October 2009, p. 8.

CHAPTER TWO: A PLACE IN THE WORLD

1. Accounts of the Obama family’s history in Kenya are replete with uncertain dates, conflicting memories, and a plethora of relatives with multiple names or nicknames. In sorting through the history from Hussein Onyango forward, the most assiduously researched account is Peter Firstbrook’s The Obamas: The Untold Story of an African Family (Preface Publishing, 2010), esp. pp. 174, 184, and 201. Between April 2010 and December 2013, the late Zeituni Onyango, both in person and in scores of e-mails, kindly explained countless intricacies of her family’s history to me, and her autobiography, Tears of Abuse (Afripress Publishing, 2012), esp. pp. 7–8, is usually the best guide to the extended family’s genealogy. Her untimely passing is hugely mourned. See Katharine Q. Seelye, “Zeituni Onyango, Obama’s Aunt from Kenya, Dies at 61,” NYT, 9 April 2014, p. B19. Abon’go Malik Obama and Frank Koyoo’s Barack Obama Sr.: The Rise and Life of a True African Scholar (Xlibris, 2012), esp. p. 118, offers some valuable specifics but must be used with caution. See also Barack Obama, Dreams From My Father (Times Books, 1995), pp. 394–427, esp. 413, and Mark Obama Ndesandjo, An Obama’s Journey (Lyons Press, 2014), pp. 23, 277. Sally H. Jacobs’s The Other Barack (Public Affairs, 2011) is a generally reliable journalistic account. Countless newspaper stories, especially from 2007–2009, must be read with extreme caution. Stories that do merit attention are John Oywa, “Sleepy Little Village Where Obama Traces His Own Roots,” Nation, 15 August 2004; Laurie Goering, “Obama Campaign Closely Watched—in Kenya,” CT, 10 October 2004, p. 1; John Oywa, “Tracing Obama Snr.’s Steps as a Student at Maseno School,” Standard, 4 November 2008; Joe Ombuor, “Obama’s Father and the Origin of the Muslim Name,” Standard, 4 November 2008; John Oywa, “Keziah Obama: My Life with Obama Senior,” Standard, 11 November 2008; and Stephen Kinzer, “The Man Who Made Obama,” Guardian, 8 February 2009. Subsequent journalistic books have recycled materials from these stories, sometimes with citations, sometimes without. “Resume, Barack H. Obama,” Tom Mboya Papers Box 47 Fld. 5, which Betty Mooney Kirk prepared for him, notes the law firm and engineering firm employment; Obama, “Work Experience After Leaving School,” [18 May 1959], Phelps Stokes Fund Papers (PSFP) Box 214, describes multiple jobs without naming any employers. In a similarly dated “Application for Financial Assistance” to AAI, in which Obama listed his date of birth as 18 June 1934, he asserted, “I was forced to leave school in my last year due to financial difficulties at home . . . due to the fact that my father got very ill.” He also wrote that after college, “I hope to open my own firm of Civil Engineering and Architecture.”

On Tom Mboya, see particularly his own Freedom and After (Andre Deutsch, 1963), esp. p. 59, and David Goldsworthy, Tom Mboya: The Man Kenya Wanted to Forget (Heinemann, 1982), esp. pp. 61–62; on Bill Scheinman, see Joseph B. Treaster, “W. X. Scheinman, 72, Broker and Friend of Kenyan Leader,” NYT, 25 July 1999. Obama arrived in New York more than a month prior to the well-publicized educational “airlift” of Kenyan students that began in 1959 and continued through 1961. Organized under the aegis of the African-American Students Foundation, which Mboya and Scheinman created in the spring of 1959, the initial airlift plane delivered eighty-one young Kenyans to the U.S. to begin collegiate studies. See “81 Kenyans to Hold U.S. Scholarships,” NYT, 6 August 1959, p. 7; “81 Youths in Kenya Off to School in the U.S.,” NYT, 8 September 1959, p. 7; Gay Talese, “81 in From Kenya to Go to College,” NYT, 10 September 1959, p. 8; William X. Scheinman, “Higher Education in Kenya,” NYT, 10 September 1959, p. 34; Tom Mboya, “To Aid African Students,” NYT, 24 November 1959, p. 36; Albert G. Sims, “Africans Beat on Our College Doors,” Harper’s, April 1961, pp. 53–58; and Tom Mboya, “African Higher Education: A Challenge to America,” Atlantic, July 1961, pp. 23–26. Subsequent sources on the airlift include Alan Rake, Tom Mboya: Young Man of New Africa (Doubleday, 1962), pp. 172–79; Mboya, Freedom and After, pp. 137–38 and 143–46; Mansfield I. Smith, “The East African Airlifts of 1959, 1960, and 1961,” Ph.D. dissertation, Syracuse University, June 1966; Goldsworthy, Tom Mboya, pp. 116–19; Michael Dobbs’s excellent article, “Obama Overstates Kennedy’s Role in Helping His Father,” WP, 30 March 2008, pp. A1, A8; James H. Meriweather, “‘Worth a Lot of Negro Votes’: Black Voters, Africa, and the 1960 Presidential Campaign,” Journal of American History 95 (December 2008):

737–63, esp. pp. 745–48; Tom Shachtman, Airlift to America (St. Martin's Press, 2009); Cora Weiss, "From Kenya to America," NYT Book Review, 9 May 2010, p. 6; Robert F. Stephens, Kenyan Student Airlifts to America, 1959–1961: An Educational Odyssey (Kenway Publications, 2013), esp. p. 62; and Ndesandjo, An Obama's Journey, p. 25.

2. Betty Mooney to Frank Laubach, 5 June 1958, 4 and 17 August 1958, Laubach Papers Box 7; Obama to John M. Livingstone (AAI), 20 October 1958, and Obama to Gordon P. Hagberg (AAI), 30 October 1958, PSFP Box 214; Mooney to Laubach, 21 December 1958, Frank Laubach to Floyd et al., 30 December 1958, Betty Mooney to Mrs. Laubach, 11 January 1959, Laubach Papers Box 7; Hagberg to Obama, 20 January 1959, and Mooney to Hagberg, 28 January 1959, PSFP Box 214; The Key: Kenya Adult Literacy News #5, February 1959, p. 5, Laubach Papers Box 237; Betty Mooney to Frank Laubach, 16 and 24 February 1959, Laubach Papers Box 7; Obama to Hagberg, 4 March 1959, PSFP Box 214; Mooney to Laubach, 2 March 1959, Laubach Papers Box 8; Frank J. Taylor, "Colorful Campus of the Islands," Saturday Evening Post, 24 May 1958, pp. 38–39, 95–98; Edward T. White, Director of Admissions, University of Hawaii, "Certificate of Eligibility," 19 February 1959, Obama INS File and PSFP Box 214; Betty Mooney to Frank Laubach, 23 March 1959, Mooney and Helen Roberts to Laubach, 28 March 1959, Laubach to Mooney, 30 March 1959, Laubach to Registrar, University of Hawaii, 30 March 1959, Mooney to Laubach, 26 April 1959, Laubach Papers Box 8; Hagberg to Obama, 14 May 1959, Hagberg to Mooney, 14 May 1959, Obama to Hagberg, 18 May 1959, Mooney to Hagberg, 20 May 1959, and Mooney to AAI, 20 May 1959, PSFP Box 214; Mooney to Laubach, 1 and 4 June 1959, Laubach Papers Box 8; Hagberg to Loyd Steere, 4 June 1959, PSFP Box 214; Mooney to Laubach, 9 June 1959, Laubach Papers Box 8; Steere to Hagberg, 12 June 1959, Mooney to Hagberg, 6 July 1959, Hagberg to Obama, n.d. [pre–13 July 1959], Hagberg to Obama, 13 July 1959, Hagberg to Mooney, 14 July 1959, Mooney to Hagberg, 21 July 1959, Hagberg to Mooney, n.d., Obama to Hagberg, 21 July 1959, Harry Heintzen to Bruce McGavren, "Air Ticket for Barack Obama," 23 July 1959, McGavren to Heintzen, "Air Ticket—Barack Obama," 28 July 1959, PSFP Box 214; Barack H. Obama to Dr. Frank Laubach, 28 July 1959, Laubach Papers Box 8; Barack Hussein Obama, "Statement to Be Signed by Applicant for Nonimmigrant Visa," 29 July 1959, Obama INS File; Betty Mooney to Frank Laubach, 5 August 1959 ("Barack left last night"), Laubach Papers Box 8; Heintzen to File, "Transportation and Hotel Arrangements for Mr. Barack Obama," 6 August 1959, PSFP Box 214; "Arrival-Departure Record," Obama INS File; Heintzen to File, "Barack Obama," 11 August 1959, and Anna Trimiari to Heintzen, "Barack Obama," 28 August 1959, PSFP Box 214; Betty Mooney to Frank Laubach, 30 August 1959 (reporting that "Barack is at Koinonia now"), Laubach Papers Box 8. The Hawaii admissions certificate records Obama's birth year as 1934.

On Koinonia, see Timothy Miller, The Quest for Utopia in Twentieth-Century America: 1900–1960 (Syracuse University Press, 1998), p. 178. Helen M. Roberts's biography is Champion of the Silent Billion: The Story of Frank C. Laubach, Apostle of Literacy (Macalester Park Publishing, 1961). Obama expressly credits the Saturday Evening Post story in a conversation with a student newspaper reporter six months later. See "First African Enrolled in Hawaii Studied Two Years by Mail," Ka Leo O Hawaii, 8 October 1959, p. 3. Jacobs, The Other Barack, p. 92, dates the Ramogi ad to July 7, 1959; an impressive academic article, Matthew Carotenuto and Katherine Luongo, "Dala or Diaspora? Obama and the Luo Community of Kenya," African Affairs 108 (April 2009): 197–219, at 204n29, dates it to April 7; both could well be correct. Of the three Luo primers, only the second, at least as recorded in the comprehensive worldwide OCLC database, officially lists Obama as the author. See Barack H. Obama, Otieno: The Wise Man. Book 2. Wise Ways of Farming [Otieno Jarieko] (East African Literature Bureau, 1959). See also Dana Seidenberg, “Cold Warrior for Racial Equality,” East African, 7 February 2009.

3. Shurei Hirozawa, “Young Men from Kenya, Jordan and Iran Here to Study at U.H.,” Honolulu Star-Bulletin [HSB], 19 September 1959, p. 5; Johnny Brannon, “Hawaii’s Imperfect Melting Pot a Big Influence on Young Obama,” Honolulu Advertiser [HA], 10 February 2007; University of Hawaii to INS, “Report of Initial Registration,” 21 September 1959, Obama INS File; DJG interview with [Andy] Pake Zane, Abercrombie speaking in “Barack Obama Revealed,” CNN, 20 August 2008; to Dan Boykin, “’08: Year of Obama,” Midweek, 2 January 2008; in Jacobs, The Other Barack, pp. 107–8; on “A Childhood of Loss and Love,” ABC’s 20/20, 26 September 2008; and to David Nather, “Obama’s Quick Rise on a Non-Traditional Career Path,” CQ Weekly, 21 August 2008. The UH registration report to INS, like the Star-Bulletin story, gave Obama’s age as twenty-five, with an 18 June 1934 birth date. Sometime in the fall of 1959 Bill Scheinman’s African-American Students Foundation paid $143 to Obama, or to UH on his behalf, but no specific detail is recorded. “African-American Students Foundation, Inc., Obligations and Bills Due as of November 18, 1959,” AASF Papers Box A Fld. WXS-Bills & November 1959 Expenses; “From: W. X. S. Re: Four Year Jackie Robinson Scholarships,” n.d., AASF Papers Box A Fld. WXS-Bills, Mboya. See also “Kenya Students in the United States—May 11, 1960,” p. 6, AASF Papers Box B Fld. Lists—Airlift Students & Scheinman Papers Box 20 Fld. 2, listing “Barrack H. Obama,” and an undated document from sometime after March 1961, “IIE Grants $100,000,” AASF papers Box A Fld. IIE, p. 28, listing “Obama, B. H.” but not indicating any sum of money.

4. “First African Enrolled in Hawaii Studied Two Years by Mail,” Ka Leo O Hawaii [KLOH], 8 October 1959, p. 3, KLOH, 5 November 1959, p. 1; “Isle Inter-Racial Attitude Impresses Kenya Student,” HSB, 28 November 1959, p. 5; Betty Mooney to Frank Laubach, 22 October 1959, Laubach Papers Box 8; Obama (1810 University Avenue) to Gordon Hagberg, 8 December 1959, PSFP Box 214; “Application by Alien Student for Permission to Accept Employment,” 8 December 1959, Obama INS File; Harry Heintzen to Obama, 4 February 1960, Obama (1648A Tenth Avenue) to Heintzen, 10 February 1960, Sumie F. McCabe to AAI, “Barack H. Obama,” 12 February 1960, Harold M. Bitner to AAI, 15 February 1960, Elizabeth Mooney to Heintzen, 26 February 1960, PSFP Box 214. Marjorie Yoshioka, “Model UNers to Debate Race,” KLOH, 7 April 1960, p. 4; “VJ” (AAI) to File, “Barack Obama,” 19 April 1960, PSFP Box 214; Barack H. Obama (1648-A Tenth Avenue), “Terror in the Congo,” HSB, 8 June 1960, p. 8; Obama UH Transcript, 22 June 1960 (625 Eleventh Avenue), Heintzen to Obama, 11 July 1960, Obama (2036 Round Top Terrace) to Heintzen, 24 July 1960, PSFP Box 214; Sumie McCabe, “Certificate of Eligibility,” 24 July 1960, and Obama (2036 Round Top Terrace), “Application to Extend Time of Temporary Stay,” 28 July 1960, Obama INS File; Robert L. Sherman (AAI) to UH, 7 September 1960, Edward T. White to Sherman, 22 September 1960, Elizabeth Mooney Kirk to Heintzen, 24 March 1961, PSFP Box 214; Obama, “Application to Extend Time of Temporary Stay,” 31 August 1961, Obama INS File; Dorothy Heckman Gregor quoted in Jacobs, The Other Barack, p. 111; Judy Ware in Janny Scott, A Singular Woman (Riverhead Books, 2011), p. 84; Philip Ochieng, “The Pride of a People: Barack Obama, the Luo,” Nation, 17 January 2009. See also Philip Ochieng, “It’s About America’s Humanity,

Not Black Power,” East African, 7 November 2008. On Dunham’s virginal status prior to fall 1960, see Scott, A Singular Woman, p. 84.

The 1960–61 and 1961–62 Polk City Directories for Honolulu both list Barack H. Obama as living at 625 Eleventh Avenue.

At least two previous authors, including Jacobs, The Other Barack, p. 115, and a subsequent one who subcontracted out much of his research and interviewing, including to a published expert on UFOs, name Ella Wiswell as the instructor for Russian 101. In their absence of more extensive footnoting, however, KLOH, 19 January 1961, p. 5, giving a 28 January 1961 final exam date for Russian 101, and “Schedule of Courses,” KLOH, 26 January 1961, p. 8, offer a potentially decisive corrective. Four fall 1960 Russian courses were taught—101, 151, 153, 201—with 102 (which required three additional language laboratory sessions per week) and again three more advanced ones offered for spring 1961. Wiswell is identified as teaching only the advanced courses, while two sections of the introductory course were taught by Isabella Troupiansky, a 1930 graduate of the University of Paris who, born in 1907, was fifty-three years old in 1960. Troupiansky taught at UH at least from 1960 through 1961. See Modern Language Journal 46 (March 1962): 124, and Patricia A. Polansky, “Who Created Us? . . .,” Slavic & East European Language Resources 9 (2008): 174–225. Troupiansky died in 2002 at age ninety-five. Ann Dunham’s subsequent University of Washington transcript confirms that she took a fall 1960 UH Russian course, but lists it as Russian 100, presumably a typo.

5. The starting point for any examination of Ann Dunham’s early life and those of her parents is Janny Scott’s rich and valuable A Singular Woman, esp. pp. 20–23, 25–26, 37–38, 41–42. Also informing this account are Stephen MacDonogh, Pioneers: The Frontier Family of Barack Obama (Brandon, 2010); two excellent Associated Press stories by a pair of superb reporters, Allen G. Breed, “‘Toot’: Obama Grandmother a Force That Shaped Him,” 23 August 2008, and Nancy Benac, “Obama’s Gramps: Gazing Skyward on D-Day in England,” 30 May 2009; and DJG’s interviews with Ralph Dunham and Charles Payne. See also David Nitkin and Harry Merritt, “A New Twist to an Intriguing Family History,” Baltimore Sun, 2 March 2007.

6. Scott, A Singular Woman, esp. pp. 56, 58; DJG interviews with Ralph Dunham and Charles Payne; Hugh Pickens, “Barack Obama’s Grandfather Stanley Dunham,” peacecorpsonline.typepad.com/poncacityweloveyou, 6 February 2009; Beverly Bryant, “Obama’s Family Once Lived in PC,” Ponca City News, 8 February 2009, p. A1; Ann Arnold, “Vernon’s Obama Connection,” TexomasHomePage.com, 14 February 2009; Fred Mann, “Kansas Roots Show in Obama, Say Relatives,” Wichita Eagle, 2 February 2008; Rick Montgomery, “Barack Obama’s Mother Wasn’t Just a Girl from Kansas,” Kansas City Star, 26 May 2008, p. A1; Susan Peters, “President Obama: From Kansas to the Capital,” KAKE.com (Wichita), 27 January 2009. Ann’s other childhood books, all in Box 7 of the Obama Family Papers at UH and all in editions dating from between 1946 and 1950, are almost all well-known classics, including Aesop’s Fables, Pinocchio, Robert Louis Stevenson’s Treasure Island, and L. Frank Baum’s The Wizard of Oz.

7. Scott, A Singular Woman, pp. 43–72, esp. p. 47; Tim Jones, “Obama’s Mom: Not Just a Girl from Kansas,” CT, 27 March 2007; Nicole Brodeur, “Memories of Obama’s Mother,” Seattle Times, 5 February 2008; Jonathan Martin, “Obama’s Mother Remembered as ‘Uncommon,’” Seattle Times, 8 April 2008, p. A1; Amanda Ripley, “The Story of Barack Obama’s Mother,” Time, 21 April 2008, pp. 36ff;

Susan Essoyan, “Strong Women Led Obama,” HSB, 10 August 2008; most especially Phil Dougherty, “Stanley Ann Dunham, Mother of Barack Obama, Graduates from Mercer Island High School in 1960,” HistoryLink.org, 22 January 2009, which corrects errors in earlier stories; Lisa Fairbanks-Rossi, “Like Mother, Like Son: Before Barack Became a Kid in Hawaii,” Pacific Northwest Inlander, 27 January 2009; and DJG interviews with Ralph Dunham, Charles Payne, and Susan Botkin Blake. Obama, DFMF, p. 123, indicates Ann first saw Black Orpheus in Chicago while working there as an au pair during the summer of 1959, but no other evidence or recollection, including most significantly Scott’s A Singular Woman, testifies to Ann spending a summer in Chicago.

David Maraniss, Barack Obama: The Story (Simon & Schuster, 2012), pp. 135–37, 154 [hereinafter BOTS] describes Isle-Wide. Given the group project nature of its research and interviewing, specifics presented in BOTS must be treated with considerable caution. See, for example, in a publication that always must be read with the greatest possible caution, Don Wilkie, “What David Maraniss Left Out of the Story,” American Thinker, 11 July 2012. However, Ralph Dunham’s excellent memory independently confirms the Isle-Wide story.

Most loony musings about the Obamas and the Dunhams merit no citation or comment. One regrettable exception, given both the author’s vita and the essay’s venue, is Angelo M. Codevilla, “The Chosen One,” Claremont Review of Books, Summer 2011, pp. 52–58, esp. p. 54. Obama Sr. was not selected by the CIA to study in the U.S., nor was Stanley Dunham a CIA operative. First arriving in Hawaii in the summer of 1960, neither was Dunham on hand to greet Obama Sr. upon his arrival in 1959. The fascinating photo in question, of uncertain date and provenance, may well picture Stanley Dunham with Obama Sr., but if so it almost certainly dates from June 1962, when Obama was leaving Hawaii.

8. Stanley Ann Dunham Obama’s University of Washington Transcript; Barack Obama to Genevieve Cook, 1 January [1985], Genevieve Cook Papers; Stanley Ann D. Obama v. Barack H. Obama, Libel for Divorce, #57972, Domestic Relations Division, First Judicial Circuit Court, Hawaii, 25 January 1964; DJG interviews with Zeituni Onyango, Ralph Dunham, and Charles Payne; Auma Obama, And Then Life Happens (St. Martin’s Press, 2012), p. 35 (recalling later being told that “Her father is insisting that the two of them get married”); Kadi Warner in Scott, A Singular Woman, p. 91; Suzanne Roig, “Hawaii Friends, Former Co-Workers Remember Madelyn Dunham,” HA, 15 November 2008; Herbert A. Sample, “Barack Obama’s Late Grandmother Remembered,” AP, 15 November 2008.

Ann’s son would later write that “how and when the marriage occurred remains a bit murky” (Obama, DFMF, p. 22) and would tell a subsequent interviewer, “I never probed my mother about the details. Did they decide to get married because she was already pregnant?” (Ripley, “The Story of Barack Obama’s Mother,” Time, 21 April 2008, pp. 36ff.). On occasion, the younger Obama has offered comments regarding his parents’ marriage that are patently inaccurate. See Obama, Remarks at Selma Voting Rights March Commemoration, 4 March 2007; and Patrick Healey and Jeff Zeleny, “Clinton and Obama Unite, Briefly, in Pleas to Blacks,” NYT, 5 March 2007, p. A14: “Obama relayed a story of how his Kenyan father and his Kansas mother fell in love because of the tumult of Selma, but he was born in 1961, four years before the confrontation at Selma took place.” In one of the few interviews Madelyn Dunham ever gave prior to her death in 2008, she said in October 2004 that her daughter “was sometimes startling.” Asked how, she replied, “she married Barry’s father.” David Mendell, Obama: From Promise to Power (HarperCollins, 2007), p. 27. See also Mendell, “The Teachings of Toot,” CM, 21 October 2008. That comment rightly stresses that Ann did not marry against her own will, above and beyond her father's insistence.

9. “Phi Kap, Phi Beta Kappa Present Awards Tonight,” KLOH, 12 January 1961, p. 1; Robert L. Sherman to UH, 27 January 1961, Obama (1704 Punahou Street, Apt. 15) to Hagberg, 8 February 1961, Obama to Hagberg, 25 February 1961, Obama, “Application for Domestic Scholarship,” 1 March 1961, Obama to AAI, 4 March 1961, Allan F. Saunders to AAI, 8 March 1961, PSFP Box 214; “248 Students Make Dean’s List,” KLOH, 9 March 1961, p. 4; Hagberg to Obama, 10 March 1961, James K. Lowers to Hagberg, 14 March 1961, Lee E. Winters to Hagberg, 2 April 1961, Sherman to Obama, 7 June 1961, and Obama to Sherman, 18 June 1961, PSFP Box 214; Lucy Ikeda, “Petition Urges Repeal of Georgia Act,” KLOH, 19 January 1961, p. 1; E. W. Putman (president, NAACP Honolulu Branch), “Georgia Petition,” KLOH, 16 February 1961, p. 4; “Integration Pickets Greet Alabama Governor,” HSB, 25 June 1961, p. 1; “Bias Foes Greet ’Bama Governor,” HA, 25 June 1961, p. A8; Leo Egan, “Governors Asked to Back Kennedy,” NYT, 27 June 1961, p. 13; Neil Abercrombie, “Racial Equality Now!” KLOH, 30 June 1961, p. 2; Hal Abercrombie in Jacobs, The Other Barack, p. 109, confirming Obama’s presence.

One of the other leading Patterson pickets, John M. Kelly Jr., became locally famous in a very different context after founding Save Our Surf that very same year. See Catherine E. Toth, “Hawaii Surf Activist John Kelly Dies,” HA, 5 October 2007; Diana Leon, “His Save Our Surf Gave Waves a Break,” HSB, 5 October 2007; “John Kelly: Tireless Savior of the Surf,” HSB, 7 October 2007; Suzanne Roig, “Hawaii Surf Legend John Kelly Laid to Rest,” HA, 19 November 2007; and Brett Thomas and Chris Evans, “The Aloha of John Kelly,” Surfer’s Journal 16 (Summer–Fall 2007): 6, 8.

10. Obama, “Application by Alien Student for Permission to Accept Employment,” 3 March 1961, Ralph H. Holton (INS District Director) to Obama, 9 March 1961, and Lyle H. Dahlin, “Memo for File,” n.d. [10–11 April 1961], all Obama INS File; Sally Jacobs, “Father Spoke of Having Obama Adopted,” BG, 7 July 2011, p. A1; Zeituni Onyango e-mail to DJG, 7 July 2011; DJG interviews with Charles Payne, Ralph Dunham, and Virginia Dunham Goeldner; Jacobs, The Other Barack, pp. 122–24; Scott, A Singular Woman, p. 25; “Certificate of Live Birth,” 8 August 1961, Hawaii State Department of Health # 61-10641 (issued 25 April 2011); “Births, Marriages, Deaths,” HA, 13 August 1961, p. B6; “Births,” HSB, 14 August 1961, p. 24. Obama’s 1704 Punahou Street #15 address also appears in “East African Students in the United States as of December, 1961,” p. 8, AASF Papers Box B Fld. Lists—Airlift Students, and Scheinman Papers Box 20 Fld. 2. On Dr. Sinclair, see his 24 August 2003 HSB obituary notice; Dan Nakaso, “Born in the USA, Certificate Proves,” Honolulu Star-Advertiser, 28 April 2011; and Corky Siemaszko’s 29 April 2011 New York Daily News interview with his widow. One self-proclaimed secondhand witness to the 4 August birth can be entirely discounted. See Paula Voell, “Teacher from Kenmore Recalls Obama Was a Focused Student,” Buffalo News, 20 January 2009 (former Punahou teacher Barbara Nelson describing well-known Honolulu obstetrician Dr. Rodney T. West as the attending physician rather than Dr. Sinclair); see also Maraniss, BOTS, pp. 166, 276. Dr. West died in 2008. See Dan Nakaso, “Pearl Harbor Survivor a Hero to Visitors,” HA, 11 November 2007, and “Rodney T. West,” Physician Executive, May 2008.

11. Obama, “Application to Extend Time of Temporary Stay,” 31 August 1961, Obama, “Statement to Be Signed by Applicant for Nonimmigrant Student Visa,” n.d. [31 August 1961], William T. Wood II, “Memo: Obama, Barack H.,” 31 August 1961, Ralph H. Holton to Obama, 6 September 1961, all Obama

INS File; News from East-West Center #6, July 1961, p. 5, Obama to AAI, 19 September 1961, and Robert L. Sherman to Obama, 19 September 1961, PSFP Box 214; “Zeigler Gets Adviser Post,” KLOH, 29 September 1961, p. 1; Obama to AAI, 3 October 1961, Obama, “Application for Domestic Scholarship,” 27 October 1961, A. Lee Ziegler to Sherman, 9 November 1961, Allan F. Saunders to AAI, 15 November 1961 (stating that Obama “has free relations with a variety of students”), Sherman to Saunders, 28 November 1961, and Saunders to Sherman, 6 December 1961, PSFP Box 214; Stanley Ann Dunham Obama Transcript, University of Washington; University of Washington Catalogue, 1961–62, p. 5; Jonathan Martin, “Obama’s Mother Remembered as ‘Uncommon,’” Seattle Times, 8 April 2008, p. A1; Michael Patrick Leahy, What Does Barack Obama Believe? (Harpeth River Press, [1 September] 2008), esp. pp. 5–6, 31–32 (based upon 23 August 2008 phone interviews with Susan Botkin Blake, Maxine Hanson Box, and Barbara Cannon Rusk); Charlette LeFevre, “Barack Obama: From Capitol Hill to Capitol Hill,” Capitol Hill Times, 9 January 2009; Patti Payne, “Obama’s Mother Went to Mercer Island High School,” Puget Sound Business Journal, 11 January 2009; Jenny Neyman, “Obama Baby-Sitter Awaits New Era,” Redoubt Reporter [Soldotna, AK], 20 January 2009; Charlette LeFevre and Philip Lipson, “Baby Sitting Barack Obama on Seattle’s Capitol Hill,” Seattle Museum of the Mysteries, 28 January 2009 (reprinted in Seattle Gay News, 6 February 2009); Phil Dougherty, “Barack Obama Moves to Seattle in August or Early September 1961,” HistoryLink.org, 10 February 2009; Scott, A Singular Woman, pp. 87–88; Jacobs, The Other Barack, p. 127; DJG interview with Susan Botkin Blake; and, with the greatest reluctance (and only because it recounts a phone interview with Mary Toutonghi), Jerome Corsi, “New Doubts Revealed in Obama Nativity Story,” WorldNetDaily, 28 July 2009. A one-minute video interview with Susan Botkin Blake entitled “She Changed His Diapers” was posted on www.chicagotribune.com on 27 March 2007 but has since vanished from the Web. Maraniss, BOTS, p. 176, states regarding Ann that “her mother encouraged her escape, and apparently abetted it. She called a friend on Mercer Island to arrange temporary shelter.” This is a very plausible guess, but no source whatsoever is cited to support the claim that Madelyn actively aided Ann’s move to Seattle.

12. Jacobs, The Other Barack, p. 126; Robert M. Ruenitz, “I Called Him ‘Obama,’” in Naranhkiri Tith et al., “Remembering My Friend Barack Obama,” Cambodiana.org, January 2006 (now defunct yet preserved in an otherwise often unreliable Website, www.theobamafile.com/\_family/senior.htm); “Hitosubashi, UH Combine for Economic Seminar,” KLOH, 17 October 1961, p. 1; “Nuclear Stalemate Views to Be Aired at Symposium” and “Enrollment at New High,” both KLOH, 20 October 1961, p. 1; “Foreign Scholars Discuss Nuclear Arms Stalemate,” KLOH, 28 November 1961, p. 3; Kiri Tith e-mails to DJG; Neil Abercrombie, “He Protests,” KLOH, 22 December 1961, p. 4; “NAACP Group to Hear Obama,” KLOH, 12 January 1962, p. 3; Obama to Robert L. Sherman, 31 January 1962, PSFP Box 214; Ruth H. Bunche to Dear Friend, 8 February 1962, AASF Papers Box B Fld. Financial Items Bills; Sherman to Obama, 9 February 1962, and A. Lee Ziegler to AAI, 21 February 1962, PSFP Box 214; “Liberal Arts Society Elects 26 Students to Membership,” KLOH, 27 April 1962, p. 3; “A Call to All the People of Hawaii,” KLOH, 8 May 1962, p. 3; “‘Peace Rally’ Set for 3PM Today,” HSB, 13 May 1962, p. 12; George Eagle, “Peace Rally Hears World Amity Pleas,” HA, 14 May 1962, pp. A1, A2; “Marchers Make Plea for Peace,” HSB, 14 May 1962, p. 20; “Community Leaders Call for Action to Prevent War,” Voice of the ILWU, 18 May 1962, p. 5; “Barack Obama Senior in 1962,” ILWULocal142.org, 12 March 2009.

13. Betty Mooney Kirk to Harry Heintzen, 22 March 1962, PSFP Box 214; Kirk to Tom Mboya, 8 May 1962, Mboya to Kirk, 14 May 1962, Mboya Papers Box 47 Fld. 5; Helen Roberts letters of 15 May and 4 July 1962 as quoted in Jacobs, The Other Barack, p. 130; Auma Obama, And Then Life Happens, p. 32; Zeituni Onyango, Tears of Abuse, pp. 26–27; Barack Obama to “Dear Tom,” 29 May 1962, Mboya Papers Box 41 Fld. 5. Zeituni wrote that Kezia “left Kogelo for her parent’s home in Kendu Bay leaving the children behind” when “Auma was just a baby” after hearing that Barack “had a girlfriend” in the U.S. “Kezia returned to check on them but never stayed.” Tears, pp. 26–27.

14. Jacobs, The Other Barack, p. 128; Abon’go Malik Obama and Frank Koyoo, Barack Obama Sr., p. 183; “1,201 U. of H. Students Get Diplomas, Degrees,” HSB, 18 June 1962, p. 3; “1200 Students Get Degrees at UH Commencement,” HA, 18 June 1962, p. A5; “Kenya Student Wins Fellowship,” HSB, 20 June 1962, p. 7; John Griffin, “First UH African Graduate Gives View on East-West Center,” HA, 22 June 1962, p. B3 (reporting that Obama “leaves today”); Neil Abercrombie in Tim Jones, “Obama’s Mom,” CT, 27 March 2007; Jacobs, The Other Barack, p. 131; Barbara Cannon Rusk’s 23 August 2008 interview as quoted in Leahy, What Does Barack Obama Believe? p. 36; Rusk in Phil Dougherty, “Barack Obama Moves to Seattle in August or Early September 1961,” HistoryLink.org, 10 February 2009; Scott, A Singular Woman, p. 84; Janny Scott e-mail to DJG, 22 September 2011; Dinesh Sharma, Barack Obama in Hawaii and Indonesia (Praeger, 2011), p. 220; Auma Obama, And Then Life Happens, p. 37.

15. Obama to Robert L. Sherman, 13 June 1962, Sherman to Obama, 21 June 1962, Betty Kirk to Emory Ross (AAI), 22 June 1962, Robert S. Laubach to Ross, 29 June 1962, Ross to Laubach, 9 July 1962, Ross to Kirk, 13 July 1962, Obama to Sherman, 14 July 1962, Obama, Phelps Stokes Fund Application, 14 July 1962, William Cullen Bryant II to Sherman, 18 July 1962, and Sherman to Kirk, 24 July 1962, PSFP Box 214; Maraniss, BOTS, p. 183 (quoting from the Kirks’ guestbook); Obama, “Certificate of Eligibility,” 10 August 1962, Obama, “Certificate by Nonimmigrant Student,” 17 August 1962, Obama, “Application to Extend Time of Temporary Stay,” 17 August 1962, Alien’s Change of Address Card, #A11 938 537, 26 September 1962, all Obama INS File; Obama Transcript, UH, 20 September 1962, PSFP Box 214; Stanley Ann Dunham Obama Transcript, University of Washington (showing a copy was sent to UH on 30 December 1962); Johnny Brannon, “Hawaii’s Imperfect Melting Pot a Big Influence on Young Obama,” HA, 10 February 2007; Will Hoover, “Obama’s Hawaii Boyhood Homes Drawing Gawkers,” HA, 9 November 2008; “President Barack Obama’s Many Dwellings Over the Years,” BergProperties.com, 4 February 2009; Neil Abercrombie in Kirsten Scharnberg and Kim Barker, “The Not-So-Simple Story of Barack Obama’s Youth,” CT, 25 March 2007, in Jon Meacham, “On His Own,” Newsweek, 1 September 2008, p. 26, on ABC’s 20/20, “A Childhood of Loss and Love,” 26 September 2008, in Dan Nakaso, “Army Veteran Grandfather Was Obama’s Boyhood Pal in Hawaii,” HA, 14 November 2008, in Gloria Borland and Kris Anderson, “An American Boyhood: Barack Obama in Hawaii,” 2008, and in Sharma, Barack Obama in Hawaii and Indonesia, p. 28; Cindy Pratt Holtz in Maraniss, BOTS, p. 187; Yatushiro in Gloria Borland, “Barack Obama: Made in Hawaii,” Demo Reel, 2011, and in Claudine San Nicolas, “Retired Teachers on Maui Recall Young, ‘Cute’ Student Barry,” Maui News, 21 January 2009; and Barack Obama’s very rich and revealing 2001 interview with Julieanna Richardson.

Obama has recalled witnessing the astronauts’ arrival in a 22 October 2008 statement on India’s lunar launch, archived at SpaceRef.com, in Remarks at the White House, 20 July 2009, Public Papers of the Presidents [Public Papers] 2009 Vol. II, p. 1133, and in Commencement Address at Miami Dade College, 29 April 2011, Public Papers 2011 Vol. I, p. 476. Obama has incorrectly said Apollo rather than Gemini, for a review of all Apollo and Gemini splashdowns reveals that only Gemini 8 astronauts Neil Armstrong and David Scott's 18 March 1966 arrival could have been attended by Stanley and Barry. See AP Honolulu, "Spacemen on Way to Cape Kennedy," LAT, 19 March 1966, p. 1. By the time of the Apollo 8 astronauts' arrival in Hawaii on 27 December 1968, Obama was in Indonesia.

On the political obstruction Borland encountered in attempting to complete her planned film "Barack Obama: Made in Hawaii," see Emily Wax, "Obama's Link to Hawaii Not Ignored by Islanders," WP, 1 May 2013, and especially Stewart Lawrence, "Why Did Top Democrats Try to Kill a Pro-Obama Documentary?," Daily Caller, 9 September 2013.

16. Scott, A Singular Woman, pp. 97–100; Obama to Robert L. Sherman, 28 November 1962, Sherman to Obama, 30 November 1962, Sherman to Obama, 16 January [1963], Obama to Sherman, 2 April 1963, Gordon Hagberg to IIE, "Barack Obama," 18 April 1963, Hagberg to Sherman, 19 April 1963, Sherman to Hagberg, 22 April 1963, Richard C. Raymond to Sherman, "Barack Obama," 2 May 1963, Obama Transcript, Harvard University, 6 May 1963, Obama to Raymond, 13 May 1963, Elizabeth V. Murrell (IIE) to Obama, 20 May 1963, Sherman to Obama, 27 May 1963, PSFP Box 214; Stanley Ann D. Obama v. Barack H. Obama, Libel for Divorce, #57972, Domestic Relations Division, First Judicial Circuit Court, 20 January 1964; Jacobs, The Other Barack, pp. 135, 138–39, 144–61; Shachtman, Airlift to America, p. 221; Obama, "Application to Extend Time of Temporary Stay," 6 June 1963 (approved 10 June 1963), Obama INS File; Obama to Sherman, 20 June 1963, Sherman to Obama, 23 July 1963, Obama to Sherman, 29 August 1963, Obama, "Partial Scholarship Program," 30 August 1963, Obama, "Information Sheet," n.d. (falsely asserting that "I passed my Cambridge School Certificate" at Maseno School), Hendrik S. Houthakker to Sherman, 30 August 1963, Edward S. Mason to Sherman, 3 September 1963 (Obama "has a lot of native intelligence . . . I find him an impressive fellow and I think he will go far"), Sherman to Obama, 16 September 1963 (with a handwritten "P.S. No more aid unless grades improve"), and Obama to Sherman, 16 September 1963, PSFP Box 214; Dana E. Klotzle, Associate Director, Unitarian Universalist Service Committee, to INS, 21 January 1964, Inspector K. D. MacDonald to District Director J. A. Hamilton Jr., 31 January 1964, Obama INS File; Alice B. Hall to Sherman, 7 February 1964, and Sherman to Obama, 11 February 1964, PSFP Box 214; Hamilton (by Deputy District Director Robert L. Suddath) to American Consul, London, 2 March 1964, Obama, "Application to Extend Time of Temporary Stay," 21 April 1964, M. F. McKeon, "Re: A11 938 537—Barack Hussein Obama," 28 April 1964 and 19 May 1964, David D. Henry to Barack H. Obama, 27 May 1964, M. F. McKeon, "Re: A11 938 537—Barack Hussein Obama," 8 June 1964, District Director to Barack H. Obama, 9 June 1964, Obama INS File; Sherman to Obama, 17 June 1964, PSFP Box 214; (FNU) Mulrean, "Memo for File: A11 938 537," 18 June 1964, "Non-Citizen Departure Information," Harvard University International Students Office, 21 July 1964, Joseph M. O'Connell, "Report of Investigation," 22 July 1964, and "Arrival-Departure Record," Obama INS File. See also Sally Jacobs, "The Trials of Omar, Obama's Uncle," BG, 8 January 2012. Jacobs also reports, per a subsequent Obama CV that she located in Nairobi, that his proposed dissertation was entitled "An Econometric Model of Staple Theory of Development," The Other Barack, p. 160.

Several second- or thirdhand witnesses remember hearing that Ann filed for divorce upon learning about Kezia and Obama's first two Kenyan children. When Ann first learned of Kezia is unrecorded. By January 1964 Obama had been gone from Honolulu for over a year and a half; if any new knowledge came to Ann during that time, it too is unrecorded. See Arlene Payne in Scott, A Singular Woman, p. 92, and DJG interview with Jan-Michelle Lemon Kearney, who recalled her Harvard Law School classmate the younger Barack recounting that "when his mom found out about his father having this other family, that kind of ended it." Ann's subsequent UH graduate program mentor, Alice Dewey, recounted her understanding from a decade later of Ann's earlier view: "When Barack Sr. goes off to Harvard, he promises to send funds to take care of her and Barry, and he doesn't do it, and that's why she's angry. 'I don't care who he's sleeping with, I want the money because I'm trying to feed the two of us,'" Dewey recounted to DJG.

17. Dr. Tori Nishigawa, "To Whom It May Concern: Re: Mrs. Stanley Ann Dunham Soetoro," 29 April 1965, Frank R. Porter, "Officer's Review and Action Sheet," A14 128 294, 24 May and 7 June 1965, John F. O'Shea (INS District Director), "Deportation Docket Control Action Slip," 7 June 1965, Gary Fujiwara to Travel Control, "Lolo Soetoro," 30 June 1965, O'Shea to Mr. and Mrs. Lolo Soetoro, 6 July 1965, Robert Wooster to Robert Zumwinkle, "Visa Status of East-West Alumnus from Indonesia, Mr. Lolo Soetoro," 7 July 1965, Zumwinkle to O'Shea, "Mr. Lolo Soetoro," 13 July 1965, Lolo Soetoro, untitled statement, n.d., 3pp., Frank R. Potter, "Memo to File: A14 128 294," 19 July 1965, Potter, "Operations Supervisory Review," 21 July 1965, Robert Aitkin (EWC) to R. E. Soehardi (Indonesian Consulate, San Francisco), 17 September 1965, Aitkin to Soehardi, 27 September 1965, S. Ann Soetoro, "Affidavit," 30 November 1965, O'Shea to Assistant Regional Commissioner, 7 December 1965, L. W. Gilman to Deputy Associate Commissioner, 14 December 1965, J. P. Sharon to District Director, Honolulu, 12 January 1966, and Robert R. Schultz, "Memorandum for File," 22 November 1966, all Soetoro INS file.

Throughout the first six months of 1965, superb New York Times correspondent Neil Sheehan filed dozens of stories from Indonesia reporting increased anti-Americanism on the part of Communist activists and allies there. See particularly "Indonesia Seizes Third U.S. Library," NYT, 16 February 1965, p. 1, and "Moslems on Java Clash with Reds," NYT, 17 March 1965, p. 18. For contemporaneous U.S. press coverage of the violence that commenced on 30 September, see Seth S. King, "Indonesia Says Plot to Depose Sukarno Is Foiled by Army Chief," NYT, 2 October 1965, p. 1; Ian Stewart, "Army-Red Clash Stirs in Jakarta," NYT, 6 October 1965, p. 1; Seth S. King, "Indonesian Army Battles Rebels in Key Java City," NYT, 7 October 1965, p. 1; Max Frankel, "U.S. Is Heartened by Red Setback in Indonesia Coup," NYT, 11 October 1965, p. 1; Seth S. King, "Indonesia Coup Is Still a Mystery," NYT, 17 October 1965, p. 1; King, "Indonesia Orders Red Units Curbed," NYT, 22 October 1965, p. 1; Stanley Karnow, "First Report on Horror in Indonesia," WP, 17 April 1966, pp. 1, 20; King, "The Great Purge in Indonesia," NYT Magazine, 8 May 1966, pp. 25ff.; and Seymour Topping, "Slaughter of Reds Gives Indonesia a Grim Legacy," NYT, 24 August 1966, pp. 1, 16. Scholarly understanding of the mass killings was very slow to develop. See Robert Cribb, "Genocide in Indonesia," Journal of Genocide Research 3 (2001): 219–39, esp. 231–37; Cribb, "Unresolved Problems in the Indonesian Killings of 1965–1966," Asian Survey 42 (July–August 2002): 550–63; Mary S. Zurbuchen, "History, Memory, and the '1965 Incident' in Indonesia," Asian Survey 42 (July–August 2002): 564–81; John Roosa, "Violence and the Suharto Regime's Wonderland," Critical Asian Studies 35 (2003): 315–23; Roosa's superbly rich and thoughtful Pretext for Mass Murder: The September 30th Movement and Suharto's Coup d'Etat in Indonesia (University of Wisconsin Press, 2006), esp. pp. 31, 33, 91, 177, 207–8, 214, and 218; Roosa, “President Sukarno and the September 30th Movement,” Critical Asian Studies 40 (2008): 143–59; and Douglas Kammen and Katharine McGregor, eds., The Contours of Mass Violence in Indonesia, 1965–68 (University of Hawaii Press, 2012), esp. pp. 3–4 and 8.

18. Untitled INS note, 31 October 1966, Robert R. Schultz, “Memorandum for File, 22 November 1966, John F. O’Shea to Lolo Soetoro, 13 December 1966, O’Shea to Assistant Regional Commissioner, 18 December 1966, L. W. Gilman to Deputy Associate Commissioner, 19 December 1966, Assistant Commissioner to Regional Commissioner, 5 January 1967, J. P. Sharon to District Director Honolulu, 13 January 1967, Robert R. Schultz, “Adjudicator’s Basis for Decision,” 24 May 1967, O’Shea to Assistant Regional Commissioner, 6 June 1967, Sharon to District Director Honolulu, 13 June 1967, all Soetoro INS file; Stanley Ann Soetoro, “Application for Amendment of Passport,” 29 June 1967, DOS FOIA Release 200807238; Assistant Commissioner to Regional Commissioner, 21 August 1967, Sharon to District Director Honolulu, 25 August 1967, W. I. Mix, “Memorandum to File,” 4 September 1967, O’Shea to Assistant Regional Commissioner, 25 September 1967, Gilman to Deputy Associate Commissioner, 29 September 1967, O’Shea to Chief, FSS, BECA, DOS, 6 October 1967, O’Shea to Assistant Regional Commissioner, 11 July 1968, E. J. Strapp to District Director Honolulu, 29 July 1968, O’Shea to Assistant Regional Commissioner, 1 August 1968, O’Shea to Ann D. Soetoro, 1 and 22 August 1968, all Soetoro INS file; Stanley Ann Dunham Soetoro, “Request by United States National for and Report of Exception to Section 53.1 . . . ,” 21 October 1971, DOS FOIA; Kelli Abe Trifonovitch, “Being Local, Barry and Bryan,” Hawaii Business, October 2008 (first publishing of Obama’s Noelani Elementary School kindergarten class photo); Barack Obama, Remarks in Tokyo, 14 November 2009, Public Papers 2009 Vol. II, p. 1675; Press Conference in Canberra and Remarks in Canberra, 16 November 2011, Public Papers 2011 Vol. II, pp. 1433, 1440; Jackie Calmes, “President Hits His Stride,” NYT, 21 November 2011. A photograph clearly picturing young Barry and Noelani classmate Scott Inoue, with apparent Christmas drawings in the background, is said to date from their third-grade year, i.e., December 1969. Ann Dunham, and Barry, may have returned to Honolulu several weeks prior to Christmas; Ann’s 1993 résumé states she was in Jakarta until December 1969, and then again from January 1970 forward—with an implicit interruption. See Pat Gee, “Third-Grade Photo Captures Obama’s Grin,” HSB, 28 December 2009, and Scott Inoue e-mails to DJG.

19. Journalistic sources on Obama’s less than four years in Jakarta are very extensive, especially from 2007 to ’08, but almost always present memories of asserted playmates, neighbors, fellow students, and former teachers with no apparent hesitation about what clear recollections such individuals all had more than thirty-five years later. Sources critically reviewed and relied upon in this account include, in generally chronological order, Stanley Ann Dunham Soetoro, Application for Passport Renewal, 13 August 1968, DOS FOIA (stating with regard to residing overseas “Indefinite—Married to an Indonesian Citizen”); Phil Mayer, “Ex-Islander Gets Prestigious Harvard Post,” HSB, 9 February 1990 (noting Obama’s attendance of first grade at Noelani Elementary School); Obama, DFMF, esp. pp. 29–31, 36–52; Christopher Wills (AP), “Obama Mixes Exotic Background with Street-Level Experience,” 16 October 2004; John Vause’s contributions to CNN broadcasts and CNN.com on 22 and 23 January 2007; Obama on The Early Show, CBS, 24 January 2007; Nedra Pickler (AP), “Obama Challenges Allegation About Islamic School,” 24 January 2007 (quoting Darmawan); Proditia Sabarini, “Impish Obama Couldn’t Sit Still, Says School Pal,” Jakarta Post, 31 January 2007; Paul Watson, “As a Child, Obama Crossed a Cultural Divide in Indonesia,” LAT, 15 March 2007; Kirsten Scharnberg and Kim Barker, “The Not-So-Simple Story of Barack Obama’s Youth,” CT, 25 March 2007; Barker, “Obama Madrassa Myth Debunked,” CT, 25 March 2007; Haroon Siddiqui, “Obama’s Muslim Heritage,” Toronto Star, 14 June 2007; Trish Anderton, “Obama’s Jakarta Trail,” Jakarta Post, 26 June 2007; Kim Chipman and Wahyudi Soeriaatmadja, “Obama’s Jakarta Friends Recall a Would-Be Leader,” Bloomberg, 31 December 2007; Muhammad Cohen, “The Indonesian Candidate,” Asia Times, 20 February 2008; “Obama’s Former School Friends Form Fan Club,” Jakarta Post, 2 March 2008; Ed Davies, “Indonesia Left Deep Imprint on Obama Family,” Reuters, 22 March 2008 (quoting Hendro); Richard Wolffe and Michael Hirsh, “A Man at Home in the World,” Newsweek, 12 April 2008; Devi Asmarani, “Indonesian Roots for Obama in U.S. Election,” Singapore Straits Times, 14 April 2008; Roger Cohen, “Obama’s Indonesian Lessons,” NYT, 14 April 2008, Ripley, “The Story of Barack Obama’s Mother,” Time, 21 April 2008, pp. 36ff.; Christine Oelrich, “Obama the ‘Curly-Haired’ One,” Deutsche Presse-Agentur, 29 April 2008 (quoting Darmawan saying the essay declared, “I will become president”); Obama on CNN, 13 July 2008; Margaret Conley, “Obama’s Early Days in Jakarta,” ABCNews.com, 25 September 2008 (Sinaga stating the paper was in Indonesian); Mark Forbes, “Obama, AKA Fat Little Barry, Remembered,” Sydney Morning Herald, 1 October 2008; “Obama as We Knew Him,” Observer (UK), 26 October 2008, p. 4; Robin McDowell (AP), “Obama’s Childhood Home in Indonesia Up for Sale,” 28 October 2008; Obama in Richard Wolffe, Renegade: The Making of a President (Crown Publishers, 2009), p. 250; “Obama Family Rejects Liah’s Claims, Calls Her a Fraud,” Jakarta Post, 16 January 2009; Endy M. Bayuni, “Obama’s Indonesian Classroom,” NYT, 18 January 2009; Obama, Remarks to the United States Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, 10 March 2009, Public Papers 2009 Vol. I, p. 208; Obama, Remarks to Wakefield High School Students and Faculty, 8 September 2009, Public Papers 2009 Vol. II, p. 1355; Chris Brummitt (AP), “Indonesia Remembers Young Obama,” 16 March 2010; “Childhood Photo of Barack Obama in Indonesia Found,” Telegraph (UK), 17 March 2010; Andrew Higgins, “Catholic School in Indonesia Seeks Recognition for Its Role in Obama’s Life,” WP, 9 April 2010, p. A1; Kelly Heffernan-Taylor, “Indonesia: Obama’s Childhood Friends and Teachers Share Memories,” CBSNews.com, 7 November 2010; Norimitsu Onishi, “Obama Visits a Nation That Knew Him as Barry,” NYT, 8 November 2010; Haryo “Pongky” Soetendro, Sonny Trisulo et al., A Gift from Your Family: For Barack, Michelle, Malia and Sasha on the Occasion of Your Visit to Indonesia During November 2010 (Saraswati Papers, 2010), esp. pp. 6, 9, 15; Obama, Remarks at the University of Indonesia, Jakarta, 10 November 2010, Public Papers 2010 Vol. II, p. 1787, Obama, Remarks Honoring the 2011 National and State Teachers of the Year, 3 May 2011, Public Papers 2011 Vol. I, p. 488 (attending Noelani School for the outset of first grade); Scott, A Singular Woman, pp. 113–16, 126–28; DJG interview with Bronwen and Garrett Solyom, “Obama’s Elementary School Teacher Passes Away,” Jakarta Post, 10 December 2011 (Israella Darmawan); Niniek Karmini (AP), “Obama’s Transgender Ex-Nanny Outcast,” 5 March 2012; Karmini (AP), “Obama’s Former Nanny Overwhelmed by New Celebrity,” 8 March 2012; and Maraniss, BOTS, pp. 213–24, 229–43, esp. p. 220 (“no reason not to trust”). Alone among all journalistic commentators, only one writer correctly doubted the unbelievable clarity and precision of the Jakarta teachers’ supposed recollections four decades later. See Amy Hollyfield, “Yep, Young Obama Had Big Goals. So?,” St. Petersburg Times, 7 December 2007, p. A1. Likewise, claims by one Menteng Dalam neighbor and one

Matraman servant that Lolo on multiple occasions physically assaulted Ann, once leaving her bleeding, have been put in print by several journalists but are simply far too distant in time and uncorroborated to be accepted as part of a true historical record. See also Scott, A Singular Woman, p. 128. Also particularly meriting dismissal is the claim that “religion permeated Barry’s years in Indonesia,” made in Stephen Mansfield, The Faith of Barack Obama (Thomas Nelson, 2008), p. 19.

20. Obama, DFMF, pp. 29–30, 51–52; Obama in Monica Mitchell, “Son Finds Inspiration in the Dreams of His Father,” Hyde Park Herald [HPH], 23 August 1995, p. 10; Kay Ikranagara in Judith Kampfner, “Dreams from My Mother,” BBC Radio World Service, 16 September 2009 (and, similarly, in Ben Barber, “Obama’s Mother Worked for USAID, World Bank, in Indonesia,” FrontLines, March 2009); “Oprah Talks to Barack Obama,” O, The Oprah Magazine, November 2004; Obama in Charles Barkley, Who’s Afraid of a Large Black Man? (Penguin Press, 2005), pp. 22–23 (printing a fall 2004 interview with Obama conducted by Barkley and Michael Wilbon); Obama in Scharnberg and Barker, “The Not-So-Simple Story,” CT, 25 March 2007; Obama on ABC’s 20/20, 26 September 2008; “I Wish I Were Black—Again,” Ebony, December 1968, pp. 119–20, 122, 124; John Howard Griffin, Black Like Me (Houghton Mifflin, 1961); Jonathan Yardley’s luminous “John Howard Griffin Took Race All the Way to the Finish,” WP, 17 March 2007; Bruce Watson, “Black Like Me 50 Years Later,” Smithsonian Magazine, October 2011; Phillip L. Hammack, “The Political Psychology of Personal Narrative: The Case of Barack Obama,” Analyses of Social Issues and Public Policy 10 (December 2010): 182–206, pp. 190, 193; Obama Remarks at Cornell College, Mt. Vernon, IA, 5 December 2007. See also especially Gayle Wald, Crossing the Line: Racial Passing in Twentieth-Century U.S. Literature and Culture (Duke University Press, 2000), who notes that in earlier decades Ebony had published at least three illustrated stories about the downsides of passing: “Case History of an Ex-White Man,” December 1946, pp. 11–16, “I’m Through with Passing,” March 1951, pp. 22–27, and “The Curse of Passing,” December 1955, pp. 50–56.

21. John F. O’Shea to Ann D. Soetoro, 22 August 1968, Soetoro INS File (letter addressed to 2234 University Avenue returned to sender); Obama, DFMF, pp. 54, 58; Will Hoover, “Obama’s Hawaii Boyhood Homes Drawing Gawkers,” HA, 9 November 2008; Ron Jacobs, Obamaland (Trade Publishing, 2009), p. 30; Scott, A Singular Woman, p. 97; DJG interviews with Ralph Dunham, Virginia Dunham Goeldner, Charles Payne, Alec Williamson, Susan Williamson Corley, and Rolf Nordahl. See also Obama in Jackie Calmes, “President Hits His Stride,” NYT, 21 November 2011 (perhaps referencing another transit through Sydney at age eight). Bob Pratt would apparently operate a furniture store in Kailua, Kona, on the big island of Hawaii, during at least the late 1970s and early 1980s: see In the Matter of the Petition of T.S.K., Associates, Hawaii Land Use Commission #A80-482, 14 May 1981, p. 9. Per his 17 February 2005 Honolulu Advertiser obituary, Albert Robert Pratt was born in 1927 and died in Kailua at age seventy-seven. On Punahou, see especially Nelson Foster, ed., Punahou: The History and Promise of a School of the Islands (Punahou School, 1991), a beautifully rich pictorial history, and Lawrence Downes, “For Obama, Estranged in a Strange Land, Aloha Had Its Limits,” NYT, 9 April 2007, p. A16.

22. The literature on Frank Marshall Davis is extensive, but anyone interested in his life story must begin with his exceptionally rich and revealing autobiography, Livin’ the Blues: Memoirs of a Black Journalist and Poet, ed. John Edgar Tidwell (University of Wisconsin Press, 1992), esp. pp. 312, 323, and 327, and then proceed to “Bob Greene,” Sex Rebel: Black (Greenleaf Classics, 1968), which of course is difficult to obtain. Tidwell’s works are the starting point for any critical appreciation of Davis.

See Tidwell, "An Interview with Frank Marshall Davis," Black American Literature Forum 19 (Autumn 1985): 105–8; "Frank Marshall Davis," Kansas History 18 (Winter 1995–1996): 270–83; Tidwell, "'I Was a Weaver of Jagged Words': Social Function in the Poetry of Frank Marshall Davis," Langston Hughes Review 14 (Spring–Fall 1996): 65–78, esp. p. 65 ("did not survive"); Tidwell, "Alternative Constructions to Black Arts Autobiography: Frank Marshall Davis and 1960s Counterculture," CLA Journal 41 (December 1997): 147–60; Frank Marshall Davis, Black Moods—Collected Poems, ed. Tidwell (University of Illinois Press, 2002); Tidwell, ed., Writings of Frank Marshall Davis: A Voice of the Black Press (University Press of Mississippi, 2007). See also Bill V. Mullen, Review of Livin' the Blues, Black Moods, and Writings of Frank Marshall Davis, African American Review 42 (Fall 2008): 768–770 ("among the best"); James E. Smethurst, The New Red Negro: The Literary Left and African American Poetry, 1930–1946 (Oxford University Press, 1999), pp. 135–41 ("a certain distance"); Bill V. Mullen, Popular Fronts: Chicago and African American Cultural Politics, 1935–1946 (University of Illinois Press, 1999); Stacy I. Morgan, Rethinking Social Realism: African American Art and Literature, 1930–1953 (University of Georgia Press, 2004), pp. 24–25, 28–29, 184–206; Dudley Randall, "An Interview with Frank Marshall Davis—'Mystery' Poet," Black World 23 (January 1974): 37–48; Davis to Ron Welburn, 31 August 1982, in Ronald G. Welburn, "American Jazz Criticism, 1914–1940," Ph.D. dissertation, New York University, October 1983, pp. 189–90; Davis's May 1987 oral history interview with Chris Conybeare and Joy Chong of UH's CLER; Kathryn Waddell Takara, "Frank Marshall Davis," in Steven C. Tracy, ed., Writers of the Black Chicago Renaissance (University of Illinois Press, 2011), pp. 161–84; and Takara's Frank Marshall Davis: The Fire and the Phoenix—A Critical Biography (Pacific Raven Press, 2012). Takara's 2011 essay and 2012 book supplant her earlier "Rage and Passion in the Poetry of Frank Marshall Davis," Black Scholar 26 (Summer 1996): 17–26, "Frank Marshall Davis in Hawaii: Outsider Journalist Looking In," Social Process in Hawaii 39 (1999): 126–44, and "Frank Marshall Davis: A Forgotten Voice in the Chicago Black Renaissance," Western Journal of Black Studies 26 (Winter 2002): 215–27. Regarding Sex Rebel, see Davis's 1 November 1968 and 27 October 1982 letters to Margaret Burroughs in the Burroughs Papers, DuSable Museum, Chicago. See also William Grimes, "Margaret T. Burroughs, Archivist of Black History, Dies at 95," NYT, 27 November 2010. The DuSable Museum also houses a small Frank Marshall Davis archival collection.

On Frank and Helen's December 1948 move to Oahu, see especially Davis, "Inventory After a Year," Honolulu Record, 8 December 1949, pp. 8, 6; see also "Helen Peck's Marriage to Lt. Kline Told," CT, 16 February 1944, p. 17. On Frank's CPUSA affiliation and involvements, anyone must begin with Frank's FBI headquarters main file, 100-328955, whose first serial dates from July 1944 and its last from September 1963. Other sources referencing or discussing Frank in that vein are U.S. House of Representatives, Committee on Un-American Activities, Hearings Regarding Communist Activities in the Territory of Hawaii—Part 3, 17–19 April 1950, 81st Cong., 2nd Sess. (U.S. GPO, 1950), pp. 2065–68; Hawaii Residents' Association, Communism in Hawaii: A Summary of the 1955 Report of the Territorial Commission on Subversive Activities, p. 44; U.S. Senate, Committee on the Judiciary, Scope of Soviet Activity in the United States—Hearings Before the Internal Security Subcommittee, Part 41, 5 and 6 December 1956, 84th Cong., 2nd Sess. (U.S. GPO, 1957), pp. 2518–19, Part 41-A, Appendix II, pp. 2697–98, and Appendix III, pp. 2782–83; Gerald Horne, Fighting in Paradise: Labor Unions, Racism, and Communists in the Making of Modern Hawaii (University of Hawaii Press, 2011), pp. 36–

38, 129–33, 198–202, 269–70, 298–99, and esp. 330–31; and Paul Kengor, The Communist—Frank Marshall Davis (Simon & Schuster, 2012). On Jack Hall, see Sanford Zalburg, A Spark Is Struck! Jack Hall and the ILWU in Hawaii (University of Hawaii Press, 1979).

The Koa Cottages were located within the rectangle formed by Kuhio, Liliuokalani, Kalakaua, and Kealahilani Avenues. Mark Kaleolualoha Davis’s “glee” remark appeared in a 3 April 2009 comment on neoneocon.org. Stan and Barry’s August 1970 visit there is informed by Obama, DFMF, pp. 76–77, DJG interviews with Charles Payne and Dawna Weatherly-Williams, Sudhin Thanawala (AP), “Writer Offered a Young Barack Obama Advice on Life,” 2 August 2008 (quoting Maya Soetoro-Ng); Toby Harnden, “Barack Obama’s True Colours” and “Frank Marshall Davis, Alleged Communist, Was Early Influence on Barack Obama,” Telegraph [Sunday] Magazine (UK), 23 August 2008, pp. 26ff.; David Remnick, The Bridge (Alfred A. Knopf, 2010), p. 96; Kathryn Takara interview quotation (“His grandfather was one of Frank’s closest friends”) in Cliff Kincaid and Herbert Romerstein, Communism in Hawaii and the Obama Connection (America’s Survival, May 2008), p. 5; and Maraniss, BOTS, p. 270 (apparently quoting Obama). Davis was first publicly identified as the “Frank” in DFMF by Gerald Horne, “Rethinking the History and Future of the Communist Party,” Political Affairs, 28 March 2007.

23. Scott, A Singular Woman, photo section following p. 120; Ed Davies, “Indonesia Left Deep Imprint on Obama Family,” Reuters, 22 March 2008; Soetendro, Trisulo et al., A Gift from Your Family, p. 9; Obama, DFMF, pp. 31, 38–41; Obama, Illinois Center for the Book Presentation, Illinois State Library, Springfield, 7 March 2001; Obama, The Audacity of Hope (Crown Publishers, 2006), p. 346; Obama in Todd Purdum, “Raising Obama,” Vanity Fair, March 2008; Obama on C-Span Book TV, 23 November 2004; Ian Buruma, “A Free Spirit,” NYRB, 26 May 2011; Justin A. Frank, Obama on the Couch (Free Press, 2011), pp. 126, 205; Tammerlin Drummond, “Barack Obama’s Law,” LAT, 12 March 1990, pp. E1, E2; Allison J. Pugh (AP), “First Black President of School’s Law Review Uninterested in a Cushy Job,” 15 April 1990; Obama, Book Channel interview with Marc Strassman, Studio City, CA, 11 August 1995; Obama, “A Life’s Calling to Public Service,” Punahou Bulletin, Fall 1999, pp. 28–29; Julieanna Richardson’s wonderfully rich 2001 HistoryMakers.com interview with Obama; Obama on Fresh Air, NPR, 12 August 2004; Obama in Stephanie Griffith, “White House Prospect Obama Forever Changed by Asia Sojourn,” Agence France-Presse, 9 January 2007; Obama interview with Nicholas D. Kristof, NYTimes.com, 5 March 2007; Wolffe, Renegade, p. 235. See also Obama in Mitchell, “Son Finds Inspiration on the Dreams of His Father,” HPH, 23 August 1995, p. 10 (“My mother gave me a positive self-image of being a black person. She raised me on stories about my father” and indeed “I think to some extent, she romanticized black life”) and in Q&A with Wakefield High School Students, Arlington, VA, 8 September 2009, Public Papers 2009 Vol. II, p. 1352 (“she never spoke badly about him”). See as well Sharma, Barack Obama in Hawaii and Indonesia, p. xxiii: “The early formative experiences in Jakarta shaped Obama indelibly.”

24. Obama, DFMF, pp. 53–62; Will Hoover, “Obama’s Hawaii Boyhood Homes Drawing Gawkers,” HA, 9 November 2008; Punahou Catalog 1971–1972, Punahou School Archives; Jacobs, Obamaland, pp. 30, 39; Dan Nakaso, “Obama’s Tutu a Hawaii Banking Female Pioneer,” HA, 30 March 2008; DJG interviews with Pal Eldredge, Susan Williamson Corley, Alec Williamson, and Mark Hebing; Joella Edwards, “Buff ’N Blue & Black,” in Jacobs, Obamaland, pp. 60–63; Ronald Loui and Joella Edwards on Real Talk with Jack McAdoo, JMacRadio.com, Shows 9, 10, and 12, (1, 4, and 10 November 2010), and Joella Edwards, “Growing Up with Obama,” Lowcountry View with Earl Yates, 15 and 23 January 2011, Youtube.com.

Incorrect perceptions of Obama’s financial aid status at Punahou are legion. John Rowehl, “Financial Aid Explained,” Ka Punahou, 17 December 1976, p. 1, is an almost definitive guide. Punahou did not use “the term ‘scholarship’ because” that “implies that monetary assistance is given for special talents or abilities,” which was not the case. “Punahou gives financial aid only to those who cannot afford to pay full tuition,” and during the initial admissions process “a financial status form” is filled out by parents. “Usually if a family’s net income is $12,000 or more, they won’t be eligible.” In 1975–76, only 240 Punahou students were receiving aid, with only two being awarded the top sum of $1,500: “No full scholarships exist.” If a student is “granted aid, those in grades seven and up are placed in work service” totaling 100 to 140 hours per year. Not one of Obama’s many friends and classmates, nor any Punahou teacher, has ever recounted Obama working at Punahou.

On Mabel Hefty, see Susan Essoyan, “A Teacher’s Hefty Influence,” HSB, 29 July 2007 (reprinted in Punahou Bulletin, Fall 2007); Maraniss, BOTS, p. 269; and Obama’s “Remarks Honoring the 2011 National and State Teachers of the Year,” 3 May 2011, Public Papers 2011 Vol. I, p. 488, “Remarks at Campaign Rally,” 22 August 2012, North Las Vegas, Nevada, and “Email from President Obama: ‘My Fifth-Grade Teacher,’” White House Blog, 29 April 2015. On the fifth-grade year, also see Jason Hagey, “Man Who Grew Up with Barack Obama . . . ,” Tacoma News Tribune, 23 August 2008, p. A1; Chris McGann, “Basketball Buddy Remembers Years with Obama,” Seattle Post-Intelligencer, 25 August 2008, p. B1; Woody Paige, “A Special Boy Called Barry,” Denver Post, 28 August 2008, p. P6; Matt Roper, “Our School Pal Barack,” Mirror, 15 November 2008, p. 14; Ronald P. Loui in Constance F. Ramos, ed., Our Friend Barry: Classmates’ Recollections of Barack Obama and Punahou School (Lulu.com, September 2008), pp. 83, 88–89; and Jackie Calmes, “On Campus, Obama and Memories,” NYT, 3 January 2009.

25. Stanley Ann Dunham Soetoro, “Request by U.S. National for and Report of Exception to Section 53.1 . . . ,” 21 October 1971, Dunham Passport File; Obama, DFMF, pp. 62–71; Scott, A Singular Woman, pp. 90–91, 143–45; P. Huddait [?] to Mr. [Patrick F.] Coomey, “A11 938 537, Barack H. Obama,” 17 July 1964, and E. Golden, untitled memo, 28 August 1964, Obama INS File; Mark Obama Ndesandjo, Nairobi to Shenzhen (Aventine Press, 2009), pp. 110–15; Ndesandjo, An Obama’s Journey, pp. 14–20, 27, and esp. 359; Edmund Sanders, “Obama Not Quite His Father’s Son,” LAT, 17 July 2008; Robert Shenton (Harvard Registrar) to Obama, 16 November 1965, and Alice B. Hall to INS District Director, 17 November 1965, both Obama INS File; DJG interviews with Zeituni Onyango; Onyango, Tears of Abuse, pp. 26–41; Malik Obama, Barack Obama Sr., pp. 217, 228–35; Jacobs, The Other Barack, pp. 165–90; Firstbrook, The Obamas, pp. 205–6, 213–15. Maraniss, BOTS, pp. 206–7, appears to present the most accurate account of Obama’s mid-1965 auto accident, and it is relied upon here. Photographic evidence suggests that Lolo Soetoro and one-year-old Maya, as well as Lolo’s parents Tik and Titi, also traveled to Honolulu in the fall of 1971. See the three photos each dated 1971 and clearly taken in Honolulu in Soetendro, Trisulo, et al., A Gift from Your Family, pp. 13–15.

As of 2014–15, a full and accurate PDF of Sessional Paper No. 10 is easily accessible on the Web page of the World Bank. Barack H. Obama, “Problems Facing Our Socialism,” East Africa Journal, July 1965, pp. 26–33, might best be read after surveying Goldsworthy, Tom Mboya, pp. 234–38, and David William Cohen, "Perils and Pragmatics of Critique: Reading Barack Obama Sr.'s 1965 Review of Kenya's Development Plan," 24 March 2010 (unpublished seminar paper), a PDF of which is readily available on the Web. See also William Cohen and E. S. Atieno Odhiambo, The Risks of Knowledge: Investigations into the Death of the Hon. Minister John Robert Ouko in Kenya, 1990 (Ohio University Press, 2004), p. 182, and Ben Smith and Jeffrey Ressler, "Long-Lost Article By Obama's Dad Surfaces," Politico, 15 April 2008. The essential monograph for tracing Kenya's 1966–67 political upheaval is Cherry Gertzel, The Politics of Independent Kenya 1963–8 (Northwestern University Press, 1970), esp. pp. 32, 49–50, 73–124, 145–46, 152, 175–76; also central are Jet, 30 June 1966, p. 50 (reporting the expulsion of Ernestine Hammond Kiano), D. Pal Ahluwalia, Post-Colonialism and the Politics of Kenya (Nova Science, 1996), pp. 38–59, Barack Echols e-mails to DJG, and DJG interview with Barack Echols (with Echols quoting an e-mail to him from his mother). Echols was born in August 1968; Hansen's forced departure from Nairobi thus was circa November 1967. See also William R. Ochieng, "Structural & Political Change," in B. A. Ogot and Ochieng, eds., Decolonization & Independence in Kenya 1940–93 (James Currey, 1995), pp. 83–109, esp. pp. 98, 107; Kiano's 1989 interview with Harry Kreisler; a biographical citation to Dr. Kiano upon the conferment of an honorary doctorate from the University of Nairobi on 1 December 1997, available at www.uonbi.ac.ke/sites/default/files/Kiano.pdf; and Stephens, Kenyan Student Airlifts to America, pp. 8–12.

26. Jacobs, The Other Barack, pp. 177, 190–228; Firstbrook, The Obamas, p. 214; Ndesandjo, Nairobi to Shenzhen, pp. 131–33; Ndesandjo, An Obama's Journey, pp. 30–31, 131; DJG interviews with and e-mails from Zeituni Onyango, especially 22 May 2012 (reporting that Malik Obama "who has the birth certificate of David" told her by phone that it shows David was born on 11 September 1968); Onyango, Tears of Abuse, pp. 39, 79, 217; Malik Obama, Barack Obama Sr., pp. 236, 257, 261, 265; Auma Obama, And Then Life Happens, pp. 59–60; Andrea Sachs, "Auma Obama on Her Famous Brother," Time, 4 May 2012; Angella Johnson, "My Little Brother Barack Obama," Daily Mail, 9 March 2013.

Both Jacobs, The Other Barack, pp. 208, 271, and Maraniss, BOTS, pp. 246, 592, quote from an article titled "Tourism Officer on Drinks Charge" in the 4 November 1967, Daily Nation newspaper; BOTS also presents a partial photo of the article. Neither book cites a particular page number, and a careful review of the microfilm edition of the 1967 Daily Nation available in United States libraries fails to show any such article in that edition of the 4 November paper.

On Abercrombie and Zane's late 1968 visit to Nairobi, see Tim Jones, "Obama's Mother: Not Just a Girl from Kansas," CT, 27 March 2007; Kevin Merida, "The Ghost of a Father," WP, 14 December 2007, p. A12; Lee Cataluna, "Glimpse of Obama Sr. in Photos," HA, 8 August 2008; David Maraniss, "Though Obama Had to Leave to Find Himself, It Is Hawaii That Made His Rise Possible," WP Magazine, 24 August 2008; and DJG interview with Pake Zane.

On Mboya's assassination and Obama's testimony, see especially Goldsworthy, Tom Mboya, pp. 279–81; "Njenga Defence Case Today," East African Standard, 9 September 1969, p. 1; and Malik Obama, Barack Obama Sr., p. 257.

27. Scott, A Singular Woman, pp. 90–91, 143–44; Obama, DFMF, pp. 62–71, 126; Jacobs, The Other Barack, p. 229; Obama in Mitchell, "Son Finds Inspiration in the Dreams of His Father," HPH, 23 August 1995, p. 10; Obama's 2001 oral history interview with Julieanna Richardson; Obama on Fresh Air, NPR, 12 August 2004, Obama in Barkley, Who's Afraid of a Large Black Man?, p. 23; Obama on The Oprah

Winfrey Show, 19 January 2005; Obama on “Barack Obama Revealed,” CNN, 20 August 2008; Obama, Remarks at the White House, 19 June 2009, Public Papers 2009 Vol. I, p. 859; Obama, Q&A with Wakefield High School Students, Arlington, Virginia, 8 September 2009, Public Papers 2009 Vol. II, p. 1350; and Obama, Remarks at the Kennedy Center, Public Papers 2009 Vol. II, p. 1780. On Arlene Payne and Margery Duffey, see Arlene’s obituary, Andrew Kenney, “UNC Researcher, a Pioneering Academic, Kept Kinship to Obama to Herself,” News & Observer, 23 June 2014.

On Obama Sr.’s visit to Hefty and Eldredge’s fifth-grade classes, also see B. J. Reyes, “Punahou Left Lasting Impression on Obama,” HSB, 8 February 2007; Eldredge in Meacham, “On His Own,” Newsweek, 1 September 2008, p. 26; Eldredge in Remnick, The Bridge, p. 74; and DJG interviews with Pal Eldredge and Mark Hebing. Eldredge recalls Ann coming to the second, midyear student evaluation conference; Hefty’s invitation to Obama could have stemmed from that meeting. On Brubeck’s 19 and 21 December concerts, see HSB, 17 December 1971, and Brubeck Papers, University of the Pacific, Section 1.F.4.2, particularly the February 1972 Aida program, p. 34. From Honolulu, Obama went to stay with his brother Omar at 17 Perry Street in Cambridge, Massachusetts, where Ruth wrote to him on 4 January 1972 to complain that she and his Kenyan children “Haven’t heard from you in ages—perhaps you have forgotten us?” Ruth B. Obama to Obama Sr., 4 January 1972, Abon’go Malik Obama Papers.

28. Stanley Ann Dunham Soetoro, “Application for Passport by Mail,” 4 January 1972, Dunham Passport File; Mark Hebing e-mail to Serge Kovalski, 25 January 2008, Hebing Papers; DJG interviews with Mark Hebing and Pal Eldredge; Eldredge in Tani, “A Kid Called Barry,” Punahou Bulletin, Spring 2007, pp. 16–21, on ABC Nightline, 26 April 2007, and in Glauberman and Burris, The Dream Begins, p. 13; Jacobs, Obamaland, p. 78; Austin Murphy, “Obama Discusses His Hoops Memories at Punahou High,” SportsIllustrated.com, 21 May 2008; Abercrombie in Dan Nakaso, “Army Veteran Grandfather Was Obama’s Boyhood Pal in Hawaii,” HA, 14 November 2008; Punahou Catalog 1972–73; “Obama’s Ex-Teacher Expects Successful Visit,” Japan Times, 14 November 2009; Jayne Arakawa Kim in Ramos, ed., Our Friend Barry, pp. 45; Barton George, “Obama in ’73,” blogs.sun.com, 7 February 2007; Punahou’s middle school yearbook Na Opio; “Obama on Zionism and Hamas,” Jeffrey Goldberg Blog, TheAtlantic.com, 12 May 2008. On Abercrombie’s eventual 1974 UH Ph.D. dissertation, “Mumford, Mailer and Machines: Staking a Claim for Man,” see Richard Borreca, “Life Lessons from Gov.-Elect’s Thesis,” Honolulu Star-Advertiser, 28 November 2010. Either prior to admission, in 1970, or sometime during the fifth-grade year, Punahou reportedly administered IQ tests to students. Pal Eldredge, who has given all of his evaluative materials to Punahou’s archives, recalls of Obama that “he was really up there. His IQ was up there.”

On the 1973 summer trip, see Amanda Griscom Little, “Obama on the Record,” Grist.org, 30 July 2007; Jeff Zeleny, “As America Learns About Obama, He Returns the Favor,” NYT, 10 July 2008; Obama on The Late Show, 10 September 2008; Wolffe, Renegade, p. 147; Obama, Remarks on the 160th Anniversary of the Department of the Interior, 3 March 2009, Public Papers 2009 Vol. I, p. 179; Scott, A Singular Woman, pp. 139–42; Obama in David Remnick, “Going the Distance,” New Yorker, 27 January 2014; and Obama’s remarks at Senator Daniel K. Inouye’s funeral, Washington, D.C., 21 December 2012. Obama, DFMF, pp. 144–45, incorrectly dates the trip as 1972 rather than 1973.

On Obama’s seventh- and eighth-grade years, the 1973–74 and 1974–75 Punahou Catalogs as well as Kelli Furushima's rich collection of yearbooks and other materials are most instructive, as well as DJG interviews with Furushima, Mark, Joann, and Philip Hebing, Laurie Tom, Bob and Kent Torrey, Pal Eldredge, and Alan Lum; Cheryl Lister in Ramos, ed., Our Friend Barry, p. 55; Laurel Bowers Husain and Laurie Uemoto Chang, "Obama Encourages Students to 'Dream Big,'" Punahou Bulletin, Spring 2005, pp. 14–17; Carlyn Tani, "Facts About Barack Obama's Ties to Punahou School," Punahou, n.d.; and Obama, Remarks at Benjamin Banneker High School, 28 September 2011, Public Papers 2011 Vol. II, p. 1180. See as well S. Ann Soetoro to John F. O'Shea, 1 May 1974, O'Shea to Lolo Soetoro, 11 May 1974, and Douglas H. Brehm, "Memorandum for File," 23 May 1974, Soetoro INS File. On the tennis incident, see Caldwell in Ramos, ed., Our Friend Barry, pp. 51–52, and Caldwell's 2012 Jim Gilmore interview for Frontline. Ronald Loui on Real Talk with Jack McAdoo, JMacRadio.com, Show 10, 4 November 2010, endorsed Caldwell's memories ("that certainly was the kind of environment that was going on in the tennis court"). Three DJG attempts in 2014 to ask Mauch about his recollections were unavailing. On Mauch see also "Oakland Man Gets Tennis Job," Oakland Tribune, 26 December 1966, p. A22. Obama cited the incident in DFMF, p. 80, and may have alluded to it—"coaches"—in his 19 January 2005 appearance on The Oprah Winfrey Show. Obama on occasion would mention playing football in the ninth grade. See Obama, "Community Revitalization," Nebraska Wesleyan University Forum, 9 September 1994; also see Dave Reardon, "Coaching Teammates Eldredge, McLachlin Retire from Punahou," HSB, 20 June 2007. Punahou records indicate it was eighth grade.

29. Scott, A Singular Woman, pp. 156–57, Maya Soetoro-Ng in Emme Tomimbang, "Barack Obama: Hawaii Roots," 8 February 2008; Ann Dunham to Alice Dewey, 8 January 1976 and 24 February 1976, and Ann Dunham Sutoro to Ph.D. Committee, "Review and Update on Activities Relating to Ph.D.," September 1984, Dunham Papers; Stanley Ann Soetoro v. Lolo Soetoro, "Information Concerning Conciliation and Child Care," Hawaii First Circuit Family Court #117619, 15 June 1980; Dan Nakaso, "Obama's Mother's Work Focus of UH Seminar," HA, 12 September 2008; Sara Lin, "Obama Slept Here," WSJ, 7 November 2008; Will Hoover, "Obama's Hawaii Boyhood Homes Drawing Gawkers," HA, 9 November 2008; Punahou Catalog 1975–1976 (among Kelli Furushima's Punahou materials but absent from Punahou's own archives), Ka Punahou Volume 60, #1, 12 September 1975, through #24, 21 May 1976 (one of the two editors-in-chief was Steve Case), esp. Andrew Steele, "Freshpersons: A Social Guide to the Academy," 12 September 1975; Oahuan 1976; Catherine Black, "A Tradition of Innovation," Punahou Bulletin, Fall 2014; Tavares in Brian Charlton (AP), "In Honolulu, Young Obama Was Part of a Multiethnic Existence," 6 February 2007; Ann Sanner (AP), "Personal Side: The '08 Candidates Name a Few of Their Favorite and Not So Favorite Things," 20 December 2007; DJG interviews with Eric Kusunoki, Paula Miyashiro Kurashige, Larry Tavares, Greg Ramos, Tony Peterson, Keith Peterson, David Craven, Laurie Tom, Andrea Dolan Owen, and Kelli Furushima; Kusunoki in Richard Wolffe, "When Barry Became Barack," Newsweek, 31 March 2008, pp. 24ff.; Whitey Kahooohanohano in Dan Boylan, "'08: Year of Obama," Midweek, 2 January 2008; Sharon Yanagi in Gloria Borland and Kris Anderson, "An American Boyhood: Barack Obama in Hawaii," Video, 2008, Rik Smith in Scharnberg and Barker, "The Not-So-Simple Story of Barack Obama's Youth," CT, 25 March 2007, and in Sudhin Thanawala (AP), "In Multiracial Hawaii, Obama Faced Discrimination," 19 May 2008; Tony Peterson, "Obama's Depth of Mind, Ability to Grow Don't Surprise High School Friend," Nashville Tennessean, 6 February 2008 (reprinted in HSB, 15 February 2008, and Salem Statesman Journal, 12 May 2008); Peterson in David James Smith, “The Ascent of Mr. Charisma,” Sunday Times Magazine (UK), 23 March 2008, pp. 58ff., in “Obama as We Knew Him,” Observer (UK), 26 October 2008, pp. 4–7, and in Kevin Simpson, “Identity Questions Shaped Obama into New Kind of Politician,” Denver Post, 28 August 2008 (Peterson noting that with regard to DFMF “the year I knew him isn’t recorded in his book”). See also Kenji Kakugawa, “Young Mr. Obama,” my.bo.com/kenjikakugawa, 6 November 2008, and Dennis Bader, Facebook posting, 27 September 2012. Obama would later say, with apparent reference to those Poki Street years, that “my mother was on food stamps while she was getting her Ph.D.” Joe Klein, “The Fresh Face,” Time, 23 October 2006, pp. 44ff. No other sources or recollections speak to this issue.

30. Ann Dunham to Alice Dewey, 8 January 1976 and 24 February 1976, Dunham Papers; Scott, A Singular Woman, pp. 153, 157, 167–68; Stanley Ann Dunham Soetoro, “Application for Passport,” 2 June 1976, Dunham Passport File; Maya Soetoro-Ng on MetroTVNews.com, 12 December 2009; DJG interviews with Alec Williamson, Rolf Nordahl, Pal Eldredge, Alice Dewey, Ralph Dunham, and Charles Payne; Williamson e-mail to DJG; Nordahl, “Gramp’s Dream,” in Jacobs, Obamaland, p. 130; Eldredge on Nightline, ABC, 26 April 2007; Obama, DFMF, pp. 76–77; Dan Nakaso, “Obama’s Tutu a Hawaii Banking Female Pioneer,” HA, 20 March 2008; Susan Essoyan, “Strong Women Led Obama,” HSB, 10 August 2008; Allen G. Breed (AP), “‘Toot’: Obama Grandmother a Force That Shaped Him,” 23 August 2008; Suzanne Roig, “Hawaii Friends, Former Co-Workers Remember Madelyn Dunham,” HA, 15 November 2008; Dunham herself in Scott Fornek, “‘I’ve Got a Competitive Nature,’” CST, 3 October 2004, p. 12, and in Amy Rice and Alicia Sams, By the People [film], Pivotal Pictures, 2009; Maraniss, BOTS, p. 270. On “Guess Who’s Coming to Dinner?” see also Don Terry, “The Skin Game,” CT Magazine, 24 October 2004, pp. 14ff. On Bob’s Soul Food Place and the Family Inn, see HA, 16 October 2003. Another bar they frequented was the Black Cat, at Hotel and Richards Streets. Obama would later assert, incorrectly at least with regard to Stan, that by 1972 his grandparents were “voting for Nixon and concerned with law and order.” Book Channel Interview with Marc Strassman, 11 August 1995. Nine years later he would say that Madelyn was a Republican. David Mendell, “Running as If He’s Got a Rival,” CT, 13 July 2004, pp. 1, 20.

31. Punahou Catalog 1976–1977, Ka Punahou Volume 61 #1, 10 September 1976, through #18, 20 May 1977, Punahou Archives, (#5 is missing), esp. Darwin Sen, “JV Basketball and Soccer Conclude Winning Seasons,” 18 March 1977, p. 7; Oahuan 1977, esp. p. 143, “Junior Varsity Basketball Schedule 1976–77,” Punahou Archives; DJG interviews with Tony Peterson, Keith Kakugawa, Mark Haine, Dan Hale, Pal Eldredge, David Craven, Mark Hebing, Mike Ramos, and Kelli Furushima (including Kelli’s 1977 yearbook inscription); Jacobs, Obamaland, p. 46; Dave Burgess, A Tale of Two Brothers: The Keith Kakugawa Story (Lulu Press, 2009), esp. pp. 2, 23, 29–34, 47, 52, 183–84, 187, 191; Obama, DFMF, pp. 72–73, 83–86; Kakugawa in Jackie Calmes, “From Obama’s Past: An Old Classmate, a Surprising Call,” WSJ, 23 March 2007, p. A1; Kakugawa and Orme in Scharnberg and Barker, “The Not-So-Simple Story of Barack Obama’s Youth,” CT, 25 March 2007; Kakugawa on Jake Tapper, “Tale of Two Men: Senator Obama’s Best Friend Ray,” Good Morning America, ABC, 30 March 2007; Kakugawa in Peter Wallsten, “Obama Defined by Contrasts,” LAT, 24 March 2008, in Richard Wolffe et al., “When Barry Became Barack,” Newsweek, 31 March 2008, pp. 24ff., on Anderson Cooper 360, CNN, 15 April 2008; and on Real Talk with Jack McAdoo, Shows 7 and 10, 28 October and 4 November 2010; Ramos in Tomimbang, “Barack Obama: Hawaii Roots”; Orme in Rosemarie Bernado, “Punahou Alumni Celebrate Pride,” HSB, 20 January 2009; Ann Dunham Soetoro, “Review and Update on Activities Relating to Ph.D.,” September 1984, Dunham Papers; Obama on The Oprah Winfrey Show, 18 October 2006, Obama Remarks at Cornell College, Mt. Vernon, Iowa, 5 December 2007; Furushima in B. J. Reyes, “Punahou Left Lasting Impression on Obama,” HSB, 8 February 2007, and in Minna Sugimoto, “Obama’s Sweeties Quietly Campaign for Former Punahou Classmate,” KHNL.com, 5 November 2008. On Obama’s early interest in jazz, see also Russ Cunningham in Brian Charlton (AP), “In Honolulu, Young Obama Was Part of a Multiethnic Existence,” 6 February 2007, Dean Ando in Reyes, “Punahou Left Lasting Impression on Obama,” and Jann S. Wenner, “A Conversation with Barack Obama,” Rolling Stone #1056-57, 10 July 2008 (“When I was in high school, probably my sophomore or junior year, I started getting into jazz”). Kakugawa’s and Ramos’s memories disagree about when the Schofield party occurred; Ramos’s dating of it fits better with all other evidence. Regarding his feelings concerning his mother’s absence, Obama in 2006 would say, “I’m somebody who did not get a lot of attention as a very young person” and in 2008 he would allow, “in retrospect, it was probably harder on me than I cared to admit” and “I suspect it had more of an impact than I know.” Jimmie Briggs, “A Man of Vision,” Essence, October 2006, p. 160; 20/20, ABC, 26 September 2008; Remnick, The Bridge, p. 83. Apropos of Kakugawa’s insistence, Obama on one occasion would explicitly acknowledge, “the trouble I had didn’t have to do with being black. It had to do with the fact that I had this funny name, Barack Obama . . . You wish your name was Tim Smith.” Fresh Air, NPR, 12 August 2004. Almost alone among subsequent commentators, Nicholas Lemann, “The Cipher,” TNR, 25 October 2012, pp. 28–31, bluntly confronts Ann’s behavior and its impact: “she consistently decided, from the time he was about ten, to structure her life so that she spent almost no time with him,” and Barry “sensed this and resented it deeply.” See also Paul H. Elovitz, “A Comparative Psychohistory of McCain and Obama,” Journal of Psychohistory 36 (Fall 2008): 98–143, at 130 (“his sense of abandonment by his parents”). Observers who speak of “how carefully his mother sheltered him from the harsh reality of paternal abandonment” are missing at least half of the picture. David Lauter, “Review,” LAT, 17 June 2012. Obama could more easily acknowledge his father’s absence, once remarking, “I know the toll it took on me, not having a father in the house.” Julie Bosman, “Obama Calls for More Responsibility from Black Fathers,” NYT, 16 June 2008.

32. “Who Is the Real Barack Obama?,” Good Morning America, ABC, 9 February 2007; Scott Fornek, “‘Blessed by God,’ Rooted in Two Continents,” CST, 22 January 2003, p. 8; Burgess, A Tale of Two Brothers, pp. 183–84; DJG interviews with Keith Kakugawa, Mark Haine, Pal Eldredge, Bob Torrey, Jim Iams, Jay Seidenstein, Tom Topolinski, Mike Ramos, Greg Ramos, Dan Hale, and Mark, Joann, and Philip Hebing; Wayne Weightman e-mail to DJG; Kakugawa in Serge F. Kovalski, “Old Friends Say Drugs Played Only Bit Part in Obama’s Young Life,” NYT, 9 February 2008, p. A1; Topolinski’s interview with Jim Gilmore for Frontline; Topolinski comments of 25 November and 12 December 2007 on politicalticker.blogs.cnn.com; Weightman in Doug Ward, “U.S. Democrats Hope Vancouver Convention Can Help Change the World,” Vancouver Sun, 14 April 2008; Punahou Catalog 1977–78 and 1978–79, esp. pp. 60, 86; Bill Messer in David James, “Meet Barack Obama’s Welsh Teacher,” Western Mail, 15 December 2008; and “Ex-Teacher on ‘Oddly Quiet’ Obama,” BBCNews.com, 20 January 2009; Alicia Eler, “President Obama Pens Personal Apology to Art Historian,” Hyperallergic.com, 18 February 2014; Linne Nickelsen-Willis, “The Narc Squad,” in Ramos, ed., Our Friend Barry, pp. 60–62; Ka

Punahou Vol. 62 #1, 9 September 1977, through #18, 19 May 1978, especially Steve Yamane, “Cagers Win Four in Row,” 16 December 1977, p. 8, Natalie Steele, “Vars. AA Cagers Upset First Place University High,” 17 February 1978, p. 7, “Vars. A Cagers Close Out ILH Season Finishing Fifth,” 3 March 1978, p. 7; Oahuan 1978, esp. p. 163; Titcomb in Tani, “A Kid Called Barry,” Punahou Bulletin, Spring 2007, pp. 16–21. The third member of “The Narc Squad” was Tom Krieger. On the widespread presence of pakalolo in 1970s Honolulu, see Michael Corcoran, “Obama’s Oahu,” Austin American Statesman, 9 November 2008, p. G1: “The pungent odor of marijuana could be smelled everywhere: movie theaters, Waikiki sidewalks, the Kam Drive In swap meets. . . . Everybody in Hawaii was getting high in the ’70s.” On the Bendix family, see Mark’s younger sister Dyno in David Keyes, “Remembering a Kid Named ‘Barry,’” Bonner County Daily Bee, 27 December 2007. Obama, DFMF, p. 80, describes “our assistant basketball coach” once using the word “niggers,” but none of Obama’s teammates or friends has ever made reference to any such incident.

33. Ann Dunham Sutoro to Ph.D. Committee, “Review and Update on Activities Relating to Ph.D.,” September 1984, Dunham to Alice Dewey, 28 July 1978, and Dunham résumé, ca. 1993, Dunham Papers; Judith Kampner, “The Untold Story of Obama’s Mother,” Independent, 16 September 2009; Christine Finn and Tony Allen-Mills, “Jungle Angel Was Barack Obama’s Mother,” Times, 8 November 2009; S. Ann Dunham, Surviving Against the Odds: Village Industry in Indonesia (Duke University Press, 2009), pp. xxxi and 299; Titcomb in Amy Rice and Alicia Sams, By the People, Pivotal Pictures, 2009; DJG interviews with Alice Dewey, Kelli Furushima, Kent Torrey, Annette Yee, Clyde Higa, Dawna Weatherly-Williams, Mark Hebing, Ian Mattoch, David Craven, and Tom Topolinski; Kelli Furushima in Hans Nichols, “In Hawaii, Media Surfs Obama’s Past,” Politico, 14 March 2007, and on Anderson Cooper 360, CNN, 15 April 2008; Scott Fornek, “Barack Obama,” CST, 1 March 2004, p. 6; Obama on CNBC, 18 November 2006; Ann Sanner (AP), “Personal Side: The ’08 Candidates Name a Few of Their Favorite and Not So Favorite Things,” 20 December 2007; Sudhin Thanawala (AP), “Obama Worked to Fit In at Elite School,” 26 March 2008; Obama in Kenneth T. Walsh, “Becoming Barack Obama,” U.S. News, 9 June 2008, p. 17; Obama, “Here’s the Scoop,” LinkedIn.com, 25 February 2016; Punahou Catalog 1978–79, esp. pp. 28, 60, 63–80; Arlene Kishi, “Mattoch Explores ‘Law and Society,’” Ka Punahou, 2 April 1976; Ka Punahou Vol. 63 #1, 8 September 1978, through #17, 24 May 1979; Law and Society syllabus from 1980 and other materials in the Ian Mattoch Papers, Honolulu; Samuel Mermin, Law and the Legal System: An Introduction (Little Brown, 1973); Connie Ramos in Ramos, ed., Our Friend Barry, p. 14; Barry Obama, “The Old Man,” Ka Punahou, 15 December 1978, p. 5 (reprinted in Ka Wai Ola, 26th ed., May 1979, p. 65; the first comma in the fifth line is omitted in the newspaper copy); Mariko Gordon in Daruma Newsletter, November 2008, and Bernice Glenn Bowers in Dan Nakaso, “Hawaii Democrats Plan Parties Hoping to Celebrate Obama Win,” HA, 3 November 2008. On Mermin, a 1936 graduate of Yale Law School, see “Memorial Resolution of the Faculty of the University of Wisconsin–Madison on the Death of Professor Emeritus Samuel Mermin,” 7 April 2008.

In contrast to Scott, A Singular Woman, pp. 192–93, Dunham’s 1984 and 1993 timeline summaries indicate she did not return to Honolulu again in 1978 after departing for Indonesia in late May. On Obama at Baskin-Robbins, also most guardedly see Matt Pearl, “Kenmore Native Is Obama’s Former Teacher,” WGRZ.com, 21 January 2009. In the 26 March 2006 AP story, Obama also mentions working at “a burger chain,” with the apparent implication that this also was summer 1978.

34. Tyler Dacey and Darwin Sen, “McLachlin Ends Sabbatical,” Ka Punahou, 22 April 1977, p. 6; Leslyn Leu, “AA Captures Tournament,” KP, 15 December 1978, p. 11; Punahou School Varsity AA Roster 1978–79 and 1978–79 Varsity AA Basketball Schedule (annotated with scores), Punahou Archives; Stephen Greaney, “Basketball Proves Power,” KP, 26 January 1979, p. 8; Layne Yamada and Heather Murakami, “Basketball Team Shoots for More Wins,” KP, 9 February 1979, p. 7; Sean Brennan, “Varsity Shows Spunk,” KP, 23 February 1979, p. 4; Clyde Mizumoto, “At Last! Puns Nab ILH Title,” HA, 6 March 1979, pp. E1, E2; “State Prep Meet Today,” HA, 8 March 1979, p. D1; Troy Egami, “Chris Teaches Champ ‘Psychos’” and Jim Ashford, “Basketball Wins ILH Title,” KP, 9 March 1979, p. 11; “Punahou 77, Kapaa 29,” HA, 9 March 1979, p. D3; Clyde Mizumoto and Steve Kimura, “Moanalua, Puns in Finals Tonight,” HA, 10 March 1979, pp. D1, D6; Mizumoto, “Punahou Takes State Title,” HA, 11 March 1979, pp. K1, K4; Troy Egami, “Basketball Triumphs After 3 Year Drought,” KP, 16 April 1979, pp. 4–5; Carita Zimmerman, “McLachlin Quits Coaching,” KP, 24 May 1979, p. 2; Barry Obama, “Winner,” Oahuan 1979, p. 104; DJG interviews with Chris McLachlin, Tom Topolinski, Mike Ramos, Larry Tavares, Dan Hale, Alan Lum, and Greg Ramos; Obama in Mendell, Obama, p. 48; Lum in Brian Charlton (AP), “In Honolulu, Young Obama Was Part of a Multiethnic Existence,” 6 February 2007; McLachlin in Tani, “A Kid Called Barry”; Lum and Obama in Todd Purdum, “Raising Obama,” Vanity Fair, March 2008; Obama in Bryant Gumbel, “The Audacity of Hoops,” HBO Sports, 15 April 2008, and Ann Sanner (AP), “Obama Says He Looked to Basketball in His Youth,” 16 April 2008 (“improvisation”); Austin Murphy, “Obama Discusses His Hoops Memories at Punahou High,” SportsIllustrated.com, 21 May 2008; Jaymes Song (AP), “Obama Finds Refuge, Identity in Basketball,” 16 June 2008, McLachlin in Harnden, “Barack Obama’s True Colours,” and in Remnick, The Bridge, p. 92; Allison Schaefer, “Punahou Rejoices in Success of Obama,” HSB, 5 November 2008. Also see David Chircop, “Young Obama Impressed Teacher in Hawaii,” Everett Herald, 18 January 2009.

35. Obama in Barkley, Who’s Afraid of a Large Black Man?, pp. 23, 26; Obama, DFMF, pp. 93–96; Obama on The Friday Night Show, WTTW.com, 3 December 2004; Obama’s 2001 interview with Julieanna Richardson; DJG interviews with Annette Yee, Kent Torrey, Tom Topolinski, Dan Hale, Mark Hebing, and Mike Ramos; McLachlin on Orme in Hans Nichols, “In Hawaii, Media Surfs Obama’s Past,” Politico, 14 March 2007; Orme and Titcomb in Tani, “A Kid Named Barry”; Topolinski interview with Jim Gilmore; “KP’s Illustrated Guide to Punahou Sapiens,” Ka Punahou, 26 January 1979, p. 5; Madelyn in Scott Fornek, “I’ve Got a Competitive Nature,” CST, 3 October 2004, p. 12; Obama in David Remnick, “Going the Distance,” New Yorker, 27 January 2014; Titcomb in Tomimbang, “Barack Obama: Hawaii Roots.” See also Jessica Curry, “Barack Obama: Under the Lights,” Chicago Life, Fall 2004 (“during my teenage years, I engaged in a lot of antisocial behavior”), and Obama, TAOH, p. 30 (“my rejection of authority spilled into self-indulgence and self-destructiveness”). With regard to six-packs, Obama in 2001 would remark, “I might have drunk a six-pack in an hour before going back to class,” but seven years later said, “I would have two, three beers probably a day for certain periods of time” during high school. Obama’s 2001 interview with Julieanna Richardson and 20/20, ABC, 26 September 2008. On Titcomb’s father and family, see Curtis Lum, “Frederick Titcomb, Retired Judge,” HA, 14 March 2000, Lori Tighe, “Colorful Magistrate, Isle Actor Frederick Titcomb Dies,” HSB, 14 March 2000, and a 9 May 2010 obituary item at titcombfamilyhistory.blogspot.com.

36. Obama, DFMF, p. 270; DJG interviews with Paula Kurashige, Eric Kusunoki, Keith Peterson, and

Kim Jones Nelson; Kusunoki in Will Hoover, “Obama’s Declaration Stirs Thrills at Punahou,” HA, 11 February 2007, in Richard Serrano, “Obama Classmates Saw a Smile, But No Racial Turmoil,” LAT, 11 March 2007, in Hans Nichols, “Angry Obama the Pothead Is Not How They Remember Him in Hawaii,” Telegraph (UK), 25 March 2007, on “The Candidates: Barack Obama,” MSNBC, 20 February 2008, in Borland and Anderson, “An American Boyhood,” in Remnick, The Bridge, p. 78, in Sasha Abramsky, Inside Obama’s Brain (Portfolio, 2010), p. 25, and on Martin Kaste, “Hawaii Prep School Gave Obama Window to Success,” NPR, 12 October 2012; Bart Burford, “Barry and Me,” in Jacobs, Obamaland, pp. 58–59; Furushima in Nichols, “Angry Obama”; Titcomb in Tomimbang, “Barack Obama”; Hebing in Serrano, “Obama Classmates”; Ramos and Haworth in Ramos, ed., Our Friend Barry, pp. 11, 78; Kolivas in Heidi Chang, “Hawaii Helped Shape Barack Obama,” VOANews.com, 12 August 2008; Charles Payne on Chicago Tonight, WTTW, 12 February 2007; Dan Nakaso, “Family Precedent,” USA Today, 8 April 2008, p. 7A. Come 2008, Obama would acknowledge, “on the surface, I remained very polite,” but in previous years he repeatedly had insisted that “for much of my high school years” he had taken on a “macho African-American image of a basketball player talking trash” and “had this divided identity—one inside the home, one for the outside world.” No one within the Punahou portion of that “outside world” ever saw any such thing. “Barack Obama Revealed,” CNN, 20 August 2008; Obama on This Week, ABC, 15 August 2004; “Oprah Talks to Barack Obama,” O, The Oprah Magazine, November 2004. See also Obama with Tim Russert on CNBC, 18 November 2006 (a “real macho guise”). As of Barry’s final 1978–79 school year, Richard Haenisch, who was half black, half German, and a future college basketball star, would also arrive at Punahou, but he did not play basketball that year.

37. Obama, “A Life’s Calling to Public Service,” Punahou Bulletin, Fall 1999, pp. 28–29; Austin Murphy, “Obama Discusses His Hoops Memories at Punahou High,” SportsIllustrated.com, 21 May 2008; Dwight N. Hopkins, “The Hawaiian President: Beyond Black and White,” Christian Century, 10 February 2009, pp. 10–11.

38. 1979 Oahuan, esp. p. 271; “Dead Man Identified,” HSB, 10 January 1986, p. A2; “Homicide Probe,” HSB, 11 January 1986, p. B4; “Police Seek Help,” HSB, 12 January 1986, p. A5; “Arraignment Set,” HSB, 16 January 1986, p. A14; Jim Borg, “Man, 20, Ordered Held for Trial in Bludgeon Death,” HA, 21 January 1986; “Killing Blamed on ‘Jilted’ Lover,” HSB, 11 December 1986; “Man Convicted of Murder in Bludgeon Slaying,” HA, 19 December 1986; “Man Found Guilty in Ex-Lover’s Death,” HSB, 19 December 1986; “Life Term in Hammer Slaying,” HA, 24 January 1987; “Claw-Hammer Killer Sentenced,” HSB, 24 January 1987; Devere v. Falk, 951 F. 2d 359 (9th Cir.), 20 December 1991 (1991 WL 275356 full text); Richard Alleyne, “Obama’s High School Pot Dealer . . .,” Daily Mail, 29 January 2014. Killer Andrew Devere served over twenty years in prison for Ray’s murder before being paroled in 2007. When Obama’s yearbook page was first brought to public attention in a blog posting by a 1980 Punahou graduate, Mark Bendix objected and the post disappeared. Eve Maler, “Barry Obama and the Gang,” Pushing String Blog, www.xmlgrrl.com, 16 January 2007. On January 31 Bendix commented: “just keep things on the down low and be cool. The choom gang had a name for people like you. Goober!” Years later Mike Ramos would incorrectly assert that unlike Greg Orme, neither he nor Obama were Choom Gang members. Jackie Calmes, “Visits with School Pals Are a Touchstone on President’s Trips to Hawaii,” NYT, 4 January 2014. Ramos must have momentarily forgotten that the most famous public photo of the Choom Gang includes a smiling Obama plus a glimpse of his own forehead, glasses, and left arm.

39. Ann Dunham Sutoro to Alice Dewey, 2 February 1979 and 13 May 1979, Sutoro to Ph.D. Committee, “Review and Update on Activities Relating to Ph.D.,” September 1984, Dunham Papers; Scott, A Singular Woman, pp. 6, 196, 214; Dunham, Surviving Against the Odds, p. 299; DJG interview with Alice Dewey, Adam Sorensen, “President Obama’s 1979 Prom Photos,” Swampland.time.com, 23 May 2013; Sorensen, “Obama’s Grand Old Party,” Time, 3 June 2013, pp. 12–13; “Double Date from President Obama’s High School Prom Reveals Details,” InsideEdition.com, 23 May 2013; “President Obama’s Prom Date,” InsideEdition.com, 24 September 2013.

40. Punahou 1979 Commencement film, YouTube; “Dave Donnelly’s Hawaii,” HSB, 4 June 1979, p. B2; “Where They Are Now Class of ’79,” Punahou Bulletin, November 1979, pp. 22–23; Jacobs, Obamaland, p. 51; DJG interviews with Kent Torrey, Greg Ramos, Tom Topolinski, Mike Ramos, Dan Hale, Mark Hebing, Kelli Furushima, and Kraig King; Topolinski interview with Jim Gilmore; Eli Saslow and Philip Rucker, “Obama Looks to Future with a Nod to His Past,” WP, 20 January 2009, p. A1; Obama in Jaymes Song (AP), “Obama Returns to School,” 13 August 2008, Wolffe, Renegade, p. 187; Obama in Maggie Murphy and Lynn Sherr, “The President and Michelle Obama on Work, Family, and Juggling It All,” Parade, 20 June 2014; Neena Cherayil, “Did Obama Really Get Rejected from Swarthmore?,” Swarthmore Daily Gazette, 8 November 2008 (quoting two students to whom Obama each spoke); Obama, DFMF, p. 96–98; Ann Dunham Sutoro to Alice Dewey, 13 May 1979, Dunham Papers. On Kenji Salz’s family, see his father’s obituary, “Andrew J. Salz,” San Francisco Chronicle, 9 October 1995, p. A20. Like Bobby Titcomb’s father, Andrew Salz, a graduate of Yale Law School, also became a Honolulu district court judge.

CHAPTER THREE: SEARCHING FOR HOME

1. Occidental College 1979–80 Catalog, esp. pp. 5–6, 28, Occidental College Student Directory 1979–80, Occidental College Student Handbooks (“Lookbook”) 1976–77, 1977–78, 1978–79, 1979–80, Jean Paule to Richard Anderson, “Fall Term 1979,” 18 November 2008, and Jean Paule, “Racial Diversity at Occidental College: A History,” April 2004, Occidental College Archives; Judy Strong, “Student Surplus Jams Dormitories,” The Occidental [TO], 27 September 1979, pp. 1, 10; Bill Hollingsworth, “Gilman Cites Improved Quality as Goal of ’78–’79 Freshman Class Reduction,” TO, 24 February 1978, pp. 1, 7; Alison Bell, “Sophomore Exodus: Why Are They Leaving?,” TO, 12 May 1978, pp. 1, 10; Tom Hammitt, “ASOC Schedules Minority Recruitment Day for March,” TO, 16 February 1979, pp. 1, 7; Tyler Kearn and Aidan Lewis, “Retracing Obama’s Legacy,” Occidental Weekly, 25 November 2008, p. 6; IRS to Stanley Ann Dunham Sutoro, “Notice of Federal Tax Lien Under Internal Revenue Laws,” 12 November 1991 (indicating that in October 1985 assessments totaling over $17,000 had been levied against Ann regarding her 1979 and 1980 taxes), IRS FOIA; Andy Torres, “Torres on Noon Ball,” TO, 15 February 1980, p. 13; “CORE,” TO, 9 May 1980, p. 2; Pete Hisey, “Center Stage,” Occidental Magazine, Fall 2004, pp. 24–29, esp. p. 26 (“full scholarship”); Larry Gordon, “Occidental Recalls ‘Barry’ Obama,” LAT, 29 January 2007 (“full scholarship”); Lynn Sweet, “The Obama We Don’t Know,” CST, 19 July 2008 (supposedly a full scholarship only for his freshman year); Scott Helman, “Small College Awakened Future Senator to Service,” BG, 25 August 2008, p. A1; Jerry Crowe, “Obama Honed His Skills at Occidental,” LAT, 10 November 2008, p. D2; Huell Howser, “Barack Obama’s Occidental College Days,” California Gold, KCET, 13 November 2008; Lyle James Slack, “Obama at Occidental,” Verdugo Monthly, January 2009, pp. 15–16 (originally posted on Arroyo Monthly, 25 November 2008); Colleen Sharkey, “Friends of Barry,” Occidental Magazine, Winter 2009, pp. 12–17; Ben Bergman, “Obama’s Other College Hopes for Presidential Boost,” NPR, 16 January 2009; Larry Gordon, “An Early Influence,” LAT, 18 January 2009, Maraniss, BOTS, pp. 337, 343–44, 346; Obama on 20/20, ABC, 23 December 2011; Obama Q&A with Elizabeth Taylor, CT, 29 October 2006, p. B3; DJG interviews with Kraig King, Paul Carpenter, Andy Roth, Roger Boesche, Kent Goss, Romeo Garcia, Eric Newhall, Tom Topolinski, Phil Boerner, Paul Anderson, Ken Sulzer, John Boyer, Sim Heninger, Adam Sherman, Bill Snider, Tom Moyes, Samuel Yaw “Kofi” Manu, Michael Schwartz, and Paul Herrmannsfeldt; Adam Sherman, “Back to the Annex,” Sherman Papers. Obama himself would assert that “I received a scholarship to Occidental” in his 2001 interview with Julieanna Richardson. As of 1979–80, 52 percent of Oxy undergraduates received some amount of nonloan student aid. Jan Klunder, “Oxy Backs Arts in Coming Crisis,” LAT, 10 February 1980, pp. 1, 6–7. Per Phil Boerner’s retrospective 15 March 1983 diary entry, Obama most definitely had a stereo in his Haines Annex room. On Richard Reath, see Cindy Zedallis, “‘Sophisticated’ Reath Speaks in Thorne,” TO, 27 September 1979, pp. 1, 10. Obama’s textbook from the Boesche and Reath course, Kenneth Prewitt and Sidney Verba, Introduction to American Government, 3rd ed. (Harper & Row, 1979), would be passed down to 1984 Occidental graduate Asad Jumabhoy. On Phil Boerner’s father and family, see Michael Boerner’s WP obituary, 9 May 2012. Boerner and Boyer recall attending what they thought was the premier showing of Apocalypse Now, but that had taken place over a month earlier, on 15 August 1979. See LAT, 12 August 1979.

2. DJG interviews with John Boyer, Paul Carpenter, Mike Ramos, Roger Boesche, Lawrence Goldyn, Ken Sulzer, Larry Hogue, and Alex McNear; Occidental College 1979–80 Catalog, esp. pp. 5, 28; 1980–1981 Catalog, esp. p. 158; Lawrence Goldyn, “ERA/Draft Fusion Threatens Women’s Progress,” TO, 15 February 1980, pp. 5, 9; ad, TO, 22 February 1980, p. 5; Cindy Zedalis, “Goldyn Notes Hatred Towards Homosexuals,” TO, 29 February 1980, pp. 1, 2, 11; Goldyn, “Goldyn” (letter), TO, 7 March 1980, p. 11; Tracy Baim, “Obama Seeks U.S. Senate Seat,” Windy City Times, 4 February 2004; Kerry Eleveld, “Obama Talks All Things LGBT with The Advocate,” The Advocate, 10 April 2008; Lou Chibbaro Jr., “Nominee’s Gay Mentor Speaks Out,” Washington Blade, 12 September 2008; Brandon Hamilton, “Obama’s Gay Mentor: Lawrence Goldyn ’73,” Reed Magazine, December 2010; Howser, “Obama’s Occidental College Days.”

3. Rick Cole, “Nader’s Challenge: Are You a Bystander?,” TO, 10 February 1978, pp. 3, 7; Andrew Roth, “Corporate Apartheid: Occidental Commits Itself to an Investment in Racism,” TO, 17 February 1978, pp. 3, 6; Gary Chapman, “Democratic Socialism: Breaking the Chains of Corporate Power,” TO, 17 February 1978, pp. 4–5; Bill Ellis, “Students Call for College Divestment,” TO, 24 February 1978, pp. 1, 7; Bill Hollingsworth, “Divestment Rally to Greet Trustees,” TO, 7 April 1978, p. 1; Martin Burns, “Students Protest Trustee Inaction,” TO, 14 April 1978, p. 1; Bill Ellis, “Student Protestors Rally at Bank of America Stockholders Meeting,” TO, 28 April 1978, pp. 1, 11; “SCC Endorsements” and “SCC Candidate Statements,” TO, 5 May 1978, pp. 2, 5–8; Andy Roth, Doyle Van Fossen, and Gary Chapman, “Mary Jane,” TO, 12 May 1978, p. 2; Bill Hollingsworth, “Faculty Asks Trustees to Divest,” TO, 19 May 1978, pp. 1, 7; 1978 La Encina Yearbook, p. 113; “Trustees Consider South African Investments,” Occidental College Magazine, August 1978, pp. 18–21; Tom Hammitt and Bill Davis, “Affirmative Action Committee Promises Minority Profs,” TO, 9 February 1979, pp. 1, 11; “News ’78–’79: Recapping the Issues and Events,” TO, 15 September 1979, pp. 1, 4; Michael Boerner and Dorothy Boerner to Phil

Boerner, 29 and 30 January 1980, as excerpted in 19 May 2009 Phil Boerner memo, Boerner Papers; Cindy Zedalis, "Quad Lights Up at Anti-Draft Rally," TO, 1 February 1980, pp. 1, 11; Karen Aidem and Nancy Eisenberg, "Anti-Registration Agitators Begin Campaign for Student Education," TO, 8 February 1980, pp. 1, 7; Cindy Zedalis, "Profs' Perspectives Offered at Teach-In," TO, 15 February 1980, pp. 1, 14; Roger Boesche, "New Cold War Mentality Critiqued," TO, 15 February 1980, pp. 4, 6–7; Cindy Zedalis, "Honor Court and Writing Reviewed by Professors," TO, 22 February 1980, pp. 1, 11; Susan Keselenko, "Anti-Draft Activism Fades with Finals," TO, 4 April 1980, p. 3; Student Coalition Against Registration and the Draft letter to the editor, TO, 18 April 1980, pp. 2, 10; Larry Hogue, "Jamming Draft Gears by Massive Resistance," TO, 16 May 1980, p. 3; DJG interviews with Andy Roth, John (Doyle) Van Fossen, Stephanie Fulks Westerman, and Larry Hogue; Brad Weber e-mail to DJG; Katie Hafner, "Gary Chapman, Internet Ethicist, Dies at 58," NYT, 17 December 2010; Valerie J. Nelson, "Gary Chapman Dies at 58," LAT, 24 December 2010. On Oxy DSA, also see Susan Keselenko, "[Dorothy] Healey Condemns U.S. Response to Soviet Action," TO, 29 February 1980, pp. 1, 11.

4. Bill Davis and Tom Hammitt, "Minority Enrollment Plummet," TO, 19 January 1979, pp. 1, 7; Earl Chew et al., letter to the editor, TO, 18 January 1980, p. 2; Sue Paterno, "Just How Much Do YOU Know," TO, 1 February 1980, p. 4; Bill Mullen, "Oxy Lacrosse: They Bring 'Em Back Alive," TO, 1 February 1980, p. 9; Susan Keselenko, "Minority Fraternity Proposal Approved," TO, 7 March 1980, p. 1; Bill Knutson, "Assistant Dean Resigns," TO, 4 April 1980, pp. 1, 11; Anne Ball, "Rowe Reinstated After Resignation," TO, 10 October 1980, p. 1; 1980 La Encina Yearbook, esp. pp. 95, 101 (a Haines residents' group picture not including Obama), 174 (misidentifying Richard Casey as Eric Moore), 186, 190, 211, 216; Jean Paule e-mail to DJG, 27 July 2009; DJG interviews with Eric Moore, Romelle Rowe Ecung, Judith Pinn Carlisle, Hasan Chandoo, Amiekoleh Usafi, Margot Mifflin, and Tom Grauman; Usafi in Sharkey, "Friends of Barry," p. 14. On Delanney, see Yann Masson, "Presidentielle Americaine: Avec Barack, on Regardait les Matches de Basket," Nice Matin, 6 November 2008, Edward Rangsi, "Laurent Delanney," ISportConnect.com, 6 February 2012, and "All in the Game of Love," CEO Magazine, January 2015, pp. 44–51. Per Obama, DFMF, p. 99–100, Oxy contemporaries such as Mifflin and Grauman are convinced that Carlisle was the basis for the character "Joyce," though Judith herself understandably doubts that: "I did not know Barack Obama. As far as I know, I never said a word to him."

5. Occidental College 1979–80 Catalog, p. 5; "Dorm Closing," TO, 15 February 1980, p. 16; DJG interviews with Susan Keselenko Coll, Caroline Boss, Eric Moore, Romeo Garcia, Margot Mifflin, Dina Silva, Alex McNear, and John Boyer; Group Y, "The MX Missile: Bigger Is Not Better," Political Science 94, 12 May 1980, Group A, "Critique on the MX Missile," n.d., Caroline Boss et al., "The MX Missile: Superiority Not Worth the Price: A Rebuttal by Group Y," 16 May 1980, "Critique of Group A by Group Y," n.d., Susan Keselenko Coll Papers; Dick Anderson, "O Triumphe!" Occidental Magazine, Winter 2009, pp. 10–11; Monica Corcoran, "Barack Obama Went Hawaiian Casual at Occidental College in L.A.," LAT, 18 January 2009; Sue Paterno, "Pakistan's Ambassador to Speak," TO, 2 May 1980, p. 4; Tom Cotrel, "Mirza Speaks on the Middle East" and Bob Mitrovich, "Ambassador Mirza Meets Interviewers," TO, 9 May 1980, pp. 1, 11; "Dictionary," TO, 15 September 1979, p. 3 (Cooler); field hockey ad, TO, 5 October 1979, p. 9; Bill Mullen, "Hasan Chandoo and His $163.00 All-Stars," TO, 26 October 1979, p. 9; "Women Can-Do for Chandoo," TO, 16 November 1979, p. 8; Lisa Jack, "Recollections of President-Elect Barack Obama," 17 December 2008, Augsburg.edu; Laura Fitzpatrick,

“The Long-Lost Negatives,” Time, 17 December 2008; Mike Boehm, “Photos Show President Barack Obama as Barry the Freshman,” LAT, 27 May 2009, p. D1; Guy Trebay, “When He Was Barry,” NYT, 18 June 2009, p. E4; Erin Carlyle, “Minneapolis Photographer Captures Obama as a Young Man,” CityPages, 24 June 2009. Nine months later, Jack would win first prize in an Oxy photo contest. TO, 6 February 1981, p. 6. Two subsequent photos Tom Grauman would take of Obama, one picturing his left-handed removal of a volume from a shelf in the library’s basement, the other showing him with Hasan at the 8 February 1981 Ujima dinner, both capture the ring on his left index finger as well. See also Paul Herrmannsfeldt, “Profile: Romeo Garcia an Occidental Legend,” TO, 16 May 1980, p. 5.

6. Serge F. Kovalski, “Old Friends Say Drugs Played Only Bit Part in Obama’s Young Life,” NYT, 9 February 2008, p. A1; Sharon Cohen (AP), “Barack Obama: Finding Common Bonds in Different Worlds,” 3 June 2008; Chidanand Rajghatta, “McCain vs. Obama: Who’s Better for India?,” Times of India, 8 June 2008; Andrea Brown, “To Couple, He’s Barry in a Leather Jacket,” Colorado Springs Gazette, 20 January 2009; DJG interview with Alice Dewey; Barack Hussein Obama, Selective Service Registration Form, 29 July 1980, FOIA; Maya Soetoro 1979–1984 Passport, Obama Family Papers; Stanley Ann Soetoro v. Lolo Soetoro, “Complaint for Divorce” and “Information Concerning Conciliation and Child Care,” both 15 June 1980, and “Decree,” 5 November 1980, Hawaii First Circuit Family Court #117619; Obama, DFMF, pp. 87–91; Maraniss, BOTS, pp. 317, 362, 382; Frank Marshall Davis to Margaret Burroughs, 27 October 1982, Burroughs Papers. Obama believes that his grandparents’ argument occurred while he was still in high school, but the balance of evidence suggests otherwise. Also see Bob Owens, “Did Obama Actually Register for Selective Service?,” PajamasMedia.com, 12 August 2008 (quoting the Selective Service System as stating that Obama’s registration number was 61-112559-1). Years later one news story would have Obama working “to sell island trinkets in a gift shop” and “making sandwiches” at a deli in Honolulu that summer, but the story contains other obvious errors and attributes its information to campaign staffers, not Obama. Sweet, “The Obama We Don’t Know,” CST, 19 July 2008. Sometime in 1980, Ann completed work on a monograph entitled Women’s Work in Village Industries on Java, a 157-page volume published in Jakarta that no more than half a dozen libraries around the world would catalog and retain.

7. Occidental College 1980–81 Catalog; DJG interviews with Hasan Chandoo, Asad Jumabhoy, Margot Mifflin, Dina Silva, Caroline Boss, Tom Grauman, Larry Hogue, Paul Carpenter, Bill Snider, Sim Heninger, Eric Moore, Chris Welton, and Paul Herrmannsfeldt; Welton, “Yes He Can,” January 2009 (e-mailed to DJG 14 May 2014); Mifflin e-mails to DJG, 2 April 2013 and 22 November 2014; Caroline Boss and Larry Hogue, “Socialists,” TO, 3 October 1980, p. 2; Debbie Rush, “Women’s Hockey Doing Well,” TO, 10 October 1980, p. 9; Seth Borenstein (AP), “Obama to Boldly Go Where No Geek Has Gone Before,” 24 December 2008; Boss in Remnick, The Bridge, p. 109; Jonathan Alter, The Promise (Simon & Schuster, 2010), p. 179; Larry Wilson, “When Barry Obama, Oxy Student, Lived in Pasadena,” Pasadena Star-News, 10 November 2015. In perhaps his most direct subsequent acknowledgment, Obama would state, “I did all my drinking in high school and college. I was a wild man. I did drugs and drank and partied.” Amanda Griscom Little, “Barack Obama,” Rolling Stone, 30 December 2004, p. 88. See also “Barack Obama Revealed,” CNN, 20 August 2008 (“My first two years of college, I was continuing some bad habits from high school”).

8. Cindy Zedalis, “Faculty Tables Divestment Resolution,” “Divestiture” editorial, and Todd Gold, “Richard Gilman: Interview,” TO, 17 October 1980, pp. 1, 2, 4–6; “Activate” editorial, TO, 24 October 1980, p. 2; Dan McCormac, “Student Coalition Is Revived to Fight Apartheid,” and “South Africa,” TO, 31 October 1980, pp. 21, 24; Anne Ball, “SCC Encourages Ethnic Awareness,” and Diana Takata, “U.S. Multinationals Bankroll Racism,” TO, 7 November 1980, pp. 1, 3; Debbie Levi, “Morality Above and Beyond Financial Concerns,” TO, 14 November 1980, p. 5; Lee Cauble, “College Council Discusses Club Sports, Apartheid Speakers,” and “S. African Teach-In,” TO, 21 November 1980, pp. 15, 16; Anthony Russo, “Faculty Demands Divestment Action,” Arpie Balekjian, “Speaker Cleaves to Corporations,” Julie Evans, “Opinions Differ on Apartheid Issue,” and Debbie Levi, “Namibian People’s War on Apartheid,” TO, 5 December 1980, pp. 1, 4; DJG interviews with Caroline Boss, Larry Hogue, Andy Roth, Dario Longhi, Eric Moore, Asad Jumabhoy, Hasan Chandoo, Margot Mifflin, Bill Snider, and Paul Carpenter, “Crossroads Africa,” TO, 8 February 1980, p. 8; TO, 3 October 1980, p. 11; Obama in Richard Wolffe et al., “When Barry Became Barack,” Newsweek, 31 March 2008, pp. 24ff.; Wolffe, Renegade, pp. 31–32; Huell Howser, “Barack Obama’s Days at Occidental,” KCET TV, 25 November 2008; Sharkey, “Friends of Barry,” Occidental Magazine, Winter 2009, p. 13; Jim Schlosser, “Downtown Baker Knew Obama Way Back When,” Greensboro News & Record, 19 April 2010; Eric Moore interview with Jim Gilmore.

9. DJG interviews with Caroline Boss, Hasan Chandoo, John Drew, Tom Grauman, Roger Boesche, and Andy Roth; Sohale Siddiqi interview with Jim Gilmore; Drew’s 1979 Occidental College transcript, Boss to Drew, 24 January 1980, Drew to Erik V., 10 April 1980, Drew Papers. Drew’s recollections of Barack and Hasan’s visit to Caroline’s family home are best read in chronological order, particularly in light of the conclusions of Herbert L. Packer, Ex-Communist Witnesses: Four Studies in Fact Finding (Stanford University Press, 1962). John C. Drew, “Face-to-Face with Young Marxist Obama: Remembering My Days as an Anti-Apartheid Student Activist,” AnonymousPoliticalScientist.blogspot.com, 18 November 2009, updated on 7 February 2010, the same date as a 59-second Youtube video; Ronald Kessler, “Obama Espoused Radical Views in College,” Newsmax.com, 8 February 2010; Drew, “Was Obama a Committed Marxist in College?,” Breitbart.TV, 12 February 2010; Drew, “Glorious Leader Gap,” AnonymousPoliticalScientist.blogspot.com, 5 July 2010; Drew, “Obama at Occidental,” DirectorBlue.blogspot.com, 23 October 2010; Paul Kengor, “Obama’s ‘Missing Link,’” American Thinker, 10 December 2010; Drew, “Meeting Young Obama,” American Thinker, 24 February 2011; Drew, “Even Republicans Rejected Info About Obama’s Past,” American Thinker, 14 September 2011; Drew, “My White Girlfriend Inspired Obama’s Big, Dark Regina in Dreams From My Father,” American Thinker, 17 July 2012; Jamie Glazov, “Young Obama’s Dreams of a Communist Revolution in America,” FrontPage Magazine, 8 August 2012 (quoting Drew as acknowledging “I only remember bits and fragments of the actual conversation”); Kengor, The Communist, pp. 249–58; Drew, “White Like Me,” American Thinker, 27 May 2013. Fourteen years later Obama would mention having read “philosophers like Sartre and Fanon” while at Oxy. “Community Revitalization,” Nebraska Wesleyan University Forum, 9 September 1994, Lincoln, NE. Contrary to one published conclusion of Drew’s, Roger Boesche’s gradebooks indicate Obama was not in his fall term 1980 PS 132 II. In line with Packer’s analysis, Drew in “Glorious Leader Gap” would come to further recall that Obama had seemed “strikingly effeminate.” On Hamid and Obama’s road trip, see Wolffe, Renegade, p. 238; on New Year’s Eve see Maraniss, BOTS, p. 367.

10. Occidental College 1980–81 Catalog, esp. pp. 73, 122, 158; Siddiqi interview with Gilmore; DJG interviews with Anne Howells, David James, Margot Mifflin, Mark Dery, Bill Snider, Larry Hogue, Alex McNear, Roger Boesche, Ken Sulzer, John Boyer, Caroline Boss, Tom Grauman, and Asad Jumabhoy; Mark Dery, “Dancing with Words,” Occidental Magazine, Fall 2005, p. 56 (memorializing Jensvold, who died in an accidental fall in June 2005 at age fifty-one); David Mendell, Obama: From Promise to Power (Amistad, 2007), pp. 60–62; Larry Gordon, “Occidental Recalls ‘Barry’ Obama,” LAT, 29 January 2007; John Schwada, “A Look at Barack Obama’s Time at Occidental College,” FoxLA11, 25 February 2008; Boesche in Wolffe et al., “When Barry Became Barack,” Newsweek, 31 March 2008, pp. 24ff.; Oliver Haydock, “Meet Roger Boesche, Who Knew ‘Barry Obama’ in Passing at Occidental,” New York Observer, 3 April 2008; Howser, “Barack Obama’s Occidental College Days,” California Gold, KCET, 13 November 2008; Kearn and Lewis, “Retracing Obama’s Legacy,” Occidental Weekly, 25 November 2008; Slack, “Obama at Occidental,” Verdugo Monthly, January 2009, pp. 15–16; Sharkey, “Friends of Barry,” p. 15; Gordon, “An Early Influence,” LAT, 18 January 2009; Jeremy Oberstein, “Obama’s Ascent to the Top,” Glendale News Press, 20 January 2009; Gordon, “Obama’s Oxy Professor Learns the President Has a Long Memory,” LAT, 15 August 2009; Gabriel Bernadett-Shapiro, “Boesche Makes a White House Call,” Occidental Weekly, 23 September 2009; “12 Minutes with Obama,” Occidental Magazine, Fall 2009; Margot Mifflin, “Obama at Occidental,” NewYorker.com, 3 October 2012; Eric Krol, “Students Put Candidates on the Spot,” CDH, 30 September 2004, p. 10; Obama on The Friday Night Show, WTTW.com, 3 December 2004; Obama in Barkley, Who’s Afraid of a Large Black Man? pp. 23–24; Obama on 20/20, ABC, 26 September 2008.

11. Anne Ball, “Students Lack Interest on Draft Issue,” Ball, “SCC Supports Faculty,” Arpie Balekjian, “Gregory Captivates and Keeps Large Audience,” Anthony Russo, “Forum Explores Prejudices,” and “African Speaker,” TO, 16 January 1981, pp. 1, 13, 14, 16; “Calendar of Events,” LAT, 15 January 1981, p. WS17; “Bread Not Bombs Martin Luther King Vigil” flyer, 17 January 1981, McNear Papers; Henry Weinstein and Erwin Baker, “S. Africa to Move Consulate to L.A.,” LAT, 22 February 1980, p. C5; 6 October 1980 flyer in the Carol B. Thompson and Bud Day Papers, Michigan State University Archives; “Protest Staged Against South African Consulate,” LAT, 7 October 1980, p. B19; “The Land of the Free (Trips),” LAT, 5 October 1980, p. F4; Carol B. Thompson, “Land of the Free (Trips),” LAT, 11 October 1980, p. C3; John L. Mitchell, “South African Consul Sits Tight in B.H. Office,” LAT, 30 October 1980, pp. 1, 15; “The Southland,” LAT, 18 January 1981, p. A2; Anthony Russo, “Speaker, Film Denote Tragedy of Apartheid,” TO, 23 January 1981, pp. 1, 5; Obama in Barkley, Who’s Afraid of a Large Black Man? p. 28; Stewart Ikeda and Alexia Robinson, “U.S. Senator Barack Obama on Black Student Politics,” Black Collegian, 1st Semester 2006, pp. 48–51 (but misdating it to his freshman rather than sophomore year at Oxy); “Tim Ngubeni: The Bringer of Hope,” YouTube, 11 June 2007 (two parts); DJG interviews with Hasan Chandoo, Caroline Boss, Alex McNear, Eric Moore, and Paul Anderson. A Chandoo letter in TO, 30 January 1981, p. 12, voiced a fear that Pakistan “may be the next underdeveloped country which becomes an annihilated sideshow to the super power hegemonic games.” On the Gathering, see Janet Clayton and John L. Mitchell, “Black Ministers in Political Move,” LAT, 7 May 1979, pp. 1, 26–28, and Sandy Banks, “Watts: Many Churches But How Helpful?,” LAT, 19 August 1980, pp. 1, 14–15.

12. Debbie Levi, “Minority Recruitment Decline Reflects Priorities,” TO, 23 January 1981 [I], p. 1, and 30 January 1981 [II], p. 1; Dan Karasic, “MEC Will Receive Tentative Funding,” TO, 30 January 1981, p.

1; Third World Voice 1, #1, January 1981 (date stamped 21 January), Occidental College Archives; Anne Ball, "SCC Supports Faculty," TO, 16 January 1981, p. 1; "Divestiture," TO, 30 January 1981, p. 16; Michael Abelson, "SCC Discusses Budget, Divestment at Meeting," and "Gay Awareness Week," TO, 6 February 1981, p. 1; Larry Hogue to Alex McNear, 7 February 1981, McNear Papers; Occidental Alumni Magazine, Spring 1981, p. 37; Debbie Levi, "Gays Present Alternative Lifestyle," TO, 13 February 1981, pp. 1, 11, 16; "Rally," TO, 13 February 1981, p. 2; DJG interviews with Hasan Chandoo, Caroline Boss, and Chris Welton ("the three of us went there and heckled"); Obama himself is uncertain as to whether he joined in the heckling.

13. Anthony Russo, "Students Demand Divestment," TO, 20 February 1981, pp. 1, 11; "Divestment," TO, 20 February 1981, p. 2; "Strictly Opinion" and Brad Weber and Lupe Nolasco, "Affirmative Action and Divestiture," TO, 27 February 1981, pp. 4, 12; La Encina 1981, pp. 137, 185; Obama, DFMF, pp. 105–7; Rivera in Margaret Talev, "For Obama, a Tale of Two Speeches," KRDC McClatchy, 16 November 2007, and in Helman, "Small College Awakened Future Senator to Service," BG, 25 August 2008, p. A1; Mifflin in "Obama as We Knew Him," Observer, 26 October 2008, pp. 4–7; Mifflin, "The Occidental Tourist," NYT, 18 January 2009, p. IV–14; Mifflin, "Obama at Occidental," NewYorker.com, 3 October 2012; Chris Welton, "Yes He Can," January 2009, and Welton, "That Troublemaker Barry Obama," Financial Times, 7 May 2014, p. 8; DJG interviews with Caroline Boss, Tom Grauman, Hasan Chandoo, Chris Welton, Rebecca Rivera, Margot Mifflin, Eric Moore, Amiekoleh Usafi, Sim Heninger, Paul Carpenter, Larry Hogue, and Tom Moyes. On Sarah-Etta Harris, see Tom Hammitt, "ASOC Schedules Minority Recruitment Day for March," TO, 16 February 1979, p. 1 ("From what I've seen in my three years here, Occidental couldn't give a damn if it returned to all Anglo"), "Richter Fellowship Recipients Announced," TO, 22 February 1980, p. 10, and "Possibilities & Realities," 1981–1982, p. 64, Occidental College Archives. Justin A. Frank's characterization of the rally as "in retrospect, a crucial juncture in the history of our nation" is too hilarious not to quote. Obama on the Couch (Free Press, 2011), p. 99.

14. DJG interviews with Hasan Chandoo, Caroline Boss, Tom Grauman, and Barack Obama; Obama, DFMF, pp. 103–4, 107–12, 116; Obama, "Community Revitalization," Nebraska Wesleyan University Forum, 9 September 1994, Lincoln, NE; Obama, Northwestern University Commencement Address, 16 June 2006; Obama interview with Katie Couric, CBS Evening News, 5 December 2007; Obama, "A New Era of Service," University of Colorado at Colorado Springs, 2 July 2008; Obama on 20/20, ABC, 26 September 2008; "Possibilities & Realities," 1981–82, p. 64, Occidental College Archives. Regarding abandonment, one psychologist would later assert that "abandonment was the primary issue of Barry's life." Avner Falk, The Riddle of Barack Obama (Praeger, 2010), p. 84. Years later, and well prior to any public suggestion that "Regina" was based upon Boss, John Drew would reflect on that passage in DFMF and observe "that really sounds like Caroline." DJG interview with Drew, 14 December 2011. In an interesting chronological coincidence, the Oxy newspaper would report that following an excessive night of partying on Friday, February 20, as part of a student event called "Da Getaway," a special allocation of student government funds was necessary to pay four people for "removing trash, mopping floors, etc.," as part of "the cleanup of several dorms." Alan Tong, "SCC Allocates Funds for 'Getaway' Workers," TO, 6 March 1981, p. 11. Oxy employed thirty-seven unionized housekeepers, who worked—rather unhappily—thirty hours per week at an hourly wage of $3.87. See "Support," TO, 29 May 1981, p. 2, a letter to the editor from twelve students noting that “unfortunately most people take them for granted.”

15. Karla Olson, “Rising Above Oxy Through Columbia,” TO, 20 February 1981, p. 5; DJG interviews with Eric Moore, Phil Boerner, Anne Howells, Romelle Rowe Ecung, Hasan Chandoo, Asad Jumabhoy, Caroline Boss, Alex McNear, Sim Heninger, Bill Snider, and Paul Carpenter; Boerner in Sharkey, “Friends of Barry,” p. 16; Howells in Gordon, “Occidental Recalls ‘Barry’ Obama,” in Kovaleski, “Old Friends Say Drugs Played Only a Bit Part,” and in Mary Anne Ostrom, “Democrats Get Down to Business,” San Jose Mercury News, 25 August 2008; Obama in Tammerlin Drummond, “Barack Obama’s Law,” LAT, 12 March 1990, pp. E1, E2; Obama, DFMF, pp. 115–16 (erroneously imagining “a transfer program that Occidental had arranged with Columbia”); Obama in Gordon, “Occidental Recalls”; Obama’s 2001 interview with Julieanna Richardson (“a lot of my friends . . . had graduated, so I transferred”); Obama in Pete Hisey, “Center Stage,” Occidental Magazine, Fall 2004, pp. 24–29 (“I really wanted to see New York”); Obama, Q&A at My Brother’s Keep Townhall, 21 July 2014, YouTube.com; Obama in Wolffe, “When Barry Became Barack”; “Barack Obama Revealed,” CNN, 20 August 2008; Chris Welton, “Yes He Can,” January 2009; Snider in Jim Schlosser, “Downtown Baker Knew Obama Way Back When,” Greensboro News & Record, 19 April 2010; Phil Boerner to grandparents, 24 March 1981, Boerner Papers (mentioning submission of transfer application to Columbia). The application deadline was April 15. Columbia University Bulletin 1981–1983, p. 32, Columbia Archives. To one early questioner, Obama would assert, “I wanted to be around more black folks in big cities.” Linda Matchan, “A Law Review Breakthrough,” BG, 15 February 1990, p. 29. Two decades later Obama would say, “I think I had a hunger to shape the world in some way, to make the world a better place, that was triggered around the time that I transferred.” Remnick, The Bridge, p. 114.

16. DJG interviews with Paul Anderson, Alex McNear, Tom Grauman, David James, Margot Mifflin, Mark Dery, Dina Silva, and Barack Obama; Mifflin in Kevin Fagan, “Obama: Transformations,” San Francisco Chronicle, 14 September 2008, and in Sharkey, “Friends of Barry”; Alex McNear and Tom Grauman, “Feast,” TO, 6 March 1981, pp. 2, 11; “Feast,” TO, 13 March 1981, p. 12; Feast, Spring 1981, esp. pp. 11–12; Michael Dobson, “New Literary Journal Puts Only the Best on Display,” TO, 22 May 1981, pp. 6–7. “Underground” was also published in classmate Mark Dery’s Plastic Laughter #2, 1981, p. 6. On Obama’s poems, also see Kevin Bacon, “Ode to Obama,” Occidental Weekly, 21 March 2007, Ian McMillan, “The Lyrical Democrat,” Guardian, 28 March 2007, Rebecca Mead, “Obama, Poet,” New Yorker, 2 July 2007, Jack Cashill, “Race, Fantasy, and the New Yorker’s Editor,” American Thinker, 30 April 2011 (someone who is cited with the greatest reluctance), Maraniss, BOTS, pp. 382–84, Kengor, The Communist, pp. 264–66. On McNear, also see Alex McNear and Wendy Clark, “SCC Lacks Initiative in Cultural Funding,” TO, 22 May 1981, pp. 3, 11.

17. Andy Roth postcards to Alex McNear, n.d. March and 22 September 1981, McNear Papers; Phil Boerner diary entries, 18 April and 22 May 1981, Boerner Papers; DJG interviews with Andy Roth, Phil Boerner, Tom Grauman, Larry Hogue, Susan Keselenko, Alex McNear, Margot Mifflin, Hasan Chandoo, Caroline Boss, Eric Moore, and Bill Snider; I. M. Anal, “Visionaries Get Down Get Latent at Colloquium” and “Dorm Damage,” TO, 24 April 1981, pp. 3, 12; Laura Pelegrin, “Campus Response to Sex Questionnaire,” TO, 1 May 1981, p. 5,

18. “Apartheid,” TO, 27 February 1981, p. 16; “SCAA,” TO, 6 March 1981, p. 12; Debbie Levi, “Minority Exodus Creates Concern” and Arpie Balekjian, “Faculty Re-establishes GPAs on Transcripts,”

TO, 13 March 1981, pp. 1, 11; “Housing,” TO, 10 April 1981, p. 16; “Confluence to Explore Oxy’s Level of Tolerance,” TO, 17 April 1981, p. 7; La Encina 1981, p. 77; Black Student Directory, n.d. (ca. March 1981), Occidental College Archives; Kevin Terpstra, “Racism?,” TO, 13 March 1981, p. 2; “SCC Statement,” TO, 4 June 1981, p. 4; Stephanie O’Neill, “Occidental College Rejects Student Petition for Divestiture,” LAT, 16 April 1987; Blanca Labunog Araujo e-mail to DJG. See also “Southern Africa Resource Project,” n.d. (ca. June 1981), Carol B. Thompson and Bud Day Papers, Michigan State University, detailing a metropolitan Los Angeles effort in the spring of 1981 in which the two Oxy participants were Ghanaian undergraduate Yaw Manu and sociology professor Dario Longhi.

19. “Free U. by DSA and Urban Studies” flyer, 3 March 1981, and “Oxy CISPES Chapter” flyer, 4 March 1981, Alex McNear Papers; DJG interviews with Paul Carpenter, Hasan Chandoo, and Paul Anderson; Bill Billiter, “3,000 Protest U.S. Role in El Salvador,” LAT, 19 April 1981, pp. B1, B4; Debbie Levi, “CISPES Symposium Slated,” TO, 8 May 1981, p. 4; Levi and Susan Keselenko, “Panel Ponders El Salvador Crisis,” TO, 15 May 1981, pp. 1, 9, 11; “A Day for El Salvador” flyer, 24 May 1981, “The Liberation of El Salvador” flyer, 31 May 1981, and CISPES “Dear Friend” letter, n.d. (early June 1981), McNear Papers; Pete Hamill, “What Does Lou Grant Know About El Salvador?,” New York Magazine, 15 March 1982, pp. 24–30; Chandoo in Hisey, “Center Stage,” Occidental Magazine, Fall 2004, pp. 24–29. On CISPES, see also Van Gosse, “‘The North American Front’: Central American Solidarity in the Reagan Era,” in Mike Davis and Michael Sprinker, eds., Reshaping the U.S. Left: Popular Struggles in the 1980s (Verso, 1988), pp. 11–50, at 23–26, U.S. Senate, Select Committee on Intelligence, The FBI and CISPES, S. Rpt. 101-46, July 1989, esp. pp. 20–21, and Nora Hamilton and Norma Stoltz Chinchilla, Seeking Community in a Global City: Guatemalans and Salvadorans in Los Angeles (Temple University Press, 2001), pp. 130–31. On Romero’s assassination, see especially Tom Gibb, “The Killing of Archbishop Oscar Romero,” Guardian, 22 March 2000. Carpenter would recall Obama encouraging him to take courses taught by Egan, who would die at age forty in a Honduran airplane crash. Suzanne P. Kelly, “Carleton Professor Believed to Be Among Honduran Crash Victims,” Minneapolis Star Tribune, 24 October 1989.

20. “Forum on Pakistan Scheduled Sunday,” TO, 8 May 1981, p. 14; Steve Tulchin and Chris Welton, “Forum Focuses on Pakistani Oppression,” TO, 15 May 1981, pp. 1, 10; “Dissident Judge Steps Down,” Sydney Morning Herald, 20 October 1980, p. 3; Feroz Ahmed, “Afzal Bangash: A Life Dedicated to Militant Struggle,” Economic & Political Weekly, 20 December 1986, p. 2219; Jose Salcedo and Linda Duffy, “Support,” TO, 15 May 1981, p. 13; Susan Keselenko, “Lawrence Goldyn: Reflections on an Abrupt Occidental Experience,” TO, 29 May 1981, pp. 4–5; Lawrence Goldyn e-mail to DJG.

21. DJG interviews with Tom Grauman, Caroline Boss, Alex McNear, Phil Boerner, Eric Moore, Sim Heninger, and Kent Goss; Phil Boerner diary entries, 29 May and 5 and 6 June 1981, Boerner Papers; Jeremy Feldman, “Tight Housing Discourages Transfer Applications to CC,” Columbia Spectator [CS], 18 November 1981, pp. 1, 2; Moore in Sharkey, “Friends of Barry,” in Wolffe et al., “When Barry Became Barack,” in Howser, “Barack Obama’s Days at Occidental,” and in his interview with Jim Gilmore; Goss in Helman, “Small College Awakened Future Senator,” and in Remnick, The Bridge, p. 105. The second Feast would not appear until mid-December 1981; Occidental College Archives. See also Jeremy Feldman, “Going After Obama,” Columbia Spectator, 5 June 2012, a wonderful response to an Obama detractor who distorted Feldman’s story from thirty-one years earlier in order to demean:

Charles C. Johnson, “Did Obama Have Lower SAT Scores Than George W. Bush?,” Briart.com, 22 May 2012.

22. DJG interviews with Dina Silva, Caroline Boss, John Drew, Phil Boerner, Paul Carpenter, Hasan Chandoo, Keith Kakugawa, and Asad Jumabhoy; Drew in Kessler, “Obama Expressed Radical Views”; Drew, “Was Obama a Committed Marxist in College?”; Drew, “Meeting Young Obama”; John Drew to Alex McNear, 13 July 1981, McNear Papers; Paul Carpenter to Phil Boerner, 13 June 1981, Boerner Papers; Madelyn Dunham in Mendell, Obama, p. 58; Stanley Ann Dunham, “Application for Passport,” 27 April 1981, Dunham Passport File; Ann Dunham Sutoro résumés circa 1981 and 1993, Dunham Papers; Andra Wisnu, “Friends Reflect on Legacy of Obama’s Mother,” Jakarta Post, 14 November 2008; Mary S. Zurbuchen, “Ann Dunham Sutoro and the Ford Foundation’s International Philanthropy,” American Anthropological Association Annual Meeting, Philadelphia, December 2009; Dunham, Surviving Against the Odds, p. 300; Scott, A Singular Woman, p. 220, 254–55; Larry Rohter, “Obama Says Real Life Experience Trumps Rivals’ Foreign Policy Credits,” NYT, 10 April 2008, p. A18; Richard Wolffe and Michael Hirsh, “A Man at Home in the World,” Newsweek, 12 April 2008; Adam Goldman and Robert Tanner (AP), “Old Friends Recall Obama’s Years in L.A., N.Y.,” 15 May 2008; Rajghatta, “McCain vs. Obama,” Times of India, 8 June 2008; Azhar Masood, “Obama’s Larkana Connection,” Pakistan Times, 10 July 2008; Hamid in Remnick, The Bridge, p. 112; Wolffe, Renegade, pp. 238–40. Years later, Obama would tell a French questioner that “I have traveled through the south of France when I was in college,” perhaps to visit Occidental friend Laurent Delanney. Interview with Laurence Haim, Canal Plus, 1 June 2009, Public Papers of the Presidents 2009, Vol. I, p. 747.

23. Obama, DFMF, pp. 113–14, 118–19; Sohale Siddiqi in Goldman and Tanner, “Old Friends Recall Obama’s Years”; Siddiqi interview with Jim Gilmore; Phil Boerner diary entries, 16 and 29 June and 8 September 1981, Phil Boerner to Karen McCraw, 8, 10, 20, and 25 August and 1 September 1981, Boerner Papers; Boerner, “Barack Obama ’83, My Columbia College Roommate,” Columbia College Today, January–February 2009; Alison Leigh Cowan, “Recollections of Obama’s Ex-Roommate,” NYTimes.com, 20 January 2009; Kim Clark, “Obama’s Lessons for Transfer Students,” U.S. News, 16 January 2009; Lydia DePillis, “Obama Slept Here,” New York Observer, 1 February 2009; DJG interviews with Boerner and Paul Carpenter; Bradley Gallo, “Meet the Roommate-in-Chief,” Northattan.org, 20 October 2009; Boerner in Marie-Joelle Parent, “Obama’s Guide to New York,” Ottawa Sun, 15 November 2009; Elizabeth A. Harris, “President Obama Studied Here,” NYT, 13 June 2010; Krisanne Alcantara, “Inside President Barack Obama’s Former NYC Apartment,” realestate.aol.com, 13 August 2012.

On Emmett W. Bassett, who graduated from Tuskegee Institute in 1942 under the tutelage of George Washington Carver before earning a Ph.D. at Ohio State University in 1956 and teaching first at Columbia and then at the New Jersey College of Medicine, see Nathan Mayberg, “Black History Month Celebrated at College,” Sullivan County Democrat, 24 February 2004; David Colman, “Director’s Corner,” Neuro News (McGill University), April 2008; Bassett and his wife Priscilla’s 2011 oral history interview with Joseph Mosnier, Grahamsville, NY; his 4 October 2013 obituary in the Sullivan County Democrat; and the program from his memorial service, Boerner Papers. On Obama’s cooking, see also Kenneth T. Walsh, “No Silver Spoon for Obama,” U.S. News, 9 June 2008, p. 18. On Earl Chew, see Laurie Becklund, “Jurors Haunted by Guilty Verdict Want It Set Aside,” LAT, 1 July 1992, p. A1; Becklund, “Judge Heeds Jurors’ Pleas, Orders Retrial,” LAT, 2 July 1992, p. A1; “California Case Puts Spotlight on Jury Coercion and Peer Pressure,” NYT, 17 July 1992; and especially John Schwada, “Looking for Obama,” MyFoxLA.com, 29 February 2008.

24. Columbia University Bulletin 1981–83, esp. pp. 2–8, 32–33, 35, 45–47, 53, and Columbia College Courses of Instruction 1981–82, Columbia University Archives; Phil Boerner Columbia transcript and Phil Boerner diary entry, 8 September 1981, Boerner Papers; Obama to Ann Sutoro, 21 September 1981, Dunham/Solyom Papers; Tammerlin Drummond, “Barack Obama’s Law,” LAT, 12 March 1990, pp. E1–E2 (stating that Obama paid off his undergraduate student loans during 1984); Obama interview with David Axelrod, 7 February 2004, JKP; DJG interviews with Phil Boerner, Pern Beckman, Gerrard Bushell, Darwin Malloy, Ron Sunshine, and William Araiza; Rifka Rosenwein, “Alienation Is Common for Minority Students,” CS, 25 September 1981, p. 1; Joseph Walsh, “Students Label CU Life Depressing,” CS, 13 October 1981, p. 1; Danny Ly, “Striking Tenants Demand Front-Door Locks,” CS, 16 November 1981, p. 1; Tom Todreas in Columbia College Today, May–June 2009, pp. 56–57; Obama to Boerner, 21 October 1986, Boerner Papers.

On Frank Ayala, who ironically would end his career as dean of students at Occidental College, see Jon Elsen, “Princeton Dean Named to Columbia Position,” CS, 20 September 1979, p. 1; Richard Froehlich, “Ayala Goes West—Back to School,” CS, 22 April 1982, p. 4; and Occidental Weekly, 26 November 2007.

25. “A Forum on South Africa—Including the Film The Rising Tide” flyer, 21 October 1981, Boerner Papers; LaVerne McDowell, “Sen. Urges Protest of Reaganomics,” CS, 12 November 1981, p. 1; DJG interviews with Phil Boerner, Pern Beckman, and Ron Sunshine; Dorothy Boerner to Phil Boerner, 1 November 1981, Boerner diary entry, 16 November 1981, Boerner to Karen McCraw, 5 and 15 December 1981, Boerner to grandparents, 28 December 1981, Boerner diary entries, 20, 21, and 22 January 1982, Boerner to Karen McCraw, 23 January 1982, Boerner diary entries, 24, 29, and 30 (2) January and 1, 5, and 6 February 1982, Boerner to McCraw, 7 February 1982, Boerner diary entries, 12 and 13 February 1982, Boerner to McCraw, 2 April 1982, Boerner Papers; Cathie M. Currie, “A Columbia Classmate Remembers Obama,” FactCheck.org, 23 February 2010. On Ndaba/Gulabe, see Susan Benesch, “Fighting for Divestment: David Ndaba of the African National Congress,” CS, 25 May 1983, p. 3; Bill Cecil, “George Harrison,” Workers World, 4 November 2004; and William Minter’s 2004 interview with Jennifer Davis. Neither Boerner nor Obama recorded or remember Ron’s last name, and his identity remains unknown. In mid-February 1982 Phil Boerner jotted down that Barack’s studio was in a building numbered 932 and that his phone number was 866-4417. Neither Obama’s name nor that number appear in the 1982 Cole’s Cross Reference Directory for Manhattan, but Boerner’s reference to a nearby record store strongly suggests that Obama’s studio apartment was at 932 Amsterdam Avenue rather than 932 Columbus Avenue. No fewer than three record stores—at 906, 963, and 964—were located very close to the Amsterdam building.

26. Obama, DFMF, pp. 4, 119–27; Obama’s 2001 interview with Julieanna Richardson; Kenneth Meeks, “Favorite Son,” Black Enterprise, October 2004, pp. 88–95; Shica Boss-Bicak, “Barack Obama ’83: Is He the New Face of the Democratic Party?,” Columbia College Today, January 2005; David Saltonstall and Michael Saul, “Obama: Oh Boy, the Rent!” NYDN, 8 November 2005; Obama in Jacob Weisberg, “The Path to Power,” Men’s Vogue, September 2006, pp. 218–23; Mendell, Obama, pp. 16, 59, 62; Maya in Jennifer Steinhauer, “Charisma and a Search for Self,” NYT, 17 March 2007, p. A1; Jeff Chang, “Maya Soetoro Ng: Q&A,” Vibe, September 2007; Susan Page, “Obama Is Still Seeking Traction,” USA Today, 2 October 2007, p. 1A; Jennifer 8. Lee, “Where Obama Lived in 1980s New York,” NYT Cityroom blog, 30 January 2008; Todd Purdum, “Raising Obama,” Vanity Fair, March 2008; Wolffe et al., “When Barry Became Barack,” Newsweek, 31 March 2008, pp. 24ff.; Lisa Miller and Wolffe, “Finding His Faith,” Newsweek, 21 July 2008, pp. 26ff.; Wolffe, Renegade, pp. 30–31; “Barack Obama Revealed,” CNN, 20 August 2008; Obama in Remnick, The Bridge, p. 114; Siddiqi in Goldman and Tanner, “Old Friends Recall Obama’s Years in L.A., N.Y.”; Michael Daly, “Young Barack Obama Came to the City to Find Himself,” NYDN, 11 November 2008; Sheryl Gay Stolberg, “Obama Conveys Principle to Students,” NYT, 8 June 2010; Siddiqi interview with Jim Gilmore; Maraniss, BOTS, p. 444; Scott, A Singular Woman, p. 254; DJG interviews with Andy Roth and Mahboob Mahmood; Mahboob Mahmood, “Readings with Barack,” 30 September 2008. Cole’s Cross Reference Directory for Manhattan, 1983, p. 765, and 1984, p. 771, confirm “B Obama 410-2857” at 339 East 94th with that phone number beginning in 1982. Lynn Sweet, “The Obama We Don’t Know,” CST, 19 July 2008, contains factual errors and asserts secondhand that “one summer Obama worked for a private company holding a contract to process health records” for city employees and also “was a telemarketer in midtown Manhattan selling New York Times subscriptions over the phone, wearing a headset.” Obama himself has never mentioned either such job, nor has he ever referenced the construction site job in any extemporaneous remarks.

27. DJG interviews with Andy Roth and Alex McNear.

28. Phil Boerner to Karen McCraw, 31 August 1982, Boerner Papers; Columbia University Bulletin 1981–83, pp. 2–8, 191–93, Columbia College, Courses of Instruction 1982–83, esp. pp. 38, 85, 90, Columbia Archives; Warwick Daw in Columbia College Today, January–February 2009, p. 61, and in Maraniss, BOTS, p. 456; DJG interviews with Michael Ackerman, Pern Beckman, Phil Boerner, Robert Y. Shapiro, Michael Baron, William Araiza, and Jeremy Feinberg; Michael Waldman, “The Question of Edward Said,” CS, 4 March 1982, pp. B6–B7, B9; Michael L. Baron, “Tug of War: The Battle over American Policy Toward China, 1946–49,” Ph.D. dissertation, Columbia University 1980; Maurice Possley, “Activism Blossomed in College,” CT, 30 March 2007; Janny Scott, “Obama’s Account of New York Years Often Differs from What Others Say,” NYT, 30 October 2007, p. B1; Baron in Naftali Bendavid, ed., Obama: The Essential Guide to the Democratic Nominee (Triumph Books, 2008), p. 36, in Jim Popkin, “Obama and the Case of the Missing Thesis,” MSNBC, 24 July 2008, in Betsy Morais, “After Long Absence, Obama, CC ’83, Speaks at Alma Mater,” CS, 11 September 2008; William J. Broad and David E. Sanger, “Obama’s Youthful Ideals Shaped the Long Arc of His Nuclear-Free Vision,” NYT, 5 July 2009, p. A1; “Gerald Feinberg, 58, Physicist; Taught at Columbia University,” NYT, 23 April 1992; Gerald Feinberg, What Is the World Made of? Atoms, Leptons, Quarks, and Other Tantalizing Particles (Doubleday, 1977), esp. pp. xii, xiii, xv; Gerald Feinberg, Elementary Physics 1002Y Syllabus, Spring 1991, Feinberg Papers. Per the latter, Feinberg in 1982 may well also have assigned some portions of Robert H. March, Physics for Poets, 2nd ed. (McGraw-Hill, 1978).

29. Barack Obama to Alex McNear, 26 September 1982, McNear Papers; DJG interviews with Alex McNear and Jeremy Feinberg; Anatole Broyard, “Revising the Heroine,” NYT, 11 September 1982.

30. Gerald Feinberg, “Physics C1001X, First Exam,” 12 October 1982, Feinberg Papers; DJG interview with Gregory Poe (“physics for poets was a famous gut”); Aaron Freiwald, “South African: Americans Should Denounce Apartheid,” CS, 3 November 1982, p. 2; Cynthia Gelper, “Book, Students Say CC Could Be Better for Blacks,” CS, 19 November 1982, pp. 1, 7; Barack Obama to Alex McNear, 20 November 1982, McNear Papers; Friedrich Nietzsche, Basic Writings of Nietzsche (Modern Library, 1992), p. 229.

31. Obama, DFMF, pp. 3–5, 114, 127–28; Scott, A Singular Woman, p. 256; William Onyango, “Economic Planning Man Dies in Crash,” Nairobi Times, 30 November 1982, p. 5; DJG interviews with Zeituni Onyango, Pake Zane, and Alba De Souza; Philip Ochieng, “From Home Squared to the U.S. Senate,” Nation, 1 November 2004; Edmund Sanders, “Obama Not Quite His Father’s Son,” LAT, 17 July 2008 (“I can’t stand it” and “unrecognizable”); Zane in Maraniss, “Though Obama Had to Leave to Find Himself,” WP Magazine, 24 August 2008; Kenneth Ogosia and Michael Mugwang’a, “New Links in Dreams From Obama’s Father,” Nation, 25 August 2008; Zane in Sally Jacobs, “A Father’s Charm, Absence,” BG, 21 September 2008; Joe Ombuor, “Obama’s Father and the Origin of the Muslim Name,” Standard, 4 November 2008; John Oywa and George Olwenya, “Obama’s Dad and His Many Loves,” Standard, 14 November 2008 (referencing Sebastian Peter Okoda); Jenn Jagire, “Keziah: First and Last [sic] Wife of Obama Sr.,” New Vision (Uganda), 2 January 2009; Zane in Remnick, The Bridge, pp. 67–68; Mark Obama Ndesandjo, Nairobi to Shenzhen, pp. 6, 174; William Foreman (AP), “Obama’s Half-Brother Recalls Their Abusive Father,” 3 November 2009; Andrew Jacobs, “An Obama Relative Living in China Tells of His Own Journey of Self-Discovery,” NYT, 4 November 2009; Keith Richburg, “Obama Half Brother Steps Into Spotlight,” WP, 5 November 2009; David Eimer, “Our Alcoholic Father Beat Me,” Telegraph, 14 November 2009; Tristan McConnell and Andrew Rice, “The Obama Diaspora,” NY Magazine, 23 November 2009; Zeituni Onyango, Tears of Abuse, esp. pp. 39, 41–42, 90–91, 101, 217, 275, 283; Auma Obama, And Then Life Happens, esp. pp. 55, 58, 62, 68, 82, 89, 119–20, 131–35; Ndesandjo, An Obama’s Journey, pp. 33, 44, 51, 59; Abon’go Malik Obama, Barack Obama Sr., esp. pp. 258–59, 265, 28, 325 (noting with regard to Zeituni that “the bond that existed between the two was extraordinary”), 373; Firstbrook, The Obamas, pp. 225–32, 247; Jacobs, The Other Barack, esp. pp. 210, 227, 230, 235–43, 247–54; Maraniss, BOTS, pp. 277–78, 414. Multiple sources state that Hussein Onyango died in 1979, not 1975, but the three who knew best—Zeituni Onyango, Abon’go Malik Obama, and the very thorough Peter Firstbrook—all convincingly agree upon 1975. Likewise, some later sources offer differing exact dates for Obama Sr.’s death, but the most contemporaneous source, the November 30, 1982, Nairobi Times story, is on balance the most likely to be correct.

32. Obama on The Friday Night Show, WTTW, 3 December 2004; Obama, TAOH, p. 205; Jeff Zeleny, “Obama Talks About Growing Up Without His Father,” NYT Caucus Blog, 3 October 2007; Obama in Kevin Merida, “The Ghost of a Father,” WP, 14 December 2007, p. A12; Obama in Purdum, “Raising Obama,” Vanity Fair, March 2008. See also Obama’s 2 October 2003 interview with David Axelrod, Chicago. Instances where Obama would incorrectly state that he did not adopt “Barack” until late 1982 include Bernard Schoenburg, “Issues of Race a Painful Part of Obama Family History,” SJR, 11 January 2004, p. 15; Obama interview with David Axelrod, 7 February 2004; and Obama on The Oprah Winfrey Show, 19 January 2005. Obama would once say that “some of my drive comes from wanting to prove that he should have stuck around,” but Barack was indeed deeply fortunate to have grown up half a world away from a man who was “little short of a monster” and “suffered from a severe narcissistic personality disorder.” “Who Is Barack Obama?,” ABC World News Tonight, 1 November 2007; Toby Harnden, “A Life of President Obama’s Father,” Telegraph, 5 August 2011; Falk, The Riddle of Barack Obama, p. 28.

33. Siddiqi interview with Jim Gilmore; Kakugawa in Burgess, A Tale of Two Brothers, p. 94; McNear in Maraniss, BOTS, p. 455; DJG interviews with Alex McNear, Michael Schwartz, Mike Ramos, and Asad Jumabhoy; Barack Obama to Phil Boerner, 3 March 1983, and Katy Budge to Phil Boerner, 15 March 1983, Boerner Papers; Columbia University Bulletin 1981–83, pp. 2–8.

34. Obama to Alex McNear, 10 February 1983, McNear Papers (mentioning Spanish); DJG interviews with Michael Baron, Pern Beckman, Len Davis, and Judy Clain; Columbia College, Courses of Instruction 1982–83, p. 41; Lennard J. Davis, Factual Fictions: The Origins of the English Novel (Columbia University Press, 1983), esp. pp. 157–58, 213, 221–22; Lennard J. Davis Class Recording, June 1983, Davis Papers; Lennard J. Davis, Resisting Novels: Ideology and Fiction (Methuen, 1987), esp. pp. ix, 24, 224; Davis, “Barack Obama’s Professor Gives Him Mid-Term Grades,” Huffington Post, 21 January 2010. Internal evidence makes it clear that the Davis class recording dates from early June 1983 during a summer session iteration of his seminar, and not from the spring one that had ended just four weeks earlier. Jan Hoffman, “Making Up Is Hard to Do,” Village Voice, 31 May 1983, pp. 14–18; Gary Arnold, “Film Notes,” WP, 20 May 1983, p. A25; NYT advertisement, 29 May 1983, p. H14; Newsweek, 30 May 1983, p. 96; and NYT, 3 June 1983, pp. C8, C17.

35. Columbia College, Courses of Instruction 1982–83, pp. 34, 103; Maurice Obstfeld e-mails to DJG; Jonathan Zimmerman, “Playbooks for the White House,” CT, 30 January 2007; Thomas Vinciguerra, “Dreams From My Mater,” Columbia Magazine, Summer 2012; DJG interviews with Jonathan Zimmerman and Gregory Poe; Andrew G. Walder, Sociology W3229y, “State Socialist Societies,” Spring 1983, Poe Papers; Andrew Walder e-mails to DJG; Alex Nove, Stalinism and After, 2nd ed. (George Allen & Unwin, 1981), esp. p. 40; Timothy E. O’Connor, untitled review of Stalinism and After, 3rd ed., Studies in Soviet Thought 41 (March 1991): 157–61, esp. pp. 159 and 160; Bill Wallace, “Obituary: Professor Alex Nove,” Independent, 20 May 1994 (“when Mikhail Gorbachev raised the cry of perestroika, he seemed almost to be quoting” Nove); Elizabeth Pond, From the Yaroslavsky Station: Russia Perceived (Universe Books, 1981); John Leonard, “Review,” NYT, 6 October 1981, p. C9; Walter Goodman, NYTBR, 29 November 1981, p. 11; Susan Sherer Osnos, “Conversations on the Trans-Siberian Express,” WPBW, 27 December 1981, p. 6; Donald Bremner, “A View of Soviet Life from Siberia,” LAT, 15 July 1982, p. G36; David Lane, The End of Social Inequality? Class, Status and Power Under State Socialism (George Allen & Unwin, 1982), esp. p. 159; Ivan Szelenyi, “The End of Social Inequality,” Acta Sociologica 26 (July 1983): 313–16; T. Anthony Jones, untitled review of The End of Social Inequality? Soviet Studies 36 (January 1984): 146–47; Milovan Djilas, The New Class: An Analysis of the Communist System (Praeger, 1957), esp. pp. 47, 213; Serge Schmemmann, “Milovan Djilas, Yugoslav Critic of Communism, Dies at 83,” NYT, 21 April 1995.

36. Obama to Alex McNear, 10 February 1983, McNear Papers; DJG interviews with McNear; Raymond Williams, Marxism and Literature (Oxford University Press, 1977). Twelve years later, Obama would describe his job search quite differently: “in the months leading up to my graduation, I wrote to every civil rights organization I could think of, to any black elected official in the country with a progressive agenda, to neighborhood councils and tenants rights groups. When no one wrote back, I wasn’t discouraged.” Obama, DFMF, p. 135.

37. Obama to Boerner, 3 March 1983, Boerner Papers; Obama, “Breaking the War Mentality,” Sundial: The Weekly Newsmagazine, 10 March 1983, pp. 2–3, 5; Remnick, The Bridge, p. 117. The Sundial article was first discovered by Evan Gahr, “Young Obama Wrote Article Blaming America for ‘Growing Threat of War,’” Human Events, 9 January 2009; see also Broad and Sanger, “Obama’s Youthful Ideals Shaped the Long Arc of His Nuclear-Free Vision,” NYT, 5 July 2009.

38. 1983 Socialist Scholars Conference, Cooper Union, 1 and 2 April 1983, Democratic Socialists of America Papers Box 81; Obama to McNear, 1 April 1983, McNear Papers; Obama, DFMF, p. 122; Stanley Kurtz, Radical-in-Chief: Barack Obama and the Untold Story of American Socialism (Simon & Schuster, 2010), pp. 1, 25–26, 30, 62–63; Angelo M. Codevilla, “The Chosen One,” Claremont Review of Books, Summer 2011, pp. 52–58, at 58; DJG interviews with Andrew Roth and Alex McNear.

Kurtz insists that mailing labels generated from a list of attendees who signed in at that first April 1983 conference proves that Obama also attended the second such conference, which was held April 19 through 21, 1984, and that he had the especially dangerous experience of hearing this author and the seminal, wonderful James H. Cone speak about Dr. King on Friday morning, April 20. The mailing labels list Obama’s address as 339 E. 94th Street #6A, the apartment in which he lived with Sohale up through mid-May 1983. By mid-November 1983, and continuing through April and indeed most of 1984, Obama was living at 622 W. 114th Street #43, and on April 20 he would have been at work at One Dag Hammarskjold Plaza on Manhattan’s East Side. Kurtz, Radical-in-Chief, pp. 69–71.

39. Obama to McNear, 1 April 1983, McNear Papers; Corey Kilgannon, “Keyboard Virtuoso,” NYT, 19 November 1995; Pamela Dorian, “Everyone Is a Winner!” UrbanMysticMusing.com, 14 April 2009; DJG interviews with William Araiza and Jeremy Feinberg. SSDI indicates that Diane Dee was born in June 1924, and died in December 2009, age eighty-five.

40. Julius Genachowski, “Senate to Trustees: Divest!” CS, 28 March 1983, p. 1; Jeff Adler, “Divest Rally Outside Trustee Meeting Draws 100,” CS, 5 April 1983, p. 1; Julius Genachowski, “Students Keep Up Vigil to Force CU Divestment,” CS, 21 April 1983, p. 2; Leslie Dreyfous, “Danny Armstrong,” CS, 17 May 1983, p. 19; Julius Genachowski, “Columbia Will Not Divest,” CS, 13 July 1983, p. 1; Tony Vellela, New Voices: Student Activism in the ’80s and ’90s (South End Press, 1988), pp. 19–38; Siddiqi interview with Jim Gilmore; DJG interviews with Alex McNear, Verna Bigger Myers, Janis Hardiman Robinson, Wayne P. Weddington III, Darwin Malloy, Gerrard Bushell, Michael Ackerman, Charles V. Hamilton, Robert Y. Shapiro, and Michael Baron; Daniel Armstrong, Barbara Ransby, Kieth Cockrell, Derek Hawkins, Joseph H. Zwicker, Tim Todreas, and John G. Ruggie e-mails to DJG; Hollis R. Lynch, “After Bad Start, CU Must Be More Representative,” CS, 22 February 1983, pp. 3, 6; Susan Scheiner, “Blacks Have Rough Time with CU’s White Climate,” CS, 25 April 1983, pp. 5, 13; Helen Kennedy, “Obama’s Quiet Yrs. in NYC,” NYDN, 14 January 2007, p. 26; Ross Goldberg, “Obama’s Years at Columbia Are a Mystery,” New York Sun, 2 September 2008; “Obama’s Lost Years,” WSJ, 11 September 2008, p. A14; Maraniss, BOTS, pp. 436–37, 459; Obama’s 2001 interview with Julieanna Richardson; Obama’s 2002 television appearance with Chinta Strausberg; Obama’s 21 August 2006 remarks at the South African Institute for International Affairs, available at southafrica.usembassy.gov; Jim Popkin, “Obama and the Case of the Missing Thesis,” MSNBC, 24 July 2008; Betsy Morais, “After Long Absence,” CS, 11 September 2008; Broad and Sanger, “Obama’s Youthful Ideals,” NYT, 5 July 2009. See also Obama’s unique reference in John Corr, “From Mean Streets to Hallowed Halls,” Philadelphia

Inquirer, 27 February 1990, pp. C1, C4; Columbia “was on a hill. . . . A lot of my education happened when I walked down the hill and into Harlem.” On the wonderful Chuck Hamilton, see Wilbur C. Rich, “From Muskogee to Morningside Heights: Political Scientist Charles V. Hamilton,” Columbia Magazine, Spring 2004.

41. Obama to Alex McNear, 27 April 1983, McNear Papers; McNear to Andrew Roth, 12 May 1983, Roth Papers; DJG interviews with Alex McNear, Hasan Chandoo, Asad Jumabhoy, and Tim Jessup; Richard Bernstein, “For 7,300 at Columbia, a Day Full of Balloons and Diplomas,” NYT, 18 May 1983, pp. B1, B4; Richard Pollack, “7,329 Graduate CU in a Festive Mood,” CS, 25 May 1983, pp. 1, 6; John R. Pulliam, “Obama Big on Ceremonies,” GRM, 5 June 2005; Scott, A Singular Woman, pp. 243, 245, 249, 254–55; Obama to Alex McNear, 27 June (postmarked 5 July) 1983, McNear Papers; Obama to Phil Boerner, n.d., ca. 27 June 1983, Boerner Papers; Ann Dunham Sutoro, “Civil Rights of Working Indonesian Women,” Institute for Legal Aid, Jakarta, 10 December 1982, 5pp., and Sutoro, “The Effects of Industrialization on Women Workers in Indonesia,” n.d., ca. 1982, 18pp., Atria Institute Archives; Ann Dunham Soetoro Passport, April 1981–April 1986, Obama Family Papers, UH; Ann D. Sutoro to the Files, “Women’s Economic Activities in North Coast Fishing Communities,” Ford Foundation, 22 May 1983, 10pp., and Sutoro, “II. Program Statement: Women and Employment (Indonesia),” n.d., 1983, 41pp., esp. pp. 14, 17, Atria Institute Archives; Alice Dewey and Geoffrey White, “Ann Dunham: A Personal Reflection,” Anthropology News, November 2008, p. 20. Apropos of Dewey’s comment, Ann’s son would later recount, “I actually remember her saying to me once, ‘I don’t feel white. That’s not my identity.’” Wolffe, Renegade, p. 178. One news story would report that Dewey accompanied Dunham to Kenya. Dan Nakaso, “Obama’s Mother’s Work Focus of UH Seminar,” HA, 12 September 2008.

42. Obama to Alex McNear, 1 September and 15 November 1983, McNear Papers; DJG interviews with Alex McNear and Hasan Chandoo. Obama would later write, “I decided to find more conventional work for a year, to pay off my student loans and maybe even save a little bit.” DFMF, p. 135. Per Cole’s Cross Reference Directory for Manhattan, 1984, p. 825 and 1985 p. 839, listing “D Reilly 866-8172,” the first public report of the 622 West 114th Street address was Beth J. Harpaz (AP), “Obama Slept Here: Roots in 3 Nations, 6 Time Zones,” 11 November 2008. When very limited selections from some but not all of Obama’s letters to McNear were publicized in 2012 (Maraniss, “Becoming Obama,” Vanity Fair, June 2012, and BOTS, pp. 450–52, 454–55, 464–65, 468–70, erroneously calling them “passionate”), one far more perceptive reporter labeled them “terribly pretentious . . . every discussion of the Great Existential Questions ends up being, basically, all about him and his superior philosophical mind and how he is on a higher plane than anyone else.” With “a slightly patronizing” attitude toward his girlfriend, “Who did this guy think he was, with all these delusions of grandeur?” Noreen Malone, “Barack Obama’s Old Girlfriends Get Dishy,” New York Magazine, 2 May 2012.

43. Obama in John Corr, “From Mean Streets to Hallowed Halls,” Philadelphia Inquirer, 27 February 1990, pp. C1, C4; DJG interviews with Cathy Lazere, Lou Celi, Barry Rutizer, Beth Noymer Levine, Dan Armstrong, Lisa Shachtman Hennessey, Peggy Mendelow, Brenda Vinson, Michael Williams, and Steve Delaney; Susan Arterian Chang e-mail to DJG; Dan Armstrong, “Barack Obama Embellishes His Resume,” analyzethis.net, 9 July 2005, and ensuing comments by Bill Millar and Beth Noymer Levine; Financing Foreign Operations—Interest Rate & Foreign Exchange Updater, 15 December 1983, 15 January 1984, 15 and 31 March 1984, 15 April 1984; Financing Foreign Operations Financial Update

Bulletin, 15 December 1983, 2pp.; Business International Money Report [BIMR], 6, 13, and 20 January 1984, 3 February 1984, esp. pp. 33–35, 9 March 1984; Business International Weekly Report to Managers of Worldwide Operations, 6, 13, and 20 January 1984, 3 and 10 February 1984, 26 March 1984; Janny Scott, “Obama’s Account,” NYT, 30 October 2007; Scott Horsley, “Obama’s Early Brush with Financial Markets,” NPR, 9 July 2008; Noymer in Lisa Miller and Richard Wolffe, “Finding His Faith,” Newsweek, 21 July 2008, pp. 26ff.; Jessica Ravitz, “Utahn Recounts Sharing Job with Obama in New York,” Salt Lake Tribune, 27 August 2008.

44. DJG interviews with Andrew Roth, Genevieve Cook, Bill Ayers, Bernardine Dohrn, and John Ayers; John Ayers e-mail to DJG, 1 May 2012 (“Bill does not remember Genevieve Cook from Bank Street. ‘Hey, that was almost thirty years ago’”); Genevieve Cook, “Dancing in Doorways,” B.A. thesis, Swarthmore College, May 1981, esp. pp. 1–2, 95; “Barack Obama” and “Recipes from Bill Ayers,” Cook Papers; Cook in Maraniss, BOTS, p. 472. On Helen Ibbitson Jessup, see her book Court Arts of Indonesia (Harry N. Abrams, 1990), and Paul Richard, “Under Java’s Spell,” WP, 19 May 1991. On Michael J. Cook, see Pilita Clark, “Ambassador on the Warpath,” Sydney Morning Herald, 11 March 1993, p. 13. On Philip C. Jessup’s work in Indonesia, see Henry Kamm, “Indonesia Nickel Project Reflects 2 Worlds,” NYT, 14 April 1978, pp. D1, D14. Jessup died in August 2013 at age eighty-seven. See Evi Mariani, “In Memoriam: Mining Executive Philip Jessup’s Deep Connection to Indonesia,” Jakarta Post, 23 October 2013.

Bill Ayers and Bernardine Dohrn had lived underground for over a decade following their April 2, 1970, indictment on federal criminal charges. Those charges were dropped in early 1974 because they involved unconstitutional warrantless electronic surveillance, but both Ayers and Dohrn remained underground until Dohrn surrendered on December 3, 1980, in Chicago to face state charges still pending against her—but not Ayers—from the violent October 1969 “Days of Rage.” A front-page November 27 New York Times story had reported they had been living at 520 W. 123rd and that more than a dozen New Yorkers had identified Dohrn. All three major television networks covered Dohrn’s December 3 surrender on their evening news broadcasts. On January 13, 1981, Dohrn pled guilty to reduced charges, was fined $1,500, and was granted probation that allowed her and her family to return to 520 West 123rd Street.

Sixteen months later, however, in the wake of an October 20, 1981, armored car robbery in Nanuet, New York, that left one Brink’s employee and two police officers dead, a federal grand jury subpoenaed Dohrn to supply particular examples of her handwriting. Rental vehicles used in both the Nanuet holdup and an earlier April 1980 one had been rented by women using counterfeit drivers’ licenses of customers who had patronized Broadway Baby, an Upper West Side store where Dohrn had worked under a pseudonym for six months prior to the February 1980 birth of her second son, Malik. Dohrn refused to submit the handwriting samples and was jailed for contempt. Seven months later, concluding that Dohrn’s handwriting samples were superfluous to the prosecution of the Nanuet killers, Judge Gerard L. Goettel let Dohrn go free. In re Dohrn, 560 F. Supp. 179 (S. D. N. Y.), 5 January 1983. See also “Indictments Voided for 12 Weathermen,” NYT, 4 January 1974, p. 41; Nathaniel Sheppard Jr., “2 in Weather Underground Are Bargaining to Surrender,” NYT, 24 November 1980, p. A18; Josh Barbanell, “Bernardine Dohrn Reportedly Seen on the West Side,” NYT, 27 November 1980, pp. A1, D12; Benita Brodt and Ronald Koziol, “Defiant Dohrn Surrenders,” CT, 4 December 1980, p. 1; Nathaniel Sheppard Jr., “Bernardine Dohrn Gives Up to Authorities in Chicago,” NYT, 4 December 1980, p. A18; Nathaniel Sheppard Jr., “Chicago Home of Friend Was Refuge for Miss Dohrn,” NYT, 5 December 1980, p. A22; Douglas E. Kneeland, “Ex-Radical Leader Gets Probation and Fine in Chicago,” NYT, 14 January 1981, p. A12; M. A. Farber, “Behind the Brink’s Case: Return of the Radical Left,” NYT, 16 February 1982, pp. A1, B4; “Miss Dohrn Refusing to Aid Brink’s Case,” NYT, 18 May 1982, p. B3; “Miss Dohrn Jailed for Contempt,” NYT, 20 May 1982, p. B12; “Bernardine Dohrn Freed by Judge,” NYT, 6 January 1983, p. B3; Eileen Putman (AP), “Radical Dohrn Released, Not Sorry,” Palm Beach Post, 15 February 1983, pp. A7, A8; Sam Roberts, “Bar Panel to Consider Dohrn’s Fitness,” NYT, 26 August 1985, p. B4; Peter Howell, “Hippie Terrorists Reincarnated,” Toronto Star, 18 October 2003; Patrick Healy, “A Playwright’s Glimmers of a Fugitive Childhood,” NYT, 3 September 2009. On “smash monogamy,” see Bernardine Dohrn, Bill Ayers, and Jeff Jones, Sing a Battle Song (Seven Stories Press, 2006), pp. 136, 204.

45. Genevieve Cook Journal, 10, 12, 22, 26, and 29 January 1984, Cook to Obama, 10 January 1984, Cook poem beginning “saya rasa,” 29 January 1984, Cook journal, 5 and 11 February 1984, Cook alphabetical poem for Obama, n.d., Cook Papers; Dunham to Alice Dewey, 13 February 1984, Dunham Papers; DJG interviews with Genevieve Cook, Hasan Chandoo, Cathy Lazere, Beth Noymer Levine, Lou Celi, Barry Rutizer, Lisa Shachtman Hennessey, Dan Armstrong, and Peggy Mendelow; Celi in Issenberg, BG, 6 August 2008.

46. Genevieve Cook journal, 18, 19, 20, 22, 24, 25, and 27 February 1984, 5, 9, 17, and 20 March 1984; DJG interviews with Genevieve Cook and Phil Boerner; Michael Isbell e-mail to DJG.

47. Genevieve Cook journal, 22, 25, and 29 March 1984, 1 April 1984; Richard F. Shepard, “Going Out Guide,” NYT, 9 February 1984, p. C32; Mel Gussow, “How Billie Whitelaw Interprets Beckett,” NYT, 14 February 1984, p. C13; Frank Rich, “A Whitelaw Beckett,” NYT, 17 February 1984, p. C3; Bruce Weber, “Billie Whitelaw, 82, Longtime Beckett Muse,” NYT, 23 December 2014, p. A20; DJG interviews with Genevieve Cook, Hasan Chandoo, and Beenu Mahmood; Sohale Siddiqi interview with Jim Gilmore; Howell Raines, “Hart and Mondale Clash Repeatedly in Sixth Debate,” NYT, 29 March 1984, p. A1; Mike Shanahan (AP), “Debate: Most Personal, Acrimonious Exchanges,” 29 March 1984; Fred Rothenberg (AP), “Close Contact Makes for Lively Debate,” 29 March 1984; Gerald M. Boyd, “Thousands Cheer Jackson at Rally in Harlem,” NYT, 1 April 1984, p. 29; Chandoo in Pete Hisey, “Center Stage,” Occidental Magazine, Fall 2004, pp. 24–29; Mahmood, “Readings with Barack,” 30 September 2008. In 2008 Obama’s campaign would acknowledge that in 1984 he was registered to vote at 622 West 114th Street, although the site where that acknowledgment appeared, www.commongroundpolitics.net, has since disappeared from the Web.

Over two decades later, Jackson would assert that “it was in a presidential debate with Walter Mondale at Columbia University in 1984” when he first met Obama. “After the debate he introduced himself and said ‘This is doable, we can do this, and a black man can run and win the White House.’” Robert T. Starks, “Jackson’s Tears from All the Years,” N’Digo Profiles, December 2008, pp. 16, 18. Remnick, The Bridge, p. 490, quotes Jackson as saying that years later Obama told him he had seen the debate.

48. Genevieve Cook journal, 3, 8, and 9 April 1984; Obama to Alex McNear, 14 April 1984, McNear Papers.

49. Susan Arterian Chang e-mail to DJG; DJG interviews with Peggy Mendelow and Dan Armstrong

(who also recounted Tom Ehrbar's comment concerning Dan Kobal); Bill Millar's 2007 comments on Dan Armstrong's www.analyzethis.net blog; Issenberg, "Obama Shows Hints of His Year in Global Finance," BG, 6 August 2008; Financing Foreign Operations—Interest Rate & Foreign Exchange Rate Updater, 30 April, 15 and 31 May, 15 and 30 June, and 15 and 31 July 1984; Business International Money Report, 20 April, 18 May, and 15 June 1984; Business International Weekly Report, 20 April, 5 May, and 8 June 1984. Public reports of ties between the CIA and BI's network of foreign-based correspondents predated Obama's time there. John M. Crewdson, "CIA Established Many Links to Journalists in U.S. and Abroad," NYT, 27 December 1977, pp. 1, 40, reported that BI, "a widely respected business information service . . . had provided cover" for at least four CIA agents twenty years earlier. See also Angelo M. Codevilla, "The Chosen One," Claremont Review of Books, Summer 2011, pp. 52–58, at 55.

50. Genevieve Cook journal, 16 and 30 April 1984; Sim Heninger to Phil Boerner, 2 April 1984, Boerner Papers; DJG interviews with Genevieve Cook, Sim Heninger, and Phil Boerner; Genevieve to Barack unsent letter, 6 May 1984, Genevieve Cook journal, 8, 9, 16, and 26 May 1984, Cook Papers; Ann Dunham to Alice Dewey, 13 February 1984, Dunham to Leatrice Mirikitani, 26 March 1984, Dunham to Alan Howard, 26 March 1984, Ann Dunham Sutoro to Ph.D. Committee, "Review and Update on Activities Relating to Ph.D.," September 1984, Dunham Papers; Scott, A Singular Woman, pp. 257–62. See also Christine Finn and Sarah Baxter, "Long-Range Love of Barack's Absent Mother," Sunday Times, 23 November 2008, p. 24.

Years later, Obama would offer conflicting comments about his attitude toward his mother at this time. In 1995, citing her and his grandparents, he would say, "I never pushed them away"; in 2008 he would acknowledge "that there were tensions" and that he was "rebellious or pushing away from her and my grandparents." Monica Mitchell, "Son Finds Inspiration in the Dreams of His Father," HPH, 23 August 1995, p. 10; Wolffe, Renegade, pp. 31 and 149.

51. Genevieve Cook journal, 1, 4, 8, 10, 11, 19, 20, 24, 25, 27, and 29 June 1984; DJG interviews with Genevieve Cook, Hasan and Raazia Chandoo, and Beenu Mahmood; Sohale Siddiqi interview with Jim Gilmore. On 640 2nd Street, see James Barron and Peter Baker, "In Brooklyn Brownstone, President Found a Home on the Top Floor," NYT, 2 May 2012, and Barron, "Obama? Just the Forgettable 1980s Boyfriend of a Landlord's Tenant," NYT, 7 May 2012.

52. Genevieve Cook journal, 30 June 1984, 1, 15, and 25 July 1984, 5, 19 and 22 August 1984, trio of small photo booth pictures, summer 1984, Cook Papers; DJG interviews with Genevieve Cook and Hasan and Raazia Chandoo; Obama, DFMF, pp. 128–29. On the film, see Janet Maslin, "Redgrave in James's 'Bostonians,'" NYT, 2 August 1984. On the San Ysidro mass murder, see "Coast Man Kills 20 in Rampage at a Restaurant," NYT, 19 July 1984, p. A1.

53. Genevieve Cook journal, 22, 24, 27, 30, and 31 August 1984, 1 and 5 September 1984; DJG interviews with Alex McNear, Genevieve Cook, Mike Ramos, Phil Boerner, and Paul Herrmannsfeldt. On Alex's subsequent life, her eventual ex-husband Bob Bozic, and her daughter Vesna, born in 1991, see Nick Paumgarten, "The Ring and the Bar," New Yorker, 30 January 2012, pp. 28–34, and Alex Vadukul, "After Last Call," NYT, 24 January 2016.

54. Business International Money Report, 5 October 1984, p. 314; DJG interviews with Cathy Lazere, Michael Williams, Jeanne Reynolds Schmidt, Maria Stathis Batty, Gary Seidman, Dan Armstrong, Lou

Celi, Brent Feigenbaum, Beth Noymer Levine, Lisa Shachtman Hennessey, and Genevieve Cook; Susan Arterian and John Geanuracos e-mails to DJG; Jeanne Reynolds's comments on analyzethis.net, 9 July 2005; Obama, DFMF, pp. 135–38, 210–11; Obama in Mendell, Obama, p. 62, and in John Corr, "From Mean Streets to Hallowed Halls," Philadelphia Inquirer, 27 February 1990, pp. C1, C4; Genevieve Cook journal, 2, 10, and 13 December 1984; Janet Maslin, "Murphy in 'Beverly Hills Cop,'" NYT, 5 December 1984, p. C25. In 2001 Obama would tell Julieanna Richardson that "for a year I worked as a financial journalist to pay off my student loans and as soon as I had those paid off" he sought more appealing work. Brent Feigenbaum would recall beginning at BI with a salary of $19,500 after rejecting Lou Celi's initial offer of $17,500.

Also note "How a Master Plays the Game: The World Bank Approach to FX, Interest Rate Swaps," BIMR, 16 November 1984, pp. 361–63, based on an interview with World Bank "swap operations" manager Cyrus Ardalan. The only one of the Financial Action Report series to appear in OCLC is the subsequent one by Cathy A. Lazere and Brent H. Feigenbaum, Improving Financial Management in France (Business International, 1985), 128 pp. Also see Business International Research Report, Kenya: Foreign Investment in a Developing Economy [Geneva]: Business International S.A., April 1980, 166pp., a document not produced by BI's New York office nor updated in 1984. See as well Business International Weekly Report, 27 July, 10 August, 14 September, and 2 and 16 November 1984; Financing Foreign Operations—Interest Rate & Foreign Exchange Rate Updater, 15 and 31 August 1984, 14 and 28 September 1984, 15 and 31 October 1984, 27 November 1984, and 11 December 1984; and The BIMR Handbook on Global Treasury Management (Business International Corporation, August 1984), a lengthy (227 pp.) topical reprinting of BIMR's weekly articles. No one recalls Barack attending the "BO Annual Picnic August 1984," whose custom T-shirt featured a number of quasi-humorous lines including "If I don't get my own Wang . . ." and "They're no longer with the company."

On David Opiyo's death, see also Auma Obama, And Then Life Happens, p. 145; Zeituni Onyango e-mails to DJG; and especially Mark Obama Ndesandjo, An Obama's Journey, p. 81.

55. Barack Obama to Genevieve Cook, 1 January 1985, Cook Papers; Ann Dunham notebook, esp. pp. 57, 61, 93, 103, Dunham/Solyom Papers; Scott, A Singular Woman, pp. 263–65. On the Terkel book, see Loudon Wainwright, "I Can Remember Every Hour," NYTBR, 7 October 1984, pp. 7, 9. Bobby Titcomb would later volunteer that "after high school . . . I had struggles of my own and Barack supported me through those tough times." Emme Tomimbang, "Barack Obama: Hawaii Roots," 8 February 2008. On Adi Sasono and Ann's personal life, see Julia Suryakusuma in Judith Kampfner, "Dreams From My Mother," BBC Radio World Service, 16 September 2009; Scott, A Singular Woman, pp. 235–41; Ian Buruma, "A Free Spirit," NYRB, 26 May 2011 ("her liaisons with Indonesian men"); and Barack's reference to his mother displaying "a certain recklessness" in Amanda Ripley, "The Story of Barack Obama's Mother," Time, 21 April 2008, pp. 36ff.

56. Genevieve Cook journal, 25 January 1985; Obama, DFMF, pp. 138–39; Ralph Nader et al., Action for a Change: A Student's Manual for Public Interest Organizing (Grossman, 1971), Bob Belfort to TVAJ Campaign Students and Staff, "Campaign Update," 24 January 1985, NYPIRG Papers; DJG interviews with Barack Obama, Arthur Barnes (Obama's description "fits me to a tee"), Eileen Hershenov, Chris Meyer, Tom Wathen, Diana Mitsu Klos, Alison Kelley, Jay Halfon, Neal Rosenstein, Rebecca Weber, and Michael Gecan; Ann F. Lopez e-mail to DJG; Ben Smith, "Becoming Obama,"

Politico, 30 January 2007; Hershenov in Patrick Whelan, The Catholic Case for Obama (Catholic Democrats, 2008), p. 51n4; Jason Fink, “Obama’s Years in New York Left Lasting Impression on Colleagues,” AM New York, 9 November 2008; [Rosenstein], “President Barack Obama’s Work History as an Organizer with the New York Public Interest Research Group,” [January 2010], NYPIRG Papers; course and departmental records, CCNY, spring semester 1985. NYPIRG’s 1985 CCNY telephone number, 212-234-1628, remained unchanged even thirty years later. On NYPIRG’s TVAJ legislation, see also Robin Topping, “Trying to Quell the DES Nightmare,” Newsday, 20 January 1985. On Jeffries, see particularly Richard M. Benjamin, “The Bizarre Classroom of Dr. Leonard Jeffries,” Journal of Blacks in Higher Education, Winter 1993–1994, pp. 91–96, and Kwame Okoampa-Ahoofe Jr., The New Scapegoats: Colored-On-Black Racism (iUniverse, 2005), pp. 58–60, 68–71. This author has no memory of such a February 1985 request, but he knows what his response would have been.

57. Genevieve Cook journal, 4 and 5 February, 15 and 31 March, and 22, 23, and 28 April 1985; DJG interviews with Genevieve Cook, Andrew Roth, Keith Patchel, Tim Jessup, and Pete Vayda. The resulting Richard Lloyd album was Field of Fire. Phil Boerner attended a reading by well-known poet Allen Ginsberg at Columbia on Tuesday, March 26, and believes it very likely that Barack went with him. See also Ted Kenney, “Beat Poet Ginsberg Returns to Columbia,” CS, 27 March 1985, pp. 1, 4.

Obama’s comments in later years about where he lived in New York City were often highly inaccurate. On one occasion in 2007 he said he once lived in Park Slope, implicitly referencing Genevieve’s 2nd Street apartment, and “a little in Brooklyn Heights,” perhaps a reference to his stays with Hasan Chandoo. “I don’t remember the exact address” but “I subletted for about three months in Brooklyn Heights, near the Promenade.” That is inaccurate, but memories of buying bagels and the Sunday New York Times near the Clark Street IRT station almost certainly date from times when he stayed with Hasan either at his Eagle Warehouse apartment or later in Brooklyn Heights proper. See Dana Rubenstein, “Barack and Roll: Obamamania Hits Brooklyn Heights,” The Brooklyn Paper, 28 July 2007; Michael Saul, “He Wants Army of Bams,” NYDN, 23 August 2007; and “Barack Obama at Cooper Union,” audacityofparkslope.org, 27 March 2008. A 2008 Obama campaign statement had Barack in April–May 1985 living in Park Slope and June–July 1985 in Brooklyn Heights, perhaps a mislocating of Genevieve’s Boerum Hill apartment on Warren Street. Referencing 622 West 114th, that statement acknowledged “we actually only have 1 actual address, otherwise just streets or neighborhoods,” but the site where that information appeared in a thread dated 18 August 2008, www.commongroundpolitics.net, has since disappeared from the Web.

58. Bob Belfort to TVAJ Students and Staff, “Campaign Update,” 7 March 1985, Tom Wathen to All Staff, “Staff Meeting,” 26 March 1985, Belfort to TVAJ Students and Staff, “Campaign Update,” 11 April 1985, NYPIRG Papers; “NYPIRG Opposes Reagan Budget Cuts,” The Paper [CCNY], 3 May 1985, p. 7; Genevieve Cook journal, 6 May 1985; S.B. 5494, 1 May 1985, NYPIRG Papers; Chris Meyer, “Higher Education in 1985” flyer, Frances Fox Piven Papers, Smith College, Box 85 Fld. 4; Bob Belfort to TVAJ Students and Staff, “Campaign Update,” 9 May 1985, NYPIRG Papers; Jeffrey Schmalz, “Filing-Period Extension Expected in Toxic Suits,” NYT, 8 May 1985, p. B2; NYPIRG CCNY, “A Community Forum: Federal Budget Cuts ’85–’86,” 8 May 1985, Piven Papers, Box 11 Fld. 5; Jeffrey Schmalz, “Longer Period for Toxic Suits Wins Backing in State Senate,” NYT, 23 May 1985, p. B2; Gene Russianoff and Peter Skeie, Back to Go: A Study of Subway Service (NYPIRG, August 1985), 31pp. (thanking Barack Obama, Alison Kelley, and Diana Klos among many others); Schmalz, “Cuomo Shifts on Toxic-Substance Bill,” NYT, 10 December 2005, p. B3; “Cuomo Cites Two Bills as Key for Legislature,” NYT, 7 May 1986, p. B2; Schmalz, “New York Officials Reach Liability Insurance Accord,” NYT, 20 June 1986, p. B3; Cuomo’s 30 July 1986 signing remarks in Product Safety & Liability Reporter, 1 August 1986, p. 528; Martha H. Cotiaux, “A Crucial Deadline for New York Toxic Victims,” NYT, 5 June 1987; Ben Whitford, “Coal and Clear Skies: Obama’s Balancing Act,” Plenty Magazine, 31 October 2008; Fink, “Obama’s Years in New York”; [Rosenstein], “Obama’s Work History”; DJG interviews with Genevieve Cook, Alison Kelley, Eileen Hershenov, Chris Meyer, and Tom Wathen; Obama, “Community Revitalization, Nebraska Wesleyan University Forum, 9 September 1994; Obama, DFMF, p. 139; Obama’s 20–21 October 1999 cable television interview with Joe Green; Obama’s June 2002 interview with Chinta Strausberg; and Obama’s 16–17 August 2003 interview with Frank Avila and Morgan Carter on CAN-TV Channel 19, Chicago.

Obama would later write of traveling to Washington to deliver the CCNY students’ letters to New York members of Congress, although no contemporary documents or other possible participants attest to such a trip. See Obama, TAOH, p. 43 (misdating it as 1984), and Remnick, The Bridge, p. 121. In May 1985 NYPIRG was also mounting a campaign against milk prices in New York City. See “NYPIRG Survey Shows New York City Shoppers Are Paying Premium Milk Prices,” 8 May 1985, “Milking Us Dry: A Survey of Milk Prices in New York City,” May 1985 (noting that “New York is the only state that limits competition amongst milk distributors”), and Paul Herrick to NYC Outreach Staff, “Milk Licensing,” 13 June 1985, NYPIRG Papers.

59. Genevieve Cook poem, 9 May 1985, Genevieve Cook journal, 13, 14, and 23 May 1985, Cook poem written on PS 133 “Dear Parents” notice, 11 June 1985, on the back side of which is an unsent “Dear Ida” letter, 19 June 1985, Genevieve Cook journal, 20 and 28 June 1985, Cook Papers; DJG interviews with Genevieve Cook.

60. DJG interviews with Genevieve Cook, Andy Roth, Keith Patchel, Jerry Kellman, Hasan and Raazia Chandoo, and Beenu Mahmood; Obama’s 2001 interview with Julieanna Richardson; Obama’s 7 February 2004 interview with David Axelrod; Obama’s 25 June 2005 remarks in “Bound to the Word,” American Libraries, August 2005, pp. 48–52, at 51; Obama, “A Politics of Conscience,” United Church of Christ, Hartford, 23 June 2007; “Barack Obama Revealed,” CNN, 20 August 2008; Kellman in Byron York, “The Organizer,” National Review, 30 June 2008; Obama, DFMF, pp. 140–43; Obama in Erin Meyer, “Discovering Hyde Park,” HPH, 14 February 2007, p. 4; Obama, University of Massachusetts at Boston Commencement Speech, 2 June 2006 ($1,000 to purchase a car for which he paid $800); Kellman in Bob Secter and John McCormick, “Portrait of a Pragmatist,” CT, 30 March 2007, in Mike Litwin, “Obama’s ‘Change’ Could Be More Than a Coined Phrase,” Rocky Mountain News, 29 August 2007, in Serge Kovalski, “In Organizing, Obama Led While Finding His Place,” NYT, 7 July 2008; Kellman’s 24 July 2008 interview with Jim Gilmore; Kellman in Tim Harper, “The Making of a President,” Toronto Star, 16 August 2008, p. A1; Kellman’s 25 August 2008 DNC Speech, Denver; “Barack Obama Tribute” video, DNC, 28 August 2008; Kellman in Jennifer Liberto, “Origin of Obama’s Run Is on the South Side,” St. Petersburg Times, 26 October 2008, p. A1; Kellman on The Takeaway, WNYC, 5 November 2008; Genevieve Cook journal, 16 and 26 July 1985.

Eighteen years later, Obama would assert, “By the time I was 20, I was no longer engaged in any of this stuff” and “By the time I was 20, I don’t think I indulged again.” An accurate answer would have been twenty-three rather than twenty. Bernard Schoenburg, “Painting of Ex-Gov. Ryan,” SJR, 9 November 2003, p. 17, and Schoenburg, “Frank Talk About Drug Use in Obama’s ‘Open Book,’” SJR, 16 November 2003, p. 17. Four months later Obama would say that he used cocaine “a few times” and in high school and at Oxy “primarily smoked pot”; three months further on he would say “when I was a teenager, 16, 17, 18, I experimented with drugs.” “Candidates for U.S. Senate Make Last Push,” (AP), CDH, 12 March 2004, p. I-12; and NBC Nightly News, 28 July 2004. Ryan Lizza would notably write that “While Obama was in search of an authentic African American experience, Kellman was simply in search of an authentic African American.” “The Agitator,” TNR, 19 March 2007, pp. 22ff.

61. Barack Obama to Genevieve Cook, 14 August 1985, Cook Papers; DJG interviews with Genevieve Cook and Robert Elia; Obama, “Why Organize? Problems and Promise in the Inner City,” Illinois Issues, August–September 1988, pp. 40–42; Obama, DFMF, pp. 135–36; Obama Commencement Addresses at the University of Massachusetts at Boston, 2 June 2006, and Northwestern University, 16 June 2006; Obama remarks to College Democrats of America, Columbia, SC, 26 July 2007; Obama remarks at Cornell College, Mt. Vernon, IA, 5 December 2007; Obama Commencement Address, Wesleyan University, 25 May 2008. Cf. Willie Morris, North Toward Home (Houghton Mifflin, 1967). Avner Falk, The Riddle of Barack Obama, p. 149, terms Obama’s move to Chicago “the turning point in his” life.

On Robert Elia, also see Joe Pinchot, “Property Being Stolen, Hermitage Man Says,” Sharon Herald, 22 November 2006, and his sister’s obituary, “Rose Elizabeth O’Hare,” Sharon Herald, 29 March 2009. On Dr. King’s 27 January 1956 experience, see Garrow, Bearing the Cross, pp. 56–58. On Coffin Point, see Henry Adams, The Education of Henry Adams (Houghton Mifflin, 1918), p. 290; Willie Lee Rose, Rehearsal for Reconstruction: The Port Royal Experiment (Bobbs-Merrill, 1964), passim; Michael O’Brien, Henry Adams & the Southern Question (University of Georgia Press, 2005), pp. 118–19; Charles R. Babcock, “Soviet Secrets Fed to FBI for More Than 25 Years; Infiltration by Two Brothers Detailed in Book on Dr. King,” WP, 17 September 1981, p. A1; and DJG, The FBI and Martin Luther King Jr.: From “SOLO” to Memphis (W. W. Norton, 1981).

CHAPTER FOUR: TRANSFORMATION AND IDENTITY

1. Barack Obama to Genevieve Cook, 14 August 1985, Cook Papers; Obama in Erin Meyer, “Discovering Hyde Park,” HPH, 14 February 2007; DJG interviews with Genevieve Cook, Beenu Mahmood, Bill Stenzel, Jerry Kellman, Mike Kruglik, Adrienne Jackson, Asif Agha, Joe Bennett, Tom Kaminski, and John Calicott; Edward T. Chambers with Michael A. Cowan, Roots for Radicals: Organizing for Power, Action, and Justice (Continuum, 2005), Chapter 2; Jim Capraro in “Mr. Obama’s Neighborhood,” Hudson Institute, 1 October 2008, p. 5; Kellman in Richard Wolffe, Renegade (Crown, 2009), p. 63, in Jonathan Kaufman, “For Obama, Chicago Days Honed Tactics,” WSJ, 21 April 2008, p. A1, Kellman, “Training Obama,” Organizing, 11 September 2009, Kellman interview with Jim Gilmore, in Shira Schoenberg, “Obama Keeps Making the Rounds,” Concord Monitor, 20 December 2007, on CNN’s “American Morning,” 4 February 2008, in Tim Harper, “The Making of a President,” Toronto Star, 16 August 2008, p. A1, in Sarah Kliff, “Service Changes People’s Character,” Newsweek.com, 5 September 2008, in “Obama as We Knew Him,” Observer, 26 October 2008, pp. 4–7, and in Kelly E. Carter, “Leadership Lessons from the Top,” Black Enterprise, March 2009, p. 105; Obama, DFMF, pp. 146–49; Obama, remarks to the Alliance for American Manufacturing, Pittsburgh, PA, 14 April 2008;

Roger Simon, "Obama: 'I Have the Potential of Bringing People Together,'" Politico, 8 February 2007; Ryan Lizza, "The Agitator: Barack Obama's Unlikely Political Education," TNR, 19 March 2007, pp. 22ff.; Byron York, "The Organizer: What Did Barack Obama Really Do in Chicago?," National Review, 30 June 2008; Schopp in Edwina Jones, "From Steel Town to 'Ghost Town,'" M.A. thesis, Loyola University of Chicago, May 1998, p. 45, and also in Angela Bradbery, "Mill Area Knew Good Times, Now It Knows Bad," CT, 31 January 1992; Jerry Sullivan, "Paradise Doomed," Chicago Magazine, August 1985, pp. 142–45, 160–61; Bill Granger, "Requiem for the Southeast Side," CT, 12 April 1992; Ying-Kuang Hsu et al., "Locating and Quantifying PCB Sources in Chicago: Receptor Modeling and Field Sampling," Environmental Science & Technology 37 (2003): 681–90; Seung-Muk Yi et al., "Emissions of Polychlorinated Biphenyls (PCBs) from Sludge Drying Beds to the Atmosphere in Chicago," Chemosphere 71 (2008): 1028–34; Robert Bergsvik, "SCA Pleads Not Guilty to PCB Exposure Charges," DC, 6 June 1985, p. A1; Bergsvik, "Third PCB Monitor Ordered," DC, 16 July 1985, p. A1; Bergsvik, "CID Sewage Allowance Vote Due," DC, 17 July 1985, p. A1; Bergsvik, "Higher South Deering Cancer Rate Found," DC, 18 July 1985, p. A3; Pat Wingert, "Specialist Called in Dump Fire," CT, 19 August 1985, p. M3; Ernest G. Barefield to Mike Holewinski, "Landfill at 122nd Street," 20 August 1985, HWP COF Box 9 Fld. 34; Robert Bergsvik, "Toxic Waste Fire Finally Capped," and C. D. Matthews, "Waste Fire Concerns Residents," DC, 21 August 1985, pp. A1 and A2; Don B. Galloway to Jesse D. Madison, "122nd & Cottage Grove," 23 August 1985, HWP COF Box 9 Fld. 34; "UNO Schedules Conference," DC, 24 August 1985, p. A5; Casey Bukro, "Stubborn Fire Puts Heat on Dump Owner," CT, 26 August 1985, p. A1; Bukro, "Fire Fuels Toxic Clean-Up Fight," CT, 28 August 1985, p. A3; Robert Bergsvik, "Toxic Waste Cleanup Urged," and "EPA Monitoring Landfill Fire," DC, 28 August 1985, p. A1; Jim Quinlan, "U.S. Aid on Dump Fire Asked," CST, 28 August 1985, p. 22; Henry Locke, "Increase Efforts to Extinguish Underground Fire," CD, 29 August 1985, p. 8; Debbie Nelson, "S.E. Side Dump Cited for Hazards Since '71," CST, 4 September 1985, p. 25; Jesse M. Madison to Ernest Barefield, "Status Report—122nd & Cottage Grove Hazardous Waste Site," 11 September 1985, HWP COF Box 9 Fld. 34; Citizens for a Better Environment, United Neighborhood Organization of Southeast Chicago & Mary Ellen Montes v. William K. Reilly, 1991 WL 95040 (N. D. Ill.), 24 May 1991 (filed 16 September 1985); "UNO to Meet with Simon," DC, 19 September 1985, p. A2; Casey Bukro and Lisa Frazier, "Wastes Buried at Dump May Be Blown Up," CT, 11 October 1985, p. 7; "SE Sides Demand EPA Control Toxics," TNW, November 1985, p. 11; Harold Henderson, "Don't Dump on Us," CR, 23 May 1986, pp. 1, 20–29.

2. "Ice Cream Vendor Slain in Front of Son," CT, 7 July 1985, p. A2; William Recktenwald, "Police Hunt Killers of Ice Cream Vendor," CT, 8 July 1985, p. 15; Clem Richardson, "Children Mourn Slain Ice Cream Vendor," CST, 8 July 1985, pp. 1, 6; William Recktenwald, "Shooting Creates Fear in Vendors," CT, 9 July 1985, p. A3; "Obituaries," CT, 12 July 1985, p. A7; Wes Smith, "Mortician Promotes His Lively Undertaking," CT, 14 July 1985, p. B3; "Suspect Charged in Vendor's Slaying," CT, 31 August 1985, p. 5; Linnet Myers, "Son's Testimony Avenges Ice Cream Man's Killing," CT, 13 November 1987, p. 10; Rosalind Rossi, "Man Guilty of Killing Ice Cream Driver," CST, 13 November 1987, p. 24; Rossi, "Killer of 'Model Citizen' Gets Life Term," CST, 12 March 1988, p. 4; People v. L. C. Riley & Willie Dixon, 596 N. E. 2d 122 (Ill. App. Ct. 1st Dst.), 22 June 1992; People v. Riley, 606 N. E. 2d 1233 (Ill. S.Ct.), 2 December 1992; People v. Riley, 622 N. E. 2d 1222 (Ill. S.Ct.), 6 October 1993; U.S. ex rel.

Willie Dixon v. Godinez, 1994 WL 411374 (N. D. Ill.), 3 August 1994.

Madeline Talbott 1985 and 1986 appointment books, Illinois ACORN Papers (IAP) Box 2 Flds. 25 and 26; Illinois ACORN, “Notes from the Board Meeting,” 24 September 1985, IAP Box 1 Fld. 10; Madeline Talbott, “Chicago ACORN Year End/Year Begin Report and Plan,” 4 January 1986, IAP Box 2 Fld. 62; Chicago ACORN Board List, January 1986, IAP Box 3 Fld. 54; DJG interviews with Madeline Talbott and Ted Aranda; Juanita Bratcher, “Ald. Hutchinson Boasts of ‘Go-Getting’ Ways in 9th,” CD, 22 June 1985; Perry H. Hutchinson to Maurice Parrish, 12 August 1985, both in HWP FAS Box 13 Fld. 23; Henry Locke, “Official Charges: Prostitution Allowed to Run Rampantly on Michigan Ave. in Roseland,” CD, 5 September 1985, p. 8; “Hutchinson Clarifies Resolution,” CD, 26 September 1985, p. 4.

3. DJG interviews with Jerry Kellman, Bob Klonowski, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Yvonne Lloyd, Dan Lee, Cathy Askew, Marlene Dillard, Tom Kaminski, and Eva Sturgies; Augustine-Herron in Nicole Duran, “The New Kid on the Block,” Campaigns & Elections, June 2007, pp. 52ff., in Mike Littwin, “Obama’s ‘Change’ Could Be More Than a Coined Phrase,” Rocky Mountain News, 29 August 2007, in Markus Ziener, “Barack Obama in Chicago,” Handelsblatt, 25 June 2008, in “They Met Obama When,” CT, 16 November 2008, p. 19, in Becoming Barack: Evolution of a Leader, Little Dizzy Home Video, 2009, and in Dahleen Glanton and Katherine Skiba, “Community Organizers Who Taught Obama Get an Invitation to the Inauguration,” CT, 20 January 2013; Lloyd in Michael Cass, “Obama’s Rise Is No Surprise to Nashville Woman Who Worked with Him,” Tennessean, 5 October 2012; Obama to Genevieve Cook, 14 August 1985, Cook Papers.

4. Auma Obama, And Then Life Happens (St. Martin’s Press, 2012), pp. 153–71; Auma Obama in Becoming Barack: Evolution of a Leader, Little Dizzy Home Video, 2009, in “Obama as We Knew Him,” Observer, 26 October 2008, pp. 4–7, on Today, NBC, 30 April 2012, on Piers Morgan Tonight, CNN, 2 May 2012, and on Starting Point, CNN, 3 May 2012; DJG interview with Asif Agha; Obama, DFMF, pp. 207–10, 211–22, 227; Obama on All Things Considered, NPR, 27 July 2004, on Fresh Air, 12 August 2004, on The Oprah Winfrey Show, 19 January 2005, in Hill Harper, Letters to a Young Brother (Gotham Books, 2006), pp. 156–57, in Todd Purdum, “Raising Obama,” Vanity Fair, March 2008, in Jon Meacham, “Obama on His Parents’ Influence” and “What Barack Obama Learned from His Father,” Newsweek, 22 August 2008, and on 20/20, ABC, 26 September 2008. Referring to his father’s 1971 appearance in Honolulu, Obama told Davies that “Later in life . . . I would realize how much that brief visit and interaction with him altered me in all sorts of ways.”

5. Jim Duffy, “Strike: City Teachers Walk Out Again,” Southtown Economist [SE], 3 September 1985, pp. 1, 2; Linda Lenz and Tim Padgett, “Teachers Strike,” CST, 3 September 1985, pp. 1, 4; Lenz and Donald M. Schwartz, “Teachers Still Out,” CST, 4 September 1985, p. 3; “Unconsonable Strike,” CST, 4 September 1985, p. 33; Dave Roeder, “Politicians Quickly Bicker Over Strike,” SE, 4 September 1985, pp. 1, 2; Casey Banas and Philip Lenz, “Governor Enters School Fray,” CT, 4 September 1985, pp. 1, 2; Banas and Jean Davidson, “City Schools Back in Business,” CT, 5 September 1985, pp. 1, 2; Linda Lenz and Clem Richardson, “Pupils Head Back,” CST, 5 September 1985, p. 6.

Illinois House of Representatives, 9 April 1985, p. 39 (Giglio’s introduction of House Bills 1167 and 1168); Bob Kostanczuk, “4 Giglio Bills Clear First Hurdle,” DC, 30 April 1985, p. 2; “Support Urged for Jobs Bank,” DC, 2 July 1985, p. A3; “Computer Job Bank Bill Due,” DC, 12 July 1985, p. A1; Illinois Senate, 3 July 1985, pp. 37–38; Illinois Public Act 84-0050, signed 19 July 1985; Peggy Shaw, “Gov.

Thompson Approves Area Job Program Funds,” The Star [TS] (Chicago Heights), 1 August 1985, p. 1; “Plugging the Gaps,” TS, 4 August 1985, p. A16; Juanita Bratcher, “Deny Jobs Plan a Political Plum,” CD, 6 August 1985, p. 3; “Job Bank Office to Open Oct.1 at GSU,” TS, 19 September 1985, p. 1; “New Regional Office to Help Jobless Find Work Will be Based at Governors State,” TS, 19 September 1985, Adrienne Bitoy Jackson Papers (ABJP); “State, Religious Leaders to Help Launch Network,” TS, 26 September 1985, p. A3; “Leaders to Dedicate Job Bank Sept. 30,” Chicago Catholic [CC], 27 September 1985, p. 5; “Employment ‘Network’ Starts Tomorrow,” TS, 29 September 1985, p. A1; Leo T. Mahon, “From the Pastor’s Desk,” St. Victor Parish Sunday Bulletin [SVPSB] 29 September and 6 October 1985, p. 2; C. D. Matthews, “Mood Upbeat at Jobs Rally,” DC, 1 October 1985, p. A1; Ken Brucks and Sharon Jacobson to All CHD Funded Groups, “Memorandum,” 1 October 1985, IAP Box 3 Fld. 55; Thom Gibbons, “Leaders Launch Employment Service,” TS, 3 October 1985, pp. A1, A4; “Jobless Effort Gets Top Church Support, Praise,” CC, 4 October 1985, p. 6; “Funds to be Available,” DC, 5 October 1985, p. A7; Sharon Jacobson to Voice of the People et al., “The Bridge to a Better Future Program,” 7 October 1985, IAP Box 3 Fld. 55; “Area Gets New Job-Assessment Program,” Kankakee Sunday Journal, 13 October 1985, p. 23; “GSU Prof to Direct Job Finding Network,” TS, 17 October 1985, p. A5; “Employment Network Update,” SVPSB, 20 and 27 October 1985, p. 4; David A. Gorak, “New Jobs Network to Target Hard-Hit Southern Suburbs,” CCB, 21 October 1985; “GSU Prof Heads New Jobs Network,” DC, 23 October 1985, p. A11; “6 Self-Help Groups Get Grants,” CT, 28 October 1985, p. 7 (Obama); “Skills Bank Receives Grant,” DC, 29 October 1985, p. A1; George H. Ryan, “Build Illinois: Abundant Opportunities for Local Governments,” Illinois Municipal Review, November 1985, pp. 11–12; Timothy Auer, “Local Self-Help Groups Get $185,000 from CHD,” CC, 1 November 1985, pp. 1, 28; Bob Kostanczuk, “Unemployed May Find Hope Through Network,” DC, 4 November 1985, p. A1; “Research Associates Join GSU Staff,” DC, 7 November 1985, p. B3; “Data Bank,” SVPSB, 10 November 1985, p. 5; Juanita Bratcher, “Rice Raps Libby on Plan to Close S. Side Plant,” CD, 18 November 1985, p. 13; “New Job Program Draws 86 Hopefuls,” Hammond Times, 18 November 1985; Bob Kostanczuk, “Assessment Program Successful,” DC, 22 November 1985, p. A3; “HACO Receives Grant from Thornton Township,” Standard Newspaper, 23 November–7 December 1985, ABJP; “Church Leads in Bringing New Hope to Steel Depressed Calumet Area,” Illinois Lutheran, November–December 1985, p. 4; Violet T. Czachorski, “Background on CCRC,” Hegewisch News, 12 December 1985, p. 1; Tom Joyce, “1985 Social Development Grants Completed,” n.d., p. 67, TJP; “The Spotlight Is On . . . Gloria Boyda!” SVPSB, 16 February 1986, p. 6; Obama, DFMF, pp. 151–55; Thomas C. Knutson, “In Memoriam: Joseph Cardinal Bernardin,” Let’s Talk 2 #2, Easter 1997; Trevor Jensen, “Rev. Paul E. Erickson, Ex-Lutheran Bishop,” CT, 5 April 2007; Mike Kruglik on All Things Considered, NPR, 6 September 2008; Julie Ratey, “Interview with Senator Barack Obama,” Catholic Digest, October 2008; Obama, Notre Dame Commencement Address, 17 May 2009, Public Papers of the Presidents 2009 Vol. I, p. 661 (recalling Bernardin “speaking at one of the first organizing meetings I attended”); Patricia Zapor, “Obama Cites Influence of Cardinal Bernardin,” Catholic News Service, 2 July 2009; DJG interviews with Fred Simari, Jerry Kellman, Mary Bernstein, Mike Kruglik, Tom Knutson, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Bob Klonowski, Jan Poledziwski, Len Dubi, Maury Richards, John Calicott, Dan Lee, Tommy West, Paul Burak, Tom Joyce, Ken Brucks, Mary Yu, and Sharon Jacobson. See also “6 Community Groups Get Self-Help Grants,” CT, 23 May 1985, p. B12; Mary Yu, “The Center Stage,”

Upturn, June–July 1985, pp. 13–14; “CHD, $88 Million Later, to Mark 15th Anniversary,” CC, 26 July–2 August 1985, p. 13; Suzanne Carter, “CHD-Backed Project Shows Upbeat Side of City Housing,” and Peter Kelly, “One Effective Self-Help Effort Very Often Leads to Another,” CC, 9–16 August 1985, pp. 20, 21; and Robert L. Johnston, “CHD Arrives!” CC, 23–30 August 1985, pp. 3, 28. Within two years of Bernardin’s remarks at the rally, two of the most progressive priests of the Chicago archdiocese would publicly express their disappointment with him. Leo’s friend Jack Egan remarked that “I’ve never met a more calculating man” and Andrew Greeley would decry Bernardin’s “timorous and equivocal leadership style.” Egan in Roy Larson, “The Pope’s Man in the Middle,” and Greeley, “The Fall of an Archdiocese,” Chicago Magazine, September 1987, pp. 122–27, at 124, and 128–31, 190–92 at 192.

6. Frank Lumpkin et al., “A Plan to ‘Nationalize’ Steel,” CT, 11 August 1985, p. P14; Larry Galica, “Peurala Chides Parton ‘Giveaways,’” DC, 20 August 1985, p. A3; Mary Schmich, “A Union Leader Who Wasn’t Made of Steel,” CT, 25 August 1985; Frank Lumpkin in U. S. House of Representatives, Committee on Education and Labor, Subcommittee on Employment Opportunities, Hearing: The Income and Jobs Action Act of 1985, 99th Cong., 1st sess., Serial 99-26, 4 September 1985, pp. 94–96; “Atty. Gen. Files Suit Against USS for No Rail Mill,” DC, 21 September 1985, p. A3; Larry Galica, “Local 1033 President No Supporter of 1984 Steel Co. Merger,” DC, 27 September 1985, p. A1; Maury Richards, “We Gave LTV Every Chance,” 1033 News & Views, October 1985, p. 3; Maria Cerda to Alton Miller, “Monthly Press Activity Reports,” 1 October 1985, HWP DS Box 5 Fld. 16; Larry Galica, “Ex-Wisconsin Employees Picket at Downtown Sites,” DC, 5 October 1985, p. 1, FLP Box 5 Fld. 1; Juanita Bratcher, “Coalition to Fight Foreclosures,” CD, 29 October 1985, p. 3 (including Frank Lumpkin and Alice Peurala); “Dedication Scheduled,” DC, 14 November 1985, p. A1; Larry Galica, “LTV Pension Probe Requested,” DC, 25 November 1985, p. B5; 1033 News & Views, December 1985, p. 1; Robert Mier et al., “Strategic Planning and the Pursuit of Reform, Economic Development, and Equity,” Journal of the American Planning Association 52 (Summer 1986): 299–309. Identical copies of Lumpkin’s CT letter previously had appeared as “Nationalized Steel Would Help Nation and the Community,” CST, 15 July 1985, p. 22, and “Nationalize Steel Mills,” DC, 24 July 1985, p. A4.

7. Barack Obama to Genevieve Cook, 3 September [sic] 1985 (“9/3” but postmarked 3 October 1985), Cook Papers; John Rockwell, “Bonnie Raitt Sings at the Ritz,” NYT, 18 August 1985, p. 61; Bill Stenzel, “Rights and Reality,” Upturn, February–March 1987, p. 7; Bill Stenzel, “Dean’s Role—Pro-Active,” Upturn, December 1987–January 1988, pp. 10, 14; Bonnie Nitsche in Holy Rosary Parish 1992–2008, pp. 41–42; Loretta Augustine-Herron in Serge Kovalski, “In Organizing, Obama Led While Finding His Place,” NYT, 7 July 2008; Bill Stenzel in Patrick Whelan, The Catholic Case for Obama (Catholic Democrats, October 2008), pp. 9–11; Stenzel and Jerry Kellman in Eli Saslow, “Obama’s Path to Faith Was Eclectic,” WP, 18 January 2009, p. A18; DJG interviews with Genevieve Cook, Fred Simari, Jerry Kellman, Mike Kruglik, Mary Bernstein, Bill Stenzel, Bonnie and Wally Nitsche, Betty and Selmo “Lucky” Garrett Jr., Jan Poledziewski, Bob Klonowski, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Nadyne Griffin, and Tom Kaminski; Bob Rakow, “Retired Priest Made All Feel at Ease,” CST, 20 February 2011; Patrick Whelan and William Stenzel, “Chicago Priest, Hired Barack Obama as Organizer, Dies at 70,” NCR, 28 February 2011; Byron York, “The Organizer,” National Review, 30 June 2008.

8. “‘Council Wars’ at Mann Park,” Hegewisch News, 17 October 1985, p. 1; “UNO Banquet Set,” DC, 29 October 1985, p. A1; Larry Galica, “Reverend Subject of Protest Rally” and “UNO Issues Awards,”

DC, 2 November 1985, p. A3; Robert Bergsvik, "Vet to Oppose Panayotovitch in 35th District," DC, 12 November 1985, p. A1; Judy Keane, "Alinsky Leftovers," DC, 14 November 1985, p. A4; Larry Galica, "Radical Tactics Chided," DC, 21 November 1985, p. A1; Galica, "UNO Criticized at Public Forum," DC, 23 November 1985, p. A3; Judy Keane, "The Truth Finally," DC, 4 December 1985, p. A4; Don Terry and Andrew Bagnato, "Thompson to Release Cash for Schools," CT, 27 November 1985; "Public Officials Join Dump Fight" and Violet Czachorski, "Mayor Is Silent," Hegewisch News, 22 August 1985, p. 1; Czachorski, "Groups Unite Against Plan," HN, 26 September 1985, p. 1; Robert Bergsvik, "Protest Fails to Obtain Commitment Against More New Landfill Locations" and "Sanitary Landfill Permits Approved," DC, 5 October 1985, pp. A1, A3; "Residents on the Stump Against More Dumps," HN, 10 October 1985, p. 1; James E. Landing, "Landing Tallies Objections," HN, 14 November 1985, pp. 1, 5; Mary Ellen Montes, "Hazardous Dumps," Save Our Jobs News [#2], December 1985, p. 3, FLP Box 4 Fld. 2; Robert Bergsvik, "Ban on Landfills May Be Extended," DC, 4 December 1985, p. A3; Gertrude T. Smith to Harold Washington, 7 December 1985, HWP COF Box 22 Fld. 62; Casey Bukro, "Agency Cools Its Efforts on Overly Warm Landfill," CT, 13 December 1985, p. A3; "Simon Plans Meeting with EPA," DC, 21 December 1985, p. A3; John B. W. Corey to Benjamin Reyes, "Estimate of Cost for a Water Main to Serve Homes on 134th Place," 3 October 1984, HWP DS Box 16 Fld. 31; Lester S. Dickinson to Kari Moe et al., "Meeting Concerning Environmental Health and Safety Problems," 17 September 1985, HWP COF Box 9 Fld. 34; Jean Davidson, "Families So Close Yet So Far from Solution to Tainted Water," CT, 1 December 1985, p. C1; Juanita Bratcher, "Residents Fight Water Blues," CD, 3 December 1985, pp. 1, 18; Mayor's Press Office News Release, 24 December 1986, HWP Box 53.

9. Obama to Phil Boerner, 20 November 1985, Boerner Papers, Obama, DFMF, pp. 159–62, 170–71, 175–76, 178–79 (calling Cathy "Mary"); Obama Interview with Cathleen Falsani, 27 March 2004; Obama Commencement Address, Northwestern University, 16 June 2006; Obama, remarks at James C. Wright Middle School, Madison, WI, 4 November 2009, Public Papers of the Presidents 2009 Vol. II, p. 1636; Peter Slevin, "For Clinton and Obama, a Common Ideological Touchstone," WP, 25 March 2007, p. A1; DJG interviews with Asif Agha, Jerry Kellman, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Yvonne Lloyd, Dan Lee, Cathy Askew, Stephanie Askew, Betty Garrett, Tom Kaminski, and Marlene Dillard.

10. "Mayor Appoints Task Force on Steel," 1 June 1984, and "Chicago's Task Force on Steel Industry," 30 October 1984, HWP POS Box 15, Fld. 109; "Steel and Southeast Chicago: Reasons and Opportunities for Industrial Renewal," Northwestern University Center for Urban Affairs, November 1985, 354 pp.; Robert Bergsvik, "Chicago Steel Report Is Released," DC, 4 December 1985, p. A3; "Good News, Bad News on Steel Job Scene," TNW, January–February 1986, p. 6; Ann R. Markusen, "National Policies Cause Local Steel Decline," TNW, March 1986, pp. 3–4; Markusen, "Planning for Industrial Decline: Lessons from Steel Communities," Journal of Planning Education and Research 7 (1988): 173–84, esp. 181; Markusen, "City on the Skids," CR, 23 November 1989; David Ranney, Global Decisions, Local Collisions (Temple University Press, 2003), pp. 108–20, esp. 111 and 118; Pierre Clavel and Sara O'Neill-Kohl, "Losing Out on Industrial Policy: The Chicago Case," City & Regional Planning Working Paper, Cornell University, January 2010, esp. pp. 21–24. See also Robert Giloth and Josh Lerner to Kari Moe, "Task Force on Steel and Southeast Chicago, 23 May 1986, HWP CSS Box 25 Fld. 51; Rob Mier to Harold Washington, "Task Force on Steel and Southeast Chicago," 27 May 1986, Rob Mier to Al Miller, "Release of Steel Task Force Pre-Publication Report," 18 July 1986, and Rob Mier to Brenda Gaines, “Steel Task Force Pre-Publication Report,” 25 July 1986, all HWP DS Box 8 Fld. 29; and Wim Wiewel and Nicholas C. Rieser, “The Limits of Progressive Municipal Economic Development: Job Creation in Chicago,” Community Development Journal 24 (April 1989): 111–19.

11. Gerald S. Kellman and Maurice Richards to Harold Washington, 19 December 1985, HWP FAS Box 13 Fld. 69; Richard Foster, “Local 1033 Joining with Community & Religious Organizations to Stop Plant Closings,” 1033 News & Views, January 1986, p. 1; Rob Mier to Harold Washington, “LTV Steel Potential Closure” and “LTV Steel Fact Sheet,” 2 January 1986, HWP DS Box 8 Fld. 29 and FAS Box 13 Fld. 69; Laurie P. Cohen and Thomas F. O’Boyle, “Ill Fated Merger: LTV, Dragged Down by Steel Subsidiary, Struggles to Survive,” WSJ, 6 January 1986, p. 1; Merrill Goozner, “Ailing LTV May Close Huge South Side Mill,” CCB, 13 January 1986, p. 1; Rob Mier’s 1989 interview with Betty Brown-Chappell; Obama, DFMF, pp. 150, 168–69; DJG interviews with Maury Richards, Jerry Kellman, Loretta Augustine-Herron, and Marlene Dillard. On Rob Mier, see also Mier et al., Social Justice and Local Policy Development (Sage Publications, 1993), his interview in Norman Krumholz and Pierre Clavel, eds., Reinventing Cities (Temple University Press, 1994), pp. 68–82; and Robert Giloth and Wim Wiewel, “Equity Development in Chicago: Robert Mier’s Ideas and Practice,” Economic Development Quarterly 10 (August 1996): 204–16.

12. Obama to Phil Boerner, 20 November 1985 (noting he planned to be in D.C. December 20–24), Boerner Papers; Obama to Genevieve Cook, 5 January 1986, Cook Papers; Obama, DFMF, p. 204, 261–67; Tom Maliti (AP), “Obama’s Brother Chooses Life in the Slow Lane,” 26 October 2004; DJG interviews with Tom Kaminski, Zeituni Onyango, Beenu Mahmood, Hasan and Raazia Chandoo, and Genevieve Cook. On Abon’go Malik, see also Marshall Sella, “The Audacity of Bro,” GQ, July 2013.

13. Thomas M. Burton and Dean Baquet, “FBI Mole Gave Alderman Cash Campaign Donation,” CT, 26 December 1985; Manuel Galvan and Burton, “Aldermen, Contractor Feel Heat,” CT, 28 December 1985; E. R. Shipp, “‘Council Wars’ at an End, Says Chicago Mayor,” NYT, 7 January 1986; Burton, “FBI Mole Gave Ald. Kelley Cash,” CT, 14 January 1986; Maurice Possley and Douglas Frantz, “FBI Phoned in Plays to Mole at Meetings,” CT, 16 January 1986; Frantz and John O’Brien, “Waste Firm Lobbyist Opened Doors for FBI Mole,” CT, 22 January 1986, pp. 1, 2; Irene Benjamin to Harold Washington, 27 January 1986, HWP COF Box 22 Fld. 62; Frantz, “FBI Mole Says He Tried to Buy ‘Veto-Proof’ Council,” CT, 2 February 1986, p. 16; Frantz and Mark Eissman, “City Counsel Disqualifies Himself as Payoff Prober,” CT, 6 February 1986, pp. 1, 7; James Strong and Burton, “Washington Aide Coffey Quits City Hall Post,” CT, 8 February 1986; John Camper and John Kass, “Scandal Gets Too Big for Mayor to Ignore,” CT, 9 February 1986, pp. 1, 18; Camper and Strong, “Probe Puts Buffer on Council Wars,” CT, 19 February 1986; Baquet and Strong, “City’s Counsel Quits,” CT, 20 February 1986, p. 1; John Camper, “City Hall Probe Puts Squeeze on Washington’s Inner Circle,” CT, 21 February 1986, p. 1; Ray Gibson, “City Garbage Disposal Contract Probed by Federal Grand Jury,” CT, 3 March 1986; Bob Wiedrich and Baquet, “Lobbyist Paid for City Aide’s Vacation,” CT, 6 April 1986, p. 1; Baquet and Wiedrich, “Claim of ‘Finder’s Fee’ for Ald. Kelley Probed,” CT, 11 April 1986, p. 1; Fran Spielman, “‘Dumb’ Mole Gave Me $28,500—Alderman,” CST, 2 May 1986, pp. 1, 14; Ray Gibson, “Alderman Tells of $28,500 Gift,” CT, 3 May 1986, p. 5; Baquet and William Gaines, “Waste Firm Courted Clout,” CT, 18 May 1986, p. 1; Baquet and Gaines, “Waste Management Hauls Loads of Clout,” CT, 16 June 1986, p. 1; Possley, “Mole Bribes of Officials Confirmed,” CT, 7 October 1986, p. 1; Burton and O’Brien, “City Hall Bribe Probers to Name Names,” CT, 21 November 1986, p. 1; Burton and Possley, “7 Indicted in City Hall Probe,” CT, 22 November 1986, p. 1; Andrew H. Malcolm, “2 City Council Members Among 7 Indicted in Chicago Inquiry,” NYT, 22 November 1986; Baquet and Gaines, “Chicago Clout Feeds Waste Empire,” CT, 23 November 1986, p. 2; Possley, “Mole’s Taping of Ald. Kelley Disclosed,” CT, 27 November 1986, p. 1; Possley, “Ex-Lobbyist Claims He Bribed Aldermen,” CT, 4 February 1987; Baquet, “Probe Looks Higher in Waste Firm Bribe,” CT, 9 February 1987; Possley and Robert Davis, “Ex-Ald. Kelley to Plead Guilty,” CT, 24 April 1987; William B. Crawford Jr., “Ex-Ald. Kelley Gets 1-Year Prison Term,” CT, 12 June 1987; Crawford, “Jury Sees How Mole Ran Sting,” CT, 22 September 1987; Crawford, “$5,000 Bribe Shown on Tape,” CT, 23 September 1987; Possley, “Incubator Figure Caught in Middle,” CT, 28 October 1987; Crawford, “Ex-Lobbyist Sentenced in Bribes to Former Aldermen,” CT, 15 March 1988; Joseph P. Fried, “Michael Burnett, 67, Criminal Who Exposed City Corruption,” NYT, 2 November 1996.

Brian Kelly, “Harold Washington’s Balancing Act,” Chicago Magazine, April 1985, pp. 180–83, 200–207; Melvin G. Holli and Paul M. Green, Bashing Chicago Traditions: Harold Washington’s Last Campaign (Wm. B. Eerdmans, 1989), pp. vii–viii, 19–22, 27–32, esp. 22; Ketchum v. Byrne, 740 F. 2d 1398, 7th Cir., 1984, cert. denied, 3 June 1985, 471 U.S. 1135; James Strong, “Council Factions Huddle to Draw Ward Boundaries,” CT, 25 October 1985, pp. 1, 12; Maurice Possley and Manuel Garcia, “Ward Remap Deal Could Put Minorities in Control,” CT, 30 October 1985, p. 1; Possley and Galvan, “Ward Remappers Draw Marzullo’s Wrath,” CT, 31 October 1985, p. 1; Possley, “Ward Remap in Judge’s Hands,” CT, 1 November 1985, p. 2; Strong and William B. Crawford Jr., “Final Draft of Ward Remap Drawn,” CT, 8 November 1985, p. 1; Hanke Gratteau, “Negotiations on Remap Boil Down to 3 Wards,” CT, 4 November 1985, p. 2; Ketchum v. City Council, 630 F. Supp. 551 (N. D. Ill.), 30 December 1985; Robert Davis and Galvan, “’86 Vote Ordered for Remap Wards,” CT, 31 December 1985, p. 1; Strong and Davis, “Remap Crusader New City Counsel,” CT, 1 March 1986, p. 1; Jeffrey D. Colman and Michael T. Brody, “Ketchum v. Byrne: The Hard Lessons of Discriminatory Redistricting in Chicago,” Chicago-Kent Law Review 64 (1988): 497–530; and Jud Miner’s 1990 interview with Betty Brown-Chappell. See also Robert J. McClory, “Washington at Midterm: A Look at the Record,” Illinois Issues, January 1985, pp. 20–24.

14. Cohen and O’Boyle, “Ill-Fated Merger,” WSJ, 6 January 1986, p. 1; Goozner, “Ailing LTV May Close Huge South Side Mill,” CCB, 13 January 1986, p. 1; “Report: LTV Closing?,” DC, 13 January 1986, p. A2; Larry Galica, “1986: The Year They Loved to Hate,” DC, 31 December 1986, p. A2; “Churches Ask Steel Study,” CT, 15 January 1986, p. B1; “Rep. Stresses Reinvestment for LTV Steel,” DC, 15 January 1986, p. A3; IAF to CHD, “Minority Organizer Training Program,” 12 July 1985, IAFP Box 162 Fld. 1686; “Minority Organizers Training,” 14–16 January 1986, IAFP Box 163 Fld. 1693; Sharon A. Jacobson to Renee Brereton, 13 May 1986, IAFP Box 162 Fld. 1678; Matt O’Connor, “LTV to Idle 775 in Chicago,” CT, 22 January 1986, p. B1; Barry Cronin, “LTV Laying Off 775 Here,” CST, 22 January 1986, p. 4; “LTV Closing Unit,” NYT, 22 January 1986, p. D5; Larry Galica, “LTV Announces 775 Layoffs,” DC, 22 January 1986, p. A1; Galica, “Laid-Off LTV Employees to Be Given Job Assistance,” DC, 23 January 1986; Frank Lumpkin to Crossroads Fund, 23 January 1986, CFP Box 38 Fld. 472; “LTV Rally Postponed,” DC, 25 January 1986, p. A1; Mark Hornung, “LTV Slashes 775 Jobs at Huge Chicago Works,” CCB, 27 January 1986, p. 49; Galica, “Caucus Hears LTV’s Woes,” DC, 30 January 1986, FLP Box 5 Fld. 6; Mike Parker, “Keep Union United in Quitting QWL Program,” Labor

Notes, February 1986, pp. 10, 15; Janis Parker, "Job Seekers to Receive Assistance Via Network," DC, 1 February 1986, p. A5; "Skills Assessment Offered at College," South Suburban Citizen, 7 February 1986, ABJP; "1033 Announces Candidate Endorsements," DC, 14 February 1986, p. A4; Galica, "Jobless Help Available," and "LTV-Local 1033 Contract Talks to Resume," DC, 15 February 1986, p. A1; "Reaction Mixed to Job Network," DC, 19 February 1986; John Conroy, "The Silence in Steel City," CR, 21 February 1986, pp. 1, 18–30; "Plant Closing Law Is Discussed," DC, 27 February 1986, p. A1; "Save LTV Jobs! Public Ownership the Only Way," Save Our Jobs News, March 1986, p. 3, FLP Box 5 Fld. 5; 1033 News & Views, March 1986; Galica, "Wis. Steel's Sudden Closing Spurs Proposal," DC, 3 March 1986, p. A1; Galica, "Bill Designed to Regulate Closures Opposed by Some," DC, 4 March 1986, p. A3.

Obama, DFMF, p. 172, 231–33; Gloria Jackson Bacon's 2002 interview with Julieanna Richardson; DJG interviews with Loretta Augustine-Herron, Yvonne Lloyd, Dominic Carmon, Alma Jones, Hazel and Cheryl Johnson, Gloria Jackson Bacon, James V. Jordan, Jerry Kellman, and Mike Kruglik; Loretta Augustine-Herron in Anthony Painter, Barack Obama: The Movement for Change (Arcadia Books, 2009), p. 101; Altgeld Gardens Residents to Harold Washington, 20 July 1985, HWP COF Box 1 Fld. 20; Jean Davidson, "Child-Parent Centers Helping Needy Families Learn Together," CT, 13 October 1985, p. 1; Sandra Crockett, "Altgeld Fears Toxic Threat," CD, 22 January 1986, p. 1; Crockett, "Move to Ease Altgeld's Waste Scare," CD, 13 February 1986, p. 3; Illinois Environmental Protection Agency, "The Southeast Chicago Study: An Assessment of Environmental Pollution and Public Health Impacts," March 1986; Casey Bukro, "Southeast Side Cancer Death Rates High," CT, 15 March 1986, p. 5; Dean Congbalay, "Health Study's Bad News Is No News to Southeast Side Groups," CT, 17 March 1986, p. C5; Sharon Pines, "Minorities, Others Organize Against Toxic Threat," TNW, April 1986, pp. 5–6; Harold Henderson, "Don't Dump on Us," CR, 23 May 1986, pp. 1, 20–29. See also Lisa Newman, "Pioneer CHA Clinic Gets $500,000 Grant," CT, 7 October 1991; Deborah Pinkney, "Altgeld Tenants Sick of Bad Air," CST, 10 July 1993, p. 3; Joyce Kelly, "CHA Project House Call," CT, 25 June 1995; and Kim Geiger, "Obama Tour Covers President's South Side Past," CT, 11 November 2013.

15. Obama to Andrew Roth, 27 February 1986, Roth Papers; Obama to Roy and Mary Obama, 17 March 1986, Abon'go Malik Obama Papers; Obama to Phil Boerner, 19 March 1986, Boerner Papers; Obama, DFMF, pp. 187–88; Obama on The Friday Night Show with Bob Sirott, WTTW.com, 3 December 2004; Loretta Augustine in Bob Sexter and John McCormick, "Portrait of a Pragmatist," CT, 30 March 2007, and in Sasha Abramsky, Inside Obama's Brain (Portfolio, 2010), p. 213; Yvonne Lloyd in Janice Malone, "Nashville Resident Recalls Senator Obama Always Destined for Success," Tennessee Tribune, 17–23 January 2008, p. A1; DJG interviews with Asif Agha, Jerry Kellman, Mary Bernstein, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Yvonne Lloyd, Marlene Dillard, Nadyne Griffin, Tom Kaminski, Andrew Roth, and Phil Boerner.

16. Madeline Talbott 1986 appointment book, IAP 2011-111 Box 2 Fld. 26; Renee Brereton, "CHD Proposal Evaluation Form—The Developing Communities Project," #86-D-02-02, 7 March 1986, Bernardin Papers; "CHD Allocation Process Rolling," CC, 21 March 1986, p. 5; Mary Yu to Cardinal Bernardin, "Recommendations for Funding—Nationally Funded Proposals," 16 April 1986, Sharon Jacobson and Father Ken Brucks to Bishop Rodriguez and Rev. Frank Kane, "Recommendations for Funding—Nationally Funded Grants," 16 April 1986, Jacobson to CHD Allocation Committee of Washington Funds, “Our Recommendations to National CHD,” 17 April 1986, Jacobson to Renee Brereton, “Diocesan Recommendations for National CHD Funding of Chicago Community Organizations,” 17 April 1986, Cardinal Bernardin to Mary Yu, “Recommendations for Nationally Funded Proposals,” 22 April 1986, Rev. Alfred LoPinto to Joseph Cardinal Bernardin, 29 May 1986, all Bernardin Papers; Industrial Areas Foundation, “Notice: July 1986 National Training,” 3 April 1986, IAFP Box 73 Fld. 882; Viki Cucciardo (CHD D.C.) to Patricia DeMaria (IAF), “Recruits for IAF Minority Training—Los Angeles,” 29 April 1986, and Sharon A. Jacobson to Renee Brereton, 13 May 1986, IAF Box 162 Fld. 1678; IAF to CHD, “Minority Training Program,” n.d., IAFP Box 162 Fld. 1689; Rey Flores, “The Catholic Campaign for Human Development: Reform or Bust,” Crisis Magazine, 9 November 2011; Billy Hallowell, “New Book’s Ironic Claim: Catholic Church Paid to Send Obama to an Alinsky-Founded Group’s Community Organizing Training,” TheBlaze.com, 23 July 2012; Phyllis Schlafly and George Neumayr, No Higher Power: Obama’s War on Religious Freedom (Regnery Publishing, 2012), pp. 194–97, 200–201, 204, and esp. 80 (citing “a source who once had access to copies of documents” from the Bernardin Papers) and 205 (thanking Rey Flores); William S. McKersie, “Fostering Community Participation to Influence Public Policy: Lessons from the Woods Fund of Chicago, 1987–1993,” Nonprofit and Voluntary Sector Quarterly 26 (March 1997): 11–26, esp. 15–17; Jean Rudd in McKersie, “Strategic Philanthropy and Local Public Policy,” Ph.D. dissertation, University of Chicago, March 1998, esp. pp. 343 and 349; DJG interviews with Jean Rudd, Ken Rolling, Rochelle Davis, Madeline Talbott, Renee Brereton, Sharon Jacobson, Mary Yu, and Ken Brucks. See also Jean Rudd, “How One Foundation Came to Support Community Organizing,” in Sandy O’Donnell et al., Promising Practices in Revenue Generation for Community Organizing (Center for Community Change, October 2005).

17. Manuel Galvan and Robert Davis, “26th Ward Race Mirrors State of City Politics,” CT, 12 March 1986; Davis and Galvan, “Mayor’s Council Gains May Be Hollow Victory,” John Camper, “Mayor, Vrdolyak Show Their Muscle,” and Tim Franklin, “5 Chicago Legislators Rejected,” CT, 20 March 1986, pp. 1, 2; Galvan and Mark Eissman, “Mayor’s Man Takes Lead in 26th,” CT, 21 March 1986; Torres v. Board of Election Commissioners, 492 N.E. 2d 539 (Ill. App. 1st Dst.), 14 April 1986; Andy Knott and Eissman, “Back to the Streets in the 26th Ward,” CT, 18 April 1986, p. 1; Davis and Eissman, “Council Balance Hinges on 2 Runoff Elections,” and “Heavies to Turn Out for 26th Ward Rematch,” CT, 20 April 1986; Davis and Galvan, “Vote Theft Charged in 26th Ward Race,” CT, 22 April 1986; Davis and Mark Zambrano, “Mayor Hopes 15, 26 Add Up to Power,” CT, 27 April 1986; Eissman, “Campaigns Go Door-to-Door as Dust Settles in 26th Ward,” CT, 28 April 1986; Eissman, “Races May Hinge on Absentees,” CT, 29 April 1986; Davis and Galvan, “Mayor Feels the Power Shifting His Way,” and Jack Houston and Zambrano, “Election Watchers Marshal Forces as Ward Runoffs Go to the Voters,” CT, 30 April 1986; Davis and Galvan, “Mayor the Winner in Aldermanic Elections,” CT, 1 May 1986; Cecilia Cummings, “Mayor Explores Vrdolyak Territory,” CST, 24 June 1986; Hawking, “Political Education in the Harold Washington Movement,” pp. 164–68.

Kevin Reese, “Superfund Urged for Jobless,” DC, 22 March 1986, p. A2; Matt O’Connor, “Union’s Pay Cuts in LTV Pact Are Either Too Much or Too Little,” CT, 24 March 1986, p. 4; Delbert C. Augustson, “Thanks to Officials Who Didn’t Help Out,” DC, 26 March 1986, p. A4; Larry Galica, “Vote Deadline on LTV Pact Near,” DC, 28 March 1986, p. A1; Jim Masters, “Wis. Steel Workers Hear Encouraging Words,” DC, 1 April 1986, p. A3; James Warren, “LTV Pact Ratified; Pay, Benefits to Be Slashed,” CT, 5 April 1986, p. 6; Maury Richards, “New Contract Ratified,” 1033 News & Views, April 1986; Tim Offutt to Frank Lumpkin, 15 April 1986, CFP Box 38 Fld. 472; 1033 News & Views, May 1986, p. 8.

18. Sandra Crockett, “A Tale of Two Parks: The White One Green, The Black One Dirty,” CD, 18 December 1985, p. 18; Juanita Bratcher, “S. Side Residents Charge Favoritism in Parks,” CD, 4 March 1986, p. 7; [Friends of the Parks], untitled list, n.d., HWP COS Box 24A Fld. 4; Michael Orenstein, “Park Projects Bring Communities Together,” TNW, April–May 1989, pp. 3–4, 21; John Owens in Linda Matchan, “A Law Review Breakthrough,” BG, 15 February 1990, p. 29, in Letta Tayler and Keith Herbert, “Obama Forged Path as Chicago Community Organizer,” Newsday, 2 March 2008, p. A6, on Tell Me More, NPR, 23 July 2008, and in Bill Glauber, “Chicago Neighborhood Watching President-Elect Closely,” MJS, 12 January 2009; DJG interviews with Eva Sturgies, Nadyne Griffin, Aletha Strong (Gibson), and John Owens; Owens in Lisa Lerer, “Obama Decades-Old Shooting Scare Guides Anti-Poverty Plan,” Bloomberg, 19 February 2013; Maraniss, BOTS, pp. 550–51. See also Tom Brune, ed., Neglected Neighborhoods: Patterns of Discrimination in Chicago City Services (Chicago Reporter, 1981). One Saturday evening in April or early May, Barack, apparently accompanied by one of the DCP ladies (“Ruby”), attended a performance of Ntozake Shange’s For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide/When the Rainbow Is Enuf at the Edgewater Presbyterian Church in far-north Chicago. See Richard Christiansen, “Cast Lends a Fierce Beauty to Shange’s ‘Colored Girls,’” CT, 3 April 1986, Obama, DFMF, pp. 204–6, and Philip Weiss, “Obama’s Dark Side,” MondoWeiss.net, 22 April 2008. No surviving DCP member has any recollection of accompanying Barack to the play.

19. Philip J. O’Connor, “$3.9 Million Joyce Gifts to 84 Groups,” CST, 8 May 1986, p. 54; Obama to Genevieve Cook, 14 August 1985, Cook Papers; [Tom Joyce], “Report of the Justice & Peace Committee—1980–1986,” 9 May 1986, and Rev. Thomas Joyce to Rev. Martin Kirk, “Recommendations for Grants from the Claretian Social Development Fund,” 10 May 1986, TJP; “Draft of Letter from Bishop Gaughan to Pastors,” n.d., Bernardin Papers; Jerry Rodell, “South Suburbs—Alive and Well,” Upturn, October–November 1987, p. 7; Claretian Social Development Fund 1974–1993: Report to the Eastern Province Assembly from the Peace and Justice Committee, June 1993, pp. 13–14, TJP; Kellman in John B. Judis, “Creation Myth,” TNR, 10 September 2008, pp. 18ff.; Gregory A. Galluzzo, “Gamaliel and the Barack Obama Connection,” Organizing #1, December 2008, p. 3 (updated early 2009); DJG interviews with Jerry Kellman, Tom Joyce, Leo Mahon, Greg Galluzzo, Tom Knutson, Len Dubi, Bob Klonowski, Mike Kruglik, Adrienne Jackson, Mary Bernstein, Mary Gonzales, Peter Martinez, Lynn Feekin, Nancy Jones, Kerry Taylor, and Fred Simari. See also Greg LeRoy, “Report on the Activities of the Calumet Project for Industrial Jobs, April 1–September 30, 1984,” RPPP Box 21; Bruce Nissen, “Union Battles Against Plant Closings,” Policy Studies Journal 18 (Winter 1989–90): 382–95; Lynn Feekin and Nissen, “Early Warnings of Plant Closings,” Labor Studies Journal 16 (Winter 1991): 20–33; and Nissen, Fighting for Jobs: Case Studies of Labor-Community Coalitions Confronting Plant Closings (State University of New York Press, 1995), esp. p. 7. By happenstance, a very low-visibility “South Suburban Action Coalition on Health, Unemployment and Low Income” had briefly existed eighteen months earlier. See Bob Kostanczuk, “Unemployment More Serious in Cal City,” DC, 8 October 1984, p. A1.

“College Sponsors Luncheon for Local Business Leaders,” DC, 6 March 1986, p. A9; “Skills Assessment Sessions Slated,” DC, 13 March 1986, p. A3; “University Data Bank User Recommends Service Highly,” DC, 26 March 1986, p. A10; “Jobs Skills Assessment Regional Employment Network at St. Victor Jubilee House April 28th and 30th,” SVPSB, 13, 20, and 27 April 1986, pp. 9, 6, 5; Inscapes (GSU Office of University Relations), 9 May 1986; “Sessions Set on Job Skills,” DC, 9 May 1986, p. A1; “Skill Assessment Session for Jobless,” The Star, 15 May 1986, p. A2; “Open Skill Assessment Centers,” The Star, 18 May 1986, p. A7; “Regional Employment Network Reports Initial Success,” The Star, 22 May 1986, p. C1; C. D. Matthews, “Area Employment Network Gathering Data,” DC, 22 May 1986, p. A8; “Job Skills Site Opens,” DC, 29 May 1986, p. A3; “Designate Three Sites for Skill Assessment Tests,” The Star, 29 May 1986, p. A8; Inscapes, 4 June 1986; “Job Skill Interviews Are Slated,” DC, 1 July 1986, p. A1; “Job Help,” DC, 16 July 1986, p. A2; “GSU Hosts Job Interviews,” DC, 23 July 1986; Inscapes, 23 November 1987, p. 3; Obama, DFMF, pp. 167–68. See also Julie S. Putterman, Chicago Steelworkers: The Cost of Unemployment (Steelworkers Research Project, January 1985), pp. 48, 53, 58.

20. Chicago Housing Authority Ad, “Specification No. 8632,” CST, 14 April 1986, HWP DS Box 1 Fld. 10; Mrs. Callie Smith et al. to Zirl Smith, 17 May 1986, Mrs. Callie Smith et al. to Harold Washington, 20 May 1986, J. D. Stubblefield (Air Quality Testing) to James W. Wesley (CHA), “Altgeld Gardens/Murray Homes . . . Identification & Evaluation of Asbestos,” 27 May 1986, all HWP DS Box 1 Fld. 10; “Altgeld Tenants Suspect Asbestos in CHA Units,” CD, 28 May 1986, p. 8; “Asbestos at Altgeld Gardens,” “Possibility of Asbestos,” and “Conduct Tests for Presence of Asbestos,” WBBM Newsradio, 28 May 1986, 6:35 A.M., 3:25 P.M., and 4:35 P.M. transcripts, HWP COS Box 22 Fld. 9; John Blake, “Asbestos Test Worries Altgeld Gardens Residents,” CT, 29 May 1986, p. C7; Marilyn Marchione, “Asbestos Peril Reported in Ida B. Wells Homes,” CST, 29 May 1986, p. 12; “Presence of Asbestos,” WBBM TV News, 29 May 1986, 10 P.M. transcript, HWP COS Box 22 Fld. 9; CHA Press Statement, 30 May 1986, HWP DS Box 1 Fld. 10; “Independent Firm to Do Testing,” WBBM TV News, 30 May 1986, 10 P.M. transcript, HWP COS Box 22 Fld. 9; Martha Allen, “Asbestos in CHA Apartments Poses Possible Health Hazards,” Chicago Reporter, June 1986, pp. 1–4; “CHA Hiring Firms to Test for Asbestos,” CT, 2 June 1986, p. C5; “Asbestos Danger,” WBBM TV News, 2 June 1986, 6 P.M. transcript, and “Emergency Asbestos Investigation,” WBBM TV News, 2 June 1986, 10 P.M. transcript, HWP COS Box 22 Fld. 9; Cheryl Devall, “Asbestos Tests Slated for Wells Homes,” CT, 3 June 1986, p. C3; “Smith Takes the Heat” and “Asbestos a Health Hazard,” WBBM Newsradio, 3 June 1986, 5:58 A.M. and 6:30 A.M. transcripts, “Testing Begun” and “Lab Testing Begins,” WBBM TV News, 4 June 1986, 5 P.M. and 9 P.M. transcripts, all HWP COS Box 22 Fld.; Harry Golden Jr., “Mayor’s Aid Asked to Remove Asbestos,” CST, 5 June 1986, p. 24; Chinta Strausberg, “Altgeld Residents Seek Meeting with Mayor on Asbestos,” CD, 5 June 1986, p. 3; Rob Karwath and Dave Schneiderman, “Poisonings Prompt Tests Near Plant,” CT, 5 June 1986, p. 1; Zirl S. Smith to Renault A. Robinson et al., “Status of Asbestos, Lead Based Paint, PCB and Other Toxic Substances,” 5 June 1986, HPW DS Box 1 Fld. 10 and COS Box 22 Fld. 9; Obama, DFMF, pp. 235–42; Callie Smith in Peter Wallsten, “Fellow Activists Say Obama’s Memoir Has Too Many I’s,” LAT, 19 February 2007; Patrick Reardon, “Obama’s Chicago,” CT, 25 June 2008, p. T1; Linda Randle in Jen Christensen and Matt Hoyer, “Slow Change Frustrated Young Obama, Friends Say,” CNN.com, 18 August 2008, and in “Barack Obama Revealed,” CNN, 20 August 2008, Adrienne P. Samuels, “Barack’s Chicago,” Ebony, January 2009; Becoming Barack: Evolution of a Leader, Little Dizzy Home Video, 2009 (brief footage of the 4 June meeting with Evans); “Evangeline Katherine Irving,” CT, 26 January 2012; DJG interviews with Linda Randle, Mike Kruglik, Adrienne Jackson, Alma Jones, Hazel and Cheryl Johnson, Martha Kindred, Callie Smith, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Yvonne Lloyd, Ben Reyes, Luz Martinez, Hal Baron, Jane Ramsey, Robert Ginsburg, and Tim Evans.

21. “Asbestos in Third CHA Building,” “Public Housing Asbestos Contamination,” and “CHA Has Known About Asbestos,” WBBM TV News, 5 June 1986, 5 P.M., 6 P.M., and 10 P.M. transcripts, “CHA Residents Joining Forces,” WGN TV News, 5 June 1986, 10:30 P.M. transcript, HWP COS Box 22 Fld. 9; “CHA’s Chief Flushed Out” and Marilyn Marchione, “Asbestos Tests Set at 2 CHA Properties,” CST, 6 June 1986, pp. 10 and 20; Rob Karwath, “Lead Poison Tests Set for Firefighters,” CT, 6 June 1986, p. A3; “Asbestos Removal,” WBBM TV News, 6 June 1986, 6 P.M. transcript, HWP COS Box 22 Fld. 9; Rogers Worthington, “Students to Be Tested for Lead,” CT, 8 June 1986, p. A3; Henry Locke, “Free Health Examinations,” CD, 9 June 1986, p. 3; “Grave Concerns About Asbestos,” and “Crowd Keeps Smith from Speaking,” WBBM TV News, 9 June 1986, 6 P.M. and 10 P.M. transcripts; “Stormy Meeting,” WLS TV News, 9 June 1986, 10 P.M. transcript; “Residents Demand Asbestos Removal,” WMAD TV News, 9 June 1986, 10 P.M. transcript, HWP COS Box 22 Fld.9; Becoming Barack footage, 9 June 1986; Marilyn Marchione, “CHA Asbestos Meeting Fizzles,” CST, 10 June 1986, p. 12; Cheryl Devall, “CHA Director Booed from Talks on Asbestos,” CT, 10 June 1986, p. C2; John McCarron, “CHA Moves on Asbestos Clean-Up,” and John Blake, “300 Line Up for Lead Testing,” CT, 11 June 1986, pp. C3, A3; Benjamin Reyes to CCRC, 12 June 1986, and Artensa Randolph to Renault A. Robinson et al., “Ad Hoc Asbestos Abatement Committee Meeting June 16, 1986,” 18 June 1986, both HWP DS Box 1 Fld. 10; Jess Bravin, “City Reveals Factory Lead Poisoning Cases,” CT, 18 June 1986, p. A3; Martha Allen, “CHA Begins Asbestos Cleanup at Ida B. Wells,” Chicago Reporter, July 1986, pp. 6–7; “CHA Removes Asbestos,” DC, 8 July 1986, p. A2; “CHA Steps Up Efforts to Remove Asbestos,” CST, 12 July 1986, p. 6; Marilyn Marchione, “Funds Asked in Asbestos Fight,” CST, 30 July 1986, p. 16; Patrick Berry, “Toxics and Communities’ Right to Know,” TNW, September 1986, pp. 1, 13–15; Obama, DFMF, pp. 243–46; Patrick Reardon, “Obama’s Chicago,” CT, 25 June 2008, p. T1; Edward McClelland, Young Mr. Obama (Bloomsbury Press, 2010), pp. 45–46, DJG interviews with Loretta Augustine-Herron, Yvonne Lloyd, Alma Jones, Callie Smith, Linda Randle, Hazel and Cheryl Johnson, Martha Kindred, Jerry Kellman, Mike Kruglik, and John Owens. The existing microfilm copy of the Daily Calumet omits the entire month of June 1986 as well as other scattered dates throughout 1984–1987.

22. CCRC Invoice to CHD Chicago, 15 May 1986, Obama to Sharon [Jacobson], 20 May 1986, and Sharon Jacobson to Obama, 30 June 1986, Bernardin Papers; Obama to Phil Boerner, 2[9]? May 1986, Boerner Papers; Obama to Genevieve Cook, n.d. (ca. 3 June 1986), Cook Papers; DJG interviews with Sharon Jacobson, Phil Boerner, and Genevieve Cook.

23. DJG interviews with Asif Agha, Sheila Jager, Michael Dees, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Yvonne Lloyd, Marlene Dillard, Maria Cerda, Eva Sturgies, Aletha Strong, Nadyne Griffin, George Galland, Mary Yu, Sharon Jacobson, and Ken Brucks; Obama, DFMF, p. 210; Bernd Jager, “Memories and Myths of Evil: A Reflection on the Fall from Paradise,” Collection du CIRP 1 (2007): 211–30, esp. 215–16; Christian Thiboutot, “Brief Biography of Bernd Jager,” Collection du CIRP 1 (2007): 288–90; Penny Hastings, “Sonoma County Artists Open Their Houses This Weekend,” San Francisco Chronicle, 12 October 2001.

Developing Communities Project, "A Proposal to Expand Grass-Roots Organizing Around Employment and Education Issues in the Far South Side of Chicago," n.d. (ca. early October 1986), MAWP; John Camper and Robert Davis, "Mayor's Allies Push Aside City Parks Boss Kelly," CT, 17 June 1986, p. 1; Chinta Strausberg, "Mayor Seizes Control of Park Board," CD, 17 June 1986, p. 1; Ann Marie Lipinski and Camper, "Kelly Forces Mobilize to Resist Parks Coup," CT, 19 June 1986, p. 1; Donald M. Schwartz, "Organization Invited to Air Parks Concerns," CST, 3 July 1986, p. 11; Cheryl Devall, "Neglected Parks Get a Look-See," CT, 3 July 1986, p. M11; Elaine M. Johnson to Jesse Madison, "Gately Stadium," 3 July 1986, HWP L&I Box 5 Fld. 16; Tom McNamee, "Netsch Takes His Wine and Cheese to the Parks," CST, 6 July 1986, p. 1; Camper, "Kelly Ally May Quit Parks Board," CT, 10 July 1986, p. M10; "Status of Work Done on List of Requests Submitted by Developing Communities Project as of July 7th, 1986," and "Presentation to the Board of Commissioners of the Chicago Park District," 10 July 1986, Sturgies Papers; Camper, "Vrdolyak's Park Joins Waiting List," CT, 11 July 1986, p. 1; Barry Cronin, "Field House OK Delayed," CST, 11 July 1986, p. 16; Jerry Schay, "Will Gately Swing Open?," CT, 14 July 1986, p. B11; Camper, "Court Reaffirms Parks Takeover," CT, 15 July 1986, p. 1; Schwartz, "Gately Stadium Resurfacing Set," CST, 15 July 1986, p. 2; John Hoellen, "Athletic Directors Cheer Gately Resurface Plan," CT, 16 July 1986, p. C5; Camper, "Vrdolyak's Ward to Get Fieldhouse," CT, 19 July 1986, p. M5; George Papajohn and Steve Neal, "Kelly Surrenders Parks Job," CT, 21 July 1986, p. 1; Ann Marie Lipinski, "Rights Lawyer Named Parks Counsel," CT, 9 August 1986, p. 5; Johnson to Ernest Barefield et al., "Gately Stadium," 22 July 1986, HWP Legislative Series Box 5 Fld. 16; Abdul Alkalimat, "Mayor Washington's Bid for Re-Election," Black Scholar, November–December 1986, pp. 2–13, esp. 8–9; Basil Talbott Jr., "Jesse Madison's Big Bout," Chicago Magazine, November 1987, pp. 145, 184–96; David Moberg, "One Year Without Washington," CR, 24 November 1988; Obama, DFMF, pp. 189, 226–27. See also Megan Pellegrini, "Eva Sturgies, UIC Cornea Service Patient," n.d., www.uic.edu/com/eye/PatientCare/PatientSuccessStories/ and Noreen S. Ahmed-Ullah, "Historic Gately Stadium Re-Opens After Facelift," CT, 14 October 2011.

CHD, "Working for Justice . . . Restoring Human Dignity," 23 June 1986, and "CHD Funded Projects 1985–1986," Bernardin Papers; Madeline Talbott 1986 appointment book, IA 2001-111 Box 2 Fld. 26; "Self-Help for Poor Takes in $300,000," CT, 24 June 1986, p. C4; "CHD Local Grants to Community Units Total Over $300,000," CC, 27 June–4 July 1986, pp. 1, 26; Jim Masters, "Self-Help Groups Given Grants," DC, 3 July 1986, p. A2; Obama Southwest Airlines ticket, Bernardin Papers.

24. Ed Chambers, Organizing for Family and Congregation (Industrial Areas Foundation, March 1978), esp. pp. 4, 14, 18–19, 21, 32; Donald C. Reitzes and Dietrich C. Rietzes, "Alinsky's Legacy: Current Applications and Extensions of His Principles and Strategies," Research in Social Movements, Conflict and Change 6 (1984): 31–55; Gregory F. Augustine Pierce, Activism That Makes Sense: Congregations and Community Organization (ACTA Publications, 1984); "10-Day National Training, July 12 to 22, 1983," and "IAF National Training July 1985," IAFP Box 74 Fld. 902; IAF to CHD Committee, "Minority Organizers Training Program," 12 July 1985, IAFP Box 162 Fld. 1686; IAF to CHD, "Minority Training Program," 31 July 1986, IAFP Box 163 Fld. 1694; Patricia DeMaria (IAF) to Jim Jennings (CHD), 5 September 1986, IAFP 162-1689; Stephanie Chavez, "Activists Seek to Organize Church-Based Political Coalition," LAT, 29 November 1987; "IAF 10-Day Training Schedule," n.d. (ca. 1990–91), Gecan Papers; Mary Beth Rogers, Cold Anger (University of North Texas Press, 1990), pp.

180–82; Dolly Merritt, “Dancer Pirouettes Her Way to Famed New York School,” Baltimore Sun, 14 June 1992; Larry B. McNeil, “The Soft Arts of Organizing,” Social Policy 26 (Winter 1995): 16–22; Tonya Jameson, “Teenager Dances onto Bigger Stage,” Baltimore Sun, 18 November 1996; Holly Selby, “On Her Toes,” Baltimore Sun, 6 April 1997; Michael Gecan, Going Public: An Organizer’s Guide to Citizen Action (Beacon Press, 2002), esp. pp. 9, 19–20, 36; Edward T. Chambers with Michael A. Cowan, Roots for Radicals: Organizing for Power, Action, and Justice (Continuum, 2005), esp. pp. 21, 65, 84; Lonnie Parker O’Neal, “Alicia Graf, Rising to a Greater Height,” WP, 11 February 2006; Will Englund, “How Would Obama Govern?,” National Journal, 25 October 2008; Charlotte Allen, “From Little ACORNs, Big Scandals Grow,” Weekly Standard, 3–10 November 2008; Gecan, After America’s Midlife Crisis (MIT Press, 2009), p. 9; Ralph Benko, “Dear President Obama: You’re No Saul Alinsky,” Forbes.com, 16 January 2012; Arnie Graf, “Barack and Mitt, As I Knew Them,” NYDN, 28 September 2012; Rowenna Davis, “Arnie Graf: The Man Ed Miliband Asked to Rebuild Labour,” Guardian, 21 November 2012; Owens in Lisa Lerer, “Obama Decades-Old Shooting Scare Guides Anti-Poverty Plan,” Bloomberg, 19 February 2013; Mary Riddell, “Power to the People,” Telegraph, 1 August 2013; Jane Merrick, “Arnie Graf,” Independent, 10 November 2013; Heather Wood Rudolph, “Get That Life: How I Became a Professional Ballerina,” Cosmopolitan, 29 December 2014; Aaron Schutz and Mike Miller, eds., People Power (Vanderbilt University Press, 2015), pp. 201–14; DJG interviews with Johnnie Owens, Mike Gecan, Charles Payne, Arnie Graf, Greg Galluzzo, Peter Martinez, and Ken Rolling. Joseph Heathcott, “Urban Activism in a Downsizing World: Neighborhood Organizing in Postindustrial Chicago,” City & Community 4 (September 2005): 277–94, is an especially insightful analysis of Alinsky-style organizing, and Tom Streithorst, “In Search of Obama,” Prospect Magazine, 21 June 2012, is remarkably acute in its articulation of how Barack’s “appearance was different to his identity.”

25. Obama airline ticket, Bernardin Papers; Harry Boyte, The Backyard Revolution: Understanding the New Citizen Movement (Temple University Press, 1980), pp. 49–51; Robert Fisher, Let the People Decide: Neighborhood Organizing in America (Twayne Publishers, 1984), pp. 48–49; Galica, “USW Loses Rail Mill Suit,” DC, 29 May 1986, p. A1; Maury Richards, “LTV Files Bankruptcy,” 1033 News & Views, July 1986; Matt O’Connor, “LTV Files for Bankruptcy,” CT, 18 July 1986, p. 1; Larry Galica, “LTV Files Bankruptcy Petition,” DC, 18 July 1986, p. A1; Brian Bremner, “Chi. Works’ Chances Dim as LTV Files Ch. 11,” CCB, 21 July 1986, p. 4; Galica, “Union to Fight LTV Benefit Cuts,” DC, 22 July 1986, p. A1; Galica, “Hospitals Will Treat LTV Retirees,” and C. D. Matthews, “Banks Are Cashing LTV Checks,” DC, 23 July 1986, pp. A1, A2; Galica, “Strike Threat Sparks South Works Idling,” and “Union, LTV Eye End to Insurance Problem,” DC, 24 July 1986, p. A1; Galica, “U.S. Steel Preparing for Strike,” and “Employees to Picket LTV,” DC, 25 July 1986, pp. A1, A2; Galica, “Protesters Arrested at LTV,” DC, 26 July 1986, p. A1; Galica, “Steel Struggles Make for Long, Hot Summer,” DC, 28 July 1986, p. A1; Galica, “Effects of USX Strike Would Be Hard to Feel,” DC, 28 July 1986, p. B3; Galica, “300 Picket LTV Plant,” DC, 29 July 1986, p. A1; “LTV Strike Is Over,” DC, 31 July 1986, p. A1; Galica, “Union Charges USS With ‘Lockout,’” and “USW Celebrates LTV Victory,” DC, 1 August 1986, p. A1; Galica, “Wait Begins for USW,” and “Picket Line Spirits High,” DC, 2 August 1986, pp. A1, A8; Robert Greene (AP), “LTV Announces Layoffs in Chicago, Hammond, Youngstown,” 7 August 1986; Robert Mier to Harold Washington, “LTV Chicago Plant Layoffs,” 7 August 1986, HWP DS Box 8 Fld. 29; O’Connor, “New Blow to Chicago Steel Mills,” CT, 8 August 1986, p. 1; David Greising, “Steel Firm to Lay Off

1,650 Here,” CST, 8 August 1986, p. 1; Galica, “LTV Will Idle 1,650,” DC, 8 August 1986, p. A1; “S. Side Group Weighs Chi. Works Options,” CCB, 11 August 1986, p. 70; “Layoffs Far-Reaching,” DC, 11 August 1986, p. A2; Galica, “Pickets Block Tracks; Police Escort Train,” DC, 12 August 1986, p. A1; Galica, “Steelworkers Block Tracks,” DC, 14 August 1986, p. A1; Maria B. Cerda to Benjamin Reyes, “Letter to LTV Steelworkers from Mayor Washington,” and Harold Washington, “Dear LTV Worker,” 19 August 1986, HWP DS Box 5 Fld. 12; Galica, “Steel Woes Move to Acme,” DC, 22 August 1986, p. A3; Galica, “LTV Filing Hurts Small Business,” DC, 25 August 1986, p. A1; USWA Local 1033, Monthly Membership Meeting Minutes, USWA Local 1033 Papers, Box 18, esp. 30 September 1986, p. 4; Maury Richards, “A Day That Will Live in Infamy,” 1033 News & Views, September 1986, p. 1; Jane Slaughter, “Steelworkers Locked Out at USX,” Labor Notes, September 1986, pp. 1, 14–15; M. W. Newman, “Broken Hearts of Steel,” Chicago Magazine, September 1986, pp. 188, 191; Galica, “LTV Layoffs to Begin,” DC, 12 September 1986, p. A1; Lynn Emmerman, “Lives Built on Steel Rust with Idleness,” CT, 14 September 1986, p. T1; Brian Bremner, “LTV to Upgrade Indiana Harbor, Eyes Chi. Works Sale,” CCB, 15 September 1986, p. 1; Cerda to Reyes, “Update on LTV Activities,” 16 September 1986, HWP DS Box 5 Fld. 12; Galica, “‘Super Wednesday’ to Help Laid Off Workers,” DC, 17 September 1986, p. A3; Galica, “LTV Union Kicks Off ‘Super Wednesday,’” DC, 19 September 1986, p. A3; “LTV Bid for Concessions Rapped,” DC, 26 September 1986, p. A1; Galica, “Once Proud So. Works Faces Struggle to Avoid Knock-Out,” DC, 26 September 1986, p. A2; Galica, “So. Works Has Rich History,” DC, 27 September 1986, p. A2; Galica, “So. Works in Its Twilight,” DC, 29 September 1986, p. A2; Galica, “No End Seen in USX-USW Struggle,” DC, 15 October 1986, p. A3; Galica, “1986: The Year They Loved to Hate,” and “Labor Leader’s Loss Still Is Felt,” DC, 31 December 1986, p. A2; Gordon L. Clark, “Regulating the Restructuring of the U.S. Steel Industry: Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code and Pension Obligations,” Regional Studies 25 (April 1991): 135–53, esp. 138–39; James B. Lane, ed., “The Uncertainty of Everyday Life: A Social History of the Calumet Region During the 1980s,” Steel Shavings 38 (2007): 181–88; DJG interviews with Maury Richards and George Schopp.

26. Robert Bergsvik, “Environmental Report Delayed,” DC, 18 January 1986, p. A3; Bergsvik, “Air Pollution Monitor at Heg. School Linked into Program,” DC, 27 January 1986, p. A10; Bergsvik, “Council to Vote on Waste Ban Extension,” DC, 29 January 1986, p. A3; Bergsvik, “CBE Prepares for Suit,” DC, 13 February 1986, p. A5; Bergsvik, “Landfill Countdown Is On,” DC, 29 May 1986, p. A3; A New Direction for Solid Waste Management in Chicago. Final Report of the Mayor’s Task Force on Solid Waste Management, April 1986, esp. p. 62; Bergsvik, “CID Operations Heightened,” DC, [5 June 1986], p. 1; Hazel Johnson to Jackie Schad, 6 June 1986, CRP Box 30 Fld. 368; James W. Collum to Hubert W. Holton, “Neighborhood Forums—District 4,” 9 June 1986, Tina Vicini to Office of the Mayor’s Press Secretary, “Mayor’s Forum,” 13 June 1986, and Greg Longhini to Dinorah Marquez, “Briefing Material for Mayor Washington’s Neighborhood Forum in the South Chicago/South Deering Community,” 18 June 1986, all HWP DS Box 1 Fld. 10; Marquez, “Briefing Notes,” 24 June 1986, HWP COS Box 44 Fld. 4; News Release, “Mayor Washington Meets Residents from South Chicago, East Side, South Deering, and Hegewisch,” 24 June 1986, HWP DS Box 13 Fld. 23; John Kass, “Ailment Makes Mayor Sing Praise Faintly,” CT, 14 August 1986, p. 3; Gail Weisberg to Anthony C. Gibbs Jr., “Neighborhood Forums,” 15 August 1986, HWP CSS Box 22 Fld. 23; Jerry Sullivan, “Of Dumps, Chicago Politics & Herons,” Audobon, March 1987, pp. 122–26.

27. John Camper and Dean Baquet, “Patronage Accusations Stall Mayor’s Job Referral Program,” CT, 15 December 1985, p. 1; “Developing Communities Project: A Proposal to Expand Grass-Roots Organizing Around Employment and Education Issues in the Far South Side of Chicago,” n.d. [ca. early October 1986], MAWP, pp. 3–4; Gamaliel Institute, “Community Participation and Leadership Program,” n.d. [ca. March–April 1986], 12pp., and [Gamaliel], “Chicago’s Greatest Challenge: Lost Minds, Lost Hopes,” n.d. [May 1986], 21pp., Gamaliel Papers; Phil Mullins, “The Name of the Game Is Power,” TNW, May 1986, pp. 7–8; Divine Word International to Gamaliel Foundation, Statement, n.d. [August 1986], Gamaliel Foundation: An Organizing Institute, “Report,” September 1986, 5pp., and Gamaliel Foundation, “Community Participation and Leadership Program,” n.d. [ca. September–October 1986], 10pp., Gamaliel Papers; Obama, DFMF, pp. 184–86; Yvonne Lloyd in “A Rusty Toyota,” WP, 11 February 2007, p. B3; David Moberg, “Obama’s Third Way,” NHI Shelterforce #149, Spring 2007; Christine Lagoria, “Where Obama’s Journey Began,” CBSNews.com, 27 April 2007; David James Smith, “The Ascent of Mr. Charisma,” Sunday Times Magazine, 23 March 2008, pp. 58ff.; Byron York, “The Organizer,” National Review, 30 June 2008; “Barack Obama Revealed,” CNN, 20 August 2008; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, p. 20; DJG interviews with Loretta Augustine-Herron, Yvonne Lloyd, Tommy West, John Ayers, Mary Ellen Montes, and Barack Obama. On Gamaliel’s growth, see Kathryn I. Coughlin’s tough-minded “A Fund Development Strategic Plan for the Gamaliel Foundation,” M.S. thesis, DePaul University, February 1999, esp. pp. 6–7; Dennis A. Jacobson, Doing Justice: Congregations and Community Organizing (Fortress Press, 2001); and Stephen Hart’s excellent Cultural Dilemmas of Progressive Politics: Styles of Engagement Among Grassroots Activists (University of Chicago Press, 2001), esp. pp. 27–120. On Mary Ellen’s role at Fiesta Educativa, later the National Center for Latinos with Disabilities, see “LeFevour Appointed President,” CST, 10 December 1986; Mike Ervin, “Kill My Program,” CR, 8 May 1988; Susy Schultz, “City Colleges Name Brady as Chancellor,” CST, 23 December 1988; and Graciela Kenig, “Hispanic Women Gain Power,” CST, 4 October 1991.

28. Chicago Phone Directory, 1986, 1987, and 1988; University of Chicago Student Directory, 1986, 1987, and esp. 1988, p. 69; Hyde Park Neighborhood Phone Book, July 1988, esp. p. 47; Abigail Foerstner, “Exhibit Is a ‘Who’s Who’ of 150 Years of Masterworks,” CT, 3 October 1986, p. 83; Obama to Phil Boerner, 21 October 1986, Boerner Papers; Obama, DFMF, pp. 227–28; Ben Calhoun, “The Neighborhood That Launched Barack Obama,” WBEZ Radio, 3 July 2008; Kellman in Moberg, “Obama’s Third Way,” and in John B. Judis, “Creation Myth,” TNR, 10 September 2008, pp. 18ff.; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, pp. 49–50; DJG interviews with Jerry Kellman, Mike Kruglik, Bill Stenzel, Tom Kaminski, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Dan Lee, Cathy Askew, Asif Agha, Johnnie Owens, Sheila Jager, John Morillo, Andrea Atkin, and Phil Boerner.

29. Leo T. Mahon, “From the Pastor’s Desk,” SVPSB, 2 February 1986, p. 2; SVPSB, 15 June 1986, p. 2; Mahon, “From the Pastor’s Desk,” SVPSB, 17 August 1986, pp. 2–3; “Mahon Leaves St. Victor,” DC, 30 August 1986, p. A8; Mahon, “A Last Letter,” SVPSB, 21 September 1986, pp. 2–3; “Pastor to Speak,” DC, 10 December 1986, p. A3; Eloise Valadez, “New Pastor Named for St. Victor,” DC, 13 December 1986, p. A5; Mahon, “St. Victor Parish,” Dan Tomich, “The Caretaker,” Gloria Boyda, “Transition,” and Tom Cima, “A Tale of Three Sundays,” Upturn, December 1986–January 1987, pp. 4–8; Karen Galvin, “Communal Reconciliation,” Upturn, February–March 1987, p. 10; DJG interviews with Leo Mahon, Bill Stenzel, Bernie Pietrzak, Tom Cima, George Schopp, Len Dubi, Fred Simari, Jan Poledziewski, and Jerry Kellman.

On SSAC, see Robert Bergsvik, "Coalition Eyes Loan Practices," DC, 18 December 1985, p. A3; "South Suburban Action Conference," SVPSB, 24 August 1986, p. 8; John Gallagher, "SSAC Calls for Action on HUD Woes," DC, 24 September 1986, p. A1; "Senators' Support Sought," DC, 7 October 1986, p. A1; C. D. Matthews, "Cal City Group Addressing Housing Issues," DC, 3 November 1986, p. A3; Bergsvik, "Housing Group Protests Lack of HUD Office," DC, 18 November 1986, p. A1; Gerald Kellman, SSAC, "CHD Pre-Application Form," 30 November 1986, Bernardin Papers; Andrew Fegelman, "Suburban Group Seeks U.S. Housing Changes," CT, 14 January 1987, p. C8; Bergsvik, "Housing Talks 'No Blockbuster,'" DC, 16 January 1987, p. A2; Bergsvik, "SSAC Shuns HUD," DC, 6 February 1987; Nick Manetas, "Business Group Becoming a Political One," DC, 17 March 1987, p. A4; Deborah Snow, "End to 'Dual Housing Market' Urged," DC, 15 June 1987, p. A1; Leslie Morse, "SSAC Urges Open Real Estate Lists," DC, 30 July 1987, p. A2; John Gallagher, "SSAC Makes Housing Plans Top Priority," DC, 30 October 1987, p. 1.

30. "Articles of Incorporation," Developing Communities Project, 26 September 1986, Mary-Ann Wilson, Notes of Meeting with Barack Obama, n.d. [ca. 1 October 1986], 3pp., Obama to Wilson, 6 October 1986, "By Laws of the Developing Communities Project," [6 October 1986], 6pp., "Board of Directors—Developing Communities Project," n.d., "Developing Communities Project: A Proposal to Expand Grass-Roots Organizing Around Employment and Education Issues in the Far South Side of Chicago," n.d. [ca. early October 1986], 10pp., Wilson to Obama, 13 November 1986, Obama to Wilson, 22 November 1986, Form SS-4, Form 2848, "Registration Statement—Charitable Organization," and "Financial Information Form," November 1986, Form 1023, "Application for Recognition of Exemption," 25 November 1986, Wilson to Marlene Dillard, 25 November 1986, Wilson to IRS, 25 November 1986, Wilson to Charitable Trust Division, Illinois Attorney General's Office, 2 December 1986, IRS to DCP, 15 December 1986, Wilson to Obama, 24 December 1986, IRS to Wilson, 16 January 1987, Obama to Wilson, 20 January 1987, Wilson to Obama, 22 January 1987, all Mary-Ann Wilson Papers; Juanita Bratcher, "Grant $7.6 Million to 151 Agencies," CD, 23 December 1986, p. 1; Woods Charitable Fund, Report for the Year 1986 [ca. March 1987], esp. pp. 2–5, 20–22; Obama to Anne Hallett, 30 December 1986, Wieboldt Foundation, Report for 1984 and 1985, 23 April 1986, and 1986 Annual Report [March 1987], p. 2, Wieboldt Foundation Papers; Mike Flannery, "Obama's Community Service Called Under Question," WBBM Radio, 20 February 2007; DJG interviews with Greg Galluzzo, Mary Gonzales, Bob Moriarty, Danny Solis, Phil Mullins, Peter Martinez, Mary-Ann Wilson, Jerry Kellman, Mary Bernstein, Marlene Dillard, Dan Lee, Betty Garrett, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Tom Kaminski, Cathy Askew, Yvonne Lloyd, Nadyne Griffin, Aletha Strong, Ann West, Isabella Waller, Deloris Burnam, Ernest Powell, Kathy Kish, Ken Rolling, Jean Rudd, John Owens, and Anne Hallett.

31. Larry Galica, "Waste Management Given OK to Buy SCA Chemical," DC, 13 September 1984, p. A1; Thomas Petzinger and Matt Moffett, "Plants That Incinerate Poisonous Wastes Run into a Host of Problems," WSJ, 26 August 1985, pp. 1, 12; Linda Lenz, "Bright Elementary Shines Through," CST, 20 April 1986; Vi Czachorski, "Get Ready to Fight Dump," HN, 2 October 1986, p. 1; "Landfill Battlers Plan Celebration," DC, 3 October 1986, p. A3; Casey Bukro, "South Side Facility Burning 'Superwaste,'" CT, 25 October 1986, p. 1; Gail Weisberg to Department Heads, "Far South Neighborhood Forum," 27 October 1986, WHP CSS Box 11 Fld. 8 and DS Box 6 Fld. 14; Czachorski, “ERV Gives Hope to HOPE,” HN, 30 October 1986, p. 1; Bukro, “Industrial Free Increase Urged to Fight Toxins,” CT, 31 October 1986, p. 1; Bukro, “Waste Fight Turning to Ballot Box,” CT, 3 November 1986, p. C1; Czachorski, “From the Editor’s Scratch Pad,” HN, 6 November 1986, p. 1; United Neighborhood Organization of Southeast Chicago, Annual Awards Banquet, 7 November 1986, FLP Box 5 Fld. 6; Dean Baquet and William Grimes, “Firm Goes Far with Vrdolyak Name,” CT, 9 November 1986; p. 1, “Hispanic Hope,” DC, 11 November 1986, p. A5; Galica, “Steelworkers Face Dim Holiday, and “LTV Pensions in Danger,” DC, 26 November 1986, p. A1; Weisberg to Department Heads, “South Deering/East Side/Hegewisch Forum,” 28 November 1986, HWP CSS Box 22 Fld. 16; “UNO Honors Ortega and Lumpkin,” Save Our Jobs News 2 #2 (December 1986): 3, FLP Box 5 Fld. 5; Czachorski, “From the Editor’s Scratch Pad,” HN, 4 December 1986, p. 1; Galica, “Wis. Steel Workers Picket Navistar Meeting,” DC, 10 December 1986, p. A5; Czachorski, “Anti-Dump Petition May End Up in Trash Heap,” HN, 25 December 1986, p. 1; Galica, “After Five Months, Labor Troubles Move into 1987,” DC, 30 December 1986, p. A2; Jim Vallette, Waste Management Inc.: The Greenpeace Report (Greenpeace USA, May 1987), pp. 15–16; Helen Sundman, “UNO: Taking Organizing to a New Level, or Leaving the Community Behind?,” Chicago Reporter, May 1994; DJG interviews with Danny Solis, Phil Mullins, Bruce Orenstein, Mary Ellen Montes, Hazel Johnson, and Bob Ginsburg.

32. John McKnight, “John Deare and the Bereavement Counselor,” fourth annual E. F. Schumacher Lecture, October 1984, in McKnight, The Careless Society (Basic Books, 1995), pp. 3–15; McKnight and John Kretzmann, “Community Organizing in the ’80s: Toward a Post-Alinsky Agenda,” Social Policy, Winter 1984, pp. 15–17; McKnight, “A Reconsideration of the Crisis of the Welfare State,” Social Policy, Summer 1985, pp. 27–30; Christopher Chandler, “John McKnight,” Chicago Magazine, November 1985, pp. 202–7; McKnight, “Capturing Local Health Dollars,” CT, 17 February 1986, p. 11; “Things Go Better with Neighbors—Mary O’Connell Interviews John McKnight,” Salt, June 1986, pp. 4–11; McKnight, “Looking at Capacity, Not Deficiency,” in Marc Lipsitz, ed., Revitalizing Our Cities: New Approaches to Solving Urban Problems (Fund for an American Renaissance, 1986), pp. 101–6; McKnight, “Well-Being: The New Threshold to the Old Medicine,” Health Promotion 1 (1986): 77–80; McKnight, “Regenerating Community,” Social Policy, Winter 1987, pp. 54–58; Wieboldt Foundation, 1987 Annual Report [March 1988], p. 7; DJG inter-views with John McKnight and Ellen Schumer.

33. [Donald R. Moore], The Bottom Line: Chicago’s Failing Schools and How to Save Them (Designs for Change, January 1985), 126pp.; Jean Latz Griffin and Casey Banas, “Dropout Ills More Severe in Recount,” CT, 7 February 1985, p. 1; “Dismal School Dropout Study,” CT, 11 February 1985, p. 18; Banas, “Failures Climb at City Schools,” CT, 12 March 1985, p. 1; G. Alfred Hess, Jr., Dropouts from the Chicago Public Schools: An Analysis of the Classes of 1982–1983–1984 (Chicago Panel on Public School Finances, 24 April 1985), 121pp.; “School Dropout Rate Nearly 50%!” CST, 24 April 1985, p. 1; Patrick Reardon, “Board Policy Blamed for Dropout Epidemic,” CT, 25 April 1985, p. 1; Banas, “‘Average’ High School Below U.S. Par,” CT, 30 April 1985; Jean Davidson, “Push Must Come from Outside of Schools to Be Felt Within,” CT, 30 June 1985, pp. D1, D6; “Criminal Behavior Is Reinforced,” CT, 17 September 1985, p. 10; Reardon and Davidson, “Schools Outclassed in Fight with Failure,” CT, 30 September 1985, p. 1; Banas, “School Reform Attacked as ‘Minimal,’” CT, 14 November 1985, p. 1; Banas, “Dropout Theory Takes New Course,” CT, 20 March 1986, p. 1; Julie Whitmore, “A Year After: Why Reform Failed in State Education,” CCB, 21 July 1986, p. 3; Hess, “Power to the People,” CCB, 21 July 1986, p. 12; Griffin, “Parents Often the Pushers,” CT, 23 September 1986; Hess Jr. et al., “‘Where’s Room 185?’: How Schools Can Reduce Their Dropout Problem,” Education and Urban Society 19 (May 1987): 330–55; Banas, “8 Schools Found Cutting Class Time,” CT, 3 December 1986, p. 1; Linda Lenz, “Panel Charges 3 Schools Fake ‘Study Halls,’” CST, 3 December 1986, p. 3; Juanita Bratcher, “Average Student ‘Shortchanged,’ Study Reports,” CD, 3 December 1986, p. 1; William Recktenwald, “Classroom Hours Don’t Add Up at City Schools,” CT, 4 December 1986, p. 1; Bratcher, “Bad Report Irks Byrd,” CD, 4 December 1986, p. 3; Jack Houston, “Class Time Audit Set,” CT, 5 December 1986, p. 3; Bratcher, “Dropout Rate Irks Parents,” CD, 11 December 1986, p. 3; “Panel Investigates High School Drop Out Rates,” CD, 16 December 1986, p. 11; Banas, “Dropout Crisis Called Even Worse,” CT, 17 December 1986, p. 1; “How High Schools Cheat Students,” CT, 17 December 1987, p. 22; “Byrd Defends School Anti-Dropout Role,” CT, 18 January 1987, p. 2; Robert McClory, “Manford Byrd’s Report Card,” Chicago Magazine, February 1987, pp. 125–31; Donald R. Moore, “Voice and Choice in Chicago,” in William H. Clune and John F. Witte, eds., Choice and Control in American Education, Volume 2 (Falmer Press, 1990), pp. 153–98, esp. 161; G. Alfred Hess Jr., School Restructuring, Chicago Style (Corwin Press, 1991), pp. 10–14; Charles L. Kyle and Edward R. Kantowicz, Kids First—Primero Los Ninos: Chicago School Reform in the 1980s (Illinois Issues, 1992), pp. 149–50, 215–16; Hess, “Race and the Liberal Perspective in Chicago School Reform,” in Catherine Marshall, ed., The New Politics of Race and Gender (Falmer Press, 1994), pp. 85–96, esp. 88; Jon Yates, “G. Alfred Hess Jr.: 1938–2006—Educator Challenged Inequity of Resources in Chicago Schools,” CT, 30 January 2006; Marilyn Sherman, “Fred Hess Led the Way in School Reform,” Inquiry, Spring 2006; DJG interview with Don Moore; Linda Lenz, “Don Moore: Reform Leader, LSC Champion,” Catalyst Chicago, 4 September 2012; Graydon Megan, “Donald Moore, 1942–2012,” CT, 9 September 2012. See also Hess, “Global Development Training for Village Residents: The Maharashtra Village Development Project,” Ph.D. dissertation, 1980, Northwestern University.

34. Chinta Strausberg, “Teachers Leave Pre-School Fearing Asbestos,” CD, 4 December 1986, p. 3; Donald M. Schwartz, “Schools to Act on Crowding,” CST, 4 December 1986, p. 64; “Parents Threaten School Boycott,” CT, 14 December 1986, p. C19; Robert Davis, “Boycott over Asbestos Fears Thins Out Attendance at Preschool,” CT, 16 December 1986, p. C8; Roger Flaherty, “Hazard Spurs School Boycott,” CST, 16 December 1986, p. 2; Jean Davidson, “Prove School Safe or Else, Parents Say,” CT, 17 December 1986, p. C3; Casey Banas, “Alternate Wheatley Site Sought,” CT, 18 December 1986, p. C2.

Patrick Reardon and Bonita Brodt, “CHA Finances Falling Apart as Quickly as Its Buildings,” CT, 5 December 1986, p. 1; “A Neighborhood No More” and “Any Day Would Make a Great Moving Day,” CT, 9 December 1986, p. 18; Stanley Ziemba and R. C. Longworth, “Leadership Battles Keep CHA in the Basement,” CT, 11 December 1986, p. 1; Reardon and Ziemba, “‘New Day’ for CHA as Bad as Old One,” CT, 12 December 1986, p. 1; Ziemba and Davis, “Smith Resigns in CHA Feud,” CT, 8 January 1987, p. 1; Reardon and Ziemba, “Robinson Quits as CHA Chief,” CT, 17 January 1987, p. 1; Leslie Baldacci, “New CHA Team Vows to Improve Conditions,” CST, 30 January 1987, p. 20; Baldacci, “CHA Nearly Loses New $9 Million in Funding,” CST, 5 February 1987, p. 14; Jerry Thornton, “Asbestos Is Latest Problem for CHA,” CT, 20 April 1987, p. 7; Joel Kaplan and Ziemba, “Ex-Chief Smith Targeted by HUD,” CT, 1 May 1987, p. 1; Reardon, “HUD to Deny $82 Million Request, CHA Says,” CT, 28 May 1987, p. 1; “8.9 Million Cleanup Slated at 5 Projects,” CST, 14 June 1987, p. 8; Ziembra, “CHA Asbestos Removal Stalled,” CT, 8 August 1987, p. 5; Jack Houston, “CHA Is Again Seeking Asbestos Bids,” CT, 9 August 1987, p. C3; Reardon and Thornton, “CHA Asbestos Plan in Danger,” CT, 13 August 1987, p. 1; Reardon, “CHA Gets $2 Million in Program to Abate Asbestos,” CT, 25 August 1987, p. 7; Reardon and Ziembra, “Rallying Cry Turns into a Whisper,” CT, 1 September 1987, p. C1; Reardon and Ziembra, “CHA Tenant Control Project OK’d,” CT, 23 September 1987, p. C6; Baldacci, “U.S. Extends CHA Asbestos-Pact Deadline,” CST, 1 January 1988, p. 24; Baldacci, “CHA Asbestos Removal to Start,” CST, 10 March 1988, p. 10; William E. Schmidt, “Bold Plans for Curing Sick Housing,” NYT, 11 October 1988; Alton Miller, Harold Washington: the Mayor, the Man (Bonus Books, 1989), pp. 306–15, esp. 307. See also Andrew H. Malcolm, “Study Portrays Chicago as a City That’s Divided,” NYT, 5 October 1986, p. 38, and John McCormick, “Chicago Bounces Back,” Newsweek, 6 October 1986, pp. 42–43.

35. DJG interviews with Asif Agha, Chin See Ming, Sheila Quinlan, Sheila Jager, and Jerry Kellman; Sheila Miyoshi Jager, “Narrating the Nation: Students, Romance and the Politics of Resistance in South Korea,” Ph.D. dissertation, University of Chicago, December 1994, p. viii; Florence Hamlish Levinsohn, Harold Washington: A Political Biography (Chicago Review Press, 1983); Kirkus Reviews, 1 November 1983; Bechetta Jackson, “Florence Hamlish Levinsohn, Writer,” CT, 30 October 1998; Kellman in Jonathan Kaufman, “For Obama, Chicago Days Honed Tactics,” WSJ, 21 April 2008, p. A1.

36. DJG interviews with Sheila Jager and Michael Dees. Years later, Barack disagreed with Sheila’s account: “it’s not accurate that I asked her to marry me.” Sheila’s younger brother David would later write that their father Bernd believed that humans “live in a dual cosmos in which one’s own perspective is always countered and complemented by the different perspective of one’s neighbor” and that life was “a never-ending cultural task of building bridges.” David Jager, “Conversing with My Father,” Collection du CIRP 1 (2007): 12–16, at 15–16.

37. “How to Organize Friends and Influence People—Salt Interviews Greg Galluzzo,” Salt, June 1983, pp. 21–25, esp. 24; Greg Galluzzo 1987 planning diary, Galluzzo Papers [GGP]; Gamaliel Foundation, “Community Participation and Leadership Program,” [9 January 1987], Greg Galluzzo to Stewart Wagner, 21 January 1987, Gamaliel Foundation Annual Report: 1986–1987, 10 June 1987, Gamaliel Papers; Galluzzo in Patti Wolter, “Consumer’s Guide to Organizer Training,” TNW, October–November 1991, pp. 16–21, esp. 17, and in Ben Whitford, “Coal and Clear Skies,” Plenty Magazine, 31 October 2008; Galluzzo, “Gamaliel and the Barack Obama Connection,” Organizing #1, December 2008, p. 3 (updated 2009); Galluzzo interview with Don Elmer, January 2009; DJG interviews with Greg Galluzzo, Mary Gonzales, Peter Martinez, Kevin Limbeck, Ellen Schumer, and Todd Dietterle; Tina Sfondeles, “Activist Who Taught Obama to Be Community Organizer Is Retiring,” CST, 2 June 2013. See also Galluzzo, “Church-Based Model of Community Organization,” Upturn, October–November 1983, pp. 3–4, and Galluzzo, “What Is a Community Organization,” SVPSB, 9 September 1984, pp. 3–4.

38. Linda Lenz, “Wheatley Parents Resume Boycott,” CST, 6 January 1987, p. 52; Jon Jeter, “Parent Pullout Set at Wheatley in Asbestos Fight,” CST, 9 January 1987, p. 28; Lenz, “Wheatley Boycott Ends,” CST, 21 January 1987, p. 10; untitled photo, CT, 22 January 1987, p. C3; People for Community Recovery, January and February 1987 Activity Reports, esp. 19 February, CFP Box 30 Fld. 368; Lucille R. Dobbins to Olga Davidson, 6 February 1987, HWP DS Box 2 Fld. 2; Casey Bukro, “38 Carcinogens Found in Lake Calumet Air,” CT, 12 February 1987, p. C3; “Waste Management’s Earnings Up for Quarter,” DC, 20 February 1987, p. A2; DJG interviews with Bruce Orenstein, Mary Ellen Montes, and Hazel Johnson.

39. “Julian Bond Narrates ‘Eyes on the Prize’ with Dr. King as Pivotal Force on WTTW,” CD, 13 January 1987, p. 15; Jack E. Wilkinson, “An Unvarnished Study of Dr. King,” CD, 15 January 1987, p. 40; Clifford Terry, “‘Prize’ Series a Masterful Telling of Painful Times,” CT, 21 January 1987; DJG, Bearing the Cross: Martin Luther King, Jr., and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (Morrow, 1986), esp. pp. 431–525; Basil Talbott Jr., “Raby’s Experience Helps Washington,” CST, 13 March 1983, p. 20; Robert McClory, “The Activist,” CT Magazine, 17 April 1983, pp. 26ff.; Manuel Galvan, “Al Raby to Head City Commission on Civil Rights,” CT, 16 January 1985, p. A3; Wes Smith, “Rush Street Area Trying to Survive Its Popularity,” CT, 3 October 1985, p. 1; Patrick Reardon, “Too Proud to Trade Welfare for Minimum Wage,” CT, 1 December 1985, p. D3; Galvan, “An Insider Looks Out for Rights,” CT, 2 January 1986, p. 1; Chinta Strausberg, “Mayor Names Grimshaw to IGA Position,” CD, 21 July 1986, p. 20; Wieboldt Foundation 1987 Annual Report [March 1988], p. 15; Wieboldt Foundation 1987 Form 990-PF, Part XVI, 13 May 1988; Grimshaw’s 1989 interview with Betty Brown-Chappell; Steve Perkins, “A Personal Remembrance of the Remarkable Life of My Dear Friend Al Raby,” 19 June 2004, esp. pp. 5, 23, 29, 32; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, p. 47; John P. Martin, “Sarmina Described as Smart, Fair, Ambitious,” Philadelphia Inquirer, 19 February 2012; Pauline Dubkin Yearwood, “Long and Winding Road,” Chicago Jewish News, 16 March 2012; DJG interviews with John McKnight, Gwendolyn LaRoche Rogers, Steve Perkins, Patty Novick, Judy Stevens, Wayne Whalen, Jane Ramsey, and Jacky Grimshaw.

40. Maria B. Cerda, “Update on LTV Activities,” 16 September 1986, HWP DS Box 5 Fld. 12; Larry Galica, “LTV Pension Takeover Set,” DC, 13 January 1987, p. A1; Galica, “LTV Pension Plan Takeover Reaction Mixed,” DC, 16 January 1987, p. A3; Robert Bergsvik, “LTV Pension Hearing Set for Tomorrow,” DC, 22 January 1987, p. A3; C. D. Matthews, “Reaction Is Mixed to New USX Pact,” DC, 24 January 1987, p. A3; Galica, “Labor Dispute Ends,” DC, 2 February 1987, p. A1; Galica, “Steel Poured at So. Works,” DC, 17 February 1987, p. A1; Galica, “Steel Supply Workers Waiting,” DC, 23 February 1987, p. A1; USWA Local 1033, Monthly Membership Meeting Minutes, esp. 25 February 1987, p. 2, and 26 May 1987, p. 6; Galica, “LTV Workers Fight for Pensions,” DC, 3 March 1987, p. A1; Galica, “Protection of Benefits Eyed,” DC, 30 March 1987, p. A2; David Moberg, “The Trouble in Steel City,” CR, 9 April 1987; Galica, “Tentative LTV Agreement Is Reached on Lost Benefits,” DC, 10 April 1987; “LTV Workers to Seek Federal Aid,” 21 April 1987, p. A1; Galica, “LTV Pension Aid Pledged,” DC, 12 May 1987, p. A1; Galica, “LTV Workers Feel Hassled Over Pensions,” DC, 15 May 1987, p. A3; “LTV Won’t Seek Court Help to Avoid Current Contract,” and Galica, “LTV to Honor Current Contract,” DC, 18 May 1987, p. A1; “LTV Pension Protection Extended 4 Months,” DC, 21 May 1987, p. A3; Galica, “LTV Talks Shift to Home Front,” DC, 2 June 1987, p. A1; Galica, “LTV Pact Lacks Local Support,” DC, 27 June 1987, p. A2; “LTV Pact OK’d,” DC, 7 August 1987, p. A1; DJG interviews with Maury Richards and Jerry Kellman.

Raymond Coffey and John Camper, “Washington Wins at Wire,” and Jon Margolis, “Mayor’s Tight Win Just Half the Battle,” CT, 25 February 1987, p. 1; Gary Rivlin, “Mr. Machine,” CR, 2 April 1987.

41. DJG interviews with Dan Lee, Adrienne Jackson, and Emil Jones Jr.; Juanita Bratcher, “Educational Potpourri,” CD, 7 May 1986, p. 4; Manuel Galvan, “Frost Successor Wins Approval,” CT, 22 November

1986; Galvan and Charles Mount, “Successor to Frost Is In—For Now,” and Mount, “Frost Clear to Vote on Successor,” CT, 27 November 1986; Galvan, “Frost’s Successor Sworn In,” CT, 2 December 1986; Fred Marc Biddle, “10 Vie to Replace Frost as Alderman,” CT, 19 February 1987; Biddle, “Mayor May Decide Race in 34th Ward,” CT, 6 April 1987; Obama, DFMF, p. 223; Bernard Schoenberg, “Don’t Expect Many Niceties in Keyes-Obama Contest,” SJR, 22 August 2004, p. 15; Jones in 93rd Illinois General Assembly, 8 November 2004, pp. 11–13, in Christopher Wills and Deanna Bellandi (AP), “Obama Learned Politics Helping the Poor,” 20 February 2008, on “The Making of Obama,” Nightline, ABC, 25 February 2008, in Letta Tayler and Keith Herbert, “Obama Forged Path as Chicago Community Organizer,” Newsday, 2 March 2008, p. A6, in Abdon M. Pallasch, “Grooming a Politician: Jones Took Obama, the ‘Pushy’ Organizer, Under His Wing,” CST, 24 August 2008, p. A14, in “They Met Obama When,” CT, 16 November 2008, p. 19, and in David Smallwood, “Two Guys Who Laid It on the Line,” N’Digo Profiles, December 2008, pp. 14–15.

42. Anthony Van Zanten, “Worship at Pullman CRC: An Interview with Rick Williams,” Reformed Worship, March 1988; Kenan Heise, “Cecil Partee, Pioneer in Politics,” CT, 17 August 1994; “Cecil Partee, 73, Illinois Politician,” NYT, 19 August 1994; Williams in Kalari Girtley, “How Obama Got His Start,” HPH, 14 February 2007, p. 14; DJG interviews with Rick Williams, Adrienne Jackson, Tyrone Partee, John Webster, and Alonzo C. Pruitt. See also “Asque Named New Roseland Director,” CD, 8 April 1986, p. 2, and Patty Pensa, “Former Roseland YMCA Finds New Life as Affordable Housing,” CT, 15 January 2010.

43. Larry Galica, “Steelworkers Face Dim Holiday,” DC, 26 November 1986, p. A1; Beth Donaldson (Housing Commissioner) to Harold Washington, “Reverend Bernard Taylor and the Trinity Roseland Organizations,” 13 December 1985, DS Box 8 Fld. 9; Bruce A. Gottschall (NHS) to Benjamin Reyes, “Meeting with City Departments Regarding NHS Roseland Development,” 21 October 1985, HWP DSBox 6 Fld. 15; Benjamin Reyes to Harold Washington, “Departmental Monthly Reports,” 14 March 1986, HWP DS Box 2 Fld. 18; Minutes, NHS Central Board Meeting, 20 May 1986, and “Calendar of NHS Events,” 4 June 1986, HWP DS Box 13 Fld. 27; “Housing Group Gets $200,000 Lift,” CST, 9 June 1986, p. 16; Celeste Busk, “Roseland Ready for Revitalization,” CST, 13 June 1986, p. H26; Steve Kerch, “Housing Rehab Plan Set for Troubled Roseland,” CT, 29 June 1986, p. M1; Lorenzo Ealy (Acting President, GRO) to Jackie Shad, 17 July 1986, CFP Box 17 Fld. 207; Minutes, NHS Central Board Meeting, 16 September and 18 November 1986, NHS Chicago, Annual Report 1986, and “NHS Resource Development Campaign ’87,” 12 March 1987, all HWP DS Box 13, Flds. 26 and 27; M. W. Newman, “Execs Risk Millions on Housing,” CST, 12 April 1987, pp. 1, 34; DJG interviews with Ellen Benjamin and Salim Al Nurridin. See also William Peterman, Neighborhood Planning and Community-Based Development (Sage Publications, 2000), pp. 129–51.

44. Henry Locke, “Petitions Seeks Bus Shelters in Roseland,” CD, 30 April 1986, p. 8; Madeline Talbott, “Organizing Plan . . . Chicago ACORN, 1 November 1986–30 June 1987,” IAP 2001-111 Box 2 Fld. 32; Talbott, “Chicago ACORN Report & Plan, YE/YB ’88,” 2–3 January 1988, IAP Box 2 Fld. 62; Henry Locke, “City Colleges Open Doors to Train Journeymen Here,” CD, 30 September 1985, p. 6; Juanita Bratcher, “Ministers Tackle Homeless Problem in Roseland Area,” CD, 28 January 1987, p. 3; Bratcher, “Ministers Don’t Bank on Beverly,” CD, 31 January 1987, p. 3; Bratcher, “Clerics Picket Beverly Bank,” CD, 3 February 1987, p. 3; Bratcher, “Ministers Will Bank on Beverly,” CD, 28 February

1987, p. 1; Bratcher, "Demand Jobs for Youth at Evergreen," CD, 7 April 1987; Susan Chandler, "Battling the Color of Money," CST, 23 July 1989, p. 55; Chandler, "Bankers Paint Two Pictures of Roseland," CST, 24 July 1989, p. 37; Obama, DFMF, pp. 159–62; Sampson interview with Julieanne Richardson, Maraniss, BOTS, pp. 527–29, 603; DJG interviews with Alonzo Pruitt, Nadyne Griffin, Al Sampson, Alvin Love, and Barack Obama.

45. Richard Philbrick, "Religious News Notes," CT, 6 April 1972, p. W10; Jeremiah A. Wright Jr., "Buying Co-Op Food," CT, 8 February 1981, p. A2; Sam Smith, "Food Co-ops: Faster, Fresher, Cheaper," CT, 14 May 1981, p. A2; Wright, "Black Church Renewal," in Trinity United Church of Christ, Perspectives: A View from Within. A Compendium Text for Churchwide Study (Trinity United Church of Christ, [September] 1982), 187pp., pp. 32–42, esp. 35–37; Dempsey J. Travis, An Autobiography of Black Politics (Urban Research Press, 1987), pp. 581–83; Roger Wilkins, "Keeping the Faith," Frontline, WGBH, 16 June 1987; Daniel Ruth, "Chicago Minister Inspires 'Faith,'" CST, 16 June 1987, p. 50; James McBride, "Ghetto," WP, 16 June 1987, p. F2; Tracey Robinson, "Community Links Pay Off," CST, 6 May 1988, pp. 7–8; Wright, "The Significance of Harold Washington," in Henry J. Young, ed., The Black Church and the Harold Washington Story (Wyndham Hall Press, 1988), pp. 1–9, esp. p. 2; Audra D. Strong, "Message Remade to Foster Black Faith," CT, 26 May 1989; Shirley L. Malcom, "Reclaiming Our Past," Journal of Negro Education 59 (Summer 1990): 246–59, at 257; Wright, "A Black Congregation in a White Church: Trinity United Church of Christ, Chicago," in Robert L. Burt, ed., Good News in Growing Churches (Pilgrim Press, 1990), pp. 37–63, esp. 43–45; Wright, "An Underground Theology," in Dwight N. Hopkins, ed., Black Faith and Public Talk: Critical Essays on James H. Cone's Black Theology and Black Power (Baylor University Press, 1991), pp. 96–102, esp. 96–97, 99–100; "Chicago's New School Boss Starts March 25," Jet, 29 January 1981, p. 15; Jini Kilgore Ross, ed., What Makes You So Strong? Sermons of Joy and Strength from Jeremiah A. Wright, Jr. (Judson Press, 1993), esp. pp. 97–109; Obama, DFMF, pp. 272–74, 280–87; Julia M. Speller, "Unashamedly Black and Unapologetically Christian: One Congregation's Quest for Meaning and Belonging," Ph.D. dissertation, University of Chicago, December 1996, esp. pp. 2, 16–17, 68–69, 77, 151, 157n13, 162, 197–99; Wright's interviews with Julieanna Richardson, 2002, John Kupper, 2004, and Arlen Passa, 2009; Obama in E. Janet Wright, "Obama for Illinois," Trumpet, February 2004, pp. 30–32; Julia M. Speller, Walkin' the Talk: Keeping Faith in Africentric Congregations (Pilgrim Press, 2005), pp. 72–102; Wright, "Growing the African American Church Through Worship and Preaching," in Carlyle F. Stewart, ed., Growing the African American Church (Abingdon Press, 2006), pp. 63–81, esp. 72; Many A. Brachear and Bob Sector, "Race Is Sensitive Subtext in Campaign," CT, 6 February 2007, p. 1; Wright in Erin Meyer, "Where Obama Developed His Audacity of Hope," HPH, 14 February 2007, p. 20, and in Ryan Lizza, "The Agitator," TNR, 19 March 2007; Obama's 2004 interview with Cathleen Falsani; Obama in Mendell, Obama: From Promise to Power, p. 77; Obama in Marni Goldberg, "Obama Urges Democrats to Embrace Faith," CT, 29 June 2006, p. 3, in Bob Sector and John McCormick, "Portrait of a Pragmatist," CT, 30 March 2007, and in Ariel Sabar, "Barack Obama: Putting Faith Out Front," CSM, 16 July 2007, p. 1; Wright on Bill Moyers Journal, 25 April 2008; Wright, A Sankofa Moment: The History of Trinity United Church of Christ (Saint Paul Press, 2010), esp. pp. 43, 48–55, 61, 64, 72, 91, 94, 144–45, 171; DJG interviews with Adrienne Jackson, Alvin Love, Lacey K. Curry, Jeremiah A. Wright Jr., Donita Powell Greene, and Rick Williams; Carl A. Grant and Shelby J. Grant, The Moment: Barack

Obama, Jeremiah Wright, and the Firestorm at Trinity United Church of Christ (Rowman & Littlefield, 2013), esp. pp. 94–99, 104–9.

Also see Trevor Jensen, “Rev. Kenneth B. Smith Sr.: 1931–2008,” CT, 23 January 2008, and Bruce Lambert, “Reuben A. Sheares, 58, a Pastor and a Leader in Church of Christ,” NYT, 16 July 1992. On the 1981 appointment of Ruth Love rather than Manford Byrd, see Robert McClory, “A Look at Love’s Labors,” Illinois Issues, April 1983, pp. 27–31, Ben Joravsky, “A Kind of Death,” CT, 9 February 1992, Frances Ratliff Stewart, “The Urban School Superintendent: A Case Study of Ruth Love in Chicago,” D.Ed. dissertation, Northern Illinois University, December 1996, and especially her three interviews with Love, Byrd, and Tribune education reporter Casey Banas at pp. 217–73 of that volume. On J. H. Jackson and Olivet church, see Clarence Page, “Powerful, Paradoxical,” CT, 11 November 1983, p. 45, and Jerry Thornton, “Influential Minister Is Honored,” CT, 19 February 1990, pp. II-1, 4.

46. Robert McClory, “The Holy Terror of St. Sabina’s,” CR, 16 November 1989; McClory, “Black and Catholic Are Joint Ventures at Chicago Parish,” NCR, 13 March 1998, p. 5; Rob Csillag, “Chicago’s Renegade Priest,” Toronto Star, 8 November 2003; McClory, Radical Disciple (Lawrence Hill Books, 2010), esp. p. 139; Evan Osnos, “Father Mike,” TNY, 29 February 2016; DJG, Bearing the Cross, pp. 498–99; DJG interviews with Mike Pfleger, Jeremiah Wright, and Tommy West.

47. Janny Scott, A Singular Woman (Riverhead Books, 2011), p. 273, Greg Galluzzo 1987 planning diary, GGP; Perry H. Hutchinson to Harold Washington, 1 December 1986, HWP COF Box 29 Fld. 53; Larry J. B. Houston, “Hits Ald. Hutchinson,” CD, 19 January 1987, p. 15; Juanita Bratcher, “Ald. Hutchinson Pulls for School Custodian,” CD, 31 January 1987, p. 6; Hutchinson to Jesse L. Jackson, 11 March 1987, HWP COF Box 29 Fld. 53; Robert Davis, “Hurdles Face 9th Ward Incumbent,” CT, 16 March 1987; Chinta Strausberg, “Mayor to Dedicate Roseland Job Center,” CD, 23 March 1987, p. 3; “Mayor’s Schedule—Monday, March 23, 1987,” “Briefing Notes, Roseland Community Visit,” 7pp., “Mayor Washington Remarks,” Roseland Vocational Training/Job Placement Assistance Center Ribboncutting, 23 March 1987, and Rich Redmond, “Roseland Community Visit and Tour,” 25 March 1987, all HWP SES Box 11 Fld. 9; People for Community Recovery, “March [1987] Activity Report,” CFP Box 30 Fld. 368; “Break Ground in Roseland,” CD, 1 April 1987, p. 4; Ben Joravsky, “Mystery Zoning,” CR, 5 May 1988; Obama, DFMF, pp. 180–81, 223–26; David L. Scheiner, Hyde Park Associates in Medicine, “To Whom It May Concern,” 29 May 2008 (attesting that he has been Obama’s physician “since March 23, 1987”); DJG interviews with Sheila Jager, Greg Galluzzo, Johnnie Owens, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Salim Al Nurridin, Marlene Dillard, Adrienne Jackson, Betty Garrett, Eva Sturgies, and Tommy West. See also Joanne Gabbin et al., “Black Rap,” Negro American Literature Forum 5 (Autumn 1971): 80–84, 108–14 (meaningless student chatter including Salim Al Nurridin); an April 1984 Chicago ACORN sign-in sheet including “Dr. Omar Faruq” as well as Imam S. T. Ibrahim of 33 E. 111th Place, IAP Box 3 Fld. 79; and especially Monica Copeland, “Gangs’ Spread Sends Chill Through Far South Side,” CT, 1 June 1992, citing “Sheikh Al-Faruqi Muhammad, who has lived in the area 20 years” and has fathered twelve children.

48. Larry Galica, “Former Wisc. Steel Workers Planning Rally,” DC, 26 March 1987, p. A3; Merrill Gozner, “Steel Mill’s Ghost Haunts Navistar,” CT, 29 March 1987, p. B1; Galica, “Wisc. Steel Workers Rally,” DC, 30 March 1987, p. A1; Galica, “Lawsuit Could Begin in Summer,” DC, 31 March 1987, p. A3; “Wisc. Steel Wait Is Continuing,” DC, 14 September 1987, p. A2; “Two Groups Fight New Landfills,” CST, 3 April 1987, p. 38; Robert Bergsvik, “Waste Permit Applications Almost Ready,” DC, 13 April 1987, p. A1; Patrick Barry, “Can Garbage Bring Back Steel City Jobs?,” TNW, May 1987, pp. 15–17; C. D. Matthews, “Waste Reactor to Be Built,” DC, 2 May 1987, p. A1, Greg Galluzzo 1987 planning piary, GGP; “Harold Washington for Mayor,” CT, 29 March 1987; “Mayor’s Schedule—Tuesday, April 7, 1987,” and Rich Redmond, “Altgeld Gardens Campaign Tour—Election Day,” 13 April 1987, HWP SES Box 13 Fld. 3; Robert Davis and Terry Wilson, “Washington Sweeps to 2nd Term,” and “Washington’s Showdown Victory,” CT, 8 April 1987; Dirk Johnson, “With Victory in Chicago Mayor Finally in Control,” NYT, 9 April 1987; Gary Rivlin, “Enemies of the People,” CR, 7 May 1987; Ray Hanania, “Shaw Learns, Listens to Voters,” CST, 7 September 1987, p. 7; Melvin G. Holli and Paul M. Green, Bashing Chicago Traditions: Harold Washington’s Last Campaign (Wm. B. Eerdmans, 1989), esp. pp. 111–14; William B. Crawford and Maurice Possley, “Alderman, 19 Others Indicted,” CT, 14 April 1987; Crawford and Possley, “Ald. Hutchinson Pleads Innocent to Swindle Charges,” CT, 15 April 1987; Crawford, “U.S. Outlines Its Case Against Ex-Alderman,” CT, 15 March 1988; Linnet Myers, “Former Alderman Convicted of Fraud,” CT, 20 May 1988; John Gorman, “Ex-Alderman Gets 11 Years for Fraud,” CT, 20 August 1988; Gorman, “Ex-Alderman Is Told to Pay Back Bribes,” CT, 29 September 1989; George Papajohn, “Former Ald. Perry Hutchinson Dies While Serving Prison Term,” CT, 2 January 1992. On Robert Shaw and his brother William, see especially Ben Joravsky, “By Any Means Necessary,” CR, 31 October 2002. On Cuyahoga Wrecking, also see Scott Glover and Luisa Yanez, “Wrecking Company Owner to Surrender,” Sun Sentinel, 21 May 1997.

49. Cheryl Devall, “Status of Black Catholics Slowly Moving Up,” CT, 20 June 1986; “87 People to Watch in 1987,” CT, 7 January 1987; Nancy Ryan, “Black Catholic Conference to Study 10 Key Issues,” CT, 23 January 1987; Devall, “Black Catholics Convene to Reassess Role, Needs,” CT, 13 March 1987; Devall, “Black Catholics Discuss Role,” CT, 15 March 1987; Devall, “Black Catholics Hold Congress,” CT, 22 May 1987; Devall, “Blacks Seek a Role in Catholic Church,” CT, 29 May 1987; Cathy Green and Monique Irvin, “The National Black Catholic Congress,” In a Word 5 (July–August 1987): 2–11; Edward K. Braxton, “The National Black Catholic Congress: An Event of the Century,” Josephite Herald, Summer 1987, as reprinted in U.S. Catholic Historian 7 (Spring–Summer 1988): 301–6; Carol Norris Green, “A Postcard from Barack,” Catholic San Francisco, 30 January 2009, p. 13; Jason Horowitz, “The Catholic Roots of Obama’s Activism,” NYT, 23 March 2014, p. A1; DJG interview with Cynthia Norris.

Gregory A. Galluzzo to Margo Dunlap (Borg-Warner Foundation), 9 February 1987, Galluzzo to Gwendolyn Jordan, 5 May 1987, Galluzzo to Ellen J. Benjamin (Borg-Warner), 16 May 1987, Techny Towers to Gamaliel Foundation, Invoice, 27 May 1987, Gamaliel Foundation, “Support for Community Lead-Organizers-in-Training,” n.d. [mid 1987], 13pp., Gamaliel Papers; David T. Kindler, “My Awesome Inaugural Adventure,” January 2009, DTKindler.com; DJG interviews with Margaret Bagby, Linda Randle, Renee Brereton, Greg Galluzzo, Mary Gonzales, Peter Martinez, Phil Mullins, Mike Kruglik, Mary Ellen Montes, and David Kindler.

50. Daniel Lee and Barack H. Obama to Harold Washington, 4 May 1987 (page 2 of the proposal is missing), and Obama to Luz Martinez, 7 May 1987, HWP CSS Box 10 Fld. 17; G. Alfred Hess Jr., “Schools Need Parent Involvement,” CT, 16 March 1987, p. 10; Jack Houston, “City Class of ’85 Nearly Cut in Half by Dropouts,” CT, 30 April 1987, p. 1; Tracey Robinson and Tim Padgett, “School Boss Sees ‘Disaster’ in Plans to Scrap Board,” and Linda Lenz, “’85 Dropout Rate Topped 50% at 29 City High Schools,” CST, 22 May 1987, pp. 8 and 22; Casey Banas, “Early Marking Deadline Spurs School Absenteeism,” CT, 2 June 1987; Hess and James L. Greer, “Bending the Twig: The Elementary Years and Dropout Rates in the Chicago Public Schools,” Chicago Panel, 30 July 1987, 70pp.; Jean Latz Griffin, “Dropout Rate Tied to Early Failures,” CT, 31 July 1987, p. 1; Daniel Lee et al. to Harold Washington, 12 June 1987, HWP COF Box 27 Fld. 12; Delores T. Woods to Jane Ramsey, 29 June 1987, HWP COF Box 27 Fld. 27; Kyle and Kantowicz, Kids First, pp. 70, 155, 216–18; DJG interviews with Bruce Orenstein, Danny Solis, Nadyne Griffin, Ann West, Rosa Thomas, Eddie Knox, Luz Martinez, Jacky Grimshaw, Jane Ramsey, and Hal Baron. A quarter century later, Luz Martinez would have no recall of Obama, though she did remember DCP’s name. On Kari Moe, see her 1990 interview with Betty Brown-Chappell and her 1994 interview in Krumholz and Clavel, eds., Reinventing Cities, pp. 95–100.

On the initial 21 October 1986 Education Summit, which the Tribune did not cover, see William S. McKersie, “Philanthropy’s Paradox: Chicago School Reform,” Educational Evaluation and Policy Analysis 15 (Summer 1993): 109–28, at 123, Dan A. Lewis and Kathryn Nakagawa, Race and Educational Reform in the American Metropolis (SUNY Press, 1995), p. 82, and Jim Carl, “Harold Washington and Chicago’s Schools Between Civil Rights and the Decline of the New Deal Consensus,” History of Education Quarterly 41 (Fall 2001): 311–43, at 332. The three additional signatories on the 12 June letter were Father Alan Scheible (not “Schieble” as in the letter) of St. Willibrord, who died in 2000, Rev. Samuel Fluker of the House of Inspiration Church of God in Christ, who died in 2006, and a Rev. “John Murphy” of True Right Missionary Baptist Church on 95th Street, whose correct name may have been Rev. Willie J. Murphy and who is also deceased. See Shereice Garrett, My Life Is in God’s Hands (Trafford, 2012), Chapter One.

51. DJG interviews with Cathy Askew, Stephanie Askew, Dan Lee, Marlene Dillard, Yvonne Lloyd, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Aletha Strong Gibson, Ann West, Betty Garrett, Eva Sturgies, Aurie Pennick, Margaret Bagby, Johnnie Owens, Rosa Thomas, Carolyn Wortham, Ernest Powell, and Emil Jones; Richard J. Kaplan (MacArthur) e-mail to DJG; Gamaliel Foundation Annual Report: 1986–1987, 10 June 1987, p. 5, Gamaliel Papers; Obama to Anne Hallett, 26 January 1988, Wieboldt Foundation Papers; Carolyn Wortham YouTube video, 21 May 2007; Lloyd in Sharon Cohen (AP), “Barack Obama Straddles Different Worlds,” 14 December 2007, in Janice Malone, “Nashville Resident Recalls Senator Obama Always Destined for Success,” Tennessee Tribune, 17–23 January 2008, p. A1, and in Michael Cass, “Obama’s Rise Is No Surprise to Nashville Woman Who Worked with Him,” Tennessean, 5 October 2012; Bagby in Dahleen Glanton and Katherine Skiba, “Community Organizers Who Taught Obama the Ropes,” CT, 20 January 2013; Edward McClelland, “When Barack Obama Partied,” NBCChicago.com, 15 January 2013; Obama, remarks at Brooks College Preparatory Academy, Chicago, 19 February 2015 (“the car didn’t heat up real well”). See also Isabel Wilkerson, “The Tallest Fence,” NYT, 21 June 1992. On Chicago philanthropy, the essential overview source is Robert Matthews Johnson, The First Charity: How Philanthropy Can Contribute to Democracy in America (Seven Locks Press, July 2008), esp. p. 84 (“in Chicago . . . there is more understanding and support among funders about organizing than anywhere else”).

52. Greg Galluzzo, 1987 planning diary, GGP; Gwendolyn J. Jordan (CRS) to Galluzzo, 1 June 1987, Gamaliel Papers; Obama in Marc Strassman’s August 1995 Book Channel interview, in Monica Mitchell, “Son Finds Inspiration in the Dreams of His Father,” HPH, 23 August 1995, in his 2001 interview with Julieanna Richardson, in Scott Fornek, “‘I’ve Got a Competitive Nature,’” CST, 3 October 2004, p. 12, in Ronald Roach, “Obama Rising,” BIHE, 7 October 2004, pp. 20–23, and on The Friday Night Show with Bob Sirott, WTTW.com, 3 December 2004; Obama, TAOH, p. 206 (“my resolve to lead a public life”); Obama on CNBC with Tim Russert, 18 November 2006; Obama, remarks at the National Prayer Breakfast, 5 February 2009, Public Papers of the Presidents 2009 Vol. I, p. 46; Stanley Ann Dunham, “Application for Passport by Mail,” 27 March 1986, DOS FOIA Release; Ann Dunham to Alice Dewey, 3 November 1987, and Ann Dunham résumé, n.d. (ca. 1993), Dunham Papers; S. Ann Dunham, Surviving Against the Odds (Duke University Press, 2009), pp. 280, 300; Julia Suryakusuma in Proditia Sabarini, “Ann Dunham Soetoro: Love for Indonesia,” Jakarta Post, 17 March 2010; Scott, A Singular Woman, pp. 267–70; Michael R. Dove, “Dreams from His Mother,” NYT, 11 August 2009; Dove, book review of Surviving Against the Odds, Anthropological Quarterly 83 (Spring 2010): 449–54, esp. 451; Jeff Chang, “Maya Soetoro Ng: Q & A,” Vibe, September 2007; Dan Boylan, “Obama’s Sister Goes Campaigning,” Midweek, 12 September 2007; Sudhin Thanawala (AP), “Sister: Hawaii’s Cultural Mix Laid Basis for Political Career,” 14 February 2008; Anna Scott, “Senator’s Sister Fills in the Blanks,” Sarasota Herald-Tribune, 18 July 2008, p. A1; Stuart Coleman, “Tea with Barack Obama’s Sister,” Salon, 23 October 2008; Evan Drellich, “BU Prof Recalls College Road Trips with Obama,” Pipe Dream, 4 November 2008; John Nichols, “Friend of Barack,” Madison Capital Times, 14 January 2009; Obama, Q&A with Student Journalists, 27 September 2010, and remarks at DNC Rally, 28 September 2010, Public Papers of the Presidents 2010 Volume II, pp. 1435, 1455; Meredith Turits, “Maya Soetoro-Ng,” Glamour.com, 20 January 2013; DJG interviews with Greg Galluzzo, Mary Gonzales, Kevin Limbeck, Nancy Jones, Lynn Feekin, Sheila Jager, Tyrone Partee, Asif Agha, Charles Payne, Mike Dees, and Douglas Glick; Maureen O’Donnell and Jon Seidel, “Barack Obama’s Great-Uncle Dies at 89,” CST, 12 August 2014. “Obama’s Mother Stayed in Pakistan for 5 Years,” Daily Waqt (Lahore), 31 August 2008, badly misstates the duration of Ann’s 1986–87 work but is nonetheless instructive.

53. People for Community Recovery (PCR), April, May, and June 1987 Activity Reports, and “Grantee Fiscal and Progress Report,” n.d. (ca. 30 June 1987), CFP Box 30 Fld. 368; Jim Vallette, Waste Management, Inc.: The Greenpeace Report (Greenpeace USA, May 1987); Casey Bukro, “Firm Buying Time for Landfill,” CT, 28 May 1987, p. C6; Deborah Nelson, “Our Toxic Trap: Crisis on the Far South Side,” CST, 31 May 1987, p. 1; Nelson, “Waste Pits Poisoning Air, Water,” CST, 1 June 1987, p. 1; Nelson, “San. Dist. Cancer Rate Is Ignored,” and “They Can’t Escape Sludge Stench,” CST, 2 June 1987, pp. 1, 11; Nelson, “‘Hotspot’ Air Smells, Kills,” CST, 3 June 1987, p. 10; Nelson, “No Haste to Clean Up Waste,” “Pollution Suits Often Caught in Legal Muck,” and John Krukowski, “Illinois Senate Panel Asks Toxic Waste Probe,” CST, 4 June 1987, pp. 10–11; Nelson, “Tackling the Pollution Scourge,” and Bob Olmstead, “4 Area Residents Sue San. Dist.,” CST, 5 June 1987, p. 47; “Sanitary District Hit with Lawsuit,” CT, 5 June 1987, p. D2; People for Community Recovery, “COME!!! PROTEST!!!” flyer, 11 June 1987, CFP Box 30 Fld. 368; Olmstead, “San. Dist. Pledges to Probe Pollution,” CST, 12 June 1987, p. 3; Bukro, “Southeast Side Fights to Shut Toxic Dumps,” CT, 14 June 1987, p. C1; Roger Flaherty, “McHenry County Villages Battle Plans for Landfill,” CST, 17 June 1987, p. 7; Bukro, “Toxic Sites Called Not That Bad,” CT, 23 June 1987, p. C3; Fred Marc Biddle, “City Begins Clean-Up of Huge Illegal Dump,” CT, 25 June 1987, p. C3; Jacquelyn Heard, “Study Aims to Halt Ill Effects of Plant,” CT, 26 June 1987, p. C8; “Presentation by Waste Management of Illinois to City of Chicago,” 30 June 1987, HWP COS Box 71 Fld. 2; [James Landing.] Lake Calumet Study Committee, “Update,” 30 June 1987, Landing Papers (JLP) Box 39; Marian Byrnes and Hazel Johnson to Richard Carlson (IEPA), 30 June 1987, Robert Ginsburg Papers (RGP); Robert Bergsvik, “Region Waste Wars Rage On,” DC, 6 July 1987, p. A1; Bergsvik, “Waste Incidents Spark Fears,” DC, 7 July 1987, p. A1; Bergsvik, “Waste Worries Head for 21st Century,” DC, 8 July 1987, p. A2, Richard Carlson to Marian Byrnes and Hazel Johnson, 8 July 1987, RGP; Tim Padgett and Nelson, “Waste Site Health Review Demanded,” CST, 9 July 1987, p. 42; Bukro, “Calumet City Residents Urge Freeze on New Permit for Landfill,” CT, 9 July 1987, p. C7; Bergsvik, “Landfill Complaints Aired,” DC, 9 July 1987, p. A1; Bergsvik, “2 State Lawmakers Back Permit Freeze for SCA Burner,” DC, 11 July 1987, p. A3; Leslie Morse, “Committee Tackles Area Waste Woes,” DC, 14 July 1987, p. A3; Nelson and Padgett, “Can David Trash Goliath? Far South Siders Fight Permits for Giant Waste Management,” CST, 19 July 1987, p. 38; Ben Gordon and Jim Vallette, “Action Alert: Rally for Environmental Rights Chicago, July 29, 1987,” and “Say ‘No!’ to Waste Management” flyer, 29 July 1987, JLP Box 37 Fld. SCA; Bergsvik, “CID Protesters Arrested,” and “CID Target of Protest,” DC, 30 July 1987, pp. A1, A4; “Protesters Halt Trucks at Landfill,” CT, 30 July 1987, p. 1; Leon Pitt, “Protesters Block Far S. Side Landfill,” CST, 30 July 1987, p. 32; PCR, “Summary” and “Introduction,” n.d. (ca. 1 August 1987), CFP Box 30 Fld. 367; Dennis Geaney, “Confessions of a Street Walker,” SVPSB, 2 August 1987, p. 7; “Protesters Make Not Guilty Plea,” DC, 1 September 1987, p. A3; “Protesters Sentenced,” DC, 16 September 1987, p. A1; Bergsvik, “Garbage Crisis Dumps Big in ’87,” DC, 28 December 1987, p. 2; Virginia Mullery, “Hazel Johnson,” Salt, July–August 1988, pp. 4–6; DJG interviews with Hazel Johnson, Dan Lee, Cathy Askew, Margaret Bagby, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Betty Garrett, Scott Sederstrom, and Leonard Lamkin.

54. “CID Protest Staged,” DC, 6 August 1987, p. A1; “CID Is Target of Another Protest,” DC, 18 August 1987, p. A1; Henry Locke, “Protesters Razz Dump Site,” CD, 18 August 1987, p. 3; “Activities of the Joint Committee,” 25 August–13 October 1987, RGP; Deborah Nelson, “Agency to Run S. Side Cleanup Urged,” CST, 26 August 1987, p. 6; Jean Davidson and Wes Smith, “Southeast Siders Irked Over Pollution-Health Report,” CT, 26 August 1987, p. C3; Robert Bergsvik, “Waste Cleanup Tax Eyed,” DC, 26 August 1987, p. A1; Nicholas J. Melas (Metropolitan Sanitary District President) to Emil Jones Jr., 26 August 1987, RGP; Howard Stanback to Harold Washington, “Solid Waste Management Strategy Options,” 28 August 1987, HWP COS Box 42 Fld. 6; Thomas J. Murphy to Maurice Parrish, 31 August 1987, HWP PSS Box 12 Fld. 1; Terry Ayers to Bill Child, “Cook Co.-Dutch Boy,” 4 September 1987, RGP; “CID Landfill Protested Again,” DC, 9 September 1987, p. A1; Henry Locke, “Waste Site Tour Set for So. Side,” CD, 10 September 1987, p. 4; Nelson, “Dump-Site Tour an Eye-Opener for Legislators,” CST, 11 September 1987, p. 36; James A. Fitch to Sharon Gist Gilliam, 11 September 1987, HWP COS Box 42 Fld. 6; Bergsvik, “Toxic Waste Sites Focus of Hearing,” DC, 14 September 1987, p. A1; Gilliam to Fitch, 23 September 1987, HWP COS Box 42 Fld. 6; “State Sen. Jones to Challenge Savage,” CT, 16 November 1987, p. C2; Howard J. Stanback C.V. in HWP COS Box 42 Fld. 6; Gene Maeroff, “The New School Pushes to Revive Ph.D. Program,” NYT, 18 May 1986; Stanback’s 1989 interview with Betty Brown-Chappell; Stanback in Krumholtz and Clavel, eds., Reinventing Cities, pp. 176–77; Lynne M. Cunningham, “Local Initiatives to Catalyze Economic Development,” Planning News (American Planning Association Illinois Chapter), Spring 1988, pp. 4–5; DJG interviews with Hazel Johnson, Howard

Stanback, Hal Baron, Mary Ryan, and Bruce Orenstein.

55. Greg Galluzzo 1987 planning diary, GGP; Scott, A Singular Woman, photo insert and pp. 243, 245, 268–71; “Frank Davis Dead at 81,” CD, 13 August 1987, p. 5; Obama’s 2001 interview with Julieanne Richardson; DJG interviews with Greg Galluzzo, Johnnie Owens, Genevieve Cook, Tim Jessup, Pete Vayda, Hasan and Raazia Chandoo, Genevieve Cook, Sheila Jager, Mike Dees, Doug Glick, Asif Agha, and Cathy Askew. Sheila accompanied Barack on one trip to New York City, but not this summer 1987 one. “I only met the Paki crowd once in NY and don’t remember them or the visit very well,” and Hasan does not believe he ever met Sheila.

56. Karen Thomas and Jean Latz Griffin, “As Different as City, Suburbs,” CT, 2 September 1987, p. 1; Casey Banas, “Teachers Want 10% Pay Raise,” and Griffin and Michele Norris, “Money’s There, But It’s Wasted,” CT, 3 September 1987, pp. 1, 6; Linda Lenz, “Teachers OK Strike,” CST, 5 September 1987, p. 1; Lenz, “No Quick End Seen to Strike,” CST, 9 September 1987, p. 1; Jack Houston and Griffin, “Teachers Strike Closes Schools,” and Banas and Griffin, “School Board Counting Days Till Strike Pays,” CT, 10 September 1987, p. 1; G. Alfred Hess Jr., “Need School Reform, Not a Showdown,” CT, 12 September 1987, p. 8; Griffin and Fred Marc Biddle, “No Progress in School Strike,” CT, 13 September 1987; Banas, “Plan Would Give Teachers a Raise,” CT, 15 September 1987, p. 1; Banas, “Cuts to Fund School Raises Proposed,” CT, 16 September 1987, p. 1; Nancy Ryan and Blair Kamin, “Mayor Wants Strike Ended by Monday,” and Ryan and Banas, “Parents Urge Mayor to Act in School Crisis,” CT, 17 September 1987, p. 1; Ryan and Kamin, “Pickets at Mayor’s Home Demand an End to Teachers Strike,” CT, 18 September 1987, p. 7; Banas and R. Bruce Dold, “Board Doesn’t Want to End Strike Soon, Vaughn Says,” CT, 19 September 1987, p. 5; Manford Byrd Jr., “Byrd Defends School System Reforms,” CT, 24 September 1987, p. 26; Banas and Andrew Martin, “Teachers’ Raises Cost Jobs: Board,” CT, 25 September 1987; Norris, “School Board May OK Learning with Lunch,” CT, 26 September 1987, p. 7; Banas, “Outcry Rises for Reform of Schools,” CT, 2 October 1987, p. 1; Lenz and Jim Merriner, “Board, Union Study 3% Raise as Compromise,” CST, 2 October 1987, p. 3; Banas, “Teachers Cool to Latest Offer,” CT, 3 October 1987, p. 1; Banas, “Union, Schools Reach Pact,” and “End of Strike Could Be a New Beginning,” CT, 4 October 1987, pp. 1, 14; Banas, “Mayor Tilts Spotlight to Reform,” and “Strike’s Wake Leaves Winners and Losers,” CT, 5 October 1987, pp. 1, 2; Banas, “Call Is Out to School Reformers,” CT, 7 October 1987, p. 1; Bill McKersie, “And a New Test for Mayor Washington,” CT, 8 October 1987, p. 27; C. D. Matthews, “School Reform Gains Support,” DC, 29 December 1987, pp. 3, 6; Howard Stanback and Robert Mier, “Economic Development for Whom? The Chicago Model,” NYU Review of Law & Social Change 15 (1987): 11–22, 37–41; Thom Clark, “Chicago Parents Organize for Better Schools,” TNW, January–February 1988, pp. 3–6; Ben Joravsky, “Mad as Hell: School Reformers Declare War on the Central Bureaucracy,” CR, 1 March 1990; Alex Poinsett, “School Reform, Black Leaders: Their Impact on Each Other,” Catalyst, May 1990, pp. 7–11, 43 (which is unreliably hostile toward both Hess and Moore); Hess, School Restructuring, Chicago Style (Corwin Press, 1991), pp. 25–27; Kyle and Kantowicz, Kids First, esp. pp. 178–81, 209–10, 219–24; David Moberg, “Can Democracy Save Chicago’s Schools?,” American Prospect, January 1992, pp. 98–108; Jeffrey Mirel, “School Reform, Chicago Style: Educational Innovation in a Changing Urban Context, 1986–1991,” Urban Education 28 (July 1993): 116–49, esp. p. 121; William Ayers, “Chicago: A Restless Sea of Social Forces,” in Charles T. Kerchner and Julia E. Koppich, eds., A Union of Professionals (Teachers College Press, 1993), pp. 177–93, esp. 181–83; Ayers and Michael Klonsky, “Navigating a Restless Sea: The Continuing Struggle to Achieve a Decent Education for African American Youngsters in Chicago,” Journal of Negro Education 63 (Winter 1994): 5–18; Maribeth Vander Weele, Reclaiming Our Schools (Loyola University Press, 1994), p. 10; Hess, Restructuring Urban Schools, pp. 14–15, 21–22, 194; Carl, “Harold Washington and Chicago’s Schools,” esp. pp. 316, 334–36. See also Michael B. Katz, “Chicago School Reform as History,” Teachers College Record 94 (Fall 1992): 56–72, Linda Lenz, “Missing in Action: The Chicago Teachers Union,” in Alexander Russo, ed., School Reform in Chicago: Lessons on Policy and Practice (Harvard Education Press, 2004), pp. 125–31, and Jim Carl, “‘Good Politics Is Good Government’: The Troubling History of Mayoral Control of the Public Schools in Twentieth-Century Chicago,” American Journal of Education 115 (February 2009): 305–36.

57. Delores T. Wood to Jane Ramsey, “Close: Developing Communities Project,” 29 June 1987, HWP COF Box 27 Fld. 27 (“Hal Baron and Joe Washington handling matter . . . . Mtg. set next Monday Sept. 28”); David Giffey, “Mulling Change with a Young Obama in Spring Green,” Madison Capital Times, 21 July 2009; Kellman in David Moberg, “Obama’s Community Roots,” Nation, 16 April 2007, and in Sharon Cohen (AP), “Barack Obama Straddles Different Worlds,” 14 December 2007; McKnight, “The Future of Low-Income Neighborhoods and the People Who Reside There,” Center for Urban Affairs and Policy Research, Northwestern University, June 1987, 18pp., esp. pp. 3, 5, 7–8, 12; McKnight, “Do No Harm,” Social Policy, Summer 1989, pp. 5–14, reprinted in The Careless Society, pp. 101–14; Beryl Satter, Family Properties (Metropolitan Books, 2009), p. 128; Boyte in “Mr. Obama’s Neighborhood,” Bradley Center, Hudson Institute, Washington, D.C., 1 October 2008, p. 13; William Upski Wimsatt, “Anonymous Benefactor,” CR, 26 March 1998; Anthony Burke Boylan, “Scholar Stanley J. Hallett, 68, Mixed Theology, Urban Planning,” CT, 26 November 1998; John McCarron, “Stan Hallett’s Quiet Crusade for Simple Solutions Will Live On,” CT, 30 November 1998; Linda Randle in David Jones, “Obama the Chameleon,” Daily Mail, 1 November 2008, p. 46 (recalling Sheila as “super intelligent” and having “a lot of ambition”); DJG interviews with Hal Baron, John McKnight, Jerry Kellman, Greg Galluzzo, Mike Kruglik, Johnnie Owens, Bruce Orenstein, Linda Randle, Sheila Jager, and Harvey Lyon. See also John P. Kretzmann and McKnight, Building Communities from the Inside Out: A Path Toward Finding and Mobilizing a Community’s Assets (ACTA Publications, 1993).

58. Barbara Marsh, “Strike, Learning Goals Stall School-Biz Pact,” CCB, 21 September 1987, p. 3; Andrew Martin and Casey Banas, “Parents Rally to Reform Schools,” CT, 9 October 1987, p. 7; Banas, “Schools Risk Funding Loss,” CT, 11 October 1987, p. 1; Marsh, “School Reform Gets Tepid Biz Response,” CCB, 12 October 1987, p. 3; Banas and Cheryll Devall, “A 1st Step to Reform in Schools,” CT, 12 October 1987, p. 1; Linda Lenz, “Mayor Vows Unified School Reform Plan,” CST, 12 October 1987, p. 5; Chinta Strausberg, “Mayor Tabs School Summit a ‘Success,’” CD, 13 October 1987, p. 1; William Snider, “Chicago’s ‘Unprecedented’ Populist Revolt,” Education Week, 28 October 1987, pp. 1, 20–21; Robert Davis and Jan Crawford, “Reform Must Be Tied to Aid, Schools Told,” CT, 3 November 1987, p. 3; Banas and Devonda Byers, “Chicago’s Schools Hit as Worst,” CT, 7 November 1987, p. 1; “Schools in Chicago Are Called the Worst by Education Chief,” NYT, 8 November 1987; Jack Houston, “Mayor: We’ll Clean Up Schools,” CT, 8 November 1987, p. 3; Marsh, “School Reform a Must: Biz Group,” CCB, 9 November 1987, p. 3; Banas, “School Plan Calls for Local Control,” CT, 10 November 1987; William S. McKersie, "Reforming Chicago's Public Schools: Philanthropic Persistence, 1987–1993," Advances in Educational Policy 2 (1996): 141–57; H. Gregory Meyer, "Taking a Novel Approach Toward Harold Washington's Reign," CT, 24 September 2004.

59. Pullman Christian Reformed Church Bulletins, 6 and 27 September and 4 and 11 October 1987; "Ill. Economy to Be Explored," DC, 15 September 1987, p. A5; Inscapes (GSU), 30 September 1987, p. 2; Board of Governors News, "First Annual Board of Governors Public Policy Conference to Be Held at GSU," 5 October 1987; Mark Bouman, "The Place of Place in Community Economic Development," 16 October 1987, "Developing Illinois' Economy: A Statewide Perspective," 16 October 1987 (pp. 15–16), Mark Bouman Papers; Richard Ringer, "Chicago Bank Agrees to Plan for Local Loans," American Banker, 26 August 1987, p. 3; Leon Pitt, "Bank, Blacks in $20 Million Pact," CST, 18 September 1987, p. 42; John Camper, "Community Pressure Keeps Bank Funds Right at Home," CT, 22 September 1987, p. C1; Ben Joravsky, "South Side Hardball: Residents and White Bankers Team Up in $20 Million Investment Agreement," CR, 15 October 1987; R. Bruce Dold, "Minority Bank Faces Surprise Foe," CT, 5 May 1988, p. C1; Joravsky, "Roseland's Thorny Problem," CR, 7 July 1988; Susan Chandler, "Bankers Paint Two Pictures of Roseland Activist Lomax," CST, 24 July 1989, p. 37; Maggie Garb, "Foreclosures Plague Austin, Roseland," CST, 7 August 1988, p. H1; Garb, "Community Leaders Working to Put Hope Back in Roseland," CST, 29 July 1990, p. 16; Brian Edwards, "Dressed for Success," CT, 11 October 1991; "Chicago Man Opens Mall," Jet, 10 May 1993, pp. 24–25; Satter, Family Properties, pp. 371–75; Richard Mertens, "Dream Deferred," University of Chicago Magazine, May–June 2011; Darryl E. Getter, "The Effectiveness of the Community Reinvestment Act," Congressional Research Service, 7 January 2015; DJG interviews with Mark Bouman, Richard Longworth, Josh Hoyt, and Ed Grossman.

60. Nina Totenberg, "Justice Brennan," All Things Considered, NPR, 29 and 30 January 1987, AT-87-0129.01/01-C; Obama to Brennan, 7 December 1990, WJBP Box II-94; "The Disadvantaged Among the Disadvantaged: Responsibility of the Black Churches to the Underclass," Harvard Divinity School, 23–25 October 1987; Luix Overbea, "Black Clergy Look for Ways to Stem the Spread of Urban Poverty," CSM, 6 November 1987, p. 6; "The Return of America's Conscience," Harvard Divinity Bulletin, February 1988, p. 4; Obama to Phil Boerner, 26 October 1987, Boerner Papers; Titcomb in Peter Serafin, "Punahou Grad Stirs Up Illinois Politics," HSB, 21 March 2004, and in Mendell, Obama, p. 82; Kellman in Bob Secter and John McCormick, "Portrait of a Pragmatist," CT, 30 March 2007, in Liza Mundy, "A Series of Fortunate Events," WP Magazine, 12 August 2007, in Smith, "The Ascent of Mr. Charisma," Sunday Times Magazine, 23 March 2008, on Anderson Cooper 360, CNN, 15 April 2008, in Rodric J. Bradford, "Hiring Barack Obama," BustedHalo.com, 19 April 2008, in Byron York, "The Organizer," National Review, 30 June 2008, in Serge Kovalski, "In Organizing, Obama Led While Finding His Place," NYT, 7 July 2008; Kellman's July 2008 interview with Jim Gilmore; Kellman in Jon Meacham, "On His Own," Newsweek, 1 September 2008, p. 26, in John B. Judis, "Creation Myth," TNR, 18 September 2008, on All Things Considered, NPR, 17 October 2008, and in "Obama as We Knew Him," Observer, 26 October 2008, pp. 4–7; Obama in John Corr, "From Mean Street to Hallowed Halls," Philadelphia Inquirer, 27 February 1990, pp. C1, C4, in David Heckelman, "Lawyer-Legislator Breathes Life into the Dreams of His Father," CDLB, 26 April 1997, p. 9, in his 2001 interview with Julieanna Richardson, on The Strausberg Report in 2002, in "Introducing Barack Obama" in 2003, and on Charlie Rose, 23 November 2004; Obama's 2 and 16 June 2006 commencement speeches at the University of Massachusetts at Boston and Northwestern University; Obama's remarks at Campus Progress Annual Conference, D.C., 12 July 2006, and remarks to College Democrats of America, Columbia, SC, 26 July 2007; Obama's 5 December 2007 remarks at Cornell College, Mt. Vernon, Iowa, and 25 May 2008 Wesleyan University commencement address; Obama, "A New Era of Service," University of Colorado, Colorado Springs, 2 July 2008; Obama in Richard Stengel et al., "The Interview," Time, 17 December 2008; Robert D. McFadden, "Rev. Peter J. Gomes Is Dead at 68; A Leading Voice Against Intolerance," NYT, 1 March 2011; DJG interviews with Arnie Graf, Asif Agha, Sheila Jager, Charles Payne, and Jerry Kellman.

61. Obama to Phil Boerner, 26 October 1987, Boerner Papers; Greg Galluzzo 1987 planning diary, GGP; Galluzzo to Ellen Benjamin (Borg-Warner Foundation), 16 May 1987, and Galluzzo to Mariita Conley (Beatrice Foundation), 2 December 1987, Gamaliel Papers; Kruglik in Secter and McCormick, "Portrait of a Pragmatist," CT, 30 March 2007, in Remnick, The Bridge, p. 161, and in McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, p. 175; DJG interviews with David Kindler, Kevin Jokisch, Danny Solis, Phil Mullins, Mike Kruglik, Paul Scully, Mike Pflieger, Mary Yu, Ken Brucks, and Regina Foran Thibeau. On Foran, see Jan Crawford, "10 Groups Granted $148,000," CT, 26 July 1987, and Foran, "Glimpses of Discipleship," Upturn, October–November 1987, p. 9. In September 1987, Ken Rolling of Woods wrote that UNO's groups "together represent perhaps the strongest organizing neighborhood constituency in the city outside of the political machines." McKersie, "Strategic Philanthropy and Local Public Policy," p. 370.

62. Greg Galluzzo 1987 planning diary, GGP; Patrick J. Keleher 1987 pocket Day-Timers, 17 September 1987 ("Nice chat with Barack"), 13 October 1987, 13 and 17 November 1987 (7 P.M. Reformation Lutheran in the latter), PJKP; "Classes to Begin on College Testing," CT, 22 September 1987; "College Entrance Exam Forms Available," CT, 25 September 1987; "Al Raby to Leave City Rights Post," CT, 19 October 1987, p. 2; Nat Krieger, "DCP Seeks to Improve Public Education," CD, 23 November 1987, p. 8; Larry Finley, "Agencies Get Help to Help Others," CST, 29 December 1987, p. 9; Jean Franczyk, "School Reform Pressure Continues," Chicago Reporter, January 1988, pp. 1, 8–9, 11; Obama to Anne Hallett, Developing Communities Project 1988 Proposal to the Wieboldt Foundation, 26 January 1988, Wieboldt Foundation 1988 Annual Report, p. 15, Wieboldt Papers; "New School Reform Effort in Roseland," TNW, March–April 1988, p. 11; Edith R. Sims, "Successful Programs, Policies, and Practices Employed at Corliss High School," Journal of Negro Education 57 (Summer 1988): 394–407, esp. 394–97; "A Guide to Regional and Local Grantmakers," [1988], esp. pp. 203, 205, Human SERVE Papers Box 16, Fld. 742; Woods Charitable Fund, Report for the Year 1987, esp. p. 20, and Report for the Year 1988, esp. p. 26 (showing $25,500 for "operating support" to DCP); Robert Foulkes and William Peterman, "Roseland Community Credit Needs Assessment," Voorhees Center, University of Illinois at Chicago, June 1992, esp. parts G1 and G2; Obama, DFMF, pp. 256–61, 267–68, 279–80; Jerry Kellman, AriseChicago Breakfast Talk, 24 November 2009; Kim Geiger, "Obama Tour Covers President's South Side Past," CT, 11 November 2013; DJG interviews with Greg Galluzzo, Johnnie Owens, Aletha Strong Gibson, Ann West, Carolyn Wortham, Homer Franklin, Shirley Chappell, Sokoni Karanja, Steve Perkins, Jerry Kellman, Mary Bernstein, Tyrone Partee, John Webster, and Jean Rudd. On Robert Healey, see Ana Mendieta, "Labor Leader Robert Healey Dies at 72," CST, 24 July 2002, p. 16, James Janega, "Stalwart Led Chicago Labor Unions," CT, 24 July 2002, and "Robert M. Healey: A Legacy of Vision and Strength,” Insight (IFT), Winter 2003. On Carver High School, where the late Marcellus Stamps Jr. succeeded the late Alexander Whitfield as principal in mid-1987, see “Carver’s Walters: More Than a Coach,” CST, 26 October 1986, Bonita Brodt, “That ‘Mean’ Lady,” CT, 3 March 1987, and Vernon Jarrett, “Academic ‘All-Star’ Inspires Carver Kids,” CST, 23 November 1987, p. 28; on Fenger High School, whose principal was the late Leo Dillon, see Robin Downing, “Gangs Lead to Closed Campus,” New Expression, September 1987, p. 5; on Julian High School, whose Dr. Oliver is also deceased, see Kimberly Ward, “Social Clubs Don’t ‘Clique’ with All Students” and “Social Clubs Banned at Julian,” New Expression, January 1988, p. 12, and February 1988, p. 4.

63. Thomas J. Murphy to Lawrence E. Kennon (ZBA), 18 September 1987, HWP PSS Box 12 Fld. 11; Casey Bukro, “South Side Smog Report Singes Wood Stoves, Traffic,” CT, 25 September 1987, p. 3; Bill Richards, “Waste Management Faces More Inquiries,” WSJ, 28 September 1987, p. 6; Murphy to Michael Holewinski, 7 October 1987, HWP PSS Box 12 Fld. 11; Deborah Nelson, “U.S. EPA Refuses to Testify in S. South Pollution Probe,” CST, 14 October 1987, p. 22; Nelson, “S. Side Landfill in Use Without Permits Since ‘83,” CST, 16 October 1987, p. 5; Robert Bergsvik, “Paxton Court Date Is Set,” DC, [17 October 1987] (HWP PSS Box 12 Fld. 11); Bukro, “Garbage Piles Up as City Loses Ground,” CT, 26 October 1987, p. 1; “Burying Our Heads in the Garbage,” CT, 28 October 1987, p. 18; Howard Stanback to Harold Washington, “Proposed Solid Waste Management Plan: An Outline,” 28 October 1987, HWP COS Box 49 Fld. 6; Bergsvik, “Toxic Panel Wraps Up Public Hearings,” DC, 29 October 1987, p. A2; Jean Davidson, “State EPA Calls for Crackdown on Southeast Side Pollution,” CT, 30 October 1987, p. C6; Don B. Gallay to Lee Botts, “Paxton Landfill,” 3 November 1987, HWP PSS Box 12 Fld. 11; Botts to Stanback, “Comments on Proposal on Toxic Waste Incineration,” 12 November 1987, HWP CSS Box 49 Fld. 6; “Waste Proposal Meeting Agenda,” 16 November 1987, JLP Box 41 Fld. SAMP; James E. Landing to LCSC Members, 20 November 1987, JLP Box 29 Fld. LCSC.

64. Casey Banas, “948 School Jobs Axed for Teachers’ Raises,” CT, 25 November 1987, p. 4; Thomas Hardy and R. Bruce Dold, “Mayor’s Death Stuns City,” Hardy and Dold, “Washington Suffers Heart Attack,” Robert Davis, “Black Leader, 65, on Verge of Dream,” and John Camper and John Kass, “Private Man with a Public Life,” CT, 26 November 1987, p. 1; William Braden, “Heart Attack Kills Mayor,” Philip Franchine, “Stunned City Mourns,” and “The Mayor and His Rich Legacy,” CST, 26 November 1987; “Washington’s Showdown Victory,” CT, 8 April 1987; “Harold Washington and Chicago,” CT, 26 November 1987, p. 30; Davis and Manuel Galvan, “Mayor Will Lie in State in City Hall,” CT, 27 November 1987; Hardy and Mitchell Locin, “Mayor’s Coalition in Peril,” CT, 29 November 1987; John Kass, “Who Will Wear the Mantle?,” CT, 28 February 1988; Holli and Green, Bashing Chicago Traditions, p. vii; Robert Mier et al., “Decentralization of Policy Making Under Mayor Harold Washington,” Research in Urban Policy 4 (1992): 79–102, at 95; Orr in Camper and Kass, “Scandal Gets Too Big for Mayor to Ignore,” CT, 9 February 1986; William J. Grimshaw, Bitter Fruit: Black Politics and the Chicago Machine, 1931–1991 (University of Chicago Press, 1992), pp. 184, 195–97; Kass and Michele Norris, “Service Becomes Rally for Evans,” Dold and Hardy, “Sawyer’s Mayoral Bid Gathers Steam,” Dold and James Strong, “Sawyer Says He Has Enough Votes to Win,” CT, 1 December 1987; Galvan, “Memorial Gives Way to Politics,” William Recktenwald and Galvan, “Madhouse Inside and Outside,” and Kass and Camper, “Council Elects Sawyer Mayor,” CT, 2 December 1987; Strong and Hardy, “Sawyer Elected After a Raucous Night,” Hardy, “Succession Fight Split Blacks, United Whites,” Camper, “Mayor Makes Pitch for Unity,” and Kass, “Key Washington Ally Watches Glumly as Her Political World Comes to an End,” CT, 3 December 1987; Patrick Reardon, “Fallout Burns, Soothes Sawyer’s Backers,” CT, 7 December 1987; Vernon Jarrett, “Ald. Shaw: Our City’s Leading Phony,” CST, 8 January 1988, p. 41; Gary Rivlin, “Seven Days as Mayor,” CR, 10 March 1988; Sawyer’s December 1989 interview with Betty Brown-Chappell; Hawking, “Political Education in the Harold Washington Movement,” pp. 209–23. See also Larry Bennett, “Harold Washington’s Chicago: Placing a Progressive City Administration in Context,” Social Policy, Fall 1988, pp. 22–28, and Bennett, “Harold Washington and the Black Urban Regime,” Urban Affairs Quarterly 28 (March 1993): 423–40.

65. Obama on The Friday Night Show with Bob Sirott, WTTW.com, 3 December 2004; Obama in Gretchen Reynolds, “Vote of Confidence,” Chicago Magazine, January 1993; Obama, DFMF, pp. 287–89; Obama in Hank DeZutter, “What Makes Obama Run?,” CR, 8 December 1995; Obama’s 2001 interview with Julieanna Richardson; Obama in Caroline Daniel, “Political Rookie Traverses the Ethnic Divide,” FT, 24 June 2004, p. 8; Obama in Barkley, Who’s Afraid of a Large Black Man? p. 36; Obama, TAOH, p. 360; Obama in Maraniss, BOTS, p. 562; Obama’s 30 July 2013 interview with David Blum; McKnight in Judis, “Creation Myth,” TNR, 10 September 2008; McKnight YouTube video, 1 August 2008; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, p. 178; Greg Galluzzo in Daniel Libit, “The End of Community Organizing in Chicago?,” Chicago Magazine, April 2011; Peter Slevin, Michelle Obama (Knopf, 2015), p. 163; DJG interviews with Steve Perkins, Patty Novick, Judy Stevens, Michael Baron, John McKnight, Greg Galluzzo, and Mary Gonzales.

66. Greg Galluzzo 1987 planning diary, GGP; Patrick J. Keleher 1987 pocket Day-Timers, 8 and 11 December 1987, PJKP; Jack Houston, “School Reform Efforts Move Ahead,” CT, 30 November 1987, p. 1; Casey Banas, “Forum Asks Local Power for Schools,” CT, 2 December 1987; Harry Golden Jr., “Mayor to ‘Reach Out’ to Heal Racial Rifts,” CST, 4 December 1987, p. 7; Barbara Marsh, “Report Rips Chicago United Record,” CCB, 7 December 1987, p. 1; Houston, “Teachers’ Rejection of Reform Draws Ire of Watchdog Groups,” CT, 13 December 1987, p. 3; Patrick Reardon, “City School Integration Spending Hit,” CT, 16 December 1987; Manford Byrd Jr., “Help Schools Before Pushing Jobs Plan,” CT, 21 December 1987; Jean Franczyk, “School Reform Pressure Continues,” Chicago Reporter, January 1988, pp. 1, 8–9, 11; Howard Stanback to Ernest Barefield, “Solid Waste Management Planning,” 7 December 1987, HWP COS Box 49 Fld. 6; Landing to Lake Calumet Study Committee Members, 7 December 1987, and Fitch to Landing, 7 December 1987, JLP Box 42 Fld. Fitch; Casey Bukro, “City’s Garbage Disposal Crisis Major Issue Facing New Mayor,” CT, 8 December 1987, p. C4; Report of the Joint Committee of Hazardous Waste in the Lake Calumet Area, December 1987, esp. pp. 16, 20, RGP; Robert Bergsvik, “Pollution Report Urges Health Studies,” DC, 9 December 1987, p. 1; Lake Calumet Area Health Study Urged,” CT, 9 December 1987; Barefield to Stanback, “Solid Waste Management Planning,” 11 December 1987, HWP COS Box 49 Fld. 6; Bergsvik, “2 Landfill Permits Expected,” DC, 18 December 1987, p. 1; Larry Gross, “5 Teens Charged as Adults in Altgeld Garden Slaying,” CD, 8 December 1987, p. 3; Dan Nakaso, “Obama’s Tutu a Hawaii Banking Female Pioneer,” HA, 30 March 2008; Mary Zurbuchen in Amanda Ripley, “The Story of Barack Obama’s Mother,” Time, 21 April 2008; Allen G. Breed (AP), “‘Toot’: Obama Grandmother a Force That Shaped Him,” 23 August 2008; DJG interviews with Johnnie Owens, Alice Dewey, Asif Agha, and Sheila Jager.

67. Greg Galluzzo 1987 planning diary (1988 pages), GGP; Patrick J. Keleher 1988 Pocket Day-Timers

(18 January 1988), PJKP; Liz Sly, "Schools Seek Big Role for Parents," CT, 8 January 1988, p. 2; Jack Houston, "Parents' Panel Urged for Schools," CT, 10 January 1988, p. 1; Karen M. Thomas, "Parents Vote for Local School Control," CT, 21 January 1988, p. 1; Thomas, "Parents Make Push for Schools," CT, 24 January 1988, p. 3; Thomas, "Reform Finds Common Ground," CT, 5 February 1988, p. 7; Thomas, "Community Role Urged for Schools," CT, 9 February 1988, p. 3; Obama to Phil and Karen Boerner, n.d. (sometime soon after 16 January 1988), Boerner Papers; Obama to Anne Hallett, 26 January 1988, enclosing "Developing Communities Project's 1988 Proposal to the Wieboldt Foundation," Wieboldt Papers; DJG interviews with Phil Boerner and Anne Hallett.

68. Alvin Love in Kalari Girtley, "How Obama Got His Start," HPH, 14 February 2007, p. 14, in Kovalski, "In Organizing, Obama Led While Finding His Place," NYT, 7 July 2008, in York, "The Organizer," NR, 30 July 2008, in "They Met Obama When," CT, 16 November 2008, p. 19, in Robert Beckford, "God Bless You Barack Obama?," BBC 2, 25 January 2010, and in McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, p. 169; Robert McClory, "The Holy Terror of Saint Sabina's," CR, 16 November 1989; McClory, "Black and Catholic Are Joint Ventures at Chicago Parish," NCR, 13 March 1998, p. 5; McClory, Radical Disciple, esp. p. 163; Obama in Angela Burt-Murray et al., "America's Teachable Moment," Essence, March 2010, pp. 121–26, at 125; Patrick T. Reardon, "Obama's Chicago," CT, 25 June 2008, p. T1; Maudlyne Ihejirika, "Old Obama Haunts Becoming Popular Tourist Attractions," CST, 23 May 2009; DJG interviews with Alvin Love, Jeremiah Wright, Donita Powell Greene, Sokoni Karanja, Tommy West, Cathy Askew, Nadyne Griffin, Rosa Thomas, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Mike Pflieger, Sheila Jager, Asif Agha, Doug Glick, John Morillo, and Andrea Atkin.

69. Casey Bukro, "Southeast Side Targeted for EPA Cleanup," CT, 31 January 1988, p. 1; Robert Bergsvik, "O'Brien Locks Eyed for Landfill," DC, 31 January 1988, pp. 1, 10; C. D. Matthews, "Environmentalists Are Fuming Over Proposed Landfill," DC, 2 February 1988, pp. 1, 6; Bukro, "Southeast Siders See Some Green in Landfill Plans," CT, 2 February 1988, p. 1; James A. Fitch to James E. Landing, 2 February 1988, Mayor's Office Press Release, "City Reaffirms Landfill Moratorium Policy," 8 February 1988, and United Neighborhood Organization of Southeast and Developing Communities Project to the People of the Southeast Side of Chicago, 8 February 1988, JLP Box 42 Flds. Fitch and Fitch Blue; Bergsvik, "Landfill Foes 'Ambush' Local Leaders," and "New Landfill Proposal Told for O'Brien Locks," DC, 9 February 1988, pp. 1, 7; Bukro, "80 Southeast Side Residents Reject Firm's Offer on Landfill Use," CT, 9 February 1988, p. 3; Bergsvik, "Leaders Disagree on Landfill," DC, 10 February 1988, pp. 1, 13; Bukro, "Sawyer Pushes Mandatory Recycling," CT, 10 February 1988, p. 1; Vi Czachorski, "O'Brien Locks Proposal," HN, 11 February 1988, p. 1; Bergsvik, "Vrdolyak Ripped by Pucinski," DC, 11 February 1988, pp. 1, 6; Bergsvik, "Chamber Takes Stand Against O'Brien Landfill," DC, 16 February 1988, pp. 1, 8; Marian Byrnes to Eugene Sawyer, 16 February 1988, JLP Box 40 Fld. CURE; Czachorski, "From the Editor's Scratch Pad," HN, 18 February 1988, pp. 1, 5; Bergsvik, "Groups Hope Protest Is Cure for Landfill 'Doom,'" DC, 19 February 1988, pp. 1, 16; Bergsvik, "Fitch Finds Pitching Landfill Tough Job," DC, 22 February 1988, pp. 1, 6; Fitch to Landing, 23 February 1988, JLP Box 42 Fld. Fitch; "CURE Holds Meeting," HN, 25 February 1988, pp. 1, 5; "Fitch Cancels" and "CURE at City Hall," HN, 3 March 1988, p. 1; Bergsvik, "Avalon Trails Residents Say No to Landfill," DC, 6 March 1988, pp. 1, 14; Wilfredo Cruz, "UNO: Organizing at the Grass Roots," Illinois Issues, April 1988, pp. 18–22; Tayler and Herbert, "Obama Forged Path as Chicago Community Organizer," Newsday,

2 March 2008, p. A6; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, p. 58; DJG interviews with Bruce Orenstein, Mary Ellen Montes, Ed Grossman, Johnnie Owens, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Bob Klonowski, Howard Stanback, Judy Byrd, and Mary Ryan.

70. Dave Kehr, "'Unbearable Lightness of Being' Takes Heavy-Handed View," CT, 5 February 1988; Vincent Canby, "Film 'Lightness of Being,'" NYT, 5 February 1988; Pat Watters, Down to Now: Reflections on the Southern Civil Rights Movement (Pantheon, 1971), p. 381; DJG interviews with Sheila Jager, Mary Ellen Montes, Phil Mullins, Danny Solis, Bob Moriarty, and Bruce Orenstein.

71. C. D. Matthews, "Wisconsin Steel Settlement Offered," DC, 11 February 1988, p. 1; Cindy Richards, "$15 Mill. to Wis. Steel Workers," CST, 11 February 1988; Matt O'Connor, "Mill Workers Settle with Wisconsin Steel," CT, 11 February 1988, p. C1; Robert Bergsvik, "Ex-Wisconsin Steel Workers to Vote on Pact," DC, 12 February 1988, pp. 1, 9; Richards, "Navistar Settlement Far Less—and Far More—Than Hoped," CST, 12 February 1988; Timothy P. Vick, "Workers Accept Navistar Offer," DC, 15 February 1988, pp. 1, 5; George Papajohn, "Sad Victory for Ex-Steel Workers," CT, 15 February 1988, p. 1; Lynn Sweet, "Wis. Steel Workers Vote to OK Deal," CST, 15 February 1988; R. C. Longworth, "System Foundered on Lies, Selfishness," CT, 17 February 1988, p. B3; Susan Moran, "Mill a Fond Memory," DC, 20 March 1988, p. 3; "Wisconsin Steel Accord to Be Discussed Sunday," DC, 25 March 1988, p. 2; M. W. Newman, "Rusty Dreams," CST, 27 March 1988; Bill Clements, "Emotion Runs High at Reunion," DC, 28 March 1988, pp. 1, 3; John F. Wasik, "End of the Line at Wisconsin Steel," Progressive, October 1988, p. 15; Thomas Geoghegan, Which Side Are You On? (Farrar, Straus, 1991), pp. 101, 104; Beatrice Lumpkin, Always Bring a Crowd (International Publishers, 1999), pp. 175, 196; DJG interviews with Bea Lumpkin and Tom Geoghegan.

On South Works, see Larry Galica, "USX Nets Loss of $97 Million," DC, 2 May 1987, p. A3, Galica, "Local USW Leaders Seek to Strike Down Proposed Pact," DC, 7 July 1987, p. A3, and "After-Effects of Steel Shutdowns," TNW, August–September 1989, p. 18. On Republic LTV, see Bergsvik, "Steelworkers Back Panayotovich," DC, 25 February 1988, p. 3, Bergsvik, "United Steelworkers Union Locals Gear for Elections," DC, 28 February 1988, p. 3, Bergsvik, "LTV Workers to Share Profit," DC, 10 April 1988, p. 3, Bergsvik, "President Re-Elected in USW Local 1033," DC, 24 April 1988, p. 18, "LTV Union OKs Pact, ESOP Management, Workers to Purchase Bar Division," Gary Post-Tribune, 6 October 1989, "LTV Concludes Sale of Bar Division," PR Newswire, 29 November 1989, and DJG interview with Maury Richards. South Works would close for good in April 1992. See Bill Granger, "Requiem for the Southeast Side," CT, 12 April 1992, and Cara Jepsen, "Retooling South Works," TNW, February–March 1995, pp. 16–20.

72. Neighborhood Schools Coalition, "The Neighborhood Schoolhouse That Works: Education Reform Proposal for the Chicago Public Schools," February 1988, 29pp., Arthur L. Berman Papers Box 6 Fld. 6; Linda Lenz, "Big Increase Urged in School Personnel," CST, 18 February 1988, p. 3; Constanza Montana, "Meeting on School Reform Halted," CT, 19 February 1988, p. C3; "Parents Rebuffed at Hearing," CST, 19 February 1988, p. 3; Karen M. Thomas, "Push Coming to Shove on School Reform," CT, 21 February 1988, p. 1; Montana, "Educators Urge Shared School Decision-Making," CT, 24 February 1988, p. 3; James Deanes, "The Need for Reform," DC, 26 February 1988, p. 5; Patrick J. Keleher 1988 pocket Day-Timers (29 February 1988), PJKP; Jean Franczyk, "Parents Continue Push for Local School Control," Chicago Reporter, March 1988, p. 2; Rudolph Unger and Steve Johnson, "City Principals Have Their Say,” CT, 11 March 1988; Thomas, “Reformers Reject Elected School Board,” CT, 15 March 1988, p. 1; Lenz, “Education Summit Groups Reject Elected School Bd.,” CST, 15 March 1988, p. 16; Thomas, “Parents the Key in School Plan,” CT, 22 March 1988, “New School Reform Effort in Roseland,” TNW, March–April 1988, p. 11; Mary O’Connell, “Groups Organize Legislative Push on School Reform,” and “School Reform: Don’t Lose the Golden Moment,” TNW, March–April 1988, pp. 7–8 and 22; Ben Joravsky, “Too Many Bosses,” Chicago Magazine, April 1988, pp. 104, 137–44; Joravsky, “The Chicago School Mess,” Illinois Issues, April 1988, pp. 12–15; Paul M. Green, “SON/SOC: Organizing in White Ethnic Neighborhoods,” Illinois Issues, May 1988, pp. 24–28; O’Connell, School Reform Chicago Style, pp. 11–16; Kyle and Kantowicz, Kids First, pp. 212–15; Don Moore, “Earl Durham, a Long-Distance Runner,” 3 November 2007; DJG interviews with Danny Solis, Peter Martinez, Phil Mullins, Steve Perkins, Bill Ayers, Johnnie Owens, Dan Lee, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Yvonne Lloyd, Aletha Strong Gibson, Tyrone Partee, and John Webster. On Lourdes Monteagudo, see Isabel Wilkerson, “Schools Chief Learns About Politics,” NYT, 23 May 1990, and Leigh Behrens, “Lourdes Monteagudo,” CT, 2 September 1990.

73. Obama, DFMF, p. 275–76, 289; Meg McSherry Breslin, “George Kelm, Advocate for Kids, Families,” CT, 19 December 1998; Owens in Smith, “Ascent of Mr. Charisma,” Sunday Times Magazine, 23 March 2008, in McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, pp. 59–60, and in Maraniss, BOTS, pp. 563–64; Auma Obama, And Then Life Happens, p. 189; DJG interviews with Jean Rudd, Ken Rolling, Lionel Bolin, Robert Bennett, and Johnnie Owens. Obama may have received a similar scholarship offer from NYU’s law school, and he almost certainly was admitted to Stanford. Richard A. Serrano and David G. Savage, “Obama’s Harvard Law School Days Marked by Bridge-Building,” LAT, 27 January 2007, and Harvard Law Review, 20 April 1990, p. 8 n. 8: “Regret Often Turning Down Stanford (Winters, 1988–1990).”

74. Casey Bukro, “Waste Firm Dismisses 2 After Probe,” CT, 5 March 1988; Robert Bergsvik, “Protesters Demand Closing of Area Chemical Incinerator,” DC, 8 March 1988, pp. 1, 11; Juanita Bratcher, “S. Siders Want to CURE Toxic Waste Incinerator,” CD, 8 March 1988, pp. 1, 18, Jim Ritter, “Toxic Waste Furnace Gauge Off; Execs Fired,” CST, 8 March 1988, p. 45; “WM Violation at SCA,” and Jim Landing, “The Waste Assault on Hegewisch Continues,” HN, 10 March 1988, pp. 1, 6; Harlan Draeger, “S.E. Siders Block Sludge-Dumping Plan,” CST, 11 March 1988, p. 21; Howard Stanback to Solid Waste Advisory Committee, “O’Brien Locks,” 14 March 1988, JLP Box 42 Fld. Negotiations Fitch; Kathy O’Malley and Hanke Gratteau, “The Voting Booth,” CT, 3 February 1988; Vernon Jarrett, “Grumbling Not Enough,” CST, 21 February 1988, p. 13; Fran Spielman, “Pro-Sayer Blacks Face Test at Polls,” CST, 10 March 1988, p. 3; R. Bruce Dold, “Savage Faces Toughest Congressional Fight,” CT, 11 March 1988; Bergsvik, “A Local Newspaper Sells Out, but Is Anybody Reading?,” DC, 13 March 1988, p. 9; Ann Marie Lipinski and Jorge Caruso, “Sawyer Suffers Blow as 4 Allies Lose Ward Race,” CT, 16 March 1988, p. C1; Don Hayner and Ray Hanania, “4 Sawyer Allies Lose Committee Races,” CST, 16 March 1988, p. 3; James Warren, “East Day for Savage, Other Congressional Incumbents,” CT, 17 March 1988, p. 4; Jarrett, “‘Harold’s People’ Deliver the Message,” CST, 20 March 1988, p. 15; Tom Gorman, “Superior Organization Key to Trotter Victory,” HPH, 23 March 1988, pp. 1, 2; Gorman, “Braun Resigns; Trotter Takes His 25th District Seat Early,” HPH, 7 December 1988, p. 1; David K. Fremon, Chicago Politics Ward by Ward (Indiana University Press, 1988), pp. 358–64; Palmer’s June 2000 interview with Julieanna Richardson; DJG interviews with Alice Palmer and Donne Trotter.

75. Shawnelle Richie, "Mayor Eugene Sawyer Briefing Notes," 17 March 1988, and Sawyer, "Remarks," Southeast Chicago Community Meeting, 17 March 1988, Sawyer Papers; "UNO/DCP Meeting Fact Sheet: The Land-Fill Issue in South-East and Far South Chicago" [17 March 1988], CURE, "Keep Your Eyes on the Prize! Hold On!" 17 March 1988, and Marian Byrnes to Father Dominic Carmon, 21 March 1988, all JLP Box 40 Fld. CURE; Robert Bergsvik, "Sawyer Promises Task Force on Area Landfill Expansion," DC, 18 March 1988, pp. 1, 7; Casey Bukro, "Sawyer Backs Dumping Foes," CT, 18 March 1988, p. C3; Tim Padgett and Deborah Nelson, "Sawyer Assures S.E. Side of Landfill Voice," CST, 18 March 1988, p. 4; Bergsvik, "3rd Task Force the Charm in Landfill Fight," DC, 20 March 1988, pp. 1, 14; Edward R. Vrdolyak to Eugene Sawyer, 22 March 1988, JLP Box 40 Fld. CURE; Vi Czachorski, "From the Editor's Scratch Pad," HN, 24 March 1988, pp. 1, 5; Bergsvik, "Vrdolyak Seeks Local Representation of Landfill Panel," DC, 24 March 1988, p. 3; Bergsvik, "Chamber Rep Drops Out of Talks," DC, 25 March 1988, p. 3; Bergsvik, "Expert Speaks Against Landfill," DC, 30 March 1988, p. 3; Bergsvik, "Sawyer Names Landfill Panel," DC, 31 March 1988, p. 3; Mike Wilkinson, "Deals, Dollars, and Dumps on the Southeast Side," TNW, May–June 1988, pp. 3–5; Jonathan Kaufman, "Black Power Brokers Ready to Rise in Tandem with a New President," WSJ, 6 November 2008; DJG interviews with Bruce Orenstein, Howard Stanback, Judy Byrd, Mary Ellen Montes, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Hazel Johnson, Phil Mullins, Dan Lee, George Schopp, Alma Avalos, Marlene Dillard, Margaret Bagby, Dominic Carmon, and Bob Klonowski.

76. Obama, DFMF, pp. 227, 290–91; Robert Matthews Johnson, The First Charity (Seven Locks Press, July 1988), p. 171; Emil Jones Jr., Illinois State Senate, 93rd General Assembly, 8 November 2004, pp. 11–13; Yvonne Lloyd in "A Rusty Toyota . . . ," WP, 11 February 2007, p. B3; DJG interviews with Johnnie Owens, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Eddie Knox, Rick Williams, Dan Lee, Cathy Askew, Tommy West, Adrienne Jackson, Marlene Dillard, Alma Jones, Ernest Powell, Betty Garrett, Tyrone Partee, Alvin Love, Yvonne Lloyd, Margaret Bagby, Nadyne Griffin, Howard Stanback, Emil Jones Jr., Renee Brereton, and Linda Randle.

77. Vi Czachorski, "From the Editor's Scratchpad," HN, 7 April 1988, p. 1; Robert Bergsvik, "Mayor's Landfill Panel Ripped by Coalition," DC, 7 April 1988, pp. 1, 9; Bergsvik, "Landfill Option Reopened," DC, 8 April 1988, p. 3; "No More Landfills," DC, 10 April 1988, p. 4; Bergsvik, "Dump Referendum Sought for SE Side Wards," DC, 11 April 1988, p. 3; "Vote on Landfills," DC, 13 April 1988, p. 4; Casey Bukro, "Dump Urged for Southeast Side," CT, 15 April 1988, p. C4; Bergsvik, "Sawyer Aide Pushes Landfill Moratorium," DC, 15 April 1988, pp. 1, 12; Bergsvik, "Paxton Files Second Lawsuit," DC, 17 April 1988, p. 3; Phil Kadner, "Some People Treated Worse Than Garbage," DC, 18 April 1988, p. 3; Mike Nolan, "Hegewisch Residents Urged to Speak Out on Landfills," DC, 19 April 1988, p. 5; Czachorski, "Task Force Meets Again," HN, 21 April 1988, pp. 1, 6; Bukro, "Illinois EPA Wants to Shut Southeast Side Incinerator," CT, 22 April 1988; Bergsvik, "Delay Urged for Landfill Decision," DC, 24 April 1988, p. 2; Nolan, "Landfill Expansion Battle May Go to Court," DC, 26 April 1988, pp. 1, 5; "Landfill Meeting Changed," DC, 27 April 1988, p. 7; John Jeter and Harlan Draeger, "Corps Report Outlines S. Side Wetlands Uses," CST, 27 April 1988, p. 25; Czachorski, "From the Editor's Scratchpad," and "IEPA Requests Shutdown," HN, 28 April 1988, p. 1; Czachorski, "From the Editor's Scratch Pad," HN, 5 May 1988, pp. 1, 5; Bergsvik, "Pollution Study Proposed," DC, 5 May 1988, pp. 1, 12; Harlan Draeger, "Landfill Idea Sparks 'War,'" CST, 5 May 1988, p. 32; Mark Brown, "Calumet Cleanup Panel Voted," CST, 7 May 1988, p. 7; Draeger, "Trash Squeeze Heats Landfill Fight," CST, 8 May 1988, p. 36; Bergsvik, "Cap Tops Landfill Activist List," DC, 9 May 1988, pp. 1, 12; Czachorski, "A War Against O'Brien Locks," HN, 12 May 1988, pp. 1, 5; Bergsvik, "Steel Firms Challenge Suit Against EPA," DC, 15 May 1988, pp. 1, 18; John Gallagher, "Dolton to Say No to Landfill," DC, 18 May 1988, pp. 1, 9; Bergsvik, "Sawyer Response Sought on Landfill," DC, 19 May 1988, p. 14; "Our Petition Drive," DC, 26 May 1988, p. 4; Wilkinson, "Deals, Dollars, and Dumps on the Southeast Side," DJG interviews with Mary Ellen Montes, Howard Stanback, Bruce Orenstein, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Dominic Carmon, and Bob Klonowski.

78. Greg Galluzzo 1987 planning diary, GGP; Galluzzo to Mariita Conley, 2 December 1987, Gamaliel Papers; Woods Fund Report for the Year 1987, pp. 3, 23; Obama, "Why Organize?," Illinois Issues, August–September 1988, pp. 40–42; Woods Fund Report for the Year 1989, p. 23; Wayne Klatt, untitled review, Illinois Historical Journal 84 (Autumn 1991): 211–12; Obama, DFMF, pp. 104, 115; David Moberg, "Obama's Third Way," NHI Shelterforce #149, Spring 2007; Obama in Ariel Sabar, "For Obama, Bipartisan Aims, Party-Line Votes," CSM, 17 April 2008, p. 1; Jeffrey Goldberg, "Obama on Zionism and Hamas," TheAtlantic.com, 12 May 2008; Obama in Ryan Lizza, "Making It: How Chicago Shaped Obama," New Yorker, 21 July 2008; Obama on "Barack Obama Revealed," CNN, 20 August 2008; Wolffe, Renegade, p. 64; Obama Remarks to Campaign Staff, Chicago, 7 November 2012; DJG interviews with Greg Galluzzo, Mary Gonzales, David Kindler, Kevin Jokisch, Mike Kruglik, Jean Rudd, Fred Simari, Sheila Jager, and Ted Aranda. See also Greg Galluzzo, "Community Organizing Through Faith-Based Networks," and Mike Kruglik, "Faith-Based Organizing and Core Values," in M. Paloma Pavel, ed., Breakthrough Communities (MIT Press, 2009), pp. 231–33 and 234–35, and Wade Rathke, "Greg Galluzzo of Gamaliel Begins to Look Back," Social Policy, Spring 2011, pp. 55–56. On Mike Kruglik and SSAC's focus on housing rehabilitation, see David Greising, "Housing Re-Starts," CST, 5 October 1988, p. 48.

79. Lawrence Bommer, "'Ma Rainey' Sings Again in City Premiere," CT, 8 January 1988; Richard Christiansen, "'Ma Rainey' Bursts Out in a Vivid Spectacle," CT, 14 January 1988; Christiansen, "Pegasus' 'Ma Rainey' Packs Both Power, Pity," CT, 28 February 1988; Jay Pridmore, "Spertus Exhibit Centers on Impact of the Eichmann Trial," CT, 8 April 1988, p. 56; Ann Marie Lipinski and Dean Baquet, "Sawyer Aide's Ethnic Slurs Stir Uproar," CT, 1 May 1988; Andrew Herrmann and Phillip J. O'Connor, "Mayor Aide's Ouster Sought," and "Excerpts from Lectures by Cokely," CST, 1 May 1988; Cheryl Devall, "Sawyer Stands by Aide Who Made Ethnic Slurs," CT, 2 May 1988; Philip Franchine and Tim Gerber, "Mayor Rejects Calls to Punish Aide for Racial, Religious Slurs," CST, 2 May 1988; Lipinski and Devall, "Cokely's 'Sorry' Fails to End Fury," Devall, "Pressure Builds to Fire Mayoral Aide," and "Mayor Sawyer's Strange Tolerance," CT, 3 May 1988; Lynn Sweet and Ray Hanania, "Mayoral Aide Issues Apology as Furor Grows," CST, 3 May 1988; Lipinski and Devall, "Cokely Apology Fails to End Fury," Lipinski and James Strong, "Sawyer, Top Aides Huddle on Cokely," and Bruce Dold, "Why Mayor Treads Lightly on Cokely," CT, 4 May 1988; Sweet and Hanania, "Sawyer Hedges on Cokely," CST, 4 May 1988; Sweet and Hanania, "Cokely Decision Due Today," and Vernon Jarrett, "A Primer on Buffoonery," CST, 5 May 1988; Lipinski and Baquet, "Sawyer Fires Cokely," and David McCracken, "Spertus Exhibit a Different Look at Tradition," CT, 6 May 1988; Sweet, "Cokely Is Fired," CST, 6 May 1988; Doug Cassel, “Is Tim Evans for Real?,” CR, 16 March 1989; Obama, DFMF, p. 211; DJG interviews with Sheila Jager and Asif Agha. On Davis’s background, see his 2010 interview with Terence Sims.

80. William Snider, “Chicago’s ‘Summit’: A Populist Blueprint to Reshape Schools,” Education Week, 30 March 1988, pp. 1, 19; Karen M. Thomas, “$210 Million Price Tag Put on School Reform,” CT, 30 March 1988, p. 1; Thomas, “Lawmakers Cool to School Plan,” CT, 31 March 1988, p. 1; Thomas, “Critics Say School Reform Falls Short,” CT, 1 April 1988, p. 1; Robert Davis, “Criticism Mounts on Reform Plan,” CT, 7 April 1988, p. 8; Linda Lenz, “School Summit Has Blowup,” CST, 8 April 1988, p. 12; Chad Carlton, “Bill Seeks Reform of City Schools,” CT, 14 April 1988, p. 2; Patrick J. Keleher 1988 pocket Day-Timers (18 [“Call Barack”] and 19 April 1988 [showing Barack at “LU”—Loyola University—at 6 P.M.]), PJKP; Rudolph Unger, “Some School Reformers Hit for Bypassing Rules,” CT, 20 April 1988, p. 6; Snider, “State Board Calls for Chicago Reform Monitor,” Education Week, 27 April 1988, p. 8; Daniel Egler and Tim Franklin, “Sawyer Backs State Income-Tax Hike,” CT, 27 April 1988, p. 1; Lynn Sweet, “Sawyer Pushes Hike in State Income Tax,” CST, 27 April 1988, p. 3; Thomas, “School Summit Rebuffs Legislators,” CT, 29 April 1988, p. 1; Lenz, “School Summit Wants Outsiders Kept Out,” CST, 29 April 1988, p. 16; Manford Byrd Jr., “School Board Working Hard for Reform,” CT, 30 April 1988, p. 10; Lenz, “Scaling the Summit of City School Reform,” CST, 1 May 1988, pp. 4–5, 32; Tracey Robinson, “New Aim: ‘Local’ Schools,” CST, 2 May 1988, pp. 7–8; Lenz, “School Reform Role for France,” and Neil Steinberg, “Can School ‘Choice’ Work?,” CST, 3 May 1988, pp. 1, 6, 7; Lenz, “Schools Try to Boost Odds,” CST, 4 May 1988, pp. 6–7; Alf Siewers, “Bad Teachers a Sour Spot,” CST, 5 May 1988, pp. 7–8; Lenz, “School Reform Unit Urged,” CST, 7 May 1988, p. 8; Cindy Richards, “Bottom Line: Education,” CST, 8 May 1988, p. 11; Ezra Bowen, “A New Battle Over School Reform,” Time, 9 May 1988; Bonita Brodt, “At Goudy, the Future Dies Early,” and “Reforming the Nation’s Worst Schools,” CT, 15 May 1988, pp. 1, 2; Patrick Reardon and R. Bruce Dold, “No Clout and No Concern Add Up to No Education,” CT, 17 May 1988, p. 1; Brodt, “For Many Pupils, Learning Never Starts at Home,” CT, 18 May 1988, p. 1; Michele Norris and Jean Latz Griffin, “Pupils May Move On, but Inept Teachers Stay On,” CT, 19 May 1988, p. 1; Egler and Thomas, “Legislators Take Lead on School Reform,” CT, 20 May 1988, p. 1; Griffin and Jack Houston, “Bureaucrats Bungle, Students Pay the Price,” CT, 22 May 1988, p. 1; Reardon, “Manford Byrd’s View from the Top,” CT, 22 May 1988, p. 11; Griffin and Norris, “Teachers Union Has Power to Run System,” CT, 23 May 1988, p. 1; Reardon and Owen Youngman, “City Brings Up the Rear in Taxes for Education,” CT, 24 May 1988, p. 1; Reardon and Merrill Goozner, “City’s Willing to Pay for Good Schools, Poll Says,” CT, 24 May 1988, p. 11; “How to Fix America’s Worst Schools,” CT, 29 May 1988, p. 2; Michael D. Klemens, “The Emerging Form of Chicago School Reform,” Illinois Issues, June 1988, pp. 10–12; “Education Summit Challenges System, Community,” [Chicago Community] Trust Quarterly, Summer 1988, pp. 24–26; Kyle and Kantowicz, Kids First, pp. 243–47, 251–58, 265; Loretta Augustine-Herron in Abdon M. Pallasch, “Taught Residents to Lobby,” CST, 24 August 2008, p. A15; DJG interviews with Loretta Augustine-Herron, Rosa Thomas, Aletha Strong, Ann West, Gwendolyn LaRoche Rogers, Danny Solis, Phil Mullins, Don Moore, Robert Gannett, Miguel del Valle, and Bill Ayers. Kyle and Kantowicz’s superb Kids First, p. 265n12, cites “Key Hispanic and Black Community Organizations Endorse HB #3707,” 16 May 1988, CURE-Haymarket Papers, which were later given to the Chicago Historical Society. The remade Chicago History Museum has failed to process those papers, reports that its inventory of them makes particular subject files impossible to locate, and is unable to retrieve them from its own remote storage facility. Debbie Vaughan e-mails to DJG, 6 and 8 April 2011.

81. 1989 University of Chicago Student Directory, p. 58; Invitation, Dick Longworth to Frank Lumpkin, 2 May 1988, Roberta Lynch to Lumpkin, n.d., and Program, “A Tribute to Frank Lumpkin,” 22 May 1988, all FLP Box 6 Fld. 3; Pat Harper, “Lumpkin Honored at Dinner,” DC, 23 May 1988, p. 3; “Hanging Tough,” DC, 26 May 1988, p. 4; Obama, DFMF, p. 302; Obama in Jacob Weisberg, “The Path to Power,” Men’s Vogue, September 2006, pp. 218–23; Loretta Augustine-Herron in Christopher Andersen, Barack and Michelle (William Morrow, 2009), pp. 107, 113; Bruce Orenstein in McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, p. 178; Maraniss, BOTS, p. 570; DJG interviews with Sheila Jager, Mary Ellen Montes, Cynthia Norris, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Bruce Orenstein, Greg Galluzzo, Yvonne Lloyd, Dan Lee, Betty Garrett, Margaret Bagby, John Webster, Tom Kaminski, Len Dubi, and Cathy Askew.

82. Barack Obama to Sheila Jager, 29 May 1988; Obama to Cynthia Norris, n.d., Norris Papers; Chris Peachment, “Gently Does It, Bruno,” Times (London), 22 June 1988; David Robinson, “Engagement Is Broken,” Times (London), 23 June 1988; Nigel Andrews, “At Odds with the Angels,” FT, 24 June 1988, p. 17; George Perry, “Angel Who Came in from the Cold,” Sunday Times (London), 26 June 1988; Obama, DFMF, pp. 299–436, esp. 299–301, 306, 311, 328–29, 338–47, 381, 431–34, 436; Maina wa Kinyatti, Kenya’s Freedom Struggle: The Dedan Kimathi Papers (Zed Books, April 1988); Obama on Fresh Air with Dave Davies, NPR, 12 August 2004; Obama on The Friday Night Show with Bob Sirott, WTTW, 3 December 2004; Laurie Goering, “Obama Campaign Closely Watched—in Kenya,” CT, 10 October 2004, p. 1; Obama Commencement Address, University of Massachusetts at Boston, 2 June 2006; Obama, “An Honest Government, a Hopeful Future,” University of Nairobi, 28 August 2006; Macharia Gaiho and Julie Gichuru, “Obama: ‘I Speak What I Think Is True and Say It Best,’” Nation (Nairobi), 1 September 1986; Carole Norris Green, “A Postcard from Barack,” Catholic San Francisco, 30 January 2009, p. 13; Auma Obama in “Obama as We Knew Him,” Observer, 26 October 2008, pp. 4–7; Auma Obama, And Then Life Happens, pp. 189–204; George Obama with Damien Lewis, Homeland (Simon & Schuster, 2010), pp. 17–18; Mike W. Thomas, “Technology Is Helping Secure Firm’s Future,” San Antonio Business Journal, 8 August 2010; Zeituni Onyango, Tears of Abuse (Afripress, 2012), p. 196; Ezra Ogosha Obama, aka Obeid, in Malik Obama, Barack Obama Sr. (Xlibris, 2012), p. 320; Kelvin Chann (AP), “Obama’s Brother Writes About Abuse,” 18 December 2013; Jenni Marsh, “The Other Obama,” South China Morning Post, 22 March 2014; Mark Obama Ndesandjo, An Obama’s Journey (Lyons Press, 2014), pp. 144–58, 365–72; Jason Horowitz, “The Catholic Roots of Obama’s Activism,” NYT, 23 March 2014, p. A1; DJG interviews with Sheila Jager, Cynthia Norris, Cathy Askew, Hasan and Raazia Chandoo, and Zeituni Onyango. The book about Africa Barack read while in Europe was probably either David Lamb’s The Africans (Random House, 1983) or, perhaps more likely, Sanford J. Ungar’s Africa: The People and Politics of an Emerging Continent (Simon & Schuster, 1985). See Alan Cowell, “Inside Africa 30 Years Later,” NYTBR, 6 February 1983, pp. 7, 14, Xan Smiley, “Sub-Saharan Balance Sheet,” NYTBR, 1 September 1985, pp. 4–5, and Gilbert Khadiagala’s untitled review of both books in SAIS Review of International Affairs 6 (Winter–Spring 1986): 255–57. Note as well Elspeth Huxley, Out in the Midday Sun: My Kenya (Viking, 1987), and Mort Rosenblum and Doug Williamson, Squandering Eden: Africa at the Edge (Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1987). See Louisa Dawkins, “Steaming to Mombasa,” NYTBR, 22 March 1987, p. 20, and James Brooke, “A Continent Left Behind,” NYTBR, 29 November 1987, pp. 7, 9.

83. Johnnie Owens in Linda Matchan, “A Law Review Breakthrough,” BG, 15 February 1990, p. 29; Obama, “Community Revitalization,” Nebraska Wesleyan University Forum, 9 September 1994; Obama’s 7 February 2004 interview with David Axelrod; Michael Levenson and Jonathan Saltzman, “At Harvard Law, A Unifying Voice,” BG, 28 January 2007, p. A1; Secter and McCormick, “Portrait of a Pragmatist,” CT, 30 March 2007; Cassandra Butts in “A Rusty Toyota, a Mean Jump Shot, Good Ears,” WP, 11 February 2007, p. B3; Owens in Smith, “Ascent of Mr. Charisma,” Sunday Times Magazine, 23 March 2008, in Indira A. R. Lakshmanan, “Obama Draws on Lessons from Chicago Streets to Propel Campaign,” Bloomberg, 3 July 2008, on Tell Me More, NPR, 23 July 2008, in McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, p. 181, and in Lisa Lerer, “Obama Decades-Old Shooting Scare Guides Anti-Poverty Plan,” Bloomberg, 19 February 2013; Kellman on “Obama Presidential Announcement Reaction,” C-Span, 10 February 2007, in Brian DuBose, “Obama’s Early Near-Miss,” WT, 26 July 2007, p. A1, and in Liza Mundy, “A Series of Fortunate Events,” WP Magazine, 12 August 2007, pp. 10ff.; Jeremiah Wright in Erin Meyer, “Where Obama Developed His Audacity of Hope,” HPH, 14 February 2007, p. 20; Martin Peretz, “Standing by His Man,” TNR, 23 April 2008 (Wright as “his father’s vagrant presence”); Wright on Robert Beckford, “God Bless You Barack Obama?,” BBC 2, 25 January 2010; DJG interviews with Sheila Jager, Johnnie Owens, Mike Kruglik, Jean Rudd, Ken Rolling, Richard J. Kaplan, Bruce Orenstein, Mary Ellen Montes, Alma Avalos, Marlene Dillard, Dominic Carmon, Margaret Bagby, Hazel Johnson, Bob Klonowski, Yvonne Lloyd, George Schopp, Mary Ryan, Cathy Askew, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Dan Lee, Cynthia Norris, Jerry Kellman, Zeituni Onyango, Hermene Hartman, and Jeremiah Wright.

On Chicago’s Southeast Side landfill developments, see Robert Bergsvik, “Health Official Warns of Leaks,” DC, 10 June 1988, pp. 1, 14; Bergsvik, “Officials Mum on Extension of Landfill Ban,” and “Extend Moratorium,” DC, 12 June 1988, pp. 1, 4, 14; Vi Czachorski, “From the Editor’s Scratch Pad,” HN, 16 June 1988, p. 1, and 28 July 1988, pp. 1, 5; Czachorski, “Waste Management Holds Closed Meeting,” HN, 11 August 1988, pp. 1, 4; Final Report of Mayor’s Southeast Chicago Community Task Force on the Environment and Solid Waste Disposal, 24 August 1988, RGP; Press Release, “Mayor Sawyer Supports Solid Waste Task Force Recommendations,” 21 September 1988, JLP Box 38 Fld. Chicago Works Together; Cheryl Devall, “Southeast Side Group Wants End to New Dumps,” CT, 22 September 1988, p. C2; Ray Hanania, “Bar 134th St. Dump, S.E. Siders Ask Sawyer,” CST, 22 September 1988; “SE Side Task Force Demands Landfill Tradeoffs,” TNW, October–November 1988, pp. 25, 28; People for Community Recovery, “Crossroads Fund’s Grantee Fiscal and Progress Report,” n.d. [ca. November 1988], CFP Box 30 Fld. 367; Citizens for a Better Environment, United Neighborhood Organization of Southeast Chicago & Mary Ellen Montes v. Thomas, 704 F. Supp. 149 (N.D. Ill.), 10 January 1989; Stevenson Swanson, “City Toughens Its Landfill Rules,” CT, 9 March 1989, p. C3; Steven A. Salzman to Jean Anne Kingrey (DOJ), 31 October 1989, RGP; Swanson, “Waste Firm Deals for Landfill Gap,” CT, 24 November 1989, p. 8; Salzman to Harlee Strauss, 12 December 1989, RGP; Larry Galica, “Residents Protest Landfill Proposal,” Northwest Indiana Times, 24 May 1994; AP, “3 Ill. Bank Executives Indicted,” 6 February 1998; Matt O’Connor, “2 Banks Admit to Looting Funds for Political Use,” CT, 24 June 1999; “Former Bank Chief Pleads Guilty in Thefts of Unclaimed Cash,” CT, 8 October 1999; “18-Month Sentence for Ex-Bank President,” CT, 21 January 2000; Casey Sanchez, “Building Power,” Chicago Reporter, January 2006; Dan Mihalopoulos and Azam Ahmed, “A Rising Force in Hispanic Chicago,” CT, 22 June 2009; Mihalopoulos, “A Lifetime of Close Ties and Growing Influence,” NYT, 14 January 2012; DJG interviews with Howard Stanback, Bruce Orenstein, and Mary Ryan.

On school reform developments, see C. D. Matthews, “UNO Wants More Parent Participation in Schools,” DC, 27 May 1988, pp. 1, 11; Daniel Egler and Jean Latz Griffin, “House Expected to Hear Reform Proposals,” CT, 1 June 1988, p. 1; Karen M. Thomas, “House Democrats Wait to Hear From Chicago in School Bills,” CT, 2 June 1988, p. 7; “How Lawmakers Can Help the Schools,” CT, 5 June 1988, p. 2; Thomas and Constanza Montana, “School Board Seeks Reform Now,” CT, 7 June 1988, p. 6; Maudlyne Ihejirika, “2,500 at Rally Demand School Reform Measure,” CST, 7 June 1988, p. 2; William Snider, “Reform Measure for Chicago Schools Unveiled,” Education Week, 8 June 1988, p. 9; Devall and Thomas, “Oversight Board Urged for Schools,” CT, 9 June 1988, p. 1; Thomas and Griffin, “Teachers May Bend for School Reform,” CT, 15 June 1988, p. 1; Peter S. Willmott, “Essentials of School Reform,” DC, 22 June 1988, p. 5; Jack Houston, “School Board Exec Quits in Frustration,” CT, 23 June 1988, p. 1; Griffin and Thomas, “Democrats Offer School Plan,” CT, 24 June 1988, p. 1; Thomas and Griffin, “General Assembly Limping into Home Stretch,” CT, 26 June 1988, p. 1; Griffin and Thomas, “Democrats’ School Plan Under Fire,” CT, 28 June 1988, p. 1; Dave Roeder, “School Reform Consensus Reached,” DC, 29 June 1988, pp. 1, 16; Roeder, “School Reform Bill Faces GOP Hurdle,” DC, 30 June 1988, pp. 1, 12; Lynn Sweet, “Plan Gives Governor Bigger Role on Schools,” CST, 2 July 1988, p. 6; Sweet, “School Bill OK’d,” CST, 3 July 1988, pp. 1, 10; Griffin, “School Plan Now Faces the Real Test,” CT, 3 July 1988, p. 12; Devall and Thomas, “City School Reforms Add Spark but Lack Funding Fuel,” CT, 4 July 1988, p. 8; Sweet, “School Funding Level Hit,” CST, 4 July 1988; Sweet, “Praise, Caution Greet School Reforms,” CST, 5 July 1988, p. 20; Barbara Marsh, “Small School Win Leaves Reformers with Tough Job,” CCB, 11 July 1988, p. 3; Patrick Reardon, “School Reform Bill Hurts Poor Children, Byrd Says,” CT, 16 July 1988, p. 5; Sweet, “Byrd Rips School Bill,” CST, 16 July 1988, p. 12; Al Raby and Kale Williams, “School Reform a Triumph of People,” CT, 27 July 1988, p. 18; Mary O’Connell, “Organizing Effort Pays Off for Schools,” TNW, August–September 1988, pp. 3–6; Michael D. Klemens, “Chicago Schools: Reform to Come but No Money,” Illinois Issues, August–September 1988, pp. 43–44; William Snider, “Illinois Awaiting Governor’s Pen on Chicago Plan,” Education Week, 3 August 1988; Florence Hamlish Levinsohn, “School Revolt,” CR, 26 May 1989; Moore, “Voice and Choice,” pp. 167–171; Mary O’Connell, School Reform Chicago Style, pp. 16–21 and esp. 40, which lists DCP as a June 1988 member of the ABCs Coalition and “Prof. William Ayers” as ABCs contact person; Hess, School Restructuring, pp. 59–78; Kyle and Kantowicz, Kids First, pp. 257, 262–64, 267–79; Dan A. Lewis and Kathryn Nakagawa, Race and Educational Reform in the American Metropolis (SUNY Press, 1995), pp. 85–91; Shipps, “Big Business and School Reform,” pp. 273–75; Shipps, School Reform, Corporate Style, pp. 115–27; DJG interviews with Danny Solis, Phil Mullins, and Bill Ayers.

CHAPTER FIVE: EMERGENCE AND ACHIEVEMENT

1. Obama Onyango, “Soul to Soul,” Ebony, August 1971, p. 14; “Notice of Federal Tax Lien,” #49017340, 11 April 1990 (Omar O. Obama) & #49245786, 10 June 1992 (Obama O. Onyango); Michael Levenson and Jonathan Saltzman, “At Harvard Law, A Unifying Voice,” BG, 28 January 2007, p. A1; Rachel Rose-Sandow, “Obama’s Somerville Apartment a Source of Pride,” GateHouse News Service, 14 October 2008; James Bone, “Found in a Rundown Boston Estate,” Times (London), 30

October 2008; Alan Wirzbicki, "Obama's Old Digs," BG, 7 March 2011; Denise Lavoie (AP), "Obama Uncle Held in Mass. by Immigration Officials," 29 August 2011; Billy Baker and Glen Johnson, "Obama Kin Arrested on DUI Charge," BG, 30 August 2011; Maria Sacchetti and Dan Adams, "Obama's Uncle Is Called a Fugitive," BG, 31 August 2011; Sacchetti and John R. Ellement, "Obama's Uncle Set to Fight Deportation," BG, 1 September 2011; Sally Jacobs, The Other Barack (Public Affairs, 2011), pp. 151–53; Jacobs, "The Trials of Omar, Obama's Uncle," BG, 8 January 2012; Clennon L. King, "Few Neighbors Recall Obama During Harvard Years," Somerville Times, 19 May 2013; Matt Byrne, "Obama's Stay in Somerville Explored by Students," BG, 21 September 2013; Sacchetti, "Judge Says Obama's Uncle Can Stay in U.S.," BG, 3 December 2013; Sacchetti, "In Reversal, Obama Says He Lived with Uncle," BG, 5 December 2013; DJG interviews with Zeituni Onyango.

Harvard Law School 1988–89 Catalog, esp. pp. 4–5, 16, 65–67; Dan Kroll, "Bell Questions Minority Hiring," David Snouffer, "Denied Again, Dalton Waits," and Andrew Pollis and Jeff Gershowitz, "Jackson Fleeing Faculty Turmoil?," Harvard Law Record [HLRec], 15 April 1988, pp. 1, 4, 5, 7, and 14; "Vorenberg Steps Down from Deanship," HLRec, 29 April 1988, pp. 1, 4, 14, and 16; "Black Law Students Occupy Harvard Law School Dean's Office Protesting Faculty Hiring Practices," BLSA Press Release, 10 May 1988, p. 25 of Special Edition—BLSA Memo, Vol. 1, No. 1, Spring/Fall 1988, 50 pp., Harvard Law School Archives [HLSA] (also esp. p. 7); Michelle Robinson, "Minority and Women Law Professors: A Comparison of Teaching Styles," in Special Edition—BLSA Memo, pp. 30–33; Jonathan S. Cohn, "Bok: New Law Dean by Spring," Harvard Crimson [HC], 14 September 1988; Erick Hachenburg, "One L Class Is Select & Diverse," HLRec, 16 September 1988, pp. 1, 9; "Dean Search Gets Student Input," HC, 28 September 1988; Dan Kroll and Hachenburg, "Interesting First Years Arrive at HLS," HLRec, 7 October 1988, p. 3; Tara A. Nayak, "A Confident Vision in Turbulent Times," HC, 8 June 1989; Allan R. Gold, "Departing Dean Looks Back at Dream and Reality," NYT, 23 June 1989, p. B10; Linda Matchan, "Harvard Law Dean Leaving with Sadness," BG, 28 June 1989, p. 29; Richard D. Kahlenberg, Broken Contract: A Memoir of Harvard Law School (Hill & Wang, 1992), esp. pp. 5–7, 17, 120; Eleanor Kerlow, Poisoned Ivy (St. Martin's Press, 1994), p. 51; William Glaberson, "James Vorenberg, Watergate Prosecutor's Right-Hand Man, Dies at 72," NYT, 13 April 2000; Harvard Law School, Report on the State of Black Alumni, 1869–2000 (HLS, 2002), esp. pp. 18, 21; George W. Hicks Jr., "The Conservative Influence of the Federalist Society on the Harvard Law School Student Body," Harvard Journal of Law & Public Policy 29 (Spring 2006): 623–712, esp. pp. 684, 701; David B. Wilkins, "The New Social Engineers in the Age of Obama," Howard Law Journal 53 (Spring 2010): 557–644, esp. p. 560; Kevin K. Washburn, "Elena Kagan and the Miracle at Harvard," Journal of Legal Education 61 (August 2011): 67–75, esp. p. 67; Robert Granfield, "Legal Education as Corporate Ideology: Student Adjustment to the Law School Experience," Sociological Forum 1 (June 1986): 514–23; Granfield and Thomas Koenig, "From Activism to Pro Bono: The Redirection of Working Class Altruism at Harvard Law School," Critical Sociology 17 (April 1990): 57–80, esp. pp. 58, 71, 74, 78; Granfield, "Making It by Faking It: Working-Class Students in an Elite Academic Environment," Journal of Contemporary Ethnography 20 (October 1991): 331–51; Granfield and Koenig, "The Fate of Elite Idealism: Accommodation and Ideological Work at Harvard Law School," Social Problems 39 (November 1992): 315–31, esp. 318, 320, 327; Granfield and Koenig, "Learning Collective Eminence: Harvard Law School and the Social Production of Elite Lawyers," Sociological Quarterly 33 (Winter 1992): 503–20;

Granfield, Making Elite Lawyers: Visions of Law at Harvard and Beyond (Routledge, 1992); DJG interviews with Linda Singer and Verna Myers.

The literature plumbing the substance and impact of Roberto Unger's scholarly writings is truly vast. From the perspective of 1988, the best frame of reference for grasping Unger's import is offered by the fourteen articles that comprise the Summer 1987 issue (Vol. 81, No. 4) of Northwestern University Law Review. See also Eyal Press, "The Passion of Roberto Unger," Lingua Franca, March 1999. Regarding BLSA, no other issues of BLSA Memo are held by the HLS Archives, and no African American law student from 1988–91 recalls any BLSA newsletter.

2. HLS Adviser, Vol. 20, #1, 1 September 1988, p. 5; Harvard Law School 1988–89 Catalog, pp. 22–24; Harvard Law School First Year Students 1988–1989, Rob Fisher Papers [RFP]; Section 3 List (incomplete—99 names), Gina Torielli Papers [GTP]; Robert M. Fisher, The Logic of Economic Discovery: Neoclassical Economics and the Marginal Revolution (NYU Press, 1986), esp. chapter 2; A. W. Coats, review of The Logic of Economic Discovery, Kyklos 40 (March 1987): 118–19; Philip Mirowski, review of The Logic of Economic Discovery, Journal of Economic History 47 (March 1987): 295–96; P. J. Eijgelshoven, review, De Economist 135 (July 1987): 257–59 ("clearly written"); DJG interviews with Rob Fisher, Richard Cloobek, Eric Collins, Diana Derycz-Kessler, Mark Kozlowski, Jennifer (Radding) Gardner Trulson, Sarah Leah Whitson, and Scott Becker.

On Lakatos, see especially his own posthumous Proofs and Refutations: The Logic of Mathematical Discovery (Cambridge University Press, 1976), Jancis Long, "Lakatos in Hungary," Philosophy of the Social Sciences 28 (June 1998): 244–311, Matteo Motterlini, ed., For and Against Method (University of Chicago Press, 1999), John Kadvaný, Imre Lakatos and the Guises of Reason (Duke University Press, 2001), Alex Bandy, Chocolate and Chess: Unlocking Lakatos (Akademiai Kiado, 2010), and Kadvaný, "Chocolate and Chess (Unlocking Lakatos)," Philosophy of the Social Sciences 42 (June 2012): 276–86.

3. HLS Schedule of Courses 1988–89, HLSA; HLS Adviser, #1, 1 September 1988, pp. 6–7; Ian R. Macneil, Contracts: Exchange Transactions and Relations, 2nd ed. (Foundation Press, 1987), pp. xvii, xix; DJG interviews with Alicia Rubin Yamin, Michelle Jacobs DeLong, David Attisani, Eric Collins, Richard Cloobek, Amy Christian McCormick, Lisa Hay, Martin Siegel, Mark Kozlowski, Morris Ratner, David Troutt, Paolo Di Rosa, Jennifer (Radding) Gardner Trulson, Greg Sater, Sarah Leah Whitson, Rob Fisher, Tim Driscoll, Gina Torielli, Jackie Fuchs, Shannon Schmoyer, Steve Berkow, Diana Derycz-Kessler, Ken Mack, Lauren Ezrol Klein, Sima Sarrafan, Erin Edmonds, David Smail, Leonard Feldman, Lisa Paget-Kahn, Jonathan Z. King, and Yi-Fun Hsueh.

4. Melanie Eversley, "Best Supporting Actor," The Root, 1 October 2008; Obama in Meg Vaillancourt, "Derrick Bell Threatens to Leave Harvard," Ten O'Clock News, WGBH, 24 April 1990, bostonlocaltv.org; Dawn Ross, "Program Offers Minority Survival Kit," HLRec, 30 September 1988, p. 3; "Obama Mentor Charles Ogletree Shares Insight on Our President," Essence.com, 16 December 2009; DJG interviews with (Frank) Hill Harper, Kevin Little, Leon Bechet, Kenny Smith, David Hill, Jeffrey Selbin, Paolo Di Rosa, Jan-Michele Lemon Kearney, Ursula Dudley Oglesby, Cassandra Butts, Sheryll Cashin, Christine Lee, Alan Jenkins, and Erin Edmonds.

5. DJG interviews with Sheila Jager, Asif Agha, Rob Fisher, and Cassandra Butts.

6. Three Speech #1, 26 September 1988, #2, 2 October 1988, #3, 11 October 1988, #4, 17 October 1988, #5, 25 October 1988, #6, 31 October 1988, #7, 7 November 1988, #8, 15 November 1988, #9, 22

November 1988, #10, 6 December 1988, #11, 13 December 1988, #12, 14 December 1988, Mark Kozlowski Papers [MKP]; King, “Few Neighbors Recall Obama,” Somerville Times, 19 May 2013; George P. Hassett, “Obama Finally Pays Local Parking Tickets,” Somerville News, 7 March 2007; David Abel, “Obama Paid Late Parking Tickets,” BG, 8 March 2007, p. B1; Rudy Rodriguez, “Federalists Cry Foul Over Coalition Seat Assignments,” HLRec, 21 October 1988; Tara A. Nayak, “Sitting In and Speaking Out in a Search for Change,” HLRec, 8 June 1989; Andrew Blake, “Jackson, in N.E., Stresses Priorities Over Passion,” BG, 25 October 1988, p. 12; Joanne Ball, “Report Urges More Blacks on Faculty at Harvard,” BG, 25 October 1988, p. 17; Erick Hachenburg, “HLS Students Not Afraid of ‘L’ Word,” HLRec, 4 November 1988, p. 1; Jonathan S. Cohn, “Law Profs Debate Dean’s Role,” HC, 17 November 1988; Allan R. Gold, “Harvard Awaits Appointment of New Law Dean,” NYT, 2 December 1988, p. B9; Kahlenberg, Broken Contract, pp. 166–67; Ken Mack in “Barack Obama Before He Was a Rising Political Star,” Journal of Blacks in Higher Education, Autumn 2004, pp. 99–101; Mack, remarks at John F. Kennedy School of Government, 9 April 2007; Mack, “Even at Harvard, Obama Had a Knack for Bonding with Diverse People,” Harrisburg Patriot-News, 17 February 2008; Mack on Anderson Cooper 360, CNN, 15 April 2008; Mack’s 2012 interview with Jim Gilmore; Joe Fernandez and Emily Maranjian in M. Charles Bakst, “Brown Coach Robinson a Strong Voice for Brother-in-Law Obama,” Providence Journal, 20 May 2007, p. D1; Lisa Hay on Neal Conan, “Who Is Barack Obama?,” Talk of the Nation, NPR, 19 August 2008; Ayelet Waldman in Mark Matthews, “Classmate Speaks Fondly of Obama,” KGO-TV, San Francisco, 25 August 2008; Jackie Fuchs, “Why Barack Obama Reminds Me of Joan Jett,” Huffington Post, 26 August 2008; Jerry Sorkin, “The Great Obama,” NouvelleBlogger, 8 November 2008; Donald Gaffney in Don J. DeBenedictis, “Judicial Profile: Hon. Donald F. Gaffney,” Los Angeles Daily Journal, 16 March 2009; Edward Felsenthal in Richard Alley, “Edward Felsenthal Tames Web,” Memphis Commercial Appeal, 8 November 2009; Clifford Krauss, “Lawyer Who Beat Chevron in Ecuador Faces Trial of His Own,” NYT, 31 July 2013; DJG interviews with David Shapiro, Morris Ratner, Edward Felsenthal, Jackie Fuchs, Brad Wiegmann, Ken Mack, Jan-Michele Lemon Kearney, Jeffrey Ellman, Steven Heinen, Paolo Di Rosa, Sarah Leah Whitson, Richard Cloobek, Rob Fisher, Amy Christian McCormick, Sherry Colb, Roger Boord, Jonathan Z. King, Sima Sarrafan, Alicia Rubin Yamin, David Troutt, Lisa Paget-Kahn, Martin Siegel, Scott Sherman, Steven Berkow, Greg Sater, David Attisani, Timothy Driscoll, Jennifer (Radding) Gardner Trulson, Erin Edmonds, Lauren Ezrol Klein, John “Vince” Eagan, Jackie Fuchs, Gina Torielli, Roger Boord, David Smail, Leonard Feldman, Lisa Hay, Diana Derycz-Kessler, Yi-Fun Hsueh, and Rachel Cano. For a professorial discussion of gunners and “turkey bingo,” see Robert M. Lloyd, “Why Every Student Should Be a Gunner,” University of Tennessee College of Law, 16 September 2011.

7. Three Speech #3, 11 October 1988, #6, 31 October 1988, MKP; David Rosenberg, “The Causal Connection in Mass Exposure Cases: A ‘Public Law’ Vision of the Tort System,” HLR 97 (February 1984): 849–929, esp. 928; Rosenberg, “The Dusting of America: A Story of Asbestos—Carnage, Cover-Up, and Litigation,” HLR 99 (May 1986): 1693–1706; Rosenberg, “Of End Games and Openings in Mass Tort Cases: Lessons From a Special Master,” Boston University Law Review 69 (May 1989): 695–730, esp. 695 and 698; DJG interviews with Rob Fisher, David Rosenberg, Mark Kozlowski, Richard Cloobek, Amy Christian McCormick, Eric Collins, David Attisani, Alicia Rubin Yamin, Steven Berkow, Diana Derycz-Kessler, and Jennifer Gardner Trulson.

8. Harvard Law School 1988–89 Catalog, esp. p. 5; HLS Adviser #2, 2 September 1988, p. 2; Harvard Law School Yearbook 1989, pp. 14, 145 (Obama fails to appear in the alphabetical presentation of the 1991 class); HLS Schedule of Courses 1988–89, HLSA; Mary Mitchell, “Memoir of a 21st Century History Maker,” Black Issues Book Review, January–February 2005, pp. 18–21; Cassandra Butts in David Mendell, From Promise to Power (Amistad, 2007), p. 92, on NPR’s “Tell Me More,” 22 February 2007, in Larissa MacFarquhar’s superb “The Conciliator: Where Is Barack Obama Coming From?,” New Yorker, 7 May 2007, pp. 48ff., and in John Heilemann, “When They Were Young,” New York Magazine, 22 October 2007; DJG, BTC, p. 7; Butts’s July 2008 interview with Jim Gilmore; Gina Torielli in David Jackson and Ray Long, “Obama Knows His Way Around a Ballot,” CT, 4 April 2007; Jackie Fuchs, “Why Barack Obama Reminds Me of Joan Jett,” Huffington Post, 26 August 2008; Maina Kiai, “Kenya: Learning from the Obama Campaign,” Nairobi Star, 9 September 2008; Richard Mauer, “Path Cleared in Ice, Whales Swim Free,” NYT, 27 October 1988; Cassandra Butts in Linda Kramer Jennings, “Meet the Women Who Can Handle Anything!,” Glamour, February 2009; DJG interviews with Kenny Smith, Paolo Di Rosa, Brad Wiegmann, Martin Siegel, Steven Berkow, Tim Driscoll, Greg Sater, Rob Fisher, Ken Rothwell, Cassandra Butts, Gina Torielli, David Troutt, Scott Sherman, Lisa Paget-Kahn, Ursula Dudley Oglesby, David Attisani, Sherry Colb, Jennifer Gardner Trulson, Mark Kozlowski, Sarah Leah Whitson, Rachel Cano, Diana Derycz-Kessler, Erin Edmonds, David Hill, Jackie Fuchs, Alan Jenkins, James Esseks, Scott Becker, Julius Genachowski, Dan Rabinovitz, and Thom Thacker.

9. Harvard Law School 1988–89 Catalog, esp. pp. 67–68 and 170; First Year Ames Committee to All Students in Sections I, III, and IV, “Dates for 1989 First-Year Ames,” 23 September 1988, and Board of Student Advisers First-Year Ames Committee to All Students in Sections I, III, and IV, “First-Year Ames Moot Court Program,” 31 October 1988, GTP; HLS Adviser #15, 8 December 1988, p. 4; Mahmood in Maraniss, BOTS, p. 497; “Civil Rights Organizer Al Raby, 55,” CT, 24 November 1988; Don Terry, “Albert Raby, Civil Rights Leader in Chicago with King, Dies at 55,” NYT; John Camper, “Al Raby’s Friends Tell of His Work,” CT, 30 November 1988; Judith S. Kleinfeld and Suzanne Yerian, eds., Gender Tales: Tensions in the Schools (St. Martin’s Press, 1995), pp. 179–92, at 182; Three Speech #10, 6 December 1988; DeBenedictis, “Judicial Profile: Hon. Donald F. Gaffney,” LADJ, 16 March 2009; Exams, Civil Procedure III and IV, 9 January 1989, Criminal Law III, 11 January 1989, and Torts IIIa, 13 January 1989, Harvard Law School Annual Examinations in Law 1988–89, pp. 19–23, 125–30, and 186–91; DJG interviews with Rob Fisher, Mark Kozlowski, Lisa Hertzler Schertler, Scott Becker, Beenu Mahmood, Asif Agha, Michelle Jacobs DeLong, Tim Driscoll, David Troutt, Scott Sherman, Gina Torielli, John Levi, and Geraldine Alexis.

10. “A Guide to Regional & Local Grantmakers,” [1988], p. 205 (noting a $25,000 Woods Fund grant to LIFT on 21 June 1988), Human SERVE Papers Box 16 Fld. 742; Stephen Rynkiewicz, “Back-to-Roots Look Could Spread Further,” CST, 6 November 1988; “Group Targets Abandoned, Run-Down Buildings,” Gary Post-Tribune [GPT], 5 February 1989; “Gary Gets a LIFT,” GPT, 8 February 1989; Woods Charitable Fund, Report for the Year 1989, esp. pp. 20–21; Wieboldt Foundation, Annual Report for 1989, p. 12; Peg Spindler in Jeff Manes, “‘Sister Peg’ Gives Her All for Those with Nothing,” GPT, 11 January 2009; Thomas D. Rush, Reality’s Pen: Reflections on Family, History & Culture (Mill City Press, 2012), pp. 55–56, 96–103, 231; Jerry Kellman’s 2008 interview with Jim Gilmore; Greg Galluzzo’s 2009 interview with Don Elmer; Obama, TAOH, p. 328; DJG interviews with Jerry Kellman,

Mike Kruglik, John Owens, Mary Gonzales, Greg Galluzzo, Danny Solis, Phil Mullins, Todd Dietterle, David Kindler, Betty Garrett, Aletha Strong Gibson, Dan Lee, Nadyne Griffin, Alvin Love, Desta Houston, Jean Rudd, Ken Rolling, Mary Ellen Montes, Thomas D. Rush, John Levi, and Geraldine Alexis.

Lena remarried in 1992, with George Schopp performing the ceremony. “Before I got married I felt it was important to throw away things,” namely “letters from Barack and postcards,” she explained in 2010. See also Ben Joravsky, “Trouble in Paradise,” CR, 25 July 1991, and Maria Elena Montes, “New Airport Offers South Side Hope,” CT, 14 February 1992. Additional spring 1989 GPT stories mentioning LIFT appeared on 19 February, 15, 21, and 27 March, 21, 25, and 27 April, and 10 and 13 May 1989.

On school reform developments during the last four months of 1988, see Karen M. Thomas, “School Reform Bill Is Amended,” CT, 27 September 1988, p. 1; Lynn Sweet and Linda Lenz, “Thompson Alters and Inks School Reform Bill,” CST, 27 September 1988, p. 7; Thomas and Jack Houston, “Teacher Union Vows to Fight Reform Bill,” CT, 28 September 1988, p. 6; Michael D. Klemens, “Governor Steps into Chicago School Reform,” Illinois Issues, November 1988, p. 25; Rob Karwath, “School Law Deal May Be Near,” CT, 24 November 1988, p. 6; Patricia Smith, “Kids Lobby for School Reform,” CST, 29 November 1988, p. 26; Daniel Egler and Jan Crawford, “School Reform Bill Approved,” CT, 2 December 1988, p. 1; Thomas, “City School Reform Is Signed into Law,” CT, 13 December 1988, p. 1; William Ayers, “Chicago’s Schools: The Real Work Can Get Underway,” CT, 19 December 1988, p. 19; Klemens, “Chicago School Reform Signed into Law,” Illinois Issues, January 1989, p. 28; David Bednarek, “Supporting Leaders for Tomorrow: Chicago Business Leadership and School Reform,” Institute for Educational Leadership, 1989, esp. pp. 21, 23; Donald R. Moore, “Voice and Choice in Chicago,” in Clune and Witte, eds., Choice and Control in American Education, Volume 2 (Falmer Press, 1990), pp. 171–72; Kyle and Kantowicz, Kids First, pp. 281–83; Jeffrey Mirel, “School Reform, Chicago Style: Educational Innovation in a Changing Urban Context, 1976–1991,” Urban Education 28 (July 1993): 116–49, esp. p. 137; and Rosetta Vasquez, Reforming Chicago Schools (LEPS Press, 1994), pp. 13–58. In context, see also John McCarron’s seven-part series of Chicago Tribune articles, “Chicago on Hold: The New Politics of Poverty,” which ran from 28 August 1988 through 4 September 1988, with the first (“‘Reform’ Takes Cost Toll,” 28 August) and seventh (Patrick Reardon and McCarron, “City Leaders Blew Schools Reform Chances,” 4 September 1988) addressing schools. See as well McCarron, “The Timid City,” CT, 4 September 1988, p. 1; “Exploiting the Housing Shortage,” CT, 7 September 1988, p. 20; Robert Mier, “City Official Rebuts Tribune’s Development Series,” CT, 16 October 1988, p. P1; and McCarron’s response to Mier, “It’s Past Time We Saw Some Results,” CT, 16 October 1988, p. P6.

11. Harvard Law School 1988–89 Catalog, esp. p. 71; HLS Adviser #19, 12 January 1989, p. 3; Syllabus, American Legal History: 1760–1900, Spring 1989, William “Terry” Fisher Papers; Three Speech #13, 25 January 1989, Three Speech #14, 2 February 1989, MKP; HLS Adviser #23, 9 February 1989, pp. 3–4; Three Speech #15, 14 February 1989, MKP; HLS Adviser #24, 16 February 1989, p. 3; HLS Adviser #25, 23 February 1989, p. 2; Three Speech #16, 3 March 1989, Three Speech #17, 27 April 1989, Three Speech #18, 9 May 1989, Three Screech #666 Abort Section 3 (by Jackie Fuchs), MKP; Paul Hutcheon, “The Scottish Professor Who Moulded the Young Obama,” Scotland Sunday Herald, 8 June 2008; DJG interviews with Rob Fisher, Mark Kozlowski, Cassandra Butts, David Attisani, Leonard Feldman, David Troutt, Jackie Fuchs, Jennifer Gardner Trulson, Martin Siegel, Sherry Colb, Paolo Di

Rosa, Rob Fisher, Ken Mack, Richard Cloobek, Edward Felsenthal, Tim Driscoll, Shannon Schmoyer, Roger Boord, Jan-Michele Lemon Kearney, Brad Wiegmann, and Steven Heinen. Glendon refuses to respond to requests to comment about her recollections of Obama. See Glendon's 27 April 2009 letter to University of Notre Dame president Father John Jenkins, declining to receive an honorary medal because her former student, whom she called "a prominent and uncompromising opponent of the Church's position on issues involving fundamental principles of justice," would be delivering the commencement address on the same platform. "Declining Notre Dame," FirstThings.com.

12. Troy Morgan, "Minority President, Supervising Editor Elected to Review," HLRec, 17 February 1989, pp. 1, 12; Tara A. Nayak, "Law Review Chooses Masthead," HC, 8 March 1989; Nayak, "Law School Dean Search Near Finish," HC, 1 February 1989; Jonathan S. Cohn, "Committee Was Wary of Clark," HC, 17 February 1989; Linda Matchan, "Conservative to Head Harvard Law," BG, 18 February 1989, p. 1; Allan Gold, "Traditionalist Is Named as Harvard Law Dean," NYT, 18 February 1989; Cohn and Nayak, "Clark Appointment Made Official," and Cohn, "Bok Opt's for 'Character' Over Consensus," HC, 18 February 1989; "Lux et Veritas Redux?," WSJ, 23 February 1989, p. 15; "Bok Taps Clark as New Dean," "Faculty Reactions Range From Praise to Scorn," and "Clark Responds to Charges of Faculty Divisiveness," HLRec, 24 February 1989, pp. 1, 5, 8–10, 16; "Students Meet with Clark," HC, 1 March 1989; Lisa Green Markoff, "Harvard's New Leader," Legal Times [LT], 6 March 1989, p. 4; Markoff, "Can New Harvard Dean Bring On a Calmer, Gentler Atmosphere?," LT, 20 March 1989, p. 4; Nayak, "HLS Students Protest Lack of Hispanic Profs," HC, 23 March 1989; Cohn, "Divided Law Faculty Finishes a Chapter," HC, 24 March 1989.

13. HLS Adviser #25, 23 February 1989; Robert M. Fisher HLS Transcript; Kahlenberg, Broken Contract, p. 51, First-Year Ames Committee to All Students in Sections I, III, and IV, "Dates for 1989 First-Year Ames," 23 September 1988, and Board of Student Advisers First-Year Ames Committee to All Students in Sections I, III, and IV, "First-Year Ames Moot Court Program," 31 October 1988, GTP; "1988–89 Ames Case Descriptions," n.d., "Indictment for Securities Fraud, United States of America v. Janine Egan," 22 pp., Barack Obama, "Issues Analysis—Hertzner Team—Insider Trading Cases—BSA Advisor Becker," n.d., 11 pp., and Barack Obama and Mark Kozlowski, U.S. Attorney's Office—Appellee, "Brief for the Prosecution—Appellee," Egan v. United States of America, Argument: March 23, 1989, Ames Courtroom, 7:30 P.M., 13 pp., Mark Kozlowski Papers; DJG interviews with Rob Fisher, Gina Torielli, Mark Kozlowski, Lisa Hertzner Schertler, and Scott Becker.

14. Macneil, Contracts, p. 963; Robert Lowe, "At Harvard: Sexism in the Paper Chase?," BG, 10 April 1989, pp. 33, 35; Tom Bilello, "Visiting Professor Responds to WLA Sexism Charges," and "Macneil Threatens Disciplinary Action for Absenteeism," HLRec, 14 April 1989, pp. 1, 3, 12; Erin Edmonds, "Macneil Reveals Hypocrisy," and Raymond D. Jasen, "Macneil Article Misleads," HLRec, 21 April 1989, pp. 4, 7; Ian R. Macneil, "Macneil Rebut's Sexism Charges," HLRec, 5 May 1989, pp. 4, 6; Chester E. Finn Jr., "The Campus: 'An Island of Repression in a Sea of Freedom,'" Commentary, September 1989, pp. 17–23; Richard Bernstein, "On Campus, How Free Should Free Speech Be?," NYT, 10 September 1989, p. IV-5; Ian R. Macneil, "Harvard Law School," Commentary, March 1990, pp. 10–11; Dinesh D'Souza, Illiberal Education (Free Press, 1991), pp. 197–99; Mark Tushnet, "Political Correctness, the Law, and the Legal Academy," Yale Journal of Law and the Humanities 4 (Winter 1992): 127–63, at 131–43 and 149–52; Kleinfeld and Yerian, eds., Gender Tales, pp. 179–92; Hutcheon,

“The Scottish Professor Who Moulded the Young Obama”; DJG interviews with Martin Siegel, Sherry Colb, Richard Cloobek, Erin Edmonds, Leonard Feldman, David Smail, Steven Heinen, Sarah Leah Whitson, Shannon Schmoyer, Jan-Michele Lemon Kearney, Jackie Fuchs, David Troutt, Lisa Hay, Ken Mack, Paolo Di Rosa, Rob Fisher, David Attisani, Michele Jacobs DeLong, Ali Rubin Yamin, Diana Derycz-Kessler, and Lauren Ezrol Klein. HLS Adviser #8, 13 October 1988, listed Section III’s two official Law School Council representatives as Lauren Ezrol and Kevin Mohan. Macneil died on 16 February 2010, at age eighty. Trevor Jensen, “Northwestern University Law Professor Ian Macneil,” CT, 21 February 2010, “Ian Macneil,” Telegraph, 23 February 2010.

15. HLS Adviser #30, 6 April 1989, pp. 3, 6; #31, 13 April 1989, p. 13; #33, 27 April 1989, p. 3; #35, 11 May 1989, pp. 1, 5; masthead pages, Harvard Civil Rights–Civil Liberties Law Review, Vol. 24, No. 1, Winter 1989 (date stamped 27 March 1989), and Vol. 24, No. 2, Spring 1989 (date stamped 7 August 1989) (the masthead pages appear in the hard copy issues, not in digitized versions); Exams, Legal History 100, Property III, Contracts III, and Civil Procedure III, Harvard Law School Annual Examinations in Law 1988–89, pp. 217–19, 160–68, 76–100, 24–31, Laurence Tribe on 20/20, ABC, 26 September 2008, in “Obama as We Knew Him,” Observer, 26 October 2008, pp. 4–7, and in Seth Stern, “A Commander in Chief,” Harvard Law Bulletin, Fall 2008; Newton Minow in Pauline Dubkin Yearwood, “Obama and the Jews,” Chicago Jewish News, 12 September 2008, and in Peter F. Zhu, “Obama’s Quiet Harvard Roots,” HC, 2 November 2008; Tribe, “Morning-After Pride,” Forbes.com, 5 November 2008; Tribe on “Obama Made a Strong First Impression at Harvard,” NPR, 22 May 2012; Tribe’s June 2012 interview with Jim Gilmore; Newton Minow’s June 2008 interview with Jim Gilmore; DJG interviews with Rob Fisher, David Rosenberg, Laurence Tribe, Martha Minow, Newton Minow, John Levi, Alan Jenkins, Wendy Pollack, David Goldberg, David Rosenberg, Sung-Hee Suh, Cassandra Butts, Michele Jacobs DeLong, David Attisani, Brad Wiegmann, Greg Sater, Lauren Ezrol Klein, Mark Kozlowski, Steven Heinen, and Paolo Di Rosa.

16. David S. Hilzenrath, “Hallowed Be Its Name,” HC, 14 March 1984; Hazelwood School District v. Kuhlmeier, 484 U.S. 260 (13 January 1988); DeShaney v. Winnebago County, 489 U.S. 189 (22 February 1989); Tara A. Nayak, “Law Review Chooses Masthead,” HC, 8 March 1989; HLS Adviser #35, 11 May 1989, pp. 1, 5; Kristen Swartz, “Law Review Adds New Faces,” HLRec, 29 September 1989, p. 10; Mary Flood, “At Law Review, Number of Women Members Falls Sharply,” HLRec, 12 October 1990, pp. 1, 16; Kerlow, Poisoned Ivy, pp. 21–23; Rob Fisher in Levenson and Saltzman, “At Harvard Law, A Unifying Voice,” BG, 28 January 2007, p. A1; DJG interviews with Alicia Rubin Yamin, Tom Perrelli, Radhika Rao, Amy F. Kett, Susan Higgins, Dan Bromberg, Radhika Rao, Carl Coleman, Rob Fisher, Gordon Whitman, and Anne Toker. On The Bluebook, see A. Darby Dickerson’s impressive “An Un-Uniform System of Citation: Surviving with the New Bluebook,” Stetson Law Review 26 (Fall 1996): 53–104, at 55–65, Christine Hurt, “The Bluebook at Eighteen: Reflecting and Ratifying Current Trends in Legal Scholarship,” Indiana Law Journal 82 (Winter 2007): 49–68, and Fred R. Shapiro and Julie Graves Krishnaswami, “The Secret History of the Bluebook,” Minnesota Law Review 100 (2016). On DeShaney, see Lynne Curry, The DeShaney Case: Child Abuse, Family Rights, and the Dilemma of State Intervention (University Press of Kansas, 2007), and Lynda G. Dodd’s excellent “DeShaney v. Winnebago County: Governmental Neglect and ‘The Blessings of Liberty,’” in Myriam Gilles and Risa Goluboff, eds., Civil Rights Stories (Foundation Press, 2007), pp. 185–210.

17. Obama, TAOH, pp. 327–32; Obama, “My First Date with Michelle,” O Magazine, February 2007 (from TAOH); Gene Siskel, “Spike Lee’s Mission,” and Clarence Page, “Spike Lee’s Warning,” CT, 25 June 1989; Dave Kehr, “‘Do the Right Thing’ at Least Takes a Stab at Complexity,” CT, 30 June 1989; Michele Obama in January 2004 in Mendell, From Promise to Power, pp. 93–97; Michele Obama’s February 2004 interview with John Kupper; Michelle Obama Form Letter to Timuel Black, 4 May 2007, TBP Box 129 Fld. 2; Michelle in Krista Lewin, “Obama Brings Husband’s Campaign to Cole County,” Mattoon Journal Gazette and Charleston Times-Courier, 28 June 2004, p. A1, and in Cassandra West, “Her Plan Went Awry,” CT, 1 September 2004, pp. W1–W2; Debra Pickett, “‘My Parents Weren’t College-Educated Folks,’” CST, 19 September 2004, p. 10; Karen Springen, “First Lady in Waiting,” Chicago Magazine, October 2004; both Obamas on The Oprah Winfrey Show, 19 January 2005; Obama on CNBC, 18 November 2006; Springen and Jonathan Darman, “Ground Support,” Newsweek, 29 January 2007, p. 40; Michelle in Lynn Norment, “The Hottest Couple in America,” Ebony, February 2007, pp. 52ff.; Michelle on Chicago Tonight, WTTW, 12 February 2007; Obama in Erin Meyer, “Discovering Hyde Park,” and Michelle in Kalari Girtley and Brian Wellner, “Michelle Obama Is Hyde Park’s Career Mom,” HPH, 14 February 2007, pp. 4, 7–8, 16–17; Michelle in Brian DeBose, “Obama’s Wife ‘Commands a Room,’” Washington Times, 30 April 2007, p. A1; Anne E. Kornblut, “Michelle Obama’s Career Timeout,” WP, 11 May 2007, p. A1; Michelle on Good Morning America, ABC, 23 May 2007; Mark Konkol, “Mr. Obama’s Neighborhood,” CST, 25 May 2007, p. 12; Richard Wolffe and Daren Briscoe, “Across the Divide,” Newsweek, 16 July 2007, pp. 22ff.; Gwen Ifill, “Beside Barack,” Essence, September 2007, pp. 200ff.; Scott Fornek, “‘He Swept Me Off My Feet,’” CST, 3 October 2007, p. 6; Melinda Henneberger, “The Obama Marriage,” Slate, 26 October 2007; Peter Slevin, “Her Heart’s in the Race,” WP, 28 November 2007, p. C1; Monica Langley, “Michelle Obama Solidifies Her Role in the Election,” WSJ, 11 February 2008, p. A1; “Michelle Obama on Love, Family & Politics,” CBSNews.com, 15 February 2008; Patrick T. Reardon, “Obama’s Chicago,” CT, 25 June 2008, p. T1; Michelle’s remarks to DNC’s Gay and Lesbian Leadership Committee, New York City, 26 June 2008; Obama and Michele Obama on “Barack Obama Revealed,” CNN, 20 August 2008; “Michelle Obama: South Side Girl,” video, Democratic National Convention, 25 August 2008; “Barack Obama Tribute” video, Democratic National Convention, 28 August 2008; Harriette Cole, “The Real Michelle Obama,” Ebony, September 2008; “Michelle Obama,” 20/20, ABC, 3 October 2008; Abigail Pesta, “Michelle Obama Keeps It Real,” Marie Claire, 22 October 2008; Rosemary Ellis, “A Conversation with Michelle Obama,” Good Housekeeping, November 2008; Obama and Michelle on 60 Minutes, CBS, 16 November 2008; Stacy St. Clair and Dahleen Glanton, “Scenes from Obamas’ Love Story,” CT, 30 November 2008; Carol Felsenthal’s superb “The Making of a First Lady,” Chicago Magazine, February 2009, pp. 50–56, 72–78; Michelle in Wolffe, Renegade, p. 60; Thomas Reed in Jodi Kantor, The Obamas (Little, Brown, 2012), p. 16; Michelle on 106 & Park, BET, 19 November 2013, “President Barack Obama, Michelle Obama Praise First Date Movie Do the Right Thing,” US Magazine, 30 June 2014; Peter Slevin, Michelle Obama (Knopf, 2015), pp. 121–31; DJG interviews with Geraldine Alexis, Linzey Jones, Rob Fisher, Kelly Jo MacAthur, Thomas Reed, Evie Shockley, Newton Minow, Eden Martin, Jerry Kellman, and Jean Rudd.

18. Fraser Robinson III Employee Work History, City of Chicago, Marian Robinson Voter Registration Card, 7436 S. Euclid Avenue, 25 January 1971, Robbie S. Terry to Fraser Robinson and Marion [sic] L.

Robinson, Quit Claim Deed, 17 January 1980 (conveying ownership of 7436 S. Euclid Avenue to the Robinsons), and Michelle L. Robinson Voter Registration Card, 7436 S. Euclid Avenue, 11 October 1988, all Liza Mundy Papers; Michelle LaVaughn Robinson, "Princeton-Educated Blacks and the Black Community," Princeton University, 1985, esp. pp. 2–3, 12, 14, 26, 55; Dave Kehr, "Black on Black," CT, 23 July 1989; Dean Golemis, "International Festival Showcases Black Film Alternatives," CT, 28 July 1989; Obama in "Organizing in the 1990s: Excerpts from a Roundtable Discussion," in Peg Knoepfle, ed., After Alinsky (Illinois Issues, 1990), p. 134; Ted Shen, "Ruby Oliver Goes to Hollywood," CR, 26 July 1990; Dave Kehr, "'Mama' Has Strength, On Screen and Off," CT, 5 March 1993; Hugh Hart, "Beating the Odds," CT, 10 March 1993; Craig Robinson in Courtney McCarty, "High 'Hoops' for Brother-in-Law," Daily Northwestern, 27–28 September 2004; Sarah Brown, "Obama '85 Masters Balancing Act," Daily Princetonian, 7 December 2005; Rosalind Rossi, "Obama's Anchor," CST, 21 January 2007, p. 9; Bill Reynolds, "Welcome to Obama's Family," Providence Journal [PJ], 15 February 2007, p. C1; Pete Thamel, "Coach with a Link to Obama Has Hope for Brown's Future," NYT, 16 February 2007, p. D1; Jonathan Tilove, "At Princeton, Michelle Obama Worried About Being on the Periphery," Newark Star-Ledger, 18 February 2007, p. P1; DeBose, "Obama's Wife 'Commands a Room,'" Washington Times, 30 April 2007, p. A1; Craig in M. Charles Bakst, "Brown Coach Robinson a Strong Voice for Brother-in-Law Obama," PJ, 20 May 2007, p. D1; W. Gardner Selby, "In Austin, Michelle Obama Hails Husband's Background," Austin American-Statesman, 12 July 2007, p. B3; Michelle in Mary Mitchell, "Makeup's Too Much Work for Michelle," CST, 7 August 2007, p. 12; Maria L. LaGanga, "It's All About Priorities for Michelle Obama," LAT, 22 August 2007; Rebecca Johnson, "The Natural," Vogue, September 2007, pp. 774ff. ("I'm smarter than him"); Andy Katz, "Brown Coach Robinson Coaching Brother-in-Law Obama, Too," ESPN.com, 13 September 2007; Michelle in Scott Helman, "Early Defeat Launched a Rapid Political Climb," BG, 12 October 2007, p. A1; Craig in Melinda Henneberger, "The Obama Marriage," Slate, 26 October 2007; Holly Yeager, "The Heart and Mind of Michelle Obama," O Magazine, November 2007, pp. 286ff.; "Michelle Obama Speaks with MSNBC's Mika Brzezinski," MSNBC.com, 13 November 2007; Slevin, "Her Heart's in the Race," WP, 28 November 2007, p. C1; Leslie Bennetts, "First Lady in Waiting," VanityFair.com, 27 December 2007; Liza Mundy, Michelle: A Biography (Simon & Schuster, 2008), esp. pp. 1–2, 35, 78, 81–82, 89–92; Michelle in Richard Wolffe, "Inside Obama's Dream Machine," Newsweek, 14 January 2008; Liz Halloran, "Q&A: Michelle Obama," USNews.com, 1 February 2008, Craig in Stu Woo, "For His Candidate-in-Law, Brown Hoops Coach Robinson Records an Assist," Brown Daily Herald, 1 February 2008, and in Bill Reynolds, "Yes, He's Much More Than Obama's Brother-in-Law," PJ, 10 February 2008, p. C1; Richard Wolffe, "Barack's Rock," Newsweek, 25 February 2008; Craig in Desmond Conner, "Coach Has His Own Campaign," Hartford Courant, 28 February 2008, and in Mark Patinkin, "Obama's Got Game," PJ, 1 March 2008, p. D1; Lauren Collins, "The Other Obama," New Yorker, 10 March 2008, pp. 88ff.; Craig Robinson on Anderson Cooper 360, CNN, and on "Barack Obama Revealed," 13 March, 4 July, and 20 August 2008; Kristen Gelineau (AP), "Would-Be First Lady Drifts into Rock Star Territory," 30 March 2008; Brian Feagins, "Georgian Recalls Rooming with Michelle Obama," AJC, 12 April 2008; Sally Jacobs, "Learning to Be Michelle Obama," BG, 15 June 2008, p. A1; Michael Powell and Jodi Kantor, "Michelle Obama Is Ready for Her Close-Up," NYT, 18 June 2008; Lawrence Aaron, "A Look at Michelle Obama During Her Jersey Years," Bergen Record, 22 June 2008, p. O4; Lynne Marek, "The 'Other Obama' Honed Her Skills at Sidley Austin,” NLJ, 23 June 2008, p. 6; Craig in Anne C. Mulkern, “Husband Held to ‘High Standard,’” Denver Post, 25 August 2008; Amanda Paulson, “Michelle Obama’s Story,” CSM, 25 August 2008; “Michelle Obama: South Side Girl,” video, Democratic National Convention, 25 August 2008; Kelly Eleveld, “It’s Not Just About the Hair,” The Advocate, 27 August 2008; Harriette Cole, “From a Mother’s Eyes,” Ebony, September 2008; Gwen Ifill, “The Obamas,” Essence, September 2008, pp. 150–57, 214; Melinda Henneberger, “Michelle Obama Interview: Her Father’s Daughter,” Reader’s Digest, October 2008, pp. 196–203; Geraldine Brooks, “Michelle Obama: Camelot 2.0?,” More, October 2008; Matt Hutchins, “Ogletree on Obama,” HLRec, 30 October 2008; Esther Breger, “All Eyes Turn to Michelle Obama ’85,” Daily Princetonian, 5 November 2008; Robin Abcarian, “Michelle Obama Speaks from Her Heart,” LAT, 16 November 2008; Robinson, “B-Ball with Barack,” Time, 17 December 2008; Wolffe, Renegade, p. 35; Felsenthal, “The Making of a First Lady,” CM, February 2009; Eli Saslow, “From the Second City, An Extended First Family,” WP, 1 February 2009; Chuck Klosterman, “Craig Robinson: America’s First Coach,” Esquire, February 2009; “Augie Alum Holds Court with Obama,” Augustana.edu, 13 February 2009; Rachel L. Swarns, “Friendship Born at Harvard Goes to White House,” NYT, 9 March 2009; Slevin, “Mrs. Obama Goes to Washington,” Princeton Alumni Weekly, 18 March 2009; “How We Keep Our Love Alive,” In Touch Weekly, 27 April 2009, pp. 32–35; Michael Scherer and Nancy Gibbs, “Interview with the First Lady,” Time, 21 May 2009; Craig Robinson, A Game of Character (Gotham Books, 2010), esp. pp. xviii–xix, xxiii, 5, 11, 58, 95–97, 112–15, 143–44, 147–49; Katherine Skiba, “First Grandma Keeps Low Profile,” CT, 8 March 2010; Kantor, The Obamas, p. 39; Tamara Jones, “Michelle Obama Gets Personal,” More, February 2012; Theodore Ford, “Kindergarten with a Girl Named Michelle,” CST, 24 November 2012; Michelle on 106 and Park, BET, 19 November 2013; Slevin, Michelle Obama, esp. pp. 32, 42, 57–58, 61, 87–88, 118–22; Jennifer Connelly e-mail to Newton Minow and John Levi, 16 September 2008; DJG interviews with John Rogers, Janis Robinson, Jan Anne Dubin, and Paul Carpenter. On Dukes Happy Holiday Resort, see Kenan Heise, “Rufus Dukes, Pioneer Black Automobile Dealer,” CT, 25 September 1987. In Ann Dunham’s life, Barack’s uncle Charles Payne would later remark, “everything seemed temporary,” and Barack would later volunteer that “My choosing to put down roots in Chicago and marry a woman who is very rooted in one place probably indicates a desire for stability that maybe I was missing” throughout his earlier life. Amanda Ripley, “The Story of Barack Obama’s Mother,” Time, 21 April 2008, pp. 36ff.

On the extended Robinson family and its earlier generations, see Anthony Weiss, “Michelle Obama Has a Rabbi in Her Family,” Forward, 2 September 2008; Shailagh Murray, “A Family Tree Rooted in American Soil,” WP, 2 October 2008, p. C1; Zev Chafets, “Obama’s Rabbi,” NYT Magazine, 5 April 2009; Rachel L. Swarns and Jodi Kantor, “In First Lady’s Roots, a Complex Path from Slavery,” NYT, 8 October 2009; Swarns, “Meet Your Cousin, the First Lady,” NYT, 17 June 2012; and Swarns, American Tapestry: The Story of the Black, White, and Multiracial Ancestors of Michelle Obama (Amistad, 2012), esp. pp. 94–95.

19. Erwin N. Griswold, “The Harvard Law Review—Glimpses of Its History as Seen by an Aficionado,” in Harvard Law Review: Centennial Album i (1987); Griswold’s January 1992 interview with Victoria Radd, pp. 6–7; Griswold, Ould Fields, New Corne: The Personal Memoirs of a Twentieth Century Lawyer (West Publishing, 1992); Robert E. Keeton, “Griswold,” HLR 105 (April 1992): 1386–1401; Dennis Hevesi, “Erwin Griswold Is Dead at 90,” NYT, 21 November 1994; “Griswold, Law School Legend, Dies at 90,” HC, 21 November 1994; “Editors Directory,” Harvard Law Review, 1989–90, Deborah Brake Papers; Mark Tushnet and Timothy Lynch, “The Project of the Harvard Forewords: A Social and Intellectual Inquiry,” Constitutional Commentary 11 (Winter 1994): 463–500; DJG interviews with Tom Krause, Susan Freiwald, David Goldberg, John Parry, Ken Mack, Michael Guzman, Michael Weinberger, Jacqueline Scott Corley, Brad Wiegmann, Barry Perlstein, Brad Berenson, Scott Collins, Diane Ring, Frank Cooper, Tracy Higgins, Lisa Hay, Scott Siff, Julie Cohen, Kevin Downey, Gordon Whitman, Christine Lee, Susan Higgins, and Dodie Hajra.

20. Harvard Law School 1989–90 Catalog, esp. pp. 4–5, 16, 74, and 84; HLS Adviser Vol. 21, #1, 31 August 1989, esp. p. 5; Robert M. Fisher HLS Transcript; Kahlenberg, Broken Contract, p. 53; Tribe in Shira Schoenberg, “Law Expert: Obama Will Preserve Constitution,” Concord Monitor, 14 November 2007; Carrie Budoff Brown, “School Buds,” Politico, 5 December 2008; DJG interviews with Rob Fisher, Chris Edley, Mark Kozlowski, Scott Scheper, Laura Jehl, Jennifer Gardner Trulson, Sarah Leah Whitson, Kevin Downey, Larry Tribe, Paolo Di Rosa, David Troutt, Tom Perrelli, Julius Genachowski, and Roger Boord.

21. Terry Carter, “At Harvard Law, a New Era Dawns,” NLJ, 7 August 1989, pp. 1, 44–45; Greg Herbert, “Accused Rapist, Barred from School, Sues Harvard,” and Patrick Miles, “Clark Cuts Public Interest Position,” HLRec, 8 September 1989, pp. 1, 2, 7, 8; Carter, “Harvard Dean Eliminates Office for Public Interest Counseling,” Legal Times, 11 September 1989, p. 4; “Student Groups Meet with Clark, Rally Planned for Tuesday,” and Herbert, “Clark’s First Step Sends Wrong Signal,” HLRec, 15 September 1989, pp. 1, 3, 6; Tara A. Nayak, “Law Students Sign Petition, Plan Rally,” HC, 15 September 1989; George Paul, “Students, Professors Rally in Support of Public Interest,” and Herbert, “Watkins Indicted on Rape, Assault Charges,” HLRec, 29 September 1989, pp. 1, 16; Nayak, “Public Interest Squabble,” HC, 30 September 1989; Paul, “Student Demands Halt Interviews of Placement Advisor Candidates,” and Steven Donziger, “Clark Must Broaden Perspective in Public Interest Choices,” HLRec, 6 October 1989, pp. 1, 7, 13; Nayak, “Law School Gets $1.5M for Public Service,” HC, 11 October 1989; Herbert, “Watkins Pleads Not Guilty,” and Paul Tarr, “Clark Announces $1 Million Endowment,” HLRec, 20 October 1989, pp. 1, 13, 16; Anthony Flint, “Harvard Group Decries Loss of Law Counselor,” BG, 25 October 1989, p. 91; Nayak, “Clark Defends Move to Cut Counseling,” HC, 28 October 1989; “The Abandonment of Public Interest Law,” Legal Times, 30 October 1989, p. 21; Felicia Ravago, “Students Rally for Interview Boycott of Baker and McKenzie,” and Julia Gordon, “Harvard Watch Report Critical of Clark’s Public Interest Reorganization,” HLRec, 3 November 1989, pp. 1, 3, 4, 12; Nayak, “A Law Dean with a New ‘Mission,’” HC, 4 November 1989; Nayak, “Commitment Often Ends After Graduation,” HC, 6 November 1989; Greg Dingens, “Kennedy Visit Prompts ‘Awareness Rally’ on Abortion, Civil Rights Issues,” HLRec, 17 November 1989, p. 12; Herbert, “Students Demand Immediate Action at Public Interest Forum,” HLRec, 1 December 1989, pp. 1, 9; Flint, “Students Dump Protest Letters Outside Harvard Law Dean’s Office,” BG, 5 December 1989, p. 31; Nayak, “Letters Protest Clark Public Interest Policy,” HC, 5 December 1989; DJG interview with Chris Edley. Accused rapist Kevin Watkins would be tried, convicted, and sentenced to five years in prison, with his conviction repeatedly affirmed. John Thornton, “Watkins on Trial in Middlesex Courthouse,” HLRec, 4 May 1990, pp. 1, 16; George Paul, “Watkins Found Guilty; Sentenced to 5 Years,” HLRec, 14 September 1990, p. 3; “Watkins to Appeal Rape Conviction,” HLRec, 19 April 1991, p. 1; Commonwealth v. Watkins, 33 Mass. App. Ct.

(14 July 1992), appeal denied 413 Mass. 1105 (3 September 1992), Watkins v. DiPaolo, 37 F.3d 1481 (1st Cir.) (14 October 1994) (affirming denial of habeas corpus), 513 U.S. 1194 (27 February 1995) (cert. denied). Apropos of the Record's 3 November story about an 18 October protest against Baker and McKenzie, a photo in the 1990 Harvard Law School Yearbook, p. 14, would picture Barack, in glasses, attending some event related to that protest.

22. “Organizing in the 1990s: Excerpts from a Roundtable Discussion,” in Peg Knoepfle, ed., After Alinsky: Community Organizing in Illinois (Illinois Issues, 1990), pp. 123–52, esp. pp. 133–35, 143, 148–51; John B. Judis, “Creation Myth,” TNR, 10 September 2008, pp. 18ff.; Ben Joravsky, “When the Next Derrick Rose Is Right Under Your Nose,” CR, 15 January 2009; DJG interviews with Jean Rudd and Ken Rolling. See also William E. Schmidt, “Chicago Nears Vote on Choice for Mayor as Race Flares,” NYT, 27 February 1989, Dirk Johnson, “Daley Wins Primary in Chicago,” NYT, 1 March 1989, and Johnson, “Daley Wins as Mayor of Chicago, Ending Six Years of Black Control,” NYT, 5 April 1989.

23. Richard H. Stewart, “Organizing Is His Vocation,” BG, 8 August 1988, p. 19 (Finfer); Obama University of Chicago Law School Faculty Web Page, 2001, web.archive.org; HLS Adviser #8, 12 October 1989, p. 9 (Kozinski speaking on 16 October); Peter M. Cicchino, “An Activist at Harvard Law School,” American University Law Review 50 (2001): 551–65; Glen Johnson (AP), “At Harvard Law School, Obama Foreshadowed Presidential Appeal,” 26 January 2007; Greg Dingens on “Obama Presidential Announcement Reaction,” C-SPAN, 10 February 2007; Butts in “A Rusty Toyota, a Mean Jump Shot,” WP, 11 February 2007, p. B3; Harper in Jodi Kantor, “One Place Where Obama Goes Elbow to Elbow,” NYT, 1 June 2007, p. A1; Finfer in Irene Sege, “Community Organizers Fault Comments at GOP Gathering,” BG, 6 September 2008, p. A9; Harper in Melanie Eversley, “Best Supporting Actor,” The Root, 1 October 2008; Finfer, “The Obama Experience,” Social Policy, Fall 2008, pp. 11–12; Kenny Smith in Jim Morrill, “Remembering Obama,” Charlotte Observer, 13 January 2009; Eric Fingerhut, “Be It Bush or Obama, White House Door Open for O.U.’s Diament,” JTA.org, 27 January 2009; Finfer in Sara Rimer, “Community Organizing Never Looked So Good,” NYT, 12 April 2009; Abramsky, Inside Obama’s Brain (Portfolio, 2010), p. 53; A. J. Buckley, “Before the Scene: Hill Harper,” Scene Louisiana Magazine, December 2012–January 2013, pp. 18–19; DJG interviews with Rob Fisher, Cassandra Butts, Laura Jehl, Christine Lee, Karla Martin, Morris Ratner, James Esseks, Keith Boykin, Ken Mack, Gordon Whitman, Lew Finfer, Tom Krause, Kenny Smith, Hill Harper, Tom Lininger, Ursula Dudley Oglesby, Tynia Richards, David Hill, Nathan Diament, Greg Dingens, and Tom Wathen. See also Sondra Hemeryck, Cassandra Butts, Laura Jehl, et al., “Reconstruction, Deconstruction and Legislative Response: The 1988 Supreme Court Term and the Civil Rights Act of 1990,” Harvard Civil Rights–Civil Liberties Law Review 25 (Summer 1990): 475–590. On Walpole, see Kelsey Kauffman, Prison Officers and Their World (Harvard University Press, 1988), esp. pp. 23–37.

24. Laurence H. Tribe, “The Curvature of Constitutional Space: What Lawyers Can Learn From Modern Physics,” HLR 103 (November 1989): 1–39; Harvard Law School 1989–90 Catalog, p. 105; Rob Fisher to Laurence Tribe, 1 November 1989, RFP; Peter M. Yu to Erwin N. Griswold, 9 June and 9 November 1989, Griswold to Yu, 13 and 29 November 1989, Griswold Papers [EGP] Box 133 Fld. 2; Patrick Philbin et al., to The Body, “The Frug Piece,” 15 January 1992, Trent Norris Papers [TNP]; Christine Lee in Debra McCown, “So What Was President Obama Like in College?,” Bristol Herald Courier, 27 January 2009; Cass R. Sunstein, “Interpreting Statutes in the Regulatory State,” HLR 103 (December 1989): 405–509; [Thomas J. Perrelli], “Search and Seizure—Suspicionless Drug Testing—Seventh Circuit Upholds Drug Testing of Student Athletes in the Public Schools,” HLR 103 (December 1989): 591–97; Yu to Griswold, 5 December 1989, and Griswold to Yu, 21 December 1989, EGP Box 133 Fld. 2; Ann Dunham to Alice Dewey, 3 November 1989, Dunham résumé, n.d. (ca. 1993), Dunham Papers; Julia Suryakusuma, “Obama for President . . . of Indonesia,” Jakarta Post, 29 November 2006, and “Barack Obama: Mum’s the Word,” Jakarta Post, 4 November 2008; Paula Bender, “Legacy of the President’s Mother,” Malamalama: The Magazine of the University of Hawaii, January 2009; Dunham, Surviving Against the Odds (Duke University Press, 2009), p. 301; Judith Kampfner, “Dreams from My Mother,” BBC Radio, 16 September 2009; Suryakusuma, “‘Ibu’ Ann’s Legacy to Indonesia,” Jakarta Post, 21 March 2010; Janny Scott, A Singular Woman (Riverhead, 2011), pp. 265–66, 285–91; Stallman v. Youngquist, 125 Ill. 2d 267, 531 N.E. 3d 355 (21 November 1988); [Barack Obama], “Tort Law—Prenatal Injuries—Supreme Court of Illinois Refuses to Recognize Cause of Action Brought by Fetus Against Its Mother for Unintentional Infliction of Prenatal Injuries,” HLR 103 (January 1990): 823–28; DJG interviews with Rob Fisher, Larry Tribe, Mike Dorf, Barbara Schneider, Pauline Wan, Andy Schapiro, Chad Oldfather, Brad Berenson, Susan Freiwald, Kevin Downey, Frank Cooper, Gordon Whitman, Carl Coleman, Radhika Rao, Tracy Higgins, Jennifer Borum Bechet, John Parry, Christine Lee, and Tom Krause. The Harvard Law Review’s own bound, anonymously annotated master copy of Volume 103, housed in the president’s office, attests to Obama’s authorship of the January 1990 case note and lists “P. editors C. Lee, B. Obama, J. Parry, G. Whitman, S. Freiwald” on the first page of the March 1990 Cook article. DJG interview with then-HLR president Mitchell Reich, 18 April 2011.

25. Harvard Law School 1989–90 Catalog, esp. pp. 4–5; HLS Adviser #14, 30 November 1989, p. 5; Harvard Law School Annual Examinations in Law 1989–90, pp. 78–81, 17–20, 35–38; Cassandra Butts’s interview with Jim Gilmore; DJG interviews with Elvin Charity, Jan-Michele Lemon Kearney, Radhika Rao, Ken Mack, Chris Edley, Larry Tribe, and Rob Fisher.

26. Dunham to Suryakusuma in Margaret Conley, “Obama’s Early Days in Jakarta,” ABCNews.com, 25 September 2008, on 20/20, ABC, 3 October 2008, and in Scott, A Singular Woman, pp. 296–97; Obama, TAOH, p. 327; Sheila Miyoshi Jager, “Narrating the Nation: Students, Romance and the Politics of Resistance in South Korea,” Ph.D. dissertation, University of Chicago, December 1994, pp. vii–viii; Sheila Jager e-mails to DJG.

27. Harvard Law School 1989–90 Catalog, pp. 4–5, 114; Harvard Law School Schedule of Courses 1989–90, HLSA; Harvard Law School Annual Examinations in Law 1989–90, pp. 336–50; “Memorandum to Barak [sic] Obama and Rob Fisher From Larry Tribe Re Your February 1 Memo,” 2 February 1990, RFP; Paul Tarr and John Thornton, “Obama Election Lauded Coast to Coast,” HLRec, 9 February 1990, pp. 1, 12; Linda Matchan, “A Law Review Breakthrough,” BG, 15 February 1990, p. 29; Tammerlin Drummond, “Barack Obama’s Law,” LAT, 12 March 1990, pp. E1–E2; Elise O’Shaughnessy, “Harvard Law Reviewed,” Vanity Fair, June 1990, p. 106; Granfield, “Making It by Faking It,” p. 342; Mack in “Barack Obama Before He Was a Rising Political Star,” Journal of Blacks in Higher Education, Autumn 2004, pp. 99–101; Richard A. Serrano and David G. Savage, “Obama’s Harvard Law School Days Marked by Bridge-Building,” LAT, 27 January 2007; Levenson and Saltzman, “At Harvard Law, a Unifying Voice,” BG, 28 January 2007, p. A1; Cassandra Butts on Tell Me More, NPR, 22 February 2007; Mack in John Heilemann, “When They Were Young,” New York Magazine, 22 October 2007; Crystal Nix Hines, “Testimonial,” undated 2008 video, on BarackObama.com; Goldberg in Ed Pilkington, “Obama Dreams Big, Achieves Bigger,” Guardian, 8 January 2008; Ken Mack, “Even at Harvard, Obama Had a Knack for Bonding with Diverse People,” Harrisburg Patriot-News, 17 February 2008; Marian Robinson in Richard Wolffe, “Barack’s Rock,” Newsweek, 25 February 2008, and in Melinda Henneberger, “Michelle Obama Interview,” Reader’s Digest, October 2008, pp. 196–203; Michael Cohen in David Nather, “Obama’s Quick Rise on a Non-Traditional Career Path,” CQ Weekly, 21 August 2008; Ken Mack on “The Choice 2008,” Frontline, PBS, 14 October 2008; Jodi Kantor, “Barack Obama, Forever Sizing Up,” NYT, 26 October 2008, p. IV-1; Jennifer Borum Bechet in Jonathan Tilove, “Few in Louisiana Have Close Ties to Obama,” New Orleans Times-Picayune, 24 November 2008; Jim Chen in Jack Brammer, “Two Kentuckians Reflect on Their Time with Barack Obama,” Lexington Herald-Leader, 19 January 2009; Stephanie Schorow, “Obama’s Narrative,” Harvard Gazette, 16 November 2011; Fatima Mirza, “HLS Professor Offers Look into President Obama the Student,” HC, 16 November 2011; DJG interviews with Rob Fisher, Gina Torielli, Jennifer Gardner Trulson, Jonathan King, Susan Freiwald, David Rosenberg, Larry Tribe, Chris Edley, Cassandra Butts, John “Vince” Eagan, Ken Mack, Frank Cooper, Jennifer Borum Bechet, Christine Lee, Tom Krause, Monica Harris, Debbie Brake, Scott Collins, Radhika Rao, Diane Ring, Andy Schapiro, Pauline Wan, Gordon Whitman, Brad Berenson, Marisa Chun, Michael Cohen, Kevin Downey, Michael Guzman, Lourdes Lopez-Isa, David Nahmias, Jackie Scott Corley, Daniel Slifkin, Anne Toker, Michael Weinberger, Brad Wiegmann, Dan Bromberg, Jane Catler Nober, Micki Chen, Jack Chorowsky, Carl Coleman, Barbara Eyman, Tracy Higgins, Mark S. Martins, Patrick O’Brien, Jorge Ramírez, Barbara Schneider, Frank Amanat, Adam Charnes, Julie Cohen, Jennifer Collins, Sarah Eaton Stuart, Julius Genachowski, John Parry, Scott Siff, Tom Perrelli, Lisa Hay, Amy Kett, David Goldberg, Chad Oldfather, Monica Harris, Ryan Stoll, Lars Noah, Nancy Kao, and Barry Perlstein. Jennifer Gardner Trulson believes Barack also took Trial Advocacy Workshop C, “a good one,” alongside her in January 1990 with several instructors, but this is unconfirmed. Based almost entirely on individuals’ own recollections of how they fared, the ten candidates eliminated after the first round were Frank Amanat, Adam Charnes, Jim Chen, Julie Cohen, Jennifer Collins, Sarah Eaton, Ken Mack, John Parry, Scott Siff, and Andrew Schlafly. All told, fifty-three editors who were present on 4 February 1990 have voiced their recollections of that day.

28. Paul Tarr and John Thornton, “Obama Election Lauded Coast to Coast,” HLRec, 9 February 1990, pp. 1, 12; Jim Morrill, “Remembering Obama,” Charlotte Observer, 13 January 2009; “First Black President of Harvard Law Review Elected,” AP, 5 February 1990, and in USA Today, 6 February 1990, p. 2A, St. Petersburg Times, 6 February 1990, p. A4, WP, 8 February 1990, p. B3, AJC, 9 February 1990, p. A2, and HA, 11 February 1990, p. A32; undated television interview footage in Becoming Barack, [February 1990]; Fox Butterfield, “First Black Elected to Head Harvard’s Law Review,” NYT, 6 February 1990, p. A20; Anthony Flint, “First Black Chosen Head of Harvard Law Journal,” BG, 6 February 1990, p. 17; Philip M. Rubin, “Obama Named New Law Review President,” HC, 6 February 1990; Michael J. Ybarra, “Activist in Chicago Now Heads Harvard Law Review,” CT, 7 February 1990, p. C3; Phil Mayer, “Ex-Islander Gets Prestigious Harvard Post,” HSB, 9 February 1990; Linda Matchan, “A Law Review Breakthrough,” BG, 15 February 1990, p. 29; J. D. Reed, “People,” Time, 19 February 1990, p. 93; John Corr, “From Mean Streets to Hallowed Halls,” Philadelphia Inquirer, 27 February 1990, pp. C1, C4; HLS Adviser #27, 8 March 1990, p. 10 (Mikva speaking on 8 March); Laurence H.

Tribe, Abortion: The Clash of Absolutes (W.W. Norton, 1990), pp. xv–xvi; Obama in “The First Black President of the Harvard Law Review,” Journal of Blacks in Higher Education, Winter 2000–2001, pp. 22–25; David Wilkins in Lauren A. E. Schuker, “Obama Stars at Convention,” HC, 30 July 2004, in Marie C. Kodama, “Obama Left His Mark on HLS,” HC, 19 January 2007, and in Jon Meacham, “On His Own,” Newsweek, 23 August 2008; Tony Mauro, “Obama’s Road Not Taken,” Legal Times, 13 December 2007; Shelby Steele, A Bound Man (Free Press, 2007), p. 14; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, p. 79; Michelle in Liza Mundy, Michelle (Simon & Schuster, 2008), pp. 108–9; Mikva in Ryan Lizza, “Making It: How Chicago Shaped Obama,” TNR, 21 July 2008; DJG interviews with Frank Cooper, David Hill, Hill Harper, Nicole Lamb-Hale, Lori-Christina Webb, Susan Higgins, Debbie Brake, Jackie Scott Corley, Sarah Eaton Stuart, Sheryll Cashin, Ab Mikva, Julius Genachowski, Mark Kozlowski, and Larry Tribe, and Tribe’s 2012 interview with Jim Gilmore. A few weeks later, L.A. Law star Blair Underwood visited the law school and had dinner with Barack and huge fan Jennifer Borum at a Chinese restaurant. DJG interviews with Jennifer Borum Bechet and Christine Lee. See also Brian McIver, “In Treatment Star Blair Underwood on Being Barack Obama’s Predecessor,” Daily Record (Glasgow), 14 October 2009. Cashin’s and Mikva’s clear and consistent memories—Barack “never visited our chambers”—suggest that specific details in Claire Cooper, “Jeff Bleich—Finding Common Ground,” San Francisco Bar Journal, Fall 2008, pp. 48–50, and Jess Bravin, “Obama’s New Man Down Under,” WSJ, 22 December 2009, must be discounted. The Record story stated that Obama had made “significant contributions to the final two chapters” of Tribe’s book, which, if accurate, would mean Chapter 9, “In Search of Compromise,” pp. 197–228, which addressed the idea of “common ground,” and Chapter 10, “Beyond the Clash of Absolutes,” pp. 229–42, which addressed “What Our Views of Abortion Can Teach Us About Ourselves,” “Fetal Endangerment: Child Abuse?,” similar to Barack’s January 1990 case comment, and “How Can We See and Talk to One Another.” Tammerlin Drummond, “Barack Obama’s Law,” LAT, 12 March 1990, pp. E1–E2, says, “Obama wrote an insightful research article showing how contrasting views in the abortion debate are a direct result of cultural and sociological differences” for Tribe. Rob Fisher, an anti-abortion Roman Catholic, recalls that “Barack and I discussed abortion quite a bit,” particularly “what a sad thing it is.” Tribe has been unable to locate any abortion-related work Obama did for him. DJG interviews with Rob Fisher, Larry Tribe, Mike Dorf, and Peter Rubin.

29. George Paul, “Obama Selects Review Editors,” HLRec, 16 February 1990, pp. 1, 11; Perrelli and Berenson in Levenson and Saltzman, “At Harvard Law, a Unifying Voice,” BG, 28 January 2007, p. A1; Berenson in Richard Wolffe and Daren Briscoe, “Across the Divide,” Newsweek, 16 July 2007, pp. 22ff.; Christine Lee on “The Choice 2008,” Frontline, PBS, 14 October 2008; Obama, “Remarks on the Death of Nelson Mandela,” 5 December 2013; DJG interviews with David Goldberg, Lisa Hay, Tom Perrelli, Julie Cohen, Christine Lee, Michael Cohen, Kevin Downey, David Nahmias, Susan Freiwald, Adam Charnes, Jennifer Collins, Brad Berenson, Amy Kett, Radhika Rao, Tom Krause, Bruce Spiva, Jennifer Borum Bechet, Monica Harris, Scott Siff, Michael Weinberger, and John Parry.

30. HLR 103 (January 1990): 601–828; Peter M. Yu to Erwin M. Griswold, 4 January 1990, EGP Box 133 Fld. 1; Charles Rothfeld, “Minority Critic Stirs Debate on Minority Writing,” NYT, 5 January 1990, p. B6; Griswold to Yu, 12 January 1990, Barbara Schneider to Griswold, 23 January 1990, and Griswold to Schneider, 25 January 1990, EGP Box 133 Fld 1; Katharine T. Bartlett, “Feminist Legal Methods,” HLR 103 (February 1990): 829–889, esp. 829; Kenneth Lasson, “Scholarship Amok: Excesses in the Pursuit of Truth and Tenure,” HLR 103 (February 1990): 926–50, esp. 928, 930; Yu to Griswold, 7 February 1990, and Griswold to Yu, 8 February 1990, EGP Box 133 Fld. 1; Anthony E. Cook, “Beyond Critical Legal Studies: The Reconstructive Theology of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.,” HLR 103 (March 1990): 985–1045; Floyd Abrams, “A Worthy Tradition: The Scholar and the First Amendment,” HLR 103 (March 1990): 1162–1173, esp. 1162; Yu to Griswold, 7 March 1990, and Griswold to Yu, 13 March 1990, EGP Box 133 Fld. 1; DJG interviews with Gordon Whitman, Frank Amanat, Adam Charnes, Lisa Hay, John Parry, Scott Siff, and Brad Wiegmann.

31. Harvard Law School 1989–90 Catalog, esp. pp. 75, 132, 147; Gerald E. Frug, “The Ideology of Bureaucracy in American Law,” HLR 97 (April 1984): 1276–1388; Frug, Local Government Law (West Publishing, 1988); Joan Chalmers Williams, “The City, the Hope of Democracy: The Casebook as Moral Act,” HLR 103 (March 1990): 1174–86, esp. 1183, 1185–86; [Roberto Unger, Readings Packet], Jurisprudence, Harvard Law School, Spring Term 1990, esp. pp. 2 and 468, Radhika Rao Papers; Unger, False Necessity: Anti-Necessitarian Social Theory in the Service of Radical Democracy (Cambridge University Press, 1987); Unger, Passion: An Essay on Personality (Free Press, 1984); Rob Fisher—Discussant: Barack Obama, “Class Presentation, Tribe’s Post-Newtonian Seminar,” 15 February 1990, RFP; Holmes in Towne v. Eisner, 245 U.S. 418, 425 (1918); Laurence H. Tribe and Michael C. Dorf, “Levels of Generality in the Definition of Rights,” University of Chicago Law Review 57 (Fall 1990): 1057–1108, at 1077n83 (citing Rob’s The Logic of Economic Discovery); Tribe and Dorf, On Reading the Constitution (Harvard University Press, 1991), esp. pp. iii, 125, and 132 (again citing Rob’s Logic); Harry N. Scheiber, “What the Framers Didn’t Say,” NYTBR, 17 March 1991; Cassandra Butts in Larissa MacFarquhar, “The Conciliator,” New Yorker, 7 May 2007, pp. 48ff.; Joel Freid, “It’s California’s Turn to Elect a President Like John Kennedy,” California Progress Report, 28 January 2008; Freid in “Bay Area Residents in D.C. to Witness History,” Oakland Tribune, 18 January 2009, and in Nuts & Boalts, 16 March 2009; Noam Scheiber, “Crimson Tide,” TNR, 4 February 2009; Butts in Remnick, The Bridge, p. 189; DJG interviews with Rob Fisher, Chris Edley, Dan Rabinovitz, Cassandra Butts, David Troutt, Joel Freid, David Smail, Jennifer Gardner Trulson, John Parry, Tynia Richard, Jerry Frug, Roberto Unger, Radhika Rao, Susan Freiwald, Julie Cohen, Steve Ganis, Larry Tribe, Jack Chorowsky, Mike Dorf, Peter Dolotta, Andy Schapiro, and Tom Perrelli.

32. Tammerlin Drummond, “Barack Obama’s Law,” LAT, 12 March 1990, pp. E1–E2 (reprinted in Toronto Star, 18 March 1990, San Francisco Chronicle, 1 April 1990, and Punahou Bulletin, Fall 1990, pp. 40–42); Diana Quinn Rose, “Why Not Call Him ‘Interracial’?,” LAT, 30 March 1990, p. E10; Caroline V. Clarke, “A First Choice at Harvard Law Review,” American Lawyer, April 1990, p. 92; “Law Review Firsts,” National Law Journal, 2 April 1990, p. 4; Peter M. Yu and Barack H. Obama to Erwin N. Griswold, 10 April 1990, and Griswold to Yu and Obama, 12 April 1990, EGP Box 200 Fld. 2; Allison J. Pugh (AP), “First Black President of School’s Law Review Uninterested in a Cushy Job,” 15 April 1990 (and in Miami Herald, 18 April 1990, p. C1, Philadelphia Tribune, 20 April 1990, p. A6 [more complete text], and Chicago Daily Herald, 3 May 1990, p. 2); “Alumni Album,” Punahou Bulletin, Spring 1990, p. 56; “Movers and Shakers,” Emerge, May 1990, p. 62; “Illinois Organizer Heads Harvard Law Review,” Illinois Issues, May 1990, p. 33; “A Landmark Election at the Harvard Law Review,” Harvard Magazine, May–June 1990, p. 86; Elise O’Shaughnessy, “Harvard Law Reviewed,” Vanity Fair, June 1990, p. 106; “Law Review Election Reflects Growing Diversity,” Harvard Law

Bulletin, Summer 1990, p. 26; “HLS in Perspective: Obama Elected,” and “Law Review,” Harvard Law School Yearbook 1990, pp. 74 and 182; Roxanne Brown, “In Pursuit of Excellence,” Ebony, August 1990, pp. 112ff.; Drummond, “Sen. Obama Was Real Deal Even Way Back Then,” Contra Costa Times, 5 November 2006, p. F4; Lee in Remnick, The Bridge, p. 209; DJG interviews with Tammerlin Drummond and Christine Lee. Notwithstanding that Illinois Issues references a 9 February 1990 Obama interview with PBS, Barack did not appear on that evening’s PBS NewsHour and no other PBS video, audio, or transcript of Barack from early 1990 has surfaced.

33. HLS Advisor #23, 8 February 1990, p. 5, #25, 22 February 1990, p. 9, #27, 8 March 1990, p. 6; Maggie S. Tucker, “Affirmative Action Debated,” HC, 9 March 1990; Sharon Stone, “BLSA Spring Conference Raises Issues for Professionals in ’90s,” HLRec, 16 March 1990, p. 15; Schuker, “Obama Stars at Convention,” HC, 30 July 2004; Serrano and Savage, “Obama’s Harvard Law School Days,” LAT, 27 January 2007; Levenson and Saltzman, “At Harvard Law, a Unifying Voice,” BG, 28 January 2007, p. A1; Heilemann, “When They Were Young,” NYM, 22 October 2007; Kennedy in “The TNR Primary,” TNR, 13 February 2008, p. 16; Jodi Kantor, “For a New Political Age, a Self-Made Man,” NYT, 28 August 2008; Mack on “Obama: Professor President,” BBC Radio 4, 6 January 2009; Randall Kennedy, The Persistence of the Color Line (Pantheon Books, 2011), p. 43; DJG interviews with Tynia Richard, Alan Jenkins, Nicole Lamb-Hale, and Ken Mack.

34. Harvard Law School Schedule of Courses 1989–90, HLSA; Obama to Andrew Roth, 19 March 1990, ARP; Paul Simon to Obama, 7 March 1990, PSP; O’Shaughnessy, “Harvard Law Reviewed,” Vanity Fair, June 1990, p. 106; Obama Remarks at the Illinois State Library, 7 March 2001; J. Michael Kennedy, “Speech Gives a Boost to Obama’s ‘Dreams,’” LAT, 6 August 2004; Charles Leroux, “The Buzz Around Obama’s Book,” CT, 6 August 2004; Cindy Adams, “Obama’s Memoir Really 18 Years Old,” New York Post, 9 June 2008; Jane Dystel e-mail to Robert Draper, 2009; Obama on Anderson Cooper 360, CNN, 14 March 2008; DJG interviews with Ken Mack, Rob Fisher, Dan Rabinovitz, Bernard Loyd, Bruce Orenstein, David Troutt, Scott Siff, and Cassandra Butts.

35. Greg Galluzzo to Ed Shurna, 17 April 1989, Gamaliel Papers; “SSAC Rally to Launch New Cities Community Development Corp.,” 27 April 1989, Flossmoor, Tom Knutson Papers; Darren Hillock, “Cardinal Joins SSAC to Initiate New Housing Rehab Program,” Star, 30 April 1989, pp. A1–A2; Bill Kemp, “Community Organizing in South Suburban Islands of Poverty,” Illinois Issues, May 1989, pp. 23–27; Florence Hamlish Levinsohn, “School Revolt,” CR, 26 May 1989; Mary O’Connell, “School Reform,” TNW, August–September 1989, p. 3; Isabel Wilkerson, “New School Term in Chicago Puts Parents in Seat of Power,” NYT, 3 September 1989; Barbara B. Buchholz, “Hard-Hit NW Indiana to Get Housing Grant,” CCB, 2 October 1989, p. 7; “LIFT Obtains Housing Grants,” GPT, 10 August 1989; “LIFT Raises $1 Million for Rehabbing,” GPT, 25 September 1989; “LIFT Battles Blight,” GPT, 12 November 1989; “Elementary School Council Election Results,” CT, 23 October 1989; William Ayers, “Reforming Schools & Rethinking Classrooms: A Chicago Chronicle,” Rethinking Schools, October–November 1989, pp. 6–7; Ayers, “Chicago, Laboratory for Schools,” NYT, 18 December 1989, p. A19; Ayers, The Good Preschool Teacher (Teachers College Press, 1989); Ben Joravsky, “Mad as Hell,” CR, 1 March 1990; Wilkerson, “Fate of Principals Splits Some Chicago Schools,” NYT, 2 March 1990; Patrick J. Keleher Jr., “Business Leadership and Education Reform: The Next Frontier,” Heritage Foundation Forum, 28 April 1990; “School Reform Marches On,” TNW, June–July 1990, p. 11;

“Coalition Pushes to Add 45,000 Hispanic Voters,” CST, 14 September 1990; Kyle and Kantowicz, Kids First, pp. 219–20; Wieboldt Foundation Annual Report 1990, p. 14; Alex Poinsett, “Corporate Chicago Weighs in with Clout, Money, Time,” Catalyst, March 1991, pp. 2–5; G. Alfred Hess Jr., School Restructuring, Chicago Style (Corwin Press, 1991), pp. 162–91; Joe Reed, “Grass Roots School Governance in Chicago,” National Civic Review 80 (Winter 1991): 41–45; James G. Cibulka, “Local School Reform: The Changing Shape of Educational Politics in Chicago,” Research in Urban Policy 4 (1992): 145–73; Hess, “City Schools Can’t Wait for Poverty Cure,” Catalyst, May 1992, pp. 17–18; William S. McKersie, “Philanthropy’s Paradox: Chicago School Reform,” Educational Evaluation and Policy Analysis 15 (Summer 1993): 109–28; Wilfredo Cruz, “From Blue Jeans to Pin Stripes,” Illinois Issues, December 1993, pp. 20–23; Sharon G. Rollow and Anthony S. Bryk, “Democratic Politics and School Improvement: The Potential of Chicago Reform,” in Catherine Marshall, ed., The New Politics of Race and Gender (Falmer Press, 1994), pp. 97–106; Hess, “School-Based Management as a Vehicle for School Reform,” and “The Changing Role of Teachers,” Education and Urban Society 26 (May 1994): 203–19 and 248–63; Dorothy Shipp, “Big Business and School Reform,” pp. 55, 101, Anthony S. Bryk et al., Charting Chicago School Reform: Democratic Localism as a Lever for Change (Westview Press, 1998); Madeline Talbott, “Parents as School Reformers,” in Alexander Russo, ed., School Reform in Chicago (Harvard Education Press, 2004), pp. 55–62; Lynne Mock, “The Personal Vision of African American Community Leaders,” Ph.D. dissertation, University of Illinois at Chicago, 1999, pp. 29–30; James G. Kelly, “Contexts and Community Leadership: Inquiry as an Ecological Expedition,” American Psychologist 54 (November 1999): 953–61, at 955; L. Sean Azleton, “Boundary Spanning and Community Leadership: African American Leaders in the Greater Roseland Area,” M.A. thesis, University of Illinois at Chicago, 1996, p. 16; William Rohe et al., Sustainable Nonprofit Housing Development: An Analysis of Maxwell Award Winners (FannieMae Foundation, 1998), pp. 123–30; Kelly et al., “On Community Leadership: Stories About Collaboration in Action Research,” American Journal of Community Psychology 33 (June 2004): 205–16, at 207; DJG interviews with Bill Ayers, Greg Galluzzo, Mary Gonzales, Phil Mullins, Danny Solis, Josh Hoyt, Bruce Orenstein, Harvey Lyon, Todd Dietterle, Mary Ellen Montes, Mike Kruglik, Johnnie Owens, Ken Rolling, Alvin Love, Aletha Strong Gibson, Desta Houston, Len Dubi, Tom Knutson, Kathy Kish, Jerry Kellman, Paul Scully, David Kindler, and Kerry Taylor. Many additional 1989–90 Gary Post Tribune stories mention LIFT’s development, and Gamaliel’s 1990–91 success in Milwaukee is superbly analyzed in Stephen Hart, Cultural Dilemmas of Progressive Politics (University of Chicago Press, 2001), pp. 27–120, esp. pp. 33. On Gamaliel since the early 1990s, see especially Robert Kleidman, “Community Organizing and Regionalism,” City & Community 3 (December 2004): 403–21.

36. R. Bruce Dold, “Opposition Enlists a Top Fundraiser for Bid to Unseat Savage,” CT, 26 June 1989; Dold, “Savage’s Rival Hit by Allegation,” CT, 20 August 1989; Dold, “Prospective Savage Rival Says Allegations Are Lies,” CT, 22 August 1989; Dold, “Ald. Shaw Landed Job for Reynolds’ Accuser,” CT, 26 August 1989; Dold, “Savage Challenger Opens Campaign,” CT, 13 September 1989; Dold, “Savage’s Foe Acquitted of Sex Charges,” CT, 7 October 1989; Gilbert Jimenez, “Reynolds Cleared on Sex Charges,” CST, 7 October 1989; “Educator’s Office Robbed, Petitions Taken,” CT, 3 December 1989; Weston Kosova, “Savage Gus,” TNR, 29 January 1990, pp. 21–22; Paul Merrion, “Reynolds Groundswell Poses Savage Threat,” CCB, 29 January 1990, p. 4; David C. Rudd, “Sawyer Backs Reynolds Over Savage,” CT, 19 February 1990; Florence Hamlish Levinsohn, “The Street Scrapper and the Rhodes Scholar,” CR, 8 March 1990; Dirk Johnson, “Challenge at Home for Adept Player of Racial Politics,” NYT, 11 March 1990; Vernon Jarrett, “Defeat of Savage Would Be a Blow to Black Independence,” CST, 13 March 1990; Jarrett, “Reynolds’ Support Isn’t Homegrown,” CST, 15 March 1990, p. 37; William E. Schmidt, “Rep. Savage Claims Victory in Illinois,” NYT, 21 March 1990; John Camper and Andrew Fegelman, “Savage Overcomes Tough Challenge,” CT, 21 March 1990; Camper, “Everything Falls in Place for Savage,” CT, 22 March 1990; Jarrett, “Why Gus Savage Keeps Winning,” CST, 29 March 1990; Michael Miner, “Savage Appeal,” CR, 29 March 1990; Robert Davis, “Shaw Finds Cheers Quickly Turn to Jeers,” CT, 29 June 1990, p. M1; DJG interview with Andy Schapiro.

37. HLS Advisor #31, 12 April 1990, p. 7, #33, 26 April 1990, p. 5; Kerlow, Poisoned Ivy, pp. 170, 182–83; Susan Higgins on travelingmanrick.blogspot.com, 16 May 2008; Lisa Hay in Neal Conan, “Who Is Barack Obama,” Talk of the Nation, NPR, 5 August 2008; DJG interviews with Lee Hwang, Andy Schapiro, Lisa Hay, Scott Smith, Jorge Ramírez, Kevin Downey, Cassandra Butts, Susan Higgins, and Chad Oldfather. See also Frank J. Tipler, “The Obama-Tribe ‘Curvative of Constitutional Space’ Paper Is Crackpot Physics,” unpublished paper, SSRN.com, 26 October 2008, esp. p. 3 (“Tribe’s paper demonstrates an appalling ignorance of elementary mathematics”).

38. David Warsh, “Rebuilding Beirut: A Liberal Vision for Harvard Law,” BG, 11 February 1990, p. A1; Jay K. Varma, “Law School Hires New Prof,” HC, 15 February 1990; Philip M. Rubin, “Despite Advances, Hiring Plans Criticized,” HC, 17 February 1990; Rubin, “Law Students Seek Curriculum Change,” HC, 2 March 1990; Patrick Miles Jr., “Public Interest Committee Prepares Position Paper,” HLRec, 2 March 1990, pp. 1, 12; Daniel Golden, “An Unconventional Traditionalist,” BG Magazine, 4 March 1990, pp. 12ff.; Rubin, “Clark Holds Forum on Public Interest,” HC, 8 March 1990; Jim Houpt, “Clark: HLS Should Further Public Interest,” HLRec, 16 March 1990, pp. 1, 16; Brian Timmons, “That’s No Okie, That’s My Torts Professor,” WSJ, 3 April 1990, p. A20; Rubin, “Harvard Law Students to Boycott Classes,” HC, 4 April 1990; Linda Popejoy, “Students Protest Dean on Diversity,” HLRec, 11 April 1990, pp. 1, 12; Popejoy and John Thornton, “Clark and Students Talk at Forum,” HLRec, 20 April 1990, pp. 1, 12; Ken Emerson, “When Legal Titans Clash,” NYT Magazine, 22 April 1990, pp. 26ff.; Diane Bartz(AP), “Harvard Law Professor May Request Leave to Protest Lack of Diversity,” 23 April 1990; Fox Butterfield, “Harvard Law Professor Quits Until Black Woman Is Named,” NYT, 24 April 1990, p. A1; John H. Kennedy, “Harvard Black Eyes a Leave in Tenure Dispute,” BG, 24 April 1990, p. 1; WGBH News footage, 24 April 1990, 11:39, Item 7232, WGBH Archives; Kennedy, “Harvard Students Rally in Support of Bell’s Vow,” BG, 25 April 1990, p. M1; “Students Rally in Support of Harvard Professor’s Protest,” NYT, 25 April 1990, p. A16; Tynia Richard on CBS This Morning, 25 April 1990; Butterfield, “Harvard Law School Torn by Race Issue,” NYT, 26 April 1990, p. A20; Derrick Bell, “Why We Need More Black Professors in Law School,” BG, 29 April 1990, pp. A1, A4; Robert Zafft, “Bell’s Message Is Repugnant,” HC, 30 April 1990, and HLRec, 4 May 1990, p. 9; Anthony Flint, “Jackson Offers to Mediate Harvard Dispute,” BG, 3 May 1990, p. 27; Popejoy, “Clark Offers Cool Response to Bell’s Protest,” Houpt, “Timmons Attracts National Attention for CLS-Bashing,” and Matt Kairis, “In Defense of Randall Kennedy,” HLRec, 4 May 1990, pp. 1, 3, 4, 8, 16; Flint, “Bell at Harvard: A Unique Activism,” BG, 7 May 1990, p. M1; Flint, “Harvard Dean Says No to Jackson Parley,” BG, 8 May 1990, p. 21; “Harvard Law Declines Jackson Offer of Help,” NYT, 8 May 1990, p. A20; Flint, “Jackson Says Eyes Are on Harvard,” BG, 9 May 1990, p. 41; Meg Vaillancourt, “Jesse Jackson at Harvard Law School,” Ten O’Clock News, WGBH, 9 May 1990, 5:43, WGBH Archives; Butterfield, “At Rally, Jackson Assails Harvard Law School,” NYT, 10 May 1990, p. A14; Flint, “Rev. Jackson, at Harvard, Urges National Conference on Racism,” BG, 10 May 1990, p. 1; David Troutt, “The Challenge of Diversification,” LAT, 13 May 1990, and HLRec, 14 September 1990, p. 9; Richard Cohen, “The Question of Merit at Harvard Law,” WP, 15 May 1990, p. A23; George F. Will, “Academic Set-Asides,” WP, 17 May 1990, p. A27; “For Whom the Bell Tolls,” TNR, 21 May 1990, p. 8; Butterfield, “Old Rights Campaigner Leads a Harvard Battle,” NYT, 21 May 1990, p. A18; Alfred Edmond Jr., “Derrick Bell Lays Down the Law at Harvard,” Black Enterprise, July 1990, p. 15; Timmons, “Fraudulent Diversity,” Newsweek, 12 November 1990, p. 8; Sharon Stone, “Law Student’s Column Heats Up Diversity Debate,” HLRec, 30 November 1990, pp. 3, 7; Ian Haney López, “Community Ties, Race, and Faculty Hiring: The Case for Professors Who Don’t Think White,” Reconstruction 1, #3 [August 1991]: 46–62, at 49; Derrick Bell, Confronting Authority (Beacon Press, 1994), esp. pp. 63, 110–11; David A. Hill, “Thoughts on the Diversity Movement at HLS,” Keith Boykin, “The Initial Meeting: A Reflection,” and Marie Lott Pharoah, “Reflections on the Diversity Movement,” in HLS Diversity: A Celebration of the Movement, 30 October 1998; Keith Boykin, “Barack Obama, Blacks and Harvard Law,” KeithBoykin.com, 26 January 2007; Ian Haney López, Dog Whistle Politics (Oxford University Press, 2014), esp. p. x; DJG interviews with David Hill, Hill Harper, Tynia Richard, Mark Kozlowski, Cassandra Butts, Keith Boykin, Linda Singer, Ken Mack, Morris Ratner, Steve Ganis, Derrick Bell, Ursula Dudley Oglesby, Paolo Di Rosa, Micki Chen, Michael Weinberger, Nathan Diamant, Ian Haney López, Gerry Singen, and Rob Fisher. See also Randall Kennedy, “Racial Critiques of Legal Academia,” Harvard Law Review 102 (June 1989): 1745–1819, and Derrick Bell, Tracy Higgins, and Sung-Hee Suh, eds., “Racial Reflections: Dialogues in the Direction of Liberation,” UCLA Law Review 37 (August 1990): 1037–1100.

39. Robin West, “Jurisprudence and Gender,” University of Chicago Law Review 55 (Winter 1988): 1–72; Tushnet and Lynch, “The Project of the Harvard Forewords: A Social and Intellectual Inquiry,” Constitutional Commentary 11 (Winter 1994): 463–500; John Parry to Brad Berenson, “Results,” and Berenson reply comments, 2 May 1990, “To: Two-L Editors, ‘Results of Faculty Case Comment Mailbox Vote,’” 2 May 1990, and Parry to Berenson, 3 May 1990, JPP; HLR 103 (May 1990): McConnell, “The Origins and Historical Understanding of Free Exercise of Religion,” 1409–1519, “Developments in the Law—Medical Technology and the Law,” 1520–1676; Obama to Griswold, 10 May 1990, and Griswold to Obama, 17 May 1990, EGP Box 133 Fld. 1; HLR 103 (June 1990): Vicki Schultz, “Telling Stories About Women and Work,” 1749–1843, “Colloquy—Responses to Randall Kennedy’s Racial Critiques of Legal Academia,” 1844–87, [Radhika Rao,] “The Priest Who Kept His Faith But Lost His Job,” 2074–81, “Scholarship Admired: Responses to Professor Lasson,” 2085–86; Obama to Griswold, 10 [June] 1990, Susan M. Higgins to Griswold, 13 June 1990, and Griswold to Obama, 18 July 1990, EGP Box 133 Fld. 1; Jeffrey Ressen and Ben Smith, “Obama Kept Law Review Balanced,” Politico, 23 June 2008; DJG interviews with Michael Weinberger, David Goldberg, Lourdes Lopez-Isa, Adam Charnes, Jennifer Collins, John Parry, Brad Berenson, Robin West, Gordon Whitman, Scott Siff, Susan Freiwald, Michael Guzman, Lisa Hay, Susan Higgins, Brad Wiegmann, Chad Oldfather, Kevin Downey, Jacqueline Scott Corley, Michael Cohen, David Nahmias, Chris Sipes, David Wilkins, Christine Lee, Radhika Rao, Barbara Schneider, Debbie Brake, Brian Bertha, and Ken Mack.

40. Harvard Law School Annual Examinations in Law 1989–90, pp. 66–69, 572–77; Obama remarks at the Cambridge (MA) Public Library, 20 September 1995, and at the Illinois State Library, 7 March 2001; Dystel in Cindy Adams, “Obama’s Memoir Really 18 Years Old,” NYP, 9 June 2008; Dystel’s 2009 e-mail to Robert Draper; Dystel in Jeremy Greenfield, “Agents Unwilling to Adapt Won’t Last,” DigitalBookWorld.com, 3 January 2013; DJG interviews with Dan Rabinovitz, Gerry Frug, Rob Fisher, and David Troutt.

41. HLS Adviser #36, 17 May 1990, p. 2; PR Newswire, 13 June 1990; David Rubinstein and Jennifer Juarez Robles, “Law Firms Still Lag in Minority Hiring,” and Rubinstein, “Top Student: What Kind of Minorities Do Firms Want?,” Chicago Reporter, July–August 1990, pp. 1, 3–7; Louis Aguilar, “Survey: Law Firms Slow to Add Minority Partners,” CT, 11 July 1990, p. B1; Roy Abon’go Obama v. Mary K. Cole, #90-16597, Prince George’s County Circuit Court, 16 July 1990 (judgment signed 9 October 1991); Austin v. Michigan Chamber of Commerce, 494 U.S. 652, 660–61 (27 March 1990); Obama to Trent Norris, 23 July 1990, TNP; Mary Flood, “At Law Review, Number of Women Members Falls Sharply,” HLRec, 12 October 1990, pp. 1, 16; “Suzanne Alele ’85,” Princeton Alumni Weekly, 24 October 1990; Kenan Heise, “Albert Maule, 40, President of Police Board,” CT, 12 October 1995; Tom Maliti (AP), “Obama’s Brother Chooses Life in Slow Lane,” 26 October 2004; Obama’s June 2006 interview with Jacob Weisberg; Obama, TAOH, p. 331; Laura Washington, “What Has Brown Done?,” CST, 23 October 2006, p. 39; Ray Gibson and David Jackson, “Rezko Owns Vacant Lot Next to Obama’s Home,” CT, 1 November 2006, p. 1; Dave McKinney and Chris Fusco, “Obama Spells Out ‘Regret’ After Land Deal with Rezko,” CST, 5 November 2006, p. 4; Tim Novak, “Obama and His Rezko Ties,” CST, 23 April 2007, p. 22; Novak, “Broken Promises, Broken Homes,” CST, 24 April 2007, p. 20; James L. Merriner’s essential “Mr. Inside Out,” Chicago Magazine, November 2007; Edward McClelland, “How Close Were Barack Obama and Tony Rezko?,” Salon, 1 February 2008; Martin Fricker and Graham Brough, “Barack Obama’s Stepmother in a Bingo-Lover from Bracknell,” Daily Mirror, 9 February 2008; “Complete Transcript of the Sun-Times Interview with Barack Obama,” CST, 15 March 2008; Transcript of Obama’s Chicago Tribune Interview, CT, 16 March 2008, p. 22; Reardon, “Obama’s Chicago,” CT, 25 June 2008, p. T1; Wolffe, Renegade, pp. 34–35; Obama remarks at the White House, 19 June 2009, and Q&A session with students, 8 September 2009, Public Papers of the Presidents, 2009, Vol. 1, p. 858, and Vol. 2, p. 1352; Yang Suwan in Judith Kempfner, “The Untold Story of Obama’s Mother,” Independent, 16 September 2009; Scott, A Singular Woman, pp. 290–91, 295–96; Auma Obama, And Then Life Happens (St. Martin’s, 2012), pp. 39–40, 210; Slevin, Michelle Obama, p. 132; Newton Minow’s 2008 interview with Jim Gilmore; DJG interviews with Elvin Charity, Alan Solow, Geraldine Alexis, John Levi, Newton Minow, Linzey Jones, Greg Dingens, Eden Martin, Evie Shockley, Jerry Kellman, David Brint, Lisa Hay, Susan Higgins, Sean Lev, Charlie Robb, Marisa Chun, Brad Berenson, John Parry, Frank Amanat, Leonard Feldman, Darin McAtee, Sondra Hemeryck, Chris Sipes, Trent Norris, Lori-Christina Webb, Bruce Spiva, Lee Hwang, Nancy Cooper, and Zeituni Onyango. Sheree and Abon’go’s union would last less than six years. See Sheree A. Obama v. Abon’go M. Obama (c/o Nyangema Kogelo Primary School, Siaya), #96-04351, Prince George’s County Circuit Court, 4 March 1966, granted 11 July 1997. See also Si Van Lee v. Maya K. Soetoro, Hawaii 1CC90-0-002339 (motor vehicle tort), 19 September 1990, dismissed 4 February 1991.

On Tony Rezko’s life prior to 1990, see especially Sam Lesner, “Hyde Parkers, All!,” HPH, 12 June 1985, p. 43; see also Tom Gorman, “Crucial Concessions Gets Park Contract,” HPH, 24 July 1985, pp. 3, 28; Gorman, “Caterer Changes Subcontractor,” HPH, 25 February 1987, p. 3; Gorman, “Crucial May Get New South Shore Center Catering Contract,” HPH, 29 March 1989, p. 1; Carolyn Hirschman, “Politicians Join Community in Protest Over Crucial Contract,” HPH, 2 August 1989, p. 1; Dan Mihalopoulos and Laurie Cohen, “City Knew O’Hare Vendor Wasn’t Minority-Run Firm,” CT, 18 March 2005, p. 1; John Chase, “Tony Rezko,” CT, 26 May 2005, p. 1; and David Jackson and Chase, “Rezko’s Life a Story of Pizza and Politics,” CT, 12 October 2006, p. 1. On Herbert Muhammad, see his 1989 interview with Blackside’s Sam Pollard, and Richard Goldstein, “Jabir Herbert Muhammad, Who Managed Muhammad Ali, Dies at 79,” NYT, 28 August 2008.

42. Michael Cohen in David Nather, “Obama’s Quick Rise,” CQ Weekly, 21 August 2008; DJG interviews with Carol Platt Liebau, Lori-Christina Webb, Sean Lev, Charlie Robb, Christine Lee, Brad Berenson, Michael Cohen, David Nahmias, Adam Charnes, Daniel Slifkin, Julie Cohen, Tom Perrelli, Susan Freiwald, Chris Sipes, Kevin Downey, Orin Sellstrom, and Howard Ullman.

43. Carol Platt Liebau, “The Barack I Knew,” TownHall.com, 5 March 2007; Artur Davis in Nicole Duran, “New Kid on the Block,” Campaigns & Elections, June 2007, pp. 52ff., and Seth Stern, “A Commander in Chief,” Harvard Law Bulletin, Fall 2008; DJG interviews with Paul Massari, Lois Leveen, Robin West, Bruce Spiva, Jeff Hoberman, Daniel Slifkin, Brad Berenson, John Parry, Kevin Downey, Adam Charnes, Christine Lee, Susan Freiwald, Trent Norris, Earl Martin Phelan, Tom Perrelli, Julie Cohen, Marisa Chun, Jonathan Putnam, and Carol Platt Liebau.

44. Harvard Law School 1990–91 Catalog, esp. pp. 4–5, 115, 138–39; HLS Adviser Vol. 22, #1, 30 August 1990, pp. 5, 11; Glendon, Minow, Rakoff, “Law and Society Seminar Fall 1990: Civil Society,” RFP; Kahlenberg, Broken Contract, p. 64; Granfield and Koenig, “Learning Collective Eminence,” pp. 505, 515; Minow in Lauren A. E. Schuker, “Obama Stars at Convention,” HC, 30 July 2004; Minow’s May 2007 interview with Liza Mundy; Adam Charnes in Morrill, “Remembering Obama,” Charlotte Observer, 13 January 2009; Gary Orren in “Obama ‘A Great Persuader’ Says U.S. Expert,” University of Ulster Press Release, 25 March 2010; DJG interviews with Rob Fisher, David Hill, Michelle Jacobs DeLong, Lourdes Lopez-Isa, David Nahmias, Brad Berenson, Chris Sipes, Scott Siff, Christine Lee, Marisa Chun, Sean Lev, Tom Perrelli, Jennifer Collins, Adam Charnes, Brad Wiegmann, John Parry, Daniel Slifkin, Jon Molot, Michael Cohen, Susan Higgins, Gary Orren, Martha Minow, and Eric Posner.

45. HLR 104 (November 1990): West, “Foreword: Taking Freedom Seriously,” 43–106, Fried, “Comment: Metro Broadcasting, Inc. v. FCC: Two Concepts of Equality,” 107–127, [Kevin M. Downey], “Right to Die—Incompetents’ Right to Refuse Life-Saving Medical Treatment,” 257–66, at 265–66n74, [Darin McAtee], “Death Penalty—Aggravating and Mitigating Circumstances,” 139–49, [Frank Amanat], “Political Patronage in Promotion, Hiring, Transfer, and Recall Decisions,” 227–37; Charlie Robb on “Political Animal,” WashingtonMonthly.com, 8 October 2008; DJG interviews with Adam Charnes, John Parry, Brad Berenson, Lee Hwang, Kevin Downey, Darin McAtee, Charlie Robb, and Frank Amanat.

46. Jonathan M. Berlin, “HLS Students Hold Vigil Outside Faculty Meeting,” HC, 10 September 1990; Linda Popejoy, “Professor Derrick Bell, 1990–91: The Spirit of Protest Continues,” and Kristen Swartz, “Placement Office Cautions Third Years on Their Job Opportunities,” HLRec, 14 September 1990, pp. 1, 3, 16; George Paul, “Public Interest Office Swamped,” “Rights Group Plans to Rally for Diversity,” and

Karen Levy, "Student Groups Demand Boycott of Baker & McKenzie," HLRec, 21 September 1990, pp. 1, 3, 15, 16; Scott M. Finn, "Law Students Demand More Minority Faculty," HC, 28 September 1990; Peter S. Canellos, "Harvard Law School Reinstates Public Interest Career Counseling," BG, 30 September 1990, p. 34; Berlin, "Students Form New Pro Bono Group," HC, 5 October 1990; Malcolm E. Harrison, "After Rally, CCR Begins to Rethink Strategy on Diversity," and Felicia Ravago, "At Forum, Trouble Over Clinicals," HLRec, 5 October 1990, pp. 1, 13, 16; Ivan Oransky, "Law Students Protest Recruiting Interviews," and Philip M. Rubin, "Law Students Picket Interviews," HC, 10 October 1990; Mary Flood, "Students Confront Firm on Fifth Floor of Charles Hotel," and "At Law Review, Number of Women Members Falls Sharply," HLRec, 12 October 1990, pp. 1, 16; Sean P. Murphy, "Students Honor Law Professor as He Begins His Protest Leave," BG, 21 October 1990, p. 34; Jim Chen, "WLA's Misguided Call for Affirmative Action," HLRec, 26 October 1990, pp. 4, 7; Anthony Flint, "Flexibility, Determination at Harvard Law," BG, 30 October 1990, p. 21; Berlin, "Flyers Allege Ethical Violations," HC, 1 November 1990; Patricia Arzuaga and Michelle Benecke, "WLA Blasts Record for Article on Law Review," HLRec, 2 November 1990, pp. 4–5; Obama, "Review President Explains Affirmative Action Policy," HLRec, 16 November 1990, pp. 4, 7; Berenson in Levenson and Saltzman, "At Harvard Law, a Unifying Voice," BG, 28 January 2007, p. A1; McCullough in Jodi Kantor, "In Law School, Obama Found Political Voice," NYT, 28 January 2007, p. 1, and in Todd Purdum, "Raising Obama," Vanity Fair, March 2008; Berenson in Mary Vallis, "Unlikely Presence," National Post, 7 June 2008, p. A17; Rachel L. Swarns, "Obama Walks a Delicate Path on Class and Race Preferences," NYT, 2 August 2008, p. A1; Marisa Chun in Nather, "Obama's Quick Rise on a Non-Traditional Career Path," CQ Weekly, 21 August 2008; Mack on "The Choice 2008," Frontline, PBS, 14 October 2008; 3L grade-on John Bu in Joe L. Stanganelli, "Young Obama Draws Praise from Law School Classmates from Erie," Erie Times-News, 30 October 2008; Chen in Jack Brammer, "Two Kentuckians Reflect on Their Time with Barack Obama," Lexington Herald-Leader, 19 January 2009; DJG interviews with Brad Berenson, Jackie Scott Corley, Frank Amanat, Ken Mack, Julie Cohen, John Parry, Michael Cohen, Tom Perrelli, Michael Guzman, Edith Ramirez, Janis Kestenbaum, Bruce Spiva, Lourdes Lopez-Isa, and Jonathan Putnam. Although the exact date is unknown, Barack also participated in a panel discussion on free speech on campuses, moderated by Charles Nesson and briefly memorialized in the 1991 Harvard Law School Yearbook: "I don't see a lot of conservatives getting upset if minorities feel silenced," Barack said. It was not covered by either the Record or the Crimson. See also Charles C. Johnson, "At Harvard Law School in 1991, Obama Approved of Restricting Speech to Protect Minorities," Daily Caller, 8 October 2012. See as well Cassandra Butts's negative review of Shelby Steele, The Content of Our Character, HCRCLLR 26 (Winter 1991): 306–15.

47. David S. Broder, "Jesse Helms, White Racist," WP, 29 August 2001; Phalen in Levenson and Saltzman, "At Harvard Law, a Unifying Voice," BG, 28 January 2007, p. A1; Ann Sanner (AP), "Obama Says He Looked to Basketball in His Youth," 16 April 2008; Berenson in Zhu, "Obama's Quiet Harvard Roots," HC, 2 November 2008; Dave DeWitt, "Harvey Gantt Leaves a Legacy in NC," WUNC.org, 5 September 2012; DJG interviews with Rob Fisher, Julius Genachowski, Brad Berenson, and Earl Martin Phelan. Also see DJG, "The Helms Attack on King," Southern Exposure 12 (March–April 1984): 12–15.

48. Trent [Norris] to Barack, "Meltzer's Letter," 5 October 1990, TNP; Griswold to Obama, 8 October 1990, EGP Box 133 Fld. 1; "Celebrating Brennan," Legal Times, 19 November 1990, p. 11; Griswold to Obama, 26 November 1990, EGP Box 199 Fld. 8; Obama to Griswold, 30 November 1990, EGP Box 133 Fld. 1; HLR 104 (December 1990): Charny, “Nonlegal Sanctions in Commercial Relationships,” 373–467, Wilkins, “Legal Realism for Lawyers,” 468–524, Williams, “Metro Broadcasting, Inc. v. FCC: Regrouping in Singular Times,” 525–46, [Jonathan Putnam], “First Amendment—Voters’ Speech Rights—Federal District Courts Mandate Availability of Write-in Voting,” 657–64; Obama to William J. Brennan, 7 December 1990, and Brennan to Obama, 13 December 1990, WJBP Box II-94; Griswold to Obama, 9 January 1991, EGP Box 132 Fld. 13; “Summary of Revenue and Expenses,” HLR, June 1990, and “Agreement Among the Holders of the Copyright in the Uniform System of Citation,” May 1991, TNP; Nancy Day, “The Battle for Illinois,” Harvard Magazine, July–August 2004, pp. 75–78; Adam Charnes in Dahlia Lithwick, “A Complicated Record on Race,” Newsweek, 7 April 2008, p. 34; Alex M. Azar II in Shapiro and Krishnaswami, “The Secret History of the Bluebook,” Minnesota Law Review 100 (2016); DJG interviews with Frank Amanat, David Goldberg, Michael Weinberger, Adam Charnes, David Wilkins, John Parry, Amy Kett, Jonathan Putnam, Lisa Hay, Ken Mack, Dodie Hajra, Susan Higgins, Richard Parker, and Trent Norris. See also Tushnet and Lynch, “The Project of the Harvard Forewords,” p. 470 (“Forewords are systematically likely to be disappointing, in the sense that they are likely to be less interesting than the most interesting work their authors have previously written”). In 1990–91 the Review’s graduate treasurer was the late Ernest J. “Ernie” Sargeant, managing partner of the premier Boston law firm Ropes and Gray, who died in January 2008; the other faculty trustee was William D. Andrews. See ALI Reporter, Spring and Summer 2008, and HC, 19 October 1992.

49. “Agreement Among the Holders of the Copyright in the Uniform System of Citation,” May 1991, TNP; [Laura Demanski] to Elaine [Pfefferblit], “Journeys in Black and White by Barack Obama from Jane Dystel,” 25 October 1990, LDP; Esther B. Fein, “Book Notes: A Duchy Turns 12,” NYT, 20 May 1992, p. C20; Obama at Illinois State Library, 7 March 2001; Peter Osnos, “Barack Obama and the Book Business,” Century Foundation, 30 October 2006; Janny Scott, “Obama’s Story, Written by Obama,” NYT, 18 May 2008, p. A1; Adams, “Obama’s Memoir Really 18 Years Old,” NYP, 9 June 2008; Weinberger in Tracy Connor, “See, I Did Too Know Bam,” NYDN, 16 November 2008; Osnos, “The Making of the Book That Made Obama,” Daily Beast, 27 January 2009; Dystel e-mail to Robert Draper, 2009; Draper, “Barack Obama’s Work in Progress,” GQ, November 2009; Maraniss, BOTS, pp. 362–63, 527–28, and 596n; DJG interviews with Lisa Hay, Brad Berenson, Ann Patty, Laura Demanski, and Michael Weinberger.

50. [Christine M. Lee], “Invisible Man: Black and Male Under Title VII,” HLR 104 (January 1991): 749–68; Griswold to Obama, 9 January 1991, EGP Box 132 Fld. 13; Barack Obama and Robert Fisher, “Outline—Transformative Politics,” Paper for Law and Society, n.d., 10pp., RFP; Seth Gitell, “Obama and the ‘Invisible Man,’” New York Sun, 12 August 2008; DJG interviews with Christine Lee, Rob Fisher, Mark Kozłowski, and Martha Minow.

51. Anthony Flint, “Student Lawyers Sue Harvard on Hiring,” BG, 21 November 1990; “A Class Sends Message to Harvard Law School,” NYT, 21 November 1990, p. B11; Dan Greaney, “Students Sue HLS Over Faculty Hiring,” HLRec, 30 November 1990, pp. 1, 12; Seth S. Karkness, “Taking the Law School to Court,” HC, 1 December 1990; Ian Haney López, “Community Ties, Race, and Faculty Hiring,” Reconstruction Vol. 1, #3 [August 1991]: 46–62; Kerlow, Poisoned Ivy, pp. 104–5; Maggie S. Tucker, “Alumni Association Candidates Sweep Overseers Election,” HC, 7 June 1990; Donald M. Solomon, “Social Responsibility Should Be Top Priority,” HC, 6 December 1990; Chester Hartman to HRAAA Executive Committee, 10 December 1990, and Solomon to Dear Friend of HRAAA, 31 December 1990, HRAAAP; Tucker, “HAA and HRAAA Name Candidates,” HC, 31 January 1991; Solomon, “Press Advisory,” 31 January 1991, HRAAAP; Gady A. Epstein, “The Last Hurrah?,” HC, 4 June 1992; Alexander Reid and Adrian Walker, “Recent Parolee Is Charged in Assault-Weapon Killing,” BG, 7 December 1990, p. 1; John Ellement, “Board Could Have Kept Rifle Suspect Behind Bars,” BG, 8 December 1990, p. 1; Matthew Brelis, “Johnston Criticizes Parole of Suspect,” BG, 9 December 1990, p. 33; Ellement, “Slaying Suspect Paroled in Error, Probe Concludes,” BG, 3 January 1991, p. 17; Doris Sue Wong, “Parolee Gets Split Verdict in Fatal Spree,” BG, 12 August 1992, p. 24; Harvard Law School Annual Examinations in Law 1990–91, pp. 324–26; Jacobs, Obamaland, p. 123; Punahou School Alumni Directory 1841–1991 (Harris Publishing, 1991), p. 226; Harvard Law School 1990–91 Catalog, pp. 143–44; Eric F. Saltzman and Tom Bywaters, The Shooting of Big Man: Anatomy of a Criminal Case, ABC, 8 June 1979; Jeffrey Kaye, “Documentary Draws Fire from Public Defenders,” American Lawyer, October 1979, p. 10; Fred Kobrick e-mail to Jeff Kobrick, 4 August 2008; Jeff Kobrick, “Notes on Barack Obama,” 21 November 2008, Jeff Kobrick Papers; DJG interviews with Linda Singer, Keith Boykin, Derrick Bell, Donald Solomon, Chester Hartman, Robert Paul Wolff, Hill Harper, Rob Fisher, Gina Torielli, and Jeff Kobrick.

On Ronald Stokes, also see “Prisoner Attacks Officers,” BG, 31 October 1980; Stokes v. Superintendent, 452 N.E. 2d 1123 (Mass. SJC), 15 August 1983; Stokes v. Fair, 795 F. 2d 235 (1st Cir.), 16 July 1986; Stokes v. Commissioner of Correction, 530 N.E. 2d 801 (Mass. Ct. Apps.), 16 November 1988; Commonwealth v. Stokes, 653 N.E. 2d 190 (Mass. Ct. Apps.), 19 July 1995; appeal denied, 653 N.E. 2d 1277 (Mass. SJC), 27 September 1995; U.S. v. Stokes, 947 F. Supp. 546 (D. Mass.), 18 November 1996, 124 F. 3d 39 (1st Cir.), 22 August 1997; Paul Langner, “Career Criminal Faces Life in Prison,” BG, 23 March 1999, p. B3; U.S. v. Stokes, 2000 WL 246478 (D. Mass.), 28 February 2000, 388 F. 2d 21 (1st Cir.), 5 November 2004, 544 U.S. 917, 21 March 2005, and 2005 WL 2170091 (1st Cir.), 8 September 2005.

52. Ian Ayres, “Fair Driving: Gender and Race Discrimination in Retail Car Negotiations,” HLR 104 (February 1991): 817–73; William E. Schmidt, “White Men Get Better Deals on Cars, Study Finds,” NYT, 13 December 1990; Merrill Goozner, “Study Faults Car Sales Tactics,” CT, 13 December 1990; AP, “Study of New-Car Sales Finds That White Men Get Best Deals,” LAT, 13 December 1990; Rhonda Mahony, “Blacks Pay More for Cars,” Black Enterprise, April 1991, p. 14; Obama to Griswold, 8 February 1991, and Griswold to Obama, 8 February 1991, EGP Box 132 Fld. 13; David Margolick, “At the Bar,” NYT, 11 January 1991, p. B5; John Parry to Griswold, 15 January 1991, Griswold to Parry, 18 January 1991, Amy Folsom Kett to Griswold, 23 and 28 January 1991, Griswold to Kett, 29 January 1991, EGP Box 132 Fld. 13; Michael W. McConnell, “The Selective Funding Problem: Abortions and Public Schools,” HLR 104 (March 1991): 989–1050; [A. Marisa Chun], “Unfulfilled Promises: School Finance Remedies and State Courts,” HLR 104 (March 1991): 1072–92; [Monica Harris], “Cleaning Up the Debris After ‘Fleet Factors’: Lender Liability and CERCLA’s Security Interest Exemption,” HLR 104 (April 1991): 1249–68; [Scott Siff], “Judicial Enforcement of International Law Against the Federal and State Governments,” HLR 104 (April 1991): 1269–88; Dorothy E. Roberts, “Punishing Drug Addicts Who Have Babies: Women of Color, Equality, and the Right of Privacy,” HLR 104 (May 1991): 1419–83; [Trenton H. Norris], “Developments in the Law—International Environmental Law—Institutional Arrangements,” HLR 104 (May 1991): 1580–1608; Obama, “Community Revitalization,” Nebraska Wesleyan University Forum, Lincoln, 9 September 1994; Lisa Hay in Neal Conan, “Who is Barack Obama?,” Talk of the Nation, NPR, 19 August 2008; Ken Mack in “The Choice 2008,” Frontline, PBS, 14 October 2008; Adam Charnes in Morrill, “Remembering Obama,” Charlotte Observer, 13 January 2009; Scott Siff in Noam Scheiber, “Crimson Tide,” TNR, 4 February 2009; Jamshid Ghazi Askar, “Scholar Michael W. McConnell Mixes Law, Religion,” Deseret News, 9 January 2011; DJG interviews with David Goldberg, Scott Siff, Kevin Downey, Lisa Hay, David Troutt, David Hill, Karla Martin, Mark Kozlowski, John Parry, Julie Cohen, Anne Toker, Susan Freiwald, Brad Berenson, Charlie Robb, Trent Norris, Tom Perrelli, Jon Molot, Lori-Christina Webb, Bruce Spiva, Adam Charnes, Michael Guzman, Sondra Hemeryck, Howard Ullman, Orin Sellstrom, Jeff Hoberman, Chris Sipes, Michael Cohen, Lee Hwang, Sean Lev, Dodie Hajra, Darin McAtee, and Marisa Chun.

53. Summit for the '90's, WTBS, 28 January 1991 [Tape 136], CNN; Gerry Yandel, “Talk Won’t End Troubles, Black Summit Cautions,” AJC, 29 January 1991, p. B1; “Editor, Harvard Law Review, Black History Minutes,” TBS Public Affairs, [February 1991]; Marie [Milnes], Trent [Norris], and Jon [Molot] to Governance Committee, “Report on Our Three Areas,” 5 January 1991, TNP; “Law Review Elects New Leader,” HLRec, 8 February 1991, p. 3; Obama to Griswold, 8 February 1991, EGP Box 132 Fld. 13; Kerlow, Poisoned Ivy, pp. 10–11, 15–16; Butts and Ellen in Remnick, The Bridge, pp. 191, 210; DJG interviews with Cassandra Butts, Rob Fisher, Randall Kennedy, Mark Kozlowski, Roger Boord, Trent Norris, David Goldberg, John Parry, Carol Platt Liebau, Bruce Spiva, Jon Molot, Sean Lev, Howard Ullman, Charlie Robb, Jonathan Putnam, Sondra Hemeryck, Mark Rosen, and Tom Perrelli.

54. Bob Arnold, “Obama Opens Up: Looks Back on Historic Year,” HLRec, 15 February 1991, pp. 1, 8; Daniel J. Greaney, “Reviewing the Review,” HLRec, 1 March 1991, p. 4; Griswold to Obama, 15 March 1991, Ellen to Griswold, 4 April 1991, Griswold to Ellen, 12 April 1991, Ellen to Griswold, 6 May 1991, Griswold to Ellen, 10 May 1991, EGP Box 132 Fld. 13; Trent Norris and Ken Mack to The Body, “Bluebook Changes,” 7 March 1991, Alan Diefenbach to David Ellen, “Proposal for a Permanent Advisory Board for the Bluebook,” 25 April 1991, Norris to David Ellen et al., “Bluebook Process,” 9 September 1991, Norris, “Proposal for a Uniform System of Citation Advisory Board,” 9 September 1991, Pat [Philbin], Eric [Reifschneider], Rob [Niewyck], and Simone [Francis] to David [Ellen], Bruce [Spiva], and Trent [Norris], “Bluebook Process,” 24 September 1991, all TNP; Jim C. Chen, “Something Old, Something New, Something Borrowed, Something Blue,” University of Chicago Law Review 58 (Fall 1991): 1527–40, esp. 1536, 1537; Norris, “Report of the Bluebook Editor,” 4 February 1992, TNP; James W. Paulsen, “An Uninformed System of Citation,” HLR 105 (May 1992): 1780–94, at 1792; James D. Gordon, “Oh No! A New Bluebook!,” Michigan Law Review 90 (May 1992): 1698–1704, at 1700; Scheiber, “Crimson Tide,” TNR, 4 February 2009; DJG interviews with Trent Norris, Frank Amanat, Ken Mack, Carol Platt Liebau, Monica Harris, Susan Freiwald, Brad Wiegmann, Brad Berenson, Lori-Christina Webb, Lourdes Lopez-Isa, Edith Ramirez, Janis Kestenbaum, Mark Kozlowski, Sean Lev, Tom Perrelli, and Karla Martin.

55. Fraser Robinson III Employee Work History, City of Chicago; Obama, TAOH, p. 332; Michelle Obama in Pete Thamel, “Coach with a Link to Obama Has Hope for Brown’s Future,” NYT, 16 February 2007, p. D1; Felsenthal, “The Making of a First Lady,” CM, February 2009; Craig Robinson, A Game of Character, p. 153–55; Jodi Kantor, “The Obamas’ Marriage,” NYT, 1 November 2009; Kantor, The Obamas, p. 40; Slevin, Michelle Obama, pp. 132–33; HLS Adviser #25, 21 February 1991, p. 5; Paul Tarr, “Bell Stuns BLSA Conference,” HLRec, 15 March 1991, pp. 1, 7; Meredith Ebbin, “Ombudsman Arlene Brock Happy for Barack, Her Harvard Law School Chum,” Bermuda Sun, 6 June 2008; Obama to Bell, 27 March 1991, DBP Box 136 Fld. 1; George Paul, “Students Intervene in CCR Suit,” HLRec, 8 February 1991, p. 1; Daniel J. Greaney, “The Radical Fringe Must Be Stopped,” HLRec, 15 February 1991, p. 4; “Judge Rejects Suit on Bias in Harvard’s Hiring,” NYT, 26 February 1991, p. A18; Anthony Flint, “Harvard Law Wins in Bias Suit Ruling,” BG, 26 February 1991, p. 24; Robert Arnold, “Discrimination Suit Dismissed,” HLRec, 1 March 1991, pp. 1, 8; Ken Myers, “Students Take Diversity Fight Against Harvard to State Court,” NLJ, 4 March 1991, p. 4; Harvard Law School Coalition for Civil Rights v. President and Fellows of Harvard College, 412 Mass. 66 (9 July 1992).

56. Harvard Law School 1990–91 Catalog, p. 157; Unger, Social Theory: Its Situation and Its Task (Cambridge University Press, 1987); Unger, False Necessity: Anti-Necessitarian Social Theory in the Service of Radical Democracy (Cambridge University Press, 1987); Unger, Plasticity into Power: Comparative Historical Studies in the Institutional Conditions of Economic and Military Success (Cambridge University Press, 1987); Unger, Democracy Realized: The Progressive Alternative (Verso, 1998); Unger, What Should the Left Propose? (Verso, 2006); Unger, The Left Alternative (Verso, 2009); Unger e-mails to David Remnick, 1 and 6 March 2009; Chris Szabla, “After Rocky but Influential Tenure, Brazil’s ‘Minister of Ideas’ Returns to HLS,” HLRec, 4 October 2009; Gary Dorrien, The Obama Question (Rowman & Littlefield, 2012), p. 3 (echoing Unger in highlighting how “Obama’s blend of extroverted charm . . . and personal guardedness epitomizes the style of sociability prized by American professional and business culture”); [Obama and Fisher], “Plant Closings: Creative Destruction and the Viability of the Regulated Market,” n.d. [post 5 March 1991], RFP; DJG interviews with Roberto Unger, Gerry Frug, Rob Fisher, Steve Ganis, and Ian Haney López.

57. [Obama and Fisher], “Race and Rights Rhetoric,” n.d. [ca. April 1991], RFP; Aldon D. Morris, The Origins of the Civil Rights Movement (Free Press, 1984), DJG, Bearing the Cross: Martin Luther King Jr. and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (Morrow, 1986), DJG, The FBI and Martin Luther King, Jr.: From ‘SOLO’ to Memphis (W. W. Norton, 1981); Martha Minow to Rob Fisher and Barack Obama, “Re: Your Manuscript,” n.d., RFP; Obama’s 2001 interview with Julieanna Richardson; Martha Minow’s 2007 interview with Liza Mundy; Jager, “Narrating the Nation: Students, Romance and the Politics of Resistance in South Korea,” Ph.D. dissertation, University of Chicago, December 1994; DJG interviews with Rob Fisher, Martha Minow, Scott Siff, and Sheila Jager. On Jiyul Kim, see Kristin Wilson, “Prof Named Fulbright Scholar,” Cumberland County Sentinel, 31 January 2005, Jiyul Kim, “Self Introduction,” Korea History Group Blog, 21 January 2006, and Jiyul Kim, “Cultural Dimensions of Strategy and Policy,” Strategic Studies Institute, U.S. Army War College, May 2009, p. vi.

58. Douglas Baird in Daniel J. Yovich, “Obama’s Star Power in a Bright Legal Galaxy,” HPH, 14 February 2007, p. 15, in Scott, “Obama’s Story, Written by Obama,” NYT, 18 May 2008, p. A1, in Jason Zengerle, “Con Law,” TNR, 30 July 2008, p. 7, in Michael Lipkin, “The Professor and the President,” Chicago Maroon, 7 November 2008, in Becoming Barack, Little Dizzy Home Video, 2009, and on CNBC, 12 January 2009; Jud Miner in Jodi Enda, “Great Expectations,” American Prospect, February 2006, pp. 22ff., in Margaret Talev, “For Obama, a Tale of Two Speeches,” KRDC McClatchy, 16

November 2007, in Jo Becker and Christopher Drew, “Pragmatic Politics, Forged on the South Side,” NYT, 11 May 2008, p. A1, in Tim Harper, “The Making of a President,” Toronto Star, 16 August 2008, p. A1, in Yearwood, “Obama and the Jews,” Chicago Jewish News, 12 September 2008, in Hilary Leila Krieger, “Mr. Obama’s Neighborhood,” Jerusalem Post, 23 October 2008, in Olivia Clarke, “A Firm with a Misson,” Chicago Lawyer, January 2009, and in McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, p. 64; DJG interviews with Kelly Jo MacArthur, Geraldine Alexis, John Levi, Charles Payne, Douglas Baird, Geof Stone, Judd Miner, and Allison Davis. On Payne’s library work, see Charles Payne et al., “The University of Chicago Library Data Management System,” The Library Quarterly 47 (January 1977): 1–22; Maureen O’Donnell and Jon Seidel, “Barack Obama’s Great-Uncle Dies at 89,” CST, 12 August 2014; Graydon Megan, “Obama’s Great-Uncle, Innovative Librarian,” CT, 13 August 2014; and “Charles T. Payne, Leader in Library Automation, 1925–2014,” University of Chicago Library News, 15 August 2014.

59. Dolly Smith, “Law Students Rally at Harvard, Demand Diverse Faculty,” BG, 5 April 1991, p. 19; Toyia R. Battle, “Law Students End Overnight Sit-In,” HC, 6 April 1991; Sharon Stone, “Students Strike for Diversity,” Robert Arnold, “Students Storm Dean Clark’s Office,” and Betsy Fishman, “CCR Intimidates, Insults and Condescends,” HLRec, 12 April 1991, pp. 1, 2, 4, 11, 12; Dan Greaney, “Double Standard for Student Dissidents,” HLRec, 19 April 1991, p. 4; Ira E. Stoll, “Law Dean Clark Slams Protesters,” HC, 25 April 1991; “Law Students Rally, Decry Dean’s Letter,” HC, 26 April 1991; Arnold, “What I Do Is Actually Quite a Bit of Fun,” “Diversity Protesters Picket Griswold Hall,” Charissee Carney and Nicole Lamb, “Record: A Fascist Enquirer!?,” and Andrew Thomas, “An Open Letter to Dean Clark,” HLRec, 3 May 1991, pp. 1, 3, 4, 9, 11–12; Mark N. Templeton, “The Last Laugh Is Dean Clark’s,” HC, 6 June 1991; Eric Felten, “Freedom to Think at Harvard Law,” Washington Times, 17 July 1991, p. E1; Matthew S. Bromberg, “Harvard Law School’s War Over Faculty Diversity,” Journal of Blacks in Higher Education 1 (Autumn 1993): 75–82; Harvard Law Review, 13 April 1991; DJG interviews with David Goldberg, Scott Siff, John Parry, Kevin Downey, Bruce Spiva, Sondra Hemeryck, Trent Norris, Mark Rosen, and Chad Oldfather. On Mary Joe Frug’s never-solved murder, Alice McQuillan, “The Professor and the Murder,” Boston Herald Magazine, 29 March 1992, pp. 7ff., is vastly superior to Peter Collier, “Blood on the Charles,” Vanity Fair, October 1992, pp. 144–64.

60. Harvard Law School 1990–91 Catalog, p. 5; “Student Profile: Barack Obama,” Harvard Law School 1991 Yearbook, pp. 109, 184; Harvard University, The Three Hundred and Fortieth Commencement, 6 June 1991, esp. p. 37 (seventy-two 1991 magna cum laude J.D. graduates), HUA; Emma Coleman Jordan, “Degrees of Hatred,” WP, 16 June 1991, pp. B1–B2; Kerlow, Poisoned Ivy, p. 126; Obama, DFMF, p. 437; Obama’s 2001 interview with Julieanna Richardson; Obama’s 2004 interview with David Axelrod; Obama on NPR with Tavis Smiley, 29 March 2004; HLS Adviser #32, 18 April 1991, p. 4, #36, 16 May 1991, p. 2; “Summer Addresses—3Ls,” n.d. [May 1991], Adam Charnes Papers; Tucker, “HAA and HRAAA Name Candidates,” HC, 31 January 1991; Donald M. Solomon to “Dear Friend,” April 1991, HRAAAP; “Slates for Harvard’s Spring Elections,” Harvard Magazine, May–June 1991, p. 79; Tucker, “Overseers Redefine Role,” HC, 18 November 1991; Gady A. Epstein, “HRAAA Offers No Board Nominees,” HC, 16 April 1992; Scott, A Singular Woman, p. 297; Levenson and Saltzman, “At Harvard Law, a Unifying Voice,” BG, 28 January 2007; Obama, remarks at Hampton University Annual Ministers’ Conference, 5 June 2007; Obama on All Things Considered, NPR, 10 June 2008 ($60,000); Obama, Remarks at a Question-and-Answer Session, 6 July 2011, Public Papers, 2011, Vol. II, p. 828 ($60,000); DJG interviews with Jonathan King, Roberto Unger, Rob Fisher, Ken Mack, Gordon Whitman, Christine Lee, Jan-Michele Lemon Kearney, and Mark Kozlowski. Lynn Sweet, “The Obama We Don’t Know,” CST, 19 July 2008, which contains a number of errors, declares that “Obama took out $42,753 in loans to pay for Harvard” but gives no indication of the source for so specific and unique an amount.

CHAPTER SIX: BUILDING A FUTURE

1. Steve Kerch, “South Shore: Country Club Symbolizes Rebirth of Neighborhood,” CT, 25 November 1984, p. 1; Jan Ferris and Henri Cauvin, “Roseland Tries to Ride Out the Shock Wave,” CT, 6 September 1994; Obama, DFMF, p. 438–39; David Moberg, “Danny Davis: A Sharecropper’s Son Searches for Common Ground,” CR, 7 February 1991; Ben Joravsky, “Aldermania,” CR, 21 February 1991; Thomas Hardy and Tim Jones, “It’s a Cakewalk for Daley Slate,” CT, 27 February 1991; Hardy, “Daley Flattens His Opposition,” CT, 3 April 1991; Paul M. Green, “Chicago’s 1991 Mayoral Elections: Richard M. Daley Wins Second Term,” Illinois Issues, June 1991, pp. 17–25; Fremon, Chicago Politics Ward by Ward, p. 49; Tom Gorman, “Braun Resigns,” HPH, 7 December 1988, p. 1; Steve Neal, “As Dems Drift, Dunne Feels Draft,” CST, 2 April 1990, p. 1; Neal and Jim Merriner, “Dem Pick Lyons,” CST, 3 April 1990, p. 1; Neal, “Evans Backers Target Sawyer Council Allies,” CST, 13 May 1990, p. 4; John Kass, “Evans Battles Longtime Foe in 4th Ward,” CT, 6 March 1991; Hardy, “4th Ward Runoff May Settle Old Score,” CT, 25 March 1991; Vernon Jarrett, “Sleazy Tactic Mars Race in 4th Ward,” CST, 2 April 1991, p. 25; “Dobry Should Resign Committeeman Post,” CST, 3 April 1991, p. 29; Jarrett, “Racial Slander Pays Off in Preckwinkle’s Ward,” CST, 4 April 1991, p. 46; Hardy, “5th Ward Democrat Holds Firm,” CT, 5 April 1991; Lynn Sweet, “Dobry Spurs Call to Resign Over Hate Flyers,” CST, 5 April 1991, p. 26; Neal, “Sleazy Race-Baiting Sets Dobry Apart,” CST, 5 April 1991, p. 35; Kass, “What’s Next for Chicago?,” CT, 7 April 1991, p. P1; Carole Ashkinaze, “Dobry ‘Logic’ Sick,” CST, 7 April 1991, p. 39; Neal, “LaPaille Moves to Heal Racial Rift,” CST, 8 April 1991, p. 19; Joravsky, “Dobry’s Folly,” CR, 25 April 1991; Green, “A Tale of Two Wards,” II, May 1991, pp. 38–39; Neal, “Dobry Defies Calls for His Resignation,” CST, 13 May 1991, p. 25; P. Davis Szymczak and Kass, “Judge Rules Evans’ Loss Is Official,” CT, 15 May 1991; William J. Grimshaw, Bitter Fruit: Black Politics and the Chicago Machine, 1931–1991 (University of Chicago Press, 1992), pp. 203–5; Neal, “Dobry Tries to Salvage Battered Image,” CST, 17 May 1991, p. 37; Gretchen Reynolds, “Is Mayor Daley Really a Republican?,” Chicago Magazine, December 1991; Robert Howard, “Victory Goes to Newhouse Over Kinnally,” CT, 15 June 1966, p. 5; Robert McClory, “Invisible Man,” CR, 13 September 1990; Hardy, “Newhouse Leaving an Impressive Record,” CT, 31 May 1991; Sweet, “Political Briefing,” CST, 31 May 1991, p. 26; Amer Madhani, “Richard Newhouse Jr.,” CT, 2 May 2002; Alice J. Palmer, “Concepts and Trends in Work-Experience Education in the Soviet Union and the United States,” Ph.D. dissertation, Northwestern University, June 1979, esp. pp. 158–60; “Erskine W. Roberts,” CST, 7 March 2013; Lisa Y. Henderson’s exceptionally impressive genealogical work on Dr. Joseph H. Ward at Scuffalong.com; Sheryl Fitzgerald, “Black Police League Has Tough Job Ahead,” CD, 14 September 1968, p. 1; “Palmer Loses Court Battle; No Longer a Cop,” CD, 2 January 1971, p. 3; Edward L. Palmer (“President, Black Press Institute”), “South Africa, Reagan and ‘Child Torture,’” CT, 4 June 1986; Black Press Institute, “An Afro-American Journalist in the USSR,” People’s Daily World, 19 June 1986, p. 18A; Alice Palmer with Mike Giocondo, “A Peaceful World, a Just World, Requires Outreach,” People’s Daily World, 24 December 1986, pp.

10A, 15A; Cliff Kincaid and Herbert Romerstein, "Communism in Chicago and the Obama Connection," www.usasurvival.org, 22 May 2008; Carter L. Clews, "Identity Thrall," Washington Times, 30 July 2008; Trevor Loudon, "The Pro-Soviet Agent of Influence Who Gave Barack Obama His First Job in Politics," www.usasurvival.org, 2012; Chuck O'Bannon and David Robinson, "Buzz and Alice Palmer," 2012 (which provides a very richly instructive view indeed of Buzz Palmer); Grimshaw, Bitter Fruit, p. 133 (Stroger); Michael Sneed, "Sneed," CST, 4 June 1991, p. 2; Sweet, "Palmer in Line for Senate Seat," CST, 4 June 1991, p. 63; Hardy, "Educator Seen as Successor to Newhouse," CT, 5 June 1991, p. C7; Sneed, "Sneed," CST, 5 June 1991, p. 2; Paula Corrigan, "Newhouse Seat Fight Looms," HPH, 5 June 1991, pp. 1, 2; Monica Copeland, "Independent Palmer to Replace Newhouse," CT, 7 June 1991, p. C3; "Palmer Wins Newhouse Senate Seat," CST, 7 June 1991, p. 24; Jarrett, "Bad News, Good News," CST, 9 June 1991, p. 41; Jarrett, "Palmer Remains the Right Choice to Succeed Sen. Newhouse," CST, 11 June 1991, p. 27; Corrigan, "Palmer Wins Senator's Seat," and "Senator Resigns at Critical Time," HPH, 12 June 1991, pp. 1, 2, 4; Sneed, "Sneed," CST, 18 June 1991, p. 2; Corrigan, "New State Senator Prepares for a Long Career," HPH, 26 June 1991, p. 3; Kathleen Furore, "New State Senator Seeks Wedding of Politics, Education," CT, 30 June 1991, p. W11; Corrigan, "Area Legislative Boundaries May Change with Remap," HPH, 3 July 1991, p. 3; Alice Palmer, "School Funding Needs Attention," HPH, 25 September 1991, p. 4; "Names," Illinois Issues, October 1991, p. 22; "State Senator Wins Environment Award," HPH, 30 October 1991, p. 2; Alice Palmer's interviews with Julieanna Richardson and Kate McAuliff; DJG's interviews with Alan Dobry, Tim Evans, Alice Palmer, Donne Trotter, and Ab Mikva.

2. Obama on WTTW's Chicago Tonight, 26 October 2004; Jesse Jackson Jr., A More Perfect Union (Welcome Rain, 2001), pp. 36–37; Michelle Obama, "How I Got Unstuck," O Magazine, September 2005, pp. 22ff.; Michelle in Kalari Girtley and Brian Wellner, "Michelle Obama Is Hyde Park's Career Mom," HPH, 14 February 2007, pp. 7–8, 16–17; Michelle and Jarrett in Richard Wolffe, "Barack's Rock," Newsweek, 25 February 2008; Michelle on CNN's "Barack Obama Revealed," 20 August 2008; Quincy White in Liza Mundy, Michelle (Simon & Schuster, 2008), p. 92; Trevor Jensen, "Charles E. Lomax, 1924–2009: Longtime Lawyer for Don King," CT, 25 September 2009; Chinta Strausberg, "Local Man Makes Good with Money Management Firm," CD, 7 July 1987, p. 18; Lauren Young, "Mr. Rogers' Neighborhood," Smart Money, March 2002; John W. Rogers Jr.'s 2002 interview with Julieanna Richardson; Lynn Norment, "John Rogers: Setting New Standards at the Top of the Money Market," Ebony, August 2004, pp. 140ff.; Phil Vettel, "Despite Changes in the Kitchen, Stylish Gordon Has Aged Gracefully," CT, 6 October 1989; Vettel, "The Best of a Good-Eating City," CT, 2 June 1991; Scott Fornek, "'He Swept Me Off My Feet': Obamas Recall First Date," CST, 3 October 2007, p. 6; Bob Dart, "Obama: Trying to Take His Inspiring Vision to the White House," Cox News Service, 11 January 2008; Michelle on 20/20, ABC, 3 October 2008; Katherine Skiba, "First Lady's Former Chief of Staff 'Blissfully' Unemployed," CT, 29 January 2011; Sher's 2009 interview with Robert Draper; Fran Spielman, "Daley Selects Mosenia as Chief-of-Staff," CST, 1 June 1991, p. 5; Jarrett in Kenneth Meeks, "Favorite Son," Black Enterprise, October 2004, pp. 88–95, in Christopher Benson, "Camelot Rising: Barack & Michelle Obama Begin Their Storied Journey," Savoy, February 2005, pp. 60–69, 103–6, in Sylvester Monroe et al., "Anatomy of a Moment," Ebony, March 2008, pp. 67ff., in Douglas Belkin, "For Obama, Advice Straight Up," WSJ, 12 May 2008, p. A5, and in Kathryn Knight, "Is She the U.S. Cherie?," Daily Mail, 26 June 2008, p. 56; Don Terry's excellent "In the Path of Lightning," CT

Magazine, 27 July 2008; Michelle Cottle, “The Woman to See,” TNR, 27 August 2008, pp. 14ff.; Jonathan Van Meter’s superb “Barack’s Rock,” Vogue, October 2008, pp. 336ff.; Lynn Sweet, “Ms. Jarrett Goes to Washington,” DailyBeast.com, 24 November 2008; Isabel Wilkerson, “The Closer,” Essence, April 2009, pp. 106–9, 150; Christi Parsons, “The President’s Right-Hand Woman,” CT, 19 February 2011; Levi in Melinda Henneberger, “The Obama Marriage,” Slate, 26 October 2007; Minow in James L. Merriner, “The Friends of O,” Chicago Magazine, June 2008, and in Jay Newton-Small, “Michelle Obama’s Savvy Sacrifice,” Time, 25 August 2008; Miner in Ryan Lizza, “Making It,” New Yorker, 21 July 2008; George Galland in Dean Barnett, “Would You Hire Barack Obama?,” Weekly Standard, 1 September 2008; Clarke, “A Firm with a Mission,” Chicago Lawyer, January 2009; John W. Rogers Jr.’s 2002 interviews with Julieanna Richardson; Jarrett’s 2012 interview with Jim Gilmore; Minow’s 2008 interview with Gilmore; DJG interviews with Sondra Hemeryck, Jesse Jackson Jr., John Levi, Kelly Jo MacArthur, Gwendolyn LaRoche Rogers, John W. Rogers Jr., Geraldine Alexis, Newton Minow, Linzey Jones, Eden Martin, Judd Miner, Allison Davis, Paul Strauss, George Galland, Elvin Charity, and Rob and Lisa Fisher; Bob Goldsborough, “John W. Rogers Sr., 1918–2014,” CT, 22 January 2014. On Valerie Jarrett, also see Maurice Lee, “When the Going Gets Tough, Jarrett Steps Up,” HPH, 21 May 2003, p. 7, Christi Parsons et al., “Barack’s Rock,” CT, 22 April 2007, and Jarrett on Tell Me More, NPR, 24 July 2008. Paul Kengor, “Letting Obama Be Obama,” American Spectator, July–August 2011, pp. 12–19, is a relentlessly hostile Jarrett profile. Her former spouse, Dr. William Robert Jarrett, whom she married in 1983, left in 1987, and divorced in 1988, died of a heart attack in 1993 at age forty. Kenan Heise, “Dr. William Jarrett of Jackson Park Hospital,” CT, 23 November 1993. On Jarrett’s father, see Dawn Rhodes, “Dr. James E. Bowman, 1923–2011,” CT, 30 September 2011. On her mother, see Barbara Mahany, “Bard of Education,” CT, 20 August 1997, and Kimberly Sweet, “Behind Every Child,” University of Chicago Magazine, February 1999. Timuel D. Black Jr. interviewed both Bowmans at length in 1994. See Black, Bridges of Memory (Northwestern University Press, 2003), pp. 568–99, and the full transcripts in the Black Papers, CPL.

3. Obama in Mary Mitchell, “Memoir of a 21st Century History Maker,” Black Issues Book Review, January–February 2005, pp. 18–21 (“I started writing it right after law school in 1991. I took about four months off to get it started”); Kennedy Communications, “State Senator Barack Obama, Candidate for U.S. Senate: Background Report,” April 2003, RRP; “Academic Non-Faculty New Hire Form,” 3 September 1991, and Margaret Fallers to Obama, 30 September 1991, Provost Office Records, Faculty Files, Accession #2004-150, Box 20, UC Special Collections; UCLS, The Glass Menagerie 1991–92, esp. p. 40; Mark Megalli, “Bellwether Conservative: The University of Chicago Law School,” Journal of Blacks in Higher Education, Autumn 1993, p. 82; Stone in Merriner, “The Friends of O,” CM, June 2008; Douglas Baird on CNBC, 12 January 2009; Stone in Tom Hundley, “Ivory Tower of Power,” CT Magazine, 22 March 2009; DJG interviews with Jean Rudd, Lionel Bolin, Douglas Baird, Geof Stone, and Kathryn Stell; Joel B. Pollak, “Obama’s Literary Agent in 1991 Booklet,” Breitbart.com, 17 May 2012.

4. No contemporaneous sources or subsequent memories date with any precision Barack and Michelle’s trip to Kenya, though all contextual evidence suggests it took place sometime between late August 1991 and January 1992. By far the richest source on it is Auma Obama’s And Then Life Happens (St. Martin’s, 2012), pp. 212–16. See also Michelle L. Robinson Employee Work History, City of Chicago (first day of work 16 September 1991); Obama, DFMF, pp. 439–40 (“after our engagement”); Obama’s 2001 interview with Julieanna Richardson; John Oywa, “Sleepy Little Village Where Obama Traces His Own Roots,” Nation (Nairobi), 15 August 2004; Laurie Goering, “Obama Campaign Closely Watched—in Kenya,” CT, 10 October 2004, p. 1; Obama, TAOH, p. 53 (“shortly before” their October 1992 wedding); DJG interviews with Kevin Thompson and Zeituni Onyango. In late 1991 Barack’s brother formally petitioned to change his name from Roy Abon’go Obama to Abon’go Malik Obama. In re Obama, #91-22380, Prince George’s County Circuit Court, 29 November 1991 (granted 7 March 1992).

5. Barack and Michelle on 60 Minutes, CBS, 16 November 2008; National Center for Careers in Public Life, “Taking Responsibility for Our Future,” 1–3 November 1991, Wingspread Conference Center, KBP; Katrina Browne, “Program Designed to Help Young People Help Others,” Wingspread The Journal, Winter 1992, pp. 1, 9; Todd Savage, “Driving for Change,” Community Jobs, March 1992, pp. 7, 10; Public Allies Board of Directors, 31 March 1992, Illinois ACORN Papers (98-059) Box 6 Fld. 2; “Mayor, Youth Organization to Honor 100 Volunteers in Public Service,” U.S. Newswire, 24 April 1992; Public Allies, Benefit Committee, D.C. Awards Ceremony program, 28 April 1992, IAP Box 6 Fld. 2; Kris Worrell, “Rock the Capital,” AJC, 15 January 1993, pp. D1, D4; Karen E. Klages, “At Your Service,” CT, 31 March 1993; Paul Schmitz, Everyone Leads: Building Leadership from the Community Up (Jossey-Bass, 2012), pp. 14–20; DJG interviews with Katrina Browne, Jacky Grimshaw, Jason Scott, and Paul Schmitz.

6. Jeremiah A. Wright Jr., “The Audacity of Hope,” in Jini Kilgore Ross, ed., What Makes You So Strong? Sermons of Joy and Strength from Jeremiah A. Wright, Jr. (Judson Press, 1993), pp. 97–109 (as preached at Houston’s Wheeler Avenue Baptist Church in January 1991); Obama, DFMF, pp. 291–95, 440; Julia M. Speller, “Unashamedly Black and Unapologetically Christian: One Congregation’s Quest for Meaning and Belonging,” Ph.D. dissertation, University of Chicago, December 1996, p. 163; Speller, Walkin’ the Talk (Pilgrim Press, 2005), p. 92; Barack in E. Janet Wright, “Obama for Illinois,” Trumpet, February 2004, pp. 30–32; Barack on The Tavis Smiley Show, 23 October 2006 (believing he heard “The Audacity of Hope” in 1988); Elizabeth Taylor, “Q&A with Barack Obama,” CT, 29 October 2006, p. B3 (“a sermon that I heard probably 15 [sic] years ago when I was a community organizer”); Jodi Kantor, “A Candidate, His Minister and the Search for Faith,” NYT, 30 April 2007, p. A1; Ariel Sabar, “Barack Obama: Putting Faith Out Front,” CSM, 16 July 2007, p. 1; Dan Gilgoff, “Barack Obama: Praying to Be ‘An Instrument of God’s Will,’” Beliefnet.com, 21 January 2008; Dwight N. Hopkins, “The Wright Neighborhood,” Religion in the News, Spring 2008; Scott Helman, “Obama’s Odyssey on Race,” BG, 20 March 2008; Stanley Kurtz, “The Audacity of the Real ‘Audacity,’” NationalReview.com, 21 April 2008; Obama’s 29 April 2008 press conference in Winston-Salem, NC; Cone in Christi Parsons and Manya A. Brachear, “What Led Obama to Wright’s Church,” CT, 4 May 2008, p. 1; Obama’s 31 May 2008 press availability in Aberdeen, SD; Kurtz, “‘Context,’ You Say?,” National Review, 19 May 2008, pp. 28–36; Barack in Lisa Miller and Richard Wolffe, “‘I Am a Big Believer in Not Just Words, but Deeds and Works,’” Newsweek, 12 July 2008 (print issue 21 July); Barack in Toby Harnden, “Barack Obama’s True Colours,” Telegraph Magazine, 23 August 2008, pp. 26ff.; Michelle in Melinda Henneberger, “Michelle Obama Interview,” Reader’s Digest, October 2008, pp. 196–203 (“Barack knew the reverend from his work in the city, and we joined together”); Salim Muwakkil on “The Choice 2008,” Frontline, PBS, 14 October 2008; Toni Preckwinkle in Lizza, “Making It,” TNR, 21 July 2008, and in Martin Fletcher, “Before He Was Famous: The Truth Behind Obama’s Meteoric Ascent,” Times (London), 14 October 2008; Robert T. Starks, “How He Did It,” N’Digo Profiles, December 2008, p. 34; Melissa Harris-Lacewell in Rebecca Traister, Big Girls Don’t Cry (Free Press, 2010), p. 48; Janny Scott, A Singular Woman (Riverhead, 2011), pp. 291–92, 298, 301; Maya in Maraniss, BOTS, p. 547; “Notice of Federal Tax Lien Under Internal Revenue Laws,” #91-155273, 12 November 1991; Dunham, Against All Odds, pp. v, 99, 254; DJG interviews with Jeremiah Wright, Kevin Tyson, Deloris Burnam, Carolyn Wortham, Patricia Novick, Kathryn Stell, Greg Galluzzo, Sheila Jager, Ralph Dunham, Charles Payne, and Barack Obama. On Trinity, see also Jeremiah A. Wright Jr., “Doing Black Theology in the Black Church,” in Linda E. Thomas, ed., Living Stones in the Household of God (Fortress Press, 2004), pp. 13–23; Jason Byassee, “Africentric Church: A Visit to Chicago’s Trinity UCC,” Christian Century, 29 May 2007, pp. 18–23; Kareem Crayton, “You May Not Get There with Me: Obama and the Black Political Establishment,” in Manning Marable, ed., Barack Obama and African American Empowerment (Palgrave Macmillan, 2009), pp. 195–207; and Dwight N. Hopkins, “Race, Religion, and the Race for the White House,” in Charles P. Henry et al., eds., The Obama Phenomenon (University of Illinois Press, 2011), pp. 181–99. The assertion in Allison Samuels, “Why Oprah Winfrey Left Rev. Jeremiah Wright’s Church,” Newsweek, 3 May 2008 (print issue 12 May), that “Winfrey was a member of Trinity” is incorrect.

7. Kathleen Best, “Dixon’s Challengers Growing,” SLPD, 20 November 1991, p. A1; Glen C. Thompson, “New Remap Puts Currie Back in Hyde Park-Kenwood,” HPH, 22 January 1992, pp. 1, 2; Rob Karwath, “Remap Alters the Boundaries and the Rules in 2nd District,” CT, 26 January 1992; Florence C. Goold, “TV/IPO Sets Primary Slate,” HPH, 12 February 1992, pp. 1, 2; Steve Johnson, “Savage Ahead in 2nd, Reynolds Has Hope,” CT, 2 March 1992; Johnson, “Reynolds Questions Savage’s Lead,” CT, 3 March 1992; Florence Hamlish Levinsohn, “Carol Moseley Braun,” CR, 5 March 1992; Ted Gregory and Rick Pearson, “Jewish Groups Hit Savage Attack Against Reynolds,” CT, 9 March 1992; Lynn Sweet, “Dixon Pulls Away in Senate Contest,” CST, 9 March 1992, p. 1; Sweet, “Braun Capitalizes on TV Debate Exposure,” CST, 10 March 1992, p. 9; “Local Candidates Gear Up for Next Week’s Primary Election,” and “Support for Local Candidates,” HPH, 11 March 1992, pp. 1, 2, 4; Robert Davis, “Not Anti-Israel, Just Pro-U.S., Savage Says,” CT, 12 March 1992; Janine Poe and Helaine Olen, “Reynolds Is Injured in Shooting,” CT, 13 March 1992; “Savage Plays the Race Card Again,” CT, 14 March 1992; Sweet and Bill Braden, “Poll Puts Braun at Dixon’s Heels as Hofeld Stalls,” CST, 15 March 1992, p. 17; Johnson, “Reynolds, Lipinski Win,” CT, 18 March 1992; Sweet, “A Braun Upset,” CST, 18 March 1992, p. 1; Edward Walsh, “Sen. Dixon Loses in Stunning Upset,” WP, 18 March 1992, p. A1; Isabel Wilkerson, “Illinois Senator Is Defeated by County Politician,” NYT, 18 March 1992, p. A19; John Kass and Monica Copeland, “Braun’s Win a Chance to Forge New Black Power,” and Karwath, “Remap, Blacks Keys to Reynolds’ Victory,” CT, 19 March 1992; Walsh, “Illinois Opens Mean Season for Veteran Officeholders,” WP, 19 March 1992, p. A1; Goold, “Women Sweep Election Slate Here as in Rest of the State,” HPH, 25 March 1992, pp. 1, 2; Goold, “Local Election Results Don’t Reveal Surprises,” HPH, 1 April 1992, p. 3; Manuel Galvan, “Bobby Rush and Mel Reynolds Defeat Incumbent Congressmen,” Illinois Issues, May 1992, pp. 14–17; “Herald Endorsements in Local Races,” HPH, 28 October 1992, p. 4; Gretchen Reynolds, “Vote of Confidence,” Chicago Magazine, January 1993; Barack’s 27 October 1993 interview with Zeke Gonzalez, his 20 September 1995 remarks at the Cambridge (MA) Public Library, his 1 July 2002 interview with Chinta Strausberg, and his 7 February 2004 one with David Axelrod; Paul Simon, P.S.: The Autobiography of Paul Simon (Bonus Books, 1999), p. 177; Peter Slevin, “For Obama, a Handsome Payoff in Political Gambles,” WP, 13 November 2007, p. A3; “Barack Obama and the History of Project VOTE!,” YouTube, 21 March 2008; Sanford A. Newman, “ACORN Didn’t Employ Obama in ’92,” WSJ, 22 July 2008; Allison Davis in David Smallwood, “Veteran Attorneys Recall Obama,” N’Digo Profiles, December 2008, p. 24; Remnick, The Bridge, pp. 221–22; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, pp. 65–72; Fredrick C. Harris, The Price of the Ticket (Oxford University Press, 2012), pp. 57–58; DJG interviews with Sandy Newman, Jacky Grimshaw, John Schmidt, John Rogers, Judd Miner, Allison Davis, Paul Strauss, Carol Harwell, and Brian Banks.

8. Yvonne D. Delk, Joseph Gardner, and Barack Obama to Keith Kelleher, 28 April 1992, Illinois ACORN Papers (IAP) Box 6 Fld. 28; [Agenda], “Project Vote Steering Committee Meeting, 4 May 1992,” IAP (2001-111) Box 2 Fld. 55; “Project Vote Chicago Coalition Current as of 5/11/92,” Gwen Jordan (CRS), Obama, and Gardner to Steering Committee Members, Joint Voter Registration Project, “Meeting—May 18, 1992,” 15 May 1992, Project Vote, “Agenda Illinois Project Vote Steering Committee,” 19 May 1992, “Voter Registration Time-Line,” n.d., Gardner and Obama to Project Vote Steering Committee, “Re: Press Conference on Wednesday, June 3rd,” 28 May 1992, [Draft], “Coalition Pledges to Increase Minority Voter Registration by Over 100,000,” 1 June 1992, “Agenda—Project Vote Steering Committee,” n.d. [3 June 1992?], Obama to Project Vote Steering Committee, “Re: Press Conference Wednesday, June 10th, 10AM–11AM Daley Plaza,” n.d., “Voter Registration Priorities Illinois, Fall 1992,” 10 June 1992, Keith Kelleher, Local 880, to Barack Obama, Project Vote, “Request for Project Vote Funds,” 23 June 1992, all IAP Box 6 Fld. 28; Michael Sneed, “Sneed,” CST, 2 August 1992, p. 2; Vernon Jarrett, “Voter Registration Is Key to Respect,” CST, 4 August 1992, p. 23; Bruce Dixon to Deputy Registrars and Affiliated Organizations, “Re: Bud Billiken Day Parade & Picnic,” n.d. [early August 1992], IAP Box 6 Fld. 29; Jarrett, “‘Project Vote’ Brings Power to the People,” CST, 11 August 1992, p. 23; “V.O.T.E. Community & Project Vote ‘Voice of the Ethnic Community,’” 26 August 1992, IAP Box 6 Fld. 29; Sandy Newman and Linda Dickinson Kendrix to Steve Cullen, 4 September 1992, AFSCME Council 31 Papers; Zach [Pollett] to Craig [St. Louis], Madeline/Caroline/Keith [Chicago], Amy [Detroit], “Re: VR/GOTV Funding Meetings in Your Cities with Citizen Vote Initiative,” 4 September 1992, IAP Box 7 Fld. 41; “Register to Vote to Help Yourself,” CD, 8 September 1992, p. 9; Sandy Newman to Al Leuin (Coulterville, IL), 14 September 1992, AFSCME 31 Papers (A31P); Keith Kelleher to Robin Leeds, “Voter Registration, GOTV, Election Day Proposal for SEIU Local 880 and ACORN in Chicago and Southwest Illinois,” 14 September 1992, IAP Box 7 Fld. 41; Kendrix to Cullen, 16 September 1992, A31P; Chinta Strausberg, “Clinton Gets Big Welcome at Regal,” CD, 21 September 1992, pp. 1, 26; Carol Jouzaitis, “Clinton Hammers Away at Bush,” CT, 21 September 1992; Tim Gerber, “Clinton Says Registration Vital for Win in November,” CST, 21 September 1992, p. 6; Michael K. Frisby, “In Mich., Clinton Assails Bush on Economy,” BG, 21 September 1992, p. 11; Joseph E. Gardner to All Interested Parties, “Voter Registration/Ward Analysis,” 21 September 1992, IAP Box 7 Fld. 41 and IAP (162) Box 6 Fld. 29; Frisby, “Business Executives Give Clinton a Boost,” BG, 22 September 1992, p. 12; “Project VOTE Adds 50,000 Voters,” CD, 22 September 1992, p. 22; Strausberg, “Voter Registration Up in 19 Key Wards,” and “Stars to Fire Up Registration Drive,” CD, 23 September 1992, pp. 3, 5; Basil Talbott, “Jackson Brings Flair to Rush’s Voter Drive,” CST, 25 September 1992, p. 4; Ray

Long, “Most New Voters from Black Wards: Study,” CT, 26 September 1992, p. 5; Jarrett, “Need for a Black Summit Is Urgent,” CST, 1 October 1992, p. 39; Mary A. Johnson and Philip Franchine, “Mail Drives, House Calls Fuel Voter Roll Surge,” CST, 3 October 1992, p. 4; Karen Ball (AP), “Voter Registration: Setting Records in Some Regions,” 4 October 1992; Reynolds, “Vote of Confidence,” CM, January 1993; Ben Joravsky, “Lou Pardo, the Czar of Voter Registration, Nears 100,000,” CR, 23 September 1993; Chicago DSA’s 36th Annual Debs-Thomas-Harrington Dinner Program, 14 May 1994; Obama, Illinois State Senate Transcript, 9 May 2002, p. 90 (recalling Newhouse’s help); Toni Foulkes, “Case Study: Chicago—The Barack Obama Campaign,” Social Policy, Winter 2003/Spring 2004, pp. 49–52, esp. p. 50; Keith Kelleher, “Growth of a Modern Union Local: A People’s History of SEIU Local 880,” Just Labour 12 (Spring 2008): 1–15, esp. p. 10 (“for” Braun); Stanley Kurtz, Radical-in-Chief (Simon & Schuster, 2010), pp. 223–27; John Atlas, Seeds of Change (Vanderbilt University Press, 2010), p. 101; Eileen Boris and Jennifer Klein, Caring for America (Oxford University Press, 2012), pp. 164–76; UCLS Announcements 1991–92, 6 September 1991, p. 27; “Academic Non-Faculty Termination or Transfer Form,” 30 October 1992, Provost Office Records, Faculty Files, #2004-150, Box 20 (Barack’s appointment as a Fellow ended 30 June); UCLS Announcements 1992–93, 27 August 1992, p. 27; UCLS, The Glass Menagerie 1992–93, esp. p. 44; Chicago Video Project, “Introducing Barack Obama,” Obama for Illinois, 2003; Obama, transcript of remarks at Heartland Cafe Rally, Chicago, 7 February 2004, JKP and TPP (“to get Bill Clinton and Carol Moseley Braun elected”); Obama, remarks at the Take Back America Forum, Washington, D.C., 19 June 2007 (“to help Bill Clinton get elected”); Monique Garcia, “Election Volunteer, Extraordinaire,” CT, 11 July 2007; Barack’s 1993 interview with Zeke Gonzalez, his 2001 one with Julieanna Richardson, and his 2002 one with Chinta Strausberg; Brian Banks and Rita Whitfield in “Barack Obama and the History of Project Vote,” BarackObama.com, 21 March 2008; Mark S. Allen, “From Adversary to Longtime Ally,” BlackVoices.com, 19 January 2009; DJG interviews with Carol Harwell, Brian Banks, Keith Kelleher, Madeline Talbott, Al Kindle, Mike Pflieger, Jeremiah Wright, Kevin Tyson, Tondra L. Loder-Jackson, Miguel del Valle, Sandy Newman, John Schmidt, Yvonne Delk, Gwendolyn Jordan, Jeff Schoenberg, Marv Dyson, James D. Holzhauer, Bill Perkins, Roberta Lynch, Ray Harris, Margaret Bagby, Alvin Love, Desta Houston, Eric Adelstein, Peter Coffey, and Carol Moseley Braun. Edward Gardner’s long-standing interest in voter registration is readily evident in his 1989 interview with Blackside’s Dave Lacy.

On DCP as of 1991–92, see especially Ben Joravsky, “A Confederacy of Churches,” CR, 21 February 1992, which is alone in noting DCP’s huge 20 November 1991 “convention”; Lynne Owens Mock, “Validation of an Instrument to Assess the Personal Values of African-American Community Leaders,” M.A. thesis, University of Illinois at Chicago, 1994; L. Sean Azelton, “Boundary Spanning and Community Leadership: African American Leaders in the Greater Roseland Area,” M.A. thesis, University of Illinois at Chicago, 1996; John C. Glidewell et al., “Natural Development of Community Leadership,” in R. Scott Tindale et al., eds., Theory and Research on Small Groups (Plenum Press, 1998), pp. 61–86; S. Darius Tandon et al., “Constructing a Tree for Community Leaders: Contexts and Processes in Collaborative Inquiry,” American Journal of Community Psychology 26 (August 1998): 669–96; Mock, “The Personal Vision of African American Community Leaders,” Ph.D. dissertation, University of Illinois at Chicago, 1999, esp. pp. 127, 130; James G. Kelly, “Contexts and Community Leadership: Inquiry as an Ecological Expedition,” American Psychologist 54 (November 1999): 953–61;

Kelly et al., “Collaborative Inquiry with African-American Community Leaders: Comments on a Participatory Action Research Process,” in Peter Reason and Hilary Bradbury, eds., Handbook of Action Research: Participative Inquiry and Practice (Sage Publications, 2001), pp. 348–55; Tandon et al., “Participatory Action Research as a Resource for Developing African American Community Leadership,” in Deborah L. Tolman and Mary Brydon-Miller, eds., From Subjects to Subjectivities: A Handbook of Interpretive and Participatory Methods (New York University Press, 2001), pp. 200–17; Kelly et al., “On Community Leadership: Stories About Collaborations in Action Research,” American Journal of Community Psychology 33 (June 2004): 205–16. Johnnie Owens left DCP in August 1993 and was succeeded by Cassandra Lowe. DJG interviews with Johnnie Owens, Mike Kruglik, Greg Galluzzo, Mary Gonzales, and Paul Scully.

9. Obama’s August 1995 interview with Connie Martinson; Obama’s September 1995 remarks at the Cambridge (MA) Public Library; Tom Maliti (AP), “Obama’s Brother Chooses Life in Slow Lane,” 26 October 2004; Loretta Augustine-Herron in Philip Sherwell, “The Big Hitter,” Sunday Telegraph, 28 January 2007, p. 18, and in Sherwell, “Obama: The Secret of His Success,” ST, 8 June 2008, p. 17; Kirsten Scharnberg and Kim Barker, “The Not-So-Simple Story of Barack Obama’s Youth,” CT, 25 March 2007; Jeff Chang, “Maya Soetoro Ng: Q&A,” Vibe, September 2007; Janny Scott, “A Biracial Candidate Walks His Own Fine Line,” NYT, 29 December 2007, p. A1; Jacobs, Obamaland, p. 123; Emme Tomimbang, “Barack Obama: Hawaii Roots,” 8 February 2008; Loretta in David James Smith, “The Ascent of Mr. Charisma,” Sunday Times Magazine (London), 23 March 2008, pp. 58ff.; Adam Goldman and Robert Tanner (AP), “Old Friends Recall Obama’s Years in LA, NY,” 15 May 2008; Stefano Esposito, “2 People Who Love Each Other,” CST, 13 July 2008, p. A2; Yann Masson, “Presidentielle Americaine: Avec Barack, on Regardait Les Matchs de Basket,” Nice Matin, 6 November 2008; Andrea Brown, “To Couple, He’s Barry in a Leather Jacket,” Colorado Springs Gazette, 20 January 2009; “Obamas Credit Stevie Wonder,” NYT, 27 February 2009; Allison Davis’s 2009 interview with Robert Draper; Kantor, The Obamas, p. 176; Auma Obama, And Then Life Happens, p. 221–22; Carol Felsenthal, “Yvonne Davila,” ChicagoMag.com, 14 December 2012; Obama, remarks at Solyndra, Fremont, CA, 26 May 2010, Public Papers 2010 Vol. 1, p. 714; Tracy Baim, Obama and the Gays (Prairie Avenue Productions, 2010), pp. 536–37; Michael Cass, “Obama’s Rise Is No Surprise to Nashville Woman Who Worked with Him,” Tennessean, 5 October 2012; DJG interviews with Mike Ramos, Kelly Jo MacArthur, Hasan Chandoo, Jeremiah Wright, Jerry Kellman, Greg Galluzzo, Johnnie Owens, David Kindler, Sokoni Karanja, Ken Rolling, Jean Rudd, Rob Fisher, Mark Kozlowski, Dan Rabinovitz, Tom Perrelli, Jan-Michele Lemon Kearney, Ken Mack, Geraldine Alexis, Tom Reed, Allison Davis, Paul Strauss and Marlies Carruth, Laura Tilly, Loretta Augustine-Herron, Yvonne Lloyd, Margaret Bagby, John Schmidt, John Rogers Jr., Carol Harwell, Brian Banks, Kevin Thompson, Charles Payne, Janis Robinson, Bernard Loyd, and Jesse Jackson Jr.

10. Strausberg, “Voter Registration Drive Gets Push on Final Day,” CD, 5 October 1992, pp. 1, 22; “Voter Registration: Project Vote! Targets Urban Swing Areas,” The Hotline, 8 October 1992; Linda M. Harrington and John C. Patterson, “Issues Spark Registration Jump,” CT, 10 October 1992, p. 1; Strausberg, “VOTE Spokesman Warns of Polling Place Confusion,” CD, 14 October 1992, p. 8; David Shribman and James M. Perry, “Perot’s Support Slips, but Impact in Race Remains,” WSJ, 30 October 1992, p. A1; Eric Zorn, “Better Not to Vote Than Vote Stupidly,” CT, 1 November 1992, p. C1; Newman to Cullen, 2 December 1992, A31P; “Breaking Records in Illinois,” Project Vote! [newsletter], n.d., pp. 1, 3; Reynolds, “Vote of Confidence,” CM, January 1993; Frank James, “25 Chicagoans on the Road to Making a Difference,” CT, 10 February 1993, p. 5; Obama UCLS Faculty Curriculum Vitae, ca. 2000, web.archive.org, 2001 ($200,000); Evans in Sherwell, “The Big Hitter,” Sunday Telegraph, 28 January 2007, p. 18, and in Daniel J. Yovich, “Favorite Son,” HPH, 14 February 2007, pp. 2, 14; Erika George in Deanie Wimmer, “Utah Delegate’s Life Touched by Obama,” KSL.com, 24 August 2008, and in Matt Canham, “Utah Prof Remembers Obama,” Salt Lake Tribune, 26 August 2008; Toni Preckwinkle in Mark Karlin, “Who Is Obama’s Alderwoman [sic] in Chicago?,” Buzzflash.com, 15 July 2008, and in “A Salute to Barack Obama,” Hyde Park History 31 (Winter 2008–2009), p. 4; Saltzman in Terry McDermott, “What Is It About Obama?,” LAT, 24 December 2006, in Lizza, “Making It,” TNR, 21 July 2008, in Yearwood, “Obama and the Jews,” Chicago Jewish News, 12 September 2008, and in Abramsky, Inside Obama’s Brain, p. 207; Axelrod in Maria L. La Ganga, “The Man Behind Obama’s Message,” LAT, 15 February 2008; Axelrod’s June 2008 interview with Jim Gilmore; Axelrod in Remnick, The Bridge, p. 225; Axelrod, Believer, p. 119; Leslie Hairston, “Tribute to Late Mr. Ronald L. Davis,” Chicago City Council Journal, 14 May 2008, pp. 15–16; Obama’s 2001 interview with Julieanna Richardson and his 2002 one with Chinta Strausberg; DJG interviews with Carol Harwell, Brian Banks, Sandy Newman, John Schmidt, Bill Perkins, Toni Preckwinkle, Laura Washington, Mike Pflieger, Phil Mullins, Roberta Lynch, and Bettylu Saltzman.

11. Robert Davis, “Daley Merges Planning, Economic Development Staffs,” CT, 11 October 1991; Alf Siewers, “Commission Has Big Plans for Neighborhoods,” CST, 21 October 1991, p. 4; Wilma Randle, “Aide Brings Own Vision to City Post,” CT, 8 December 1991; John Kass, “Daley’s New City Hall Excludes Blacks, Suit Charges,” CT, 25 June 1992; Fran Spielman, “Daley’s Chief of Staff to Oversee Aviation,” CST, 16 September 1992, p. 14; Michael Sneed, “Sneed,” CST, 15 October 1992, p. 2; Michelle L. Robinson Employee Work History, City of Chicago; Ann Dunham résumé, n.d. (post-February 1993), Dunham Papers; Andrew J. Salz obituary, San Francisco Chronicle, 9 October 1995, p. A20; Obama’s 2001 interview with Julieanna Richardson; Charles Leroux, “The Buzz Around Obama’s Book,” CT, 6 August 2004; Peter Osnos, “Barack Obama and the Book Business,” The Century Foundation, 30 October 2006; Robert Draper’s 2009 interviews with Allison Davis, Michelle Obama, Valerie Jarrett, and Peter Osnos; Jane Dystel’s 2009 e-mail to Draper; Draper, “Barack Obama’s Work in Progress,” GQ, November 2009; Remnick, The Bridge, pp. 227–28; Scott, A Singular Woman, p. 301–4; Diana Darling, Tandjung Sari: A Magical Door to Bali (Editions Didier Millet, 2012), esp. pp. 17–28; Obama in Jonathan Van Meter, “Leading by Example,” Vogue, April 2013, pp. 248–55, 318–19; Mark Obama Ndesnadjo, An Obama’s Journey (Lyons Press, 2014), pp. 281–84; DJG interviews with Jean Rudd, John Schmidt, Kelly Jo MacArthur, Jerry Kellman, Sandy Newman, Dan Hale, Bronwyn Solyom, Allison Davis, Kevin Thompson, Janis Robinson, Laura Demanski, and Ann Patty.

On Patty and the death of Poseidon, see Esther B. Fein, “Book Notes: A Duchy Turns 12,” NYT, 20 May 1992, p. C20; Estate of Virginia C. Andrews v. U.S., 804 F. Supp. 820 (E. D. Va.), 27 October 1992; David Streitfeld, “A Novelist’s Tales from the Crypt,” WP, 7 May 1993, p. A1; Streitfeld, “Dead Writer’s ‘Ghost’ Says He Paid Large Fee,” WP, 27 May 1993, p. D1; Maureen O’Brien, “What’s Happening at Poseidon,” Publishers’ Weekly, 5 July 1993, p. 18; Sarah Lyall, “Book Notes: Absorbing Poseidon,” NYT, 7 July 1993, p. C13; Lyall, “Book Notes: Leaving After All,” NYT, 4 August 1993, p. C13; Estate of Virginia C. Andrews v. U.S., 850 F. Supp. 1279 (E.D. Va.), 10 May 1994; Nina Shengold, “Mother of Invention,” Chronogram, March 2005, pp. 72–73; Patty, “The Future for Book Editors: Royalties?,” Publishing Perspectives, 9 April 2010.

12. Barnett v. Daley, 835 F. Supp. 1063 (N. D. Ill.), 8 October 1993; African American Voting Rights Legal Defense Fund v. Villa, 999 F. 2d 1301 (8th Cir.), 4 August and 1 November 1993; Tyus v. Schoemehl, 93 F. 3d 449 (8th Cir.), 16 August 1996; Baravati v. Josephthal Lyon & Ross, 834 F. Supp. 1023 (N. D. Ill.), 4 October 1993; “People,” CT, 27 June 1993, p. B9; “Business Appointments,” CST, 5 July 1993, p. 40; Chicago Lawyer, September 1993, p. 66; Judson Miner, “Barack Obama’s Career at Miner, Barnhill & Galland,” n.d. [2007], 4pp., Miner Papers; Abdon M. Pallasch, “Obama’s Legal Career,” CST, 17 December 2007; David Smallwood, “Veteran Attorneys Recall Obama,” N’Digo Profiles, December 2008, p. 24; Allison Davis’s 2009 interview with Robert Draper; DJG interviews with Judd Miner, Allison Davis, Chuck Barnhill, George Galland, Paul Strauss, Laura Tilly, Jeff Cummings, Mark Kende, Sarah Siskind, and Whit Soule. On Miner and the firm’s history, also see Michael Powell, “Anatomy of a Counter-Bar Association: The Chicago Council of Lawyers,” American Bar Foundation Research Journal 4 (Summer 1979): 501–41, esp. 506, 511–13, Olivia Clarke, “A Firm with a Mission,” Chicago Lawyer, January 2009, and Don Rose, “The Lawyers Who Reformed Chicago,” The Week Behind, 23 March 2011.

13. Jessica Bassett, “Barack’s Students Gabe and Nicole Gore Reflect on ‘Professor Obama,’” St. Louis American, 30 October 2008; Jesse Ruiz in “Obama’s Chicago Roots,” Time.com, 17 December 2008; DJG interviews with Douglas Baird, Jesse Ruiz, Barack Obama, Julie Fernandes, Brett Hart, Jeanne Gills, Julia Bronson, and Elaine Horn. See also Joan Giangrassie Kates, “Jesus Ruiz, 1917–2013,” CT, 24 April 2013. Per Marsha Ferziger Nagorsky’s 31 December 2009 e-mail to Dennis J. Hutchinson, no UCLS course evaluations survive: “the entire Spring quarter of 1993 is missing.” No surviving copy of Barack’s 1993 syllabus has yet been discovered, but all former students’ recollections suggest the 1993 class proceeded just as it did in 1994, and that Spring Term 1994 Syllabus (Adam Gross Papers) is relied upon here. Stacy Marlise Gahagan and Alfred L. Brophy, “Reading Professor Obama: Race and the American Constitutional Tradition,” University of Pittsburgh Law Review 75 (2014): 495–581, reprints the syllabus in full and offers a careful and thorough analysis of it while noting (522) that “the readings are remarkably non-theoretical.”

14. Michelle L. Robinson Employee Work History, City of Chicago (last day of work 30 April 1993); Woods Charitable Fund, Report for the Year 1992, p. 24; Public Allies Chicago, Winter 1993; Alphonso Myers, “Student Awarded for Leadership and Service,” Columbia College Chronicle, 3 May 1993, pp. 1–2; Jane Meredith Adams, “Youths Vow War on ‘Me’ Generation,” CT, 21 June 1993; “Comings and Goings,” CCB, 12 July 1993, p. 25 (“Public Allies: Michelle Obama, 29, to regional director from assistant commissioner of the city’s Department of Planning and Development”); Public Allies: The National Center for Careers in Public Life, “An Action Plan by Young People,” n.d., KBP; Ed Cohen, “Echoing Green: Building Institutions, Impacting Policy, Creating a Community,” 13 July 1995, esp. p. 18 (“provided assistance with student loans enabling Michelle Obama to work at Public Allies”), EGP; Michelle in Sarah Brown, “Obama ’85 Masters Balancing Act,” Daily Princetonian, 7 December 2005; Schmitz in Melinda Henneberger, “The Obama Marriage,” Slate, 26 October 2007; Richard Wolffe, “Barack’s Rock,” Newsweek, 25 February 2008; Suzanne Perry, “Fired Up and Ready to Grow,”

Chronicle of Philanthropy, 17 April 2008; Michelle in Geraldine Brooks, “Michelle Obama: Camelot 2.0?,” More, October 2008; Cindy Moelis in Carol Felsenthal, “The Making of a First Lady,” Chicago Magazine, February 2009, pp. 50–56, 72–78; Paul Schmitz, Everyone Leads (Jossey-Bass, 2012), pp. 23–24; DJG interviews with Katrina Browne, Jason Scott, Sunny Fischer, Julianne Alfred Sullivan, Bethann Hester, Julian Posada, and Paul Schmitz.

15. Obama’s 27 October 1993 interview with Zeke Gonzalez; Obama’s 7 March 2001 remarks at the Illinois State Library; Charles Leroux, “The Buzz Around Obama’s Book,” CT, 6 August 2004, p. T1; “Oprah Talks to Barack Obama,” O Magazine, November 2004; Obama, U.S. Senate Financial Disclosure Report, 15 June 2005; Osnos, “Barack Obama and the Book Business,” The Century Foundation, 30 October 2006; Scott, “Obama’s Story, Written by Obama,” NYT, 18 May 2008, p. A1; Kevin Simpson, “Identity Questions Shaped Obama into New Kind of Politician,” Denver Post, 28 August 2008, p. P8; D. D. Guttenplan, “The Washington Insider Who Made Obama Rich,” FT, 25 October 2008; Osnos, “The Making of the Book That Made Obama,” DailyBeast.com, 27 January 2009; Osnos’s 2009 interview with Robert Draper; Dystel’s 2009 e-mail to Draper; Draper, “Barack Obama’s Work in Progress,” GQ, November 2009; James Rosen, “Obama’s ‘American Story’ Faces Fresh Scrutiny,” FoxNews.com, 5 July 2012; DJG interviews with Rob Fisher, Henry Ferris, and Alex McNear.

16. Warranty Deed #93-608056, Stephen D. and Helen N. Anderson to Barack and Michelle Obama, 5450-1 S. East View Park, 28 July 1993; Francine Knowles, “Video Store in Hyde Park Finds Niche Among Giants,” CST, 23 July 1995; “Five Minutes with: Sen. Barack Obama,” CampusProgress.org, ca. 22 March 2005; Kathy Chaney, “Time for Fun,” and “Who Is Barack Obama?,” HPH, 14 February 2007, pp. 4, 6, 15; Mark Konkol, “Mr. Obama’s Neighborhood,” CST, 25 May 2007, p. 12; Patrick T. Reardon, “Obama’s Chicago,” CT, 25 June 2008, p. T1; Obama on MSNBC’s “Hardball,” 2 April 2008; Ray Gibson et al., “How Broke Were Obamas?,” CT, 20 April 2008; “Obama’s Chicago Roots,” Time.com, 17 December 2008; Gayle Keck, “Touring Obama’s Chicago,” San Francisco Chronicle, 18 January 2009; Christopher Benson, “The President’s Neighborhood,” Chicago Magazine, June 2009; Dennis Rodkin, “Renters Snap Up Obamas’ Former Condo,” ChicagoMagazine.com, 4 August 2010; Alford A. Young Jr., “The Black Masculinities of Barack Obama,” Daedalus, Spring 2011, pp. 206–14; Maggie Murphy and Lynn Sherr, “The President and Michelle Obama on Work, Family, and Juggling It All,” Parade, 20 June 2014; Craig Robinson in Bill Reynolds, “Welcome to Obama’s Family,” Providence Journal, 15 February 2007, p. C1, in Eric Tucker (AP), “Family Ties: Brown Coach, Barack Obama,” 1 March 2007, and in Frank Fitzpatrick, “Barack Obama’s Closest Opponent,” Philadelphia Inquirer, 2 March 2007; Obama on This Week, ABC, 13 May 2007; Craig in M. Charles Bakst, “Brown Coach Robinson a Strong Voice for Brother-in-Law Obama,” PJ, 20 May 2007, p. D1, in Liza Mundy, “A Series of Fortunate Events,” WP Magazine, 12 August 2007, pp. 10ff., in Mundy, Michelle, p. 100, and in John Feinstein, “Obama’s Brother-in-Law Is a Court Authority,” WP, 18 January 2009; Gary W. E. Forth v. Maya K. Soetoro, #1DV94-0-001619, 9 May 1994 (decree entered 12 May 1995); Obama on the CBS Evening News, 16 January 2008; Jeff Chang, “Maya Soetoro Ng: Q&A,” Vibe, September 2007; Maya in Scott, A Singular Woman, p. 296; DJG interviews with John Belcaster, Charles Payne, Harry Gendler, Julian Posada, Jim Reed, Greg Dingens, Bernard Loyd, Tom Reed, Barack Echols, Janis Robinson, and Verna Myers. John Belcaster recalls with precise clarity that his starting salary when Davis Miner hired him in late 1993 was $73,000.

17. Gary Wisby, “Youths Sought to Honor as New Leaders,” CST, 28 March 1994, p.13; Public Allies Chicago, Check-In, Winter 1995, p. 5; DJG interviews with Bethann Hester, Julie Alfred Sullivan, Julian Posada, Jeremiah Wright, Kevin Tyson, Carlton Guthrie, Deloris Burnam, Keith Kelleher, Madeline Talbott, Sarah Siskind, and Joel Rogers; “The Fifteen Greatest Black Preachers,” Ebony, November 1993, p. 156; Speller, Walkin’ the Talk, p. 92; Keith Kelleher, “Jacky Grimshaw,” 5 August 1992, IAP Box 10 Fld. 91; “Contacts We Need to Make for New Party/Progressive Chicago,” 11 February 1993, IAP Box 10 Flds. 40 and 77; Kelleher, “Mtg. with Jacky Grimshaw,” 12 May 1993, and [Kelleher], “Mtg. w/ Barak Obama,” 27 July 1993, IAP (162) Box 6 Fld. 49; Daniel Cantor to Obama, 12 August 1993, and Zach Pollett to Madeline [Talbott] and Keith [Kelleher], “Agenda for Phone Conversation on Illinois Political Odds ’n Ends,” 21 August 1993, IAP Box 6 Fld. 48; Joe Gardner et al. to Joe Gardner, IAP Box 6 Fld. 44 and Box 10 Fld. 58; Joel Rogers, “Is It Third Party Time?,” In These Times, 4 October 1993, pp. 28–29; Kelleher to Cantor, “New Party Progress and Plans Since June IEC,” 30 September 1993, IAP (2003-066) Box 1 Fld. New Party 1993; Keith [Kelleher] to Talbott et al., “Conversation with Steve Saltzman,” 2 November 1993, IAP Box 6 Flds. 47, 48, and 49; Gardner et al. to Gardner, 5 November 1993, IAP Box 6 Fld. 44; Gardner et al. to Obama, 31 December 1993, IAP Box 6 Fld. 49 and Box 12 Fld. 4; [Kelleher], “PRO Chicago Calls,” 14 February 1994, IAP Box 11 Fld. 71; Gardner et al. to Talbott, 28 March 1994 and 22 April 1994, IAP Box 11 Flds. 69 and 64, Lou Pardo to Kelleher, 29 April 1994, IAP Box 11 Fld. 63; Gardner et al. to Talbott, 27 May 1994, and 5 July 1994, IAP Box 11 Flds. 62 and 54; New Party News (“For a Progressive Chicago”), Vol. 1, #1, September 1994, 4pp., IAP Box 11 Fld. 45; Steve Mills, “Looking for the Left,” CT, 1 December 1994 (the New Party’s “Chicago organization is not yet fully formed”); Stanley Kurtz, Radical-in-Chief (Simon & Schuster, 2010), p. 244; Kurtz, “Obama on the Fringe,” National Review, 25 June 2012, pp. 25–27.

18. UCLS Announcements 1993–94, pp. 37–38; UCLS, The Glass Menagerie 1993–94, esp. p. 45; “40 Under Forty,” CCB, 27 September 1993, pp. 27ff.; Obama’s 27 October 1993 interview with Zeke Gonzalez; Woods Charitable Fund, Report for the Year 1993, esp. pp. 3, 6, 26; William S. McKersie, “Watchful Waiting, and Other Evaluation Lessons Learned: A Chicago Case Study,” Foundation News & Commentary 38 (September–October 1997): 32–38 (“the Woods board gets full copies of all proposals along with the staff’s recommendations”); Gil Dietz, “He’s Still Waiting for His Own Beer Summit,” Muscatine Journal, 3 May 2010; Mundy, Michelle, pp. 119–20; Gary Wisby, “Youths Sought to Honor as New Leaders,” CST, 28 March 1994, p. 13; Eric Krol, “Service to Community Helps Pay Way Toward College Education,” CT, 29 April 1994; Public Allies Chicago, Check-In, Winter 1995; Obama to Phil and Karen Boerner, n.d. [circa mid-March 1994, as Laura Boerner was born March 4]; DJG interviews with Robert Bennett, Allison Davis, David Kindler, Kevin Jokisch, Tom Knutson, Steve Perkins, Jean Rudd, Ken Rolling, Howard Stanback, Julie Alfred Sullivan, Bethann Hester, Julian Posada, Bernard Loyd, Sunny Fischer, Ian Larkin, and Jan Anne Dubin.

19. Obama, “Current Issues in Racism and the Law,” Spring Term 1994 Syllabus, “Reading Packet #1,” for 29 March and 5 April 1994, and “Reading Packet #2,” for 12 and 19 April 1994, Adam Gross Papers; Cornel West, “Learning to Talk of Race,” New York Times Magazine, 2 August 1992, pp. 24–25; UCLS Course Evaluations, Racism and the Law, Spring 1994 (14 respondents); Susan Epstein, “Obama 10 Years Ago,” DailyKos.com, 1 August 2004; Jodi Kantor, “Teaching Law, Testing Ideas, Obama Stood Apart,” NYT, 30 July 2008, p. A1; Jesse Ruiz in Michael Lipkin, “The Professor and the President,”

Chicago Maroon, 7 November 2008, and in Robin I. Mordfin, “From the Green Lounge to the White House,” University of Chicago Law School Record, Spring 2009, pp. 2–9; Susan Epstein, “In the Classroom with Barack Obama and Elena Kagan,” Santa Barbara Independent, 8 July 2010; DJG interviews with David Strauss, Adam Gross, Paul Strauss, Susan Epstein, Jesse Ruiz, Carolyn Shapiro, Robert Mahnke, and Salil Mehra. On Cose’s late 1993 The Rage of a Privileged Class, see Arnold Rampersad, “Another Day, Another Humiliation,” NYTBR, 9 January 1994, p. 6.

20. Audio recording, oral argument in Baravati v. Josephthal, Lyon & Ross, #93-3647, 7th Cir., 7 April 1994, <http://web.archive.org/web/20081009195106/http://www.suntimes.com/images/cds/MP3/obama.mp3>; Baravati v. Josephthal, Lyon & Ross, 28 F. 3d 704 (7th Cir.), 1 July 1994; John Flynn Rooney, “Arbitration Panel Can Award Punitive Damages: Court,” Chicago Daily Law Bulletin, 5 July 1994, p. 3; “Appeal Is Filed on Ward Boundaries,” CT, 21 April 1994; Barnett v. Daley, 32 F. 3d 1196 (7th Cir.), 23 August 1994 (argued 20 April 1994); “Barack Obama, Of Counsel,” www.lawmbg.com, 30 August 2000 (“real estate financing, acquisition, construction and/or redevelopment of low and moderate income housing”); “Barack Obama CV,” www.law.uchicago.edu, 4 June 2004 (“helped to structure and finance efforts to construct mixed-income housing to replace public housing in and around Cabrini Green”); Pallasch, “Obama’s Legal Career,” CST, 17 December 2007, p. 4; Dan Morain, “Obama’s Lawyer Days Were Effective but Brief,” LAT, 6 April 2008, p. A14; David Smallwood, “Veteran Attorneys Recall Obama,” N’Digo Profiles, December 2008, p. 24; Sony Kassam and Bushra Kabir, “Mr. Belcaster: ‘Integrity, Intelligence, and Energy,’” The Hoofbeat, 7 December 2009; Obama in Wolffe, Renegade, p. 190; Michael Tapscott and Richard Pollock, “The Obama You Don’t Know,” Washington Examiner, 19 September 2012; DJG interviews with Rob Fisher, Ken Mack, John Belcaster, Paul Strauss, Jeffrey Cummings, Judd Miner, George Galland, Laura Tilly, Matt Piers, and Scott Lynch-Giddings. On Arthur Brazier, see his 1995 interview in Black, Bridges of Memory, pp. 547–67. Woodlawn Preservation and Investment Corp. was founded in 1987, acquired the 504-unit Woodlawn Gardens from HUD in 1988 and renamed it Grove Parc Plaza. On WPIC, see Patrick T. Reardon, “Woodlawn Project Gives Hope For Future,” CT, 29 October 1993, Tom Andreoli, “Redevelopment and Redemption: Woodlawn, Kenwood Try . . . Again,” CCB, 4 June 1994, R. C. Longworth, “Inner-City Areas Get 2nd Chance,” CT, 27 December 1994, Cal McAllister, “Building for the Future,” CT, 15 April 1995, and especially Binyamin Appelbaum, “Grim Proving Ground for Obama’s Housing Policy,” BG, 27 June 2008.

21. Obama’s September 1995 remarks at the Cambridge (MA) Public Library (“I had to take some leaves of absence for a month or two once the first draft was written to try to polish it”); Obama in Mary Mitchell, “Memoirs of a 21st-Century History Maker,” Black Issues Book Review, January–February 2005, pp. 18–21; Michelle in Kevin Merida, “The Ghost of a Father,” WP, 14 December 2007; Peter Osnos, “The Making of the Book That Made Obama,” DailyBeast.com, 27 January 2009; Osnos’s 2009 interview with Robert Draper; Draper, “Barack Obama’s Work in Progress,” GQ, November 2009; Maraniss, BOTS, p. 566; DJG interviews with John Belcaster, Sheila Jager, Rob Fisher, Henry Ferris, Peter Osnos, and Ruth Fecych. See also Ellen Schumer phone conversation notes, “Barack Obama,” 2 May 1994, ESP (“Following a theme, touching on being biracial—looks at organizing—family—ancestry”), and Schumer notes, “5-18-94—Barack Obama 12:30PM–2PM,” ESP (“discussed Hawaii”). Portions of an early-stage typescript, one reflecting Ferris’s editing and Barack’s handwritten alterations yet preceding Ruth Fecych's involvement, were put up for commercial sale by Abon'go Malik Obama in 2015 (ms. pp. 6–7, 17, 22–24, 43–46, 48, 70, and 20, corresponding to DFMF pp. ix–x, 14–15, 18–20, 32–35, 36, 52 and 403). Barack's changes were stylistic rather than substantive, with his childhood Jakarta home offering a "crocodile" pond rather than an "alligator" one (ms. p. 36, DFMF p. 36).

22. Keith [Kelleher] to Interested Parties, "Voter Registration, Politics Update, 20 July 1994, IAP Box 11 Fld. 55; Sandy [O'Donnell] to Ken [Rolling] and Barack, "Panel on the Future of Organizing," 9 June 1994, Sandy to WFC Evaluation Team, "Interviews, Case Studies, Records," 14 June 1994, [O'Donnell], "Minutes of the First Meeting of the Panel of the Future of Organizing," 29 June 1994, Sandy to Ken and Barack, "Next Panel Meetings," 16 July 1994, Sandy to Evaluation Team, "Ideas for Focus Group of Cross-City Leaders," 17 July 1994, Sandy to Ken, "Organizing Evaluation," 20 July 1994, O'Donnell to Obama, "August 29 Organizing Discussion," 12 August 1994, O'Donnell to Obama, "Questions re Public Policy & Organizing," 19 August 1994, Obama to Gonzales et al., "August 29 Meeting of Discussion Group on Community Organizing," 22 August 1994, [O'Donnell], "Minutes of the Second Panel Discussion on Organizing," 29 August 1994, "Suggested Questions for the Panel Discussion on Community Organizing," 25 October 1994, [O'Donnell], "Minutes of the Third Panel Discussion on Organizing," 26 October 1994, "Panel Discussion on Community Organizing: Advice to the Woods Fund of Chicago," 13 January 1995, [O'Donnell], "Minutes of the Fourth Panel Discussion on Organizing," 13 January 1995, all SOP; Alex Rodriguez and Scott Fornek, "Gangs Besiege Once-Peaceful Neighborhood," CST, 2 September 1994, p. 6; Mary A. Johnson, "A Gang's Violence Often Strikes Its Own," "Community Spirit Wanes," and "Ministry Offers 'Neutral' Zone," CST, 4 September 1994, p. 7; Jan Ferris and Henri Cauvin, "Roseland Tries to Ride Out the Shock Wave," CST, 6 September 1994; Obama and Ken Rolling to "Dear Colleagues," 25 April 1995, CACP; Sandra O'Donnell et al., Evaluation of the Fund's Community Organizing Grant Program (Woods Fund of Chicago, April 1995), esp. pp. 15–16; Woods Fund of Chicago, 1994 Annual Report, esp. pp. 1–7, 17, 20; Woods Fund of Chicago, 1994 Form 990-PF, Part XV, 29 June 1995; Jean Rudd, "How One Foundation Came to Support Community Organizing," in Sandy O'Donnell et al., Promising Practices in Revenue Generation for Community Organizing (Center for Community Change, October 2005); DJG interviews with Keith Kelleher, Jean Rudd, Ken Rolling, Mary Gonzales, Jacky Grimshaw, Madeline Talbott, Sokoni Karanja, and Sandy O'Donnell. On Keith's 1994 efforts, with repeated references to Barack, also see Kelleher to Carol Harwell, "List of Positions That Need Resolution," 8 June 1994, Leslie Watson-Davis to Marvin Randolph and Zach Pollett, "Chicago Trip—For Your Information," 13 June 1994, and Keith to Madeline Talbott et al., "Conversations with Carol Harwell," 17 June 1994, all IAP (2003-072) Box 1 Fld. 1994, and Keith to Interested Parties, "Research on Voter Registration and 24th Ward Candidates," 7 July 1994, IAP Box 11 Fld. 57.

23. Nina Burleigh, "The Great Black Hope," Spy, March 1993, pp. 20–21; Elaine S. Povich, "The Housewarming—It Has Not Been One Big Welcome Party for Freshman Rep. Reynolds," CT, 17 August 1993; Steve Neal, "Weak Field Puts Reynolds in Front," CST, 28 December 1993, p. 17; John Kass, "2nd District Campaign Not as Loud, Still Heated," CT, 20 February 1994; David Elsner and Lou Carlozo, "Weller, Giglio Win Bids in 11th District," CT, 16 March 1994; Neal, "Last-Minute Cash Netted Stroger Win," CST, 25 March 1994, p. 39; Chinta Strausberg, "Alice Palmer Pushed for Mayor's Post," CD, 11 July 1994, p. 3; Kass, "Anti-Daley Forces Start to Beat Campaign Drums," CT, 29 July 1994, p. 1; Ray

Gibson, "Edgar Has 5-1 Lead in Cash Race," CT, 2 August 1994, p. C1; Fred Lebed datebook for 9 August 1994; Kevin Knapp, "Kenwood Developers Are Donors to Ald. Preckwinkle's Campaign," HPH, 10 August 1994, pp. 1-2; Knapp, "Alderman Explains Campaign Donations," HPH, 17 August 1994, pp. 1-2; Knapp, "Campaign Finances Examined," HPH, 7 September 1994, pp.1-2; Knapp, "Campaigns Driven by Finances," HPH, 26 October 1994, pp. 1-2; Knapp, "Building Rehabbed with Help from County Program," HPH, 2 November 1994, p. 4; Andrew Fegelman, "Stroger's Patience Is Rewarded," CT, 9 November 1994; Fegelman, "Stroger's Win Built on Voter, Party Unity," CT, 10 November 1994; Knapp, "Alderman's Contributions Drop Off as Election Comes Closer," HPH, 8 February 1995, pp. 1, 6; Knapp, "Incumbent Gets Financial Boost," HPH, 22 February 1995, pp. 1-2; Knapp, "Local Aldermanic Races Hit New High in Cost," HPH, 9 August 1995, p. 1; Knapp, "Tough Races Marked '95 Elections," HPH, 3 January 1996, pp. 3, 9; Knapp, "Campaign Finances Examined," HPH, 27 March 1996, pp. 1-2; DJG interviews with Toni Preckwinkle, Laura Tilly, David Brint, Fred Lebed, Roland Burris, Paul Strauss, George Galland, and John Schmidt.

24. Ray Gibson, "Reynolds Blasts Cops, O'Malley Over Probe," CT, 12 August 1994, p. 4; Christopher Drew and Gibson, "Reynolds' Handling of Campaign Funds Focus of U.S. Probe," CT, 14 August 1994, p. 1; Timothy J. Burger, "Frosh Rep. Reynolds Is Target of Probe," RC, 15 August 1994; Edward Walsh, "Lawmaker Accused of Affair with Teen," WP, 16 August 1994, p. A4; Gibson and Drew, "Aide Unveils More Reynolds Campaign Accounts," CT, 17 August 1994, p. 1; "The Troubles of Mel Reynolds," CT, 18 August 1994; Andrew Fegelman and Robert Becker, "Reynolds Indicted in Teen Sex Scandal," CT, 20 August 1994, p. 1; Judy Pasternak, "Congressman Charged with Sex Crimes," LAT, 20 August 1994; Don Terry, "Illinois Indicts a Congressman in a Sex Case Involving 2 Girls," NYT, 20 August 1994, p. 7; James Webb (AP), "Reynolds Promise Conflicts with Controversies," 20 August 1994; Steve Neal, "Palmer Could Be Contender in 2nd," CST, 29 August 1994, p. 23; "Mel Reynolds: The Absentee Congressman," Illinois Politics, September 1994, pp. 1, 3; John Kass, "Gardner Takes a Risk in Rush to Face Daley," CT, 4 September 1994, p. P1; Michael Sneed, "Sneed," CST, 15 September 1994, p. 2. On Alice Palmer's work in Springfield, see Palmer, "King's Legacy of Change, Not Dreams," HPH, 24 February 1993, p. 4; Senator Alice Palmer, "Springfield Report" #1, February-March 1993, 8pp.; Palmer, "Edgar's Budget Hurts City," HPH, 17 March 1993, p. 4; Palmer et al., "Asks Edgar Change on College Boards," CD, 1 May 1993, p. 19; Palmer, "Springfield Must Make Law, Not Haste," HPH, 26 May 1993, p. 4; Palmer, "Hails Article," CD, 16 June 1993, p. 11; Ethan Michaeli, "Recycling Could Come to Low-Income Areas," CD, 17 June 1993, p. 3; Palmer, "Failure on Schools Will Haunt Assembly," HPH, 28 July 1993, p. 4; Palmer, "Springfield Report" #2, Summer 1993, 8pp.; "Palmer Lauds NAACP's Anti-NAFTA Position," CD, 5 August 1993, p. 6; Palmer, "Why I Oppose NAFTA," Illinois Politics, September 1993, pp. 7, 10; Palmer, "Tax Codes Need a Careful Revision," HPH, 17 November 1993, p. 4; Palmer, "Side Issues Delay Riverboat Gambling," HPH, 27 April 1994, p. 4; Chinta Strausberg, "Sen. Palmer Calls State of Higher Education Dismal," CD, 14 May 1994, p. 5; Palmer, "Medicaid Spurs State Budget Problems," HPH, 29 June 1994, p. 4; "Senator Alice Palmer's 13th District Education Committee Meeting Highlights," 16 July 1994, Timuel Black Papers Box 135 Fld. 6; Citizens for Senator Alice J. Palmer, flyer for 4 August 1994 BBQ, TBP Box 135 Fld. 26; Palmer, "Downstate Answers to City Questions," HPH, 21 September 1994, p. 4; Sheila Washington, "Palmer Gets Down to Nitty-Gritty," CD, 3 October 1994, p. 9.

25. Barnett v. City of Chicago, 32 F. 3d 1196 (7th Cir.), 23 August 1994; Jan Crawford Greenburg, "Suit Contesting City Ward Map Gets New Life," CT, 25 August 1994; "Forum Offers New Thoughts at Wesleyan," Omaha World Herald, 6 September 1994, p. 18; Obama, "Community Revitalization," Nebraska Wesleyan University Forum, 9 September 1994, NWU Archives; Michael Kelly, "Obama's 1994 Speech Telling," OWH, 9 November 2008, p. 1B.

26. Kennedy Communications, "State Senator Barack Obama, Candidate for U.S. Senate: Background Report," April 2003, RRP; Obama, "Charles Murray's Political Expediency Denounced," All Things Considered, NPR, 28 October 1994; Susan Locke to David Plotkin, 30 September 1994, Human SERVE Papers (HSP) Box 16 Fld. 747 and Box 35 Fld. 1497; Zach Pollett to ACORN Offices, "National Voter Registration Act Implementation Campaign," 23 October 1994, IAP (98-059) Box 5 Fld. 42; Doug Hess to Madeline Talbott, "Re: ACORN Notice to IL Head Election Official," 3 November 1994, ACORN to Ronald D. Michaelson, 14 November 1994, and David [Plotkin] to All, "Illinois Implementation (or lack thereof)," 2 December 1994, HSP Box 16 Fld. 747; DJG interview with Rob Fisher.

27. Chinta Strausberg, "Palmer Throws Hat into 2nd District Race," CD, 18 October 1994, p. 3; "Announcement of Congressional Exploratory Committee State Senator Alice Palmer (D-13)," 21 November 1994, TBP Box 135 Fld. 26; Susan Kuczka, "State Sen. Palmer Ponders Bid for Reynolds' 2nd District Post," CT, 22 November 1994; Steve Neal, "Palmer Beats Jackson Jr. to Punch," CST, 25 November 1994, p. 49; Judy Pasternak, "Following in His Father's Footsteps," LAT, 12 December 1995; "Barack Obama—12/1/94—Noon—1:30PM," Ellen Schumer Papers; Monica Copeland, "Agency's Emphasis on Life Success," CT, 12 June 1992; Lynne Duke, "Mixed Legacies on Boulevards of the 'Dream,'" WP, 4 April 1993, p. A1; George Papajohn, "Honoree a 'Genius' at Helping," CT, 15 June 1993; Allan Johnson, "South Side Agency Honors Donors with a Feast," CT, 25 June 1993; David Moberg, "Bold Vision: Sokoni Karanja Nurtures the Restoration of Bronzeville," CT, 19 June 1995; Karanja's 2005 HistoryMakers interview with Larry Crowe; Michael I. J. Bennett, "The Rebirth of Bronzeville: Contested Space and Contrasting Visions," in John P. Koval et al., eds., The New Chicago: A Social and Cultural Analysis (Temple University Press, 2006), pp. 213–20; "Bronzeville Wants City's Empty Lots," CT, 23 November 2006; Michelle Robinson, "Motion to Transfer to Inactive Status Pursuant to Supreme Court Rule 770," In Re Michelle Lavaughn Robinson, Ill. S.Ct., # 94-CH-456, 8 June 1994; Althea J. Kuller to Michelle Obama, and Kuller to Juleann Hornyak, 23 June 1994 (filing said motion); Jeremy Mindich, "Americorps: Young, Spirited and Controversial," CT Magazine, 9 April 1995; Carol Kleiman, "'Xers' Don't Fit the Stereotypes," CT, 9 April 1995; Randee Fenner, "Rivkin and Moelis: Together in Public Service," Stanford Lawyer 87, 12 November 2012; "Business Appointments," CST, 28 November 1994, p. 52; Joyce Foundation, 1995 Annual Report, esp. p. 83; Barbara Sullivan, "The Power of Paula," CT, 12 September 1993; Lew Butler's 2009 interview with Ann Lage, pp. 351 and 466–67; Carole Feldman (AP), "Tycoon Hopes $500 Million Gift Will Stem School Violence," CT, 18 December 1993, p. 3; "School Violence and Annenberg's Gift," CT, 21 December 1993; Charles Storch and V. Dion Haynes, "Schools Go After Windfall," CT, 23 October 1994, p. C1; Storch and Haynes, "Philanthropist Puts His Money on City Schools," CT, 21 January 1995; Storch, "School Reformers Getting Wish," CT, 23 January 1995; "Annenberg Grant Is More Than Money," CT, 26 January 1995; William Ayers and Michael Klonsky, "Navigating a Restless Sea: The Continuing Struggle to Achieve a Decent Education for African American Youngsters in Chicago," Journal of Negro Education 63 (Winter 1994): 5–18; Ben Joravsky, “The Long, Strange Trip of Bill Ayers,” CR, 8 November 1990; Jon Anderson, “Weathering Change,” CT, 8 July 1993, p. T1; Ayers, Chapman, and Hallett, “A Booster Shot for Chicago’s Public Schools,” CT, 31 January 1995, p. 15; [Patricia Graham], CAC Board of Directors, “Minutes,” 15 March 1995, CACP; Ellen Schumer notes, “Barack Obama,” 22 March 1995, ESP; CAC Board of Directors, “Minutes,” March 31, 1995, CACP; William C. Ayers, “Minutes,” CAC Board of Directors, 13 April 1995, CACP; Peter Applebome, “Annenberg School Grants Raise Hopes, and Questions on Extent of Change,” NYT, 30 April 1995, p. 30; CAC, “Minutes, Organizational Meeting of the Board of Directors,” 11 May 1995, CACP (only Obama, Graham, and Hallett present, formally authorizing the Collaborative’s advisory role); Lynn Olson, “Annenberg Institute Seeks to Find Voice in 1st Year,” Education Week, 21 June 1995; Obama to Abon’go Malik Obama, 23 July 1995, Abon’go Malik Obama Papers; Ken Rolling to Vartan Gregorian et al., “Chicago Annenberg Challenge Program Report,” 8 May 1996, CACP; Steve Diamond, “That ‘Guy Who Lives in My Neighborhood’: Behind the Ayers-Obama Relationship,” Global Labor Blog, 23 June 2008; Stanley Kurtz, “Obama and Ayers Pushed Radicalism on Schools,” WSJ, 23 September 2008, p. A29; Michael Bechek, “In Debate Over Obama’s Past, U. History Revealed,” Brown Daily Herald, 24 September 2008; Scott Shane, “Obama and ‘60s Bomber: A Look into Crossed Paths,” NYT, 4 October 2008; Dakarai I. Aarons, “Backers Says Chicago Project Not ‘Radical,’” Education Week, 15 October 2008, pp. 1, 14–16; Ellen Goodman, “Sharing Dreams from His Mother,” BG, 9 May 2008; Scott, A Singular Woman, pp. 304–33; DJG interviews with Alice Palmer, Jesse Jackson Jr., Ellen Schumer, Sokoni Karanja, Julian Posada, Bethann Hester, Jan Anne Dubin, Jacky Grimshaw, Sunny Fischer, Ian Larkin, Craig Huffman, Debbie Leff, Chuck Daly, Jack Anderson, Paula Wolff, Carin Clauss, Carlton Guthrie, Anne Hallett, Bill Ayers, Pat Graham, Adele Simmons, and Charles Payne. Apropos of Barack’s comments to Pat Graham over dinner, also see Obama on University of Illinois at Springfield’s “Inside Illinois Government,” 3 December 1998 (“how difficult it is to get a book published when you finally write it”). On COFI, see Sandy O’Donnell and Ellen Schumer, “Community Building & Community Organizing,” NHI Shelterforce #85, January–February 1996, and Schumer and O’Donnell, “Turning Parents into Strong Community Leaders,” NHI Shelterforce #114, November–December 2000.

28. Obama to Bell, 3 February 1995, Bell to Obama, 27 March 1995, and Obama to Bell, 27 March 1995, Bell Papers; Obama, “Complaint for Injunctive and Declaratory Relief,” ACORN v. Edgar, #95-C-174, N. D. Ill., 11 January 1995; Juan Cartagena to NVRA Implementation Attorney Network, “Status of Litigation,” 1 February 1995, Human SERVE Papers Box 35 Fld. 1495; ACORN v. Edgar, 880 F. Supp. 1215, esp. 1219, 1222 (N. D. Ill.), 28 March 1995; Bernie Mixon and Peter Kendall, “Illinois Told to Move on ‘Motor-Voter Law,’” CT, 29 March 1995, p. C1; Obama to David R. Melton, 29 March 1995, HSP Box 16 Fld. 748; ACORN v. Edgar, 56 F. 3d 791 (7th Cir.), 5 June 1995; ACORN v. Edgar, 1995 WL 359900 (N. D. Ill.), 13 June 1995; ACORN v. Edgar Docket, 26 June 1995; 51st Annual IVI/IPO Independents’ Day Dinner, 22 July 1995, HSP Box 16 Fld. 749; ACORN v. Edgar, 1995 WL 532120 (N. D. Ill.), 7 September 1995; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, pp. 78–79; African American Voting Rights Legal Defense Fund v. Villa, 54 F. 3d 1345 (8th Cir.), 12 May 1995; cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1113, 20 February 1996; Barnaby J. Feder, “Kenneth Pontikes, 54, Founder of Computer Leasing Company,” NYT, 25 June 1994; Henri Cauvin, “Kenneth N. Pontikes, 54, Founder of Comdisco Inc.,” CT, 25 June 1994; Donnell v. Comdisco, #95-C-512 (N. D. Ill.), 26 January 1995; Ronald E. Yates, “Ex-Comdisco Worker

Sues, Alleging Bias,” CT, 7 February 1996; Matthew Schifrin, “Jack Slevin’s Ordeal,” Forbes, 14 August 1995, pp. 82–83, 86; Donnell v. Comdisco, 1995 U. S. Dist. Lexis 13214 (N. D. Ill.), 8 September 1995; Obama’s 20 September 1995 remarks at the Cambridge (MA) Public Library; Barbara Sullivan, “Now Is She a Household Name?,” CT, 31 January 1994; Buycks-Roberson v. Citibank, #94-C-4094 (N. D. Ill.), 6 July 1994; Buycks-Roberson v. Citibank, 162 F.R.D. 322 and 338 (N. D. Ill.), 29 June 1995; “Settlement Agreement,” 9 January 1998, “Order,” 7 May 1998, and “Order,” 12 May 1998, Buycks-Roberson v. Citibank, #94-C-4094; Mike Robinson (AP), “Some Cases Obama Worked on in His Career as an Attorney,” 20 February 2007; Pallasch, “Obama’s Legal Career,” CST, 17 December 2007, p. 4; Dan Morain, “Obama’s Lawyer Days Were Effective but Brief,” LAT, 6 April 2008, p. A14; Pallasch, “Judge Ruben Castillo Makes Top 10 List of Obama’s Supreme Court Possibilities,” CST, 13 May 2009; Matt O’Connor, “Federal Judge Bua Hanging Up the Robe,” CT, 11 September 1991; Bill Lueders, “They Knew Him When,” Isthmus, 21 February 2008; Miner, “Barack Obama’s Career at Miner, Barnhill & Galland”; Jeff Cummings, Speech Outline, [29 April 2009]; Dick Lovell, “Obama Is ‘An Extraordinary Person,’ Friend Jeff Cummings Tells Rotarians,” Madison Rotary News #44, 1 May 2009; Neil Munro, “With Landmark Lawsuit, Barack Obama Pushed Banks . . .,” and Stephen Elliott, “Obama’s African-American Clients Got Coupons, Not Cash,” Daily Caller, 3 September 2012; Matt Gertz, “Daily Caller Tries and Fails to Read Legal Documents,” MediaMatters.org, 4 September 2012; DJG interviews with Allison Davis, Alex Kotlowitz, Derrick Bell, Madeline Talbott, Judd Miner, Jeff Cummings, Cindi Canary, David Melton, Jeanne Gills, Whit Soule, and Chuck Barnhill.

29. UCLS Announcements 1994–95, pp. 44–45; UCLS Directory 1994–95, p. 34; UCLS Course Evaluation, Current Issues in Racism and the Law, Spring 1995; Noni-Ellison Southall, “When the President Was My Professor,” CNN.com, 25 February 2013; DJG interviews with Marni Willenson, Tiffanie Cason De Liberty, Susannah Baruch, Linda Simon, Liisa Thomas, and Deborah Burnet. By 1995 Barack was contributing “an outstanding lecture” on the legal roots of American racism each time UC medical professor Dr. Deborah Burnet, the spouse of CCRC veteran Rev. Bob Klonowski, taught her interdisciplinary “Inequality and Health” course.

30. Times Books catalog, page 23, Rob Mitchell Papers (and listing Dreams as a June title); Publishers Weekly, 10 April 1995, p. 46; Kirkus Reviews, 15 April 1995; Thomas Hardy and John Kass, “Daley Hits the Campaign Running,” CT, 9 December 1994; Bernie Mixon, “Gardner Says He’ll Stay in Mayoral Race,” CT, 12 December 1994; Kass, “Daley Calls for End to City Racial Politics,” CT, 15 December 1994; Kass, “Moseley-Braun Steps into Daley’s Corner,” CT, 21 December 1994; Burney Simpson, “Voter Registration: Too Good to Be True,” Chicago Reporter, February 1995; Hardy, “Ho-Hum Mayoral Campaign Is Good News for Daley,” CT, 12 February 1995; Joseph A. Kirby and Kass, “Gardner Tries Tossing a GOP Label at Daley,” CT, 14 February 1995; Kass and Theresa Puente, “Gardner Expresses Bitterness,” CT, 16 February 1995; Kirby, “Jackson’s Words Lift Up Gardner,” CT, 19 February 1995; Hardy, “Daley’s Machine Humming,” CT, 26 February 1995, Hardy and Kass, “Daley Rolls Just Like Dad,” CT, 1 March 1995; Hardy and Kass, “Daley Rests While Burriss Maps Strategy,” CT, 2 March 1995; Hardy, “Shades of Resentment Evident in Burriss Campaign Against Daley,” CT, 26 March 1995; Don Terry, “In a GOP World, a Democrat Rules Chicago,” NYT, 1 April 1995; Hardy, “Daley Again in a Cakewalk,” CT, 5 April 1995; Hardy, “Daley Keeps Minority Inroad,” CT, 7 April 1995; Dick Simpson et al., “The New Daley Machine: 1989–2004,” The City’s Future Conference, Chicago, July 2004, esp. p.

7; Dan Conley, “Look Homeward, Obama,” Salon, 23 May 2008 (“Daley stalwarts like Valerie Jarrett . . . and John Rogers”); Draper’s 2009 interviews with Robin Schiff and Benjamin Dreyer; DJG interviews with Rob Fisher, Ruth Fecych, and Roland Burris.

31. Steve Neal, “Emil Jones Considers Run for Treasurer,” CST, 12 December 1994, p. 23; Janan Hanna, “Case Against Reynolds Dealt Blow,” CT, 10 January 1995; “Jack O’Malley’s Burden of Proof,” CT, 11 January 1995; Neal, “Palmer Clouds Reynolds’ Political Future,” CST, 11 January 1995, p. 29; Alice Palmer, “Legislature Seeks to Change Higher Education,” HPH, 1 March 1995, p. 4; Maurice Possley, “Reynolds Accused of Sex with 2nd Teen,” CT, 5 April 1995; Ellen Schumer notes, 7 April 1995, ESP; “Twice Burned in the 2nd District,” CT, 21 April 1995; Gabriel Kahn, “Legal Woes Mounting, Reynolds Now Pursued by Political Rivals,” Roll Call, 24 April 1995; Schumer notes, 1 May 1995, ESP; Possley, “Reynolds Is Socked with New Indictments,” CT, 4 May 1995; Ellen Warren, “Amid Hopes, Always Doubt,” CT, 7 May 1995; Schumer notes, 11 May 1995, ESP; Illinois State Senate Floor Transcript, 26 May 1995, esp. pp. 66–68 (del Valle), 71–73 (Garcia), and 77 (Palmer); Thomas Hardy and Rick Pearson, “State GOP Had Its Way All the Way,” and Suzy Frisch, “State Lawmakers Adjourn with GOP Flaunting Majority,” CT, 28 May 1995; Ray Gibson, “Tapes May Decide Reynolds’ Fate,” CT, 25 June 1995; Friends of Alice Palmer, FEC Form 3, 31 January 1995–30 June 1995 (as amended 28 June 1996), FEC; Obama to Abon’go Malik Obama, 23 July 1995, Abon’go Malik Obama Papers; Obama in Joe Frolik, “A Newcomer to the Business of Politics,” Cleveland Plain Dealer, 3 August 1996, p. A1; Obama’s 2001 interview with Julieanna Richardson; Obama’s remarks at the Heartland Cafe, Chicago, 7 February 2004, JKP and TPP, and on The Charlie Rose Show, 23 November 2004; “Complete Transcript of the Sun-Times Interview with Barack Obama,” SunTimes.com, 15 March 2008 (“we were both active in Alice Palmer’s campaign, so I got to know him at that point”); Obama interview transcript, CT, 16 March 2008, p. 22 (Rezko introducing Obama to aldermen); Jean Rudd in Ryan Lizza, “The Agitator,” TNR, 19 March 2007, pp. 22ff., and in Michael Powell, “Calm in the Swirl of History,” NYT, 4 June 2008; Michelle in Suzanne Bell, “Michelle Obama Speaks at ISU,” Daily Vidette, 26 October 2004, and in Sarah Brown, “Obama ’85 Masters Balancing Act,” Daily Princetonian, 7 December 2005; Rosalind Rossi, “Obama’s Anchor,” CST, 21 January 2007, p. A9; Michelle in Eric Tucker (AP), “Family Ties: Brown Coach, Barack Obama,” 1 March 2007, on All Things Considered, NPR, 9 July 2007, in Scott Helman, “Early Defeat Launched a Rapid Political Climb,” BG, 12 October 2007, p. A1, in Rosemary Ellis, “A Conversation with Michelle Obama,” Good Housekeeping, November 2008, in Liza Mundy, Michelle, p. 124, and in Sandra Sobieraj Westfall, “The Obamas Get Personal,” People, 4 August 2008; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, p. 106; McClelland, “Mel Reynolds’s Horniness Opened Door for Obama,” NBCChicago.com, 28 November 2012; DJG interviews with Alice Palmer, Hal Baron, Brian Banks, Kitty Kurth, Darrel Thompson, Ellen Schumer, Andy Foster, Judd Miner, Allison Davis, Jeff Schoenberg, John Hooker, Frank Clark, Ray Harris, Jean Rudd, Larry Suffredin, Steve Derks, Marilyn Katz, Matt Piers, Chuy Garcia, Toni Preckwinkle, Barbara Holt, and Barbara Flynn Currie. On Barbara Holt’s election, see Steve Neal, “Holt, Oliver-Hill Neck and Neck in South Side Aldermanic Race,” CST, 29 March 1995, p. 33, Jorge Oclander, “Loss of Clout Dims IVI-IPO’s Fate,” CST, 2 April 1995, p. 22, and Ben Joravsky, “Mud Flap,” CR, 20 April 1995. On Chuy Garcia, also see his 1990 interview with Betty Brown Chappell, Steve Bogira, “What Pilsen Taught Chuy Garcia,” CR, 12 December 2014, and Bogira, “Jesus ‘Chuy’ Garcia’s Journey,” CR, 21 January 2015. See also “The Barack Obama We Know,”

32. “Elementary School Council Election Results,” CT, 13 October 1989; Michael Hirsley, “Islam Pilgrimage Goal of a Lifetime,” CT, 20 May 1994, p. C9; Judy Hevrdejs and Mike Conklin, “Changing of Guard in Schools Puts Daley Staff at Head of Class,” CT, 16 June 1995, p. 18; Kevin Knapp, “Names Begin to Surface for Committeeman Races,” HPH, 23 August 1995, p. 3; Michael Sneed, “Sneed,” CST, 25 June 1995, p. 4; Chinta Strausberg, “St. Sen. Palmer Makes Bid for Reynolds Seat,” CD, 27 June 1995, p. 3; Strausberg, “Palmer Ready to Take on Reynolds,” CD, 28 June 1995, p. 1; Thomas Hardy, “Palmer Seeks to Replace Reynolds,” CT, 28 June 1995, p. C3; Scott Fornek, “Reynolds’ 1st Challenger Announces,” CST, 28 June 1995, p. 14; Knapp, “Alice Palmer to Run for Reynolds Seat,” HPH, 5 July 1995, pp. 1–2; Hevrdejs and Conklin, “Something Different,” CT, 7 July 1995, p. 20; “The Friends of Alice J. Palmer (in formation),” n.d., TBP Box 103 Fld. 21 (including Barbara Flynn Currie, Al Johnson, Antoin Rezko, Allison Davis, Toni Preckwinkle, Jean Rudd, Barack Obama, Hal Baron, Brian Banks, and Alan and Lois Dobry); Friends of Barack Obama, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures, Form D-2, 1 July 1995–31 December 1995, 2 February 1996; Bruce Bentley, “Chicago New Party Update,” New Ground 42, September–October 1995; Al Johnson’s 1989 interview with Betty Brown-Chappell; Robert Mier and Kari J. Moe, “Decentralized Development: From Theory to Practice,” in Pierre Clavel and Wim Wiewel, Harold Washington and the Neighborhoods: Progressive Development in Chicago, 1983–1987 (Rutgers University Press, 1991), p. 87; Cheryl V. Jackson, “Albert W. Johnson: GM’s 1st Black Franchise Owner,” CST, 14 January 2010; Trevor Jensen, “Albert W. Johnson: 1920–2010,” CT, 21 January 2010; “Former Neighbor Al Johnson, First Black GM Dealer, Dies at 89,” RanchoMurieta.com, 29 January 2010; DJG interviews with Hermene Hartman, Abner Mikva, Don Johnson, and Willie Delgado.

33. Obama [by Hallett] to Bruce Newman, 31 May 1995, CACP Box 130 Fld. 924; CAC Board of Directors “Minutes,” 5 June 1995, CACP; Jacquelyn Heard and V. Dion Haynes, “GOP Changes the Rules for City Schools,” CT, 13 November 1994; Rick Pearson and Joseph A. Kirby, “School Power Lobbed to Daley,” CT, 26 April 1995; John Kass and Pearson, “Daley Quickly Flexes School Muscle,” CT, 25 May 1995; Haynes, “Schools Get Ready for Annenberg Challenge on Innovative Education,” CT, 23 June 1995, p. 5; Kass, “Daley Names School Team,” CT, 30 June 1995; Kass, “City Schools Get Chief Who Rejects Failure,” CT, 2 July 1995; Jacquelyn Heard, “New School Officials Plan Coordinated Effort,” CT, 4 July 1995; Joanne Esters-Brown, “School Cluster Must Meet Aug. 1 Deadline,” HPH, 5 July 1995, pp. 1–2; Haynes, “School Team Tells Principals of Plans,” CT, 14 July 1995; “Rising to the Annenberg Challenge,” CT, 17 July 1995; Heard, “Schools Get New Whiz Kid,” CT, 23 July 1995; Haynes, “Proposed Budget Has Pupil Focus,” CT, 14 August 1995; “Vallas’ Amazing Balancing Act,” CT, 15 August 1995; R. Bruce Dold, “It’s Too Late to Cry Over Spilled Milk,” CT, 18 August 1995; Linda Lenz, “The New Law,” and Grant Pick, “179 Partnerships Bid for First-Round Annenberg Funds,” Catalyst Chicago, September 1995; Lenz and Lynnette Richardson, “89 Groups Get Annenberg Go-Ahead,” Catalyst Chicago, October 1995; CAC Board of Directors, “Minutes,” 12 October 1995, CACP; Ken Rolling to Vartan Gregorian et al., “Chicago Annenberg Program Report,” 8 May 1996, CACP; Anthony S. Bryk et al., “Chicago School Reform,” in Diane Ravitch and Joseph P. Viteritti, eds., New Schools for a New Century (Yale University Press, 1997), pp. 164–200; Dorothy Shipps, “The Invisible Hand: Big Business and Chicago School Reform,” and Michael B. Katz et al., “Poking Around: Outsiders View Chicago School Reform,” Teachers College Record 99 (Fall 1997): 73–116 and 117–57; David Moberg, “Chicago’s 4 R’s: Reading, ’Ritin, ’Rithmetic and Reform,” Examining Education, 20 September 1998, p. 10; Shipps and Karin Sconzert, The Chicago Annenberg Challenge: The First Three Years (Consortium on Chicago School Research, March 1999), pp. 15–17; Paul G. Vallas, “Saving Public Schools,” Civic Bulletin 16, March 1999, pp. 1–9; William S. McKersie and Anthony Markward, “Lessons for the Future of Philanthropy: Local Foundations and Urban School Reform,” in Charles T. Clotfelter and Thomas Ehrlich, eds., Philanthropy and the Nonprofit Sector in a Changing America (Indiana University Press, 1999), pp. 385–412; G. Alfred Hess Jr., “Expectations, Opportunity, Capacity and Will: The Four Essential Components of Chicago School Reform,” and Shipps et al., “The Politics of Urban School Reform: Legitimacy, City Growth, and School Improvement in Chicago,” Educational Policy 13 (September 1999): 494–517 and 518–45; William Rau et al., “The Chicago School Reforms: Are They Working?,” Sociological Quarterly 40 (Autumn 1999): 641–61; Hess, “School Reform Struggles in an Era of Accountability,” PRAGmatics 2 (Fall 1999): 3–5; Shipps, “Regime Change: Mayoral Takeover of the Chicago Public Schools,” in James G. Cibulka and William L. Boyd, eds., A Race Against Time: The Crisis in Urban Schooling (Praeger, 2003), pp. 106–28; Shipps, “The Businessman’s Educator: Mayoral Takeover and Nontraditional Leadership in Chicago,” in Larry Cuban and Michael Usdan, eds., Powerful Reforms with Shallow Roots (Teachers College Press, 2003), pp. 16–37; Shipps, “Pulling Together: Civic Capacity and Urban School Reform,” American Educational Research Journal 40 (Winter 2003): 841–78; Shipps, “Chicago: The National ‘Model’ Reexamined,” in Jeffrey R. Henig and Wilbur C. Rich, eds., Mayors in the Middle (Princeton University Press, 2004), pp. 59–95; Christine C. George, “The Chicago Annenberg Challenge: The Messiness and Uncertainty of Systems Change” (Loyola University of Chicago), 2007, esp. pp. 14–17; Shipps, “Updating Tradition: The Institutional Underpinnings of Modern Mayoral Control in Chicago’s Public Schools,” in Viteritti, ed., When Mayors Take Charge: School Governance in the City (Brookings Institution Press, 2009), pp. 117–47; DJG interviews with Pat Graham, Ken Rolling, Anne Hallett, and Bill Ayers.

34. [Sandy O’Donnell], “Minutes of Meeting of Hope Center Planning Team & WAALIMU,” 22 July 1995, SOP; DJG interviews with Sokoni Karanja and Sandy O’Donnell; Maurice Possley, “Reynolds’ Trial Delayed 2 Weeks,” CT, 30 June 1995; Possley, “Cast Is Ready for Reynolds Sex-Trial Drama,” CT, 16 July 1995; Possley, “Reynolds Jury Has Balance,” CT, 22 July 1995; Thomas Hardy, “Courtroom Foes Reynolds, O’Malley Both at Crossroads in Their Careers,” CT, 23 July 1995; Possley and Peter Kendall, “Reynolds’ Graphic Phone Calls Detailed,” CT, 25 July 1995; Janita Poe and Graeme Zielinski, “Among Reynolds’ Constituents, Frustration Runs Deep,” CT, 26 July 1995; Hardy, “In Tapes and Trial, Reynolds Is Projecting a Profile in Shame,” CT, 30 July 1995; “Sexual Assault Trial Puts a Chicago Congressman’s Career on the Brink,” NYT, 30 July 1995; Stephen Braun, “Lawmaker’s Trial Rivets Politically Jaded Chicago,” LAT, 1 August 1995; Steve Neal, “2nd District Race May Get Crowded,” CST, 30 July 1995, p. 27; Jerry Thomas, “The Son Is Rising,” CT, 26 May 1995; Ray Gibson, “Reynolds Foe Already Has Raised $51,000 Toward Her ’96 Campaign,” CT, 3 August 1995; Hardy, “Even in August, We’re Still Dogged with Politics,” CT, 6 August 1995; Richard L. Berke, “Behind-the-Scenes Role for a ‘Shadow Senator,’” NYT, 27 March 1991; Steve Rhodes, “What Does Junior Want?,” Chicago Magazine, May 2005; Christopher Wills, “Jackson: Trailblazer, Not Obama’s Mentor,” AP, 7 March 2008; Jason Zengerle, “Jr.: Who Thwarted the Ambitions of Jesse Jackson’s Son?,” New York Magazine, 4 November

2012; DJG interviews with Hal Baron, Brian Banks, Alice Palmer, Kitty Kurth, Darrel Thompson, Delmarie Cobb, Jesse Jackson Jr., and Marty King.

35. Friends of Barack Obama, Form D-2, 1 July 1995–31 December 1996, 2 February 1996; John Chase, “Tony Rezko,” CT, 26 May 2005, p. 1; Remnick, The Bridge, p. 277; DJG interviews with David Brint, Kevin Thompson, Carol Harwell, and Janis Robinson. A month later, on September 6, Barack would inscribe a copy of Dreams to Jean Rudd: “You have been such an important person in my life—as a friend, a mentor, a colleague and a sounding board. I am grateful for everything and look forward to our friendship only deepening in the years to come. Love, Barack Obama.”

36. Dreams From My Father (Times Books, 1995), esp. pp. v, xiii, xv–xvii, 5, 12, 16, 21–22, 29–31, 40, 51, 70, 72, 79, 86, 93–95, 104–5, 135–39, 151–53, 167–80, 189, 195–98, 207–53, 269, 279–85, 291–95, 340–45, 427–30, 434, 437, 440–42 (page citations are to the widely available, 442-page 2004 paperback edition, rather to the very rare 403-page Times Books hardback original); Jeffrey S. Siker, “President Obama, the Bible, and Political Rhetoric,” Political Theology 13 (September 2012): 586–609, at 588 (highlighting the epigraph and observing that “Obama clearly viewed this passage as an important commentary on his life”); Mike Littwin, “Obama’s ‘Change’ Could Be More Than a Coined Phrase,” Rocky Mountain News, 29 August 2007; Rebecca Janowitz, Culture of Opportunity—Obama’s Chicago: The People, Politics, and Ideas of Hyde Park (Ivan R. Dee, 2010), p. 5; Michael Cass, “Obama’s Rise Is No Surprise to Nashville Woman Who Worked with Him,” Tennessean, 5 October 2012; Peter Osnos, “The Making of the Book That Made Obama,” DailyBeast.com, 27 January 2009; Robert Draper’s interviews with Mary Beth Roche and Jessica Reighard; Draper, “Barack Obama’s Work in Progress,” GQ, November 2009; Barbara Foley, “Rhetoric and Silence in Barack Obama’s Dreams From My Father,” Cultural Logic 2009, pp. 1–46, at 23; Jefferson A. Singer and Peter Salovey, The Remembered Self: Emotion and Memory in Personality (Free Press, 1993), p. 157 (“identity may be as”); David B. Pillemer, Momentous Events, Vivid Memories (Harvard University Press, 1998), pp. 10, 55, 59, 70, 73, 76, 83; Dan P. McAdams, “What Psychobiographers Might Learn from Personality Psychology,” in William T. Schultz, ed., Handbook of Psychobiography (Oxford University Press, 2005), pp. 64–83, at 74–75; Pierre-Marie Loizeau, “Barack Obama’s Autobiography: A Quest for Personal and Political Identity?,” in Benaouda Lebdaï, ed., Autobiography as a Writing Strategy in Postcolonial Literature (Cambridge Scholars Publishing, 2015), pp. 53–65 at 63–64; Mitchell Aboulafia, Transcendence (Stanford University Press, 2010), p. 434; Philip Weiss, “Obama’s Dark Side,” MondoWeiss.net, 22 April 2008; Lynn Sweet, “Obama’s Book: What’s Real, What’s Not,” CST, 8 August 2004; Roger Cohen, “The Obamas of the World,” NYT, 6 March 2008; DJG interviews with Loretta Augustine-Herron, Yvonne Lloyd, Dan Lee, Ralph Dunham, Cathy Askew, Margaret Bagby, Eva Sturgies, Maury Richards, Jerry Kellman, Mike Kruglik, Greg Galluzzo, Alex McNear, Genevieve Cook, Sheila Jager, Mary Ellen Montes, Johnnie Owens, Jeremiah Wright, and Zeituni Onyango.

37. NYTBR, 6 August 1995, pp. 21, 17; “Off the Shelf Memories,” Bergen Record, 21 May 1995, p. E3; Booklist, July 1995, p. 1844; “One Man’s Story of Race and Inheritance,” California Voice, 23 July 1995, p. S5 (which also appears under the byline Don Thomas in the New York Beacon, 9 October 1995, p. 29, which indicates that it earlier may also have appeared in the Big Red News); “Young Writer Chronicles His Search for Better Meaning in His Life,” Sacramento Observer, 2 August 1995, p. E2; Michael Harris, “Man on a Mission Comes to Terms with His African Roots,” LAT, 7 August 1995, p. E4;

Susan Bickelhaupt and Maureen Dezell, "Living," BG, 8 August 1995, p. 62; Malaika Brown, "Mid-Summer Reading Primer," Los Angeles Sentinel, 9 August 1995, p. C4; "August at Barnes & Noble," New York Magazine, 7 August 1995, p. 7; Obama on Bill Thompson's Eye on Books, 9 August 1995, on Chicago Tonight with Phil Ponce, WTTW, 22 January 2003, on Connie Martinson Talks Books, [11] August 1995, and on Book Channel with Marc Strassman, 11 August 1995; Robert Draper's 2009 interviews with Connie Martinson, James Fugate, and Capril Bonner Thomas (whose signed copy, "To Capril: Thanks for your welcoming spirit. Best wishes for the future" is dated 11 August 1995); Draper, "Barack Obama's Work in Progress," GQ, November 2009; DJG interview with Pete Vayda and Hasan Chandoo (whose inscribed copy of Dreams is dated 8 August 1995).

38. "Kup's Column," CST, 11 August 1995, p. 46; Sher in Jonathan Van Meter, "Barack's Rock," Vogue, October 2008, pp. 336ff.; Dorothy Collin, "For Ex-Council Wars General Vrdolyak, Talk's a Good Game," CT, 6 February 1995; Hermene D. Hartman, "Magic Is in the Air," N'Digo Profiles, December 2008, p. 4; Robert Draper's 2009 interviews with Susan Sher, Valerie Jarrett, and Eric Whitaker; Draper, "Barack Obama's Work in Progress," GQ, November 2009; Hartman in Janny Scott, "Obama's Story, Written by Obama," NYT, 18 May 2008, p. A1; Monice Mitchell, "Son Finds Inspiration in the Dreams of His Father," HPH, 23 August 1995, pp. 10, 14; Yvonne Dennis, "Mixed Emotions over Dual Heritage," Philadelphia Daily News, 14 August 1995, p. 36; Zachary R. Dowdy, "Across 3 Continents, He Explores Who He Is," BG, 14 August 1995, p. 31; Paul Ruffins, "Racism or Attitude?," WPBW, 20 August 1995, p. 6; "At Lincoln Library," State Journal-Register, 20 August 1995, p. M1; Nich Charles, "Continental Divide," Emerge, September 1995, p. 74; Benjamin D. Berry, "Search for Racial Identity Speaks to Many," Virginian Pilot, 6 September 1995, p. E3; Eric Clark, "Author Barack Obama Comes to Grips with His Mixed-Race Heritage," Crisis, October 1995, pp. 6ff.; Ida Peters, "Books for Christmas Giving and Pleasure," Baltimore Afro-American, 23–30 December 1995, p. B4; Kevin Shawn Sealey, The Black Book Review, 31 December 1995, p. 9; Dori J. Maynard in About . . . Time [Rochester, NY], 28 February 1996, p. 33; Orme in Kirsten Scharnberg and Kim Barker, "The Not-So-Simple Story of Barack Obama's Youth," CT, 25 March 2007; Titcomb in Emme Tomimbang, "Barack Obama: Hawaii Roots," 8 February 2008; Furushima in Richard A. Serrano, "Obama Classmates Saw a Smile, but No Racial Turmoil," LAT, 11 March 2007, and in Hans Nichols, "In Hawaii, Media Surfs Obama's Past," Politico, 14 March 2007; Larissa MacFarquhar, "The Conciliator: Where Is Barack Obama Coming From?," New Yorker, 7 May 2007, pp. 48ff.; Obama in Bernard Schoenberg, "Don't Expect Many Niceties in Keyes-Obama Contest," SJ-R, 22 August 2004, p. 15, and on News & Notes, NPR, 8 February 2005; Glauberman and Burris, The Dream Begins, p. 105; Naftali Bendavid, ed., Obama: The Essential Guide to the Democratic Nominee (Triumph Books, 2008), p. 32; Kevin Drum, "Getting to Know Obama," Washington Monthly, 5 May 2007; Jonathan Raban, "All the President's Literature," WSJ, 10 January 2009; David Greenberg, "Hope, Change, Nietzsche," TNR, 26 May 2011; David Mendell, "Obama Lets Opponent Do Talking," CT, 24 June 2004; Dan Armstrong, "Barack Obama Embellishes His Resume," AnalyzeThis.net, 9 July 2005, and subsequent comment by Jeanne [Reynolds Schmidt]; John Drew, "My White Girlfriend Inspired Obama's Big, Dark Regina in Dreams From My Father," American Thinker, 17 July 2012; Gary Kamiya, "Biracial, but Not Like Me," Salon, 5 February 2008; Peter Wallsten, "Obama Defined by Contrasts," LAT, 24 March 2008, p. A1; Obama on Off Topic with Carlos Watson, CNN, 24 October 2004; DJG interviews with Judd Miner, Gwen LaRoche, Barbara Holt, Craig Huffman, Richard Steele, Barack Echols, Ty Wansley, Monice Mitchell Simms, Hermene Hartman, Mike Ramos, Tom Topolinski, Alan Lum, Kelli Furushima, Pal Eldredge, Dan Hale, Cassandra Butts, Cathy Lazere, Susan Arterian Chang, and Greg Galluzzo. See also Raban, "Diary," London Review of Books, 20 March 2008, pp. 46–47.

39. Michael Lipkin, "The Professor and the President," Chicago Maroon, 7 November 2008; Maurice Possley and Peter Kendall, "Reynolds' Defense Facing Key Decisions," CT, 11 August 1995; Bruce Bentley, "Chicago DSA Executive Committee Meeting Minutes," 12 August 1995, DSA Papers Box 116; Thomas Hardy, "Palmer Gains Endorsements in Bid for Reynolds' Seat," CT, 14 August 1995; Chinta Strausberg, "Palmer Earns Support for Reynolds' Seat," CD, 15 August 1995, p. 7; Possley and Kendall, "Reynolds: 'I Am Not Guilty,'" CT, 15 August 1995; Gabriel Kahn, "Reynolds Sticks with 'Phone Sex' Defense," Roll Call, 17 August 1995; Possley and Kendall, "Reynolds' Fury Erupts on Stand," CT, 17 August 1995; Steve Neal, "Jesse Jackson Jr. in Bid for Congress," CST, 21 August 1995, p. 25; Possley and Kendall, "War of Words a Fitting End to Reynolds Trial," CT, 22 August 1995; Possley and Kendall, "Reynolds Guilty on All Counts," Nancy Ryan and Laurie Cohen, "Constituents Feel Sad Over Destroyed Career," and Hardy, "Candidates Line Up for Reynolds' Spot," CT, 23 August 1995; "Congressman Convicted of Sexual Assault," NYT, 23 August 1995; "Hubris, Nemesis and Mel Reynolds," CT, 24 August 1995; R. Bruce Dold, "Shattered Dreams: First Gus, Then Mel," CT, 25 August 1995; Strausberg, "Reynolds Foes Raring to Go," CD, 24 August 1995, p. 3; Dirk Johnson, "In Congressman's District, Conviction Evokes Regret," NYT, 24 August 1995; Edward Walsh, "Moseley-Braun Urges Reynolds to Quit," WP, 24 August 1995, p. A4; Scott Fornek, "Crush of Candidates Keeps the 2nd Hopping," CST, 27 August 1995, p. 20; Steven R. Strahler, "Young and Restless: Meet GOP's Fab 5," CCB, 20 May 1995; Strausberg, "2nd District Storm," CD, 28 August 1995, pp. 1, 10; Strausberg, "Streeter Weighs Run for Reynolds Seat," CD, 29 August 1995, p. 3; Neal, "Palmer Might Have the Right Salve for 2nd District Wounds," CST, 30 August 1995, p. 33; Russ Stewart, "Winter Election Makes Jones the Favorite in 2nd District," Illinois Politics, September 1995, pp. 8–9; Neal, "Gardner to Help Jones' Bid for Reynolds' Seat," CST, 1 September 1995, p. 35; Patricia Callahan and V. Dion Haynes, "Line to Succeed Reynolds Is Running Out the Door," CT, 3 September 1995; Strausberg, "Jackson Jr. Wants to Aid Reynolds Family," CD, 5 September 1995, p. 5; "Jesse Jackson Jr. Announces Bid for 2nd District Congressional Seat," South Street Journal, 7 September–4 October 1995, p. 4; Hardy, "Reynolds Gets Around to Making Resignation Official," CT, 9 September 1995; Cornelia Grumman, "Jackson Wears Name Proudly," CT, 10 September 1995; "Jesse Jackson's Son to Run for House Seat," NYT, 10 September 1995; Strausberg, "Jesse Jr. Throws Hat in Ring," CD, 11 September 1995, p. 4; Rick Pearson and Mitchell Locin, "Voting Set on Successor to Reynolds," CT, 12 September 1995; Michael Gillis and Fornek, "Primary and Election Dates Set to Fill 2nd District Seat," CST, 12 September 1995, p. 18; Strausberg, "Date Set for 2nd District Race," CD, 12 September 1995, p. 3; Friends of Alice Palmer, "FEC Form 3, 1 July 1995–8 November 1995," 28 June 1996; Dold, "Paying a Visit to Mel Reynolds—Both of Them," CT, 20 December 1996; DJG interviews with Jesse Ruiz, Alice Palmer, Steve Rauschenberger, William McNary, and Tim Wright. Joe Gardner died at age fifty on 16 May 1996. See Jacquelyn Heard and Andrew Fegelman, "Gardner Loses Fight with Cancer," CT, 17 May 1996, Kevin Knapp, "Committeeman's Spot Remains Up for Grabs," HPH, 22 May 1996, pp. 1–2, and Art Golab, "Admirers Pay Tribute to Joseph Gardner," CST, 24 May 1996.

40. Kevin Knapp, "Politicians Scramble in Wake of Reynolds Resignation," HPH, 13 September 1995, pp. 1–2; Strausberg, “Group Set to Tab Jones for Reynolds’ Seat,” CD, 13 September 1995, p. 3; Agenda, Chicago New Party Progressive Candidate Forum, 14 September 1995, IAP Box 12 Fld. 13; Obama on The Oprah Winfrey Show, 19 January 2005; Palmer in David Jackson and Ray Long, “Obama Knows His Way Around a Ballot,” CT, 4 April 2007; Obama, DFMF, pp. 123–25; Bron Solyom in Dinesh Sharma, Barack Obama in Hawaii and Indonesia (Praeger, 2011), pp. 36–37; Robin Toner, “An Issue That Hits Home on the Campaign Trail,” NYT, 6 July 2007; John McCormick, “Obama’s Mother in New Ad,” CT, 21 September 2007; Ceci Connolly, “President Gets Personal at Forum on Health Care,” WP, 20 July 2009; Obama, “Remarks at Opening Session of Bipartisan Meeting on Health Care Reform,” 25 February 2010, Public Papers Vol. 1, p. 256; Scott, A Singular Woman, pp. 231, 333–41; Kevin Sack, “Book Challenges Obama on Mother’s Deathbed Fight,” NYT, 13 July 2011; Jane Hall, “Moyers Named President of Two Funding Groups,” LAT, 8 March 1990; “Florence F. Schumann, A Philanthropist, 99,” NYT, 26 February 1991; DJG interviews with Carol Harwell, Alice Palmer, Andrew “Pete” Veyda, and Bill Moyers. Barack one week later would call Moyers to decline the board membership, citing his just-launched state Senate candidacy.

41. John Kass and L. Linn Allen, “Daley’s Development Chief Leaving to Become Housing Firm Executive,” CT, 15 September 1995; Larry Hartstein, “Jarrett to Get Nod as CTA Chairman,” CT, 18 September 1995; Jodi Kantor, The Obamas (Little, Brown, 2012), p. 18; Scott Fornek, “Sen. Jones Is Joining the Pack,” CST, 15 September 1995, p. 6; Veronica Anderson et al., “Who’ll Be Standing When the Music Stops Playing?,” CCB, 18 September 1995, p. 8; Chinta Strausberg, “Barrow Lobbies for Jesse Jr.,” and “Harvard Lawyer Eyes Palmer Seat,” CD, 19 September 1995, p. 3; Monice Mitchell, “Hyde Parker Announces Run for State Senate Seat,” HPH, 4 October 1995, p. 3; Kennedy Communications, “State Senator Barack Obama, Candidate for U.S. Senate: Background Report,” April 2003, RRP; Will Burns’s 2008 interview with Jim Gilmore; Adam Doster, “A Thoughtful Politician,” CR, 16 February 2011; Carol Felsenthal, “Barack Obama Protege Will Burns Begins His Ascent,” CM, May 2011; DJG interviews with Carol Harwell, Kevin Thompson, Alice Palmer, Alan and Lois Dobry, Toni Preckwinkle, Barbara Holt, David Kindler, John Rogers, Kathy Stell, and Will Burns.

CHAPTER SEVEN: INTO THE ARENA

1. Robert E. Mitchell to Jessica Reighard, 8 May 1995, Concord Festival of Authors Brochure, 21–23 September 1995, Rob Mitchell Papers; Robert Taylor, “Bookmaking,” BG, 17 September 1995, p. B42; Matthew Brelis, “Colin Powell Book Tour Hits Hub,” BG, 20 September 1995, p. 32; Obama, remarks at the Cambridge Public Library, 20 September 1995, Cambridge Municipal Television; Joseph P. Kahn, “Powell Fever Grips Hub; Book Signing Draws 2,000,” BG, 21 September 1995, p. 63; Kennedy Communications, “State Senator Barack Obama, Candidate for the U.S. Senate: Background Report,” April 2003, RRP; Steve Neal, “Jones May Deal His Way into Win,” CST, 20 September 1995, p. 41; Ethan Michaeli, “Palmer States Case for 2nd Dist.,” CD, 20 September 1995, p. 3; “2nd District Hopefuls,” CD, 21 September 1995, p. 3; “Candidates for the 2nd Congressional District Speak,” Chicago Weekend, 24 September 1995, p. 1; Barbara Holt, “New School System Responds to Community’s Needs,” HPH, 27 September 1995, p. 4; Maurice Possley and Peter Kendall, “Congressman Gets 5 Years,” CT, 29 September 1995: “Candidates for the 2nd Congressional District Speak: Part II,” CW, 1 October 1995, p. 1; Janita Poe and Thomas Hardy, “Jones Sets Sights on Congress,” CT, 1 October 1995; Hardy, “Electing Replacement for Reynolds May Touch Off Tussle in Springfield,” CT, 1 October

1995; Maudlyne Ihejirika, "Senate Leader Runs in 2nd District," CST, 1 October 1995, p. 7; Chinta Strausberg, "Jones Officially Enters into 2nd District Race," CD, 2 October 1995, p. 5; Neal, "GOP May Give Covert Aid to Jones," CST, 3 October 1995, p. 31; Possley and Kendall, "Reynolds Starts Prison Term," CT, 6 October 1995; Sunya Walls, "Sen. Emil Jones Announces Run for Congress," CW, 8 October 1995, p. 2; Strausberg, "Ghost of Politics Past," CD, 9 October 1995, p. 1; Rick Pearson, "14 Candidates Petition to Run for Seat Reynolds Vacated," CT, 10 October 1995; Michaeli, "Dead Presidents," CD, 11 October 1995, p. 1; Michaeli, "Jones Runs on Record," CD, 12 October 1995, p. 3; "The Illinois New Party Is Proud to Endorse Alice Palmer and Willie Delgado," n.d. ("at the October 12 meeting"), IAP Box 12 Fld. 14; "Candidates for the Second Congressional District Speak," CW, 15 October 1995, p. 1; Kevin Knapp, "Local Senate Race Heats Up," HPH, 25 October 1995, pp. 1, 2; Strausberg, "Palmer: Keep AMA Out of Campaign," CD, 25 October 1995, p. 5; Neal, "Palmer Drops to 3rd in 2nd District Race," CST, 27 October 1995, p. 37; Neal, "Jones and Jackson Tied for Lead in 2nd District," CST, 30 October 1995, p. 27; Strausberg, "Jackson Jr. Claims Registration Drive Netted 5,000 New Voters," CD, 31 October 1995, p. 4; Fornek, "Palmer Says She's Not Worried About Polls," CST, 1 November 1995, p. 6; Michaeli, "Palmer Gets Boost in 2nd Dist.," CD, 1 November 1995, p. 3; Bonnie Miller Rubin, "Jackson's Name, Age Stand Out," CT, 3 November 1995; Neal, "Is Jones Making Right Move in 2nd District?," CST, 6 November 1995, p. 29; Vladimire Herard, "Candidates Hit the Issues," CD, 7 November 1995, p. 3; "IVI-IPO Endorses Palmer for 2nd District Seat," HPH, 8 November 1995, p. 3; Salim Muwakkil, "Palmer's Thoughtful Vision Is Salve for Wounds in 2nd," CST, 8 November 1995, p. 49; Francis X. Clines, "Black Men Fill Capital's Mall in Display of Unity and Pride," NYT, 17 October 1995, p. A1; Clark McPhail and John McCarthy, "Who Counts and How: Estimating the Size of Protests," Contexts 3 (August 2004): 12–18; Obama's 19 March 2008 interview with ABC News' Terry Moran; DJG interviews with Rob Mitchell, Jesse Jackson Jr., Marty King, Malik Nevels, Mike Lieteau, Don Rose, Alan and Lois Dobry, Lou Viverito, Hal Baron, Sue Purrington, Kitty Kurth, Paul Williams, Willie Delgado, Janis Robinson, and Carol Harwell. On Don Rose, see Dennis L. Breo, "Confessions of a Political Gadfly," CT Magazine, 13 December 1987.

2. Friends of Barack Obama, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures, Form D-2, 1 July–31 December 1995, 2 February 1996; Robert Davis, "Bit Subdued, Radical Re-emerges," CT, 12 August 1988; Patricia Lear, "Rebel Without a Pause," CM, May 1993, pp. 65–69, 96–100; Susan Chira, "At Home with Bernardine Dohrn," NYT, 18 November 1993; Tom Johnson to Obama, 27 October 1995, TEJP; Scott Fornek, "Foot Soldiers for the '96 Elections," CST, 29 October 1995, p. 14; Chinta Strausberg, "Palmer Challenger Says He Won't Step Aside in Race," CD, 21 December 1995, p. 3; Obama's 2001 interview with Julieanna Richardson; Maria Warren, "Get to Know Barack Obama," WarrenPeaceMuse.blogspot.com, 27 January 2005; David Jackson and Ray Long, "Obama Knows His Way Around a Ballot," CT, 4 April 2007; Deanna Bellandi (AP), "Obama's Neighborhood Rich in Diversity," 23 July 2007; Ben Smith, "Obama Once Visited '60s Radicals," Politico, 22 February 2008; Peter Slevin, "Former '60s Radical Is Now Considered Mainstream in Chicago," WP, 18 April 2008; Joanna Weiss, "How Obama and the Radical Became News," BG, 18 April 2008; Christopher Wills (AP), "Obama Faced Tough Choice in First Legislative Race," 24 April 2008; Ron Grossman, "Family Ties Proved Ayers' Point," CT, 18 May 2008; Andrew Ferguson, "Mr. Obama's Neighborhood," Weekly Standard, 16 June 2008; Carol Felsenthal, "Barack Obambi?," Huffington Post, 1 July 2008; Ryan Lizza, “Making It: How Chicago Shaped Obama,” New Yorker, 21 July 2008; Norman Kelley, “The ‘2 A.M. Booty Call’: Q&A with Adolph Reed Re Obama and American Politics,” DevilsAdvocateDivision.blogspot.com, 9 August 2008; Tim Harper, “Civil Rights Elders Aided Obama’s Political Rise,” Toronto Star, 18 August 2008, p. A1; Pauline Yearwood, “Obama and the Jews,” Chicago Jewish News, 12 September 2008; Drew Griffin and Kathleen Johnston, “Ayers and Obama Crossed Paths on Boards, Records Show,” CNN.com, 7 October 2008; Lynn Sweet, “McCain Misleading Public on Role Ayers Played in Obama Political Career,” CST, 15 October 2008; Hilary Leila Krieger, “Mr. Obama’s Neighborhood,” Jerusalem Post, 23 October 2008; “William Ayers Sets the Record Straight,” Good Morning America, ABC, 14 November 2008; Margalit Fox, “Arnold Jacob Wolf, a Leading Reform Rabbi, Is Dead at 84,” NYT, 29 December 2008; Marc S. Allen, “From Adversary to Longtime Ally,” BlackVoices.com, 19 January 2009; Dick Lovell, “Obama Is ‘An Extraordinary Person,’ Friend Jeffrey Cummings Tells Rotarians,” Madison Rotary News #44, 1 May 2009, p. 1; Ayers in Remnick, The Bridge, p. 280–81; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, pp. 114–16; Bernardine Dohrn, “Seize the Little Moment: Justice for the Child—20 Years at the Children and Family Justice Center,” Northwestern Journal of Law and Social Policy 6 (Spring 2011): 334–57; Carol Felsenthal, “Obama Protege Will Burns Begins His Ascent,” CM, May 2011; Will Burns’s 2008 interview with Jim Gilmore; DJG interviews with Bernard Loyd, Carol Harwell, Janis Robinson, Sunny Fischer, Ellen Benjamin, Jesse Ruiz, Jeanne Gills, Brett Hart, Eric Pelander, Jeff Cummings, John Belcaster, Greg Dingens, Steve Derks, Michael Parham, Alice Palmer, Allison Davis, Tim Evans, Kitty Kurth, Bill Ayers, Bernardine Dohrn, Rosellen Brown, Mona Khalidi, Carole Travis, Quentin Young, Ken Warren, Judd Miner, Tom Johnson, George Galland, Will Burns, Kathy Stell, Barbara Holt, Al Kindle, Tim Black, and Adolph Reed. On Leon Finney and Lincoln South Central Real Estate, see Angela Caputo, “Following Finney,” Chicago Reporter, January 2012; also see Antonio Olivo, “Questions Raised About Leon Finley’s Woodlawn Organization,” CT, 6 January 2012.

3. Mark PoKemper photos, ca. 6–7 November 1995, MPP; Hank DeZutter, “What Makes Obama Run?,” CR, 8 December 1995, pp. 1ff.; Ellen Schumer notes, 8 November 1995, and Schumer to Obama, 10 November 1995, ESP; Scott Fornek, “Barack Obama,” CST, 1 March 2004, p. 6; Notice of Federal Tax Lien Under Internal Revenue Laws, #91-155273, 12 November 1991; Obama, DFMF, pp. xi–xii, 124–25; Ron Jacobs, Obamaland (Trade Publishing, 2008), p. 79; Obama on Situation Room, CNN, 8 May 2008; David Maraniss, “Though Obama Had to Leave to Find Himself, It Is Hawaii That Made His Rise Possible,” WP Magazine, 24 August 2008; Remnick, The Bridge, pp. 286–88; Abramsky, Inside Obama’s Brain, p. 104; Dinesh Sharma, “She Had a Dream,” Asia Times, 16 January 2010; Scott, A Singular Woman, pp. 343–46; DJG interviews with Mark PoKemper, Gerry Alexis, Ellen Schumer, Charles Payne, and Bronwen and Garrett Solyom.

4. Ellen Schumer to Obama, 10 November 1995 (with further 21 November annotation), ESP; Lisa Ely, “Candidates Move Ahead as Election Draws Near,” Chicago Citizen, 9 November 1995, p. 1; Chinta Strausberg, “Latest Support Is Music to Ears of Jackson Jr.,” CD, 9 November 1995, p. 3; John Kass, “Mob-Linked Union Paid Jackson,” CT, 10 November 1995, p. C1; Scott Fornek, “2nd District Candidates Rip into Each Other,” CST, 10 November 1995, p. 17; Thomas Hardy, “Jones Happy to Run as Political Insider,” CT, 12 November 1995, p. C1; Strausberg, “Jones Builds a Bigger Base,” CD, 13 November 1995, p. 3; Jesse Jackson Jr. TV Ad, 13 November 1995, JJJP; Steve Neal, “Slogans Fly as 2nd District Race Picks Up Steam,” CST, 14 November 1995, p. 31; “Orr Backs Palmer for Reynolds’ Seat,” and “Another Chance in the 2nd District,” CT, 14 November 1995; Bonnie Miller Rubin, “Palmer Defined by, and Penalized for, Independence,” CT, 15 November 1995, p. C1; Strausberg, “Palmer Defends Wife Against Davis Attacks,” CD, 15 November 1995, p. 21; Fornek, “2nd District Candidates Talk Taxes,” CST, 16 November 1995, p. 22; Mitchell Locin, “Davis Runs Against All Odds Again,” CT, 17 November 1995, p. C1; Hardy, “Jackson Jr. Leads in Race to Replace Reynolds,” CT, 19 November 1995; Hardy, “Jackson Dismisses Youth Issue,” CT, 20 November 1995; Fornek, “Charges Fly in 2nd Dist. Race,” CST, 20 November 1995, p. 9; Strausberg, “Second Dist. Candidates Battle Over Polls, Issues,” CD, 20 November 1995, p. 5; Ethan Michaeli, “Jackson Leads Money Race,” CD, 21 November 1995, p. 1; Joanne Esters-Brown, “2nd District Debate Turns into Mudslinger,” HPH, 22 November 1995, p. 1; Strausberg, “Jackson Hits Jones Campaign Literature in 2nd Dist. Race,” CD, 22 November 1995, p. 3; Gary Mays and Hardy, “Jackson’s Bid Clouded by New Support,” CT, 23 November 1995; Hardy, “2nd District Primary May Be Turkey,” CT, 24 November 1995; “Emil Jones Deserves Election to Congress,” CST, 24 November 1995, p. 53; Don Terry, “In House Election, a Familiar Name,” NYT, 24 November 1995; Kass, “Ex-Gang Member Adds Fuel to Campaign Fire in 2nd,” CT, 25 November 1995; Hardy, “Variety Is Theme in 2nd District,” CT, 26 November 1995; Art Golab and Michelle Campbell, “2nd District Candidates Trade Accusations,” CST, 26 November 1995, p. 9; Benjamin Sheffner, “On the Special Election Trail,” Roll Call, 27 November 1995; Michaeli, “Palmer Takes Campaign into Home Stretch,” and Strausberg, “Palmer Disputes ‘Soft on Crime’ Charge,” CD, 27 November 1995, pp. 1, 5; Teresa Puente and Patricia Callahan, “2nd District Foes Preach Hope,” CT, 27 November 1995; Strausberg, “Candidates: Jobs at Stake,” CD, 28 November 1995, p. 1; Fornek, “Weather May Be a Deciding Factor Today at the Polls,” Michael Briggs, “Jones Gets Big Boost of Money at the End,” and Steve Neal, “For 2nd District Voters, It’s Youth vs. Experience,” CST, 28 November 1995, pp. 9 and 31.

5. Jesse Jackson Jr. with Frank E. Watkins, A More Perfect Union: Advancing New American Rights (Welcome Rain, 2001), p. 39; Burney Simpson, “Computers and Cash Boot Up Jackson’s New Machine,” Chicago Reporter, January 1996; Minutes, CAC Board of Directors, 28 November 1995, 3:15 P.M., CACP; Sabrina Miller, “Schools Get Big Bucks to Fund Reform,” CT, 20 December 1995; Lorraine Forte, “35 Networks Get First Annenberg Funds,” Catalyst Chicago, February 1996; Deanna Bellandi (AP), “U of I at Chicago Opens Ayers Records,” 27 August 2008; Thomas Hardy and Bonnie Miller Rubin, “Jesse Jackson Jr. Rolls Over Veteran Opponents,” CT, 29 November 1995; Scott Fornek, “Jesse Jr. Wins,” CST, 29 November 1995, p. 1; “Jesse Wins,” and Ethan Michaeli, “Palmer Concedes in Dem Primary,” CD, 29 November 1995, pp. 1 and 3; “Jesse Jackson Jr. Wins Primary in Chicago,” NYT, 29 November 1995; Kevin Knapp, “Another Entry in State Senate Race,” HPH, 29 November 1995, p. 1; Benjamin Sheffner, “His Last Name Proves Golden for Jesse Jackson Jr.,” Roll Call, 30 November 1995; Hardy, “Jackson Names Just Spells Victory,” CT, 30 November 1995; Rick Bryant, “Jesse Jr. Comes Up Aces,” Southtown, 30 November 1995; Chinta Strausberg, “Somer, Jesse to Do Battle,” CD, 30 November 1995, p. 1; Lisa Ely et al., “Jackson Wins Primary Bid to Congress,” Chicago Citizen, 30 November 1995, p. 1; Russ Stewart, “Daley Has Big Stake in 7th District,” Illinois Politics, December 1995, pp. 9–10; Strausberg, “Jackson Jr. Campaign Heats Up,” CD, 4 December 1995, p. 3; Strausberg, “Draft Palmer Campaign Launched,” CD, 5 December 1995, p. 4; David K. Fremon, Chicago Politics Ward by Ward (Indiana University Press, 1988), pp. 260, 267; Ellen Schumer note, “12/5—Barack Obama—751-1170,” 5 December 1995, ESP; Rick Bryant, “Palmer Will Seek Re-Election After All,” Daily Southtown, 9 December 1995, p. A7; Kevin Knapp, “Palmer May Re-Enter State Senate Race,” HPH, 13 December 1995, p. 1; Scott Fornek, “I’ve Got a Competitive Nature,” CST, 3 October 2004, p. 12; Adolph Reed Jr., “Obama No,” Progressive, May 2008; DJG interviews with Kitty Kurth, Alan Dobry, John Charles, Dan Shomon, Carol Harwell, Emil Jones Jr., Lula Ford, Jesse Jackson Jr., Marty King, Hal Baron, Paul Williams, Jesse Ruiz, Howard Stanback, Bob Klonowski, Madeline Talbott, Sunny Fischer, Alice Palmer, Don Wiener, Barbara Holt, Tim Black, Adolph Reed, Michael Dawson, Willie Delgado, William McNary, and Nia Odeoti-Hassan. “My husband to this day,” Palmer volunteered in 2011, “he’s never forgiven me” for promising to give up her seat.

6. Hank DeZutter, “What Makes Obama Run?,” CR, 8 December 1995, pp. 1ff.; John H. Sibley, “Obama’s Myopia,” CR, 22 December 1995; Brent Watters, “Accomplished Black Chicago Author Explores the Subject of Race,” Hyde Park Citizen, 28 December 1995, p. 3; DJG interview with Hank DeZutter.

7. Bonnie Miller Rubin, “Democracy Costs Time and Money,” CT, 12 December 1995; Thomas Hardy and William Presecky, “Win for Both,” CT, 13 December 1995; Steve Daley, “Jackson Jr. Out of the Shadows, into Spotlight,” CT, 15 December 1995; Kevin Knapp, “List of Next Year’s Candidates Is Sparse,” HPH, 13 December 1995, pp. 1–2; Tom Johnson fax to Ron Davis or Carol Harwell, 28 November 1995, TEJP; Friends of Barack Obama, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures, Form D-2, 1 July 1995–31 December 1995, 2 February 1996; Chinta Strausberg, “Jackson Jr. to File Petitions Today,” CD, 18 December 1995, p. 22; Adam Lashinsky et al., “One Good Thing,” CCB, 18 December 1995, p. 8; Strausberg, “Palmer OKs Draft to Run for Re-Election,” CD, 19 December 1995, p. 3; Thomas Hardy, “Jackson Foe Now Wants Old Job Back—Palmer Must Now Battle Own Endorsee,” CT, 19 December 1995; “The Unzip” and “State Senator Alice J. Palmer Announces Run for Re-Election,” South Street Journal, 19 December 1995–4 January 1996, pp. 2, 9; Knapp, “Palmer Caught in Campaign Draft,” and “Candidates File Petitions for Local Political Offices,” HPH, 20 December 1995, pp. 1–2; Ellen Schumer notes (on lunch with Barack), 20 December 1995, ESP; Strausberg, “Palmer Challenger Says He Won’t Step Aside in Race,” CD, 21 December 1995, p. 3; Ronald Davis, Notarized Statement, 22 December 1995, TEJP; “Candidates Prepare to Wage Battles Over Nominating Petitions,” CT, 24 December 1995; Sunya Walls, “Alice Palmer Decides to Run for Re-Election,” Chicago Weekend, 25 December 1995, p. 2; Judy Hevrdejs and Mike Conkling, “Early Christmas for Bill Melton,” CT, 25 December 1995; Mathias W. Delort, Odelson and Sterk, “Appearance,” Davis v. Palmer, #96-EB-SS-09, 28 December 1995; Thomas E. Johnson, “Appearance,” Davis v. Ewell, #96-EB-SS-11, 2 January 1996, TEJP; Kevin Knapp, “Candidates Face Petition Challenges,” HPH, 3 January 1996, p. 3; Raymond Ewell fax to Thomas E. Johnson, and including Marc Ewell, “Motion to Strike Objector’s Petition,” 3 January 1996, TEJP; Saul Mendelson, “Independents Defend Their Pre-Election Work,” HPH, 7 February 1996, pp. 4, 14; David Jackson and Ray Long, “Obama Knows His Way Around a Ballot,” CT, 4 April 2007; Leslie Hairston, “Tribute to Late Mr. Ronald L. Davis,” Chicago City Council Journal, 14 May 2008, pp. 15–16; Drew Griffin, Newsroom, CNN, 29 May 2008; David Freddoso, “Obama Played by Chicago Rules,” WSJ, 20 August 2008, p. A19; Michelle Norris, “How Chicago Politics Shaped Obama,” All Things Considered, NPR, 16 October 2008; Will Burns’s 2008 interview with Jim Gilmore; Rickey Hendon, Black Enough/White Enough: The Obama Dilemma (Third World Press, 2009), p. 10; Remnick,

The Bridge, pp. 291–92; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, p. 118; George E. Condon Jr., “A Sense of Self,” National Journal, 22 September 2012, pp. 16–19; DJG interviews with Delmarie Cobb, Jesse Jackson Jr., Alice Palmer, Will Burns, Carol Harwell, Emil Jones, Mike Hoffmann, Dan Shomon, John Charles, Tim Black, Paul Williams, Alan and Lois Dobry, Ray Harris, Barbara Flynn Currie, Ellen Schumer, Mike Pflieger, Jacky Grimshaw, Jan Schakowsky, Dave Gross, Courtney Nottage, Tom Johnson, and Kathy Stell. Also see Steven R. Strahler, “Jackson’s PUSH Comes to Shove,” CCB, 8 April 1996, p. 1, and Dale Eastman, “The Rise of Jesse Jackson Jr. and the First Family of Black America,” Chicago Magazine, May 1996.

8. Lumpkin v. Envirodyne Industries, 933 F.2d 933 (7th Cir.), 17 May 1991, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 939, 4 November 1991; Paul Galloway, “Steel Workers’ Labor of Love,” CT, 4 April 1994, p. T1; R. C. Longworth, “Forged in Steel, Soon Forgotten,” CT, 30 March 1995, p. 1; Longworth, “Man of Steel,” CT, 31 May 1995, p. T1; Longworth, “Wisconsin Steel Deal May End Ex-Workers’ Agony,” CT, 9 December 1995, p. 1; “Envirodyne, Steel Workers OK Settlement,” CST, 10 December 1995, p. 10; “Wisconsin Steel,” Daily Southtown, 9 December 1995, pp. A1, A7; Tamara Kerrill, “Wisconsin Steel Veterans Accept 10% of Their Due,” CST, 3 January 1996, p. 6; DJG interviews with Tom Geoghegan, Tom Johnson, and Bea Lumpkin.

9. Saul Mendelson and Lois Friedberg-Dobry, “Independents Defend Their Pre-Election Work,” HPH, 7 February 1996, pp. 4, 14; Ellen Schumer note, “1-5-96—Barack Obama,” ESP; Adolph Reed Jr., “The Curse of Community,” Village Voice, 16 January 1996; Saul [Mendelson] to Alice [Palmer], 25 January 1996, Dobry Papers and TEJP; Kevin Knapp, “Local Independent Voters Still Divided,” HPH, 31 January 1996, pp. 1, 3; David Jackson and Ray Long, “Obama Knows His Way Around a Ballot,” CT, 4 April 2007; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, p. 119; DJG interviews with Alan and Lois Dobry, Kathy Stell, Tom Johnson, and Carol Harwell.

10. Barack Obama, Impact Endorsement Questionnaire, 7 January 1996, 3pp., and Obama to Trudy Ring, Outlines, 15 February 1996, both Web-posted in conjunction with Tracy Baim, “Obama Changed Views on Gay Marriage,” Windy City Times, 14 January 2009, p. 6, and both reprinted in Baim, Obama and the Gays: A Political Marriage (Prairie Avenue Productions, 2010), pp. 190, 192–93.

11. Tom Johnson notes, 8 January 1996, 4 P.M., TEJP; Kevin Knapp, “Petition Challenges Shape Political Ballot,” HPH, 10 January 1996, pp. 1–2; Michael Sneed, “Sneed,” CST, 11 January 1996, p. 4; Madeline Talbott, “Response to ‘What Kind of Democracy Are We Building in the New Party?,’” 6 January 1996, IAP Box 11 Fld. 4; “Chicago New Party 1996 Goals,” n.d., IAP Box 10 Fld. 23; Agenda, New Party Membership Meeting, 11 January 1996, IAP Box 10 Fld. 24; “Minutes, New Party Meeting (Draft),” 11 January 1996, IAP Box 10 Fld. 23; New Party News Vol. 5, #2, Spring 1996 (“New Party members” who won spring primaries include Barack); Bruce Bentley, “New Party Update,” New Ground 47, July–August 1996 (noting Barack’s attendance at an 11 April New Party membership meeting, where he “encouraged NPers to join his task forces on Voter Education and Voter Registration”); Jim Cullen, “Editorial: The Next Campaign,” Progressive Populist, November 1996 (“New Party member Barack Obama”); [Madeline Talbott], “Proposal for Maintaining a City-Wide Structure,” November 1996, IAP Box 12 Fld. 11; [Madeline Talbott], “Chicago New Party Chairperson’s Report Year End ’96/Year Begin ’97,” n.d., IAP Box 10 Fld. 103; Illinois New Party Membership List, 3 January 1997, IAP Box 10 Fld. 118 (no listing of Obama, esp. per pp. 11, 17, 20, and 22–23); “Targeting Resources to Electoral Districts,” n.d. [ca. February 1997], IAP Box 11 Fld. 1; “New Party—Not Paid Up,” 17 April 1997, IAP (2010-080) Box 10 Fld. 50, p. 8 (“Obama Barack Date Join 1/11/96”); Carl Davidson, “Carl Davidson on Barack O’bomb’em,” 21 January 2007, mailman.lbo-talk.org; Carl Davidson Web comment per Ron Radosh, 18 July 2012, pjmedia.com; Jackson and Long, “Obama Knows His Way Around a Ballot,” CT, 4 April 2007; John Nichols, “How to Push Obama,” The Progressive, January 2009; Stanley Kurtz, “Obama’s Third-Party History,” NationalReview.com, 7 June 2012; Ben Smith, “Obama and the New Party,” Buzzfeed.com, 8 June 2012; Rosie Gray and Ben Smith, “In Chicago, No Memory of Obama New Party Membership,” Buzzfeed.com, 12 June 2012; Kurtz, “Obama on the Fringe,” National Review, 25 June 2012, pp. 25–27; DJG interviews with Madeline Talbott, Keith Kelleher, Joel Rogers, and Sarah Siskind.

12. Kevin Knapp, “Primary Ballot Gets Face-Lift from Board,” HPH, 17 January 1996, p. 1; Thomas E. Johnson, “Notice of Filing” and “Objector’s Motion to Strike Candidate’s Rule 8 Motion,” Davis v. Palmer, #96-EB-SS-09, 17 January 1996, TEJP; Nancy Ryan and Thomas Hardy, “Sen. Palmer Ends Bid for Re-Election,” CT, 18 January 1996; “Palmer Out Again,” CST, 18 January 1996, p. 14; Chinta Strausberg, “Palmer Throws in Towel,” CD, 18 January 1996, p. 3; Rick Bryant, “Palmer Pulls Her Hat from 13th District Ring,” Daily Southtown, 18 January 1996, p. A4; Johnson notes, 20 January 1996, TEJP; Sunya Walls, “Alice Palmer Withdraws from Race for Re-Election,” Chicago Weekend, 21 January 1996, p. 3; Cook County Electoral Board, “Decision,” Davis v. Palmer, #96-EB-SS-09, 23 January 1996, 2pp., TEJP; Knapp, “Final Primary Ballot Taking Shape,” HPH, 24 January 1996, p. 1; Ulmer D. Lynch Jr. v. State Board of Election, Chicago Board of Election Commissioners, Thomas E. Johnson & Barack Obama, #96-C-0270, N. D. Ill., 24 January 1996; Cook County Electoral Board, “Remand to Hearing Examiner,” Davis v. Ewell, #96-EB-SS-11, 31 January 1996; Johnson to Obama, 30 January 1996 (“enclosed is the Election Board’s decisions removing Alice Palmer and Ulmer Lynch from the ballot”), 30 January 1996; James M. Scanlon to Johnson, 5 February 1996, Johnson to Obama, 5 and 6 February 1996, Johnson, “Answer to Amended Complaint,” Lynch v. State Board of Elections, #96-C-0270, N. D. Ill., 7 February 1996, Cook County Electoral Board, “Decision,” Davis v. Ewell, #96-EB-SS-11, 9 February 1996, Johnson to Obama, 12 February 1996 (“enclosed are the decisions knocking Ewell and Askia off the ballot”), all TEJP; Marc Ewell v. Board of Election Commissioners, #96-C-0823, N. D. Ill., 13 February 1996; Charles R. Norgle Sr., “Minute Order,” Lynch v. State Board of Elections, #96-C-0270, N. D. Ill., 16 February 1996; Johnson to Ron Davis, 19 February 1996, TEJP; Knapp, “Ex-Candidates Sue Election Board,” HPH, 21 February 1996, p. 1; Raymond W. Ewell, “Memorandum of Law in Support of Petition for Temporary Restraining Order,” James M. Scanlon, “Answer,” Thomas E. Johnson, “Barack Obama and Ronald Davis’ Motion to Intervene as Defendants,” Johnson, “Intervening Defendants’ Answer and Defense,” and Ruben Castillo, “Minute Order,” Ewell v. Board of Election Commissioners, #96-C-0823, 21 February 1996, TEJP; Starks in Remnick, The Bridge, p. 292; Hendon, Black Enough/White Enough, p. 10; Hendon’s 2010 interview with Peter Slen; DJG interviews with Howard Carroll and Don Wiener.

13. Kevin Knapp, “Local Independent Voters Still Divided,” HPH, 31 January 1996, pp. 1, 3; Senate Floor Transcript, 8 February 1996, p. 2 (SB 1554); Salim Muwakkil, “Candidate Not What He Seems, Foes Insist,” CST, 12 February 1996, p. 29; Minutes, CAC Board of Directors Executive Committee, 22 February 1996, CACP; Ellen Schumer notes, 5 January 1996, ESP; Bruce Bentley, “Chicago DSA

Executive Committee Meeting Minutes,” 20 January 1996, DSAP Box 116; Byron White and William Mullen, “U. of C. Is Losing Its Top Urban Sociologist,” CT, 8 February 1996; Flyer, “Chicago DSA Membership Meeting,” and Bruce Bentley, “Chicago DSA Membership Meeting Minutes,” 8 February 1996, DSAP Box 116; “Hyde Park Happenings,” HPH, 21 February 1996, p. 21; Kate Olson, “Town Meeting Addresses Economic Problems,” Chicago Maroon, 27 February 1996, pp. 1, 4; Bob Roman, “A Town Meeting on Economic Insecurity: Employment and Survival in Urban America,” and “Chicago DSA Endorsements in the March 19th Primary Election,” New Ground, March–April 1996; Joel Bleifuss, “Red-Boating Obama,” In These Times, 11 March 2008; Henry Louis Gates Jr., “A Conversation with William Julius Wilson on the Election of Barack Obama,” Du Bois Review 6 (March 2008): 15–23, at 18 (Barack was “very, very engaging” when Wilson first met him at the home of Tracy Meares); DJG interviews with Tim Wright, John Schmidt, and Katie Romich.

14. Raymond W. Ewell, “Memorandum of Law in Support of Plaintiff’s Standing to Bring Instant Action,” James M. Scanlon, “Defendant’s Motion for Summary Judgment,” and Thomas E. Johnson, “Intervening Defendants’ Motion for Summary Judgment,” Ewell v. Board of Election Commissioners, #96-C-0823, N. D. Ill., 26 February 1996, TEJP; Knapp, “Court Rules Candidate Off Ballot,” HPH, 28 February 1996, pp. 1–2; Ewell, “Plaintiff’s Response to Defendants’ and Intervenor’s Motion for Summary Judgment,” and Scanlon, “Defendant’s Response to Plaintiff’s Memorandum of Law in Support of Plaintiff’s Standing to Bring Instant Action,” Ewell v. Board of Election Commissioners, #96-C-0823, N. D. Ill., 29 February 1996, Ewell v. Board of Election Commissioners, #96-C-0823, N. D. Ill., 4 March 1996, Johnson to Obama, 4 March 1996, Ulmer D. Lynch, “Plaintiffs’ Second Amended Complaint,” Lynch v. State Board of Elections, #96-C-0270, N. D. Ill., 26 February 1996, Charles R. Norgle Sr., “Minute Order,” Lynch v. State Board of Elections, #96-C-0270, N. D. Ill., 11 March 1996, Johnson to Obama, “Ewell and Lynch,” 11 March 1996, all TEJP; “The Unzip” and “South Street Journal Endorsements,” South Street Journal, 14–27 March 1996, pp. 2, 13; Kennedy Communications, “State Senator Barack Obama, Candidate for U.S. Senate: Background Report,” April 2003, RRP; Chinta Strausberg, “Several Candidates Run Unopposed,” CD, 18 March 1996, p. 19; Illinois State Board of Elections, Official Vote Cast at the Primary Election, General Primary, March 19, 1996, p. 109; Knapp, “Election Day Yields a Few Surprises,” HPH, 27 March 1996, pp. 1–2; “Senate Hopeful Still Has Plenty to Spend,” HPH, 3 April 1996, pp. 1–2; Friends of Barack Obama, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures, 1 January 1996–30 June 1996, 31 July 1996; DJG interviews with Tom Johnson, Janis Robinson, and Carol Harwell.

15. UCLS Announcements 1995–96, p. 38; UCLS Directory 1995–96; UCLS Course Evaluations, Current Issues in Racism and the Law, Spring 1996; Maya in Emme Tomimbang, “Barack Obama: Hawaii Roots,” 8 February 2008, DVD; Delaney in Yann Masson, “Presidentielle Amercaine: Avec Barack, on Regardait Les Matches de Basket,” Nice Matin, 6 November 2008; Tyus v. Schoemehl, 93 F.3d 449 (8th Cir.), 16 August 1996 (argued 9 April 1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1166 (1997); ACORN v. Edgar, 75 F.3d 304 (7th Cir.), 26 January 1996; ACORN v. Edgar, 1996 WL 284959, N. D. Ill., 28 May 1996; David [Plotkin] to Staff, “Re: Legal,” 29 May 1996, HSP Box 35 Fld. 1494; ACORN v. Edgar, 1996 WL 406652, N. D. Ill., 17 July 1996; ACORN v. Edgar, 1996 WL 447256, N. D. Ill., 1 August 1996; ACORN v. Edgar, 99 F. 3d 261, 262 (7th Cir.), 31 October 1996 (Illinois’s behavior in the case “borders on the frivolous”); Paul Jaskunas, “EEOC v. Mistubishi,” American Lawyer, July–August 1996, pp. 95–96; Phil

Vettel, “Park Avenue Café Deserves Attention,” CT, 19 July 1996; Baird in Alexandra Starr, “Case Study,” NYT Magazine, 21 September 2008, on “Obama: Professor President,” BBC Radio 4, 6 January 2009, and on CNBC video interview, 12 January 2009; DJG interviews with Mary Ellen Callahan, Hisham Amin, Triste Lieteau Smith, Bob Bennett, Judd Miner, George Galland, Paul Strauss, Jeff Cummings, Laura Tilly, John Belcaster, Douglas Baird, Geof Stone, David Strauss, and Dennis Hutchinson.

16. Public Allies Chicago, Check-In, Fall 1995; “Obama Appointed to New University of Chicago Job,” HPH, 5 June 1996, p. 5; “Obama Named First Associate Dean of Student Services,” University of Chicago Chronicle, 6 June 1996; “Any Volunteers?,” University of Chicago Magazine, August 1996; Hilary F. Ryder, “New Faculty Arrive at U of C,” Chicago Maroon, 23 September 1995, p. B15; Public Allies Chicago, Check-In, Fall 1996 and Spring 1997; Maudlyne Ihejirika, “Program Turning Xers Into Leaders,” CST, 27 May 1997, p. 46; Michelle in Holly Yeager, “The Heart and Mind of Michelle Obama,” O Magazine, November 2007, pp. 286ff., in Geraldine Brooks, “Michelle Obama: Camelot 2.0?,” More, October 2008, and in Michael Scherer and Nancy Gibbs, “Interview with the First Lady,” Time, 21 May 2009; Paul Schmitz, Everyone Leads (Jossey-Bass, 2012), pp. 51–53, 243–45; Carl A. and Shelby J. Grant, The Moment (Rowman & Littlefield, 2013), p. 150; Mariana Cook, “A Couple in Chicago,” New Yorker, 19 January 2009; Slevin, Michelle Obama, pp. 162, 171; DJG interviews with Pat Graham, Julian Posada, Bethann Hester, Jan Anne Dubin, Ian Larkin, Sunny Fischer, Craig Huffman, Chuck Supple, Leif Elsmo, Paul Schmitz, Kathy Stell, Kevin Tyson, Carlton Guthrie, and Deloris Burnam.

17. David Moberg, “Last Train Out: GM’s Electro-Motive Plant Has Assembled Its Final Locomotive,” CT, 24 January 1993; Jon Anderson “Weathering Change,” CT, 8 July 1993, p. T1; Tara Gruzen, “’60s Radicals Try to Activate Students,” CT, 17 April 1996; Scott Turow, “The New Face of the Democratic Party—and America,” Salon, 30 March 2004; Peter Wallsten, “Allies of Palestinians See a Friend in Barack Obama,” LAT, 10 April 2008; Marc Santora and Elissa Gootman, “Political Storm Finds a Columbia Professor,” NYT, 31 October 2008; Scott Turow’s 2009 interview with Robert Draper; Carol Felsenthal, “Bill Ayers Talks Obama,” Chicago Magazine, December 2013; DJG interviews with Bill Ayers, Bernardine Dohrn, Mona Khalidi, Carole Travis, John Ayers, Scott Turow, and Tom Geoghegan. On Rebecca Jumper Coleman Shields, who died 24 January 1988, see Rachel L. Swarns, American Tapestry (Amistad, 2012), esp. pp. 87–109.

18. Minutes, CAC Board of Directors, 2 May 1996, Ken Rolling to Vartan Gregorian et al., “Chicago Annenberg Challenge Program Report,” 8 May 1996, Gregorian to Obama, 28 May 1996, Box 114 Fld. 765, Minutes, CAC Board of Directors, 18 June 1996, CAC, “Program Report for the Period Ending December 31, 1996,” CACP; Shipps and Sconzert, The Chicago Annenberg Challenge: The First Three Years, March 1996, esp. p. 19; Joyce Foundation, Work in Progress, January, May, and September 1996; Kenneth P. Vogel, “Obama Linked to Gun Control Efforts,” Politico, 20 April 2008; Abramsky, Inside Obama’s Brain, p. 235; Adrian Butler, “Barack’s British Background,” Sunday Mirror, 13 January 2008; Paul Burnell, “Why Obama Came to My Stag Do,” The One Show, BBC, 29 January 2008; Martin Fricker and Graham Brough, “Barack Obama’s Stepmother Is a Bingo Lover from Bracknell,” Daily Mirror, 9 February 2008; Oliver Harvey, “Obama’s Brother Is in Bracknell,” The Sun, 26 July 2008; Auma Obama, And Then Life Happens, p. 233; DJG interviews with Ken Rolling, Pat Graham, Carin Clauss, Paula Wolff, Carlton Guthrie, Jack Anderson, Chuck Daly, Debbie Leff, Margaret O’Dell, Unmi Song, Rob and Lisa Fisher, Mark Kozlowski, John Charles, Jill Rock, Cynthia Miller, Carole Travis, Michael McGann, Jeff Stauter, Pat Welch, Carol Harwell, and Malik Nevels. At some point in the 1990s, “Michelle and I . . . decided we were going to lease a car,” Barack later told Elizabeth Warren. “When I returned the car four years later . . . it was the first time I realized how expensive that car was.” Ron Suskind, Confidence Men (HarperCollins, 2011), p. 445.

19. Tracy P. Leary to Rev. Vincent McCutcheon, 12 February 1996, “Hope Center Profiles Spring Session 1996,” n.d., TLP; “Hope Institute Receives Grant to Organize Local School Election,” South Street Journal, 14–27 March 1996, p. 2; “Hope Center Spring Session Practicums,” n.d., “Hope Center Spring Session Overview of Participation,” n.d., Tracy P. Leary to Mrs. Nicholson, 24 May 1996, Leary, “Weekly Report (June 11th–June 18th),” 19 June 1996, “The Lugenia Burns Hope Center Presents a Community Forum Guest Speaker: Robert ‘Bob’ Moses,” [14 June 1996], Leary, “Weekly Report (June 19th–25th),” TLP; [Sandy O’Donnell], “The Lugenia Burns Hope Center: Purposes, Description, First Year Progress, Second Year Plans,” n.d. [ca. late June 1996], SOP; Tracy Leary 1996 appointments book, esp. 2 July and 23 August 1996, Leary, “Weekly Report (June 26th–July 2nd),” 3 July 1996, Leary, “Weekly Report (July 3rd–9th),” 16 July 1996, Leary to “Dear _____” Form Letter, 11 July 1996, Leary, “Weekly Report (July 10th–16th),” 17 July 1996, TLP; [Sandy O’Donnell], “Hope Center Planning Group Notes,” 18 July [1996], SOP; Leary, “Weekly Report (July 31st–August 6th),” 7 August 1996, Leary, “4120 [S. Prairie] Weekly Report (August 21st–26th),” Leary, “Weekly Report (August 21st–28th),” 28 August 1996, The Lugenia Burns Hope Center for the Study and Development of New World Community, “Building a Collective Organizing Strategy for Grand Boulevard,” 29 August 1996 (draft agenda?), Leary, “Weekly Report (August 28th–September 3rd),” 4 September 1996, TLP; Joe Frolik, “A Newcomer to the Business of Politics,” Plain Dealer, 3 August 1996, p. A1; Beverly Reed, “Senator Obama’s Bronzeville Connection,” South Street Journal, 17 January 2008, p. 14; DJG interviews with Tracy Leary, Paul Scully, Sokoni Karanja, and Mike Kruglik.

20. Dreams From My Father (Kodansha Globe), 1996; Tim Engles, Magill Book Reviews, March 1997; Janny Scott, “Obama’s Story, Written by Obama,” NYT, 18 May 2008, p. A1; Philip Turner, “‘Dreams From My Father’ and Kodansha Globe, 1995–96,” philipturner.com, 11 March 2012; DJG interviews with Philip Turner, Deborah Baker, and Rob and Lisa Fisher. Two subsequent reviews are Dorothy S. Latiak, “Reflections on the Life of Obama,” HPH, 23 June 1999, p. 4, and E. J. Graff, “Being Black and White,” American Prospect, 10 September 2001, pp. 42ff. (dismissing Obama’s narrative as “unfocused meandering” and “boring writing”).

21. “IMPACT Questionnaire,” 3 September 1996, in Baim, Obama and the Gays, pp. 9–11; Tracy Ring, “Elections Set for Illinois House, Senate,” Outlines, November 1996; “IVI-IPO General Candidate Questionnaire,” Dobry Papers and DWP; IVI-IPO, “Candidate Report Sheet for Interviews, Barack Obama,” 9 September 1996, DWP; “Two Candidates to Challenge Obama for State Senate Seat,” HPH, 25 September 1996, p. 2; Mike Allen and Ben Smith, “Liberal Views Could Haunt Obama,” Politico, 11 December 2007; Lynn Sweet, “The Past Haunts Obama?,” CST, 12 December 2007, p. 26; Smith, “Chicago Activists Doubt Obama’s Explanation on Questionnaire,” Politico, 19 December 2007; Kenneth P. Vogel, “Obama Had Greater Role on Liberal Survey,” Politico, 31 March 2008; DJG interviews with Alan and Lois Dobry and Don Wiener. The existence of incomplete versions of the IVI-IPO questionnaire on the Web has in the past led to confusion.

22. UCLS Directory 1996–1997, esp. p. 20; UCLS Announcements, 1996–1997, esp. pp. 37 and 40; Chapin Cimino, “Class-Based Preferences in Affirmative Action Programs After Miller v. Johnson: A Race-Neutral Option, or Subterfuge?,” University of Chicago Law Review 64 (Fall 1997): 1289–1310; Geoffrey R. Stone et al., Constitutional Law, 3rd ed. (Little Brown, 1996); UCLS Course Evaluations, Autumn 1996; “Candidates as Academics: I Got a Professor Named Obama,” 8 February 2008, and “U of C ’97” comment, 2:28 P.M., 11 February 2008, Abovethelaw.com; John K. Wilson, Barack Obama: The Improbable Quest (Paradigm, 2008), pp. iv, 80; DJG interviews with Barack Echols, David Strauss, Felton Newell, Chapin Cimino, Dennis Hutchinson, Trieste Lieteau Smith, and Hisham Amin.

23. “Please Join Us for an Evening of Art, Jazz & Politics with Barack Obama,” 3 October 1996, DTKP; Friends of Barack Obama, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures, 1 July 1996–31 December 1996, 31 January 1997; Harvard Law School, Class of 1991 Fifth Anniversary Report, 1996, p. 73 (Obama entry dated 3 October 1996); Tracy Leary 1996 appointments book, esp. 24 September 1996; Leary to “Dear Friend,” 27 September 1996, Leary, “Weekly Report (Nov. 6th–12th),” 12 November 1996, Leary to “Dear Friend,” 13 November 1996, TLP; Regina McGraw, “Loud Way Sometimes the Best Way,” CT, 1 October 1996; Woods Fund of Chicago, 1995 and 1996 Annual Reports; DJG interviews with David Kindler, Sokoni Karanja, Tracy Leary, Sandy O’Donnell, John Eason, Jean Rudd, Todd Dietterle, and Josh Hoyt. As Hoyt rightly states, “church-based organizing was incredibly successful” and “became the basis of a huge amount of empowerment in the Latino community, and it never really took root in the black community.”

24. “Chance to Learn About Volunteer Opportunities,” UCC, 10 October 1996; Brenda Warner Rotzoll, “Lessons in Volunteerism,” CST, 13 October 1996, p. 30; Kevin Knapp, “Volunteering Becomes a Full-Time Job for Obama,” HPH, 8 January 1997, p. 2; “Public-Service Internships Available Through Summer Links,” UCC, 20 March 1997; Lisa Fingeret, “University to Fund Volunteerism,” HPH, 2 April 1997, p. 2; “Volunteerism Thriving Among Students,” UCC, 12 June 1997; Charlotte Snow, “Connecting Communities: New Campus Volunteer Efforts Show Promise of Broadening Undergraduate Perspectives and Improving Town-Gown Relations,” UCM, June 1998; Snow, “Student Activists Raise Signs Over Sweatshops,” UCM, June 2000; Russ Stewart, “The Future of the Republican Senate,” Illinois Politics, October 1995, pp. 9, 14; Stewart, “Big Democratic ‘Wave’ Needed to Win State Senate,” Illinois Politics, October 1996, pp. 11–12; Jennifer Halperin, “On Target: State Senate Democrats Count on Shifts in the South Suburbs,” II, October 1996, pp. 22–25; “Illinois Senate Endorsements,” CT, 16 October 1996; Kevin Knapp, “Two ‘Stealth Candidates’ on Ballot in State Senate Race,” HPH, 23 October 1996, p. 3; “Our Endorsements for Illinois Senate,” CST, 27 October 1996, p. 39 (and repeated 3 and 5 November); Paul Krawzak, “Two Candidates, One Senator,” SJ-R, 27 October 1996, p. 1; John Drumwright, “U of C Professor Closes In on Illinois State Senate Seat,” The Phoenix, 4 November 1996, p. 1; Illinois State Board of Elections, Official Vote Cast at the General Election, 5 November 1996, p. 32 (Barack 48,592, David Whitehead 7,461, Rosette Caldwell Peyton 3,091); Michael Tackett, “Except in Illinois,” CT, 10 November 1996; Judy Hevrdejs and Mike Conklin, “Devine’s Key Asset in Victory,” CT, 12 November 1996; “House Changes Hands in Election,” Cook-Witter Report 12, #10, 22 November 1996; CF, 9 April 1999 (Halvorson’s victory was “the single greatest political accomplishment by the Senate Democrats” during the 1990s); “Rosette Caldwell Peyton, 78,” HPH, 2 May 2007, p. 19; Dan Shomon’s 2008 interview with CNN’s Jen Christensen; Debbie Halvorson, Playing Ball with the Big

Boys (Solutions Unlimited, 2012), p. 26; DJG interviews with Dan Shomon, Debbie Halvorson, Terry Link, Tom Walsh, Denny Jacobs, Cindi Canary, Glenn Hodas, John Charles, Linda Hawker, Lori Joyce Cullen, and Cindy Huebner Davidsmeyer.

25. Maudlyne Ihejirika, “Black Officials Push for State-Level Activism,” CST, 10 November 1996, p. 6; Kevin Knapp, “Election Holds No Surprises for Local Candidates,” HPH, 13 November 1996, p. 2; Craig A. Roberts, Paul Kleppner, et al., Almanac of Illinois Politics—1996 (University of Illinois at Springfield, 1996), pp. 76–77 (13th District); Melanie Carr, “Law School Professor Barack Obama Wins State Senate Seat,” The Phoenix, 18 November 1996, p. 2; Minutes, CAC Board of Directors, 2 December 1996 (Obama absent); Kennedy Communications, “State Senator Barack Obama, Candidate for U.S. Senate: Background Report,” April 2003, RRP; “Tentative Legislative Schedule for 1997 Spring Session,” CWR 12 #11, 18 December 1996; UCLS Announcements 1996–97, p. 65; King v. State Board of Elections, 979 F. Supp. 582 (N. D. Ill.), 7 March 1996, remanded, 519 U.S. 978, 12 November 1996; Sarah Nordgren (AP), “Lower Court Ordered to Take Another Look at Hispanic District,” 12 November 1996; King v. State Board of Elections, 979 F. Supp. 619 (N. D. Ill.), 1 August 1997, affirmed 522 U.S. 1087, 26 January 1998; Samuel Issachaoﬀ, Pamela S. Karlan, and Richard H. Pildes, The Law of Democracy: Legal Structure of the Political Process (Foundation Press, 1998), esp. p. viii; Obama, Constitutional Law III Final Examination, 12 December 1996; Obama to Students in Con Law III, “The Exam,” n.d., lawprofessors.typepad.com; Pildes in Jeffrey Toobin, “Bench Press,” New Yorker, 21 September 2009; John R. Lott Jr. and David B. Mustard, “Crime, Deterrence, and Right-to-Carry Concealed Handguns,” UCLS Law and Economics Working Paper #41, August 1996; “Concealed Weapons Deter Crime, Study Says,” CT, 10 August 1996; Stephen Chapman, “Taking Aim,” CT, 15 August 1996; Lott, “More Guns, Less Violent Crime,” WSJ, 28 August 1996; Lott, “Obama and Guns: Two Different Views,” FoxNews.com, 7 April 2008; Grover G. Norquist and Lott, Debate (John Wiley, 2012), pp. 1–2; Jamie Weinstein, “Gun Rights Advocate and Former Obama Colleague: President Used to Treat Him as ‘Evil,’” Daily Caller, 8 April 2012; Lott, At the Brink (Regnery Publishing, 2013), pp. xv, 126; Adam Bonin, “Professor Obama and Me,” DailyKos.com, 20 December 2007; Bonin in Lydialyle Gibson, “Elemental Obama,” University of Chicago Magazine, September–October 2008, p. 45; Alexandra Starr, “Case Study,” NYT Magazine, 21 September 2008; David Franklin in Jodi Kantor, “As a Professor, Obama Held Pragmatic Views on Court,” NYT, 3 May 2009, and in Jeffrey Rosen, “Race to the Top,” TNR, 6 May 2009; UCLS Course Evaluations, Voting Rights, Winter 1997; DJG interviews with Rick Pildes, John Lott, Molly Garhart, Carl Patten, and Adam Bonin.

26. Senate Transcript, 90th General Assembly, 8 January 1997, pp. 3–4, 18; Doug Finke and Bill Bush, “Power Sharing Begins,” SJ-R, 9 January 1997, p. 1; Jean Latz Griffin, “Senate Rookies Soon Learn to Go with the Flow,” CT, 26 January 1995; Michael Madigan’s richly revealing 2009 interview with Robert V. Remini, p. 13; Paul Simon (as told to Alfred Balk), “The Illinois Legislature: A Study in Corruption,” Harper’s, September 1964, pp. 74–78; Simon, “Cleaning Up the Illinois Legislature: A Follow-Up Report,” Harper’s, September 1965, p. 125; Paul Simon, P.S.: The Autobiography of Paul Simon (Bonus Books, 1999), pp. 41, 62–69, 104–5, 232, 307; Robert E. Hartley, Paul Powell of Illinois: A Lifelong Democrat (Southern Illinois University Press, 1999), esp. pp. xi, 19, 34, 134, 140, 143, 149, 185, 193; Margaret Ramirez, “Lawrence N. Hansen, 1940–2010,” CT, 16 November 2010; Joyce Foundation, Work in Progress, January 1997; Kent D. Redfield, Cash Clout: Political Money in Illinois

Legislative Elections (University of Illinois at Springfield, 1995), esp. pp. 5, 11, 150–51; Doug Finke et al., Illinois for Sale: Do Campaign Contributions Buy Influence? (University of Illinois at Springfield, 1997), esp. pp. 121, 188; Redfield and Paul J. Quick, Reforming Campaign Finance in Illinois: Issues and Prospects (University of Illinois, July 1998), pp. 2, 6–7; Redfield, Money Counts (University of Illinois, 2001), pp. vii–xi; James L. Merriner, “The Four Tops,” Illinois Issues, November 1996, pp. 16–20; Michael Caldwell, “The New Pattern of Power in Illinois: Effective Government, Deadlock, or Tyranny?,” (IGPA) Policy Forum 11 (1997): 1–6; Redfield, “What Keeps the Four Tops on Top,” in David A. Joens and Paul Kleppner et al., Almanac of Illinois Politics—1998 (University of Illinois at Springfield, 1998), pp. 1–8; Gary MacDougal, Make a Difference (St. Martin’s Press, 2000), p. 235 (“Springfield is full of people who care a lot more about making money from government one way or another than they care about good government”); Obama phone number card, 1997, Timuel Black Papers Box 129 Fld. 1 (listing Cynthia’s hours as M–Th 12:30–4:30 P.M., Fridays 9 A.M. to noon, and Saturdays 10 A.M. to 2 P.M.); David Kidwell and John Chase, “Favorable Legislation Flows to Private Clients of House Speaker Madigan,” CT, 3 June 2012; Chase, Kidwell, and Ray Long, “Madigan Consolidates Power by Holding Sway in Legislative Races,” CT, 5 June 2012; Will Caskey, “Why Are Illinois Democrats So Awful?,” CCB, 31 January 2013 (“we suck because of strong party leadership”); DJG interviews with Jim Collins, Carole Travis, Dave Joens, Mike Ragen, Boro Reljic, Jan Schakowsky, Barbara Flynn Currie, Willie Delgado, Tom Dart, Donne Trotter, Lisa Madigan, and Cynthia Miller.

27. Michael D. Klemens, “Pate Philip: Leader of Senate Minority and DuPage’s GOP Machine,” Illinois Issues, March 1989, pp. 13–16; Steve Neal, “Few Are Neutral About GOP Leader Philip,” CST, 19 January 1990, p. 29; Neal, “Philip Makes Name as Backward Bully,” CST, 13 July 1992, p. 21; Ted Gregory, “Philip Poised to Lead State Senate,” CT, 4 November 1992; Jennifer Halpern, “Pate Philip,” II, March 1993, pp. 13–15; Robert Becker and Susan Kuczka, “‘Pate’ Philip Knocks Minorities,” CT, 6 October 1996; Ray Long and Michael Gillis, “Racial Remarks by Philip Spark Political Storm,” CST, 7 October 1994, p. 4; “Pate Philip’s Racism and the Work Ethic,” CST, 7 October 1994, p. 41; John K. Wilson, “The Bigot Who Runs Illinois,” Chicago Ink, August 1997; Rick Pearson, “Pate,” II, October 1997, pp. 14–17; Capitol Fax, 17 May 1999, p. 2; Carter Hendren’s 2009 interview with Mark DePue; Thomas Hardy, “Sen. Jones Ahead in Race to Be Democratic Leader,” CT, 16 December 1992; Rick Pearson, “Daley Settles Senate Fight—For Now,” and Pearson and John Kass, “Jones Started Schmoozing City Hall Early On,” CT, 17 December 1992; Pearson, “Democratic Senate Squabble Goes Along with Jones’ Selection,” CT, 18 December 1992; Pearson, “Democrats in Senate Rebuff Chief,” CT, 27 January 1993; Jennifer Halpern, “Emil Jones Passes Muster as New Senate Democratic Leader,” II, August–September 1993, pp. 26–29; Jones’s 2000 interview with Julieanna Richardson and his 2006 one with Bernard Sieracki; Paul Davis, “State Senator Emil Jones, Jr.,” N’Digo, 6–12 February 2003, pp. 6–7; Tracey Robinson-English, “Statehouse Clout,” Ebony, April 2005, pp. 150ff.; Ben Smith, “Emil Jones Blowback,” Politico, 5 February 2007; Jones’s 2008–2009 interviews with Erma Brooks-Williams; Bernie Schoenburg’s 2009 interview with Mark DePue, p. 98; Jim Edgar’s 28 May 2010 (#15, p. 678) interview with DePue; DJG interviews with John Hooker, James “Pate” Philip, Emil Jones Jr., Linda Hawker, Larry Bomke, Steve Rauschenberger, Carl Hawkinson, Dan Cronin, John Nicolay, Walter Dudycz, Dave Syverson, Donne Trotter, Howard Carroll, Pat Welch, John Cullerton, Robert Molaro, Miguel del Valle, Chuy Garcia, and William Luking. Translations of The Art of War 8.10 differ widely on the second phrase of Jones's quote; some render it as "but rely on your own preparations."

28. Capitol Fax, 28 December 1998 and 27 April 1999; MacDougal, Make a Difference, p. 255; Bernie Schoenburg's 2009 interview with Mark DePue, p. 65; Jim Edgar's 28 May (#15, pp. 676–78) and 2 September (#20, p. 878) 2010 interviews with DePue; "Edgar Talks About Madigan," Capitol Fax, 27 November 2012; Halvorson, Playing Ball with the Big Boys, pp. 43–44 (describing Edgar as "a remote, aloof figure" even toward Republican senators); DJG interviews with Pate Philip, Jim Edgar, Kirk Dillard, Carter Hendren, Scott Kaiser, Deno Perdiou, Andy Foster, Kurt DeWeese, Linda Hawker, and Donne Trotter. On Madigan's long-term power base, see Rick Pearson, "What Is Mike Madigan Up To?," II, April 1997, pp. 12–17; Madigan's 2009 interview with Remini; David Kidwell and John Chase, "Favorable Legislation Flows to Private Clients of House Speaker Madigan," CT, 3 June 2012; Chase, Kidwell, and Ray Long, "Madigan Consolidates Power by Holding Sway in Legislative Races," CT, 5 June 2012; James Ylisela Jr., "Michael Madigan Is the King of Illinois," Chicago Magazine, December 2013; and Kidwell et al., "How Madigan Built His Patronage Army," CT, 5 January 2014.

29. Brent Watters, "Obama Pledges to Be Hardest Working Senator in Springfield," Chicago Citizen, 16 January 1997, p. 4; "Barack Obama, Senior Lecturer," www.law.uchicago.edu, 24 January 1997; Jennifer Davis, "State Politicians Have Promised to Work Together, Get Things Done," Illinois Issues, February 1997, pp. 6–7; "Edgar's Seventh State of the State," CWR 12 #12, 7 February 1997 (22 January); Illinois Campaign Finance Project, Tainted Democracy: How Money Distorts the Election Process in Illinois and What Must Be Done to Reform the Campaign Finance System (University of Illinois at Springfield), 29 January 1997, pp. 4, 8, 11, 14, 36; Joyce Foundation Annual Report 1996, esp. pp. 26–29; Ed Wojcicki, "Still the Wild West?: A 10-Year Look at Campaign Finance Reform in Illinois," Southern Illinois University, September 2006, pp. 5–6; Senate Floor Transcripts, 90th General Assembly, 5 February 1997, pp. 9, 14 (SBs 398, 399 and 472), 6 February 1997, p. 7 (SBs 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, and 579), 7 February 1997; Peter Slevin, "Obama Forged Political Mettle in Illinois Capitol," WP, 9 February 2007, p. A1; Janny Scott, "In Illinois, Obama Proved Pragmatic and Shrewd," NYT, 30 July 2007, p. A1; Christopher Wills (AP), "Old-School Politician Mentored Obama," 31 March 2008; Eli Saslow, "From Outsider to Politician," WP, 9 October 2008, p. A1; Kevin Knapp, "Developers Make No Small Plans in North Kenwood," HPH, 5 February 1997, pp. 1–2; Lisa Fingeret, "Connected Developers Strike Out," HPH, 12 March 1997, pp. 1–2; Carol McHugh Sanders, "Former Law Firm Partner Takes Firm Stands About Housing," Chicago Lawyer, April 1997, pp. 73ff.; Tim Novak, "Obama's Ex-Boss a Rezko Partner," CST, 23 April 2007, p. 25; Miner, Barnhill & Galland letterhead, 5 February 1997, IAP Box 11 Fld. 3; Miner in Mike Robinson (AP), "Obama Got Start in Civil Rights Practice," 20 February 2007, in Abdon M. Pallasch, "Obama's Legal Career," CST, 17 December 2007, p. 4, and in Pauline Yearwood, "Obama and the Jews," Chicago Jewish News, 12 September 2008; Obama, "Help Needed to Change Springfield," HPH, 19 February 1997, pp. 4, 9; Maudlyne Ihejirika, "City Ranks Low in a Survey on Kids' Well-Being," CST, 19 February 1997, p. 20; DJG interviews with Dave Manning, Ed Wojcicki, Cindi Canary, Ray Harris, Bill Perkins, Sharon Corrigan, Dan Burkhalter, Emil Jones Jr., Judd Miner, Chuck Barnhill, George Galland, and Paul Strauss.

30. Rebecca Riley et al., Futures Committee, to Dear Colleague, 23 January 1997, "Futures Committee Moves Forward," Looking Forward, February 1997, Futures Committee, "Healthy Communities: How Do We Know Them When We See Them?," 14 February 1997, "Kemmis, Obama Provides Food for Thought at First Futures Committee Symposium,” Looking Forward, March 1997, Andrew Mooney, “Changing the Way We Do Things: Recommendations and Findings of the Futures Committee, October 1997, all LISC Chicago Papers; Patrick Barry, “History: Our Quarter-Century Journey,” LISC 2005 Donors Report; Newton N. Minow to Jo-Ann Benini, 26 February 1997, NMP; Miller in Dan Morain, “Obama: A Fresh Face or an Old-School Tactician?,” LAT, 8 September 2007; CAC, Program Report for the Period Ending December 31, 1996, CACP; Patrick Keleher, “River of School Grants Won’t Wash Away Failure,” CST, 19 February 1997, p. 41; Raymond R. Coffey, “School Reform Pioneer Decries ‘Lost Decade,’” CST, 20 February 1997, p. 6; Coffey, “Daley, Vallas as Reform’s Best Hope,” CST, 21 February 1997, p. 6; Minutes, CAC Board of Directors Executive Committee, 24 February 1997, CACP Box 114 Fld. 770; CAC Board of Directors Minutes, 2 April 1997; Ann Bradley, “Staying in the Game,” Education Week, 30 April 1997, pp. 23ff.; Dirk Johnson, “Chicago Schools Set Standard in Insisting Students Perform,” NYT, 6 June 1997, p. A1; Shipp and Sconzert, The Chicago Annenberg Challenge: The First Three Years, pp. 25–26; DJG interviews with Marilyn Katz, Cynthia Miller, Newton Minow, Janis Robinson, and Ken Rolling.

31. Rauschenberger in Chris Bailey, “Contemplating Steve and Barack, and Oh, What Might Have Been,” CDH, 19 September 2004, p. 18; Eli Saslow, “From Outsider to Politician,” WP, 9 October 2008, p. A1; Jim Edgar’s 14 December 2010 (#26) interview with Mark DePue, p. 1087; Halvorson, Playing Ball with the Big Boys, p. 32; Dan Shomon in Philip Sherwell, “The Big Hitter,” Telegraph, 28 January 2007, Hoffmann in Rick Pearson and Ray Long, “Careful Steps, Looking Ahead,” CT, 3 May 2007; Shomon in Kevin McDermott, “In Illinois, Obama Made Waves from the Start,” SLPD, 10 December 2007; Shomon’s July 2008 interview with Jen Christensen; Ben Calhoun, “1997 Trip Sparked Obama’s Rural-Voter Courtship,” NPR, 10 August 2008 (and WBEZ, 8 August); Shomon on “Barack Obama Revealed,” CNN, 20 August 2008; “Dan Shomon—First Person,” BBC News, 26 August 2008; Shomon in Sherwell, “Revealed: Barack Obama, the Boring Speaker,” Telegraph, 26 October 2008; Remnick, The Bridge, pp. 317–18; DJG interviews with Carl Hawkinson, Frank Watson, Deno Perdiou, Jim Edgar, Walter Dudycz, Patty Schuh, Steve Rauschenberger, Debbie Halvorson, Howard Carroll, Denny Jacobs, Art Berman, Evelyn Bowles, Miguel del Valle, Chuy Garcia, Robert Molaro, Lori Joyce Cullen, Linda Hawker, Jill Rock, Mike Hoffmann, Dave Gross, Cindy Huebner Davidsmeyer, Dave Joens, Adelmo Marchiori, John Charles, Dan Shomon, and Cynthia Miller.

32. DJG interviews with Carl Hawkinson, John Cullerton, Ed Petka, Kirk Dillard, Dan Cronin, Robert Molaro, George Shadid, Greg Sullivan, Jim Collins, Boro Reljic, Mike Marrs, Gideon Baum, John Nicolay, Matt Jones, Nia Odeoti-Hassan, Dave Syverson, Christine Radogno, Kathy Parker, Debbie Lounsberry, Linda Hawker, John Bouman, William McNary, Doug Dobmeyer, Dave Stover, David Weisbaum, Dave Joens, Kurt DeWeese, and Peter Fitzgerald. See also Bethany Krajelis, “Lobbyist’s Rise to Top ‘Speaks Volumes,’” CDLB, 27 April 2010 (Nicolay), and Rick Pearson, “Kirk Dillard Reloads,” CT, 21 February 2014.

33. Emil Jones Jr. in George E. Condon Jr., “A Sense of Self,” National Journal, 22 September 2012, pp. 16–19; John Cameron in Abramsky, Inside Obama’s Brain, pp. 89–94; Shomon in John F. Harris and Glenn Thrush, “The Ego Factor: Can Obama Change?,” Politico, 5 November 2010; Ray Long, “Stanley B. Weaver, 78,” CT, 13 November 2003; Obama in Jennifer Davis, “Freshmen Ponder Spring Lessons as They Return for the Fall Session,” II, October 1997, pp. 6–7; Obama’s 2001 interview with Juliette

Richardson and his 23 October 2006 American Magazine Conference one with David Remnick; DJG interviews with Emil Jones Jr., Lori Joyce Cullen, Dave Gross, Mike Hoffmann, Adelmo Marchiori, Dan Shomon, and Craig Huffman.

34. Christi Parsons and Courtney Challos, “Ban on Abortion Procedure Wins a Senate OK,” CT, 5 March 1997; David Hein, “Abortion Bill Heads to Vote in Senate,” BP, 5 March 1997, p. A5; Heather Ryndak, “Ban on Partial-Birth Abortion Clears Panel,” CST, 5 March 1997, p. 70; Research Department, National Republican Senatorial Committee, “Barack Obama (D-IL): On the Record,” 22 July 2004, p. 10, Jack Ryan for U.S. Senate Opposition Research Files (JRORF); Senate Floor Transcript, 7 March 1997, p. 4 (Barack introducing SB 1183 regarding job training); Cathy D. Gardner, “Sen. Obama Takes Aim at Edgar’s Budget,” CD, 11 March 1997, p. 5; Senate Floor Transcript, 13 March 1997, pp. 112–23; [Debbie] Lounsberry, “Barack Obama—The Record: A Summary,” 10 May 2004, p. 40 (noting Barack’s 13 March “present” vote on SB 853, which passed 54–0), JRORF; David Heckelman, “Bill Would Direct Elder Jurors to Court Nearest Home,” CDLB, 14 March 1997, pp. 1, 18; Rickey Hendon, Black Enough/White Enough: The Obama Dilemma (Third World Press, 2009), p. 179. Illinois State Senate floor proceedings are easily available in high-quality daily transcripts at www.ilga.gov, and for the 91st General Assembly (1999–2000) onward, Senate Journals, containing the texts of amendments, conference committee reports, and motions, plus floor votes, are also available at www.ilga.gov. “The Senate does not tape its committee hearings,” although caucus staff members sometimes did so informally. See Richard C. Edwards, “Researching Legislative History,” Illinois Legislative Reference Bureau, October 2008.

35. Kirk Dillard in Sharon Cohen (AP), “Barack Obama Straddles Different Worlds,” 19 October 2007; Paul Williams in Ariel Sabar, “For Obama, Bipartisan Aims, Party-Line Votes,” CSM, 17 April 2008; Hendon on the Illinois Channel with Terry Martin, 13 January 2009; DJG interviews with Linda Hawker, Debbie Halvorson, Pat Welch, Carol Harwell, Cynthia Miller, Paul Williams, Cindi Canary, James Clayborne, Nia Odeoti-Hassan, Miguel del Valle, Chuy Garcia, Barbara Flynn Currie, Vince Williams, Ray Harris, Lou Viverito, and Terry Link.

36. Senate Floor Transcript, 19 March 1997, p. 190 (Barack stating that he erroneously voted no rather than yes on SB 1000 on 18 March); 20 March 1997, pp. 50–66 and 210 (Barack noting on the latter that earlier he erroneously voted present rather than yes on SB 700); Daniel T. Zanoza, “Senator Shows Courage,” CDH, 29 March 1997, p. I-7; “Edgar’s Budget Proposal,” CWR 13 #2, 4 April 1997; “Senator Obama’s Bills Pass Senate,” South Street Journal, 4–24 April 1997, p. 4; Nathan Gonzales, “The Ever-‘Present’ Obama,” WSJ, 14 February 2007; Sam Youngman, “Abortion Foes Target Obama Because of His Vote Record on Illinois Legislation,” The Hill, 15 February 2007; “Obama Abortion Dodges Blessed by Planned Parenthood,” ABCNews.com, 17 July 2007; Dave McKinney, “Hillary Slams Obama ‘Present’ Votes on Abortion, Gun Laws,” CST, 4 December 2007; Raymond Hernandez and Christopher Drew, “It’s Not Just ‘Ayes’ and ‘Nays,’” NYT, 20 December 2007; Richard Wolffe and Karen Springen, “The Incremental Revolutionary,” Newsweek, 21 January 2008, pp. 38ff.; David Schaper, “Examining Obama’s ‘Present’ Votes in Illinois,” All Things Considered, NPR, 23 January 2008; Peter Wallsten, “Obama Said Oops Six Times on Votes as a State Senator,” LAT, 24 January 2008 (noting 18 and 20 March 1997); Daniel C. Vock, “‘Present’ Votes Defended by Illinois Lawmakers,” Stateline.org, 25 January 2008; Eli Saslow, “From Outsider to Politician,” WP, 9 October 2008; DJG interviews with Pat Welch, Vince Williams, Mike Lieteau, and Willie Delgado.

37. Steven R. Strahler, “Chicago Observer,” CCB, 24 March 1997, p. 42; Lisa Fingeret, “Political Organization Celebrates 30 Years of Spaghetti,” HPH, 2 April 1997, p. 3; Chinta Strausberg, “Obama Says Jobs Could End Child Abuse,” CD, 8 April 1997, p. 22; Jeff Zeleny, “Hoover Trial Resonates in Many Ways,” CT, 25 March 1997; Obama, “Rethinking Approach to Juvenile Crime,” HPH, 16 April 1997, p. 4; Liza Mundy, “A Series of Fortunate Events,” WP Magazine, 12 August 2007, pp. 10ff.; E. J. Dionne Jr., “Full Faith,” TNR, 9 April 2008; Capitol Fax, 5 February 1998 (“last spring”); DJG interviews with Tom Dart, Dave Manning, Frank Clark, Mike Lieteau, Pate Philip, John Corrigan, Cindy Huebner Davidsmeyer, Linda Mills, Pam Sutherland, Christine Radogno, Cindi Canary, and Carole Travis.

38. Bob Merrifield, “Senate Job Is Up to Walsh,” CT, 12 January 1997; Merrifield, “Party Boss Looks at Senator Post,” CT, 4 April 1997; Merrifield, “Democratic Chief Named State Senator,” CT, 8 April 1997; Nancy Ryan, “Whites at Ease in Minority Role,” CT, 8 June 1997; Capitol Fax, 21 January 1998 (“most lobbying expenses must be reported to the state, which creates a written record”); Rick Pearson and Ray Long, “Careful Steps, Looking Ahead,” CT, 3 May 2007; Obama on This Week, ABC, 13 May 2007; Christopher Wills (AP), “Clues to How Obama Would Play His Hand as President Can Be Found in Poker Style,” 24 September 2007; Wills (AP), “Obama’s Complex History with Lobbyists,” 1 December 2007; James McManus, “Aces,” New Yorker, 4 February 2008; Eli Saslow, “From Outsider to Politician,” WP, 9 October 2008; Link in “Obama as We Knew Him,” Observer, 26 October 2008, pp. 4–7; Dennis Yohnka, “President Beckons Friend Walsh to Washington for Inauguration,” KDJ, 22 January 2009; John Sullivan et al., “Public Officials Found Helping Clients of Family,” NYT, 7 January 2012; DJG interviews with Larry Walsh, Mike Lieteau, Phil Lackman, Dave Manning, Terry Link, Triste Lieteau Smith, and John Bouman.

39. Rudd in Janny Scott, “In Illinois, Obama Proved Pragmatic and Shrewd,” NYT, 30 July 2007, p. A1; Link in “Obama as We Knew Him,” Observer, 26 October 2008, pp. 4–7; Saslow, “From Outsider to Politician,” WP, 9 October 2008; Link in Don Van Natta Jr., “The New First Golfer,” Golf Digest, February 2009, pp. 80ff.; David Heckelman, “Lawyer-Legislator Breathes Life into the Dreams of His Father,” CDLB, 26 April 1997, p. 9; Turow’s 2009 interview with Robert Draper; DJG interviews with Terry Link, James Clayborne, Dave Manning, John Bouman, Dan Shomon, Ed Wojcicki, Eric Adelstein, Rob Fisher, Tom Johnson, and Scott Turow.

40. Senate Floor Transcript, 30 April 1997, p. 13; Jennifer Davis, “The Missing Piece,” II, May 1997, pp. 16–19; Senate Floor Transcript, 9 May 1997, p. 35 (House Bill 1080, which becomes PA 90-0249, signed 29 July 1997); R. Bruce Dold, “Happy Ending for Keystone Kids—and the Court,” CT, 21 March 1997; House Floor Transcript, 17 April 1997, pp. 315–16; “Statehouse Glance,” AP, 10 May 1997; Research Department, NRSC, “Barack Obama (D-IL): On the Record,” 22 July 2004, JRORF, pp. 6 (Obama voted “present” on HB 1558, mandating consecutive prison sentences, in Senate Judiciary on 6 May, and did not vote when the Senate unanimously passed it on 9 May) and 10 (HB 382); Senate Floor Transcript, 9 May 1997, p. 99 (Obama as Senate sponsor of HB 1619, allowing nonresidents as administrators and guardians of estates and trusts, signed into law 17 August 1997 as PA 90-0472); Senate Floor Transcript, 13 May 1997, pp. 23–24; House Floor Transcript, 13 May 1997, p. 113; “Number of Bills Down in General Assembly,” CWR 13 #3, 14 May 1997; Janota and Allen, “Daley Gives Lawmakers a Taste of Chicago During Springfield Visit,” CDH, 18 May 1997, p. I-10; “Mayor Daley and Representative Kenner Meet in Springfield ‘Taste,.’ SSJ, 27 June–18 July 1997, p. 2; Senate Floor Transcript, 21 May 1997, pp. 24–25 (passage of SB 6 regarding sex offenders) and 67 (unanimous passage of Obama’s Senate Resolution 80, memorializing former Chicago police commander Mildred B. Stewart); John C. Patterson, “Sex Offender Law Could Face Court Challenge,” CDH, 22 May 1997, p. A6; Senate Floor Transcript, 22 May 1997, pp. 53, 61 (passage of HB 729, which was signed into law 18 August 1997 as PA 90-0495); Senate Floor Transcript, 31 May 1997, pp. 21–22 (final passage of Obama’s SB 574), 40–63 (HB 204), and 92–93 (SB 1129, the 1998 fiscal year budget, passed 49–9); Russ Stewart, “Philip Makes Sure GOP Remains ‘Anti-Tax’ Party,” Illinois Politics, June 1997, pp. 10–11; Dave McKinney, “State Welfare Reform OK’d; Proposal Won’t Protect Immigrants,” CST, 1 June 1997, p. 2; Kristi O’Connor, “Welfare Overhaul Bill Clears Both Houses,” SJ-R, 1 June 1997, p. 1; Rick Pearson and Christi Parsons, “School Funding Reform Plans Left for Dead,” CT, 1 June 1997; Parsons, “State Welfare Revamp Approved,” CT, 1 June 1997; Parsons, “State Set to Take Work-to-Welfare Step,” CT, 3 June 1997; Senate President James ‘Pate’ Philip, End of Session Report 1997 (Senate Republican Caucus, 1997), pp. 74–84, 106–9; “Spring Session Ends,” CWR 13 #4, 23 June 1997; Capitol Fax, 24 November 1997 and 23 April 1999; MacDougal, Make a Difference, pp. 17, 263–67; Dan A. Lewis et al., “Welfare Reform Effects in Illinois,” in Lawrence B. Joseph, ed., Families, Poverty, and Welfare Reform (Harris School, University of Chicago, 1999), pp. 126–29; David Glenn, “What the Data Actually Show About Welfare Reform,” Chronicle of Higher Education, 21 June 2002, pp. 14ff.; Lewis, Gaining Ground in Illinois: Welfare Reform and Person-Centered Policy Analysis (Northern Illinois University Press, 2010), esp. pp. 5, 20, 131; Gonzales, “The Ever-‘Present’ Obama,” WSJ, 14 February 2007; Remnick, The Bridge, p. 300; Jim Edgar’s 2010 interviews with Mark DePue; DJG interviews with Frank Watson, Dan Shomon, Mike Marrs, Scott Kaiser, Deno Perdiou, Howard Peters, John Bouman, Wendy Pollack, Dave Syverson, Kathy Parker, Debbie Lounsberry, and Nia Odeoti-Hassan. See also Obama’s remarks at the Saddleback Civil Forum on the Presidency, 16 August 2008, Lake Forest, California: “I always believed that welfare had to be changed. I was much more concerned . . . when President Clinton initially signed the bill that this could have disastrous results” but “it worked better than . . . a lot of people anticipated.”

41. Obama, “Legislature Squandered Opportunity,” HPH, 18 June 1997, p. 4; “Obama Disappointed with Defeat of Landmark School Funding and Electric Deregulation Plans,” South Street Journal, 27 June–18 July 1997, p. 3; Jennifer Davis, “Illinois Gears Up to Retool Its Social Welfare System,” II, July–August 1997, pp. 6–7; “Governor Signs New Laws,” Illinois Politics, July–August 1997, pp. 7–8; Senator Barack Obama [by Illinois Department of Human Services], “Federal and State Welfare Reform: How Does It Effect You,” 6pp. flyer, August 1997, TBP Box 129 Fld. 1; “Some Death Row Inmates to Get DNA Tests,” Chicago Independent Bulletin, 7 August 1997, p. 7 (regarding HB 2138, PA 90-0141, of which Obama became a chief cosponsor on 9 May 1997, the same day it unanimously passed the Senate); Dalia Dangerfield, “Obama Cites Environmental Danger,” CD, 16 August 1997, p. 1; Samuel J. Pernacciaro and Jack R. Van Der Slik, “Roll Call Voting in the 90th General Assembly,” in Joens, Kleppner et al., Almanac of Illinois Politics—1998, pp. 9–16 and 80–81; David Heckelman, “Chief Judge Lauds New Jury Commission Act,” CDLB, 18 August 1997, pp. 1, 24; “Heed Obama in Lake’s Environmental Danger,” CD, 19 August 1997, p. 11; Heckelman, “City Courts to the Rescue,” CDLB, 26 August 1997, pp. 1, 22; “Governor Edgar Signs New Laws,” Illinois Politics, September 1997, pp. 6–7;

Davis, “Freshmen Ponder Spring Lessons as They Return for the Fall Session,” II, October 1997, pp. 6–7; Obama’s 2001 interview with Julieanne Richardson; DJG interviews with Gideon Baum and Dan Shomon.

42. Friends of Barack Obama, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures, 1 January 1997–30 June 1997, 28 July 1997; Kevin Knapp, “Obama Spends Campaign Cash,” HPH, 20 August 1997, p. 3; Adam Doster, “A Thoughtful Politician,” CR, 16 February 2011; Tim Novak’s excellent “Obama and His Rezko Ties,” CST, 23 April 2007, p. 22; Novak, “Broken Promises, Broken Homes,” and “Obama: I Didn’t Know About Rezko Problems,” CST, 24 April 2007, pp. 8 and 20; Larry Bell, “Obama Kick-Back Cronyism,” Forbes.com, 25 October 2011; Garance Franke-Ruta, “The Next Generation,” American Prospect, August 2004; Obama, TAOH, p. 49; Mike Ramsey, “Backing Barack: Early Obama Supporters Find Recent Events Affirm Faith,” SJ-R, 31 December 2006; Alex MacGillis and Steve Mufson, “Coal Fuels a Debate over Obama,” WP, 24 June 2007, p. A1; MacGillis, “In Illinois, Clues to Obama’s Electability,” WP, 15 June 2008, p. A1; Shomon’s 2008 interview with Jen Christensen; Ben Calhoun, “1997 Trip Sparked Obama’s Rural-Voter Courtship,” NPR, 10 August 2008, “Dan Shomon—First Person,” BBC News, 26 August 2008; Obama in “Barack Obama Tribute” video, DNC, 28 August 2008; Shomon in Van Natta Jr., “The New First Golfer”; Remnick, The Bridge, pp. 318–19; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, p. 137; DJG interviews with Dan Shomon, Jim Rea, and John Charles.

43. Pam Belluck, “Illinois Governor Testifies in Federal Bribery Trial,” NYT, 30 July 1997; Rick Pearson and Christi Parsons, “MSI Verdict Jolts Springfield,” and Parsons, “Trial Confirms Cynic’s View of Government,” CT, 17 August 1997; Pearson and Bob Kemper, “MSI Case Puts Favor Seekers on Notice,” CT, 18 August 1997; Belluck, “Illinois Governor Surprises by Retiring from Politics,” NYT, 21 August 1997; Edward Walsh, “Illinois Republican Gov. Edgar to Retire,” WP, 21 August 1997; John Kass, “One Vacancy, Many Opportunities,” CT, 21 August 1997; Kass, “Legislature May Pluck Edgar’s Feathers,” CT, 22 August 1997; Bill Bush, “Edgar Orders Agency Gift Ban,” SJ-R, 27 August 1997, p. 1; Parsons, “Gov. Edgar Sets Limits for Gifts,” CT, 27 August 1997; Parsons, “Friends Like These,” and Charles N. Wheeler III, “Sometimes You Just Have to Kill the Alligators,” II, September 1997, pp. 24–25 and 38; United States v. Martin, 195 F. 3d 961 (7th Cir.), 1 November 1999, cert. denied, 530 U.S. 1263, 26 June 2000; David Bernstein, “Lawmakers Gone Wild,” Chicago Magazine, January 2013; “People,” II, April 1997, p. 34; Harold Henderson, “Eight Easy Pieces?,” CR, 24 July 1997; Joyce Foundation, Work in Progress, August 1997, p. 14; Mike Lawrence, proposal to the Joyce Foundation, ca. mid-August 1997, MLP and PSP; Don Thompson, “Scandals Bring Pressure for Campaign Finance Reform,” CDH, 25 September 1997, p. 1; Dave Gosnell, “Passing the Bucks,” BND, 5 October 1997; David Rheingold, “U.S. Campaign Finance Limits Stiffer Than State’s,” BND, 6 October 1997; Gosnell, “Deregulation Push Gets Utility Boost,” BND, 13 October 1997; Lawrence, “Mission Impossible,” II, September 1998, pp. 38–41; Kirk Dillard’s 9 November 2009 interview with Mark DePue, p. 47 (“Mike Lawrence was a major policy advisor to Governor Edgar”); Howard Peters’s 2009 interview with DePue, p. 95 (“Mike functioned in the administration as much more than a press secretary . . . Mike was very much involved in policy”); Mike Lawrence’s 2009 interviews with DePue, pp. 161, 183–84; DJG interviews with Jim Howard, Cindi Canary, and Mike Lawrence.

44. Nathaniel K. Wilkes, “Robeson High School Reinvents Itself for New School Year,” Chicago Weekend, 28 August 1997, p. 6; Minutes, CAC Board of Directors, 25 June 1997, Minutes, CAC Board of Directors Executive Committee, 29 July 1997, Minutes, CAC Board of Directors, 30 September 1997; Ken Rolling, "Chicago Annenberg Challenge 1997 Interim Report," 2 October 1997; "Chicago Annenberg Challenge 1998 Annual Report" (reporting that $2.7 million was awarded in both 1995 and 1996, and $19.8 million in 1997); William Ayers, Michael Klonsky, and Gabrielle H. Lyon, eds., A Simple Justice: The Challenge of Small Schools (Teachers College Press, 2000), esp. p. 189; Michael Klonsky and Susan Klonsky, Small Schools (Routledge, 2008), pp. 25–26; Michael Klonsky's 2014 interview with Mark Larson; Joyce Foundation, 1997 Annual Report, p. 42; Mark A. Smylie et al., Getting Started: A First Look at Chicago Annenberg Schools and Networks (Consortium on Chicago School Research), June 1998, pp. 15, 97; G. Alfred Hess Jr., "Community Participation or Control: From New York to Chicago," Theory into Practice 38 (Autumn 1999): 217–24; Dorothy Shipps, "The Businessman's Educator: Mayoral Takeover and Nontraditional Leadership in Chicago," in Larry Cuban and Michael Usdan, eds., Powerful Reforms with Shallow Roots (Teachers College Press, 2003), pp. 16–37, at 33 (referencing a 10 October 1997 interview with a Democratic state legislator who almost certainly was Barack, although the CCSR most unpersuasively claims it cannot locate Shipps's interviews); Minutes, CAC Board of Directors Executive Committee, 21 November 1997, Minutes, CAC Board of Directors, 10 December 1997; Obama, "Genetic Testing Could Help Save Lives," HPH, 10 September 1997, p. 4; Phyllis C. Richman, "Red Hot Red Sage," WP, 5 April 1992; "Schedule of Century Project Meetings," 22–23 September [1997], Chicago, SHP; Abramsky, Inside Obama's Brain, p. 100; Woods Fund of Chicago, 1997 Annual Report, pp. 1, 20 (a $30,000 grant to the Hope Center); Woods Fund of Chicago, 1997 Form 990-PF, Part VIII, 14 May 1998 (Obama formally became board chairman 10 December 1997); Chinta Strausberg, "Obama Wary of Probe of Gore," CD, 23 September 1997, p. 7; Brett Schaefer, "University Not Helpful, Say Local Business Leaders," HPH, 24 September 1997, p. 3; "PMNCC Welcomes Senator Obama," Chicago Independent Bulletin, 9 October 1997, p. 6; UCLS Announcements 1997–98, pp. 34–35, 37–38; UCLS Directory '97–'98, p. 20; Michael Lind, "The End of the Rainbow," Mother Jones, September–October 1997; Sniderman and Carmines, Reaching Beyond Race (Harvard University Press, 1997), pp. 15–58, esp. pp. 53–58; Richard Morin, "The Hidden Truth About Liberals and Affirmative Action," WP, 21 September 1997, p. C5; Michael Risch, Con Law III Notes, MRP; UCLS Course Evaluations, Autumn 1997; Obama, Constitutional Law III Final Examination, 13 December 1997; Obama to Students in Con Law III, "The Exam," n.d. [ca. March 1998], esp. pp. 7 and 17; Abdon M. Pallasch, "Law Students Gave Obama Big Thumbs-Up," CST, 18 December 2007, p. 7; Jason Zengerle, "Con Law," TNR, 30 July 2008, p. 7; Michael Risch in "Obama as a Constitutional Law Professor," Volokh.com, 3 May 2008; Elysia Solomon in Robin I. Mordfin, "From the Green Lounge to the White House," University of Chicago Law School Record, Spring 2009, pp. 2–9; DJG interviews with Bob Bennett, Rob and Lisa Fisher, Charles Halpern, Stephen Heintz, Peter Steffen, Michael Risch, Elysia Solomon, and Andrew Trask.

45. Adrian Butler, "Barack's British Background," Sunday Mirror, 13 January 2008; Oliver Harvey, "Obama's Brother Is in Bracknell," The Sun, 26 July 2008; Don Van Natta Jr., "The New First Golfer," Golf Digest, February 2009, pp. 80ff.; Jacobs, The Other Barack, p. 5; Auma Obama, And Then Life Happens, pp. 243–44; Sasha Abramsky, "Obama's Sister Has Big Ideas for Education," The Nation, 23 March 2011; Lorraine Forte, "Legislators Divided on 'Get Tough' Reforms," CST, 28 September 1997, p. 21; M. A. Stapleton, "Devine Backs Bill to Update Juvenile Delinquency Laws," CDLB, 30 September

1997, pp. 1, 22; Capitol Fax, 13 October 1997, p. 2; Obama, “Hot Topics for the Fall Veto Session,” HPH, 15 October 1997, p. 4; CF, 15 and 16 October 1997, Senate Floor Transcript, 16 October 1997, p. 6 (Obama introducing S. Res. 220, seeking to declare 1 November as South Shore Islamic Community Center Day, which languished in the Rules Committee); Doug Finke, “Edgar, GOP Propose Gift Restrictions,” SJ-R, 17 October 1997, p. 9; CF, 17 October 1997; “Busy Veto Session Expected,” CWR 13 #7, 20 October 1997; CF, 27, 28, 29, 30, and 31 October 1997; Davila in Kevin O’Leary, “Why Barack Loves Michelle,” Us Weekly, 30 June 2008, pp. 52–57; Christopher Andersen on The Early Show, CBS, 22 September 2009 (asserting, without any apparent support, that the Obamas “discussed adoption with some of their closest friends”); “Obama Says He’ll Run Again,” HPH, 5 November 1997, p. 3; Burns in David Maraniss, “The Roots of Two Presidents,” WP, 25 March 2012, p. A17; Kevin Knapp, “A Few Races Worth Watching in March,” HPH, 24 December 1997, pp. 1–2; CF, 3, 5, 7, 11, 13, 14, 17, 19, 21, 24, and 25 November 1997; Paul Krawzak, “Campaign Finance Reform Task Force Optimistic on Procurement Changes,” SJ-R, 5 November 1997, p. 5; Jeffrey Felshman, “Fighting Over Scraps,” CR, 7 November 1997; Obama, “Endorsing the IVI-IPO,” CR, 14 November 1997; Melita Marie Garza, “Universal Health Care Proposed,” CT, 17 November 1997; “Fall Veto Session Overview,” CWR 13 #8, 1 December 1997; Rick Pearson, “Legislators Get Message, Pass School-Fund Bill,” CT, 3 December 1997; CF, 3 and 8 December 1997; “Governor Edgar Signs New Laws,” Illinois Politics, January–February 1998, p. 13; [Debbie] Lounsberry, “Barack Obama—The Record: A Summary,” 10 May 2004, JRORF, p. 23 (Obama recorded as not voting on HB 452, the school funding measure, although per Senate Floor Transcript, 14 November 1997, p. 142, Barack supported it); Peter Wallsten, “Obama Said Oops Six Times on Votes as a State Senator,” LAT, 24 January 2008 (Barack erroneously voting yes rather than no on SB 493, per Senate Floor Transcript, 14 November 1997, p. 120); Jennifer Vanasco, “Close-Up on Juvenile Justice,” University of Chicago Chronicle, 6 November 1997; “Juvenile Justice: Predators or Children,” HPH, 12 November 1997, p. 12 and 19 November 1997, p. 5; Ayers, A Kind and Just Parent (Beacon Press, 1997), p. 82; Chinta Strausberg, “Obama: Juvenile Justice System Flawed,” CD, 3 December 1997, p. 3; “Mark My Word,” CT, 21 December 1997, p. B5; Dan Morain and Bob Drogin, “Obama and the Former Radicals,” LAT, 18 April 2008; Stanley Kurtz, “Barack Obama’s Lost Years,” Weekly Standard, 11 August 2008; Dohrn, “Seize the Little Moment: Justice for the Child—20 Years at the Children and Family Justice Center,” Northwestern Journal of Law and Social Policy 6 (Spring 2011): 334–57; DJG interviews with Scott Kaiser, Cynthia Miller, Will Burns, Bernardine Dohrn, Bill Ayers, Carole Travis, and Mona Khalidi.

46. Larry Hansen to Mike Lawrence, 21 November 1997, PSP; David Rheingold, “It’s All Legal: Campaign Fund Pays Bills, Buys Tickets, Etc.,” BND, 30 November 1997; CF, 2, 4, 5, and 12 December 1997; SIU Acceptance Form, “Making Campaign Finance Reform Happen,” 5 December 1997; Mike Lawrence to James “Pate” Philip (Attn. Carter Hendren), Emil Jones (Attn. Mike Hoffmann), Michael J. Madigan (Attn. Tim Mapes), and Lee Daniel (Attn. Mona Martin), 12 December 1996, MLP and PSP; “Rep. Kubik to Return to Newspaper Roots,” CT, 9 September 1997; CF, 23 and 31 December 1997; Obama, “Ethics Reform Comes to Springfield,” HPH, 31 December 1997, p. 4; Hansen to Lawrence, 31 December 1997, PSP; Friends of Barack Obama, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures, 1 July 1997–31 December 1997, 30 January 1998; Charity Crouse, “Fundraising Is Looking Up for Local Politicians,” HPH, 11 February 1998, p. 3; UCLS Announcements 1997–98, p. 63; UCLS Course

Evaluations, Winter 1998; Mike Lawrence, “Mission Impossible,” II, September 1998, pp. 38–41; Ed Wojcicki, “Still the Wild West?,” pp. 9–11; Jo Becker and Christopher Drew, “Pragmatic Politics, Forged on the South Side,” NYT, 11 May 2008, p. A1; DJG interviews with Mike Lawrence, Jim Howard, David Starrett, Cindy Canary, Pate Philip, Carter Hendren, Emil Jones, Mike Hoffmann, Jill Rock, Gary Hannig, Tom Dart, Andrew Trask, Indira Saladi, and Felton Newell. Rezko also contributed $457 worth of food for a 22 January 1998 party. Friends of Barack Obama, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures, 1 January 1998–30 June 1998, 27 July 1998.

47. CF, 3 December 1997; Chinta Strausberg, “Juvenile Justice Bill in Jeopardy?,” CD, 12 January 1998, pp. 1, 7; CF, 12, 13, 15, 27, 28, 29, and 30 January 1998; “Kids, Crime and the Law,” CT, 13 January 1998; David Heckelman, “Juvenile Justice Among First Topics of New Legislative Session,” CDLB, 14 January 1998, pp. 1, 18; Annie Sweeney, “Grievances Against UIC Aired,” CT, 25 January 1998; Rev. Gordon McLean, “Re-evaluate Juvenile Justice Act,” CT, 28 January 1998; Christi Parsons and Rick Pearson, “Edgar Vows a New Push on School Tax Reform,” CT, 29 January 1998; Strausberg, “Obama Backs Schmidt; Hints at Trouble for Democrats,” CD, 29 January 1998, p. 8; Senate Floor Transcript, 29 January 1998, pp. 4–5, 10–15; Ray Serati, “Bill Would Revamp Illinois Juvenile Law,” PJS, 30 January 1998; Christi Parsons, “Edgar Plan Faces Early Resistance,” CT, 30 January 1998; “Edgar Delivers Final State of the State,” CWR 13 #11, 13 February 1998; DJG interviews with Matt Jones and Gideon Baum.

48. Mike Lawrence to Paul Simon, “Campaign Finance Reform Meeting,” n.d., PSP; CF, 2, 3, 4, 11, 12, 13, 19, 20, 23, 24, 25, 26, and 27 February 1998; Senate Floor Transcript, 18 February 1998, pp. 2 (SJCA 48), 7, 19 February 1998, pp. 14, 16 (SB 1545), 21, 20 February 1998, pp. 2, 4–5, 16–17, 22; Jason Piscia, “Bigger State Income-Tax Relief Proposed,” SJ-R, 24 February 1998, p. 9; Chinta Strausberg, “Obama Unveils ‘Fair’ Tax Plan,” CD, 24 February 1998, p. 5; Obama, “Illinois Needs a Fairer Tax System,” HPH, 25 February 1998, p. 4; Jennifer Davis, “Penny Severns Remembered,” II, March 1998, p. 35; Lawrence, “Mission Impossible,” II, September 1998, pp. 39–40; Edward McClelland, “Illinois’s Pioneering Gay Legislator,” NBCChicago.com, 11 May 2013; Bernard Schoenburg, “Severns Would Be Proud of Colleagues, Former Partner Says,” SJ-R, 10 November 2013; Mutchler, Under This Beautiful Dome (Seal Press, 2014), pp. 3, 43, 149, 233; DJG interviews with Mike Lawrence, Andy Foster, Gary Hannig, Kirk Dillard, Kent Redfield, and Linda Hawker.

49. DJG interviews with Denny Jacobs, Mike Lieteau, Fred Fortier, Boro Reljic, Terry Link, Phil Lackman, Dave Manning, Larry Walsh, Cindy Huebner Davidsmeyer, and Brad Jonas; Jim Reynolds in David Smallwood, “Genesis of the Grassroots Movement,” N’Digo Profiles, December 2008, pp. 10–11, 44; Becky Yerak, “Straddling the Worlds of High Finance and Community Activism,” CT, 1 April 2013; Cheryl L. Reed, “The Used Car Lot of the Book World,” CST, 21 January 2007, p. B12. See also Jacobs in Steven Thomma, “Barack Obama, Not Your Typical Politician,” KRDC, 16 February 2007, and Julie A. Dressler, “The Establishment of Illinois Riverboat Gambling and Its Impact on Alton, Peoria and Joliet,” Senior Honors Thesis, Illinois Wesleyan University, 10 May 1994.

50. [Mike] Lawrence to Dillard, Foster, Hannig, Kubik, Obama, ca. 20 February 1998, MLP and PSP; Paul Simon to Obama, 23 February 1998, PSP; Lawrence to Dillard, Foster, Hannig, Kubik, Obama, 27 February 1998, MLP and PSP; Adriana Colindres, “New Political Web Site Right on the Money,” SJ-R (and PJS) 4 March 1998, p. 1; CF, 4, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 16, 17, 18, 19, and 24 March 1998;

Lawrence to Dillard, Foster, Hannig, Kubik, Obama, 6 March 1998, [Lawrence], “[Legislative Staff on] Elements of Tentative Consensus,” n.d., MLP; John Kass, “Latino Leader Tapped to Run the 25th Ward,” CT, 2 March 1996; Joseph N. Boyce, “Hispanic Influx Spurs Legislator to Practice Multiethnic Diplomacy,” WSJ, 7 May 1997, p. A1; Christi Parsons and Ray Long, “Star Is Rising for a 2nd Madigan,” CT, 18 March 1998; “A Message from Latino Voters,” CT, 19 March 1998; Linda Lutton, “War on Independents,” CR, 3 September 1998; Solis in Carlos Hernandez Gomez, “Population Soars but Political Power Lags,” Chicago Reporter, September 2001; Obama, “Getting the Lead Out of Our Children,” HPH, 25 March 1998, p. 4; DJG interviews with Mike Lawrence, Chuy Garcia, Will Burns, and Danny Solis.

51. Minutes, CAC Board of Directors Executive Committee, 24 February 1998, Minutes, CAC Board of Directors, 19 March 1998, p. 3; CF, 26, 27, and 30 March 1998; Lynn Sweet and Dave McKinney, “Ethics Law Reveals Too Little, Group Says,” CST, 29 March 1998, p. 4; Obama to Mr. Falk, “Saul Mendelson Website,” 3 May 1998; Carl Shier, “So Long, Saul,” New Ground 58, May–June 1998; Bill Dedman, “Study Criticizes Illinois’ Rules for Legislators,” NYT, 30 March 1998; “Governor Delivers Final Message,” CWR 14 #1, 31 March 1998; James Evans, “Study Cites ‘Anything Goes’ Ethics in Legislature,” CDH, 1 April 1998, p. 15; Senate Floor Transcript, 1 April 1998, pp. 104–5; CF, 6, 14, 16, 17, 20, 21, 22, 23, 27, and 29 April 1998; Chinta Strausberg, “Pols Rev Up for Rainy Day Funding Battle,” CD, 9 April 1998, p. 6; “Little Local Difficulties,” Economist, 11 April 1998, p. 21; James Merriner (AP), “Simon Seeks Legislative Reform,” PJS, MJG and CTC, 11 April 1998; Barack H. Obama and Michelle Robinson-Obama, 1997–1998 Tax Summary, appended to Obama and Robinson-Obama, 1998 Income Tax Return, Vicki L. Hudson and Co., 9 April 1999; Joyce Foundation, 1996 Form 990-PF, Part VIII(1), 15 May 1997, and 1997 Form 990-PF, Part VIII(1), 14 May 1998 ($11,000 in director’s fees paid to Obama each year); “Sen. Obama to Hold Town Meeting,” HPH, 15 April 1998, p. 2; Charlie Halpern to Barack O’Bama et al., “Century Project Meeting,” 24 March 1998, Halpern to “Dear Colleagues,” 10 April 1998, and “Meeting Summary, New Institute Planning Group,” 20 April 1998, SHP; Jeanette Almada, “Reverse Commute: North Kenwood/Oakland Enjoying an Influx of the Middle Class,” CT, 26 April 1998, p. RE1; Almada, “Turning the Corner,” CT, 2 May 1999, p. RE1; Jacobs in Jonathan Kaufman, “For Obama, Chicago Days Honed Tactics,” WSJ, 21 April 2008, p. A1, and in Eli Saslow, “From Outsider to Politician,” WP, 9 October 2008, p. A1; DJG interviews with Bill Peterson, Denny Jacobs, and Pat Welch.

52. Obama, “Education Most Important Town Hall Issue,” HPH, 29 April 1998, p. 4; Kate Clements, “Legislative Group in Final Stages on Campaign Finance Reform Plan,” CDH, 29 April 1998, p. 10; Ray Long, “Philip Hoping to Give Campaign Reform a Shot,” CT, 30 April 1998; CF, 30 April and 1, 5, 6, 7, and 8 May 1998; Christi Parsons, “Juvenile Reform Act Gets Edgar Backing,” CT, 25 April 1998; Senate Floor Transcript, 5 May 1998, pp. 10–15 (SB 363); Jason Piscia, “Senate Approves Edgar’s Changes to Juvenile Justice Bill,” Copley News Service, 5 May 1998; David Heckelman, “Revamped Juvenile Justice Bill Nears Passage,” CDLB, [6] May 1998, pp. 1, 22; Obama in Mary Wisniewski Holden, “The Juvenile Justice Reform Act: Walking a Fine Line,” Chicago Lawyer, June 1998, p. 1; Senate President James “Pate” Philip, End of Session Report 1998, pp. 61–63 (terming SB 363 “a major, desperately-needed step forward in revolutionizing the juvenile justice system”); “The Juvenile Justice Reform Act of 1998” and Daniel Dighton, “Balanced and Restorative Justice in Illinois,” The Compiler 18 (Winter 1999): 1, 4–5, 9–15, and 20; Daniel Dighton, “Three Years After Sweeping Reform, What’s Different in the Juvenile Justice System?,” The Compiler 21 (Spring 2002): 1–5; Christine Kraly, “Finding Justice and Peace for Illinois Youth,” Chicago Lawyer, April 2012; Zeituni Onyango, Tears of Abuse (Afrypress Publishing, 2012), pp. 120–38; “State Senator to Speak at Annual ACLU Banquet,” SJ-R, 6 May 1998, p. 32; DJG interviews with Mike Lawrence, Jim Howard, Carter Hendren, and Zeituni Onyango. See also John Nelson Walters, “The Illinois Amendatory Veto,” John Marshall Journal of Practice and Procedure 11 (1978): 415–40.

53. Ray Long, “Edgar Sees Some Merit in Tax-Relief Proposal,” CT, 9 May 1998; Senate Floor Transcript, 13 May 1998, pp. 6–19 (HB 705, PA 90-736); Tom Schafer, Meeting the Challenge: The Edgar Administration, 1991–1999 (Jim Edgar, 1998), pp. 77–79; Nia Odeoti-Hassan, “Senate Democratic Staff House Bill Analysis 91st General Assembly, HB 1732,” 27 April 1999, Berman Papers Box 4 Fld. 31; David Moberg, “Back to Its Roots: The Industrial Areas Foundation and United Power for Action and Justice,” in John P. Koval et al., eds., The New Chicago (Temple University Press, 2006), pp. 239–47, at 243–44; Paul Merrion, “One Tiny Step for Campaign Reform,” CCB, 11 May 1998, p. 4; CF, 11, 14, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 26, and 27 May 1998; Christi Parsons and Mike Cetera, “Small Tax Break Is Seen Likely,” CT, 14 May 1998; [Mike Lawrence], “Talking Points,” n.d. [ca. 14 May 1998], MLP and PSP; SIU Public Policy Institute Press Release, “Bipartisan Group Reaches Consensus on Campaign Finance Reform,” n.d. [14 May 1998], PSP; Rick Pearson, “Campaign Fund Reform Talk Wears on Officials,” and “Some Common Sense Campaign Rules,” CT, 15 May 1998; Doug Finke, “Simon: Even Chance of Ethics Reform,” SJ-R, 15 May 1998, p. 13; Don Thompson, “Skeptics Question Legislators’ Resolve for Campaign Reform,” CDH, 15 May 1998, p. 10; John C. Patterson, “Rule Changes Will Center on Lobbyists,” DH&R, 15 May 1998, p. A3; Lawrence to Carter Hendren, “Ethics Legislation,” 18 May 1998, MLP; Simon to Obama, 18 May 1998, PSP; “Illinois Lawmakers,” 20 May 1998, MBC; Bruce Dold, “Why Pols, Porches and Lucrative Campaign Chests Are a Bad Mix,” CT, 22 May 1998; Senate Floor Transcript, 22 May 1998, pp. 55–57, 79–80, 114–17 (HB 455); House Floor Transcript, 22 May 1998, pp. 124, 159–211; Ray Long and Parsons, “Pork Tops Menu for State Lawmakers,” CT, 23 May 1998; Dave McKinney, “State Senate OKs Pay Raises, Tougher Ethics Rules,” CST, 23 May 1998, p. 4; James Merriner (AP), “House GOP Trying to Block Reforms,” PJS, 23 May 1998, p. B6; Thompson, “State Lawmakers End Session That Would Have Made Perfect ‘Seinfeld’ Fodder,” CDH, 24 May 1998, p. 10; Rick Pearson, “No Crises, No Fights to Detain Legislators,” CT, 24 May 1998; “Illinois Legislature OKs Most Restrictive Ethics Bill Since Watergate,” SLPD, 24 May 1998, p. D10; John McCarron, “General Assembly Made Everyone a Winner, Sort Of,” CT, 25 May 1998; Lawrence to Cindi Canary, “Campaign Reform Legislation,” 27 May 1998, MLP; Madeleine Doubek, “Campaign Finance Reform, with Loopholes,” CDH, 28 May 1998, p. 14; Steven R. Strahler, “Chicago Observer,” CCB, 1 June 1998; CF, 3, 5, 12, and 20 June 1998; “Senator Obama Co-Sponsors Reform Bill,” CIB, 4 June 1998, p. 7; Parsons, “Ethics Bill Lets Lawmakers Squeeze Between Loopholes,” CT, 4 June 1998; Obama, “Important Lakeshore Funds Allocated,” HPH, 10 June 1998, p. 4; Steve Neal, “Reforming Elections,” CST, 15 June 1998, p. 27; “State Campaign Finance Reform,” Morning Edition, NPR, 16 June 1998; Paul Simon to Pate Philip, Emil Jones Jr., Michael J. Madigan, and Lee Daniels, 16 June 1998, PSP; Cynthia Canary and James Kales, “Voters Must Demand Clean Elections,” CT, 20 June 1998; Dennis Conrad (AP), “Campaign Trips Take Exotic Turn,” PJS, 21 June 1998, p. A1; CF, 24 June 1998; “Spring Session Ends,” CWR 14 #3, 25 June 1998; “Pate” Philip, End of Session Report 1998, pp. 87–

89; Stephen S. Morrill, "Client Report for 1998 End of Session," Morrill and Associates, June 1998, esp. p. 4; Kent D. Redfield and Paul J. Quick, "Reforming Campaign Finance in Illinois: Issues and Prospects," Institute of Government and Public Affairs, University of Illinois, July 1998, pp. 2–3, 9; "Edgar Signs New Laws," Illinois Politics 7 #5 (ca. 31 July 1998), p. 18; Jennifer Davis, "Campaign Finance Reform Is a Matter of Style Over Substance," II, July–August 1998, pp. 6–7; Dan Shomon to Thomas E. Johnson, 11 May 1998, Larry O'Brien to Courtney Nottage, 20 May 1998, Shomon to Johnson, 22 May 1998, Davis v. Handy, #98-EB-RES-003, filed 22 May 1998, Herman W. Baker Jr. "Appearance," Davis v. Handy, 1 June 1998, Chicago Board of Election Commissioners, "Findings and Decision," Davis v. Handy, 11 June 1998, and Johnson to Obama, 19 June 1998 (enclosing a requested bill for $225), TEJP; "Governor Edgar Signs New Laws," Illinois Politics, August 1998, pp. 12–13; Joyce Foundation, "Campaign Reform Roundup," Work in Progress, September 1998, p. 16; Lawrence, "Mission Impossible," II, September 1998, pp. 38–41; Lawrence, "Cooperative Approach Forges Campaign Finance Reform," Illinois Country Living, October 1998, p. 4; Simon, P.S.: The Autobiography of Paul Simon, p. 375; Joyce Foundation, 1999 Annual Report, esp. p. 68 ($547,000 to the Illinois Campaign for Political Reform); Obama's February 2000 interview with Ted McClelland; Redfield, Money Counts: How Dollars Dominate Illinois Politics and What We Can Do About It (Institute for Public Affairs, University of Illinois, 2001), pp. 5, 37–40; Shomon in Philip Sherwell, "The Big Hitter," Sunday Telegraph, 28 January 2007; Jones in Jackie Calmes, "Statehouse Yields Clues to Obama," WSJ, 23 February 2007; Lawrence in Peter Slevin, "Obama Forged Political Mettle in Illinois Capitol," WP, 9 February 2007, p. A1; Jones in Janny Scott, "In Illinois, Obama Proved Pragmatic and Shrewd," NYT, 30 July 2007, p. A1; Jones on "The Candidates: Barack Obama," MSNBC, 20 February 2008; Obama at the Saddleback Civil Forum on the Presidency, 16 August 2008, Lake Forest, CA ("I remember one of my colleagues . . . who said, 'Where do you expect us to eat, McDonald's?'); Dillard in David Nather, "Obama's Quick Rise on a Non-Traditional Career Path," CQ Weekly, 21 August 2008; Conrad and Christopher Wills (AP), "Obama's Role in Ill. Ethics Bill Was Complicated," 6 October 2008; Jones in Kelly E. Carter, "Leadership Lessons from the Top," Black Enterprise, March 2009, p. 105; Edgar's 9 September, 8 November, and 14 December 2010 interviews with Mark DePue, pp. 912–14, 981, and 1087; Lawrence in John F. Harris and Glenn Thrush, "The Ego Factor: Can Obama Change?," Politico, 5 November 2010; Shomon in George E. Condon Jr., "A Sense of Self," National Journal, 22 September 2012; DJG interviews with Dave Syverson, Nia Odeoti-Hassan, Debbie Lounsberry, John Bouman, Steve Rauschenberger, Kurt DeWeese, Mike Lawrence, Jim Howard, David Starrett, Cindi Canary, Gary Hannig, Glenn Hodas, Carter Hendren, Patty Schuh, Pate Philip, Emil Jones, Denny Jacobs, Terry Link, Larry Walsh, Donne Trotter, Pat Welch, Chuy Garcia, Howie Carroll, Debbie Halvorson, Miguel del Valle, Lou Viverito, Jim Rea, Evelyn Bowles, Mike Ragen, Mike Hoffmann, Jill Rock, Courtney Nottage, Dan Shomon, and Jim Edgar. On Currie, see Jennifer Davis, "Designated Hitter," II, September 1997, pp. 21–23. Also see Senate Floor Transcript, 13 May 1998, pp. 68–72 (HB 3063) and 96–97 (Obama on HB 3575, which passes 58–0). Research Department, National Republican Senatorial Committee, "Barack Obama (D-IL): On the Record," 22 July 2004, JRORF, p. 5, identifies Barack as voting no on HB 3063 when the Senate Judiciary Committee on 6 May approved it 7–1–1, but on the Senate floor on 13 May, when it is passed 55–1–1, Barack's committee colleague John Cullerton expressly states his opposition. On 14 May, the Senate approved HB 3129, a bill condemning the Kyoto global warming treaty, 54–3, with Barack in the majority. Senate Floor Transcript, p. 64. Ken Dilanian, “Obama Shifts Stance on Environmental Issues,” USAT, 18 July 2008, and Ben Whitford, “Coal and Clear Skies: Obama’s Balancing Act,” Plenty Magazine, 31 October 2008. On 21 May, Senate Judiciary approved 6–3 the House-amended SB 1846, which now addressed “unlawful contact with street gang members” by convicted criminals, and later that day the Senate passed it 54–3–1, with Barack voting no. See [Debbie] Lounsberry, “Barack Obama—The Record: A Summary,” 10 May 2004, p. 4, [“State Senate”], “Obama Votes—Lonely Votes, 1997–2003,” n.d., JRORF, Sam Youngman and Aaron Blake, “Obama’s Crime Votes Are Fodder for Rivals,” The Hill, 14 March 2007, p. 1.

54. Rashid Khalidi, “Israel’s Misstep,” CT, 6 March 1997; Jon Anderson, “‘Bridge of Voices’ Links Lives Divided by Ignorance,” CT, 26 September 1997; Khalidi, “The Catastrophe,” CT, 10 May 1998; Louise Cainkar, “The Arab American Action Network: Meeting Community Needs, Building on Community Strengths,” June 1998, tesa.leb.net; Teresa Puente, “Arabs Built Solid Base in Chicago, Study Says,” CT, 18 June 1998; Barack H. Obama and Michelle Robinson-Obama, 1998 Income Tax Return, Schedule A, p. 1, Vicki L. Hudson & Co., 9 April 1999; Ali Abunimah, “How Barack Obama Learned to Love Israel,” Electronic Intifada, 4 March 2007; Philip Klein, “Obama Rising,” American Spectator, July–August 2007, pp. 24–31; Peter Wallsten, “Allies of Palestinians See a Friend in Barack Obama,” LAT, 10 April 2008; Hilary Leila Krieger, “Mr. Obama’s Neighborhood,” Jerusalem Post, 23 October 2008; David A. Miller, “Meeting Minutes,” Steering Committee of the New Institute, 2 June 1998, and Stephen Heintz, “June 2” [1998] notes, SHP; National Issues Forum, “Cities and Economic Revitalization,” Brookings Institution, 8 June 1998, C-SPAN Video, 14 June 1998, at 63:00–71:30, 84:30, 96:00, 103:00, 110:00, 113:30, 122:00, 166:00, and 181:00; Minutes, CAC Board of Directors, 18 June 1998 and 16 September 1998; Barbara Rose, “School Watchdog Loses Some Bark,” CCB, 29 November 1993, p. 1; Michael Klonsky, “Business Leaders Switching Sides?,” Catalyst, February 1994, pp. 1, 4–6; Ann Bradley, “Business Group’s New Agenda Worries Reformers in Chicago,” Education Week, 16 February 1994; Rose, “Reformer to Lead School Watchdog,” CCB, 7–13 March 1994, p. 36; Northwestern News Release, “Rep. Jesse Jackson Jr. and Sen. Barack Obama Featured at Diversity Week,” 24 February 1999 (Leadership for Quality Education is among Barack’s board memberships); Obama, Illinois State Legislative Election 1998 National Political Awareness Test [Project Vote Smart], 2 July 1998; Obama, “Remarks at the White House,” 19 June 2009, Public Papers of the Presidents 2009 Vol. 1, p. 863; Obama, TAOH, p. 339; Anne E. Kornblut, “Michelle Obama’s Career Timeout,” WP, 11 May 2007, p. A1; Obama in Lisa Miller and Richard Wolffe, “I Am a Big Believer in Not Just Words, but Deeds and Works,” Newsweek, 12 July 2008; Geraldine Brooks, “Michelle Obama: Camelot 2.0?,” More, October 2008; Christopher Andersen, Barack and Michelle (William Morrow, 2009), pp. 185–86; Remnick, The Bridge, p. 302; Slevin, Michelle Obama, p. 166; Obama, “How the Presidency Made Me a Better Father,” More, July–August 2015, pp. 68–69; Zeituni Onyango, Tears of Abuse, pp. 135–38; Grant and Grant, The Moment, pp. 150–52; Scott Fornek, “‘I’ve Got a Competitive Nature,’” CST, 3 October 2004, p. 12; Michael Sneed, “Sneed,” CST, 7 July 1998, p. 4; Simon to Barack and Michelle Obama, 14 July 1998, PSP; Agenda, New Institute Steering Committee, 19–20 July 1998, Stony Point, NY; “Century Project Retreat,” 19–20 July 1998; Stephen Heintz notes, “NCF Retreat,” 19–20 July [1998], Mary Nakashian to Stephen Heintz and David Callahan, “Budget and Narrative for the New Institute,” 31 July 1998, Jennifer Paradise to Alan Morrison, and “Proposal for a New Institute,” 13 August 1998, all SHP;

“Mitsubishi Settles with Women in Sexual Harassment Lawsuit,” NYT, 29 August 1997; “Mitsubishi Settlement Said to Total $9.5 Million,” WP, 30 August 1997; Greg Burns, “Mitsubishi, EEOC Settle Suit,” CT, 11 June 1998; Kathy Bergen and Carol Kleiman, “Mitsubishi Will Pay $34 Million,” CT, 12 June 1998; Barnett v. City of Chicago, 969 F. Supp. 1359 (N. D. Ill.), 9 June 1997, vacated and remanded, 141 F.3d 699 (7th Cir.), 1 April 1998, cert. denied, 524 U.S. 954, 26 June 1998, on remand, 17 F. Supp. 2d 753 (N. D. Ill.), 7 August 1998; Scott Lynch-Giddings diary, 7 August 1998, SLGP; Andrew Martin and Abdon M. Pallasch, “Judge Favors City Remap Making 18th a Black Ward,” CT, 8 August 1998; Barnett v. City of Chicago, 122 F. Supp. 2d 915, 25 February 2000; DJG interviews with Mona Khalidi, Harry Gendler, Charles Halpern, Stephen Heintz, Sheryll Cashin, Martha Minow, Zeituni Onyango, Kevin Tyson, Kathy Stell, Judd Miner, Paul Strauss, George Galland, Laura Tilly, Steven Mange, and Scott Lynch-Giddings.

55. CF, 3 June, 15 July, 10 and 17 August 1998; Jim Edgar news release, “Governor Signs Legislation Installing Campaign Finance and Ethics Reforms,” 12 August 1998; Finke, “Edgar to Sign Ethics Reform Package,” SJ-R, 12 August 1998, p. 1; Long and Parsons, “Campaign Finance Reform Not Without Its Loopholes,” CT, 13 August 1998; Finke, “Edgar OKs Campaign, Ethics Reform, but Urges Changes,” SJ-R, 13 August 1998, p. 1; Ray Serati, “Campaign Reform Moves at Least One Step Forward,” Copley News Service, 13 August 1998; Obama, “Progress on Campaign Finance Reform,” HPH, 26 August 1998, p. 4; Kennedy Communications, “State Senator Barack Obama, Candidate for U.S. Senate: Background Report,” April 2003, Part 19, pp. 3–4, RRP; Mark Johnson, “New Kind of Mayor Is Emerging,” Richmond Times-Dispatch, 14 September 1998, p. A10; “6th Warders Discuss Local Concerns,” Chicago Independent Bulletin, 17 September 1998, p. 3; Michael Miner, “Saul Alinsky, Poster Child,” CR, 9 February 2012 (recounting Barack’s attendance at a Sunday 27 September 1998 panel discussion of a play titled The Love Song of Saul Alinsky); “Edgar Vetoes 24 Bills,” CWR 14 #6, 15 September 1998, p. 4; Simon to Obama, 29 September 1998, PSP; “Governor Edgar Signs New Laws,” Illinois Politics 7 #7, n.d. [ca. September 1998], pp. 17–18; Christi Parsons, “New Laws Are Even Tough on Lawmakers,” CT, 1 January 1999 (Jim Howard calling the campaign finance reform bill “a very, very significant step forward” that “will make a difference in how business is conducted”); DJG interviews with Mike Lawrence, Jim Edgar, Cynthia Miller, Will Burns, and Freddrenna Lyle.

56. CF, 3, 14, 21, 26, and 31 August, 4, 8, 15, 16, 18, and 29 September, 2, 6, 8, 9, 14 October 1998; Matt O’Connor and Ray Long, “U.S. Says Ryan Fund Got Money in License Scam,” CT, 7 October 1998; Cornelia Grumman and Ted Gregory, “Ryan Setting Himself Apart from Scandal,” CT, 8 October 1998; Gail Mansfield, “Congressman Jackson Impresses Crowd at Bow Tie Event,” DL21C Report, January 1999, pp. 1–2; “Member Profile: Activism, Law Mesh for John Corrigan,” DL21C Report, Summer 1999, p. 2; UCLS Announcements 1998–99, pp. 36–37, 58; UCLS Directory ’98–’99, esp. p. 18; UCLS Course Evaluations, Autumn 1998; Obama, Constitutional Law III Final Examination, December 1998; DJG interviews with Glenn Poshard, John Corrigan, Jesse Ruiz, Laura Mullens Nolen, Jay Hines-Shah, Nat Piggee, Dan Sokol, Triste Lieteau Smith, John Eason, Will Burns, Dan Shomon, and Mike Hoffmann.

57. Outlines/Blacklines Candidate Questionnaire ’98, 9 October 1998, in Baim, Obama and the Gays, p. 191; “Endorsements for the Illinois Senate,” CT, 12 October 1998; Minow in Lauren A. E. Schuker, “Obama Stars at Convention,” HC, 30 July 2004, in Carrie Budoff Brown, “Obama: The Journey of a Confident Man,” Politico, 28 August 2008, and in Seth Stern, “A Commander in Chief,” Harvard Law

Bulletin, Fall 2008; Jodi Kantor, "For a New Political Age, a Self-Made Man," NYT, 28 August 2008; James T. Kloppenberg, Reading Obama (Princeton University Press, 2011), p. 74; CF, 16, 19, 20, and 22 October 1998; Citizens for Lightford, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures, 1 July 1998–31 December 1998, 1 February 1999, p. 4; Lightford in Ron Fournier (AP), "Obama's Life and Record in Springfield, Ill., Hint at the President He Would Be," 17 June 2007, in Eli Saslow, "From Outsider to Politician," WP, 9 October 2008, p. A1, and in Remnick, The Bridge, p. 302; Lightford's 2000 interview with Adele Hodge; Friends of Barack Obama, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures, 1 July 1998–31 December 1998, 28 January 1999; Obama, "Public Policy in the 21st Century," Loyola University of Chicago, 19 October 1998; Doug Dobmeyer and Asma Ali, "Research Conference Links Universities and Community Efforts in Chicago," PRAGmatics 2 #1 (Winter 1999), p. 8; "Edgar's Last Veto Session," CWR 14 #8, 21 October 1998; DJG interviews with Martha Minow, Ira Silverstein, Lisa Madigan, Kim Lightford, and Doug Dobmeyer.

58. Obama to Julia Stasch and to Sondra C. Ford, 28 October 1998; Tim Novak, "Obama's Letters for Rezko," CST, 13 June 2007, p. 8; Mike Robinson (AP), "Obama's Relationship with Alleged Fixer," 22 January 2008; "Complete Transcript of the Sun-Times Interview with Barack Obama," SunTimes.com, 14 March 2008; "State Senate Picks," CST, 29 October 1998, p. 29; CF, 29 October, 3, 4, 5, 6, 9, 12, 13, 18, 19, and 20 November, 1, 2, 4, 7, 9, 11, 14, 18, 21, 23, 24, and 30 December 1998, 19 and 27 January 1999; Michael Sneed, "Sneed," CST, 3 November 1998, p. 4; Brett Schaeffer, "Elections Expected to Yield Few Surprises," HPH, 4 November 1998, p. 3; "Illinois Senate," and Steve Kloehn, "Care Amendment Has Way to Go," CT, 5 November 1998; Jennifer Paradise, "Steering Committee Notes," 9 November 1998, SHP; "Local Incumbents Re-Elected in Landslide," HPH, 11 November 1998, p. 2; Bernard Schoenburg, SJ-R, 12 November 1998, p. 7; "Incumbency Important in '98 Elections," CWR 14 #9, 3 December 1998; Obama, "Inside Illinois Government," UIS TV, 3 December 1998; Minutes, CAC Board of Directors Meeting, 10 December 1998; Scott Lynch-Giddings diary, 11 December 1998; Stephen S. Morrill, "Client Report for 1998 Veto Session," Morrill and Associates, December 1998; "Veto Session Provides Sparks, No Fire," CWR 14 #10, 18 December 1998, p. 2; Steve Neal, "Black Candidates Flex More Political Muscle," CST, 23 December 1998, p. 9; Mark Brown, "New Kid on the Block," II, April 1999, pp. 14–20 (Dan Hynes); Redfield, Money Counts, p. 77; Ron Jacobs, Obamaland (Trade Publishing, 2008), p. 122; "Native Moberlyan Served in Senate with Obama," Moberly Monitor-Index, 24 October 2008; Halvorson, Playing Ball with the Big Boys, p. 32; DJG interviews with Terry Link, Debbie Halvorson, Pat Welch, John Charles, Dan Shomon, Dave Joens, and Scott Lynch-Giddings.

59. UCLS Announcements 1998–99, p. 67; UCLS Course Evaluations, Winter 1999 (showing a 9.7 mark for Barack from a total of ten respondents); CF, 28 December 1998, 12 and 14 January, 3, 4 February 1999; Tim Novak, "Pols' Museum Perk May Violate State's Gift Ban," CST, 11 January 1999, p. 10; Christi Parsons and Rick Pearson, "Museums Rethinking Political Free Passes," CT, 12 January 1999; Senate Floor Transcript, 13 January 1999, pp. 3, 5, 16; "Sens. Jones, Obama Vow to Continue Fairness Fight," CD, 14 January 1999, p. 3; "In the Law Schools," CDLB, 18 January 1999, p. 3; "New Governor, Executive Officers Sworn In," CWR 14 #11, 4 February 1999; "A Story of Race," Jodi Solomon Speakers Bureau, Boston, n.d.; Kennedy Communications, "State Senator Barack Obama, Candidate for the U.S. Senate: Background Report," April 2003, RRP; Obama, "Politics, Race and the Common Good," Carleton College, Northfield, MN, 5 February 1999; Shuchi Anand, "Speaker Ushers in Black History Month,” Carletonian, 12 February 1999, pp. 1, 3; Obama, TAOH, p. 340; Schoenburg’s 2009 interview with Mark DePue, p. 89; Jim Edgar’s 28 May 2010 interview with DePue, pp. 676–78; Halvorson, Playing Ball with the Big Boys, p. 45; DJG interviews with Heather Sullivan, Laura Mullens Nolen, Dan Shomon, Lisa Madigan, Ira Silverstein, Dave Sullivan, and Bob Bennett.

60. CF, 8, 11, 12, 16, 18, 24, 25, 26 February 1999; “Richard Daley for Mayor,” CT, 7 February 1999; Rick Pearson, “Rush Can’t Make Dent in Daley’s Huge Lead,” CT, 14 February 1999; James Hill and Cornelia Grumman, “Rush Fires Up Backers as Daley Plays It Cool,” CT, 14 February 1999; Flynn McRoberts and Laurie Cohen, “Challenger Sees Self as Man of the People,” CT, 16 February 1999; JCAR Minutes, 17 February 1999; Pearson, “Daley Triumphs in Landslide,” CT, 24 February 1999; Hill, “Rush Sees Gains, but Few Agree,” CT, 25 February 1999; “Committee Assignments,” CWR 14 #12, 26 February 1999; E. J. Dionne, “A Mayoral Confession,” WP, 26 February 1999, p. A27; R. Bruce Dold, “Politics of Race Almost Ignored,” CT, 26 February 1999; Adam Cohen, “The Frame Game,” Time, 21 March 1999; Steve Mills, “What Killed Illinois’ Death Penalty,” CT, 10 March 2011; Rush’s 1988 interview with Blackside’s Terry Rockefeller, his 2000 and 2001 ones with Julieanna Richardson, and his 2005 one with Julian Bond; Dirk Johnson, “A Politician’s Life, from Militant to Mainstream,” NYT, 3 June 1990; Don Wycliff, “Soul Survivor,” CT Magazine, 16 November 2003; Jennifer Yachnin, “Lawsuits, Debts Plague Rep. Bobby Rush,” Roll Call, 1 March 2011; Katherine Skiba, “Numerous Battles Haven’t Slowed Rep. Bobby Rush,” CT, 19 September 2011; DJG interviews with Claire Eberle, Jim Rea, and Brad Burzynski.

61. Senate Floor Transcripts, 2 February 1999, p. 5 (introducing SB 166, his EITC bill), 17 February 1999, p. 8, 24 February 1999, pp. 8–9, 16–18, 29, 25 February 1999, pp. 20, 23, 32, 26 February 1999, p. 25; Northwestern News Release, “Rep. Jesse Jackson Jr. and Sen. Barack Obama Featured at Diversity Week,” 24 February 1999; “NU Launches Diversity Week,” CDLB, 26 February 1999, pp. 3, 20; CF, 3, 4, 5, 9, 10, 11, and 12 March 1999; Ray Long and Michelle Brutlag, “State Legislator Talks as Witnesses and Bills Wait,” CT, 4 March 1999; Kurt Erickson, “DUI: Debating Under the Influence?,” BP, 4 March 1999, p. A3; George Pawlaczyk (AP), “Meeting in Secrecy, Illinois Agency Gives Tax Dollars for Executive Perks,” BND, 8 March 1999; Senate Floor Transcript, 11 March 1999, pp. 63–64 (58–0–0 Senate passage of Barack’s entirely technical SB 565, with 117–0–0 House passage on 5 May and signed into law 29 July 1999 as PA 91-354) and 74 (Obama correcting his vote on SB 485 from no to yes); R. Eden Martin, “Memo to File Re: Barack Obama,” 12 March 1999, REMP; Andy Davis, “Influential Civic Group Picks New Leadership,” CT, 23 June 1999; PR Newswire, “Second Harvest Announces New President and CEO,” 18 December 1999; Joyce Foundation, 1998 Annual Report, esp. pp. 2–3; Joyce Foundation, Work in Progress, January 1999; Jeff Borden, “In New Role, Leff Out to Reap Gains for Second Harvest,” CCB, 25 January 1999; James Janega, “New Leader to Take Over Joyce Foundation Control,” CT, 28 April 1999; Joyce Foundation, Work in Progress, May 1999, p. 22; Jennifer Cassell, “Joyce Foundation’s New Chief to Focus on Jobs, Environment,” CST, 11 June 1999, p. 20; DJG interviews with Joe Seliga, Eden Martin, Dan Rabinovitz, Rob and Lisa Fisher, and Thom Thacker. See also David Freddoso, The Case Against Barack Obama (Regnery, 2008), pp. 169–71, reporting Republican state senator Patrick O’Malley’s recollection that on 25 February 1999 Barack in the Judiciary Committee initially voted present on O’Malley’s Senate Resolution 26, opposing U.S. participation in the International Criminal Court, before switching to yes, and then not voting when the Senate on 3 March passed it 55–1–1. Senate Floor Transcript, 3 March 1999, pp. 11–12.

62. Joe Mahr, “Criminal Code Due for a Cleanup,” SJ-R, 14 March 1999, p. 1 (and PJS, 15 March and ECN, 29 March); Ron Eckstein, “Rush Refocuses on Congress, Working with Daley,” CT, 14 March 1999; CF, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 29 March 1999; JCAR Minutes, 16 March 1999; Senate Floor Transcript, 16 March 1999, p. 29 (Obama introducing Senate Joint Resolution 24 to name I-57 from Cairo to Chicago the Thurgood Marshall Memorial Freeway); “From Welfare to Work,” Chicago Independent Bulletin, 18 March 1999, p. 15; Cornelia Grumman and Rick Pearson, “Ryan Agonized, but Confident He ‘Did the Right Thing,’” CT, 18 March 1999; Senate Floor Transcript, 18 March 1999, pp. 3, 127–32; Minutes, CAC Board of Directors, 18 March 1999; “Kreiter & Tejada,” CDH, 20 March 1999, p. I-8; Senate Floor Transcript, 23 March 1999, pp. 43–44 (SB 1055) and 273–78 (SB 929); Senate Floor Transcript, 24 March 1999, pp. 64–65 (passage of Obama’s SB 561 59–0–0) and 73–74 (passage of Obama’s SB 680 56–0–0); Senate Floor Transcript, 25 March 1999, pp. 8–12 (SB 11) and 210–11 (SB 759); CF, 4 and 5 December 2000 (reprinting Ryan’s 30 November 2000 remarks at Northwestern Law School); Bruce Shapiro, “A Talk with Governor George Ryan,” Nation, 8–15 January 2001, p. 17; Maurice Possley and John Chase, “Cruz, 2 Others Pardoned,” CT, 20 December 2002; Ryan, “The Role of the Executive in Administering the Death Penalty,” 2003 University of Illinois Law Review 1077–86; DJG interviews with Mark Warnsing, Ed Petka, and James Clayborne. On Bill Shaw and his twin brother Bob, see Ben Joravsku, “By Any Means Necessary,” CR, 31 October 2002, and Gregory Tejada, “Shaws Used Local Government to Build Allies,” Chicago Argus, 28 November 2008.

63. Jennifer Loven (AP), “Born to Privilege, Steeped in Caution, Fitzgerald Takes His Place in the Senate,” 27 March 1999; Obama, “Keep Church and State Separate,” HPH, 7 April 1999, p. 4; Cornelia Grumman, “State Taxes Block Road Off Welfare,” CT, 10 April 1999; John McCarron, “Welfare State: Illinois Ranks at Top in Soaking the Poor,” CT, 12 April 1999; Stephen Heintz, “Steering Committee” Notes, 13 April 1999, SHP; Cindy Richards, “South Side Has Many Aldermanic Choices,” CT, 11 February 1999; Andrew Martin and Monica Davey, “Murphy Top Aldermanic Surprise,” CT, 24 February 1999; Curtis Lawrence, “Independence Is Hot Issue in 5th Ward Race,” CST, 25 March 1999, p. 32; Steve Neal, “Independence Is at Issue in 5th Ward,” CST, 29 March 1999, p. 8; Megan O’Matz and Monica Davey, “5th Ward Race Paved with Questions,” CT, 8 April 1999; Scott Fornek and John Carpenter, “Daley Doesn’t Take the 5th,” CST, 14 April 1999, p. 37; Gary Washburn and Melita Marie Garza, “Daley Double Blow,” CT, 14 April 1999; Brett Schaeffer, “Hairston Upsets Holt to Win Tight Fifth Ward Race,” HPH, 14 April 1999, pp. 1–2; Scott Fornek, “5th Ward Reasserts Its Identity,” CST, 16 April 1999, p. 6; Schaeffer, “Polls Show Win Was a Ward-Wide Effort,” HPH, 21 April 1999, p. 1; Keith Kelleher and Madeline Talbott, “The People Shall Rule,” NHI Shelterforce #114, November–December 2000; Atlas, Seeds of Change, pp. 110–11; Barack H. Obama and Michelle Robinson-Obama, 1998 Income Tax Return, Vicki L. Hudson & Co., 9 April 1999; Kennedy Communications, “State Senator Barack Obama, Candidate for the U.S. Senate: Background Report,” April 2003, RRP; Senate Floor Transcript, 3 November 1995, pp. 28–30 (HB 1498), Illinois Governmental Ethics Act, 5 ILCS 420 Section 2-110, PA 89-405, 8 November 1995; Barack in Lynn Norment, “The Hottest Couple in America,” Ebony, February 2007, pp. 52ff.; DJG interviews with Madeline Talbott, Keith Kelleher, Barbara Holt, Leslie Hairston, Jim Reed, and Laura Washington.

64. Status of SB 1055, 91st General Assembly (House Financial Institutions Committee Hearing, 15

April 1999); CF, 10 March, 15 April and 4, 5, 6, 7 May 1999; JCAR Minutes, 20 April 1999; “Domestic Battery,” Copley News Service, 20 April 1999 (and SJ-R, 21 April 1999); Caitlin Devitt, “Parents Say School Bill Hits LSCs Too Hard,” HPH, 28 April 1999, p. 3; Joe Mahr, “Bill Would Allow Victims of Sex Crimes to Have Criminal Case Files Sealed,” SJ-R, 28 April 1999, p. 38; “State Sen. Obama Gets Top Post, Seeks Funds for Freeways,” South Street Journal, 29 April–12 May 1999, p. 4; “Session Clears Half Way Point,” CWR 15 #2, 4 May 1999; Ray Long and Christi Parsons, “Ryan Puts $12 Billion Works Bill on Table,” CT, 5 May 1999; Ryan in James L. Merriner, The Man Who Emptied Death Row (Southern Illinois University Press, 2008), p. 97; Senate Floor Transcript, 6 May 1999, pp. 108–9, 122 (HB 2256, amendatorily vetoed on 2 August 1999); House Floor Transcript, 6 May 1999, pp. 58, 103–7 (114–0–0 passage of SB 1055); Erika Slife, “Margaret Smith, 82, Longtime State Senator a Health Care Advocate,” CT, 17 May 2005; Kurt Erickson, “Poker Buddies: Obama’s Decision Was in the Cards,” QCT, 17 October 2006 (and BP, 24 October 2006, p. A3); Terry McDermott, “What Is It About Obama?,” LAT, 24 December 2006; Peter Slevin, “Obama Forged Political Mettle in Illinois Capitol,” WP, 9 February 2007, p. A1; Michael Scherer and Michael Weisskopf, “Candidates’ Vices: Craps and Poker,” Time, 2 July 2008; “Obama as We Knew Him,” Observer, 26 October 2008; DJG interviews with Laura Mullens Nolen, Dan Shomon, Terry Link, Larry Walsh, Denny Jacobs, Mike Lieteau, Phil Lackman, Dave Manning, Tommy Walsh, Dave Luechtefeld, Boro Reljic, and Lou Viverito.

65. Dave McKinney and Fran Spielman, “Ryan Backs Lobbyists on His Ethics Panel,” CST, 7 May 1999, p. 8; CF, 10, 11, 12, and 13 May 1999; Obama, “The Effects of Gov. Ryan’s Plan,” HPH, 12 May 1999, p. 4; Senate Floor Transcript, 7 May 1999, pp. 30–32 (passage of HB 41 by 52–3–3, with Barack, John Cullerton, and Lisa Madigan voting present) and 55–63 (HB 448 passes 33–16–6); Michelle Brutlag, “Senator’s Jab at Referees Is Outvoted by Colleagues,” CT, 8 May 1999; Dave McKinney and Matt Adrian, “Foul Called on Philip for Quip on ‘Popping’ Referees,” CST, 8 May 1999, p. 9; Aaron Chambers, “Measure to Widen Hearsay Evidence Heads to Ryan,” CDLB [8] May 1999, pp. 1, 24; Bob Greene, “What Would You Call a Person Who Thinks Like This?,” CT, 12 May 1999; “Poor Sportsmanship,” CDH, 14 May 1999, p. 12; DJG interviews with Pate Philip and Dave Sullivan.

66. Senate Floor Transcript, 11 May 1999, pp. 17 (Senate passage of HB 854 regarding the sealing of trial records, which the Judiciary Committee had approved 7–0–3 on 28 April, by 58–0–1 with Barack voting present), 26–34 (defeat of HB 1061 by 23–36, with Barack voting no), and 104–16 (passage of HB 2204); Senate Floor Transcript, 12 May 1999, pp. 30–31 (passage of HB 402, lowering the sales tax on car leases, by 57–1 with Barack the sole no); Senate Floor Transcript, 13 May 1999, pp. 54–65 (passage of HB 1232), 102–8 (passage of HB 1812 by 38–18–3, with Barack voting no), and pp. 179–81 (reconsideration of HB 1961 by 34–23, with Barack not voting, and then passage by 31–26); Research Department, NRSC, “Barack Obama (D-IL): On the Record,” 22 July 2004, p. 2, JRORF; Senate Floor Transcript, 14 May 1999, pp. 38–55 (passage by 33–26 of HB 152 with Barack voting no) and 120–28 (passage by 56–2 of HB 2320); Ray Long and Michelle Brutlag, “Wirtz Liquor Business Gets Senate Boost,” CT, 15 May 1999; “How They Voted on Liquor Licensing and Soft Drink Distribution Bills,” Illinois Politics Vol. 8 #3 [2 August 1999], pp. 6–7; Redfield, Money Counts, pp. 125–31; JCAR Minutes, 18 May 1999; CF, 19 and 24 May 1999; Obama on Illinois Lawmakers with Bruce DuMont, 19 May 1999, MBC; Rick Pearson and Long, “Bargaining Begins as Lawmakers Deliver Pork Wish Lists to Ryan,” CT, 20 May 1999; Senate Floor Transcript, 20 May 1999, pp. 22–39 (SR 115); “Affirmative Action,” CDH, 21 May 1999, p. 9; Jeffrey K. Finley, “Senators Debate Minority Information Resolution,” DH&R, 21 May 1999, p. A3; Long and Pearson, “Black Legislators Play Trump to Block Rosemont Casino,” CT, 21 May 1999; Long and Pearson, “Ryan’s Building Plan Wins Funding,” CT, 22 May 1999. On Walter Dudycz, see Bryan Miller, “Mr. Dudycz Goes for Washington,” CR, 18 October 1990.

67. Senate Floor Transcript, 24 May 1999, pp. 16–62 (SB 1017 fails verification 29–29); Rick Pearson and Ray Long, “Tie Vote Sinks Gambling Bill,” CT, 25 May 1999; Chinta Strausberg, “Black Senators Blast Casino Bill,” CD, 25 May 1999, pp. 1, 6; CF, 25, 26, 27, and 28 May and 23 June 1999; Senate Floor Transcript, 25 May 1999, pp. 6–10 (SB 1017 passes 31–27); Pearson and Long, “Reversal of Fortune,” CT, 26 May 1999; Dean Olsen, “Senate OKs Gambling Expansion,” ECN, 26 May 1999; Senate Floor Transcript, 27 May 1999, pp. 73–80 (passage of SB 652 by 56–2); Alexander Russo, “Chicago School Days,” Slate, 2 April 2008; Jennifer Davis, “Is Welfare-to-Work Working?,” II, September 1999, pp. 25–28; Senate President James ‘Pate’ Philip, End of Session Report 1999, esp. pp. 53–72, 85–90; Stephen S. Morrill, “Client Report for 1999 End of Session,” Morrill and Associates, June 1999; “Session Puts Illinois FIRST,” CWR 15 #3, 18 June 1999, and 15 #7, 10 November 1999; Emil Jones in CF, 6 August 1999; Strausberg, “Obama: Illinois Black Caucus Is Broken,” CD, 1 June 1999, pp. 1, 8; “Black Caucus Divides on Private Interest Legislation,” Illinois Politics Vol. 8 #3 [2 August 1999], p. 6; David Welna, “Growing Concerns Regarding Campaign Contributions to Political Candidates from Gambling Industries,” All Things Considered, NPR, 23 June 1999; Lightford in Kevin McDermott, “Beyond Black,” II, February 2006, and in Niall Stanage, Redemption Song (Liberties Press, 2009), p. 28; Hendon, Black Enough/White Enough, p. 11; DJG interviews with Larry Walsh, James Clayborne, Kim Lightford, George Shadid, Robert Molaro, and Larry Suffredin.

68. Hendon, White Enough/Black Enough, pp. 11–12; Saguaro Seminars Schedule; Obama and Barbara Flynn Currie, “State Allocates Drive Funding,” HPH, 16 June 1999, p. 4; Pat Ford to CAC Board of Directors, “Breakthrough Schools,” June 1999; Minutes, CAC Board of Directors, 17 June 1999; Mark A. Smylie and Stacy A. Wenzel et al., The Chicago Annenberg Challenge: Successes, Failures, and Lesson for the Future (Consortium on Chicago School Research, August 2003), pp. 114, 136–37; JCAR Minutes, 22 June 1999; “Chronology,” n.d. [1999], [David Callahan], “Concept Paper,” The Network for American Renewal, June 1999, Agenda, First Meeting of the Board of Trustees, Network for American Renewal, 29–30 June 1999, all SHP; David A. Miller, Minutes, Network for American Renewal Board of Trustees, 29–30 June 1999, Demos Papers; Stephen Heintz notes, Network for American Renewal First Board of Trustees Meeting, 29–30 June 1999, SHP; DJG interviews with Larry Walsh, Dave Manning, Tom Dart, Barbara Flynn Currie, John Belcaster, Whit Soule, Paul Strauss, Scott Turow, Ed Wojcicki, Dan Shomon, Will Burns, Steve Rauschenberger, Ed Petka, Pate Philip, Paul Williams, Donne Trotter, Charles Halpern, Stephen Heintz, and David Callahan.

69. Obama for Congress 2000, FEC Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 July 1999–31 December 1999, 31 January 2000, p. 59; Greg Downs, “Campaign Dollars Flow Through 4th and 5th Wards,” HPH, 11 August 1999, pp. 1–2; “Successful ‘Second Thursday’ Season Wraps Up,” DL21C Report, Fall 1999, p. 3; Janny Scott, “In 2000, a Streetwise Veteran Schooled a Bold Young Obama,” NYT, 9 September 2007, p. A1; Minow in Tim Harper, “Civil Rights Elders Aided Obama’s Political Rise,” Toronto Star, 18 August 2008, p. A1; Mikva on PBS NewsHour, 25 September 2008; Rosemary Ellis, “A Conversation with Michelle Obama,” Good Housekeeping, November 2008; Sher in Jodi Kantor, “The Obamas’ Marriage,” NYT Magazine, 1 November 2009; Schmidt in Remnick, The Bridge, p. 314; Travis in Flynn McRoberts, “Chicago’s Black Political Movement: What Happened?,” CT Magazine, 4 July 1999, pp. 11ff.; Deborah Bayliss, “Hyde Park’s Own Renaissance Man,” HPH, 7 July 1999, p. 8; Friends of Barack Obama, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures, 1 January 1999–30 June 1999, 2 August 1999; Cheryl Ross, “Hales Angel,” CR, 30 October 1997; Steve Kloehn, “Love Binds Grad and ‘Dad,’” CT, 1 June 1998; “A Model for Making a Difference,” CT, 2 June 1998; Reynolds in David Smallwood, “Genesis of the Grassroots Movement,” N’Digo Profiles, December 2008, pp. 10–11, 44; Robinson, A Game of Character, p. 159; DJG interviews with Dan Shomon, John Charles, Adelmo Marchiori, Jeff Stauter, Carol Harwell, Terry Link, Denny Jacobs, Mike Lieteau, John Schmidt, Matt Piers, Newton Minow, Sokoni Karanja, Paul Williams, Tim Wright, Bernard Loyd, Tim Black, Freddrenna Lyle, Tom Dart, Toni Preckwinkle, Leslie Hairston, Tim King, Judy Byrd, Emil Jones, Donne Trotter, Vince Williams, Madeline Talbott, Keith Kelleher, Ab Mikva, John Kelly, and Chuy Garcia.

70. Illinois State Senate Democratic Caucus, Department of Commerce and Community Affairs Project Authorization Forms, 5 August 1999, pp. 14–20, per SB 630, Illinois Department of Commerce & Economic Opportunity FOIA Release; Steven R. Strahler, “Rev. Jackson’s New Pulpit Is LaSalle St.,” CCB, 13 July 1998; Eric L. Smith, “How Jesse Jackson’s Focus on the Financial Markets Could Make a Difference,” Black Enterprise, October 1998, pp. 111ff.; Kevin Knapp, “Connecting Biz with Black Community,” CCB, 13 March 1999; James Hill and Rick Pearson, “Jackson Sets Sights Close to Heart, Home,” CT, 25 March 1999; Strahler, “Exchanges Give Jesse a Risky Cold Shoulder,” CCB, 31 May 1999; Julie Johnson, “Another Social Agenda for LaSalle Street,” CCB, 13 September 1999; Pam Belluck, “Jackson Says He Fathered Child in Affair with Aide,” NYT, 19 January 2001; Belluck, “Questioned About Finances, Jackson Will Amend Taxes,” NYT, 8 March 2001; Sabrina L. Miller, “Jackson Faces Suit for Child Support,” CT, 29 April 2001; Monica Davey, “Jackson Education Fund Amends Disclosure Forms,” CT, 29 April 2001; Davey, “Jackson Donor List Has Errors,” CT, 1 May 2001; Strahler, “Detour Ahead for Rev. Jackson’s Diversity Push on LaSalle Street,” CCB, 15 October 2001; Ray Gibson, “Obama Has Long Backed Faith Charities,” CT, 12 July 2008; Greg Downs, “Challengers Lining Up to Take On Rep. Rush,” HPH, 14 July 1999, p. 3; “State Senator Trotter to Challenge Rush,” South Street Journal, 15–28 July 1999, p. 2; JCAR Minutes, 20 July 1999; Friends of Barack Obama, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures, 1 July 1999–31 December 1999, 31 January 2000; Obama for Congress 2000, FEC Candidate Summary Report, 31 December 2000; Obama, “Statement of Candidacy,” 28 July 1999 (received by FEC 4 August 1999); Lionel E. Bolin, “Statement of Organization,” Obama for Congress 2000, 28 July 1999; AP, “Great for the State,” CDH, 30 July 1999, p. I-9; Pearson, “2 May Challenge Rush for Congressional Seat,” CT, 1 August 1999; Steve Neal, “Obama Set to Take on Rush,” CST, 1 August 1999, p. 9; “News: The City,” CDH, 1 August 1999, p. 9; Chinta Strausberg, “Obama Set to Take on Rush for Congress,” CD, 5 August 1999, p. 6; Greg Downs, “Sen. Obama Files Candidacy,” and Mitchell A. Pravatiner, “Area Politicians Should Remain in Their Seats,” HPH, 11 August 1999, pp. 1, 5; Lynn Sweet, “Rush May Face Tough 2000 Bid,” CST, 12 August 1999, p. 35; “Bud Billiken’s 70th Year,” CD, 14 August 1999, p. 1; Olivia Ridgell, “Drill Team and Drum Corps Competitions Created Excitement,” and “And a Good Time Was Had by All,” CD, 16 August 1999, pp. 5, 11; John Mercurio and Rachel Van Dongen, “Safe Seats? At Least 14 House Members Face Serious Intraparty Foes,” Roll Call, 16 August 1999; Neal, “Rush’s Record an Asset in 2000 Re-Election Fight,”

CST, 16 August 1999, p. 8; JCAR Minutes, 17 August 1999; Kindle in Jo Becker and Christopher Drew, "Pragmatic Politics, Forged on the South Side," NYT, 11 May 2008, p. A1, and in Remnick, The Bridge, pp. 319–20; Simon to Obama, 18 August 1999, PSP; Neal, "Trotter Getting Ready to Make a Run at Rush," CST, 23 August 1999, p. 8; Buvan Nathan, "Looking at Politics," Chicago Independent Bulletin, 26 August 1999, p. 2; Neal, "New African-American Leaders Are Emerging," CST, 1 September 1999, p. 8; DJG interviews with David Wilhelm, Lionel Bolin, Janis Robinson, Craig Huffman, Al Kindle, Dan Shomon, Will Burns, Toni Preckwinkle, Barbara Flynn Currie, and Roland Burris.

71. Friends of Barack Obama, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures, 1 July 1999–31 December 1999, 31 January 2000; Obama for Congress 2000, FEC Candidate Summary Report, 31 December 2000; Obama, "Customers Need Better Protection," HPH, 1 September 1999, p. 4; "Democratic Senators Propose Legislation to Increase Protections for Utility Customers," Chicago Citizen, 2 September 1999, p. 18; Harriet Trop notes (dinner with the Obamas and the Miners, 5 September 1999); Obama, "Reimbursing Customers for Blackouts," CT, 7 September 1999, p. 14; Obama, "ComEd: A Senator's Solution," CD, 9 September 1999, p. 9; Chinta Strausberg, "Pols Seek Override on Vetoed Child Support," CD, 14 September 1999, pp. 1, 6; JCAR Minutes, 14 September 1999; Greg Downs, "StreetWise Exec May Bid for Rush's Seat," HPH, 15 September 1999, p. 13; "The Rush Race for the 1st District," South Street Journal, 16–29 September 1999, p. 5; Ken Rolling, "1999 Mid-Year Report to the Annenberg Foundation," 2 August 1999 ("Obama is seriously contemplating running"); Obama to Members of the [CAC] Board of Directors, 20 September 1999 (resigning as board president effective 30 September); Woods Fund of Chicago, 1998 Annual Report, p. 1, and 1999 Annual Report, pp. 2, 6; Steve Neal, "Rep. Rush Enlists Re-Election Muscle," CST, 22 September 1999, p. 7; Citizens for Rush, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 January–30 June 1999, 5 August 1999, and 1 July–31 December 1999, 30 July 2000; Corey Hall, "State Senator Obama Discusses Past, Future Legislation at Town Hall Meeting," Chicago Weekend, 23 September 1999, p. 4; Neal, "2 Challengers Take Aim at Ousting Rush," CST, 26 September 1999, p. 10; Lauren W. Whittington, "When Obama Wasn't a Star," Roll Call, 12 February 2007; Robert Frank and Mark Maremont, "Money Maven Penny Pritzker Raises Record Amounts of Cash for Obama," WSJ, 15 March 2008; Dan Morain and Bob Drogin, "Obama and the Former Radicals," LAT, 18 April 2008; Ari Berman, "Obama Under the Weather," Nation, 19 May 2008; John Lippert, "Penny Pritzker Shows Why She Convinced Buffett to Support Obama," Bloomberg, 20 August 2008; Jason Zengerle, "The Message Keeper," TNR, 5 November 2008; Rush in Remnick, The Bridge, p. 315; Evan Osnos, "The Daley Show: Dynastic Rule in Obama's Political Birthplace," New Yorker, 8 March 2010, pp. 38ff.; Axelrod, Believer, pp. 118, 122; DJG interviews with Cynthia Miller, Dan Shomon, Will Burns, Adelmo Marchiori, Cindy Huebner Davidsmeyer, Jill Rock, Mike Lawrence, John Eason, John Corrigan, Eden Martin, Jean Rudd, Bill Ayers, Howard Stanback, Don Wiener, Eric Adelstein, John Kupper, Pete Giangreco, Delmarie Cobb, and Chris Sautter.

72. Mike Dorning, "Farms, Cuba Form Capitol Crisis," CT, 26 September 1999; Obama on WLS Channel 7 TV, 26 September 1999, MBC; Michael Ko, "2 Challengers Seek to Replace Rush in Washington," CT, 27 September 1999; Chinta Strausberg, "Trotter, Obama Seek to Oust Rush," CD, 27 September 1999, p. 3; "2 Launch Bids to Unseat Rush," CST, 27 September 1999, p. 14; "News: The City," CDH, 27 September 1999, p. 9; Obama to Jeanne and Paul Simon, n.d. (received 28 September 1999) (“our prayers are with you during your recovery”), PSP; Greg Downs, “Obama Announces Bid for Rush’s Congressional Seat,” HPH, 29 September 1999, pp. 1–2; Scott Fornek, “Running Against Rush,” CST, 29 September 1999, p. 6; Corey Hall, “State Sen. Donne Trotter Announces for Congress to ‘Make a Visible Difference,’” Chicago Citizen, 30 September 1999, p. 1; Hall, “State Sen. Barack Obama Announces for Congress,” Hyde Park Citizen, 30 September 1999, p. 2; Frank Ottman, “1st District Congressional Race, Historical,” South Street Journal, 21 October–3 November 1999, pp. 4–5; DJG interviews with Dan Shomon, Will Burns, Carolyn Shapiro, and John Rogers Jr.

CHAPTER EIGHT: FAILURE AND RECOVERY

1. UCLS Announcements 1999–2000, pp. 39, 43, 75–76; UCLS, The Glass Menagerie 1999–2000, esp. p. 20; UCLS Course Evaluations, Autumn 1999; Obama, Constitutional Law III Final Examination, [8–12] December 1999 (again two questions with a 5,200-word limit); Obama to Phil Boerner, n.d. [September 1999], PBP (“I’m running for Congress. Life is hectic but good!”); Rush on Morning Edition, NPR, 27 July 2004, and in Scott Helman, “Early Defeat Launched a Rapid Political Climb,” BG, 12 October 2007; Citizens for Rush, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 July–31 December 1999, 30 July 2000; Michelle in Cassandra West, “Her Plan Went Awry,” CT, 1 September 2004; “Oprah Talks to Barack Obama,” O Magazine, November 2004; Obama, TAOH, p. 340; Sandra Sobieraj Westfall, “Michelle Obama: ‘This Is Who I Am,’” People, 18 June 2007, p. 118; Shira Schoenberg, “Obama Keeps Making the Rounds,” Concord Monitor, 20 December 2007; Moelis in Leslie Bennetts, “First Lady in Waiting,” VanityFair.com, 27 December 2007, in Judy Keen, “Michelle Obama: Campaigning Her Way,” USAT, 11 May 2007, and on 20/20, ABC, 3 October 2008; Shomon in Carol Felsenthal, “The Making of a First Lady,” CM, February 2009; Obama, Remarks at Workplace Flexibility Forum, 31 March 2010, Public Papers of the Presidents 2010 Vol. 1, p. 433; Kantor, The Obamas, pp. 142–43; DJG interviews with Jay Hines-Shah, Nathan Sutton, Michael Edney, Ted Liazos, Heather Sullivan, Joe Khan, Andrew Abrams, Don Wiener, Eric Adelstein, Jerry Morrison, Kathy Stell, Allison Davis, Bernardine Dohrn, and Craig Huffman. On Wiener, see David Moberg, “Grass-Roots Activist for a New World Order,” CT, 18 August 1992.

2. Minutes, CAC Board of Directors, 16 and 30 (at 6500 S. Champlain) December 1999; “State Senator Challenges Rush to Debate Him,” CT, 5 October 1999; Chinta Strausberg, “Obama Challenges Rush to Debate,” CD, 5 October 1999, p. 3; Greg Downs, “Congressional Candidates Angle for Hyde Park Voters,” HPH, 6 October 1999, pp. 1–2; Barack in John Patterson, “Betting on Name Recognition,” CDH, 15 February 2000, p. 15; Sautter in Lauren W. Whittington, “When Obama Wasn’t a Star,” Roll Call, 12 February 2007; Obama for Congress 2000, FEC Candidate Summary Report, 31 December 2000; NOW LDEF and Illinois Caucus for Adolescent Health, “Caught in the Crossfire: Illinois Roundtable on Welfare Reform, Women of Color and Reproductive Health,” 13 October 1999, Chicago Foundation for Women; Downs, “Hyde Park Activists Launch Campaign Salvo,” “Rush: A Collective Vision,” and “Rep. Rush Denounces CHA Rehab Plans,” HPH, 20 October 1999, pp. 2, 6, 9, 11; JCAR Minutes, 19 October 1999; Joe Green, “Barack Obama: An Agenda for the 21st Century,” ca. 20–21 October 1999, YouTube; Strausberg, “Obama, Pols, File Bill to Protect Utility Customers,” CD, 21 October 1999, p. 10; Frank Ottman, “1st District Congressional Race, Historical,” SSJ, 21 October–3 November 1999, pp. 4–5; “Five Democratic Senators File Legislation to Increase Utility Customers’ Protections,” HPC, 28 October 1999, p. 3; Carol Felsenthal, “Les Coney, Top Obama Bundler and Networker Extraordinaire,” Chicago

Magazine, 21 July 2011; DJG interviews with Will Burns, Cynthia Miller, Dan Shomon, Susan Pierson Lewers, Leslie Corbett, Terrie Pickerill, Chris Sautter, Toni Preckwinkle, Scott Turow, Bill Luking, and Les Coney.

3. Frank Main, “Bobby Rush’s Son Is Shot on S. Side,” CST, 19 October 1999, p. 1; Evan Osnos and Shawn Taylor, “2 Sought in Shooting of Rep. Rush’s Son,” CT, 19 October 1999; Molly Sullivan and Main, “Rush Son Critically Injured in Shooting,” CST, 20 October 1999, p. 1; Osnos and Jennifer Peltz, “2 Sought in Rush’s Son’s Shooting,” CT, 20 October 1999; Gene O’Shea, “Gunmen Shoot Rush’s Son,” DS, 20 October 1999; Walter S. Mitchell III, “Congressman’s Son in Critical Condition,” CD, 20 October 1999, p. 4; Main and Ana Mendieta, “Clues Sought in Rush Son Shooting,” CST, 21 October 1999, p. 18; “Congressman’s Son Remains in Critical Condition,” CT, 21 October 1999; Main, “Rush’s Son Dies of Wounds from Monday Attack,” CST, 22 October 1999, p. 1; “Rep. Rush’s Son Dies of Wounds,” CT, 22 October 1999; Main, “Rep. Rush’s Son Dies 4 Days After Attack,” CST, 23 October 1999, p. 1; Terry Wilson and Aamer Madhani, “Rush’s Son Dies After Organs Fail,” CT, 23 October 1999; O’Shea and Sean D. Hamill, “Rush’s Son Dies of Wounds,” DS, 23 October 1999, pp. 1–2; Main, “Man Quizzed in Slaying of Rush’s Son,” and John Carpenter and Robert C. Herguth, “Rush Speaks Out on Death of His Son,” CST, 24 October 1999, pp. 3, 20; Wilson and Madhani, “Rush’s Son Dies,” CT, 24 October 1999; Bradley Keoun, “Rush Mourns Son,” CT, 24 October 1999; O’Shea, “One Held in Death of Rush’s Son,” DS, 24 October 1999, p. B3; Chinta Strausberg, “Rush Speaks Out on Son’s Tragic Shooting,” CD, 25 October 1999, p. 4; Osnos and Wilson, “Charges Expected in Fatal Shooting of Rush’s Son,” CT, 25 October 1999; Main and Michael Sneed, “Police Cite ‘Confession’ in Rich Slaying,” CST, 26 October 1999, p. 10; Wilson and James Hill, “Suspect Charged in Slaying of Rush’s Son,” CT, 26 October 1999; Anne Bowhay, “Man Charged in Rich’s Murder,” DS, 26 October 1999, pp. 1–2; “Man Charged in Rush Son Killing,” CD, 26 October 1999, p. 1; Main, “Cops Seek Boss in Rich Slaying,” CST, 27 October 1999, p. 24; Hill, “Suspect Held Without Bail in Slaying of Rush’s Son,” CT, 27 October 1999; O’Shea, “Huey Rich Murder Motive Disputed,” and Jamie Parker, “Funeral Scheduled Thursday for Rich,” DS, 27 October 1999, pp. B3, B4; Madhani, “Friends Old and New Bid Rush’s Son Farewell,” CT, 29 October 1999; Carpenter, “Goal Emerges from Grief,” CST, 31 October 1999, p. 2; John McCormick, “A Father’s Anguished Journey,” Newsweek, 28 November 1999; Madhani, “2 Found Guilty of Murdering Rush’s Son,” CT, 15 March 2002; Jeff Coen, “Judge Sentences Murderer of Rush’s Son to 90 Years,” CT, 22 June 2002; People v. Prince, 840 N. E. 2d 1240 (Ill. Ct. Apps.), 8 December 2005; DJG interview with Jeremiah Wright.

4. “Obama Asked to Bow Out of Race Against Rush,” CD, 26 October 1999, p. 8; Paul Simon to Obama, 26 October 1999, PSP; Obama for Congress 2000, FEC Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 July–31 December 1999, 31 January 2000, esp. pp. 69 and 75; Citizens for Rush, FEC Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 July–31 December 1999, 30 July 2000; Greg Downs, “Candidates Seeking Votes in Unlikely Places,” HPH, 27 October 1999, p. 9; John H. White, “Rush Announces Campaign for a 5th House Term,” CST, 1 November 1999, p. 8; Carl Kozlowski, “Democrat Rush Going for 5th Term in Congress,” CT, 2 November 1999; Downs, “Obama Gains an Endorsement, Rush Announces Re-Election Bid,” HPH, 3 November 1999, pp. 1–2; Buvan Nathan, “Looking at Politics,” and “Rush Seeks Fifth Term on Record,” CIB, 4 November 1999, pp. 2 and 8; Corey Hart, “Cong. Rush Officially Declares Candidacy for Reelection” and “Senator Trotter Unveils ‘Economic Plan’ for 1st Congressional,” CW, 4

November 1999, p. 1; Jennifer Leovy, "Community Tours Encourage Students to Explore Beyond Home," UCC, 4 November 1999; Senate Floor Transcript, 4 November 1999, p. 5 (Obama introducing SBs 1256 and 1257); "Week of Lectures on Public Interest Law," CDLB, 5 November 1999, p. 2; Rick Pearson, "Democrats Hope to Build a Youthful Base for Future," CT, 8 November 1999; Beverly A. Reed, "Obama Seeks Minority Appointee for ICC," CD, 9 November 1999, p. 3; Communications Daily, 9 November 1999; Downs, "Candidates to Appear at Health Care Forum" and "Trotter: 1st District Short of Washington Cash," Obama, "State Health Plan on the Table," and Don Robinson, "Rush Should Take Obama's Debate Challenge," HPH, 10 November 1999, pp. 3, 4, 10, and 17; Downs, "Candidates Spar Over Health Care," HPH, 17 November 1999, pp. 1–2, Steve Neal, "Poll Gives Rush Big Lead," CST, 21 November 1999, p. 4; Sheldon Lane, "Appoint Minority to ICC," HPH, 8 December 1999, p. 9; Rachel Van Dongen, "Serious Primary Threats Abound This Year," RC, 21 February 2000; Sautter in Don Gonyea, "Obama's Loss May Have Aided White House Bid," NPR, 19 September 2007, and in Janny Scott, "In 2000, a Streetwise Veteran Schooled a Bold Young Obama," NYT, 9 September 2007; Dan Morain, "Obama: A Fresh Face or an Old-School Tactician?," LAT, 8 September 2007; Lauren W. Whittington, "When Obama Wasn't a Star," RC, 12 February 2007; Obama, TAOH, p. 106; Wolffe, Renegade, p. 120; DJG interviews with John Kupper, Chris Sautter, Dan Shomon, Will Burns, and Jerry Morrison.

5. CF, 12 November 1999, p. 3; Chinta Strausberg, "Obama Launches Congressional Campaign Ads," CD, 15 November 1999, p. 3; "Champion," BO-01, and "Blackout," BO-02, Cassette #101287, 11 November 1999, CSP; Andrew Gruber e-mail to Michael Cabonargi, 11 November 1999, Shomon e-mail to Joe Seliga, Gruber, and Don Harmon, 15 November 1999, Gruber e-mail to Harmon et al., 8 December 1999, Seliga to Obama and Shomon, "Obama 2000 Jobs and Economic Development Platform," 20 December 1999, 6pp., [Seliga, Minutes], "Obama 2000 Economic Development Committee," 20 December 1999, 2pp., and Seliga e-mail to Gruber et al., 20 December 1999, all AGP; JCAR Minutes, 16 November 1999; Dirk Johnson, "7 Students Charged in a Brawl That Divides Decatur, Ill.," NYT, 10 November 1999; Flynn McRoberts and Janan Hanna, "Embattled School Board Issues Defiant Statement," CT, 17 November 1999; Joe Mahr, "Bill Calls for State's Expelled Students to Be Offered Alternate Form of Education," SJ-R, 17 November 1999, p. 10 (and PJS and ECN); John C. Patterson, "State Senator Calls for Changes to School Expulsion Laws in Wake of Decatur Dispute," DHR, 17 November 1999, p. A3; Senate Floor Transcript, 18 November 1999, p. 2 (Obama introducing SB 1280); Anthony Man, "Mitchell Sees Politics Behind Black Caucus," DHR, 22 November 1999, p. A3; Greg Downs, "New Candidate Enters Race," HPH, 17 November 1999, p. 2; DJG interviews with Chris Sautter, Dan Shomon, Andrew Gruber, Don Harmon, and Joe Seliga.

6. Steve Neal, "Poll Gives Rush Big Lead," CST, 21 November 1999, p. 4; Paul Merrion, "Corporate Backers Take Sides in a Tough District Race," CCB, 22 November 1999, p. 3; "Rush Challenger Has Plan for Computers in Schools," CT, 24 November 1999; Chinta Strausberg, "Obama Aims to Wipe Out 'Digital Divide,'" CD, 29 November 1999, p. 5; Greg Downs, "Obama: More Tech Funds for Schools," HPH, 1 December 1999, p. 8; J. Coyden Palmer, "Senator Obama Looking to Decrease 'Digital Divide,'" CC, 2 December 1999, p. 1; "Quiet Fall Veto Session Expected," C-WR 15 #7, 10 November 1999; Ray Long and Douglas Holt, "Ryan Veto of Child-Support Break Resoundingly Rebuffed by House," CT, 18 November 1999; Senate Floor Transcript, 30 November 1999, pp. 11–26 (HB 1232); Christopher Wills, “Move to Give Welfare Families More Child Support Fails in Senate,” AP, 30 November 1999 (and DS, 1 December 1999, p. A3); Adriana Colindres, “Senate Nixes Child-Support Bill,” SJ-R, 1 December 1999, p. 7 (and PJS and ECN); Long, “Veto Stands Barring More Cash for Kids on Welfare,” CT, 1 December 1999; CF, 1 December 1999, “Few Surprises in Fall Veto Session,” C-WR 15 #8, 15 December 1999, pp. 2–3; Obama, “Improve Child Support System,” HPH, 15 December 1999, p. 4; Obama’s 4 February 2000 interview with Ted McClelland; Hendon, Black Enough/White Enough, p. 12; Lisa Kernek, “School Board Election Takes Shape,” SJ-R, 11 November 2000, p. 7; “Beverly Ann Criglar, 63,” CT, 4 February 2004; Bernard Schoenburg, “Former Obama Assistant Remembers Him as Friendly Boss,” SJ-R, 8 November 2008; Beverly Helm-Renfro’s 2010 interview with Mark DePue, pp. 50–52; DJG interviews with Jeremy Flynn, Adelmo Marchiori, Jeff Stauter, Steve Rauschenberger, John Cullerton, Kim Lightford, and Beverly Helm-Renfro.

7. People v. Cervantes, 723 N.E. 2d 265 (Ill. S.Ct.), 2 December 1999; Ken Armstrong and Ray Long, “High Court Invalidates Anti-Crime Law,” CT, 3 December 1999; People v. Reedy, 708 N.E. 2d 1114 (Ill. S.Ct.), 22 January 1999; Fuehrmeyer v. City of Chicago, 311 N.E. 2d 116 (Ill. S.Ct.), 29 March 1974, quoting People ex rel. Drake v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481, 494–95 (1865), CF, 6, 7, 8 10, and 13 December 1999; Douglas Holt, “Ryan Calls Legislature Back to Fix Crim Laws,” CT, 7 December 1999; Mark Konkol, “State Lawmakers Back in Springfield,” DS, 7 December 1999, p. A6; Senate Floor Transcript, 21 May 1997, pp. 25–33 (SB 71); Christi Parsons and Andrew Martin, “Bead Drawn on Gun Law,” CT, 22 May 1997; Gary Washburn, “Daley Fears More Bloodshed If Gun Law Is Watered Down,” CT, 5 June 1997; Teresa Puente, “Gov. Edgar Vetoes Measure to Relax Gun Penalties,” CT, 17 August 1997; Rick Pearson, “Philip vs. Ryan Showdown Looms on Gun Law,” CT, 10 December 1999; Pearson, “Ryan to Go to the Mat on Gun Issue,” CT, 11 December 1999; Dave McKinney and Fran Spielman, “Ryan, Philip at Odds Over Gun-Law Penalty,” CST, 11 December 1999; Long, “Anti-Crime Law Rejection Could Have Ripple Effect,” CT, 12 December 1999; Jeremy Manier, “Hillard, Devine Out in Front,” CT, 13 December 1999; Long and Holt, “Standoff Stalls Vote on Revamp of Gun Law,” CT, 14 December 1999; Christopher Wills, “Great Gun Debate,” AP, DS, 14 December 1999, pp. 1–2; Holt and Long, “Philip Flip-Flops on Gun Penalty He Once Backed,” CT, 15 December 1999; DJG interviews with Gideon Baum, Mark Warnsing, Ed Petka, and Pate Philip.

8. Evan Osnos, “Bobby Rush,” CT, 5 December 1999, p. P3; Osnos, “‘Racial Profiling’ Target of Bill,” CT, 7 December 1999; Chinta Strausberg, “Coalitions’ Bill Hits Racial Profiling Tiff,” CD, 7 December 1999, p. 3; Strausberg, “Daley, Devine Fight Battle for Tough Laws” and “Obama Unveils Federal Gun Bill,” CD, 13 December 1999, p. 3; Hurley Green III, “Sen. Obama Hosts Anti-Violence Rally” and “Sen. Obama Challenges Cong. Rush in 1st,” CIB, 9 [sic] December 1999, pp. 3 and 7; Caitlin Devitt, “Legislators Back in Session to Pass Gun Law,” HPH, 15 December 1999, p. 2; Jennifer Loven (AP), “Man on a Mission,” DS, 13 December 1999, pp. 1–2 (and as “Son’s Slaying Transforms Congressman’s Priorities,” LAT, 19 December 1999); Greg Downs, “New Candidate Enters Race,” HPH, 17 November 1999, p. 2; Douglas Holt, “Early Bird Challenger Gets Jump on Campaign Filing,” CT, 14 December 1999; Beverly A. Reed, “Obama Demands Debate,” CD, 15 December 1999, p. 3; JCAR Minutes, 14 December 1999.

9. CF, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 22, and 30 December 1999; Ray Long and Douglas Holt, “Stalemate Over Gun Law,” and “Hang Tough on Gun Law,” CT, 16 December 1999; Don Thompson, “Governor Backs

Misdemeanor Option for Gun Crimes,” CDH, 16 December 1999, p. 14; Senate Floor Transcript, 16 December 1999, pp. 6–37; Rick Pearson and Long, “The Showdown in Springfield,” CT, 17 December 1999; Senate Floor Transcript, 17 December 1999, pp. 19–34; Long and Pearson, “Compromise Crime Bill Collapses,” CT, 18 December 1999; Long and Pearson, “Ryan Takes Gun-Law Fight to Public,” and Pearson, “More Than a Bill Riding on Line,” CT, 19 December 1999; Pearson and Long, “Ryan Seeks GOP Support on Crime Bill,” CT, 20 December 1999; John O’Connor, “Legislative Leaders Continue Temporary Solution to Gun Debate,” AP, 20 December 1999 (and Evansville Courier, 21 December 1999, p. B7); Long and Pearson, “Philip’s Plan Fails to Move Gun Talks,” CT, 21 December 1999; Phil Kadner, “Dishonest Legislators Concoct Bad Laws,” DS, 21 December 1999, p. A3; Senate Floor Transcript, 21 December 1999, pp. 20–22; Pearson and Long, “Ryan Going After Philip’s Loyalists,” CT, 22 December 1999; Holt, “Ryan Tries to Downplay Gun-Bill Rift,” CT, 23 December 1999; Holt, “Philip Forces Not Bending for Ryan,” CT, 24 December 1999; Pearson, “GOP Revives Debate on Concealed Weapons,” CT, 25 December 1999; Joe Mahr, “Dart Tightens Single-Subject Clause,” SJ-R, 26 December 1999, p. 17, Rich Miller, “GOP Senators Play the ‘Integrity’ Card in Gun Battle,” DS, 26 December 1999, p. A13; Lisa Song, “Top Health Official Campaigns for Ryan on Anti-Crime Legislation,” CT, 27 December 1999; Long and Pearson, “Gun Bill No Threat, Ryan Tells Hunters,” CT, 28 December 1999; “Ryan Trying Again,” DS, 28 December 1999, p. A10; Obama, “Ideologues Frustrate Gun Law,” HPH, 29 December 1999, p. 5; Dirk Johnson, “Republicans in Illinois Feud Over Gun Control,” NYT, 29 December 1999; Pearson and Long, “Ryan Likes Chances, but Philip in Control,” CT, 29 December 1999; Mark J. Konkol, “Ryan: I Have Votes for Gun Bill,” and Phil Kadner, “Making Streets Safe Is a Nasty Business,” DS, 29 December 1999, p. A3; Pearson and Long, “Ryan Comes Up Short,” CT, 30 December 1999; Dave McKinney, “Ryan Loses on Gun Bill,” CST, 30 December 1999, p. 1; Thompson, “Anti-Crime Bill Falls Again,” CDH, 30 December 1999, p. 1; Obama, “Family Duties Took Precedence,” HPH, 12 January 2000, p. 4; Obama’s 4 February 2000 interview with Ted McClelland, CF, 9 January 2001 (Wendell Jones); DJG interviews with Ed Petka, Mark Warnsing, Todd Vandermyde, Ned Mitchell, John Charles, Dan Shomon, and Bill Luking.

10. Don Thompson, “Crime Bill Trouble Causes Worry About GOP Control in Senate,” CDH, 31 December 1999, p. 1; “Philip, Criminals Win Again,” CT, 31 December 1999; “Pols Take a Pass,” DS, 31 December 1999, p. A10; Steve Neal, “Weak-Kneed Senators Won’t Hobble Ryan,” CST, 31 December 1999, p. 16; Bernard Schoenburg, “One Odd Thing After Another as Senate Session Dragged On,” SJ-R, 2 January 2000, p. 15; Rich Miller, “Ryan, Like Edgar, Learns He Can’t Win Pate’s Game,” DS, 2 January 2000, p. A17; Chinta Strausberg, “Clergy Continue Anti-Shooting Battle,” CD, 3 January 2000, p. 4; Ellen Warren and Terry Armour, “The Inc. Column,” CT, 4 January 2000; Strausberg, “Gov. Ryan, Trotter Say ‘Gun Bill Is Not Dead,’” CD, 4 January 2000, p. 6; Warren and Armour, “The Inc. Column,” CT, 5 January 2000; Dave McKinney, “Senators Explain Gun Vote Absence,” CST, 5 January 2000, p. 8; Greg Downs and Caitlin Devitt, “Obama Misses Gun Law Vote,” and Devitt, “Candidates Jockey for Ballot Position,” HPH, 5 January 2000, pp. 1–2; Dana Dubriwny, “State Senator Who Missed Gun Vote Says She’s Sorry,” CDH, 6 January 2000, p. 4; Ihejirika in Corey Hall, “Congressional Concerns: State Senator Barack Obama,” CW, 13 January 2000, p. 16; Remnick, The Bridge, p. 321; DJG interviews with Cynthia Miller, Chris Sautter, Dan Shomon, and Donne Trotter.

11. Don Thompson, “Philip Says Ryan May Be Getting Bad Advice on Gun Issue,” CDH, 9 January

2000, p. 1; CF, 11 January 2000; JCAR Minutes, 12 January 2000; Senate Floor Transcript, 12 January 2000, p. 6; Lisa Snedeker and Kevin McDermott, “Lenders Criticize Bill,” SLPD, 13 January 2000, p. A1; Steve Warmbir, “Trial Sets Off Debate on Racial Profiling,” CDH, 21 January 2000, p. 1; Senate Floor Transcript, 13 January 2000, p. 3; “Eye on Legislation,” CDLB, 18 January 2000, p. 3; Karen Shields, “Independent Organization Favors Obama,” Obama, “Family Duties Took Precedence,” “Truth and Tales in Gun Law Vote,” Mikva, “Obama Not to Blame,” and James Cracraft, “Where Was Obama?,” HPH, 12 January 2000, pp. 2, 4, 7; Mikva, “Family Values,” CT, 13 January 2000, p. 22; Adam Harrington, “Obama Under Fire for Missing Gun Vote,” CWN, 13 January 2000; Corey Hall, “Congressional Concerns: Congressman Bobby Rush,” “Congressional Concerns: State Senator Donne Trotter,” and “Congressional Concerns: State Senator Barack Obama,” CW, 13 January 2000, pp. 4 and 16; David Mendell, “Obama Defends Decision to Miss Anti-Crime Vote,” CT, 17 January 2000; “Senator Obama Unveils Englewood Beautification Plan,” CD, 24 January 2000, p. 14; Obama, “Why Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., Is Important to Me,” CD, 15 January 2000, p. 18; “Race Profiling,” II, March 2000, p. 13; Heather Nickel, “Driving While Black,” II, June 2000, pp. 18–21.

12. Chinta Strausberg, “Democrats Urge Congress to Help Seniors, Patients Meet Rx Costs,” CD, 19 January 2000, p. 5; Beverly A. Reed, “Obama Calls for Drop in Drug Costs,” CD, 20 January 2000, p. 50; Hall, “Congressional Candidates Answer Questions at Forum,” CW, 20 January 2000, p. 4; Ted Kleine, “Is Bobby Rush in Trouble?,” CR, 17 March 2000; McClelland, “How Obama Learned to Be a Natural,” Salon, 12 February 2007; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, pp. 158–59; Kathleen Lavey, “Book Traces Obama’s Political Roots in City,” CST, 23 October 2010; Burney Simpson, “The 1st Congressional District Encompasses Extreme Contrasts,” II, February 2000, pp. 6–7; Lu Palmer’s 1989 interview with Blackside’s Dave Lacy; H. Gregory Meyer, “Lu Palmer, 82,” CT, 14 September 2004; Beauty Turner, “Race for Congress,” Residents’ Journal, February 2000, p. 9; Ali Abunimah, “How Barack Obama Learned to Love Israel,” Electronic Intifada, 4 March 2007; Michael McAuliff, “Hil Bam Gear Up for Battle over Jewish Vote,” NYDN, 6 March 2007, p. 32; Larry Cohler-Esses, “Obama Pivots Away from Dovish Past,” Jewish Week, 9 March 2007; Edward McClelland, “The Crazy Uncles in Obama’s Attic,” Salon, 18 March 2008; Peter Wallsten, “Allies of Palestinians See a Friend in Barack Obama,” LAT, 10 April 2008; DJG interviews with Will Burns, John Eason, Nat Piggee, and Lula Ford.

13. Senate Floor Transcripts, 20 January 2000, p. 2 (introducing SBs 1407, 1408, and 1413), 26 January 2000, pp. 9 and 11 (introducing SBs 1489 and 1506), 27 January 2000, p. 6 (introducing SJR 51); Obama for Congress 2000, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 July 1999–31 December 1999, 31 January 2000, and 1 January 2000–1 March 2000, 22 November 2002; Citizens for Rush, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 July 1999–31 December 1999, 30 July 2000; Trotter for Congress, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 July 1999–31 December 1999, 1 February 2000; Rush campaign ad, Residents’ Journal, February 2000, p. 17 (“We’re sticking with Bobby”); Karen Shields, “Congressional Candidates Win Endorsements,” and Ann Cadge, Letter to the Editor, HPH, 2 February 2000, pp. 7 and 4; Shields, “Obama Surpasses Incumbent in Money-Raising Campaign,” HPH, 9 February 2000, pp. 1–2; Adam Harrington, “Rush Ahead in Cash Race,” CWN, 10 February 2000; Rachel Van Dongen, “Serious Primary Threats Abound This Year,” RC, 21 February 2000; William Hatfield, “Democrats Seek Tax Credits for Day Care, Tuition, Rents,” CST, 28 January 2000, p. 14; Curtis Lawrence, “Gay Activists Savor Success at Fund-Raiser,” CST, 30 January

2000, p. 3 (Obama attending Equality Illinois event); Chinta Strausberg, "Obama Calls for End to 'Star Wars' Funding," CD, 31 January 2000, p. 5; Ken Armstrong and Steve Mills, "Ryan: 'Until I Can Be Sure,'" CT, 1 February 2000; Pat Karlak, "Death Penalty Put on Hold," CDH, 1 February 2000, p. 1; Dirk Johnson, "Illinois, Citing Faulty Verdicts, Bars Executions," NYT, 1 February 2000; Johnson, "Illinois Governor Hopes to Fix a 'Broken' Justice System," NYT, 19 February 2000; Obama, "State Should Curtail All Executions," HPH, 23 February 2000, p. 4; CF, 27 January and 1 and 2 February 2000; Matt O'Connor, "Charges Reach Ryan's Inner Circle," CT, 2 February 2000; Dirk Johnson, "No Executions in Illinois Until System Is Repaired," NYT, 21 May 2000; Ted Gregory, "DuPage Ready to Settle Cruz Prosecution Suits," CT, 22 September 2000; Bernard Schoenburg, "Former Obama Assistant Remembers Him as Friendly Boss," SJ-R, 8 November 2008; Beverly Helm-Renfro's 13 July 2010 interview with Mark DePue, p. 53; DJG interviews with Beverly Helm-Renfro, Eric Adelstein, Jim Covington, Kathy Saltmarsh, and Mark Warnsing.

14. Senate Floor Transcript, 1 February 2000, pp. 4–5 (Obama introducing SBs 1583, 1594 and 1606), 2 February 2000, pp. 6–7 (Obama introducing SBs 1644 and 1663), 3 February 2000, p. 1 (Obama introducing SBs 1710, 1711, 1712, and 1713); AP, "State Senator Introduces Bill to Ban Flavored Cigarettes," 4 February 2000; Chinta Strausberg, "Sen. Obama Seeks Ban on Sale of Bidi Cigarettes," CD, 5 February 2000, p. 4; Obama's 4 February 2000 interview with Ted McClelland.

15. Kennedy Communications, "State Senator Barack Obama, Candidate for U.S. Senate: Background Report," April 2003, RRP; Beverly A. Reed, "State Senator Obama Joins Efforts to Rebuild Englewood," CD, 7 February 2000, p. 5; "Durbin Endorses Rush for Fund-Raising Efforts," CDH, 7 February 2000, p. I-9; "Race-Reporting Bill Is Good Legislation," MD, 8 February 2000; JCAR Minutes, 8 February 2000; Sydney G. Bild, "Rush Leads Way in Prescription Drug Benefits," HPH, 9 February 2000, p. 4; Jennifer Nelson, "Pair of Measures Would Discount Drugs for Seniors," SJ-R, 9 February 2000, p. 11; Corey Hall, "Rush, Trotter and Obama Present Themselves to CBA," CW, 10 February 2000, p. 2; Obama to Keith Peterson, 10 February 2000, KPP; Reed, "Barack Obama Promises Vision, Leadership in 1st Congressional Seat," CD, 12 February 2000, p. 3; "Afford," BO-03, and "Profile," BO-04, Cassette #102436, 14 February 2000, CSP; "IVI-IPO Backs Moore, Obama in Contests," CT, 15 February 2000; Chinta Strausberg, "IVI/IPO Backs Cousins, Obama for March 21st Race," CD, 15 February 2000, p. 3; Obama, "Putting a Stop to Racial Profiling," HPH, 16 February 2000, p. 4; Adam Harrington, "Mr. Obama Tries to Go to Washington," CWN, 17 February 2000.

16. Scott, A Singular Woman, p. 10; Andrew Kenney, "UNC Researcher, a Pioneering Academic, Kept Kinship to Obama to Herself," N&O, 23 June 2014; Dean Olsen, "Plan to Let Schools Exceed Tax Cap Fails," SJ-R, 17 February 2000, p. 36 (Obama in Revenue Committee not voting on SB 1878); Scott Fornek, "Rush Agrees to Debate Dem Opponents," CST, 18 February 2000, p. 12; "News: The City," CDH, 18 February 2000, p. I-13, and 19 February 2000, p. 8; Beverly A. Reed, "Earned Income Tax Credit Near," CD, 19 February 2000, p. 1; Curtis Lawrence, "Rush, Opponents Clash Off the Air," CST, 19 February 2000, p. 4; Lawrence, "Rush Disputes Ad Portrayals at Debate," CST, 20 February 2000, p. 12; Evan Osnos, "Rush Could Face His Toughest Test," CT, 20 February 2000; Chinta Strausberg, "Congressional Hopefuls Battle Over Vouchers, Health," CD, 21 February 2000, p. 3; Osnos, "Challengers Campaign Without Rush," and John Chase, "Jeanne Simon, 77, Wife of Ex-Senator," CT, 21 February 2000; Senate Floor Transcript, 22 February 2000, p. 2 (Obama introducing SB 1943); "Rush's

Father Dies After Falling Ill,” CT, 22 February 2000; “Ryan Looks Ahead with Budget Address,” C-WR 15 #10, 23 February 2000; Karen Shields, “Candidates Struggle to Articulate Differences,” HPH, 23 February 2000, p. 3; Senate Floor Transcripts, 24 February 2000, pp. 43–44 (Obama apologizing for wrongly voting no on SB 649), 93–96 (SB 1532), 25 February 2000, pp. 80–87 (SB 1885); Jennifer Nelson, “Senate Wants No Tobacco Money for Lawyers,” SJ-R, 26 February 2000, p. 5; Kellie Gormly, “Several Bills Target Racial Profiling,” SJ-R, 27 February 2000, p. 11 (and PJS 27 February and ECN 28 February 2000); Diane Lewis, “Attorneys’ Tobacco Pay Debated,” BP, 29 February 2000, p. A5; Alysia Tate, “Outside Dollars Drive Campaigns in 1st District Race,” Chicago Reporter, March 2000; Steve Neal, “Rush Should Practice What He Once Preached,” CST, 3 March 2000, p. 9; Jennifer Loven, “Panther Turned Congressman Faces Tough Re-Election Battle,” AP, 15 March 2000 (20 February Trinity forum); Rachel Van Dongen, “Rush Confident He’ll Be Back,” RC, 20 March 2000; Obama for Congress 2000, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 January 2000–1 March 2000 and 2 March 2000–31 March 2000, 22 November 2002; Citizens for Rush, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 January 2000–1 March 2000, 14 February 2001; Trotter for Congress, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 January 2000–1 March 2000, 14 March 2000; Friends of Barack Obama, Form D-2, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures, 1 January–30 June 2000, 31 July 2000; Lauren W. Whittington, “When Obama Wasn’t a Star,” RC, 12 February 2007; Obama, TAOH, p. 233 (“police cars pulling me over for no apparent reason”); DJG interviews with Charles Payne and Sheila Simon.

17. Lorraine Forte, “Female Leaders Support Rush,” CST, 28 February 2000, p. 10; Chinta Strausberg, “Obama Picks Up Clergy Support for Congressional Bid,” CD, 29 February 2000, p. 3; Curtis Lawrence, “Pastors Turn to Obama Over Rush in Race,” CST, 29 February 2000, p. 8; “Group of Ministers Refuse to Back Rush,” CDH, 29 February 2000, p. 9; Robert Roman, “Chicago DSA Recommendations for the March Primary Election,” New Ground #45, March–April 2000 (“recommending both Bobby Rush and Barak Obama”); R. Eugene Pincham, “Rush Challengers Play Follow the Leader,” HPH, 1 March 2000, p. 4; “Local Ministers Endorse Obama for Congress,” CD, 4 March 2000, p. 1; “Barack Obama for Congress,” CT, 6 March 2000; “News: The City,” CDH, 6 March 2000, p. 9; Susan Dodge, “Mikva Endorses Obama in 1st District,” CST, 6 March 2000, p. 9; “Obama Announces Help for Goldblatt’s Workers,” Press Release, 6 March 2000, AGP; Strausberg, “Obama Tries to Rescue Laid Off Goldblatt Employees,” CD, 7 March 2000, p. 5; JCAR Minutes, 7 March 2000; Karen Shields, “Congressional Race Heats Up,” and Obama, “Fight for Equal Pay Is Vitaly Important,” HPH, 8 March 2000, pp. 1–2, 4; Forte, “Better Late Than Never: Rush, Rivals Debate,” CST, 8 March 2000, p. 24; Phil Kadner, “There’s No ‘Bulworth’ in Congressional Debate,” DS, 9 March 2000, p. A3; “Divide,” BO-05, and “Agree,” BO-06, Cassette #102848, 10 March 2000, CSP; John Presta, Mr. and Mrs. Grassroots (Elevator Group, 2010), pp. 1–3, 24–25, 35, 48; Steve Metsch, “Beverly Man Writes Book About Obama Campaigns,” SS, 22 March 2010; DJG interview with Mike Pflieger.

18. Michelle McFarland-McDaniels, “Rep. Rush’s Glass House Seems to Be Crumbling,” CD, 11 March 2000, p. 14; Evan Osnos, “Challengers Debate Rush on His Voting,” CT, 12 March 2000; Steve Neal, “Rush Picks Up Clinton Support,” CST, 12 March 2000, p. 11; Mark J. Konkol, “Rush Takes Challengers Seriously,” and “U. S. House Choices,” DS, 12 March 2000, pp. A1, A4, A12; “Clinton Endorses Rush’s House Campaign,” CDH, 12 March 2000, p. I-11; Karen Shields, “Congress Campaign Moves into Home Stretch,” HPH, 15 March 2000, pp. 1, 8; Corey Hall, “Disagreements, Differences on Display at 1st Congressional District Candidates Forum,” CW, 16 March 2000, p. 1; Bill Clinton TV and radio ads for Bobby Rush, 13 March 2000; Chicago Tonight, WTTW, 13 March 2000; Curtis Lawrence, “Deeds, Not Issues, in 1st Dist. Spotlight,” CST, 14 March 2000, p. 12; AP, “Quest to Lure Voters,” CDH, 21 March 2000, p. 1; Christopher Wills, “Obama Friend Sells Candidate,” AP, 16 December 2007; Presta, Mr. and Mrs. Grassroots, pp. 2, 58; DJG interviews with Dan Shomon, Will Burns, Cynthia Miller, Tom Dart, Bill Fuhry, Gideon Baum, John Corrigan, Joe Seliga, Andrew Boron, Nat Piggee, Warren Chain, John Eason, Tasneem Goodman, Dan Johnson-Weinberger, Joe Khan, Hasan Chandoo, Andy Schapiro, and Jesse Ruiz. Davis introduced HB 3911 on 17 February 1999; Barack introduced SB 1324 on 12 January 2000. Dave McKinney, “Videotape Bill Fails in House,” CST, 26 March 1999, p. 18; Maurice Possley and Ray Long, “Bill Seeks Statewide Taping of Suspects,” CT, 8 February 2000; Long and Possley, “Videotaping of Suspects Gets Push,” CT, 18 February 2000; “Racial Profiling,” II, April 2000, p. 12; Steven A. Drizin and Beth A. Colgan, “Let the Cameras Roll: Mandatory Videotaping of Interrogations Is the Solution to Illinois’ Problem of False Confessions,” Loyola University of Chicago Law Journal 32 (Winter 2001): 337–424, esp. 344–48, 391, 404, 412–19.

19. Curtis Lawrence, “Rush Defending Seat Against 3 Dem Challengers,” CST, 14 March 2000, p. 4; Michelle McFarland-McDaniels, “Rush Campaign Should Stop Throwing Stones,” Lois Friedberg-Dobry, “Despite Trotter Claims, IVI-IPO Backs Obama,” and Obama Campaign Ad, HPH, 15 March 2000, pp. 4 and 9; Gregory L. Giroux, “Chicago Voters Will Apply Judgment to Rush in Tuesday’s Primary,” CQ Daily Monitor, 15 March 2000; “State Senator Obama Delivers $400,000 to Kennedy-King College for Jobs Training Program,” Business Wire, 15 March 2000; Chinta Strausberg, “Obama Ends Job Training Plan at Kennedy-King College,” CD, 16 March 2000, p. 14; “Another Term for Rush,” CST, 16 March 2000, p. 35; Stanley Ziemba, “Rush’s Rival Backed by Suburban Officials,” CT, 16 March 2000; Ted Kleine [McClelland], “Is Bobby Rush in Trouble?,” CR, 17 March 2000; Wayne D. Watson, “Opening Doors Changing Lives Program,” Kennedy-King College, 4 May 2000; Mary Mitchell, “Memoir of a 21st-Century History Maker,” Black Issues Book Review, January–February 2005, pp. 18–21; Cheryl L. Reed, “The Used Car Lot of the Book World,” CST, 21 January 2007, p. B12; Rush in Remnick, The Bridge, p. 331; McClelland, Young Man Obama, p. 153; McClelland, “When Obama Loved Reporters,” NBCChicago.com, 29 May 2013; Katherine Skiba and Lolly Bowean, “Behind the Scenes at the White House,” CT, 6 April 2011; Rich Miller, “Obama’s Roots a Reminder That Ambition Can Be a Grand Thing,” CCB, 20 January 2017; DJG interviews with Brad Jonas and Sharon Corrigan. The Watson statement asserts that the newly announced $400,000 would come on top of a prior $500,000, but subsequent state documents reflect only one single $450,000 Obama-initiated grant to Kennedy-King College.

20. Obama for Congress 2000, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 2 March–31 March 2000, 22 November 2002; “Our Endorsements,” and Chinta Strausberg, “2nd [sic] Congressional District Voters Set to Clear Smoke,” CD, 18 March 2000, pp. 1, 17; “Hotly Contested Race for the Democratic Nomination for Representative of the 1st District Based on the South Side of Chicago,” Weekend Edition, NPR, 18 March 2000; Abdon M. Pallasch, “NRA Lends Support to Zwick Campaign,” CST, 19 March 2000, p. 17; Rachel Van Dongen, “Rush Confident He’ll Be Back,” RC, 20 March 2000; Kevin Davis, “Former ’60s Militant Working to Change ‘Culture of Violence,’” USAT, 20 March 2000, p. 26A; Scott

Fornek, “GOP Crying Foul Over Phony Ballot,” CST, 20 March 2000, p. 4; John Kass, “Let Election Day Become Holiday from Political Stiffs,” and Salim Muwakkil, “Ironies Abound in 1st District,” CT, 20 March 2000; CF, 21 March 2000; Rick Pearson, “It’s Over for Big Guys,” CT, 21 March 2000; Obama in Pat Guinane, “Star Power,” II, October 2004; Scott Helman, “Michelle Obama Revels in Family Role,” BG, 28 October 2007; Craig Robinson on Anderson Cooper 360, CNN, 15 April 2008; Jodi Kantor, “Michelle Obama, Reluctant No More,” NYT, 26 August 2008; Presta, Mr. and Mrs. Grassroots, p. 63; Beverly Helm-Renfro’s interview with Mark DePue, p. 59; DJG interviews with Will Burns, Dan Shomon, Beverly Helm-Renfro, Barbara Flynn Currie, Chris Sautter, Craig Huffman, John Eason, Warren Chain, Tasneem Goodman, Joe Seliga, Jesse Ruiz, Terrie Pickerill, Susan Pierson Lewers, Leslie Corbett, Paul Strauss, Marlies Carruth, Tim King, and Tom Dart. The five 17 March Rezko contributors were Dan Mahru, Joseph Aramanda, Michael Sreenan, Deloris Wade, and Jennifer Shaxted Arons. Elie “Lee” Maloof and developer Mark Temple and his wife Janette all likewise contributed $1,000 each on 17 March. Patrick J. Fitzgerald, “Government’s Motion for Admission of Other Acts of Evidence,” U.S. v. Antoin Rezko, U. S. D. C. N. D. Ill. #05-CR-691, 11 January 2008, p. 18n.9; Kenneth P. Vogel, “Rezko Role Bigger Than Admitted,” Politico, 14 March 2008; Vogel, “Obama Releases Names of Rezko-Linked Donors,” Politico, 15 March 2008; and Don Wiener e-mail to DJG. See also Thomas A. Corfman, “Developer Agrees to Buy 62-Acre Site on Near South Side,” CT, 11 April 2001, and Corfman, “Housing Planned for Near South—Rezmar Buys Site for $67.5 Million,” CT, 22 March 2002.

21. Susan Kuczka and Flynn McRoberts, “Kirk, Rush, Fend Off Strong Ballot Challengers,” CT, 22 March 2000; Curtis Lawrence, “Rush Wins in 1st,” CST, 22 March 2000, p. 2; Mark Konkol, “Rush Holds Off Fierce Competition,” DS, 22 March 2000, p. B2; “Low Voter Turnout,” CD, 22 March 2000, p. 1; Corey Hall, “Cong. Rush Wins Democratic Nomination for Fifth Term,” CC, 23 March 2000, p. 4; “Dismay and Hope,” CST, 23 March 2000, p. 39; Chinta Strausberg, “Rush Thanks Voters,” CD, 23 March 2000, p. 1; Konkol, “Rush Rebounds for Easy Primary Win,” DS, 23 March 2000, p. B6; Adam Harrington, “Rush to Victory,” CWN, 27 March 2000; Strausberg, “Rush, Obama and Trotter Return to Teamwork,” CD, 27 March 2000, p. 5; Karen Shields, “Rush Re-Elected,” HPH, 29 March 2000, pp. 1–2; Steve Neal, “Rush’s Solid Win Proves His Worth in 1st District,” CST, 3 April 2000, p. 8; Caitlin Devitt, “March Primary Reverberates Through Political Year,” HPH, 27 December 2000, pp. 6, 8 (Obama “did much worse than expected in the race”); Jim Reynolds in David Smallwood, “Genesis of the Grassroots Movement,” N’Digo Profiles, December 2008, pp. 10–11, 44; DJG interviews with Terrie Pickerill, John Eason, and Dan Shomon.

22. Obama in John Patterson, “Betting on Name Recognition,” CDH, 15 February 2004, p. 15; Shomon in Lauren W. Whittington, “When Obama Wasn’t a Star,” RC, 12 February 2007; Obama in Wolffe, Renegade, p. 120; Ruiz in McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, p. 166; Rebecca Traister, Big Girls Don’t Cry (Free Press, 2010), p. 50; DJG interviews with Toni Preckwinkle, Dan Shomon, John Kupper, Barbara Flynn Currie, Will Burns, Judy Byrd, Elvin Charity, Carol Harwell, and Bill Ayers.

23. Obama in Garance Franke-Ruta, “The Next Generation,” American Prospect, August 2004, pp. 13ff., in Scott Fornek, “I’ve Got a Competitive Nature,” CST, 3 October 2004, p. 12, on Off Topic with Carlos Watson, CNN, 24 October 2004, on The Tavis Smiley Show, 3 November 2004, at the American Magazine Conference, Phoenix, AZ, 23 October 2006, in Christopher Wills, “Obama Learned from Failed Congress Run,” AP, 24 October 2007, and in Mendell, From Promise to Power, p. 146; Shomon in Carol Felsenthal, "What If: Would Obama Be Living in the White House Today If . . . ," Huffington Post, 30 January 2009, in Felsenthal, "The Making of a First Lady," CM, February 2009, pp. 50ff., and in James Warren, "Obama After His First Shellacking," NYDN, 9 November 2014; Obama for Congress 2000, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 2 March–31 March 2000, 22 November 2002; Friends of Barack Obama, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures, 1 January–30 June 2000, 31 July 2000; Bernard Schoenburg, SJ-R, 18 May 2000, p. 5 (Shomon); Greg Hinz, "Profile: Launching a New Campaign to Overhaul Education Funding," CCB, 2 July 2001 (Burns); Daley in David Smallwood, "Mayor Daley Smiles on Barack," N'Digo Profiles, December 2008, p. 12, and in Evan Osnos, "The Daley Show," New Yorker, 8 March 2010, pp. 38ff.; Abercrombie in Kevin Merida, "The Ghost of a Father," WP, 14 December 2007, p. A12; Mary Orndorff, "Davis-Obama Alliance Has Deep Roots," Birmingham News, 18 January 2007, p. B1; Paul Simon to Obama, 12 April 2000 (dictated 6 April) and 13 April 2000, PSP; DJG interviews with Dan Shomon, Cynthia Miller, Carol Harwell, Will Burns, John Schmidt, Ab Mikva, and Bruce Spiva.

24. Mikva in Michael Weisskopf, "Obama: How He Learned to Win," Time, 8 May 2008; Nesbitt in Wolffe, Renegade, p. 121; Research Department, National Republican Senatorial Committee, "Barack Obama (D-IL): On the Record," 22 July 2004, p. 5, JRORF (Obama absent for 22 and 28 March 2000 Judiciary Committee votes); HB 665 Senate Vote Tally, 29 March 2000; Senate Floor Transcript, 31 March 2000, pp. 44–45; Link in Scott Helman, "Early Defeat Launched a Rapid Political Climb," BG, 12 October 2007, and in "The Candidates: Barack Obama," MSNBC, 20 February 2008; Kristin Goss, Better Together (Saguaro Seminar on Civic Engagement in America, Harvard University), December 2000, esp. p. 104; Rick Pearson and Ray Long, "Philip Offers 2 Gun Compromises," CT, 5 April 2000; Senate Floor Transcript, 5 April 2000, pp. 13–33 (HB 2379) and 40–42 (HB 4021); Pearson and Ryan Keith, "Ryan Spurns 1 Philip Plan for a Deal on Firearms," CT, 6 April 2000; Pearson and Long, "Governor, GOP Near Deal for Gun Law," CT, 7 April 2000; Pearson and Long, "Senate Gun Deal Restores Felony Status," CT, 8 April 2000; Pearson, "Ryan Ultimatum Propelled Compromise on Gun Bill," CT, 9 April 2000; Rick Hepp, "Ryan Signs Modified Safe Neighborhoods Act," CT, 13 April 2000; CF, 14 April 2000; "2000 Legislative Session Summary," LRU First Reading 14 (June 2000), p. 7; Lightford in Melinda Henneberger, "The Obama Marriage," Slate, 29 October 2007; Diane Salvatore, "Barack and Michelle Obama: The Full Interview," Ladies' Home Journal, August 2008 ("I still remember when . . . Michelle called close to tears because our wonderful babysitter had quit and decided to go back to nursing." Michelle "had depended so heavily on this person to kind of hold it all together. And she was, frankly, mad at me, because she felt as if she was all alone in this process"); DJG interviews with Dan Shomon, Mike Hoffmann, Kim Lightford, Emil Jones Jr., Debbie Halvorson, Jill Rock, Cindy Huebner Davidsmeyer, John Hooker, Christine Radogno, Terry Link, Tommy Walsh, Denny Jacobs, Ned Mitchell, Dan Johnson-Weinberger, Joe Khan, Nat Piggee, and Heather Sullivan.

25. Joseph Omoremi, "Dick Gregory Zings Gangs and Drugs," CD, 10 April 2000, p. 5; JCAR Minutes, 11 April 2000 (with Obama and Lisa Madigan dissenting from an 8–2 vote objecting to state agencies' collection of permit requesters' Social Security numbers); Senate Floor Transcript, 11 April 2000, pp. 7–22 (HB 2855); Karen Shields, "Obama Focuses on Senate, Mulls Over Next Move," HPH, 12 April 2000, p. 10; Rick Pearson and Ryan Keith, "Budget Deal Serves Tax Cuts, Pork," CT, 12 April 2000; Jaime Ingle, "Lawmakers Tone Down Expulsion Legislation," DHR, 12 April 2000, p. A1; Obama on

Illinois Lawmakers with Bruce DuMont, 12 April 2000, MBC; Senate Floor Transcript, 9 January 2001 (Obama votes present as HB 4659 passes 35–10–13); Rich Miller, “Maybe It’s Right Time for Obama to Run,” CST, 8 December 2006, p. 43; Ted McClelland, “How Obama Learned to Be a Natural,” Salon, 12 February 2007; Senate Floor Transcript, 15 April 2000, pp. 33–36; Christi Parsons and Ryan Keith, “Generous Budget Reflects Economy,” CT, 16 April 2000; Stephen S. Morrill, “Client Report for 2000 End of Session,” Morrill and Associates, April 2000; “Session Ends in April,” C-WR 15 #12, 4 May 2000; Martha Irvine, “Working Poor to Get 5 Percent Worth of State Income Tax Relief,” AP, 11 May 2000; Monique Smith, “Low-Income Families to Receive Extra Tax Credit,” and Obama, “Earned Income Tax Credit Highlights a Short Session,” HPH, 24 May 2000, pp. 3, 4; State Senate President James “Pate” Philip, End of Session Report 2000, June 2000, esp. p. 63 (SB 1712 signed into law 2 June as PA 91-0759); “Obama Sponsored Law Helps Domestic Violence Victims,” HPC, 26 October 2000, p. 6; “Obama Strikes Out at Domestic Violence,” HPH, 1 November 2000, p. 11; “Welfare Workers Get Training,” SSJ, 1–16 November 2000, p. 2; Redfield, Money Counts, p. 7; CF, 16 July (Paul Green) and 6 August 1999; Tom Waldron, Supporting Working Families When State Coffers Are Empty: Lessons from Illinois’ Successful Campaign for a Better State EITC (Hatcher Group, November 2003), pp. 3–7; Christopher Wills, “Obama Record Shows a Liberal Open to Compromise,” AP, 25 June 2008; DJG interview with Emil Jones Jr.

26. Barack H. and Michelle R. Obama 1999 Form 1040, n.d.; Kennedy Communications, “State Senator Barack Obama, Candidate for U.S. Senate: Background Report,” April 2003, RRP; Steve Neal, “Attorney General May Be Obama’s Calling,” CST, 19 April 2000, p. 8; Neal, “A Dozen to Consider If Mayor Skips Race,” CST, 8 May 2000, p. 8; Arthur Fournier, “Distinguished Group to Lead Meditations at Holy Week Performance in Rockefeller,” UCC, 13 April 2000 (Haydn’s The Seven Last Words of Christ on 19 April); “Senate Democrat Member Project Authorization Forms,” 9 November 1999 and 3 May 2000, Illinois DCEO FOIA; Obama for Congress 2000, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 April–30 June 2000, 22 November 2002; Chicago Tonight, WTTW, 10 May 2000; Maggie Bertke e-mails to DJG, 4 and 8 April 2011 (Obama speaking about midwestern poverty at a 12 May 2000 Appleseed Network board meeting); “Law School to Co-Sponsor Forum on State’s Death Penalty May 15,” UCC, 11 May 2000; Elizabeth J. Ptacek, “Execution Moratorium Prompts Debate at U. Chicago Law School,” CM, 17 May 2000; JCAR Minutes, 16 May 2000; Shomon in Scott Helman, “Early Defeat Launched a Rapid Political Climb,” BG, 12 October 2007; DJG interviews with Robert Bennett, David Wilhelm, Dan Shomon, and Laura Russell Hunter. The Woods Fund board’s 2000 decision to invest $1 million into Allison Davis’s Neighborhood Rejuvenation Partners would later attract critical queries. See Tim Novak and Fran Spielman, “Obama Helped Ex-Boss Get $1 Mil. from Charity,” CST, 29 November 2007, p. 10, Binyamin Appelbaum, “Grim Proving Ground for Obama’s Housing Policy,” BG, 27 June 2008, p. A1, and Larry Bell, “Obama Kick-Back Cronyism, Part 1,” Forbes.com, 25 October 2011.

27. CBS Evening News, 17 May 2000; Senate Floor Transcript, 7 April 2000, pp. 126–36 (HB 709); Ryan Keith and Ray Long, “Abortion Funding Ban Dropped in Ryan’s Lap,” CT, 8 April 2000; Rick Pearson, “Ryan Vetoes Abortion Curb,” CT, 10 June 2000; CF, 12 and 28 June and 9 August 2000; “Honors,” CDLB, 1 June 2000, p. 3 (10 June IVI-IPO annual dinner); JCAR Minutes, 13 June 2000; Dave McKinney, “Treasurer’s Deal Stirs Debate,” CST, 19 June 2000, p. 8; Steve Neal, “Once More, with Feeling for Hartigan,” CST, 28 June 2000, p. 43; Chinta Strausberg, “Daley to Monitor Tax Relief at Pumps,” CD, 1 July 2000, p. 3; Monique Smith, “Currie: Gas Tax Cut Promises a ‘Pig in a Poke,’” HPH, 5 July 2000, p. 2; “Obama Says General Assembly Suspends Sales Tax on Gas,” CC, 6 July 2000, p. 2; “A Fourth Special Session Recap,” C-WR 16 #2, 26 July 2000, p. 4; Tommiea Jackson, “Tavis Smiley Gets Chicago’s Black Youth ‘Wired,’” CD, 6 July 2000, p. 5; “Tavis Smiley Foundation Works with Chicago Urban League to Present Conference for 100 African American Youth,” PR Newswire, 6 July 2000; “Teen Leadership Conference,” Jet, 7 August 2000, p. 40; CAC Board of Directors Minutes, 16 December 1999; CAC, 1999 Annual Report to the Annenberg Foundation, 31 January 2000; Cindy Richards, “Annenberg Looks for Lessons as Program Winds Down,” Catalyst Chicago, March 2000; CAC Board of Directors Minutes, 27 March 2000 (Obama absent); Michael Martinez, “Education Fund Aims to Boost City Schools,” CT, 29 March 2000; Alexander Russo, “From Frontline Leader to Rearguard Action: The Chicago Annenberg Challenge,” 1 April 2000; CAC Board of Directors Minutes, 26 June 2000; Ken Rolling, “Year 2000 Mid-Year Report to the Annenberg Foundation,” [16] August 2000; CAC, “Summary of Private Matching Grant Contributors,” 22 February 2001; CAC, Year 2000 Annual Report to the Annenberg Foundation, 28 February 2001; Stacy A. Wentzel et al., “Development of Chicago Annenberg Schools: 1996–1999,” Consortium on Chicago School Research (CCSR), July 2001; Mark A. Smylie, Wentzel et al., The Chicago Annenberg Challenge: Successes, Failures, and Lessons for the Future (CCSR, August 2003), esp. pp. vii, 113; Ken Rolling, “Reflections on the Chicago Annenberg Challenge,” in Russo, ed., School Reform in Chicago: Lessons on Policy and Practice (Harvard Education Press, 2004), pp. 23–28; Linda Lenz, “A Conversation with Fred Hess,” Catalyst Chicago, February 2006; Christine C. George, “The Chicago Annenberg Challenge: The Messiness and Uncertainty of Systems Change,” Loyola University of Chicago, 2007; David J. Hoff, “Obama’s Annenberg Stint Informs White House Bid,” Education Week, 7 March 2007, p. 10; Sam Dillon, “Obama Looks to Lessons from Chicago in His National Education Plan,” NYT, 10 September 2008; Will Englund, “How Would Obama Govern?,” National Journal, 25 October 2008; Carol Felsenthal, “Susan Crown on Why She Supports Mitt Romney,” ChicagoMagazine.com, 20 March 2012; Shia Kapos, “Susan Crown’s Juggling Act,” CCB, 26 May 2012; “On the Air,” CDLB, 17 July 2000, p. 3 (Obama on the Public Affairs with Jeff Berkowitz cable television interview show today); JCAR Minutes, 18 July 2000; DJG interviews with Barbara Flynn Currie, Malik Nevels, Pat Graham, and Ken Rolling.

28. “Senate Democratic FY ’01 Member Project Authorization Form,” 28 July and 9, 17, and 31 August 2000, Illinois DCEO FOIA; “$2 Million in Illinois FIRST Projects for Chicago,” Illinois Governor’s Office Press Release, 30 January 2001 ($450,000 for Kennedy-King); Leon Tripplett, “Obama Talks Education and Politics with Chamber,” HPH, 2 August 2000, p. 6; Chinta Strausberg, “Predatory Lending Reform Near,” CD, 10 August 2000, p. 1; Joe Ruklick, “Obama Pushes to Eliminate Mortgage Loan Sharks,” CD, 14 August 2000, p. 3; Billy Poorten, “State Sen. Obama Targets Predatory Lending Rules,” HPH, 16 August 2000, p. 2; “Assembly Urged to Aid Affordable Housing,” JHN, 16 August 2000; Monique Smith, “City and State Reps. Go After Predatory Mortgage Loans,” HPH, 6 September 2000, pp. 1–2; Kyriaki Venetis, “Senator Seeks New Rules,” Origination News, October 2000, p. 12; Smith, “Ald. Hairston Lobbies for Drug Bill in Washington,” HPH, 4 October 2000, p. 2; Malcolm Bush and Daniel Immergluck, “Research, Advocacy, and Community Reinvestment,” in Gregory D. Squires, ed., Organizing Access to Capital (Temple University Press, 2003), pp. 154–68; Jennifer Loven, “Illinois Democrats Wishing for Durbin Gubernatorial Bid,” AP, 14 August 2000; JCAR Minutes, 15 August 2000

(Obama absent); Monique Smith, “Fresh Off Election Year, State Legislators Ring It Up,” HPH, 16 August 2000, p. 3; Obama, commencement address at the University of Massachusetts at Boston, 2 June 2006; Obama, TAOH, pp. 354–55; Christi Parsons, “Michelle Obama’s Mission,” CT, 20 April 2008; “Senator Barack Obama Issues Committee Meeting,” 21 August 2000; Dan Shomon e-mail to Andrew Gruber et al., “Obama Issues Committee—Update!,” 10 September 2000, Will Burns e-mail to Shomon, 11 September 2000, Gruber e-mail to Shomon, “Issues Committee,” 22 September 2000, and Shomon e-mail to Gruber, 29 September 2000, all AGP; Friends of Barack Obama, Form D-2, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures, 1 July–31 December 2000, 31 January 2001; Ruiz in Robin I. Mordfin, “From the Green Lounge to the White House,” UCLS Record, Spring 2009, pp. 2–9; DJG interviews with Jesse Ruiz, John Rogers Jr., Rob and Lisa Fisher, Julius Genachowski, Hasan Chandoo, James Clayborne, Dan Shomon, Will Burns, Andrew Gruber, Mike Marrs, and Bill Fuhry.

29. JCAR Minutes, 19 September 2000; Obama, “Education First; Funding Key to Property Tax Reform,” HPH, 27 September 2000, p. 4; Robin Washington, “Civil Rights Lawyers Honored,” Boston Herald, 24 September 2000, p. 7; Lewis Rice, “School Hosts First Celebration of Black Alumni,” Harvard Law Bulletin, Fall 2000; [Sandy O’Donnell], “Hope Center Retreat: Notes on Discussion on Purposes, Identity, Niche, and the Mission of the Hope Center Going Forward,” 30 September 2000, “Proposal for the ‘New’ Hope Center’s Identity, Niche, Purposes,” n.d. [post 30 September 2000], SOP; UCLS Announcements 2000–01, pp. 40, 45; UCLS, The Glass Menagerie 2000–01, esp. p. 19; “Constitutional Law III Prof. Obama—Autumn 2000 Syllabus,” Martin Chester Papers; Obama, Constitutional Law III Final Examination, December 2000; “Current Issues in Racism and the Law—Fall 2000,” Peter Steffen Papers; Jodi Kantor, “Barack Obama, Forever Sizing Up,” NYT, 26 October 2008; DJG interviews with Kenny Smith, Cynthia Miller, Will Burns, John Eason, Sokoni Karanja, Marty Chester, Daniel Lin, Stacy Monahan Tucker, Peter Steffen, Dan Sokol, and Rachael Pontikes.

30. “Senate Democrat FY 01 Member Project Authorization Form,” 19 September and 4 October 2000, Illinois DCEO FOIA; “Ryan: $215,000 in Illinois FIRST Projects for Chicago’s Southeast Side,” 13 October 2000, “Ryan: $1.4 Million in Illinois FIRST Projects for Chicago South,” 31 October 2000, “$1.5 Million in Illinois FIRST Projects for South Chicago,” 20 November 2000, “Ryan: $1.4 Million in Illinois FIRST Projects for Chicago,” 29 November 2000, “$1.7 Million in Illinois FIRST Projects for Chicago,” 15 December 2000, Illinois Governor’s Office Press Releases; “Currie, Obama Bring It Home,” HPH, 29 November 2000, p. 3; “Senate Democrat FY 01 Member Project Authorization Form,” 19 December 2000, Illinois DCEO FOIA; “$2 Million in Illinois FIRST Projects for Chicago,” Illinois Governor’s Office Press Release, 30 January 2001 ($100,000 for the Englewood Botanical Garden); Kenny B. Smith to Carla Needham, 31 December 2002, Smith to Paula Vehovic, 14 October 2003, Illinois DCEO FOIA; Obama for Congress 2000, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 October–31 December 2000, 22 November 2002 (five 7 October donors: Margaret A. Davis, J. Archie Hargraves, Fred Morrison, Shirley Newman, and Alvin Shields); “$5.6 Million in Illinois FIRST Projects for Chicago,” Illinois Governor’s Office Press Release, 28 February 2001 (including $75,000 to FORUM “to provide infrastructure, training and support maintenance for computer technology and internet access for inner city, low income families”); Ray Gibson and David Jackson, “State Pork to Obama’s District Included Allies, Donors,” CT, 3 May 2007; Dan Morain, “Obama: A Fresh Face or an Old-School Tactician,” LAT, 8 September 2007; Christopher Wills, “Obama Says Illinois Earmarks Are Public,” AP, 13 March 2008; Chris Fusco and Dave McKinney, “Obama’s $100,000 Garden Grant Wasted,” CST, 11 July 2008; Bob Secter and Gibson, “Obama Has Long Backed Faith Charities,” CT, 12 July 2008; Chris Fusco et al., “Obama’s Goodie Bag,” CST, 17 July 2008, p. 9; Fusco and McKinney, “Obama Grant Being Probed,” CST, 25 September 2008; DJG interview with Dan Shomon.

31. CF, 29 September 2000, Congressional Record, 4 and 5 October 2000, pp. S9800–08, 9812, 9814–15, 9818–20, 9896–98; Mike Dorning, “Library Feud Spurs Fitzgerald Filibuster,” CT, 5 October 2000; Steve Rhodes, “Party Pooper,” Chicago Magazine, May 2001, pp. 98–101, 120–26; Geoffrey Johnson, “The Lincoln Crusade,” Chicago Magazine, April 2005; Obama, Youth Government Day address, Southern Illinois University, 21 October 2000; Simon to Obama, 26 October 2000, PSP.

32. JCAR Minutes, 17 October 2000; [Will Burns] to Senator Obama Issues Committee, “Education Policy,” 17 October 2000, “Obama Issues Committee Meeting,” 18 October 2000, Fran Tobin e-mail to Leslie Corbett, “Obama Issues Committee,” 19 October 2000, Tracy Ocomy e-mail to Corbett, “Obama Issues Committee,” 23 October 2000, all AGP; Obama, “By George, Gore and Bush Are Different,” HPH, 1 November 2000; “Around Town,” CDLB, 19 October 2000, p. 3; “In the Law Schools,” CDLB, 1 November 2000, p. 3; CARPLS Annual Meeting 2000, 2 November 2000, CARPLS Papers; Bonnie McGrath, “After Hours,” CDLB, 14 November 2000, p. 3; Bill Fuhry e-mail to Dan Shomon and Obama, “Issues,” 3 November 2000, AGP; “DCP 14th Annual Victory Convention” sign-in sheet, 3 November 2000; Chicago Tonight, WTTW, 6 November 2000; John R. Weinberger e-mail to Shomon, “Obama Issues,” 9 November 2000, AGP; Chicago Tonight, WTTW, 13 November 2000; Andrew Gruber e-mail to Shomon, “Obama Issues Committee Meeting,” 13 November 2000, Burns e-mail to Shomon, 14 November 2000, AGP; JCAR Minutes, 14 November 2000; Dean Olsen, “Proposal to Halt Payday Loan Abuses Blocked,” SJ-R, 15 November 2000, p. 28; “Obama Issues Committee Meeting,” 15 November 2000, AGP; Senate Floor Transcript, 15 November 2000, pp. 2 (SJR 75), 5–28 (SB 1426), 51–61 (SB 1867); Woods Fund of Chicago, 1999 Annual Report, pp. 4–6; Paul Merrion, “Taxpayer Champion Emerges,” CCB, 27 November 1999; Senate Floor Transcript, 30 November 2000, pp. 7–8 (HB 1511), 8–14 (HB 1991 passes 51–3–1 and is signed into law 11 January 2001 as PA-91-0937); Joe Biesk, “New Law Extends Life of Economic Enterprise Zones,” CT, 12 January 2001; CF, 1 December 2000; Stephen S. Morrill, “Client Report for 2000 Veto Session,” Morrill and Associates, December 2000; Billy Poorten, “Local Officials Vote ‘Yea’ on Soldier Field Plan,” HPH, 6 December 2000, p. 3; “General Assembly Maintains Status Quo,” C-WR 16 #6, 8 December 2000, p. 2; Chicago Tonight, WTTW, 8 December 2000; “Loan Battle Brews Anew,” CCB, 11 December 2000, p. 4; JCAR Minutes, 12 December 2000; Shomon e-mail to Gruber et al., “Obama Issues Committee Meeting,” 12 December 2000, AGP; CAC Board of Directors Minutes, 14 December 2000; “Veto Session Wrap Up,” C-WR 16 #7, 15 December 2000, p. 2; Melissa Allison, “State Takes on Predatory Lending,” CT, 15 December 2000; Randy Blaser, “Payday Loan Rules Go Back to Legislature,” Lake Zurich Courier, 21 December 2000 (and eleven additional newspapers, 21 December 2000 through 4 January 2001); JCAR 1997–2001 Annual Reports, ca. 2002, p. 69; [Debbie] Lounsberry, “Barack Obama—The Record: A Summary,” 10 May 2004, p. 4, JRORF (highlighting above all other Senate floor votes Obama’s voting present on HB 1511, a tougher-sentencing measure, which passed 54–2–2, on 30 November 2000); Nesbitt in Kevin McDermott, “Unlikely Competitors: Years as Outsider Gave Obama the Ability to Relate, Friends Say,” SLPD, 24 October 2004, p. A1, in Mendell, Obama, pp. 151–54, and in Wolffe, Renegade, pp. 122, 330;

DJG interviews with Dan Shomon, Andrew Boron, Judy Byrd, Bernardine Dohrn, James Clayborne, Ray Harris, Steven Mange, Will Burns, Warren Chain, Leslie Corbett, Mike Marrs, Bill Fuhry, Desta Houston, and Lisa Madigan.

33. Scott Lynch-Giddings diary entry, 15 December 2000; Melissa M. Bernardoni, “Robinson to Lead Diversity Affairs,” GSB Magazine, Winter 2000; James B. Arndorfer, “Minority Funds Seek More Pension Work,” CCB, 26 March 2001, p. 58; Jim Reynolds to Robert Newtonson, 11 June 2001, ISBI Papers; Hermene D. Hartman, “Barack and Black Enterprise,” N’Digo, 7–13 June 2007, p. 3; Obama, remarks at National Urban League Annual Conference, St. Louis, MO, 27 July 2007; Christopher Drew and Raymond Hernandez, “Loyal Network Backs Obama After His Help,” NYT, 1 October 2007; Hartman, “Barack’s Friends Were ABLE!,” and Reynolds in David Smallwood, “Genesis of the Grassroots Movement,” N’Digo Profiles, December 2008, pp. 10–11, 44; Obama for Congress 2000, FEC Candidate Summary Report, 31 December 2000; Todd Spivak, “No Money? State Reps Say It’s No Sweat,” HPH, 21 February 2001, pp. 1–2; Chuck Neubauer and Tom Hamburger, “Obama Donor Received a State Grant,” LAT, 27 April 2008; Peoria Public Schools, Staff News Weekly, 4 February 2009, p. 1; Raoul V. Mowatt, “Sport of Table Tennis Gets a Local Spin,” CT, 2 January 2003; Robert Blackwell Jr.’s 2012 interview with John Page; DJG interviews with Scott Lynch-Giddings, David Wilhelm, David Spiegel, Hermene Hartman, Janis Robinson, John Rogers Jr., Stephen Pugh, Eugene Morris, Les Coney, Martin King, Dan Shomon, Mike Lieteau, Carol Harwell, John Schmidt, Robert Blackwell Jr., and Raja Krishnamoorthi.

34. Dave McKinney, “Partisan Rumble,” II, January 2001, pp. 12–28; UCLS Announcements 2000–01, p. 84; JCAR Minutes, 9 January 2001; Dean Olsen, “Lawmakers Slow Down Ruling for Special Education Changes,” SJ-R, 10 January 2001, p. 6; Corey H. v. Board of Education, 995 F. Supp. 900, 903, 912 (N. D. Ill.), 19 February 1998; Michael Martinez, “State Board Ripped Over Disabled Kids,” CT, 24 February 1998; Stephanie Banchemo, “State Board OKs Special-Ed Change,” CT, 17 March 2000; Banchemo, “State Appeals U.S. Ruling on Special Education,” CT, 13 October 2000; Order, Corey H. v. Board of Education, 27 February 2001; Reid L. v. Illinois State Board of Education, 289 F. 3d 1009 (7th Cir.), 13 May 2002; CF, 10 (noting a $10,000 annual increase in Senate district office allotments), 11 and 12 January 2001; Senate Floor Transcript, 10 January 2001, pp. 11–12 and 24; John S. Sharp, “New Rules for DUI Blood Test Approved by Legislative Panel,” CDH, 11 January 2001, p. 10; JCAR Minutes, 11 January 2001; James Fuller, “Bill Would Inform Voters How to Fix Ballot Mistakes,” CST, 15 January 2001, p. 12; Obama, “How to Keep Cool Over the Rising Heating Costs,” HPH, 17 January 2001, p. 4; Barbara Sherlock, “Legislators, Groups Praise Fight Against Predatory Lending,” CT, 11 March 2001; “Leadership and Committee Assignments,” C-WR 16 #8, 19 March 2001; Jodi Kantor, “As Professor, Obama Held Pragmatic Views on Court,” NYT, 3 May 2009; DJG interviews with Kristen Seeger, Nathaniel Edmonds, Alleza Strubel, Mark Warnick, Denny Jacobs, John Cullerton, and Miguel del Valle.

35. Chicago Tonight, WTTW, 17 January 2001; Gretchen Helfrich, “The Court and Civil Rights,” Odyssey, WBEZ Radio, 18 January 2001; Jane R. Patterson and Michael L. Mory to Governor George H. Ryan and Members of the General Assembly, “Report on Emerging Investment Managers Fiscal Year 2000,” 31 August 2000, “Presentation of Requests to Jane Patterson, Executive Director,” 20 December 2000, “Presentation of Requests to the Illinois State Board of Investment by African-American Owned Investment Management and Broker/Dealer Securities Firms,” [19 January 2001], Joseph P. Cacciatore, Minutes, Illinois State Board of Investment, 19 January 2001, Keith Cardoza to Board Members, “Minority Brokers and Money Managers,” 21 February 2001, ISBI Papers; Keith Bozarth, “Minutes of the Investment Committee,” and Bozarth, “Minutes of the Regular Meeting of the Board of Trustees,” Teachers’ Retirement System, 15–16 February 2001, TRSI Papers; Obama’s remarks at the National Urban League Annual Conference, St. Louis, MO, 27 July 2007. On WTTW, Barack also volunteered that “I, for example, don’t agree with a missile defense system.”

36. Chinta Strausberg, “Vouchers Will Hurt Public Schools,” CD, 24 January 2001, p. 1; Dan Shomon e-mail to Andrew Gruber, “Draft Release,” 26 January 2001, AGP; Curtis Lawrence and Scott Fornek, “After Washington, Several Figures Fill Political Voice,” CST, 28 January 2001, p. 11; “Obama, Aldermen Announce State Legislation to Guarantee Faster Assistance for Laid-Off Workers,” Press Release, 28 January 2001, AGP; Strausberg, “Sen. Obama Bill to Aid Laid-Off Workers,” CD, 29 January 2001, p. 3; Courtney Challos, “Legislators Pushing Plan to Aid Unemployed,” CT, 29 January 2001; “Bills Would Aid Laid-Off Workers,” CST, 29 January 2001, p. 16; Shomon to Cheryl Howard (Illinois Coalition Against Domestic Violence) and Tom Mannard and Chris Boyster (Illinois Council Against Handgun Violence), “Legislation on Gun Control and Domestic Violence,” 30 January 2001, AGP; Senate Floor Transcript, 31 January 2001, pp. 6–7 (Obama introducing SBs 33, 41, 51, 59, 61, and 62); AP, “Reactions to Ryan’s Address,” 31 January 2001; Senate Floor Transcript, 1 February 2001, p. 3 (Obama introducing SBs 123, 124, 125, and 126); Pam Belluck, “Illinois Governor Dogged by Inquiry into Corruption,” NYT, 3 February 2001; Steve Neal, “Battle for Attorney General’s Office Already Taking Shape,” CST, 5 February 2001, p. 29; Barbara Flynn Currie, Leslie Hairston, Barack Obama, and Toni Preckwinkle, “No Secret Meetings Here!,” HPH, 7 February 2001, p. 4; Henry Bayer (AFSCME) to Illinois State Board of Investment, 9 February 2001, ISBIP; Shomon e-mail to Gruber and Gruber e-mail to Shomon, “Layoffs,” 13 February 2001, AGP; Obama and Preckwinkle, “State Government Must Protect Laid-Off Workers,” HPH, 14 February 2001, p. 4; Gruber e-mail to Shomon, “WARN,” 28 February 2001, AGP; Lisa B. Song, “Senate Democrats Seek to Close Gun Loopholes,” CT, 14 February 2001; Sean Noble, “Senate Democrats’ Proposals Take Aim at Weapons Control,” SJ-R, 15 February 2001, p. 7; Richard Goldstein, “Florida Election Fallout Still Being Heard,” QCT, 19 February 2001 and as “Funding May Derail State Election Reform,” DHR, 20 February 2001, p. A1; Strausberg, “Jones, Obama Dare Pate to Bring Gun Bill to Floor,” CD, 20 February 2001, p. 6; CF, 21 February and 7 March 2001; Obama’s February 2001 interview with Julieanna Richardson; Baim, Obama and the Gays, pp. 13, 194. To Richardson, Barack further asserted, “I think that the civil rights movement probably had the biggest influence on my life, the participants in that. Not just Dr. King or Malcolm X, but Bob Moses and Fannie Lou Hamer and Rosa Parks and E. D. Nixon.”

37. “Obama, Davis, Leading Pastors Announce Legislation to Study Racial Profiling in Illinois,” Obama Staff Press Release, 19 February 2001; Chinta Strausberg, “End Racial Profiling,” CD, 20 February 2001, p. 1; Senate Floor Transcript, 20 February 2001, pp. 10, 17 (Obama introducing SBs 266 and 375); JCAR Minutes, 21 February 2001; Order, Corey H. v. Board of Education, 27 February 2001; Sean Noble and Dean Olsen, “Judge Allows Hearings on Changes in Training, Work of Special-Ed Teachers,” SJ-R, 28 February 2001, p. 26; Reid L. v. Illinois State Board of Education, 289 F. 3d. 1009 (7th Cir.), 13 May 2002; Senate Floor Transcript, 21 February 2001, pp. 8, 11, 22 (Obama introducing SBs 578, 619, 620, 621, 622, 623, 624, and 801); Senate Floor Transcript, 22 February 2001, pp. 2, 16, 31–32 (Obama introducing SBs 893, 894, 1111, 1112, 1322, and 1338); Bridget M. Kuhn, “KidCare Becomes a Healthy Success,” DS, 26 January 2000, p. A3; Strausberg, “Ryan Urges Lawmakers to OK Health, Heating Bill,” CD, 27 February 2001, p. 8; Gretchen Helfrich, “The Right to Vote,” Odyssey, WBEZ Radio, 27 February 2001; Todd Spivak, “Obama Lobbies for State Racial Profiling Legislation,” HPH, 28 February 2001, pp. 1–2; Strausberg, “No Gambling at O’Hare,” CD, 28 February 2001, p. 3; Senate Floor Transcript, 28 February 2001, pp. 11–35 (SR 63 adopted 35–22) and 35 (Obama introducing SJR 14); CF, 1 March 2001; Rick Pearson, “Some See a Hidden Motive in Philip’s Bipartisan Move,” CT, 1 March 2001; “Senate Democrat FY 01 Member Project Authorization Form,” 2 March 2001, DCEO Papers FOIA; “Obama ‘Booked for Lunch,’” SJ-R, 4 March 2001, p. 45; Obama remarks, Illinois State Library, 7 March 2001; Daniel C. Vock, “Panel Votes to End Defense of Intoxication,” CDLB, [8] March 2001, pp. 1, 22; Monica Davey and E. A. Torriero, “Jackson Group Defends Its Links to State Grant,” CT, 17 March 2001; Pearson, “State Hopefuls Test Waters for 2002 Primary,” CT, 19 March 2001; “On the Air,” CDLB, 19 March 2001, p. 3; JCAR Minutes, 20 March 2001; DJG interviews with Brad Burzynski, Beverly Helm-Renfro, David Wilhelm, and Scott Kennedy.

38. Briefs filed 21 March 2001, #00-4110 and #01-1810, in U.S. ex rel Chandler v. Cook County, 277 F. 3d 969 (7th Cir.), 22 January 2002, Cook County v. U.S. ex rel Chandler, 538 U. S. 119, 10 March 2003; Gabriel Piemonte, “Sen. Obama Introduces [sic] State Affordable Housing Bill,” HPH, 21 March 2001, pp. 1–2; “$16.1 Million in Illinois FIRST Projects for Chicago,” Illinois Governor’s Office Press Release, 23 March 2001; Adriana Colindres, “Capital Beat,” PJS, 25 March 2001, p. B5; “Senate Committee Action Report,” Judiciary, 27 March 2001 (SB 1095); Senate Floor Transcript, 29 March 2001, pp. 48 (Obama commending Revenue Committee chairman Bill Peterson on his SB 1135), 93–99 (SB 78), and 105–25 (SB 155); John S. Sharp, “House Advances Plan Addressing Race Profiling,” CDH, 30 March 2001, p. 6; Senate Floor Transcript, 30 March 2001, pp. 84–90 (SBs 1093, 1094, and 1095); Dave McKinney, “Bill Proposes Care for Fetus After Abortion,” CST, 31 March 2001, p. 1; Jeannine Koranda, “Senate OKs Limits on Abortion,” DHR, 31 March 2001, p. 1; Doug Finke, “Dollars for Dialing,” II, April 2001, pp. 17–18; “Obama’s Tax Credit Bill Moves to Senate Floor,” and “Obama’s Housing Tax Credit Bill Passes Through Illinois Senate,” Obama Staff Press Releases, 2 April 2001; “Obama Passes Bill to Expedite Order of Protection Process,” Obama Staff Press Release, 3 April 2001; Piemonte, “Obama’s Housing Bill Passes Senate,” HPH, 4 April 2001, p. 10; Minutes of the Regular Meeting of the Board of Trustees, General Assembly Retirement System of Illinois, 4 April 2001 (#219), GARS Papers, pp. 1839–44 (Obama’s first meeting as a newly appointed member of the board, per Tim Blair e-mail to DJG, 17 December 2013); Senate Floor Transcript, 4 April 2001, pp. 94–118, esp. 106 (SB 604 fails 29–27); Ray Long and Joe Biesk, “Gun Show Checks OK’d but House Rejects Firearms Database,” CT, 5 April 2001; “Obama Helps Defeat Concealed-Carry Legislation,” Obama Staff Press Release, 5 April 2001; Senate Floor Transcript, 5 April 2001, pp. 68–70 (Obama’s SB 62, which on 18 July 2001 became PA 92-0087), 91–99, esp. 91 (SB 636), and 175–91, esp. 175–76 (SB 663); Rick Pearson, “2nd Chance Vote System Under Fire,” CT, 6 April 2001; Senate Floor Transcript, 6 April 2001, pp. 18–26; “Obama: Drug Offender Rehabilitation Initiative OK’d by Senate,” “Obama Co-Sponsors Bill Providing Vital Information to Rape Victims,” and “Obama Health Care Measures Gain Senate Approval,” Obama Staff Press Releases, 6 April 2001; Chinta Strausberg, “Obama Scores Big in Senate Passing of 3 Bills,” CD, 9 April 2001, p. 5; Todd Spivak, “Sen. Obama Helps Defeat a Concealed Firearm Bill,” HPH, 11 April 2001, p. 3; “$4.4 Million in Illinois FIRST Projects for Chicago,” Illinois Governor’s Office Press Release, 11 April 2001; Strausberg, “Sen. Obama’s Bill Passes; Helps Laid-Off Workers,” CD, 12 April 2001, p. 5; “Obama: Legislation to Help Laid-Off Workers Passes Senate” and “Obama Legislation to Prevent Telemarketers from Calling Certain Illinois Residents,” Obama Staff Press Releases, 13 April 2001; Ryan Keith, “Obama’s Past Offers Ammo for Critics,” AP, 17 January 2007; Mike Robinson (AP), “Obama Got Start in Civil Rights Practice,” WP, 20 February 2007; Abdon M. Pallasch, “Obama’s Legal Career,” CST, 17 December 2007, p. 4; Christopher Wills, “Obama’s Thin But Varied Record,” AP, 16 January 2008; Adrienne P. Samuels, “Barack’s Chicago,” Ebony, January 2009; DJG interviews with Judd Miner, Jeffrey Cummings, John Belcaster, Marni Willenson, Carolyn Shapiro, Rob Scott, Beverly Helm-Renfro, John Bouman, William McNary, Doug Dobmeyer, Kirk Dillard, Dan Cronin, Al Sharp, Linda Mills, Nancy Shier, Randy Wells, Josh Hoyt, Don Moore, Hal Baron, Mike Marrs, Cindi Canary, Dan Shomon, Peter Steffen, Marty Chester, and Ted Liazos.

39. Barack H. and Michelle L. Obama, 2000 Form 1040, 15 April 2001; Obama, “Statement of Economic Interests,” IL-0221-2001, 27 April 2001; Friends of Barack Obama, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures, 1 January–30 June 2001, 9 August 2001; “People,” CT, 29 April 2001; Woods Fund of Chicago, 2000 Annual Report (ca. May 2001); Todd Spivak, “Currie, Obama Team During Key Springfield Session,” HPH, 18 April 2001, p. 6; Joseph Omoremi, “Coalition Mobilizes Support for Predatory Lending Rule,” CD, 5 April 2001, p. 3; CF, 17 April 2001; JCAR Minutes, 17 April 2001; Ryan Keith, “Legislative Committee Approves Rules on Predatory Lending,” AP, 17 April 2001; Abdon M. Pallasch, “State Committee Passes ‘Predatory Lending’ Law,” CST, 18 April 2001, p. 66; Ray Long and Melissa Allison, “Illinois OKs Predatory Loan Curbs,” CT, 18 April 2001; Dean Olsen, “Regulations to Stop Predatory Lending OK’d,” SJ-R, 18 April 2001, p. 9; “Obama Leads Way to Predatory Lending Reform,” Obama Staff Press Release, 18 April 2001; Chinta Strausberg, “Ryan Says Anti-Predatory Lending Bill Is Progress,” CD, 19 April 2001, p. 26; Spivak, “Obama a Key Leader on Predatory Lending Reforms,” HPH, 25 April 2001, p. 8; “Illinois Groups Win Sweeping Anti-Predatory Lending Regulations,” and Gale Cincotta, “State Anti-Predatory Lending Regulations Show Power of Community Groups,” Disclosure, April–May 2001; Bush and Immergluck, “Research, Advocacy, and Community Reinvestment,” in Squires, ed., Organizing Access to Capital, p. 165; CF, 22 March 2001; Strausberg, “City State Pols Say Remap Cannot Take from Blacks,” CD, 19 April 2001, p. 3; Gretchen Helfrich, “Redistricting,” Odyssey, WBEZ Radio, 23 April 2001; Joseph Omoremi, “Community Organization ‘Butts Heads’ with Aldermen,” CD, 24 April 2001, p. 6; “Seniors Rally for Bill to Provide Discount Medications to Elderly,” SJ-R, 26 April 2001, p. 23; Richard Goldstein, “Illinois Senate Approves Sexual Offender Bill,” QCT, 1 May 2001; Spivak, “Reps but No Residents at Redistricting Hearings,” and “Currie, Obama: Tight Budget Dictates New Legislation,” HPH, 2 May 2001, pp. 3 and 8; Kevin McDermott, “Senate Panel Waters Down Telephone Solicitation Bill,” SLPD, 2 May 2001, p. B1; Lesley R. Chinn, “St. Mark Church Hosts Forum on Racial Profiling,” CC, 3 May 2001, p. 12; “Obama Legislation Moves to Governor’s Desk,” Obama Staff Press Release, 3 May 2001; “$5.5 Million in Illinois FIRST Projects for Chicago,” Illinois Governor’s Office Press Release, 8 May 2001; Spivak, “Racial Profiling Bill Blocked by Senate Again” and “Obama Bill Passes Senate,” HPH, 9 May 2001, pp. 1, 2, 8, and 12; Goldstein, “Senate to Hear Sex Offender Bill,” DHR, 9 May 2001, p. A6; Senate Floor Transcript, 9 May 2001, pp. 21–24 (HB 313); “Obama Passes Bill to Strengthen Nursing Home Inspections,” Obama Staff Press Release, 10 May 2001; Senate Floor Transcript, 10 May 2001, pp. 50–59 (HB 2088) and 95–106 (HB 126); Ben Kieckhefer, “Bill Would Increase Penalties for Dealing Ecstasy,” SJ-R, 11 May 2001, p. 16 (and PJS p. B1); Obama e-mails to Ronald Loui, 11 November 2000, 15 February 2001, and 12 May 2001 (withdrawing from a tentatively scheduled 23 May banquet speech in St. Louis); Goldstein, “Senate to Hear Telemarketing Bill,” DHR, 15 May 2001, p. D1; “Obama, Currie: District Receives Illinois First Money for Projects in Hyde Park,” Obama Staff Press Release, 15 May 2001; JCAR Minutes, 15 May 2001; Senate Floor Transcript, 15 May 2001, pp. 44–66, esp. 46–50 (HB 1812); Jeff Zeleny and Ray Long, “Senate OKs Expanded Death Penalty,” CT, 16 May 2001; Dave McKinney and James Fuller, “Bill Seeks Death Penalty for Gang Killings,” CST, 16 May 2001, p. 12; Obama, “Give Nonviolent Female Offenders 2nd Chance,” HPH, 16 May 2001, p. 4; Charles N. Wheeler III, “Remap 2000,” in David A. Joens et al., Almanac of Illinois Politics—2000 (University of Illinois at Springfield, 2000), pp. 13–22; Samuel K. Gove, “Origins, Mechanics, and Politics,” in Redistricting Illinois 2001 (University of Illinois, 2001), pp. 1–5; “Census 2000 and Redistricting in Illinois,” CW-R 16 #9, 23 May 2001; Spivak, “Gang Affiliation a Death Penalty Determinant,” and Gabriel Piemonte, “Tax Credit Bill at Final Hurdle,” HPH, 13 June 2001, pp. 6 and 11; Senate President James “Pate” Philip, End of Session Report 2001, esp. p. 91; Carlos Hernandez Gomez, “Population Soars but Political Power Lags,” Chicago Reporter, September 2001; “Major Bills Passed by the Illinois General Assembly,” LRU First Reading 15 (September 2001): 8–15; “Legislative Highlights,” C-WR 16 #11, 19 September 2001; Charles N. Wheeler III, “Remap 2001,” in Barbara Van Dyke-Brown et al., Almanac of Illinois Politics—2002 (University of Illinois at Springfield, 2002), pp. 3–13; Sam Youngman and Aaron Blake, “Obama’s Crime Votes Are Fodder for Rivals,” The Hill, 14 March 2007; Sara Just, “How Republicans Plan on Ganging Up on Obama for Being ‘Weak’ on Street Gangs,” ABCNews.com, 23 April 2008; Sam Dillon, “Obama Pledge Stirs Hope in Early Education,” NYT, 17 December 2008; Dillard in Abramsky, Inside Obama’s Brain, p. 54; Shia Kapos, “Abby McCormick O’Neil Steps into Chicago’s Cultural Spotlight,” CCB, 23 October 2010; DJG interviews with Sokoni Karanja, Todd Dietterle, Howard Stanback, John Corrigan, Dave Gross, Kirk Dillard, and Mark Donahue.

40. CF, 16, 21, 22, and 29 May and 8 June 2001; Senate Floor Transcript, 16 May 2001, pp. 35–43 (HB 1900); Senate Floor Transcript, 17 May 2001, p. 55 (HB 1887); “Obama Legislation Removes Juveniles from Paying Non-Emergency Medical or Dental Services,” Obama Staff Press Release, 18 May 2001; Senate Floor Transcript, 21 May 2001, pp. 9–10 (SJR 26); JCAR, Annual Report 2001; Reid L. v. Illinois State Board of Education, 289 F. 3d 1009, 1016, 1020 (7th Cir.), 13 May 2002; Chinta Strausberg, “Illinois Black Caucus Bills Pass,” CD, 23 May 2001, p. 10; Corey Hall, “Legislation Seeks to Protect Children from Lead Poisoning Passes,” CC, 24 May 2001, p. 8; Senate Floor Transcript, 25 May 2001, pp. 7–28 (HB 2917); Anthony Man, “State Senate Passes Remap,” SJ-R, 25 May 2001, p. 14 (and DHR, 26 May, p. A1, and QCT, 26 May); “$1.2 Million in Illinois FIRST Projects for Chicago,” Illinois Governor’s Office Press Release, 25 May 2001; Senate Floor Transcript, 30 May 2001, pp. 15–30 (HB 1599); “Obama Legislation to Reduce Lead Poisoning Exposure,” Obama Staff Press Release, 30 May 2001; Senate Floor Transcript, 31 May 2001, pp. 56–64 (SR 153) and 106–9 (HB 3440); Doug Finke, “Lawmakers OK Budget,” SJ-R, 1 June 2001; Dan Mihalopoulos, “Political Opponents Cast Out by Remap,” CT, 27 June 2001; John Mercurio, “Between the Lines,” RC, 2 July 2001; Todd Spivak, “Rush Opponents Are Drawn Out of First District,” and Obama, “Tallying Wins and Losses in Springfield,” HPH, 4 July 2001, pp. 3, 4, 14; Woods Fund of Chicago, 2001 Annual Report, pp. 8–11; Corey Hall, “Senator Obama Assesses State Legislature’s Failures and Triumphs,” HPC, 12 July 2001, p. 5; Ken Dilanian, “Obama Shifts Stance on Environmental Issues,” USAT, 18 July 2008; Ben Whitford, “Coal and Clear Skies: Obama’s Balancing Act,” Plenty Magazine, 31 October 2008.

41. Jodi Wilgoren, “Chief Executive of Chicago Schools Resigns,” NYT, 7 June 2001; Irv Kupcinet, “Kup’s Column,” CST, 24 June 2001, p. 16; Pete Thamel, “Coach with a Link to Obama Has Hope for Brown’s Future,” NYT, 16 February 2007; Paul Buker, “Trading It All for Basketball,” Oregonian, 13 April 2008; Ginny Graves, “Back to Life in Midlife,” More, July–August 2008, pp. 132ff.; Robinson, A Game of Character, pp. 157–63; Obama, TAOH, pp. 4, 340; Wolffe, Renegade, pp. 52, 120; Keith Cardoza to Board Members, “Minority Broker and Money Managers,” 21 February 2001, Ron Schmitz to Board Members, “Manager Search Process—Public Security Managers,” 21 February 2001, Joseph P. Cacciatore, “Minutes of the Minority Broker/Manager Policy Committee,” 23 February 2001, Cardoza to Board Members, “Minority Brokers and Money Managers,” 18 April 2001, Cacciatore, “Minutes of the Illinois State Board of Investment Sub-Committee for Minority Broker/Manager Policy,” 23 April 2001, ISBI Papers; Robin Goldwyn Blumenthal, “Quid Pro Quota? How Jesse Jackson Aims to Get More Pension Fund Business for His Contributors,” Barron’s, 21 May 2001; Jane R. Patterson to Board Members, “June 11, 2001 Sub-Committee Meeting,” 4 June 2001, Cardoza to Board Members, “Barron’s Article,” 6 June 2001, Jim Reynolds to Robert Newton, 11 June 2001, Cacciatore, “Minutes of the Illinois State Board of Investment Sub-Committee for Minority Broker/Manager Policy,” 11 June 2001, ISBIP; J. Fred Giertz, “Minutes,” Investment Committee, Board of Trustees of the State Universities Retirement System, 22 March 2001, James M. Hacking, “Minutes, Quarterly Meeting of the Board of Trustees of the State Universities Retirement System,” 23 March 2001, John R. Krimmel and Dan M. Slack to Members of the SURS Investment Committee, “Report from the Working Group on Minority-Owned and Female-Owned Investment Managers,” 23 April 2001, SURSI Papers; “Michael Riordan to Become CEO of University of Chicago Hospitals,” UCH Press Release, 11 June 2001; Michelle on The Oprah Winfrey Show, 19 January 2005, and in Cassandra West, “Her Plan Went Awry,” CT, 1 September 2004; Michelle Obama, “How I Got Unstuck,” O Magazine, September 2005, pp. 22ff.; Obama, TAOH, p. 338; Michelle in Anne E. Kornblut, “Michelle Obama’s Career Timeout,” WP, 11 May 2007, in Judy Keen, “Michelle Obama: Campaigning Her Way,” USAT, 11 May 2007, in Sandra Sobieraj Westfall, “Michelle Obama: ‘This Is Who I Am,’” People, 18 June 2007, p. 118, in Maria L. La Ganga, “It’s All About Priorities for Michelle Obama,” LAT, 22 August 2007, in Holly Yeager, “The Heart and Mind of Michelle Obama,” O Magazine, November 2007, pp. 286ff., in Kristen Gelineau, “Would-Be First Lady Drifts into Rock-Star Territory,” AP, 30 March 2008, in Stefano Esposito, “‘2 People Who Love Each Other,’” CST, 13 July 2008, p. A2, and in Geraldine Brooks, “Michelle Obama: Camelot 2.0?,” More, October 2008; Joe Stephens, “Obama Camp Has Many Ties to Wife’s Employer,” WP, 22 August 2008; Katherine Skiba, “First Lady’s Former Chief of Staff ‘Blissfully Unemployed,’” CT, 29 January 2011; Maya in Scott Helman, “Early Defeat Launched a Rapid Political Climb,” BG, 12 October 2007, on American Morning, CNN, 26 August 2008, in Stuart Coleman, “Tea with Barack Obama’s Sister,” Salon, 23 October 2008, and in Fran Korten, “Obama’s Sister: What Our Mother Taught Us,” Yes Magazine, Summer 2011; Obama on Hannity & Colmes, FOX, 24 October 2006, at the 23 October 2006 American Magazine Conference, and on Off Topic with Carlos Watson, CNN, 24 October 2004; DJG interviews with Janis Robinson and Kevin Thompson.

42. JCAR Minutes, 12 June 2001; Minutes, Board of Trustees Meeting, Demos: A Network for Ideas and Action, 19–20 June 2001, SHP; Gary Washburn, “Murphy Eyes Role in Black Caucus,” CT, 20 June 2001; John W. Fountain, “A White Alderman Who Wants to Join a Black Caucus,” NYT, 23 June 2001; Washburn, “Caucus Mulling Murphy’s Plea,” CT, 28 June 2001; “Ryan: $1 Million in Illinois FIRST Projects for Chicago,” Illinois Governor’s Office Press Release, 28 June 2001; “The Black Caucus’ Race Card,” CT, 4 July 2001; Chinta Strausberg, “Obama and Trotter Take Aim at IRA for Waging Unjust Campaign,” CD, 5 July 2001, p. 22 (Obama remains “in favor of handgun registration requirements and licensing requirements”); JCAR Minutes, 10 July 2001; Washburn, “Murphy’s Bid to Join Black Panel Postponed,” CT, 13 July 2001; Tim Novak, “Murphy May Join Black Caucus Today,” CST, 15 July 2001, p. 10; Fran Spielman, “Daley: Let Murphy in Black Caucus,” CST, 17 July 2001, p. 1; Sarah E. Richards, “Murphy Drops His Caucus Bid,” CT, 17 July 2001; Chicago Tonight, WTTW, 18 July 2001; B. Drummond Ayres, “White Drops Bid to Join Black Caucus,” NYT, 22 July 2001; Michael Eric Dyson, “Murphy’s Efforts Misguided,” CST, 24 July 2001, p. 29; “$3.1 Million in Illinois FIRST Projects for Chicago,” Illinois Governor’s Office Press Release, 17 July 2001; “Agenda for Finance Committee Meeting,” 26 July 2001, “What Will a Statewide Campaign Cost? (Dan Shomon),” “Obama 2002 and Beyond,” Finance Committee Presentation, 26 July 2001, LRHP; Chinta Strausberg, “Civil Rights Group Calls for End to Racial Districting,” CD, 2 August 2001, p. 1; “Governor Signs Bill Requiring Vital Information Be Given to Rape Victims” and “Obama: State Treasurer to Publish List of Unclaimed Properties,” Obama Staff Press Releases, 7 August 2001; Todd Spivak, “Unclaimed Property List,” HPH, 8 August 2001, p. 27; Spivak, “Obama Bill Increases Rights for Rape Victims,” HPH, 15 August 2001, p. 2; Spivak, “Local Legislators Build Election Campaign Warchests,” HPH, 5 September 2001, p. 3; DJG interviews with Leslie Hairston, Laura Russell Hunter, Dan Shomon, Will Burns, Madeline Talbott, Keith Kelleher, John Corrigan, Barbara Flynn Currie, Mike Lieteau, Ray Harris, and Tom Dart.

43. Rick Pearson and Ray Long, “Ryan Won’t Seek Second Term,” CT, 9 August 2001; John W. Fountain, “Illinois Governor, Unpopular in Polls, Won’t Run Again,” NYT, 9 August 2001; Russ Stewart, “Kosovo Fame Fuels Blagojevich’s Ambitions,” Illinois Politics Vol. 8 #3 [2 August 1999], pp. 16–17; CF, 19 December 2000, 15 June, 19, 20, and 30 July, 1, 6 11, and 17 August, 29 October (“this is Illinois . . . land of the fix”), and 21 December (Madigan “has too much power for his own good”) 2001; Pearson, “Hynes Backs Out of Governor Field,” CT, 29 June 2001; Christi Parsons, “Ryan Uses Veto to Push Gay Rights,” CT, 11 August 2001; Amanda Puck, Check, Please!, 14 August 2001; Gabriel Piemonte, “Lobbying for Living Wage,” HPH, 15 August 2001, p. 6; Pearson, “Madigan Gives His Blessing to Daley,” CT, 17 August 2001; Parsons, “Ryan Vetoes Expanded Death Penalty,” CT, 18 August 2001; Art Barnum, “Birkett Opens Door to Attorney General Bid,” CT, 21 August 2001; “Ryan: $1.3 Million in Illinois FIRST Projects for Chicago,” Illinois Governor’s Office Press Release, 21 August 2001; “Governor Signs Bills to Increase Penalties for Use of Falsified FOID Card and Possession of Illegal Ammunition” and “Governor Signs Bills Improving Rights of Crime Victims,” Obama Staff Press Releases, 23 August 2001; “Leaders Promote 1st Day Attendance,” CT, 24 August 2001; Gary Wisby, “Welfare Reform Brings Dramatic Drop in Cases,” CST, 26 August 2001, p. 8; Strausberg, “Obama, Smith Join Chicago Urban League School Push,” CD, 27 August 2001, p. 7; Piemonte, “Obama Tax Credit Bill Signed by Governor Ryan,” and Todd Spivak, “Cook County Voters Will Get a Second Chance,”

HPH, 5 September 2001, p. 6; Gretchen Helfrich, "Slavery and the Constitution," Odyssey, WBEZ Radio, 6 September 2001 (Obama one of three guests); Steve Neal, CST, 10 September 2001, p. 1; Pearson, "Schmidt Bows Out of One Race, Enters Another," CT, 11 September 2001; Steve Rhodes, "The Case Against Daley," CM, December 2002 ("the most consistently troubling aspect of the Daley administration is the way the mayor's friends have loaded up on city business"); Terry Armour, "Salute to the Cutting Room Floor," CT, 16 September 2002; HPH, 11 December 2002, p. 2; Lenore T. Adkins, "U. of C. Holds Barbershop, History in Its Hands," HPH, 2 April 2003, p. 6; Johnathan E. Briggs, "Hyde Park Haircut Hub on the Move," CT, 27 December 2006; Erin Meyer, "Discovering Hyde Park," and "Who Is Barack Obama?," HPH, 14 February 2007, pp. 4, 6, 15; Mark Konkol, "Mr. Obama's Neighborhood," CST, 25 May 2007, p. 12; Todd Spivak, "Barack Obama and Me," Houston Press, 28 February 2008; Steve Johnson, "'Check, Please' Reveals Another Side of Obama," CT, 15 January 2009; Christopher Benson, "The President's Neighborhood," Chicago Magazine, June 2009; DJG interviews with John Schmidt, Dan Shomon, Will Burns, David Kindler, Stephen Heintz, and Miles Rapoport.

44. Christopher Wills, "Lawmakers Want Redistricting Process Tossed Out," AP, 18 July 2001; Christi Parsons, "Democrats Make Their Own Move for Remap," CT, 26 July 2001; Rick Pearson, "Jim Ryan Takes Heat on Remap," CT, 20 August 2001; Daniel C. Vock, "State Legislative Remap Spawns More Litigation," CDLB, 20 August 2001, p. 1; Vock, "Bilandic or Miller May Decide State Remap," CDLB, [23] August 2001, p. 1; Vock, "James Ryan Takes Redistricting Case to Federal Court," CDLB, 24 August 2001, p. 1; Patricia Manson, "Judge: Consolidation Ruling Comes First in Remap Flap," CDLB, [29] August 2001, p. 1; John Patterson, "Political Power for the Next Decade Is All in a Drawing," CDH, 4 September 2001, p. 4; Vock, "Dems Mount Final Attack on Remap Lottery," CDLB, [5] September 2001, p. 1; Pearson, "Lottery on Remap Being Challenged," CT, 5 September 2001; Pearson and Hugh Dellios, "Republicans Hit Jackpot in Legislative Remap," CT, 6 September 1991; CF Extra, 5 September 2001; Chinta Strausberg, "Jesse White Pulls Democratic Majority for Remap," CD, 6 September 2001, p. 6; Pearson, "Democrats Win Lottery for Remap," CT, 6 September 2001; Vock, "Luck Sides with Dems for Remap Panel Majority," CDLB, [6] September 2001, p. 1; Dave McKinney, "Dems Win Control of Legislative Remap," CST, 6 September 2001, p. 5; Doug Finke, "Democrats Win Remap Draw," SJ-R, 6 September 2001, p. 1; Patterson, "Democrats Gain Redistricting Advantage," CDH, 6 September 2001, p. 8; CF, 6, 7, and 10 September 2001; Bernard Schoenburg, "The Envelope, Please," SJ-R, 6 September 2001, p. 7; Vock, "State Remap Battle Moves to Federal Court," CDLB, [7] September 2001, p. 1; David Maraniss, "The Luck That Propelled President Obama's Rise," WP, 11 March 2012; DJG interviews with John Charles, Will Burns, Carter Hendren, Patty Schuh, Carter Hendren, and Dave Sullivan.

45. JCAR Minutes, 7 August 2001; "Our Politicians Weigh In on Attack," HPH, 19 September 2001, p. 4; Obama, remarks at the Woodrow Wilson Center, Washington, D.C., 1 August 2007; Obama's 17 August 2011 interview with CBS News' Anthony Mason; Sam Hudzik, "Where Was President Obama on September 11th, 2001?," WBEZ Radio, 2 September 2011; Jeremiah Wright, "The Day of Jerusalem's Fall," 16 September 2001, blakfacts.blogspot.com/2008/03/day-of-jeruselems-fall.html; Grant and Grant, The Moment, pp. 150–52; Michael Eric Dyson, "Fight for Equality Doesn't Diminish with Age," CST, 25 September 2001, p. 39; Bill Ayers, Fugitive Days: A Memoir (Beacon Press, 2001); Dinitia Smith, "No Regrets for a Love of Explosives," NYT, 11 September 2001, pp. E1, E3; Don Terry, "The Calm After the Storm," CT Magazine, 16 September 2001, pp. 10ff.; Ben Joravsky, "The Long, Strange Trip of Bill Ayers,” CR, 8 November 1990; Sheila Miyoshi Jager, “Narrating the Nation: Students, Romance and the Politics of Resistance in South Korea,” Ph.D. dissertation, Department of Anthropology, University of Chicago, December 1994; Jager, “Women, Resistance and the Divided Nation: The Romantic Rhetoric of Korean Reunification,” Journal of Asian Studies 55 (February 1996): 3–21; Jager, “A Vision for the Future, or Making Family History in Contemporary South Korea,” Positions 4 (Spring 1996): 31–58; Jager, “Woman and the Promise of Modernity: Signs of Love for the Nation in Korea,” New Literary History 29 (Winter 1998): 121–34; Jager, Narratives of Nation Building in Korea: A Genealogy of Patriotism (M. E. Sharpe, 2003); Cindy Leise, “Oberlin High Holds Signing Day for 84 Seniors Heading to College,” [Lorain County] Chronicle-Telegram, 2 May 2012; Diane Salvatore, “Barack and Michelle Obama: The Full Interview,” Ladies’ Home Journal, August 2008; Barack in Jodi Kantor, “The Obamas’ Marriage,” NYT Magazine, 1 November 2009; DJG interviews with Doris Karpel, Brad Burzynski, John Corrigan, Jeremiah Wright, Bill Ayers, Bernardine Dohrn, Mona Khalidi, Carol Travis, Madeline Talbott, Sheila Jager, and Mike Dees.

46. “Dems Seek Own Counsel in Remap Case,” CDLB, 14 September 2001, p. 1; CF, 17 and 19 September 2001; Barnow v. Ryan, N. D. Ill. #01-C-6566, 2001 WL 1104729, 17 September 2001; Rick Pearson, “Democrats’ Remap Could Tilt Senate,” CT, 18 September 2001; Doug Finke, “Legislative Map Unveiled,” SJ-R, 18 September 2001; “Ryan: $1.4 Million in Illinois FIRST Projects for Chicago,” Illinois Governor’s Press Release, 18 September 2001; Todd Spivak, “Lack of Opponents and Money for U.S. Rep. Rush,” HPH, 19 September 2001, p. 10; Finke, “Republican vs. Republican in Six Districts in Democrats’ Map,” SJ-R, 19 September 2001; Pearson, “Republicans Lament Remap,” CT, 19 September 2001; Currie v. Ryan, Ill. S. Ct. #92341, 19 September 2001; Pearson, “Democrats Set Remap Vote, GOP Looks to Court,” CT, 20 September 2001; Pearson, “GOP Takes Wraps Off Rival Remap Proposal,” CT, 21 September 2001; Daniel C. Vock, “Republicans Release Proposed Legislative Remap,” CDLB, 21 September 2001, p. 1; Christi Parsons and Kevin Lynch, “Burriss Says 3rd Time Is Charm in Governor Run,” CT, 24 September 2001; Chinta Strausberg, “Burriss Vows to Extend the Death Moratorium,” CD, 26 September 2001, p. 7; Spivak, “Democrats Would Be King Under New State Remap,” HPH, 26 September 2001, pp. 1–2; UCLS Announcements 2001–02, esp. pp. 42, 48; UCLS, The Glass Menagerie 2001–02, esp. pp. 20, 59; Eli Saslow, “Obama Worked to Distance Self from Blagojevich Early On,” WP, 12 December 2008; David Bernstein, “Chicago Straight,” Chicago Magazine, June 2009; Alexandra Starr, “Case Study,” NYT Magazine, 21 September 2008; Sam Hudzik, “Where Was President Obama on September 11th, 2001?,” WBEZ Radio, 2 September 2011; DJG interviews with Debbie Halvorson, Roland Burriss, Delmarie Cobb, Fred Lebed, Dan Shomon, Jesse Jackson Jr., Stephen Feldman, Martha Pacold, David Bird, Aaron Solomon, Mark Warnick, Tasneem Goodman, Karen Schweickart, Denise Walia Levin, Byron Rodriguez, Bethany Lampland, Alex Montgomery, Nathaniel Edmonds, and Beth DeLisle.

47. Rick Pearson, “Democrat Remap Clears Panel Over GOP Protests,” CT, 26 September 2001; CF, 26, 27, and 28 September and 1, 9, 10 and 15 October 2001; Paul Simon to Obama, 26 September 2001, PSP; Winters v. Illinois State Board of Elections, 197 F. Supp. 1110 (N. D. Ill.), 20 November 2001; Pearson, “Democrats Score Another Victory—Remap Challenge by GOP Rejected,” CT, 29 September 2001; Patricia Manson, “Legislative Redistricting Squabble Making for Strange Bedfellows in Deed,” CDLB, [29] September 2001; Chicago Tonight, WTTW, 2 October 2001; William Grady and John Chase, “DuPage Clout Threatened,” CT, 11 October 2001; Obama, TAOH, p. 186; Obama, “Remarks at a Virtual Town Hall Meeting,” 26 March 2009, PPotP 2009 Vol. 1, p. 361; Michelle Obama remarks, 18 September 2009, Washington, D.C.; Obama, “Remarks at Opening Session of Bipartisan Meeting on Health Care Reform,” 25 February 2010, PPotP 2010 Vol. 1, p. 256; Byron Tau, “Obama: Hardest Moment in My Life Was Sasha’s Illness,” Politico, 30 March 2012; Carrie Healey, “Obama Recalls Daughter Sasha’s Medical Scare,” The Grio, 26 September 2013; Healey, “Michelle Obama Discusses Sasha’s Meningitis Scare,” The Grio, 20 December 2013; “Host Committee,” Friends of Barack Obama fall fund-raiser, 11 October 2001, LRHP; Todd Spivak, “Obama Raises Money for Next Election Season,” HPH, 17 October 2001, p. 3; Jennifer Mason e-mail to Laura Hunter, “Names,” 23 October 2001, LRHP; Spivak, “Developers Contribute to Alderman’s Election Fund,” HPH, 24 October 2001, p. 8; Obama to Timuel Black, 24 October 2001, TBP Box 103 Fld. 23; Steven R. Strahler, “Chicago Observer,” CCB, 29 October 2001, p. 50; Obama for Congress 2000, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 October–31 December 2001, 22 November 2002; Friends of Barack Obama, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures, 1 July–31 December 2001, 30 January 2002; Christopher Drew and Mike McIntire, “After 2000 Loss, Obama Built Donor Network from Roots Up,” NYT, 3 April 2007; DJG interviews with Bill Luking, Dan Shomon, and Laura Russell Hunter.

48. David Mendell and Gary Washburn, “Race Shifts Seen in Remap Effort,” CT, 14 October 2001; “Remap Foes,” CDLB, 15 October 2001; JCAR Minutes, 16 October 2001; Chinta Strausberg, “Sen. Obama: Barriers ‘Sad, Symbols of Fear,’” CD, 17 October 2001, p. 8; Daniel C. Vock, “Legislative Remap Case Before State’s High Court,” CDLB, [23] October 2001, p. 1; Illinois Legislative Redistricting Commission v. White, Ill. S. Ct. #92454, 23 October 2001; Vock, “Justices Deny Dem Request for a 3rd Time in Remap Case,” CDLB, [24] October 2001, p. 1; Vock, “GOP Senators Ask High Court to Redraw Remap,” CDLB, 30 October 2001, p. 1; “Ryan: $4.5 Million in Illinois FIRST Projects for Chicago,” Illinois Governor’s Office Press Release, 30 October 2001; Annah Dumas-Mitchell, “Metamorphosis of Woodlawn Nearly Complete,” CD, 5 November 2001, p. 5; Vock, “Dems, GOP Face to-Face over Remap,” CDLB, 8 November 2001, p. 1; Adam Gross notes, Business and Professional People for the Public Interest, “New Avenues for Affordable Housing,” 8 November 2001, AGP; “Anita Braver, Judy Byrd and Abby O’Neil Invite You to a Lunch and Discussion with Senator Barack Obama,” 9 November 2001, “Obama 2002 and Beyond,” Presentation for Women’s Lunch, 9 November 2001, “Women’s Luncheon Friday, November 9, 2001,” Sign-In Sheets, “Obama Women’s Luncheon, 11-9-01,” LRHP; Crystal Yednak, “Foes of Death Penalty Bill Threaten Political Revenge,” CT, 25 October 2001; Todd Spivak, “South Side Politicians, Leaders Battle Gang Bill,” HPH, 31 October 2001, p. 3; “Some Vetoes Controversial but Little Action Expected,” C-WR Vol. 17 #1, 13 November 2001; Strausberg, “Jesse Connecting Black Statewide Coalition for Unity,” CD, 13 November 2001, p. 5; JCAR Minutes, 13 November 2001; Gabriel Piemonte, “Veto Session Has Full Plate Following Sept. 11 Attacks,” HPH, 14 November 2001, p. 2; Minutes of the Regular Meeting of the Board of Trustees, General Assembly Retirement System of Illinois, 14 November 2001, #220, pp. 1845–48; Vock, “Minorities Fail in Bid to Join Remap Case,” CDLB, 16 November 2001, p. 1; “Ryan: $11.9 Million in Illinois FIRST Projects for Chicago,” Illinois Governor’s Office Press Release, 16 November 2001; Greg Hinz, “Lobbying Bid Falls Short for Bank One,” CCB, 19 November 2001, p. 4; Strausberg, “Final Burial of Death Penalty Big Win for Coalition,” CD, 20 November 2001, p. 1; Spivak, “Gang Bill Veto Upheld,” HPH, 21 November

2001, p. 7; Vock, “Redistricting Arguments Seem Like Deja Vu All Over Again,” CDLB, [22] November 2001, p. 1; Vock, “Court to Examine Redistricting Complaints,” CDLB, 26 November 2001, p. 1; “Obama Favors ‘Economic Security’ Package in Effort to Help Working Families, Businesses,” Obama Staff Press Release, 27 November 2001; Piemonte, “HP Legislators Ponder Bills’ Threat to Civil Liberties,” and Obama, “Budget Knife Shouldn’t Cut the Homeless,” HPH, 28 November 2001, pp. 3, 4; Senate Floor Transcript, 28 November 2001, pp. 84–97 (HB 2299); John Patterson, “Anti-Terrorism Bill Clears One Hurdle in Legislature,” CDH, 29 November 2001, p. 8; Cole-Randazzo v. Ryan, 762 N.E. 2d 485 (Ill. S. Ct.), 28 November 2001; Rick Pearson and Gary Washburn, “High Court’s Democrats Keep Party Remap Lines,” CT, 29 November 2001; Vock, “Justices Vote Party Lines to Uphold Remap,” CDLB, 29 November 2001, p. 1; Stephen S. Morrill, “Client Report for 2001 Veto Session,” Morrill and Associates, December 2001; James Janega, “Patricia A. Jones, 63,” CT, 4 December 2001; CF, 5, 12, and 21 December 2001; Vock, “GOP Goes for Broke in U.S. Court in Remap Fight,” CDLB, 10 December 2001, p. 1; “Veto Session Highlights,” CW-R 17 #2, 17 December 2001, pp. 2–3; Steven R. Strahler, “2001: The Year in Review,” CCB, 17 December 2001, p. 18; JCAR Minutes, 18 December 2001; Spivak, “Filing: Hyde Park Pols Face Few Challengers in 2002,” HPH, 19 December 2001, p. 1; Spivak, “City, State Remap Bickering Dominates Year,” HPH, 26 December 2001, p. 11; Beaubien v. Ryan, 762 N. E. 2d 501 (Ill. S. Ct.), 27 December 2001; John Flynn Rooney, “GOP Suffers Shutout in Remap Battle,” CDLB, [28] December 2001, p. 1; Campuzano v. Illinois State Board of Elections, 200 F. Supp. 2d 905 (N. D. Ill.), 3 May 2002; Strahler, “Dollar for Dollar: Senate Race Could Be One for the (W)ages,” CCB, 24 December 2001, p. 22; Kate A. Kane, “Risky Business, Sound Thinking,” Fast Company, April 1997; Blair Hull, “The Future of Trading,” Futures Industry, December 2000–January 2001; Joshua Green, “A Gambling Man,” Atlantic Monthly, January–February 2004, pp. 34–38; Mark Jannot, “A Rahm for the Money,” Chicago Magazine, August 1992; William Neikirk, “Mr. Fixit: Rahm Emanuel’s Chicago Street Smarts Saved His Career,” CT, 23 November 1997; DJG interviews with Jason Erkes, Rick Ridder, Blair Hull, and Anita Dunn; Ann Bertell e-mail to DJG, 9 May 2014. Zev Chafets, “Obama’s Rabbi,” NYT Magazine, 5 April 2009, asserts that Capers Funnye’s Blue Gargoyle received $75,000 in state funds thanks to Obama, but state records document only $25,000 authorized by Barack on 9 August 2000 and announced by Governor Ryan’s office on 16 November 2001.

49. Maurice Lee, “Black Contractors Protest U. of C. Hospital Project,” HPH, 14 November 2001, pp. 1–2; Annah Dumas-Mitchell, “Officials to Contractors: Blacks Won’t Be Cheated,” CD, 29 November 2001, p. 1; Dumas-Mitchell, “U of C Commits to Economic Advancement of Minorities,” CD, 5 December 2001, p. 5; LaRisa Lynch, “AACCA and University of Chicago Hospitals Reach Agreement to Increase Black Participation in Construction, Employment Opportunities,” CW, 6 December 2001, p. 1; Slevin, Michelle Obama, pp. 174–77; Obama, Constitutional Law Final Examination, [ca. 5–10] December 2001; Joyce Foundation, Work in Progress, January 2002; “Joyce Foundation Names New President,” CT, 10 January 2002; “Ellen Alberding Named Joyce Foundation President,” Joyce Foundation News Release, 10 January 2002; “Joyce Foundation Appoints New President,” Philanthropy News Digest, 13 January 2002; “KidsOhio.org Organized to Advocate for Ohio Children,” PR Newswire, 21 April 2002; Obama’s February 2004 interview with David Axelrod; Scott Helman, “Early Defeat Launched a Rapid Political Climb,” BG, 12 October 2007; Kenneth P. Vogel, “Obama Linked to Gun Control Efforts,” Politico, 20 April 2008; Mundy, Michelle, p. 136; Carol Felsenthal, “What If:

Would Obama Be Living in the White House Today If . . . ?,” Huffington Post, 30 January 2009; Newton Minow’s 2008 interview with Jim Gilmore; DJG interviews with Debbie Leff, Unmi Song, Margaret O’Dell, Paula Wolff, Carlton Guthrie, Carin Clauss, Jack Anderson, Charles Daly, Michael Claffey, Mark Real, Dan Shomon, Abner Mikva, John Schmidt, Newton Minow, Rob Fisher, and Linda Hawker.

50. UCLS Announcements 2001–02, p. 87; Obama, Voting Rights Syllabus, Winter 2002; The Solon, January 2002; CF, 9, 10, 25, 28, and 31 January, and 1, 5, 7, 8, 13, 18, 25, and 26 February 2002; JCAR Minutes, 9 January 2002; Carrie Golus, “Obama to Speak for MLK Day,” UCC, 10 January 2002; CDH, 21 January 2002, p. N1; B. Drummond Ayres Jr., “A Governor in the Middle of a Race He Won’t Run,” NYT, 25 January 2002; Senate Floor Transcript, 30 January 2002, p. 3 (Obama introducing SBs 1652 and 1653); Min Lee, “Public Funding Sought for Supreme Court Candidates,” CDLB, 31 January 2002, pp. 1, 22; Aaron Chambers, “Political Kaleidoscope,” II, February 2002; Rick Pearson, “Blagojevich War Chest Dwarfs Opponents,” CT, 1 February 2002; JCAR Minutes, 5 February 2002; Senate Floor Transcript, 5 February 2002, pp. 6–7 (Obama introducing SBs 1781, 1782, 1783, 1788, and 1789); Ray Long and Adam Kovac, “Philip Urges Review of Pork-Barrel Funds,” CT, 6 February 2002; Senate Floor Transcript, 6 February 2002, p. 20; Senate Floor Transcript, 7 February 2002, pp. 1, 5, 7, 11, 13, and 17; Douglas Holt and Ray Gibson, “2 Accused in Scheme at Pork-Rich Charities,” CT, 9 February 2002; Chinta Strausberg, “ACORN, Pols Unveil Bill to Aid Heat Bills,” CD, 13 February 2002, p. 3; “Senate Democrat FY 02 Member Project Authorization Form,” 13 February 2002 (“Southwest Women Working Together” filed its final IRS Form 990 in 2006), Illinois DCEO FOIA; Dan Mihalopoulos, “Burrises Faces Toughest Step,” CT, 17 February 2002; Shamus Toomey, “Are Fitzgerald’s Enron Blasts Real Anger or Opportunism?,” CDH, 17 February 2002, p. 1; Todd Spivak “Despite Breezy Primaries, Banks Big for State Reps,” and Obama, “Human Alternatives to State Budget Cuts,” HPH, 20 February 2002, pp. 1–2, 4; Long and Christi Parsons, “Ryan Budget Puts State on Crash Diet,” CT, 21 February 2002; “Governor Ryan’s Final Budget Address,” C-WR 17 #4, 27 February 2002; Spivak, “Preckwinkle Bank Bulges, Hairston Trailing Behind,” HPH, 27 February 2002, pp. 1–2; Obama for Congress 2000, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 January–31 March 2002, 4 December 2002; Christopher Drew and Mike McIntire, “After 2000 Loss, Obama Built Donor Network from Roots Up,” NYT, 3 April 2007; Ben Protes and Steve Mills, “Roland Burrise Received About $1.2 Million in Loans from Businessman,” CT, 9 February 2009; Frank, Obama on the Couch, pp. 203–4, 218; DJG interviews with Karen Schweickart, David Bird, Byron Rodriguez, and Tasneem Goodman.

51. King v. State Board of Elections, 2002 WL 356383 (N. D. Ill.), 5 March 2002, and 2003 WL 22019357 (N. D. Ill.), 19 August 2003; King v. Illinois State Board of Elections, 410 F.3d 404 (7th Cir.), 13 June 2005 (argued 28 October 2004 by Jeffrey Cummings); JCAR Minutes, 5 March 2002; “Senate Committee Action Report,” Judiciary, 5 March 2002 (SB 1662); CF, 6, 8, 14, 15, 19, 20, 21, 22, and 29 March 2002 and 19 August 2013; “Off-Road Track Noise Bill Clears Committee,” DHR, 12 March 2002, p. A3; “Illinois Primary Election Set for March 19,” C-WR 17 #5, 13 March 2002; Rick Pearson and Jeff Zeleny, “Bush Drops In for City’s Green Party,” CT, 17 March 2002; Jon Van, “New Telemarketer Twist on Computerized Calls,” CT, 18 March 2002; Pearson, “Ryan to Face Blagojevich,” CT, 20 March 2002; Mike Dorning, “Blagojevich Rode to Win by Way of Downstate,” CT, 21 March 2002; Todd Spivak, “Jesse Jr. Wins Big, Currie and Obama Rev Up for Nov.,” and “Bill Would Protect Activists,” HPH, 27 March 2002, pp. 1–2, 7; Chinta Strausberg, “Pols to Ryan: Don’t Mess with Workers,” CD, 27 March 2002, p. 5; [Debbie] Lounsberry, “Barack Obama—The Record: A Summary,” 10 May 2004, JRORF, pp. 12–13; Amanda B. Carpenter, “Obama More Pro-Choice Than NARAL,” HumanEvents.com, 26 December 2006; Obama’s 16 August 2008 interview with David Brody on CBN.com; DJG interviews with Judd Miner, John Belcaster, Jeff Cummings, Geoffrey Rapp, Ira Silverstein, and Dan Cronin.

52. Chinta Strausberg, “Howard Pushes Expungement Bills,” CD, 1 April 2002, p. 4; CF, 19 January 2001, 4 March 2002 (“George Ryan has been one of the most honest governors this state has ever had”), and 3, 4, 11, 12, 16, and 17 April 2002; Obama, “Laws Help Ex-Offenders Re-Enter Society,” HPH, 3 April 2002, p. 4; Matt O’Connor, “U.S. Accuses Ryan Fund, 2 Ex-Aides of Corruption,” CT, 3 April 2002; Senate Floor Transcript, 3 April 2002, pp. 6 (Obama introducing SR 374) and 139 (Obama amending SB 1782); Rick Pearson and O’Connor, “U.S. Probe Indicts ‘Political Culture,’” CT, 4 April 2002; Senate Floor Transcript, 4 April 2002, pp. 28–35 (SBs 1661, 1662, and 1663), 45 (SB 1782), 104–5 (SB 2098), and 153–56 (SB 2303); “Obama’s Postpartum Depression Bill Is Sent to Governor Ryan,” Obama Staff Press Release, 19 June 2002; Steve Neal, “Bloody Scandal Tops Them All,” CST, 5 April 2002, p. 41; Steve Rhodes, “The Fawell Affair,” Chicago Magazine, May 2004; Adriana Colindres, “Arguments Made for Cigarette Tax Hike,” SJ-R, 5 April 2002, p. 4; Daniel C. Vock, “Senators Scorch Fee Claim in Tobacco Case,” CDLB, 5 April 2002, pp. 1, 22; Strausberg, “Medicaid Cuts Will Cost Millions in Lost Federal Funds,” CD, 6 April 2002, p. 1; Todd Spivak, “Critics Call the Remaps Partisan, Undemocratic,” HPH, 10 April 2002, p. 2 (Obama admitting that “incumbents drawing their own maps will inevitably try to advantage themselves”); JCAR Minutes, 10 April 2002; Senate Floor Transcript, 10 April 2002, pp. 9–20 (SJR 18, seeking to remove the Illinois Supreme Court’s criminal jurisdiction); Report of the Governor’s Commission on Capital Punishment, 15 April 2002; John O’Connor, “Ryan to Keep Moratorium While Death Penalty Overhaul Faces Uncertain Future,” AP, 16 April 2002; Steve Mills and Maurice Possley, “‘We’re Talking About Life and Death,’” CT, 16 April 2002; Jodi Wilgoren, “Panel in Illinois Seeks to Reform Death Sentence,” NYT, 16 April 2002; Thomas P. Sullivan, “Repair or Repeal—Report of the Governor’s Commission on Capital Punishment,” Illinois Bar Journal 90 (June 2002): 304–7, 325; Sullivan, “Preventing Wrongful Convictions,” Judicature 86 (September–October 2002): 106–9, 120; Scott Turow, Ultimate Punishment (Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 2003); Barack H. Obama and Michelle L. Obama, IRS Form 1040, 13 April 2002; Woods Fund of Chicago, 2001 Annual Report, p. 34 (noting a $6,000 grant to Trinity United Church of Christ “in recognition of Barack Obama’s contribution of services,” pursuant to 5 ILCS 420 §2-110 [b]); Dorothy A. Brown, “Lessons from Barack and Michelle Obama’s Tax Returns,” Tax Notes, 10 March 2014, pp. 1109–13; Friends of Barack Obama, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures, 1 January–30 June 2002, 31 July 2002; Obama, TAOH, p. 3; Adelstein in Andersen, Barack and Michelle, p.195, on Sam Hudzik, “Where Was President Obama on September 11th, 2001?,” WBEZ.org, 2 September 2011, and in Kantor, The Obamas, p. 276; Jones in “Jones Recalls Request for Help with Running for U.S. Senate,” SJ-R, 31 December 2006, p. 5, in Ryan Lizza, “The Agitator,” TNR, 19 March 2007, in Ron Fournier, “Obama’s Life and Record in Springfield, Ill., Hint at the President He Would Be,” AP, 17 June 2007, in Janny Scott, “In Illinois, Obama Proved Pragmatic and Shrewd,” NYT, 30 July 2007, on Nightline, ABC, 25 February 2008, in Todd Purdum, “Raising Obama,” Vanity Fair, March 2008, on “Barack Obama Revealed,” CNN, 20 August 2008, in Abdon M. Pallasch, “Grooming a Politician,” CST, 24 August 2008, p. A14, on All Things Considered, NPR, 16 October 2008, in David Smallwood, “Two Guys Who Laid It on the Line,” N’Digo Profiles, December 2008, pp. 14–15, in Adrienne P. Samuels, “Barack’s Chicago,” Ebony, January 2009, and in David Bernstein, “Chicago Straight,” CM, June 2009; Cliff Kelley in Todd Spivak, “Barack Obama and Me,” Houston Press, 28 February 2008; DJG interviews with Dan Shomon, Chris Sautter, Paul Harstad, Pete Giangreco, Eric Adelstein, Jill Rock, Emil Jones Jr., and John Kelly.

53. “Resolution Calls Attention to Health,” HPH, 17 April 2002, p. 2; GARS Board of Trustees Minutes, 17 April 2002, #221, pp. 1849–53; Dan Shomon e-mail to Obama, “Press Conference on WARN,” 18 April 2002, AGP; “Intellectuals: Who Needs Them?,” Center for Public Intellectuals, UIC, 19–20 April 2002 (“Intellectuals in Times of Crisis: Experiences and Applications of Intellectual Work in Urgent Situations”); Michael Sneed, “Hmmm . . .,” CST, 25 April 2002, p. 4; CF, 26 April and 1, 2, 3, 6, and 7 May 2002; Sneed, “Join the Crowd: Chico May Run for Senate,” CST, 28 April 2002, p. 12; Thomas A. Corfman, “Chico Takes Top Spot at Alzheimer,” CCB, 8 May 1999; Lisa Brennan, “Alzheimer and Gray’s Bold New Leader,” NLJ, 7 June 1999; Fred Lebed e-mail to DJG, 3 May 2011 (lunch with Obama 29 April 2002); Michelle and Nesbitt in Mendell, Obama, pp. 151–53; Jarrett in Christopher Drew and Mike McIntire, “After 2000 Loss, Obama Built Donor Network from Roots Up,” NYT, 3 April 2007, in Scott Helman, “Early Defeat Launched a Rapid Political Climb,” BG, 12 October 2007, in Peter Slevin, “For Obama, a Handsome Payoff in Political Gambles,” WP, 13 November 2007, in Slevin, “Her Heart’s in the Race,” WP, 28 November 2007, in Shira Schoenberg, “17 Minutes to Stardom,” Concord Monitor, 6 December 2007, in Richard Wolffe, “Inside Obama’s Dream Machine,” Newsweek, 14 January 2008, in Roger O. Crockett, “Obama’s Executive Sounding Board,” Business Week, 19 May 2008, and most especially in Robert Draper, “The Ultimate Obama Insider,” NYT Magazine, 26 July 2009; Remnick, The Bridge, pp. 357–58 and 368; Ryan Lizza, “Making It: How Chicago Shaped Obama,” New Yorker, 21 July 2008; Jodi Kantor, “Obama’s Friends Form Strategy to Stay Close,” NYT, 13 December 2008; Kantor, The Obamas, pp. 197–98; Melissa Harris, “Martin Nesbitt, the First Friend,” CT, 21 January 2013; Friends of Barack Obama, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures, 1 January–30 June 2002, 31 July 2002; Chuck Neubauer and Tom Hamburger, “Obama Donor Received a State Grant,” LAT, 27 April 2008; Link on “The Candidates: Barack Obama,” MSNBC, 20 February 2008; Bryan Smith, “Cook County Sheriff Tom Dart,” Chicago Magazine, January 2009; Jarrett’s 2012 interview with Jim Gilmore; DJG interviews with Blair Hull, Rick Ridder, Fred Lebed, David Spiegel, Robert Blackwell Jr., Larry Walsh, Terry Link, Denny Jacobs, Kim Lightford, James Clayborne, Miguel del Valle, Lou Viverito, Pat Welch, Larry Suffredin, Elvin Charity, Craig Huffman, Carlton Guthrie, Paul Strauss, and Carol Moseley Braun.

54. Senate Floor Transcript, 8 May 2002, pp. 76–95 (HB 5646); Aamer Madhani, “Richard Newhouse Jr., 78,” CT, 2 May 2002; Senate Floor Transcript, 9 May 2002, pp. 23–25 (HB 3212, the Technology Development Act, passed 56–0–0 and signed into law 26 August 2002 as PA 92-0851) and 90 (SJR 78); Dave Lundy, “Governor Must Lead on Tech, Capital,” CST, 23 January 2003, p. 52; Harstad Strategic Research, “Illinois Statewide Survey—Democratic Primary Voters, May 2002,” and “General Election Survey—Illinois Statewide Survey—May 2002,” 9–15 May 2002, PHP and JKP; David [Spiegel] to Rick [Ridder], “Barack Obama,” 10 May 2002, RRP; Kristen McQueary, “State Legislator Considers Bid for Senate,” DS, 11 May 2002, p. A3; CF, 13, 15, 20, and 22 May and 1, 2 and 3 June 2002; JCAR Minutes, 14 May 2002; Michael Sneed, “Sneed,” CST, 21 May 2002, p. 4; Kip Kolkmeier to Secretary of the Senate, 21 May 2002, FEC; Flynn v. Ryan, 771 N. E. 2d 414 (Ill. S. Ct.), 23 May 2002; CF, 1 February 2000; Christi Parsons, “Justices Revive Ethics Law,” CT, 24 May 2002; Adriana Colindres, “Justices Put Gift Ban Act Back in Effect,” SJ-R, 24 May 2002, p. 1; “Obama Praises Supreme Court’s Ethics Ruling,” Obama Staff Press Release, 28 May 2002; Laura Washington, “Moseley-Braun Looking for Rerun,” CST, 27 May 2002, p. 21; Senate Floor Transcript, 28 May 2002, pp. 24–70, esp. 47 (SB 2390); Todd Spivak, “Two HP Politicians Consider Bid for U.S. Senate,” HPH, 29 May 2002, p. 3; “Budget Crisis Tops Spring Session Agenda,” C-WR 17 #6, 23 April 2002, p. 2; Rick Pearson and Christi Parsons, “Illinois Senate Passes $54 Billion Budget Measure,” CT, 29 May 2002; Daniel C. Vock, “Appeals Switch Encounters Budget Hitch,” CDLB, 29 May 2002, pp. 1, 24; Senate Floor Transcript, 31 May 2002, pp. 28–49 (HB 4680); Ray Long and Christi Parsons, “Legislators End Session with Pork, Tax Hikes,” CT, 3 June 2002; “Obama Says 92nd General Assembly Produces Some Progress, Some Disappointment,” Obama Staff Press Release, n.d. [ca. 3 June 2002]; Spivak, “Budget Deemed Reasonable,” Obama, “Laws Address Illinois Sentencing Disparities,” and Spivak, “Supreme Court Upholds Campaign Finance Law,” HPH, 5 June 2002, pp. 3, 4, 6; Senate President James “Pate” Philip, End of Session Report 2002, esp. pp. 62–63, 82; “Major Bills Passed by the Illinois General Assembly,” LRU First Reading 16 (July 2002): 6–11; Remnick, The Bridge, p. 359; Axelrod, Believer, p. 124; DJG interviews with Chris Sautter, Paul Harstad, Mike Kulisheck, Kristen McQueary, David Spiegel, Blair Hull, Rick Ridder, and John Kupper. Earlier proceedings in the case challenging the Gift Ban Act are noted in Ryan Keith, “Judge Throws Out State Gift-Ban Law,” SJ-R, 4 August 2000, p. 1, Charles N. Wheeler III, “A Judge’s Ruling Left Ethics and Campaign Finance Reforms in Limbo,” II, September 2000, pp. 42–43, Dave McKinney, “Ruling Lets Pols Off the Hook,” CST, 19 September 2000, p. 10, and Doug Finke, “House Approves New Ethics Package,” SJ-R, 6 April 2001, p. 11.

55. Steve Neal, “Dem Senate Race to Be Free-for-All,” CST, 3 June 2002, p. 33; “The Strausberg Report,” n.d. [ca. 6 June 2002]; Russ Stewart, “‘Roadblock Strategy’ Is Daley Goal for 2003 Race,” NSP, 12 June 2002; Harstad Strategic Research, “Illinois Statewide Survey—Democratic Primary Voters, May 2002,” and “General Election Survey—Illinois Statewide Survey—May 2002,” 9–15 May 2002, PHP and JKP; Harstad in Noam Scheiber, “Cruel Intentions,” TNR, 28 May 2008, p. 7; DJG interviews with Chinta Strausberg, Paul Harstad, Chris Sautter, and Dan Shomon.

56. Bennett, Petts & Blumenthal Poll #1427, Final Illinois Senate, June 2002, MBP; DJG interviews with Mark Blumenthal, Anita Dunn, and Blair Hull.

57. Christi Parsons and Adam Kovac, “Ryan Orders Legislators to Return,” CT, 8 June 2002; CF, 10, 11 June 2002; PBS NewsHour, 10 June 2002; Chinta Strausberg, “Budget Cuts Severe in State’s HIV/AIDS Program,” CD, 11 June 2002, p. 1; JCAR Minutes, 11 June 2002; Senate Floor Transcript, 11 June 2002, pp. 77–82, 301; Strausberg, “Jones, Howard, Obama Bristle at Gov. Ryan’s Cuts,” CD, 12 June 2002, p. 5; Rick Pearson and Ray Long, “Careful Steps, Looking Ahead,” CT, 3 May 2007; Obama on the CBS Evening News, 17 December 2007 (asked “When was the last time you lost your temper?,” Obama avoided a direct answer and replied “I don’t get mad too often”); David Freddoso, The Case Against Barack Obama (Regnery, 2008), pp. 34–36; Eli Saslow, “From Outsider to Politician,” WP, 9 October 2008; Rickey Hendon, Black Enough/White Enough: The Obama Dilemma (Third World Press, 2009), pp. 29–34; Bernard Schoenburg, “Not All Sweetness and Light in Hendon’s Obama Book,” SJ-R, 28

December 2008; Hendon's 13 January 2009 Illinois Channel interview with Terry Martin and his June 2010 one with Peter Slen; Terry Link in Remnick, The Bridge, p. 339; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, pp. 189–92; Halvorson, Playing Ball with the Big Boys, p. 39; DJG interviews with Courtney Nottage, Jill Rock, John Charles, Cindy Huebner Davidsmeyer, Emil Jones, Donne Trotter, Kim Lightford, Carol Ronen, Pat Welch, Debbie Halvorson, Terry Link, Denny Jacobs, Larry Walsh, Walter Dudycz, and Carol Harwell.

58. Ray Long and Rick Pearson, "Legislators Back Most Ryan Cuts," CT, 12 June 2002; "To the Contrary Notwithstanding," C-WR 17 #8, 24 June 2002; Obama, "Special Session Brings Some Hard Choices," HPH, 3 July 2002, p. 4; Lynn Sweet, "Mega-Donor Gives Senate a Go," CST, 13 June 2002, p. 41; Obama, commencement address, North Kenwood/Oakland Charter School, 13 June 2002; Pugh, Jones, and Johnson, "A Tribute to Senate Democratic Leader Emil Jones Jr.," 13 June 2002, SPP; Greg Hinz, "GOP Leader Doled Out Office Help," CCB, 17 June 2002; Amanda York, "Legislators Pony Up Millions of Dollars for Homeland Security," AP, 17 June 2002; Rick Pearson, "Daniels Staffers Are Targeted in Probe," CT, 21 June 2002; Adriana Colindres, "U.S. Attorney to Probe Allegations Against House Republican Staffers," SJ-R, 28 June 2002, p. 11; Ray Long, "U.S. Will Probe Daniels Staffers, Jim Ryan Says," CT, 28 June 2002; Pearson, "Daniels Quits GOP Post," CT, 29 June 2002; Bernard Schoenburg, "Daniels Quits as GOP Chairman," SJ-R, 29 June 2002, p. 1; CF, 2 July 2002; Hermene D. Hartman, "Barack and Black Enterprise," N'Digo, 7–13 June 2007, p. 3; Mendell, Obama, pp. 155–56; Nesbitt in Michael Weisskopf, "Obama: How He Learned to Win," Time, 8 May 2008, and in Ryan Lizza, "Making It: How Chicago Shaped Obama," New Yorker, 21 July 2008; Jim Reynolds in David Smallwood, "Genesis of the Grassroots Movement," and Robert T. Starks, "Jackson's Tears from All the Years," N'Digo Profiles, December 2008, pp. 10–11, 16, 18, 44; Hartman in Klein, The Amateur, p. 31; Jason Zengerle, "Operation Push: Obama's Artful Corralling of the Jesse Jacksons," TNR, 13 February 2008, pp. 7–8; Jo Becker and Christopher Drew, "Pragmatic Politics, Forged on the South Side," NYT, 11 May 2008; Keith D. Picher, "Steve Pugh," Leading Lawyers Network Magazine, January 2009; Carol Felsenthal, "Les Coney, Top Obama Bundler and Networker Extraordinaire," Chicago Magazine, 21 July 2011; Zengerle, "Jr.: Who Thwarted the Ambitions of Jesse Jackson's Son?," New York Magazine, 4 November 2012; Andrew Davis in Jodi S. Cohen and David Jackson, "Blagojevich Allies Help State Sell Off Student Loans," CT, 11 March 2007; John McCormick, "Pritzker Blazes Campaign Trail," CT, 30 September 2007; James L. Merriner, "Network Ties," Chicago Magazine, June 2008; Newton Minow's interview with Jim Gilmore; DJG interviews with Stephen Pugh, Preston Pugh, Hermene Hartman, Eugene Morris, Les Coney, Martin King, Newton Minow, Abner Mikva, Jesse Jackson Jr., and Andy Davis.

59. Steve Neal, "Fitzgerald Could Face an Old Foe," CST, 21 June 2002, p. 45; Public Affairs with Jeff Berkowitz, 27 June 2002; Ann Bertell e-mail to DJG, 9 May 2014; Harstad Strategic Research, "Statewide Survey Among Democratic Primary Voters in Illinois" and "Statewide Survey Among General Election Voters in Illinois," 9–15 May 2002; Harstad to Obama Finance Committee, "Summary of Poll Results," 11 July 2002, PHP; DJG interviews with Dan Shomon, Blair Hull, Paul Harstad, and Bettylu Saltzman.

60. Steve Neal, "Obama Could Add Drama to Senate Race," CST, 3 July 2002, p. 41; JCAR Minutes, 9 July 2002; Todd Spivak, "Obama Begins Raising Funds for U.S. Senate Bid," HPH, 10 July 2002, pp. 1–

2; Russ Stewart, "Large Democratic Field Targets Fitzgerald in 2004," NSP, 10 July 2002; Jennifer Bussell, "Obama May Seek U.S. Senate Seat in '04 race," Chicago Maroon, 12 July 2002; Chinta Strausberg, "Barack Obama Explores U.S. Senate Seat," CD, 17 July 2002, pp. 1, 3; "On the Air," CDLB, 19 July 2002, p. 3; John Kass, "In the Interest of Full Disclosure, Start at O'Hare," CT, 23 July 2002; Chicago Tonight, WTTW, 23 July 2002 (Obama stating that "I think it's absolutely vital not to think in terms of the single black leader"); Eric Krol, "Eyes Already on 2004 Senate Race," CDH, 31 July 2002, p. 1; Friends of Barack Obama, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures, 1 July–31 December 2002, 31 January 2003; Obama's 7 February 2004 interview with David Axelrod, p. 19; Obama in USS, EPW, "S. 131, 'The Clear Skies Act of 2005,'" S. Hrg. 109-867, 2 February 2005, p. 28; Obama on Good Morning America, ABC, 8 April 2015; Valerie Jarrett's 2012 interview with Jim Gilmore; Min Lee, "Senate Panel to Review Death Penalty Reforms," CDLB, 31 May 2002, pp. 3, 24; Jennifer Davis, "Death Penalty Reforms Aired at Peoria Hearing," PJS, 1 August 2002, p. B1; Spivak, "Currie and Obama Bills Seek to Clean Up Courts," HPH, 7 August 2002, p. 7; DJG interviews with Greg Dingens and Matt Jones.

61. Steve Neal, "Sky's the Limit in Senate Race," CST, 7 August 2002, p. 43; Russ Stewart, "Hynes' Job as 'Fiscal Grouch' Will Be Taxing," NSP, 7 August 2002; Dennis Byrne, "Feeling Like a Political Nitwit?," CT, 12 August 2002; JCAR Minutes, 13 August 2002; Michael C. Dorf to Secretary of the Senate (2), 14 August 2002, FEC; "Decision 2002," Lake and Prairie, 4th Quarter [August] 2002, p. 2; CF, 19 August 2002; David Mendell and Darnell Little, "Rich '90s Failed to Lift All," CT, 20 August 2002; Obama to "Dear Friend," Obama for Illinois, 20 August 2002, RRP; Grant Pick, "Hatchet Man: The Rise of David Axelrod," Chicago Magazine, December 1987; Doug Cassel, "Is Tim Evans for Real?," CR, 16 March 1989; Bryan Miller, "The Art of the Campaign," CR, 11 July 1991; Donald Sevener, "Political Pitchman," II, December 1993, pp. 15–19; Patrick T. Reardon, "The Agony and the Agony," CT Magazine, 24 June 2007; Robert G. Kaiser, "The Player at Bat," WP, 2 May 2008; Jim Merriner, "The Champion of Cronyism: David Axelrod," Chicago Daily Observer, 7 April 2009; David Plouffe, The Audacity to Win (Viking, 2009), pp. 7–8; Evan Osnos, "The Daley Show," New Yorker, 8 March 2010, pp. 38ff.; Paul Kengor, "David Axelrod, Leftie Lumberjack," American Spectator, March 2012, pp. 16–29; Axelrod, Believer, pp. 123, 125; DJG interviews with Anita Dunn, Fred Lebed, Blair Hull, Rick Ridder, John Kupper, Don Wiener, Michael Dorf, Cynthia Miller, and Judy Byrd. On the Phelan–Pincham race, see Thomas Hardy, "Phelan and Pincham Punch It Up," CT, 13 March 1990, Hardy, "Democratic Rivals Pull Out All the Stops," CT, 14 March 1990, Hardy, "Race Seeps into County Campaign," CT, 16 March 1990, Hardy and Robert Davis, "Phelan Edges Pincham," CT, 21 March 1990, Rob Karwath and Robert Davis, "TV Ads Put Phelan in the Driver's Seat," CT, 22 March 1990, and Hardy and Constanza Montana, "Pincham Keeps Heat on Phelan," CT, 1 May 1990; David Elsner, "Phelan, Sheahan Win," CT, 7 November 1990. See also People v. Ruiz, 396 N.E. 2d 1314 (Ill. App. 1st Dst. 2nd Div.), 13 November 1979, Robert Enstad, "2 Gang Members Guilty of Slayings," CT, 22 March 1980, Jane Fritsch, "2d Man Gets Death in Slayings," CT, 25 April 1980, People v. Ruiz, 447 N.E. 2d 148 (Ill. S. Ct.), 17 December 1982, Trevor Jensen and Steve Mills, "R. Eugene Pincham 1925–2008," CT, 4 April 2008, and James Janega, "R. Eugene Pincham Remembered for Contributions to Law, Community," CT, 13 April 2008.

62. Todd Spivak, "HP Pols Working Toward Democratic State Control," HPH, 28 August 2002, pp. 1–2; Memorandum Opinion and Order, U S. ex rel King v. F. E. Moran, Inc., N. D. Ill. #00-C-38777, 29

August 2002, 2002 WL 2003219 (Obama appearance listings of 22 August and 26 September 2002); CF, 1 August and 4, 5 27 September 2002; John Patterson, “The Heat Is On,” and Kurt Erickson, “Snoozeville?,” II, September 2002; Bernard Schoenburg, “No Shortage of Candidates for U.S. Senate Run in ’04,” SJ-R, 1 September 2002, p. 15; “Town Meeting on Health Care,” CDH, 10 September 2002, p. 3; JCAR Minutes, 10 September 2002; Douglas Holt, “U.S., State Expand Health Insurance KidCare Plan to Add Parents,” CT, 13 September 2002; “The Family Care Campaign,” in Woods Fund of Chicago, 2001 Annual Report, pp. 8–13; Eric Krol and John Patterson, CDH, 16 September 2002, p. 5; Daniel C. Vock, “ABA Chief: End Private Funding of Judge Races,” CDLB, 18 September 2002, p. 1; Lynn Sweet, CST, 19 September 2002, p. 8; Photos of Obama and Shomon at Illinois Democratic Women, Bloomington, IL, 21 September 2002, ObamaForIllinois.com; Spivak, “Obama Sponsors West Nile Virus Legislation,” HPH, 25 September 2002, p. 10; Corey Hall, “Obama to Set Sights on U.S. Senate Seat,” CW, 26 September 2002, p. 1; Jodi Wilgoren, “GOP Death Penalty Feud Sinks to First-Name Calling,” NYT, 26 September 2002; Dave McKinney, “Clean Sweep? Illinois Democrats Pin Their Fall Hopes on a Big Broom,” II, October 2002; Obama, “State-Wide Meetings Focus on Uninsured,” HPH, 2 October 2002, p. 4; Obama to Stuart Rothenberg, 10 October 2002; Friends of Barack Obama, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures, 1 July–31 December 2002, 31 January 2003; Jeremiah Wright’s 6 February 2004 interview with John Kupper; Wright in Mendell, Obama, p. 159–60; Artur Davis in Nicole Duran, “The New Kid on the Block,” Campaigns and Elections, June 2007, pp. 52ff.; DJG interviews with Scott Kennedy, David Wilhelm, Josh Hoyt, Todd Dietterle, John Bouman, Sheryll Cashin, Tom Perrelli, Bruce Spiva, and Jeremiah Wright.

63. Obama for Illinois, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 July–31 December 2002, 29 January 2003; Obama for Congress 2000, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 July–30 September 2002, 1 October–27 November 2002, and 28 November–31 December 2002, 12 March 2003; Ryan Ori, “Taste: Presidential Approval,” PJS, 14 January 2009; DJG interviews with Raja Krishnamoorthi, Scott Lynch-Giddings, Katrina Emmons Mulligan, Dan Shomon, and Cynthia Miller.

64. Chinta Strausberg, “Opposition to War Mounts,” CD, 26 September 2002, p. 1; Marilyn Katz, “Chicago Residents Form Coalition Opposed to War in Iraq,” n.d., MKP; Stevenson Swanson and Jill Zuckman, “Iraq OKs Inspection Deal,” CT, 2 October 2002; Strausberg, “Leaders Rip Cost of Pending War,” CD, 2 October 2002, p. 3; Chicagoans Against War on Iraq, “Don’t Give President Bush a Blank Check to Wage War on Iraq,” 2 October 2002, Chicagoans Against War on Iraq, “Program,” [2 October 2002], MKP; Bill Glauber, “War Protesters Gentler, but Passion Still Burns,” CT, 3 October 2002; Annie Sweeney, “Lunch-Hour Crowd Debates War Issue,” CST, 3 October 2002, p. 22; Strausberg, “War with Iraq Undermines U.N.,” CD, 3 October 2002, p. 1; Greg Bryant and Jane B. Vaughn, “300 Attend Rally Against Iraq War,” CDH, 3 October 2002, p. 8; Bettylu Saltzman, “Going Back a Few Years with Obama,” CT, 3 July 2007; Obama, “Weighing the Costs of Waging War in Iraq,” HPH, 30 October 2002, pp. 5–6; Mendell, Obama, pp. 173–75; “Carl Davidson on Barack O-bomb’em,” beyondchron.org, 21 January 2007; Perry Bacon Jr., “War Critics Question Obama’s Fervor,” WP, 15 September 2007; Jennifer Hunter, “Obama’s Touted Anti-War Stance Not So Audacious,” CST, 2 October 2007, p. 18; Obama, “A New Beginning,” DePaul University, 2 October 2007; Marilyn Katz, “CAWI’s Start, Oct. 2 and Obama’s Future,” www.noiraqwar-chicago.org, 2 October 2007; John McCormick, “Obama Marks ’02 War Speech,” CT, 3 October 2007; Scott Helman, “Early Defeat Launched a Rapid Political Climb,” BG, 12

October 2007; Jim Rutenberg, "Finding Archives Lacking, Obama Returns to 2002," NYT, 12 October 2007; Michael Crowley, "Is Obama's Iraq Record Really a Fairy Tale?," TNR, 27 February 2008; Don Gonyea, "Obama Still Stumps on 2002 Anti-War Declaration," Morning Edition, NPR, 25 March 2008; Jo Becker and Christopher Drew, "Pragmatic Politics, Forged on the South Side," NYT, 11 May 2008; Paul Street, Barack Obama and the Future of American Politics (Paradigm Publishers, 2008), p. 137; Groundswell Films, "What Changed?," YouTube, 23 December 2009; Remnick, The Bridge, pp. 343–49; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, pp. 202, 230; David Maraniss, "Obama's Military Connection," WP, 6 May 2012; Beatrice Lumpkin, Joy in the Struggle (International Publishers, 2013), pp. 244, 331; Axelrod, Believer, pp. 129–30; David Axelrod's 2009 interview with Robert Draper, DJG interviews with Bettylu Saltzman, Marilyn Katz, Jennifer Amdur Spitz, Dan Shomon, Raja Krishnamoorthi, Pete Giangreco, Chris Sautter, Chuy Garcia, and Beatrice Lumpkin.

65. UCLS Announcements 2002–03, esp. pp. 39, 45; UCLS, The Glass Menagerie 2002–03, esp. p. 21; "Black Faculty Member at the University of Chicago Law School Is Running for the U.S. Senate," Journal of Blacks in Higher Education, Autumn 2002, p. 26; CF, 1, 4, 9, 16, 17, and 18 October 2002; Chinta Strausberg, "Obama Ponders Run for U.S. Senate," CD, 10 October 2002, p. 6; Greg Hinz, "Jones Powers Up Senate Role," CCB, 7 October 2002, p. 3; JCAR Minutes, 8 October 2002; Michael Meiferdt, "Sen. Obama Visits WIU Campus," MJ, 9 October 2002; "Obama Issues Committee," 10 October 2002, AGP; H. J. Res. 114, Authorization for Use of Military Force Against Iraq Resolution of 2002, 11 October 2002; BP, 13 October 2002, p. 39 (Szarek-Martin wedding); Obama for Illinois, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 July–31 December 2002, 29 January 2003; Obama, TAOH, p. 293; Obama's Remarks at the Woodrow Wilson Center for International Studies, Washington, D.C., 1 August 2007; Shomon in David Mendell, "Barack Obama—Democrat for U.S. Senate," CT, 22 October 2004, in Mendell, Obama, pp. 148–49, in Liza Mundy, Michelle, p. 137, in Carol Felsenthal, "The Making of a First Lady," Chicago Magazine, February 2009, and in Remnick, The Bridge, pp. 336, 353–54; "Office Hours with Professor Obama?," WSJ Law Blog, 6 February 2008; "Candidates as Academics: I Got a Professor Named Obama," AbovetheLaw.com, 8 February 2008; DJG interviews with Jonathan Yi, Lisa Ellman, Ilisabeth Bornstein, Josh Pemstein, Dan Shomon, Will Burns, Dave Feller, John Sullivan, Andrew Gruber, Mike Marrs, Raja Krishnamoorthi, Susan Pierson Lewers, Leslie Corbett, Rob Scott, Jeff Stauter, Dave Stover, Bunny Fourez, Chris Sautter, Preston Pugh, and Cindy Huebner Davidsmeyer.

66. Doug Finke, "Democrats Try to Sweep State Elections," SJ-R, 21 October 2002, p. 1; CF, 22, 24, 28, and 31 October and 6, 7, 8, 14, 15, and 19 November 2002; "Steffen to Discuss Health Care," CDH, 28 and 29 October 2002, p. I-3; John O'Connor, "Budget Problems Could Dampen Democrat Control of Senate," AP, 29 October 2002; Strausberg, "Daley, Jesse Hold Mass GOTV Rally," CD, 2 November 2002, p. 3; Ray Long and Christi Parsons, "Democrats Win Senate and Lock on Legislature," CT, 6 November 2002; Finke, "Democats Take Charge of General Assembly," SJ-R, 6 November 2002, p. 5; Chicago Tonight, WTTW, 6 November 2002; Scott Turow, "Memo to Voters: Remember the Cruz Case," CT, 6 October 2002; Long and James Janega, "Illinois Democrats United—For Now," and Parsons, "GOP Scoffs at Dealing on Budget," CT, 7 November 2002; Ellen Warren, "How He Made It to the Mansion," CT, 8 November 2002; Dave McKinney, "The 93rd Unpacks Its Agenda," II, January 2003; Karen Wilcox e-mail to Arnie Miller, and Miller e-mail to DJG, 2 February 2010; DJG interviews with Debbie Leff, Arnie Miller, and David Spiegel.

67. CDH, 17 November 2002, p. J5 (Obama hiring Claire Serdiuk); Michael Dorf to Obama, 26 November 2002, FEC; Obama for Illinois, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 July–31 December 2002, 29 January 2003; Obama for Congress 2000, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 July–30 September 2002, 1 October–27 November 2002, and 28 November–31 December 2002, 12 March 2003; McLean-Clark, “Fundraising: Planning, Prospecting and the Importance of Money,” n.d., 21 pp., JMP; Michael D. Shear and Ceci Connolly, “In Illinois, a Similar Fight Tested a Future President,” WP, 9 September 2009; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, p. 221; Peter Wallsten, “Ruling Secures for Obama a Larger Place in History,” WP, 29 June 2012; Dean Olsen, “Seeds of Federal Health Care Law Were Planted in Illinois Senate,” SJ-R, 15 July 2012; DJG interviews with Jim Duffett, Willie Delgado, Steve Drizin, John Charles, Joe McLean, Susan Shadow Ransone, Katrina Emmons Mulligan, Claire Serdiuk, Cynthia Miller, Michael Dorf, and Dan Shomon.

68. Dennis Conrad, “Democrats Eyeing Fitzgerald in 2004 Senate Race,” AP, 16 November 2002; JCAR Minutes, 19 November 2002; CF, 20 and 21 November and 2, 4, 5, 6, 10, 19, and 23 December 2002; Minutes, General Assembly Retirement System Board of Trustees, 20 November 2002, #222, pp. 1854–58; Senate Floor Transcript, 20 November 2002, p. 9 (Obama introducing SBs 2432 and 2433); Harstad to Obama and Shomon, “Initial Stream of Conscious Thoughts on Issues and Message for the 2003–2004 Senate Campaign,” 21 November 2002, JKP; Ryan Keith, “Lawmakers Alter Ryan’s Reform Package But Say Issue Isn’t Over,” AP, 22 November 2002, and CDH, 24 November 2002, p. I-14; Public Affairs with Jeff Berkowitz, 25 November 2002 and 18 July 2004; Bernard Schoenburg, “LaHood, Fitzgerald Trade Jabs,” SJ-R, 29 November 2002, p. 1; “Fall Veto Session Begins,” C-WR 18 #1, 1 December 2002, p. 3; Lauren W. Whittington, “Fitzgerald Vulnerable; Democrats and Even Some in GOP Ponder Senate Challenge,” RC, 2 December 2002; Obama on Newsnight, CNN, 2 December 2002; Richard Goldstein, “Court Examines Death-Sentence Decision,” QCT and MJG, 3 and 4 December 2002; Ryan Keith, “Senate Committee Approves Death Penalty Package Despite Criticism,” AP, 3 December 2002; Senate Floor Transcript, 3 December 2002, p. 6 (Obama introducing SB 2434); Senate Floor Transcript, 4 December 2002, pp. 39–67 (HB 5657); Adriana Colindres, “Senate OKs Death Penalty Plan,” and Doug Finke, “Departing Lawmakers Get New Jobs,” SJ-R, 5 December 2002, p. 13; Rick Pearson, “Philip Will Resign as Senate’s GOP Chief,” CT, 5 December 2002; Finke, “Philip to Retire as Senate GOP Leader,” SJ-R, 5 December 2002, p. 10; John Patterson, “What Will Philip’s Legacy Be?,” CDH, 6 December 2002, p. 8; Russ Stewart, “Fitzgerald’s Prospects in ’04 Are Not That Bleak,” NSP, 11 December 2002; “Quiet Veto Session,” C-WR 18 #2, 20 December 2002, pp. 2–3; Flynn McRoberts, “Small Town Guy Steps Up,” CT, 29 December 2002; Stephen S. Morrill, “Client Report for 2002 Veto Session,” Morrill and Associates, December 2002; DJG interviews with Frank Watson, Ed Petka, Steve Rauschenberger, and Nia Odeoti-Hasan.

69. “Upcoming Events,” ObamaForIllinois.com, 10 December 2002; Jennifer Holuj (Center for Tax and Budget Accountability) e-mail to Raja Krishnamoorthi and Andrew Gruber, “Documents,” 10 December 2002, Cynthia Miller e-mail to Andrew Boron et al., “Follow Up,” 11 December 2002, Krishnamoorthi e-mail to Miller, “Issues Committee Database,” 12 December 2002, Gruber e-mail to Corporate Tax Breaks Subcommittee, “Preliminary Materials on Tax Expenditures,” 12 December 2002, Dan Shomon e-mail to Gruber et al., “Obama: Tax Breaks,” 16 December 2002, Gruber e-mail to David Adams et al.,

“Obama Corporate Tax Breaks,” 19 December 2002, Gruber e-mail to Joe Seliga et al., “Obama Corporate Tax Breaks,” 20 December 2002, Seliga e-mail to Gruber et al., “Obama Corporate Tax Breaks,” 24 December 2002, John Kerr, “Individual Income Tax Credit Analysis,” 29 December 2002, 5pp., Gruber e-mail to Adams et al., “Obama Corporate Tax Breaks,” 31 December 2002, Krishnamoorthi e-mail to Gruber, 2 January 2003, all AGP; Chinta Strausberg, “Trent Lott Agrees to Meet with Black Caucus,” CD, 12 December 2002, p. 3; “Four New Directors Join Joyce Foundation Board,” Press Release, 12 December 2002; Joyce Foundation, 2002 Annual Report; Woods Fund of Chicago, 2002 Annual Report, p. 4; Carol Marin, “Talking Some Sense into Moseley-Braun,” CT, 13 December 2002; ObamaforIllinois.com, 17 December 2002 (first Internet Archive capture); JCAR Minutes, 17 December 2002; JCAR, 2002 Annual Report; Eric Krol, “Some Not Sure Moseley-Braun Should Return,” CDH, 22 December 2002, p. 1; Dennis Conrad, “Moseley-Braun Says She Could Win Her Old Senate Seat Back,” AP, 23 December 2002; Laura Washington, “Lott Is No Friend,” CST, 23 December 2002, p. 29; CF, 31 December 2002; Hartman and Melody Spann-Cooper in Don Terry, “Raising the Voice,” CT Magazine, 19 March 2006, pp. 14ff.; Obama in Mundy, Michelle, p. 143 (“I probably would have stepped out of politics for a while” had Moseley Braun run); Remnick, The Bridge, p. 359; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, pp. 195–96; DJG interviews with Carol Moseley Braun, John Rogers Jr., Abner Mikva, David Wilhelm, Joe McLean, Claire Serdiuk, Jan Schakowsky, and Matt Piers. All told, Barack received a total of $70,000 for his service on the Joyce Foundation board. Kenneth P. Vogel, “Obama Linked to Gun Control Efforts,” Politico, 20 April 2008.

70. Kurt Erickson, “Ryan, Gadhafi, Arafat Have a Friend at U of I,” BP, 12 January 2003, p. C1; Jacobs, Obamaland, p. 88; “They Met Obama When,” CT, 16 November 2008; Obama, Constitutional Law III Final Examination, [11–16] December 2002; UCLS Course Evaluations, Fall 2002 (Current Issues in Racism is missing); UCLS Announcements 2002–03, p. 81; CF, 3, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 January 2003; “Pappas Eyes Run for U.S. Senate,” CT, 4 January 2003; “Agenda, Obama for Illinois, Strategy Conference Call, Monday, January 6th [2003], 1PM CT,” John Kupper notes, “Obama 1-6 [2003],” and John Kupper 2003 daybook entries, JKP; Andrew Gruber e-mail to Bill Fuhry, 6 January 2003, David J. Adams e-mail to Gruber, 8 January 2003, Gruber e-mail to Adams et al., and John Kerr e-mail to Gruber, “Another Suggestion,” 10 January 2003, all AGP; Senate Floor Transcript, 8 January 2003, p. 4; “Legislative Inauguration Celebration,” 8 January 2003, AGP; Lauren W. Whittington, “Waiting for Carol,” RC, 9 January 2003; Chinta Strausberg, “Senate Elects Black President,” CD, 9 January 2003, p. 1; “Nice Words Abound as Senate Convenes to Pick Leader,” SJ-R, 9 January 2003, p. 5; JCAR Minutes, 9 January 2003; Senate Floor Transcript, 9 January 2003, pp. 2–3 (Obama introducing SBs 4, 8, 9, 15, and 30); Mary Massengale, “Certain Hospital Data Could Be Made Available to Public,” SJ-R, 10 January 2003, p. 8; Matthew Kemeny, “Law Would Require Hospital Disclosures,” BP, 10 January 2003, p. A1; Andrew Binion, “Hospital Bill Might Create ‘Report Card,’” The Southern, 17 January 2003, QCT, 18 January 2003, and DHR, 26 January 2003; Christopher Wills, “Blagojevich Faces Budget Crisis with Big Promises,” AP, 10 January 2003; Strausberg, “Blagojevich Reveals $5 Billion Deficit,” CD, 14 January 2003, p. 1; Paul Simon to Obama, 15 January 2003, PSP; “Blagojevich Leads Democrats into Power,” C-WR 18 #4, 24 March 2003; DJG interviews with Raja Krishnamoorthi, Andrew Gruber, Dan Shomon, and Claire Serdiuk.

71. Maurice Possley and Steve Mills, “Clemency for All,” CT, 12 January 2003; Mary Massengale, “Ryan’s Actions May Spark Reforms,” SJ-R, 12 January 2003, p. 6; Eric Krol, “Legislators Defend Themselves After Ryan Puts Some Blame on Them,” CDH, 12 January 2003, p. 5; Jodi Wilgoren, “Citing Issues of Fairness, Governor Clears Out Death Row in Illinois,” NYT, 12 January 2003; Bruce Shapiro, “Ryan’s Courage,” The Nation, 16 January [print edition 3 February] 2003; Christi Parsons and Karen Mellen, “House Bill Seeks Limit on Blanket Clemency,” CT, 17 January 2003; CF, 13, 14, 16, and 22 January 2003; Timothy J. Gilfoyle, “Chicago Fortunes: Interviews with Lester Crown and John H. Johnson,” Chicago History, Fall 2000, pp. 58–72; Louise Daly, “Crown,” CCB, 15 October 2005; Christopher Drew and Mike McIntire, “After 2000 Loss, Obama Built Donor Network from Roots Up,” NYT, 3 April 2007; Jane Ammeson, “The Busy Life of Billionaire Lester Crown,” Chicago Life, February 2008; Jo Becker and Drew, “Pragmatic Politics, Forged on the South Side,” NYT, 11 May 2008; Pauline Yearwood, “Obama and the Jews,” Chicago Jewish News, 12 September 2008; Hilary Leila Krieger, “Mr. Obama’s Neighborhood,” Jerusalem Post, 23 October 2008; Steve Neal and Lynn Sweet, “Ex-Senator Won’t Try Again,” CST, 17 January 2003, p. 3; Jeff Zeleny, “Eyes on the Presidency,” CT, 17 January 2003; Dan Balz, “Moseley-Braun May Join the Crowd,” WP, 17 January 2003; Chinta Strausberg, “Moseley-Braun Won’t Run for U.S. Senate,” CD, 18 January 2003, p. 33; Krol, “Ex-Senator Doesn’t Want Rematch with Fitzgerald,” CDH, 18 January 2003, p. 11; Eric Zorn, “Moseley-Braun Gives Democrats Reason for Hope,” CT, 18 January 2003; Andrew Gruber e-mail to David Adams et al., “Obama Corporate Tax Breaks,” 19 January 2003, AGP; Laura Washington, “Obama’s Got Perfect Pedigree to Take Over Senate Race,” CST, 20 January 2003, p. 31; Todd Spivak, “Moseley-Braun Backs Out, Obama in for Senate Race,” HPH, 22 January 2003, pp. 1–2; Dan Mihalopolous, “Presidential Contender Braun Makes Bid Official,” CT, 23 September 2003; DJG interviews with Newton Minow, Alan Solow, John Rogers Jr., Carol Moseley Braun, John Kupper, Dan Shomon, Randon Gardley, Katrina Emmons Mulligan, Cynthia Miller, Claire Serdiuk, Denny Jacobs, Terry Link, Larry Walsh, and John Eason.

72. “Obama Kicks Off U.S. Senate Run,” Press Release, 21 January 2003; “Talking Points for Obama Press Conference, January 21, 2003,” JKP; Herbert G. McCann, “State Senator Declares U.S. Senate Bid,” AP, 21 January 2003; WLS ABC Chicago, 21 January 2003, MBC; Gregory Tejada, “Chico’s Senate Chances Rise,” UPI, 21 January 2003; Rick Pearson and John Chase, “Legislator in Race to Unseat Fitzgerald,” CT, 22 January 2003; Scott Fornek, “Obama Takes Jab at Fitzgerald as He Starts Run,” and “‘Blessed by God,’ Rooted in Two Continents,” CST, 22 January 2003, p. 8; Chinta Strausberg, “Obama to Challenge Sen. Fitzgerald,” CD, 22 January 2003, p. 5; Eric Krol, “Democratic Candidate Says Fitzgerald ‘Betrayed’ State,” CDH, 22 January 2003, p. 11; Chicago Tonight, WTTW, 22 January 2003; Todd Spivak, “Powerful Pals Promise Votes for Obama in 2004,” HPH, 29 January 2003, pp. 1–2; Krol, “Obama’s Debut Gave Little Hint of What Was to Come,” CDH, 19 January 2007, p. 16; DJG interviews with John Eason, Tim King, Dan Johnson-Weinberger, Jesse Jackson Jr., Emil Jones, Denny Jacobs, Terry Link, Larry Walsh, Jacqueline Collins, Freddrenna Lyle, Newton Minow, Andy Davis, Stephen Pugh, Preston Pugh, Linzey Jones, Joe Seliga, David Narefsky, Al Sharp, Tommy Walsh, Bill Fuhry, and Mike Marrs.

CHAPTER NINE: CALCULATION, COINCIDENCE, CORONATION

1. Edward B. Chez, Hull for Senate, to Secretary of the Senate, 21 January 2003, FEC; “Big Spender Triggers Higher Donation Limits,” CST, 1 February 2003, p. 4; Lauren W. Whittington, “Millionaires on Notice,” RC, 3 February 2003; Rick Pearson and Ray Gibson, “Campaign Fund Law Has Giant Loophole,” CT, 5 February 2003; Jennifer A. Steen, “Self-Financed Candidates and the ‘Millionaires’ Amendment,” in Michael J. Malbin, ed., Election After Reform: Money, Politics, and the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act (Rowman & Littlefield, 2006), pp. 204–18; Obama, TAOH, p. 5; Senate Floor Transcript, 22 January 2003, p. 1 (Obama introducing SB 59); Robert Themer, “U.S. Senate Hopeful: Rural Strategy May Grow in Pembroke,” KDJ, 28 January 2003; Whet Moser, “The Ongoing Poverty of Pembroke, Illinois,” CM, 21 September 2011; “Topics to Discuss at Axelrod Meeting, January 27, 2003, 3:45PM,” Shomon e-mail to Kupper, 27 January 2003, “Barack 1-27,” John Kupper conference call notes, JKP; Andrew Gruber e-mail to Shomon and Raja Krishnamoorthi, “Obama Corporate Tax Breaks—Summary Memo,” 23 January 2003, Gruber e-mail to Joe Seliga et al., “Obama,” 27 January 2003, Gruber e-mail to Krishnamoorthi and Shomon, “Obama Corporate Tax Breaks,” 30 January 2003, AGP; Shomon e-mail to Kupper, “Press Release on FEC Report,” 28 January 2003, Obama e-mail to Shomon, “Re: Press Release on FEC Report,” 29 January 2003, JKP; OFI, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 July–31 December 2002, 29 January 2003; Senate Floor Transcript, 29 January 2003, pp. 3–4 (Obama introducing SBs 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, and 131); “Fully Implement FamilyCare Budget Initiative for FY04,” NCPL, 5 February 2003; Obama in Ken Silverstein, “Barack Obama Inc.: The Birth of a Washington Machine,” Harper’s, November 2006, pp. 31–40; Martin Dupuis and Keith Boeckelman, Barack Obama, the New Face of America (Praeger, 2009), pp. 46–48; DJG interviews with Michael Dorf, Claire Serdiuk, Kelly Dietrich, Dan Shomon, John Kupper, Paul Harstad, Raja Krishnamoorthi, Andrew Gruber, Joe Seliga, and Bill Fuhry.

2. “Obama for U.S. Senate Strategic Plan,” n.d., 9pp., JKP, and a subsequent, updated but highly similar 8pp. version, TWP; Kupper Campaign Expenditure Projections, n.d., ca. January 2003, JKP; Chinta Strausberg, “Activists Say No to Joyce Washington,” CD, 29 January 2003, p. 3.

3. CF, 23, 24, 27, and 28 January and 4, 5, 7, and 14 February 2003; JCAR Minutes, 4 February 2003; Senate Floor Transcript, 5 February 2003, p. 5 (Obama introducing SBs 263 and 264); Lynn Sweet, “Fitzgerald Needs to Shed Cloak,” CST, 6 February 2003, p. 37; Matthew Kameny, “Democrats Support Taped Interrogation,” BP, 6 February 2003, p. 3; Shomon e-mail to Kupper et al., “Monday’s Strategy Conference Call,” 10 February 2003, OFI, “Obama to Hold State Hearings on ‘Dangerous’ Bush Medicaid Plan,” 11 February 2003, Press Conference Transcript, 11 February 2003, JKP; Chinta Strausberg, “Obama: ‘Medicaid Cuts Will Kill Hospitals,’” CD, 12 February 2003, p. 3; Steve Neal, “Fitzgerald’s Fading Fast,” CST, 12 February 2003, p. 45; Shomon e-mail to Paul Harstad et al., “Conference Call on Obama Issues Committee,” 13 February 2003, JKP; Andrew Gruber e-mail to Raja Krishnamoorthi et al., “Obama Bill,” 14 February 2003, AGP; Christopher Wills, “Obama Record Shows a Liberal Open to Compromise,” AP, 25 June 2008; Steven Thomma, “Obama an Effective Mediator in Illinois Senate,” KRDC, 27 March 2008; DJG interviews with Rob Scott, Greg Sullivan, Jim Dodge, Matt Jones, Bill Haine, Kathy Saltmarsh, John Cullerton, Paul Williams, Chuck Hurley, Dan Shomon, and John Kupper.

4. Lynn Sweet, “Vallas Backing Chico for Senate,” CST, 13 February 2003, p. 33; “Hynes Readies for Senate Race,” CT, 13 February 2003; “Democrat Announces Bid for Fitzgerald Seat,” CT, 14 February 2003; OFI, “Obama Pushes for Renewal of Illinois Earned Income Tax Credit,” 16 February 2003, JKP; Chinta Strausberg, “Obama Unveils New Tax Credit Bill,” CD, 17 February 2003, p. 3; Beth Sneller, “DuPage Democrats Turn Attention to Beating Fitzgerald,” CDH, 17 February 2003, p. 1; H. Gregory Meyer and Sean D. Hamill, “4 Democrats Take Aim at GOP, Bush Stances,” CT, 17 February 2003; Krishnamoorthi e-mail to Cynthia Miller et al., Krishnamoorthi e-mail to Andrew Gruber et al., “Obama Issues Committee,” 18 February 2003, AGP; Jeremiah Posedel e-mail, “Meet & Greet—Blair Hull,” 18 February 2003, JKP; Senate Floor Transcript, 18 February 2003, p. 14 (Obama introducing SB 552); Obama Block Schedule, 18–28 February 2003, JKP; Krishnamoorthi e-mail to Miller, “Pls. Forward to Issues Committee,” 21 February 2003, AGP; Tom Waldron, “Supporting Working Families When State Coffers Are Empty: Lessons from Illinois’ Successful Campaign for a Better EITC,” Hatcher Group, November 2003, pp. 3–4; DJG interviews with John Bouman, Sean Noble, Raja Krishnamoorthi, Andrew Gruber, Joe Seliga, Dino Christenson, and Matt Piers.

5. CF, 19, 20, and 21 February 2003; Senate Floor Transcript, 19 February 2003, pp. 2, 18–32 (Obama introducing SBs 777, 780, 781, 782, 783, 784, 860, 861, 862, 863, 864, 890, 891, 986, 987, 988, 989, 990, 994, 995, and 997, and SR 43); Andrew Gruber e-mail to Obama, “Obama Bill,” 19 February 2003, AGP; Mary Massingale, “Democrats Pushing Plan to Cut Drug Prices,” SJR, 20 February 2003, p. 1; Jodi Wilgoren, “Jesse Jackson, a Club Owner and Lasting Ties,” NYT, 20 February 2003; “Devine’s Intervention,” CT, 20 February 2003; Senate Floor Transcript, 20 February 2003, passim (Obama introducing fifty-five bills: SBs 1183, 1407–30, 1432–33, 1437, 1493 (altered March 5), 1524, 1554–58, 1582–88, and 1618–22); Eric Zorn, “Numbers Add Up to Suffering and Heartbreak,” CT, 22 February 2003; Mary Schmich, “Tragedy Pulls Racial Divisions into Spotlight,” CT, 23 February 2003; Sean D. Hamill, “Nightclub Safety Laws Mapped by Legislator,” CT, 27 February 2003; Chinta Strausberg, “Obama, Club Owners Push Anti-Panic Bill,” CD, 27 February 2003, p. 5; Senate Floor Transcript, 27 February 2003, p. 6; “Obama Weighs In on E2,” HPH, 5 March 2003, p. 6; Andrew Gruber e-mail to David Adams et al., “Obama Corporate Tax Breaks,” 12 March 2003, AGP; DJG interview with Steve Derks.

6. Lauren W. Whittington, “Illinois Black Turnout Key,” RC, 24 February 2003; CF, 25 and 28 February 2003; Dan Shomon e-mail to Terry Walsh et al., “Obama Strategy Conference Call,” 25 February 2003, JKP; Senate Floor Transcript, 26 February 2003, p. 2 (Obama introducing SJRs 16 and 22); Kirk Erickson, “Poll: Few Voters Back Fitzgerald,” BP, 28 February 2003; Bennett, Petts & Blumenthal, “Recap of Surveys of Illinois Democratic Voters,” 4 May 2004, MBP; DJG interview with Mark Blumenthal.

7. Greg Hinz, “Deals Cloud Ill. Housing Agency Bid,” CCB, 24 February 2003, p. 3; CF, 24, 26, and 27 February and 3, 4, 6, 10, 12, and 21 March 2003; “Stroger Hospital Doctor Named to Top Health Post,” CT, 26 March 2003; Lindsey Tanner, “Bleak Public Health Scene Confront’s New Chief’s Idealism,” AP, 10 April 2003; Stephanie Zimmerman, “The Advocate Is In,” II, June 2003; Sarah A. Klein, “Eric E. Whitaker,” CCB, 3 November 2003; Scott T. Shepherd, “The Politics of Health,” The New Physician, March 2004; “Complete Transcript of the Sun-Times Interview with Barack Obama,” 14 March 2008; Obama Block Schedule, 1–7 March 2003, JKP; UCLS Course Evaluations, Voting Rights, Winter 2003; “Bill Would Block Tech Investments,” CCB, 1 March 2003; The May Report, 3, 5, and 14 March 2003; John O’Connor, “Obama Challenges Opponents to Speak Out on War,” AP, 3 March 2003; OFI, “Planning Timeline” (2 versions), n.d., 3pp., JKP; John J. Koenigsknecht, “Homeland Security,” 25 February 2003, 7pp., Andrew Gruber e-mail to Raja Krishnamoorthi, “Issue Paper: Bush’s Tax Plan,” 28 February 2003, Krishnamoorthi e-mail to Gruber, "Tax Cuts," 2 March 2003, Krishnamoorthi e-mail to Issues Committee, "Sample Paper," 3 March 2003, AGP; Korecki, Only in Chicago, p. 160; DJG interviews with John Kupper, Raja Krishnamoorthi, Andrew Gruber, Josh Pemstein, H. Ron Davidson, and Beth DeLisle.

8. "Will the Senate Seek Justice?," CT, 4 March 2003; Christopher Wills, "Senate Committee Approves Death Penalty Safeguards, Taping Requirement," AP, 4 March 2003; Ray Long and Christi Parsons, "Senate Begins Assault on Crime," CT, 5 March 2003; Anne Marie Tavella, "Taping Murder Interrogations Wins Early Senate Support," CDH, 5 March 2003, p. 11; Chinta Strausberg, "Obama's Anti-Racial Bill Passes Panel," CD, 5 March 2003, p. 3; "Death Penalty Bill Headed for Senate Vote," CDLB, 5 March 2003, pp. 1, 24; Adriana Colindres, "Death Penalty Reforms Advance to Senate," and "Bill Targeting Racial Profiling OK'd by Committee," SJ-R, 5 March 2003, pp. 9, 15; Matthew Kemeny, "Death-Penalty Reforms Win Panel's Support," BP, 5 March 2003, p. A4; Dan Campana, "Taping Murder Suspects Gains Support in County," DDC, 13 March 2003; Steve Neal, "Obama a Worthy Heir to Washington Legacy," CST, 5 March 2003, p. 55; Neal, "Hynes Could Defeat a Weakened Fitzgerald," CST, 12 March 2003, p. 49; Senate Floor Transcript, 5 March 2003, pp. 25–26 (Obama colloquy with Peter Roskam); CF, 6 March 2003, p. 2 (detailing the controversy); Kristy Hessman, "Senate Committee OKs Public Funding of Supreme Court Campaigns," AP, 5 March 2003 (approval of Barack's SB 1415); Paul Davis, "Barack Obama Seeks to Shape National Debate for Illinois," N'Digo, 6–12 March 2003, pp. 6, 18; Michael C. Dorf to FEC, 20 August 2003, FEC; Mendell, Obama, p. 182; DJG interviews with Dan Shomon, Chris Sautter, Cynthia Miller, Will Burns, Kevin Thompson, Beverly Helm-Renfro, John Eason, Claire Serdiuk, Paul Harstad, John Kupper, Forrest Claypool, Joe McLean, Michael Dorf, Katrina Emmons Mulligan, Randon Gardley, Andrew Boron, Terry Walsh, and Pete Giangreco.

9. CF, 6, 12, 13, 17, 18, 19, and 20 March 2003; John Patterson, "Why Local Leaders May Need to Record Closed-Door Talks," CDH, 7 March 2003, p. 8; Obama Block Schedule, 8–31 March 2003, JKP; OFI, "Obama Says $1.35 Minimum Wage Increase Will Help Families," 9 March 2003, OFI; Chinta Strausberg, "Blacks, Whites Unite in Anti-War Efforts," CD, 10 March 2003, p. 3; CF, 11 and 12 March 2003; JCAR Minutes, 11 March 2003; "Blagojevich Delivers His First State of the State Address," C-WR 18 #5, 14 April 2003 (12 March); Senate Committee Action Report, Health and Human Services, 12 March 2003 (SB 1082); Brock Willeford, "Senate Republican Staff Analysis," SB 1082, 13 March 2003; Kristy Hessman, "Lawmakers Approve Abortion-Friendly Legislation," AP, 13 March 2003; Ray Long and Kate McCann, "Club Safety Bill Heads to Senate," CT, 13 March 2003; "Leave This Legal Reform Alone," CT, 14 March 2003; OFI, "Obama Bill to Stop Racial Profiling in Illinois Passes Senate for First Time," 15 March 2003; Andrew Binion, "Former Army Scout Loves His Role as NRA Lobbyist in Springfield," SI, 4 May 2003; Terence P. Jeffrey, "More on Obama and Babies Born Alive," Human Events, 16 January 2008; Larry Rohter, "Obama's 2003 Stand on Abortion Draws New Criticism in 2008," NYT, 20 August 2008; Jess Honig, "Obama and 'Infanticide,'" Factcheck.org, 25 August 2008; Trotter in David Nather, "Obama's Quick Rise on a Non-Traditional Career Path," CQ Weekly, 21 August 2008, and on PBS Newshour, 25 September 2008; Rickey Hendon, White Enough/Black Enough, pp. 37–38; Hendon's 2010 interview with Peter Slen; Beverly Helm-Renfro's 2012 interview with Mark DePue, esp. pp. 55, 58, 61, 65; Christopher Wills, "Clues to How Obama Would Play His Hand as President Can Be Found in Poker Style," AP, 24 September 2007; Peter Hitchens, "The Black Kennedy: But Does Anyone Know the Real Barack Obama?," Daily Mail, 2 February 2008; Will Englund, "When Is Obama Bluffing?," NJ, 5 December 2009; DJG interviews with Howard Peters, Bill Perkins, Dale Righter, Jo Johnson, Pam Sutherland, Beverly Helm-Renfro, Todd Vandermyde, Richard Pearson, Nia Odeoti-Hassan, Debbie Lounsberry, Glenn Hodas, Christine Radogno, Steve Preckwinkle, Frank Clark, Tristé Lieteau Smith, Mattie Hunter, Jeff Schoenberg, Iris Martinez, Jill Rock, Jim Dodge, Emil Jones Jr., Donne Trotter, Kim Lightford, Jacqueline Collins, Martin Sandoval, Bobby Molaro, Denny Jacobs, Ed Maloney, Dave Luechtefeld, Terry Link, Larry Walsh, Bill Brady, Mike Lieteau, Boro Reljic, Dave Manning, Phil Lackman, and Pete Baroni.

10. "DL21C's March 2003 Second Thursday Event" and "Candidates Greet 2nd Thursday Crowds," DL21C-Chicago.org; Senate Floor Transcript, 19 March 2003, pp. 1 (Obama introduces SR 89) and 6 (Senate passage of Obama's SB 59); OFI, "Obama Challenges Democratic U.S. Senate Candidates to Stand Up, Speak Out and Oppose Iraq War," 15 March 2003; Jim Ritter, "Anti-War Rally Here Draws Thousands," CST, 17 March 2003, p. 3; H. Gregory Meyer and Grace Aduroja, "Demonstrators Say No to War," CT, 17 March 2003; Megan Reichgott, "Some Illinoisans Cheer, Others Protest U.S. Attack on Iraq," AP, 20 March 2003; Senate Floor Transcript, 20 March 2003, pp. 56–58, 106–12, 197–200, 204–5, 219–24; Rich Frederick, "Ephedra Bill Passed by Senate," SJR, 21 March 2003, p. 21; "State Sen. Obama to Speak at Evans Reception," CDLB, 21 March 2003; Chinta Strausberg, "Uninsured Black Patients Gouged: SEIU Study," CD, 22 March 2003, p. 20; Matthew Kemeny, "Three Democrats Hope to Unseat Fitzgerald," BP, 23 March 2003, p. B3; Tammie Leigh Brown, "Democrats Meet with Community Saturday," MJ, 24 March 2003; Todd Spivak, "E2 Tragedy Prompts New State, City Safety Laws," HPH, 9 April 2003, p. 6; Jan Dennis, "Son's Death Spurs Crusade Against Herbal Stimulant," AP, 25 April 2003; DJG interview with Jeremiah Posedel. On James Meeks, see Monica Davey, "At the Crossroads: A Neighborhood, a Church and a Pastor," CT, 6 April 1999, Greg Hinz, "State Senator, TV Host and Megachurch Pastor," CCB, 4 July 2005, p. 2, and Mick Dumke, "The Church of Clout," CR, 25 January 2007.

11. Senate Floor Transcript, 24 March 2003, pp. 77–89, esp. 87; Chris Wetterich, "Senate Votes to Allow Needle Purchases," CST, 25 March 2003, p. 19; OFI, "Obama: Governor's Budget Protects Crucial Services," 25 March 2003; Senate Floor Transcript, 25 March 2003, pp. 69–71 (SB 4) and 77–84 (SB 130); Senate Floor Transcript, 26 March 2003, pp. 86–90 (SB 125), 90–93 (SB 130), and 187–97 (SB 1415); AP, "Senate Approves Public Funding of Supreme Court Campaigns," 26 March 2003; Jermain Griffin, "Senate Approves Public Funding for High Court Campaigns," CDLB, 27 March 2003, pp. 1, 24; CF, 27, 28, and 31 March 2003; Newsnight, CNN, 28 March 2003; Tim Jones, "Poll: 66% of Blacks Oppose War," CT, 29 March 2003; Christopher Wills, "Civil Rights Activists Seizing Opportunity Under Democrats," AP, 30 March 2003; Obama Block Schedule, 8–31 March 2003 and April 2003, JKP; E. J. Kessler, "Campaign Confidential," JDF, 4 April 2003; Todd Spivak, "Controversial Obama Bill Would 'Open Government,'" HPH, 2 April 2003, p. 3; Steve Neal, "Pappas Nears Hynes, But It's Still Early," CST, 2 April 2003, p. 53; DJG interview with Nathan Diamant.

12. Senate Floor Transcript, 3 April 2003, pp. 16–18 (SB 15), 21–23 (SB 30), and pp. 23–34 (SB 50); Christopher Wills, "Senate Approves Broad Overhaul of Death Penalty System," AP, 3 April 2003; Anne Marie Tavella, "Profiling, Taping Plans Pass Senate," CDH, 4 April 2003, p. 17; Christi Parsons and Kate McCann, "Senate OKs Death Penalty Bills," CT, 4 April 2003; CF, 4 April 2003; Senate Floor Transcript, 4 April 2003, pp. 18–33 (SB 1035) and pp. 126–29 (Obama and Steve Rauschenberger colloquy on SB 1414); Chinta Strausberg, “Senator Obama’s Racial Profiling, Videotaping Bills Clear Senate,” CD, 5 April 2003, p. 4; “A Remarkable Week for Justice,” CT, 7 April 2003; Christopher Wills, “Obama Cites Death Penalty Reforms,” AP, 12 November 2007; Kevin McDermott, “In Illinois, Obama Made Waves from the Start,” SLPD, 10 December 2007; Obama, remarks on Trayvon Martin, 19 July 2013, Washington, D.C.; DJG interviews with Greg Sullivan, Matt Jones, Jim Covington, Kathy Saltmarsh, Pete Baroni, Bill Haine, Jim Dodge, Ed Petka, Dan Cronin, Don Harmon, Mark Donohue, Jim Finley, Steve Drizin, Lawrence Marshall, David Starrett, and Jacqueline Collins.

13. Obama Block Schedule, April 2003, JKP; OFI, “Join Senator Barack Obama for a Community Discussion,” 6 April 2003; John Kupper conference call notes, “Obama,” 7 April [2003], JKP; JCAR Minutes, 8 April 2003; Senate Floor Transcript, 8 April 2003, pp. 15–20 (SB 1586), 134–35 (SB 1414), 136–37 (SB 1417); AP, “Senate Approves Taping of Closed Meetings,” 8 April 2003; “In Springfield,” CDLB, 9 April 2003, p. 3; CF, 9, 10, and 11 April 2003; “Sen. Obama’s Minimum Wage Bill [sic] Passes Illinois Senate,” CD, 9 April 2003, p. 8 (SB 600, sponsored by Kim Lightford and seven additional senators, not including Obama); Mickey Ciokajlo, “Calling Cards Eyed for County Inmates,” CT, 10 April 2003; Bruce Japsen, “Illinois May Demand Report Cards from Hospitals,” CT, 13 April 2003; Obama Weekly News, 13–17 April 2003, TWP; Cleve Mesidor e-mail to John Kupper, 15 April 2003, JKP; Jeremiah Wright, “Confusing God and Government,” 13 April 2003, www.blackpast.org/2008-rev-jeremiah-wright-confusing-god-and-government; Chinta Strausberg, “Obama to Bush: ‘Fix Up U.S. Budget First,’” CD, 15 April 2003, p. 3; “Governor Sets Stage for Budget Dance,” C-WR 18 #6, 17 April 2003; “Democratic State Senator Visits CMS,” Chicago Medicine, May 2003, p. 11 (“early April”); “FY 2004 Budget Review,” C-WR 18 #8, 8 September 2003; Baim, Obama and the Gays, pp. 15, 521, 538; Gayle Kaiser, “Up Close with Obama,” The Paper [Galesburg], 12 January 2005, pp. 1, 3; Brian Ross and Rehab El-Buri, “Obama’s Pastor,” ABC News, 13 March 2008; Roland S. Martin, “The Full Story Behind Wright’s ‘God Damn America’ Sermon,” CNN.com, 21 March 2008; Audra Wilson, “Witnessing History from the Very Beginning,” Chicago Reporter, 25 December 2008; Claire Bushey, “How Blagojevich Go-Between Built Surgery Center Business,” CCB, 8 June 2013; Marc Solomon, Winning Marriage (ForeEdge, 2014), pp. 268–69; DJG interviews with Kevin Thompson, Jeremiah Posedel, Jim Collins, Audra Wilson, John Bouman, Nate Tamarin, Andrew Boron, Pete Giangreco, Terry Walsh, Dan Shomon, and Peter Coffey.

14. Dan Shomon e-mail to John Kupper et al., “Draft Weekly Report for Week 2,” 13 April 2003, JKP; Obama Weekly News, 13–17 April 2003, TWP; OFI, FEC Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 January–31 March 2003, 14 April 2003; OFI, “Obama U.S. Senate Campaign Raises Half-Million,” 15 April 2003; Dennis Conrad, “Illinois Democrats Busy Raising Money for U.S. Senate Race,” AP, 16 April 2003; “New Digs,” HPH, 16 April 2003, p. 4; Peter Savodnik, “Democrats See Big Opportunity in Open Illinois Senate Race,” TH, 7 May 2003; Dupuis and Boeckelman, Barack Obama, p. 48; Lawrence A. Horwich, Barack H. and Michelle L. Obama, 2002 Form 1040, 24 March 2003; OFI, “Campaign Prospectus,” n.d. [ca. soon after 16 April 2003], TWP; Bob Secter, “For Obama, Charity Really Began in the U.S. Senate,” CT, 25 April 2007; Dorothy A. Brown, “Lessons from Barack and Michelle Obama’s Tax Returns,” Tax Notes, 10 March 2014, pp. 1109–13; Steven R. Strahler, “Lou Holland . . . Dies at 74,” CCB, 29 February 2016.

15. “2004 Campaign Polling: Illinois Senate,” NationalJournal.com, 8–11 April 2003; CF, 14, 15, and 16 April 2003; Rick Pearson, "Fitzgerald Not Going to Pursue Re-Election," CT, 15 April 2003; Lynn Sweet, "Fitzgerald Quits Race," CST, 15 April 2003, p. 1; Jodi Wilgoren, "Illinois Senator Announces He Won't Seek Re-Election," NYT, 16 April 2003; Nick Anderson, "GOP's Fitzgerald Won't Try to Retain Senate Seat," LAT, 16 April 2003; Pearson and Ray Long, "Edgar Leads GOP's List to Replace Fitzgerald," CT, 16 April 2003; Sweet, "Doubts Force Fitzgerald Out," Scott Fornek and Dave McKinney, "White House Choice Is Edgar, but Field Could Get Crowded," and Steve Neal, "Writing Was on the Wall After Latest Fitzgerald Polls," CST, 16 April 2003, pp. 9, 55; Peter Savodnik, "Fitzgerald Bows Out," TH, 16 April 2003; Chinta Strausberg, "Fitzgerald's Backing Out Pushes Obama in Front," and "An Enlightened Health Care Policy," CD, 16 April 2003, pp. 3, 9; Mike Ramsey, "Fitzgerald Won't Run Again for Senator," SJR, 16 April 2003, p. 1; Sweet, "Edgar Watch Puts Poll on Hold," CST, 17 April 2003, p. 33; Corey Hall, "Union Accuses Hospitals of Price-Gouging Poor and Minorities," HPC, 17 April 2003, p. 4; Shia Kapos, "HIV Compromise Wins Support," CT, 20 April 2003; Lauren W. Whittington, "Waiting for Edgar," RC, 21 April 2003; Richard Goldstein, "Republicans Ponder Senate Chances," MJG and SI, 22 April 2003; Todd Spivak, "Obama Raises $600,000," HPH, 23 April 2003, p. 2.

16. Obama Block Schedule, April 2003, JKP; Dan Shomon e-mail to John Kupper et al., Kupper to Shomon, and Raja Krishnamoorthi to Shomon et al., "Obama Weekly Report Draft," [20] and 21 April 2003, Obama Weekly News, 21–27 April 2003, TWP; Obama, "Increasing Minimum Wage to Lift Up the Poor," HPH, 23 April 2003, p. 4; Rick Pearson, "President Asks Edgar to Consider Senate Run," CT, 23 April 2003; Dennis Conrad, "Bush Urges Ex-Ill. Gov on Senate Run," AP, 23 April 2003; Chinta Strausberg, "Obama Joins Hunger Group in Fighting to Remove Red Tape for Thousands of Hungry," CD, 24 April 2003, p. 2; "Illinois: GOP Got Ryan-ed All the Way Down the Ticket," The Hotline, 24 April 2003; John O'Connor, "Governor Says Death Penalty Moratorium Will Continue," AP, 24 April 2003; "Illinois Keeps a Moratorium on Executions," NYT, 25 April 2003; Obama to Stephen Pugh, 3 April 2003, SPP; OFI, "Black Young Professionals Raise $65,000 for Obama," 24 April 2003; Obama Weekly News, 28 April–3 May 2003, TWP; Lenore T. Adkins, "Obama Hosts Swank Party, Nets $50K for Senate Race," HPH, 30 April 2003, p. 7; "Young Black Professionals Raise $61,000 for Senate Candidate Obama," HPC, 1 May 2003, p. 2; "Black Professionals Raise $61,000 for Obama," CD, 10 May 2003, p. 6; Chris Rickert, "Simon Calls on U.S. to Be More Sensitive," DDC, 26 April 2003; Bernard Schoenburg, "Democrats Lining Up Money, Staffers for Senate Run," SJR, 27 April 2003, p. 15; Susan and David Axelrod, Nancy and Ed Burke, Sara Paretsky to Dear Friend, n.d., JKP; E. J. Kessler, "Illinois Senate Candidates Eyeing State's Jewish Voters," JDF, 9 May 2003, p. 1; Axelrod, Believer, pp. 154–55; DJG interviews with Alan Solow, John Kupper, and Tom Geoghegan.

17. "Democratic Poll Overview," ILSenate.com, Global Strategy Group, 25–30 April 2003; CF, 29 and 30 April and 2 and 6 May 2003; National Community Building Network 10th Anniversary 2003 Annual Conference, 30 April–3 May 2003; Russ Stewart, "Recruitment of Edgar Is GOP's Top Priority," NSP, 30 April 2003; Obama Block Schedule, May 2003, JKP; Bernard Schoenburg, "It's Not a Great Shock," SJR, 1 May 2003, p. 7; Daniel C. Voock, "House Vote to Come on Taped Confessions," CDLB, 2 May 2003, pp. 1, 24; Chinta Strausberg, "Bush: Combat Ends, but War Must Go On," CD, 3 May 2003, p. 3; Jaime Griesgraber, "Candidates Introduced at Annual Meeting of City Democrats," DN, 5 May 2003; Steven R. Strahler, "Wheels Wobbling at Chico's Law Firm," CCB, 5 May 2003, p. 3; Alison Neumer, "Michael Golden,” CT, 28 May 2003; OFI, “Obama, Medicaid Advocates Criticize Bush Plan at Senate Hearing,” 5 May 2003; Strausberg, “Obama, Activists Rip Bush Over Medicaid Reform Plan,” CD, 6 May 2003, p. 2; Thomas P. Sullivan and Scott Turow, “Taping Confessions Is a Much-Needed Reform,” CT, 6 May 2003; Doug Wilson, “U.S. Senate Candidate Brings Message to Quincy,” QHW, 7 May 2003, p. B1; Steve Neal, “Don’t Count Comptroller Out,” CST, 7 May 2003, p. 59; Eric Krol, “High Roller Set to Spend Big to Unseat GOP Senator,” CDH, 13 April 2003, p. 1; Kennedy Communications, “State Senator Barack Obama, Candidate for U.S. Senate: Background Report,” April 2003, RRP; Hull for Senate, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 April–30 June 2003, 3 July 2003, p. 173 ($18,840.26 payment to Kennedy Communications on 21 May 2003 for “Research”); DJG interviews with Paul Schmitz, Eric Adelstein, Megan Crowhurst, Kelly Dietrich, Dan Hynes, Chris Mather, Jef Pollock, Rick Ridder, Fred Lebed, Anita Dunn, Mark Blumenthal, David Spiegel, Kitty Kurth, Mike Henry, Mo Elleithee, Don Wiener, and Blair Hull.

18. Obama Block Schedule, May 2003, JKP; CF, 7, 8, 9, 12, and 13 May 2003; Senate Floor Transcript, 7 May 2003, pp. 11–24 (HB 60, PA 93-0007, 20 May 2003); Christi Parsons and John Chase, “Women’s Equal Pay Advances,” CT, 8 May 2003; John O’Connor, “Bill Requiring Taped Interrogations Heads to Governor,” AP, 8 May 2003; Parsons and Kate McCann, “Taped Confessions Bill Passes,” and “First Light of Justice Reform,” CT, 9 May 2003; Anne Marie Tavella, “Legislators Want Police to Roll Tape,” CDH, 9 May 2003, p. 8; Jermain Griffin, “Legislators to Negotiate Scope of Proposed ‘Sunshine in Litigation’ Law,” CDLB, 9 May 2003, pp. 1, 24; Rick Pearson, “GOP Senate Floodgates Open as Edgar Says No,” CT, 10 May 2003; Bernard Schoenburg, “Edgar Won’t Run,” SJR, 10 May 2003, p. 1; Shamus Toomey, “No Party for Republicans Without Edgar,” CDH, 10 May 2003, p. 5; Terry Walsh to Dan Shomon, “Photo Shoot,” 25 April 2003, JKP; “Photo Shoot Schedule,” 10 May 2003, TWP; Dan Shomon e-mail to John Kupper, “PR Brainstorming on Wednesday, May 14,” 12 May 2003, JKP; Ryan Keith, “Labor Support, Money Helped SBC Win Big at Capitol,” AP, 12 May 2003; Rich Miller, “The Floodgates,” IT, 13 May 2003; Vikas Bajaj, “SBC Finds Allies in State Legislatures,” DMN, 13 May 2003; Rick Pearson, “Illinois Governor Defends Controversial Measure Benefiting SBC Communications,” CT, 13 May 2003; JCAR Minutes, 13 May 2003; Senate Floor Transcript, 13 May 2003, pp. 55–66 (HB 3316) and 122–31 (HB 1574); Pat Guinane, “Lawmakers Vote to Hold Slowpokes to the Right,” SJR, 14 May 2003, p. 1; Anne Marie Tavella, “Slow Driver Bill Passes Senate,” CDH, 14 May 2003, p. 7; Marni Pyke, “Shining a Light on Racial Profiling,” CDH, 14 May 2003, p. 1; Chinta Strausberg, “Obama Urges Congress to Resist $300 Billion Deficit,” CD, 14 May 2003, p. 3; “Agenda, PR Brainstorming for Senator Barack Obama,” 14 May 2003, John Kupper meeting notes, “Obama 5/14,” JKP; Senate Floor Transcript, 15 May 2003, p. 89 (Obama remarking concerning HB 515 that “I know that Pete Baroni did not draft this because it’s not as clear as I would like”); Senate Floor Transcript, 16 May 2003, pp. 118–31, esp. 120–21 (HB 2579); Edwin Colfax, “Taped Confessions,” CT, 18 May 2003; Obama YouTube Video, 16 June 2003 (HB 60 “is a major victory that we achieved this year” and “there is no logical reason why we would not provide health care plans to immigrant youth”); Mark K. Matthews, “States Tell Police to Turn on the Camera,” Stateline.org, 4 May 2005; Jerry Crimmins, “Videotaped Interrogations Get High Marks,” CDLB, 3 November 2005, p. 1; Rob Warden’s excellent “Illinois Death Penalty Reform: How It Happened, What It Promises,” Journal of Criminal Law and Criminology 95 (Winter 2005): 381–426; “A Chronicle Q&A with Barack Obama,” Chronicle.com, 12

November 2007 (HB 60); Jim Edgar's 2010 interviews with Mark DePue, pp. 1050–51, 1087, 1089; DJG interviews with Kathy Saltmarsh, Laura Russell Hunter, Deanne Benos, Jim Edgar, John Millner, John Kupper, Pete Giangreco, and Terry Walsh.

19. Obama Block Schedule, May 2003; OFI, "Obama Announces State Hearings on Bush Plan to 'Download' Key Parts of Head Start," 18 May 2003; Obama Weekly Report, 19–26 May, 20 May 2003, TWP; Hull for Senate, FEC Form 10, 9 May 2003, 4:55 P.M. (re-sent 12 May 2003, 3:42 P.M.), FEC; Jack Brammer, "Two Kentuckians Reflect on Their Time with Barack Obama," Lexington Herald-Leader, 19 January 2009; DJG interviews with Pete Giangreco, Terry Walsh, John Kupper, Dan Shomon, Nate Tamarin, Jim Cauley, and Rob Fisher.

20. Obama Block Schedule, May 2003, JKP; "Democratic Poll Overview," ILSenate.com, 19 May 2003; Greg Hinz, "Gov. Plays Favorite in Business," CCB, 19 May 2003; CF, 9 April, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 27 May and 11 and 18 September 2003; Kelly Quigley, "Teamsters Back Hynes for Senate," CCB, 20 May 2003; Eric Zorn, "Candidate Ryan Is Not Confused About Who He Is," CT, 20 May 2003; Adam Clymer, "Two Parties on the Prowl to Claim the Senate in '02," NYT, 23 June 2001; Jill Stanek, "Jack Ryan: From Harvard to Hales," IL, 30 September 2002; Daniel K. Proft, "Putting Conservative Principles into Action," IL, 29 May 2003; Fran Eaton, "Jack Ryan, GOP Candidate for U.S. Senate," IL, 14, 15, and 16 October 2003; Lynn Sweet, "Jack Ryan Holds Back in Biography," CST, 27 November 2003, p. 45; Ray Long and Christi Parsons, "Scolding for SBC Law," CT, 20 May 2003; "WomanView: Illinois Victims' Economic Security and Safety Act (SB 1763)," NCPL, 25 March 2003; Senate Floor Transcript, 20 May 2003, pp. 27–32 (unanimous passage of HB 3486, the successor to Obama's SB 1763); Charlie Crain, "Teamsters Back Hynes for Senate," NIT, 21 May 2003; Peter Savodnik, "Pols vs. Businessmen in Illinois Race," TH, 21 May 2003; Chinta Strausberg, "Governor: No Gambling!," CD, 21 May 2003, p. 3; Ray Long and Rick Pearson, "U.S. Turns Probe to State Senate Democrats," CT, 21 May 2003; Dearbail Jordan, "Alzheimer's International Chairman Quits After Internal Shake-Up," TheLawyer.com, 21 May 2003; Tom Gradel to Kelly Steel et al., 21 May 2003, HORP; Rick Pearson and Ray Long, "Capitol Collision Course," CT, 22 May 2003; Scott Fornek, "Downstate Dem Enters Senate Fray," CST, 23 May 2003; Bernard Schoenburg, "McVeigh Prosecutor," SJR, 19 April 2010; DJG interviews with Tim King, Wendy Pollack, Rob Scott, Dan Shomon, and Jim Dodge.

21. Obama Block Schedule, May 2003, JKP; "Notes," CDLB, 16 May 2003, p. 24; Libby Brewer Notice, CT, 18 May 2003; CF, 26 March and 21, 23, 28, 29, and 30 May 2003; Obama Weekly Report, 19–26 May 2003 and 27 May–1 June 2003, TWP; OFI to Team Captain, "June 12th Event," 20 May 2003; Claire Serdiuk e-mail to Marty Nesbitt et al., 22 May 2003, SPP; Scott Fornek, "Downstate Dem Enters Senate Fray," CST, 23 May 2003, p. 4; Obama, Commencement Address, Chicago-Kent College of Law, 25 May 2003; Gubernatorial Press Release, "Governor Calls for Ban on Sale of Dietary Supplement Ephedra," 14 May 2003; Brandon Loomis, "Ill. Gov. Signs Ephedra Ban," AP, 25 May 2003, and CDH, 26 May 2003, p. I-9; Jim Ritter, "Ephedra Sales Banned in Illinois," CST, 26 May 2003, p. 6; Senate Floor Transcript, 27 May 2003, pp. 29–42, esp. 34–35 (HB 3023); John Kupper notes, "Barack 5/27," 27 May 2003, JKP; Minutes, GARS Board of Trustees, 29 May 2003, #223, pp. 1859–63; Senate Floor Transcript, 29 May 2003, pp. 82–88 (HB 2221); Senate Journal, 29 May 2003, p. 46; Ray Long and Rick Pearson, "State Set to Clean Its House," and Christi Parsons and Long, "Death Penalty Reform Goes to Blagojevich," CT, 30 May 2003; Senate Floor Transcript, 30 May 2003, pp. 42–43 (HB 569), 140–42

(SB 1493) and 160–61 (SR 89); AP, “Nightclub Safety Bills Heads to Governor,” 31 May 2003; Senate Floor Transcript, 31 May 2003, pp. 27–39 (HB 3412), 181–86 (SB 600), and 201–3 (SB 4); Long and Parsons, “O’Hare Plan Passes Amid Budget Rush,” CT, 1 June 2003; Pearson and Long, “Blagojevich Lauds His Budget,” and Kate McCann, “Democrats Take Charge,” CT, 2 June 2003; Jermain Griffin, “Campaign Finance Reform Still on Group’s Docket,” CDLB, 3 June 2003, pp. 1, 24; Stephen S. Morrill, “Client Report for 2003 End of Session,” Morrill & Associates, June 2003, esp. pp. 6–9; Senate Republican Leader Frank Watson, End of Session Report 2003, esp. pp. 15, 136–200; Illinois Environmental Council, “2003 Environmental Scorecard,” and “End of Session Report,” 2 June 2003, JGP; “Major Bills Passed by the Illinois General Assembly,” LRU First Reading 17 (August 2003): 7; “Spring Legislative Session Mostly Mild,” C-WR 18 #7, 8 August 2003; Barbara Van Dyke-Brown et al., Almanac of Illinois Politics—2004 (University of Illinois at Springfield, 2004), pp. 150–51 (crediting Obama with nineteen bills passed); Tom Waldron, “Supporting Working Families When State Coffers Are Empty: Lessons from Illinois’ Successful Campaign for a Better EITC,” Hatcher Group, November 2003, pp. 8–10; Linda Mills, Illinois Prisoner Reentry: Building a Second Chance Agenda (Annie E. Casey Foundation, July 2004); Carrie Cox et al., “Certificates of Relief from Disabilities Implementation and Tracking,” Safer Foundation, November 2006, esp. p. 5; David Moberg, “Union Blues Lift in Chicago,” Nation, 9 April 2005; Ed Wojcicki, “Still the Wild West?: A 10-Year Look at Campaign Finance Reform in Illinois,” Simon Institute, Southern Illinois University, September 2006, p. 17; Cindi Canary in Jackie Calmes, “Statehouse Yields Clues to Obama,” WSJ, 23 February 2007; Olivia Clarke, “Choosing Sides,” CL, January 2008; Brad Spirrison, “Barack Obama Has an Affinity for Venture Capital That Dates Back to His Days as a State Senator,” Venture Capital Journal, 1 February 2009; Maura O’Hara, “IVCA Mourns a Key Contributor,” IllinoisVC.org, 17 August 2011; John Sexton, “Obama Praised Private Equity When He Needed Cash,” Breitbart.com, 2 July 2012; Alejandra Cancino, “Executive Profile: Keith Kelleher,” CT, 2 December 2013; DJG interviews with Larry Walsh, Miguel del Valle, Paula Wolff, Will Burns, Pete Baroni, Linda Mills, Sean Noble, John Nicolay, Keith Kelleher, Madeline Talbott, Roberta Lynch, Bill Perkins, Ray Harris, Michael McGann, Jerry Morrison, Cindi Canary, and Ed Wojcicki.

22. Chicago Tonight, WTTW, 29 May 2003; David Mark, “’04 Illinois Democratic Senate Candidates,” Campaigns & Elections, June 2003, p. 40; Obama Block Schedule, June 2003, Dan Shomon e-mail to John Kupper et al., “Agenda for Today’s Conference Call/Meeting,” 2 June 2003, JKP; Obama Weekly Report, 2–8 June 2003, JKP; Scott Fornek, “Poshard Never Heard of Downstater, Leans Toward Hynes,” CST, 4 June 2003, p. 12; Chinta Strausberg, “Pols Urge Governor to Sign 2nd Chance Bill,” CD, 12 June 2003, p. 3; Lesley R. Chinn, “Ex-Offender Legislation Passes; Awaits Governor’s Signature,” HPC, 12 June 2003, p. 2; Hull Research to Hull Communications et al., “Current/Additional Research on Barack Obama,” 9 June 2003, HORP and RRP; Hull Research to Hull Communications et al., “Current/Additional Research on Dan Hynes,” 9 June 2003, HORP; Sean Cartwright, Kennedy Communications, to Hull for Senate, “Current/Additional Research on Gery Chico,” 9 June 2003, HORP; Jeremiah Posedel e-mail to Dear Friend, “Rep. Evans Endorses Obama!,” 9 June 2003, TWP; Voices for Choices v. Illinois Bell Telephone, #03-C-3290 (N. D. Ill.), 9 June 2003 (Judge Charles P. Kocoras granting preliminary injunction); Jon Van and Christi Parsons, “Judge Blocks SBC Rate Law Ruling,” CT, 10 June 2003; CF, 13 June 2003; Peter Savodnik, “Illinois Lawyer Simmons Garners Support,” TH, 10 June 2003; JCAR Minutes, 10 June 2003; Obama Weekly Report, 10–16 June 2003, TWP; [Joe Sinsheimer], “Research—State Sen. Barack Obama,” 2 vols., 12 June 2003, esp. pp. 2, 4, 51, 90, 167, TWP; John Kupper notes, “Obama Research,” n.d., 2pp., “Horizon/CMS,” n.d., 11pp., and “First Health Group Corp.,” n.d., 18pp., JKP; Mark Schreiner, “Passion for Politics Keeps Drawing Him In,” Wilmington Star News, 25 March 2007; James L. Merriner, “Obama 2008?,” CM, March 2006; Howard Fineman, “The Broker: Vernon Jordan,” Newsweek, 5 April 2008; Vernon Jordan, Make It Plain (Public Affairs, 2008), p. 207; Eric Alterman, “Life of the Party,” Guardian, 6 November 2008; Katherine Rosman, “Before He Was President,” WSJ, 7 November 2008; DJG interviews with John Kupper and Joe Sinsheimer.

23. The Demo Memo (Milton Township, DuPage County), 3 June 2003; Bernard Schoenburg, SJR, 12 June 2003, p. 7; Ed Tibbetts, “Evans Endorses Obama in Senate Race,” QCT, 12 June 2003; Stephen Pugh and Marty Nesbitt to Pugh, 9 May 2003, and Bettylu K. Saltzman (OFI) to Stephen Pugh, 2 June 2003, SPP; “Fundraising Reception,” 12 June 2003, Dan Shomon, “Obama Labor Strategy,” 10 June 2003, TWP; Bruce Dixon, “In Search of the Real Barack Obama,” Black Commentator, 5 June 2003; “Not ‘Corrupted’ by DLC, Says Obama,” Black Commentator, 19 June 2003; “Obama to Have Name Removed from DLC List,” Black Commentator, 26 June 2003; DJG interviews with John Kupper, Joe McLean, Claire Serdiuk, Bettylu Saltzman, Stephen Pugh, and Pete Giangreco.

24. “Upcoming Events,” ObamaForIllinois.com, 14 June 2003; Steven R. Strahler, “Center Not Holding at Altheimer,” CCB, 16 June 2003, p. 30; Obama Weekly Report, 16–23 June 2003, TWP; Russ Stewart, “‘Black Is Beatable’ Gives Hope to State GOP,” NSP, 18 June 2003; Bill Zwecker, “Looks Like the Party’s Over,” CST, 19 June 2003, p. 40; “Armour & Co.,” CT, 22 June 2003; “Hynes Receives Backing,” CDH, 23 June 2003, p. I-3; OFI, “Obama Hails Supreme Court Decision Upholding Affirmative Action,” 23 June 2003; www.blairhull.com, Internet Archive (TV and radio ads); Scott Fornek, “Dem Senate Hopeful Starts Earliest Illinois TV Blitz Ever,” CST, 24 June 2003, p. 16; Eric Krol, “Senate Hopeful Already Thinking About March,” CDH, 24 June 2003, p. 11; Meg Kinnard, “Hull Gets an Early Start for Illinois Senate,” NationalJournal.com, 24 June 2003; Steve Neal, “Rush Senate Endorsement Puts Payback Before Prudence,” CST, 25 June 2003, p. 47; Rick Pearson, “Top-Dollar Senate Race Looms,” CT, 25 June 2003; Chinta Strausberg, “Maynard Jackson’s Death at 65 Leaves ‘Big Hole,’” CD, 25 June 2003, p. 8; Russ Stewart, “Flood of ‘RWGs’ Mean Avalanche of Senate Ads,” NSP, 25 June 2003; Eric Krol, “Unorthodox Candidate Enters U.S. Senate Race,” CDH, 26 June 2003, p. 6; Bernard Schoenburg, “Blair Hull Announces Bid for U.S. Senate,” SJR, 26 June 2003, p. 13; Patrick J. Powers, “Senate Hopeful First to Place Metro-East Ads,” BND, 27 June 2003, p. B1; AP, “Hull’s Early Push Reflects His Wealth, Lack of Name Recognition,” 27 June 2003; “The Long, Hot Political Days of Summer Have Arrived,” SI, 1 July 2003; Meg Kinnard, “To Hull, Business Savvy Would Help Senate,” NationalJournal.com, 10 July 2003; OFI, “Obama Asks Hastert to Act Immediately to Make Sure 378,000 Illinois Families Receive Tax Credit in Washington,” 26 June 2003; Michael C. Dorf to Dan Shomon and Terrie Pickerill, “New Disclaimer Requirements for Radio and Televised Communications,” 27 June 2003, JKP; Ameet Sachdev, “Altheimer & Gray to Close,” CT, 28 June 2003; Lynn Sweet, “Chico Could Be In for Bumpy Ride,” CST, 3 July 2003, p. 33; Dearbail Jordan, “The Final Dark Days of the Firm That Wanted Too Much,” TheLawyer.com, 7 July 2003; Sachdev, “Altheimer’s Lawyers Migrate to New Firms,” CT, 17 July 2003; Sachdev, “Altheimer Practices Questioned,” CT, 20 July 2003; Chris Fusco and Tim Novak, “Rezko Cash Triple What Obama Says,” CST, 18 June 2007, p. 3; Bob Secter and David Jackson, "Funds Tough to Figure for Rezko Aid," CT, 31 January 2008; Kenneth P. Vogel, "Obama Releases Names of Rezko-Linked Donors," Politico, 15 March 2008; Baim, Obama and the Gays, pp. 15, 201, 521; Stone in James L. Merriner, "The Friends of O," CM, June 2008; DJG interviews with Geof Stone, Susan Pierson Lewers, Leslie Corbett, Kevin Thompson, Nate Tamarin, Alan Reger, Megan Crowhurst, and Kelly Dietrich.

25. V. Dion Haynes, "Fight Racial Profiling at Local Level, Lawmaker Says," CT, 29 June 2003; Dan Shomon e-mail to John Kupper et al., "Obama Weekly Meeting Agenda, Monday, June 30," 29 June 2003, Nate Tamarin e-mail to Kupper, 30 June 2003, Kupper notes, "Obama 6/30," Obama Block Schedule, July 2003, JKP; Obama Weekly News, 1–7 July 2003, TWP; OFI, "U.S. Rep. Lane Evans Endorses Barack Obama," 1 July 2003; Jennifer Davis, "Evans Endorses Illinois Senator," PJS, 2 July 2003, p. B3; Matt Adrian, "Rep. Evans Endorses Obama in 2004 U.S. Senate Race," DHR, 2 July 2003, p. A3 (and as "Evans Gives Senate Race Endorsement to Obama," QCT, and "Evans Endorses Obama for Senate," SI, 2 July 2003); Bernard Schoenburg, "Lane Evans Endorses Barack Obama for Senate," SJR, 2 July 2003, p. 12; Doug Wilson, "Evans Endorses Obama for Senate Race," QHW, 2 July 2003, p. A9; Dave Dorsett, "Senate Hopeful Makes Macomb Stop," MJ, 6 July 2003; Daniel Duggan, "Hull's Senate Bid: No Experience Necessary?," ECN, 2 July 2003; CF, 2, 7, and 10 July 2003; Shamus Toomey, "Health Program Expanded," HPH, 2 July 2003, p. 8; OFI, "Obama Reports $1 Million on Hand for U.S. Senate Bid, Has Raised Over $1.4 Million for Campaign So Far," 2 July 2003, TWP; V. Dion Haynes, "Racial Profiling Ban Leaves Some with Mixed Emotions," CT, 3 July 2003; NTSB, "NTSB and Illinois Make History When Governor Signs Three Most Wanted Improvements in One Day," 3 July 2003; gubernatorial press release, "Governor Strengthens Traffic Safety Laws in Time for Summer Travel," 3 July 2003; Matt Adrian and Richard Goldstein, "Senate Candidates Stack Up Money," DHR, 6 July 2003, p. B4 (and also QCT, 5 July and SI, 6 July); Obama Weekly News, 8–15 July 2003, TWP; Paul Harstad e-mail to John Kupper et al., "Draft Q'aire for Our Dem Primary Survey," 8 July 2003, and Pete Giangreco e-mail to Harstad, 11 July 2003, JKP; Obama to Paul Simon, received 11 July 2003, and Simon to Obama, 15 July 2003, PSP; Corey Hall, "Senator Barack Obama Celebrates Healthcare Legislation at PUSH Forum," HPC, 10 July 2003, p. 2; "Peace Group Will Discuss Patriot Act," Glencoe News, 26 June 2003 (9 July); OFI, FEC Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 April–30 June 2003, 10 July 2003; Friends of Barack Obama, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures, 1 January–30 June 2003, 31 July 2003; Scott Fornek, "Downstate Dem Quits Senate Race," CST, 10 July 2003, p. 3; OFI, "Obama Calls on Congress to Declare Independence from Drug Lobby," 10 July 2003; Chinta Strausberg, "Obama Seeks Creation of Federal Drug Czar," CD, 12 July 2003, p. 2; Todd Spivak, "Obama Shoots Down Federal Prescription Drug Plans," HPH, 16 July 2003, p. 6; "Baggage Ex-Cons Don't Need," CST, 13 July 2003, p. 31; Laura S. Washington and Leslie Gryce Sturino to Candidates and Campaigns, "July 13th Forum Format and Ground Rules," 10 July 2003, JKP; Antonio Mora, Eye on Chicago, CBS 2 TV, 13 July 2003; "TVI-IPO Partial Transcript," WBEZ, 13 July 2003, JKP; John McCormick, "Senate Hopefuls Abound for '04," CT, 14 July 2003; Carol Felsenthal, "Governor Sunshine," CM, November 2003; David Bernstein, "Mr. Un-Popularity," CM, February 2008; Bernstein, "Chicago Straight," CM, June 2009; John Presta, Mr. and Mrs. Grassroots (Elevator Group, 2010), pp. 111–12; DJG interviews with Chuck Hurley and John Cullerton.

26. Obama Block Schedule, July 2003, JKP; Obama Weekly Report, 16–22 July 2003, TWP; Peter

Savodnik, "Illinois Senate Democratic Primary Heats Up," TH, 16 July 2003, p. 6; Ray Gibson and Rick Pearson, "Candidate Hull Spends at Record Pace," CT, 16 July 2003; Scott Fornek, "Blackjack King Outspends Dem Rival 4–1 in Senate Bid," CST, 16 July 2003, p. 1; Lynn Sweet, "Senate Rivals Find Silver Lining in Hull's Spending," CST, 17 July 2003, p. 34; "Diversity Committee Hosts Summer Program Reception," Equal Time (Jenner & Block), Summer 2003, p. 11; Jenner & Block press release, "State Senator Barack Obama Addresses Summer Associates at Annual Diversity Dinner," 17 July 2003; gubernatorial press release, "Governor Signs Six-Bill Package Addressing Serious Problems in Illinois' Criminal Justice System," 17 July 2003; OFI, "Ground-Breaking Obama Criminal Justice Package Signed into Law," 17 July 2003; Pearson, "Taped Confessions to Be Law," CT, 17 July 2003; Monica Davey, "Illinois Will Require Taping of Homicide Investigations," NYT, 17 July 2003; Chinta Strausberg, "Jones Credited with Criminal Justice Bill Signing," CD, 17 July 2003, p. 2; Mike Ramsey, "Taped-Confessions Bill Signed into Law," SJR, 18 July 2003, p. 1; Kevin Pang, "Long-Distance Service Has a Conservative Ring to It," CT, 18 July 2003; Joe Ruklick, "Hail Passage of Anti-Crime Bills," CD, 19 July 2003, p. 1; Chad Anderson, "You Might Be a Candidate for U.S. Senate If," RRS, 19 July 2003, p. A10; CDH, 20 July 2003, p. I-3; Obama and Fred Tsao, "Seek to Improve Working Conditions for All," CT, 21 July 2003; CF, 21 July 2003; Eric Zorn, "Radio Host Sees Senate Bid with a Citizen's Eye," CT, 22 July 2003; Robert Feder, "Talk Show Hosts Aim for U.S. Senate," CST, 22 July 2003, p. 47; Todd Spivak, "Obama Passes $1M Mark in Bid for U.S. Senate Seat," and Obama, "Gov. Okays Obama's Cutting-Edge Legislation," HPH, 23 July 2003, pp. 1–2 and 4 (and 30 July 2003, p. 2); Corey Hall, "Gov. Blagojevich Signs Six Criminal Justice Reform Bills," HPC, 24 July 2003, p. 1; John Cullerton, Kirk Dillard, and Peter G. Baroni, "Capital Punishment Reform in Illinois: A Model for the Nation," DCBA Brief: Journal of the DuPage County Bar Association, April 2004; Thomas P. Sullivan, "Police Experiences with Recording Custodial Interrogations," Northwestern University School of Law, Summer 2004, esp. pp. C1–C3; Joe Ruklick, "Fund-Raising Success Gives Obama Momentum," CD, 26 July 2003, p. 5; Strausberg, "Trotter, Washington Butt Heads Over Obama," CD, 22 July 2003, p. 3; Hull for Senate press release, 21 July 2003, BlairHull.com; "South Side Congressman Bobby Rush to Chair Blair Hull's U.S. Senate Campaign," WBBM Radio, 21 July 2003; Pearson, "Rush Endorses Hull for U.S. Senate," CT, 22 July 2003; Fornek, "Rush Chirping Hull's Senate Campaign," and Steve Neal, "Bobby Rush a Sellout," CST, 22 July 2003, pp. 15, 25; Spivak, "Rush Snubs Obama, Endorses Hull," HPH, 23 July 2003, p. 2; Strausberg, "Rush Backing of Blair 'Divides Rep's Base,'" CD, 24 July 2003, p. 2; La Risa Lynch, "U.S. Rep. Rush Backs Hull for Senate," CC, 24 July 2003, p. 1; "Seeking Higher Elected Office," City Journal, 24 July–7 August 2003, pp. 3–4; Obama Weekly Report, 23–29 July 2003, TWP; Presta, Mr. and Mrs. Grassroots, pp. 122–26; DJG interview with Bruce Spiva.

27. Rick Ridder and Craig Hughes to Mike Henry, "Media Plan," 22 July 2003, RRP; Dan Shomon e-mail to David Axelrod et al., "Barack's Meeting with AFSCME on Tuesday, July 22," 16 July 2003, Jim Cauley e-mail to Axelrod et al., "AFSCME Tomorrow," Nate Tamarin e-mail to Pete Giangeco et al., "SEIU," 21 July 2003, "2004: How Obama Wins by the Numbers," n.d., 9pp., JKP; "Obama for Illinois: Vote Model & Targeting," n.d., 27pp., TWP; Public Affairs with Jeff Berkowitz, 24 July 2003; DJG interviews with John Cameron, Ray Harris, John Kupper, Pete Giangreco, Terry Walsh, Jim Cauley, and Audra Wilson.

28. Scott Fornek, "Web Site Draws Few Senate Hopefuls So Far," CST, 25 July 2003, p. 16; CF, 28

July 2003; John Kupper fax to Deb Schommer, 25 July 2003, JKP; Joe Ruklick, "Obama's Stand on Issues," CD, 29 July 2003, p. 6; Peter Savodnik, "Illinois Senate Candidate Compared to Moseley Braun," TH, 30 July 2003, p. 9; Charla Brautigan, "Democrats Endorse Hynes for U.S. Senate," JHN, 30 July 2003; Mark Rodeffer, "Hull Takes on Health Care Industry," NationalJournal.com, 31 July 2003; Fornek, "Senate Hopefuls Vie for Black Vote," CST, 5 August 2003, p. 8; Rick Pearson, "Rauschenberger Weighs Senate Run," CT, 5 August 2003; Meg Kinnard, "Hull Vies for Black Vote with Rush Support," National Journal.com, 6 August 2003; Chinta Strausberg, "Obama: 'Blacks Too Smart for PR Divide,'" CD, 7 August 2003, p. 4; Rashid Khalidi, "Israel Blocks Path to Peace," CT, 11 February 2002; Khalidi, "Basic Truths from Both Sides of the Conflict," CT, 3 April 2002; Isaac Wolf, "Khalidi Accepts Chair Offer from Columbia," Chicago Maroon, 31 January 2003; Peter Wallsten, "Allies of Palestinians See a Friend in Barack Obama," LAT, 10 April 2008; Terry Gross, "Which Way the Wind Blows: Bill Ayers on Obama," Fresh Air, NPR, 18 November 2008; William Ayers, "The Real Bill Ayers," NYT, 6 December 2008; "An Interview with Bill Ayers," The Point #5, Spring 2012; Rachel DeWoskin, "The Sunday Rumpus Interview: Bill Ayers," TheRumpus.net, 1 December 2013; Presta, Mr. and Mrs. Grassroots, pp. 132–34; Steve Metsch, "Beverly Man Writes Book About Obama Campaigns," SS, 22 March 2010; Scott Lynch-Giddings, "Why Vote for Obama? Because of Who He Is," 29 October 2012, SLGP; DJG interviews with Scott Lynch-Giddings, Mona Khalidi, Bernardine Dohrn, and Bill Ayers.

29. Harstad Strategic Research, "Illinois Statewide Democratic Party Survey, 16–22 July 2003," 34pp., graphical supplement 24pp., Senate Summary, 4pp., 30 July 2003, JKP and PHP; Harstad to Obama for Senate Campaign, "Survey Shows Barack Obama Among Leaders in Democratic Nomination for U.S. Senator in Illinois," 1 August 2003, PHP; John Kupper daybook entries, August 2003, JKP; Cauley to Obama Team, "The Consultant Meeting Follow-Up," 7 August 2003, TWP; "Obama Earned Media Plan," 8 August 2003, JKP; OFI, "Integrated Strategic Plan," n.d., JCP; Ben Austen, "In the Loop," Harper's, June 2010, pp. 29–37; DJG interviews with John Kupper, Pete Giangreco, Terry Walsh, Paul Harstad, Mike Kulisheck, Jim Cauley, Dan Shomon, Claire Serdiuk, Randon Gardley, Nate Tamarin, Audra Wilson, Madhuri Kommareddi, Liz Drew, Tom Hazen, Lauren Kidwell, Pam Smith, and Kevin Watson.

30. Obama Block Schedule, August 2003, JKP; "Democratic Poll Overview," ILSenate.com, 10–12 August 2003; Paul Merrion, "In Senate Race, Give a Big Edge to the Officeholders," CCB, 11 August 2003, p. 9; CDH, 11 August 2003, p. I-3; Anne Marie Apollo, "U.S. Senate Candidate Obama Introduces Himself to Elgin," ECN, 12 August 2003, p. A1; Todd Spivak, "State Politicians Put Their Fundraising on Cruise Control," HPH, 13 August 2003, p. 2; Christi Parsons, "Closed-Door Meetings to Be Taped," CT, 13 August 2003; OFI, "Obama Law Strengthens Open Government in Illinois," 13 August 2003; Spivak, "Gov. Signs Obama-Currie Bill for Open Meetings," HPH, 20 August 2003, p. 6; Obama [State Fair] transcript, [13 August 2003], TWP; Frank Avila and Morgan Carter, "Election 2004," CAN-TV Channel 19, 16–17 August 2003; Obama, transcript of remarks, Evanston, IL, 7 February 2004, JKP and TPP; CF, 14 and 15 August 2003; Chinta Strausberg, "Starks, Jesse, Obama Say Recall Vote 'Orchestrated,'" CD, 16 August 2003, p. 2; Bernard Schoenburg, "Senate Race Poll," SJR, 17 August 2003, p. 17; Angela Rozas and Joshua Howes, "2 Juries Dubious over Confession Tapes' Merits," CT, 17 August 2003; Bruce DuMont, Beyond the Beltway, 17 August 2003, MBC; Ben Joravsky, "When Obama Needed Public Access TV to Reach Voters," CR, 14 January 2014; DJG interviews with Steve Preckwinkle, Margaret Blackshere, Jim Cauley, Audra Wilson, Randon Gardley, Jesse Jackson Jr., Juleigh Nowinski, and Tarak

Shah.

31. Steve Neal, “New Poll Shows Obama Gaining Among Dems in Senate Race,” CST, 18 August 2003, p. 41; “Democratic Poll Overview,” ILSenate.com, 14–20 August 2003; Paul Simon to Obama, 18 August 2003, PSP; Obama Block Schedule, August 2003, JKP; Obama Weekly Report, 19 August 2003, TWP; Todd Spivak, “HP Pols Blast Veto Against Death Penalty Reform Bill,” HPH, 20 August 2003, p. 7; Neal, “Favorite Sons Call in Big Guns in High-Priced Race for Senate,” CST, 20 August 2003, p. 53; Ray Long and John Chase, “State Acts to Bar Future E2s,” CT, 20 August 2003; John Kupper to Obama Team, “Free Press Hits,” 22 August 2003, Kupper notes, “Obama 8/25,” 25 August 2003, Rachel Dahan e-mail to Nate Tamarin, “IWHC’s 2003 Legislative Voting Report Card—Obama 100%,” 25 August 2003, JKP; Todd Spivak, “Bobby Rush Explains Endorsement of Hull,” HPH, 27 August 2003, pp. 12–13; Chinta Strausberg, “Davis, Obama: Bush’s $500 Billion Runaway Deficit Train Wrecking Economy,” CD, 27 August 2003, p. 3; Kate Clements, “Low-Income Families Will Benefit from Laws,” CNG, 27 August 2003; Strausberg, “Jones to Blagojevich: ‘We Will Override Veto,’” CD, 28 August 2003, p. 3; “WomanView: Blagojevich Signs Two Bills Promoting Women’s Economic Security,” National Center on Poverty Law, 29 August 2003; Mary Massingale, “State Alters Earned Income Tax Credit,” SJR, 6 September 2003, p. 17; CF, 11, 16, and 18 September 2003; Emily M. Shaules, “New Illinois Law Protects Victims of Domestic Violence,” The Brief, February 2004; Julie A. Iotrowski-Govreau, “The Illinois Victims’ Economic Security and Safety Act of 2003: A Comparative Analysis,” ISBA, May 2005; DJG interviews with Wendy Pollack, Jeremiah Posedel, Jeff Stauter, Scott Turow, Jan Schakowsky, Bob Creamer, Alan Solow, John Cameron, and William McNary. On Rezko, also see Thomas A. Corfman, “Giant South Side Project Planned,” CT, 31 July 2003, and David Roeder and Fran Spielman, “Up to 5,000 Residential Units in Plans for Near S. Side Development,” CST, 31 July 2003, p. 55.

32. CF, 13 August 2003; Kennedy Communications to Hull Campaign, “Top Hull Negatives,” n.d., RRP; “Affidavit of Brenda Sexton Hull,” Hull v. Hull, #35363, Cook County Circuit Court, 12 March 1998, 7pp., JKP and TWP; Terry Armour, “Sexton Appointed,” CT, 8 April 2003; Armour, “Sexton Stands By Her Business Background,” CT, 9 April 2003; Rick Ridder e-mail to Mark Blumenthal and Blumenthal e-mail to Ridder, 5:44 P.M. and 11:08 P.M., 10 September 2003, MBP; Jason Horowitz, “Newly Out in Front for White House,” WP, 15 October 2009; Blumenthal in Remnick, The Bridge, p. 372; DJG interviews with Alan Reger, Mo Elleithe, David Spiegel, Rick Ridder, Joanie Braden, Anita Dunn, Mark Blumenthal, Mike Henry, Blair Hull, Fred Lebed, Kitty Kurth, and Don Wiener.

33. Obama Block Schedule, September 2003, JKP; Deidre Cox Baker, “Activists, Candidates Decry Weak National Economy,” QCT, 1 September 2003; Steve Neal, “Dems Scuffle for AFL-CIO Backing,” CST, 1 September 2003, p. 21; CF, 11 and 28 August and 2 September 2003; OFI, “Obama Offers Strong Steps to Honor Labor by Protecting Worker Pensions,” 2 September 2003; Chinta Strausberg, “Obama Seeks to Protect Pensions,” CD, 4 September 2003, p. 5; Terry Walsh e-mail to Jim Cauley et al., “Pension Redux,” 5 September 2003, JKP; Obama Weekly Report, 8–14 September 2003, TWP; Thomas Roeser, “Rauschenberger’s Gambit,” CST, 6 September 2003, p. 12; Scott Fornek, “Poshard Never Heard of Downstater,” CST, 4 June 2003, p. 12; Obama YouTube Clip with Danny Davis, 1:30, 7 September 2003; Chicago Video Project, “Introducing Barack Obama,” 5:18, 2003; Laura Washington, “If He Can Turn Out His Black Base and Build a Coalition,” CST, 8 September 2003, p. 39; Mark Samuels, “Senate Candidate Should Be Judged on Ideas, Not Ethnicity,” MJG and CTC, 8 September 2003; Lauren W.

Whittington, "Populist Pappas," RC, 10 September 2003; Neal, "Obama, Daley Would Make Formidable Political Team," CST, 12 September 2003, p. 45; Washington, "Uproar Over Top Cop," CST, 15 September 2003, p. 41; Samuels, "Obama Works to Overcome Name Confusion," MJG and CTC, 15 September 2003; Rich Miller, "Illinois Comptroller Leads the Democratic Field for Senate," RCR, MD, and IT, 16, 17, and 18 September 2003; Obama, "Legislation Would Protect Worker Pensions," HPH, 17 September 2003, p. 4; Bernard Schoenburg, "Rauschenberger Not Shy in Commenting About Foes," SJR, 28 September 2003, p. 15 (Obama "is certainly brilliant and a great speaker"); Lynn Sweet, "Running to the Right," II, January 2004; Obama on The Leonard Lopate Show, NPR, 22 November 2004; Michael Weisskopf, "Obama: How He Learned to Win," Time, 8 May 2008; DJG interviews with Emil Jones Jr., Dave Gross, Margaret Blackshere, Steve Rauschenberger, Linda Mills, Claire Eberle, and Laura Washington.

34. Paul Merrion, "Obama's Appeal Drives Cash Flow," CCB, 15 September 2003, p. 3; Dan Shomon e-mail to Kupper, "Illinois NOW Questionnaire," 25 August 2003, "Final Draft, Illinois NOW Questionnaire for Senator Barack Obama," 3 September 2003, Raja Krishnamoorthi e-mail to Obama and Obama to Krishnamoorthi, "UAW and NOW Questionnaires," 6 and 7 September 2003, Fredrick Vars e-mail to Krishnamoorthi and Krishnamoorthi e-mail to Kupper, "Repro Rights," 8 September 2003, JKP; OFI, "Illinois NOW Questionnaire for Senator Barack Obama," 10 September 2003, pp. 2–4; OFI, "Obama Releases Comprehensive Plan to Strengthen Homeland Security," 10 September 2003; Chinta Strausberg, "Obama's Security Plan Aims to Stop Terrorists," CD, 11 September 2003, p. 3.

35. Rick Pearson and Brett McNeil, "Hynes' Senate Bid Leans on Labor," CT, 15 September 2003; Jim Ritter, "Hynes Joins Race for U.S. Senate," CST, 15 September 2003, p. 12; Eric Krol, "Comptroller Running for U.S. Senate," CDH, 15 September 2003, p. 7; Mike Ramsey, "Hynes Announces Bid for U.S. Senate," SJR, 1 September 2003, p. 7; Obama Block Schedule, September 2003, OFI, "Campaign Prospectus," 15 September 2003, 16pp., Paul Harstad, "Primary Polling Budget and Options for Obama Campaign," 17 September 2003, "Agenda, Media Planning Meeting," 19 September 2003, "Barack Obama, Democrat for U.S. Senate," n.d. (mid 2003), "Barack Obama—Democrat for U.S. Senate: A Chance to Believe Again," n.d. (post-18 August 2003), 13pp., OFI, "Integrated Strategic Plan," n.d. (post 19 September 2003), JKP; Dino P. Christenson, "Bush's Economic Stimulus Plan," 6 June 2003, 8pp., AGP; N.A., "Prescription Drugs," 9 June 2003, JKP; Gruber e-mail to Krishnamoorthi, "Tax Cuts Issues Paper," 16 June 2003, Christenson, "Economic Stimulus Initiatives," 1 August 2003, 15pp., AGP; Tom Staunton, "Health Insurance Coverage Proposals and Costs," 1 September 2003, 9pp., JKP; Bill Edley e-mail to Jim Cauley and Krishnamoorthi e-mails to Gruber and Christenson, "Patriot Corp Overview" (2), 19 September 2003, Christenson e-mail to Gruber and Gruber e-mail to Krishnamoorthi, "Top 1%," 19 and 23 September 2003, Christenson e-mail to Krishnamoorthi and David Adams e-mail to Krishnamoorthi, "Patriot," 23 and 24 September 2003, AGP; Nancy MacLean and Bruce Orenstein to "Dear Friends," 18 August 2003, BOP; OFI, "Obama Calls on Conference Committee to Protect Seniors, Not Drug Companies," 21 September 2003; Dan Mihalopolous, "Presidential Contender Braun Makes Bid Official," CT, 23 September 2003; Bill Myers, "Rallying Cry: Defend Civil Liberties," CDLB, 24 September 2003, p. 1; Peter Savodnik, "Ex-Panther Rush Setting Race Aside in Backing Hull," TH, 24 September 2003, p. 14; Obama Weekly Report, 24 September 2003, TWP; Mike Pittman, "From the Editor," CCC, February 2007, p. 2; DJG interviews with John Kupper, Paul Harstad, Pete Giangreco, Terry Walsh, Raja Krishnamoorthi, Andrew Gruber, Dino Christenson, Dan Shomon, Bruce Orenstein, Nancy MacLean, Andrew Boron, Hasan and Raazia Chandoo, Jesse Jackson Jr., and Jon Molot.

36. Obama Block Schedule, September 2003 and October 2003, JKP; “Democratic Poll Overview,” ILSenate.com, 22–24 September 2003; Shamus Toomey, “Half of Voters Undecided on Senate Pick,” CST, 26 September 2003, p. 9; OFI, “Upcoming Events,” 27 September 2003; Leah Williams, “Senator Obama Speaks at Delta Sigma Theta’s Anniversary Banquet,” DE, 29 September 2003; Lynn Okamoto, “Braun Paves Way to White House for Women in Future,” DMR, 28 September 2003 (Obama praising Carol Moseley Braun); OFI, “Obama: ‘No Blank Check on Iraq,’” 28 September 2003; UCLS Announcements 2003–04, esp. pp. 41, 46, 173; UCLS, The Glass Menagerie 2003–04, esp. pp. 33, 100; David Axelrod’s 29 and 30 September 2003 interviews with Danny Davis and James Meeks; Lauren W. Whittington, “Chico Is First on Air in Crowded Senate Race,” RC, 30 September 2003; Meg Kinnard, “Chico Debuts with Plans for Reform” and “Fourth Chico Ad Highlights Latino Roots,” NationalJournal.com, 1 and 3 October 2003; Abdon M. Pallasch, “Gery Chico and the Firm That Failed,” and “Polls Show Scant Support a Year into Race,” CST, 5 October 2003, pp. 12–13; Obama’s 2 October 2003 interview with David Axelrod, JKP; DJG interviews with Mike Lawrence and Eric Adelstein. On Chico, see also Ben Joravsky, “Chico and the Man,” CR, 20 January 2011, and Achy Obejas, “Why Gery Chico Is the White Candidate for Mayor,” WBEZ, 18 February 2011.

37. OFI, “U.S. Senate Candidate Barack Obama Welcomes Very Special Guest Former U.S. Senator Bill Bradley” and “Obama Endorsed by Former U.S. Senator Bill Bradley,” 2 October 2003; Raja Krishnamoorthi e-mail to John Kupper et al., “NAACP Debate Questions,” 2 October 2003, JKP; CDH, 3 October 2003, p. I-5; “NAACP Debate,” 4 October 2003, Illinois Channel DVD; Dave Newbart, “11 Senate Hopefuls Focus on Bush, War,” CST, 5 October 2003, p. 20; Lesley R. Chimm, “Eleven Senate Candidates Debate Issues at NAACP Forum,” HPC, 9 October 2003, p. 1; Eric Krol, “Oberweis Criticized for Raising Money at Ritz Club,” CDH, 6 October 2003, p. 1; Obama Weekly Report—October 6–12, 9 October 2003, TWP; Steve Neal, “Downstate Could Push Hynes Over the Top,” CST, 8 October 2003; Neal, “Senate Debate Yields 4 Standouts,” CST, 17 October 2003, p. 47; OFI, “Obama: Protect Seniors, Not Drug Companies, HMOs,” CW, 9 October 2003, p. 4; Obama to Timuel Black, 10 October 2003, TBP Box 129 Fld. 1; Stuart Rothenberg, “There’s No Sure Thing When It Comes to the Illinois Senate Race,” RC, 14 October 2003; JCAR Minutes, 14 October 2003; OFI, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 July–30 September 2003, 14 October 2003; OFI, “Obama Breaks $2 Million Fundraising Barrier,” 15 October 2003; Chris Cillizza, “Senate Money Rolling In,” RC, 16 October 2003; Rick Pearson, “Hull Off to Fast Start in Senate Campaign Spending,” CT, 16 October 2003; OFI, “Obama Leading Legislation for METRA Improvements,” 16 October 2003; Glen Justice, “In Races with One Deep Pocket, the Law Tries to Tailor a Second,” NYT, 17 October 2003 (“Barak”); Christopher Wills, “Some Senate Candidates Already on the Air for 2004,” AP, 17 October 2003; James Muhammad, “Obama, Collins Attack Hospital Collection Practices,” CD, 21 October 2003, p. 2; Todd Spivak, “Obama Passes $2M Mark in Expensive Senate Race,” HPH, 22 October 2003, pp. 1–2 (ten $12,000 donors as of 30 September, including Joseph Stroud and Andy Davis’s wife Cynthia Wheeler); DJG interviews with Keith Kelleher, Bill Perkins, Jerry Morrison, Raja Krishnamoorthi, John Kupper, Marni Willenson, Carolyn Shapiro, and Robert Bennett.

38. David Axelrod e-mail to John Kupper, “What About This?,” 15 October 2003, JKP; Obama Weekly

Update—October 13,” 17 October 2003, TWP; OFI, “Join,” www.ilsenate.com/News/Media/join.mp3, Internet Archive; “Rolled” and “Promise” 60 Second Urban Radio Scripts, Obama Block Schedule, October 2003, JKP; Maudlyne Ihejirika, “Nigerian Building Professionals Host Annual Scholarship Gala,” HPC, 23 October 2003, p. 1; Obama Weekly Update—October 20,” 23 October 2003, TWP; Lauren W. Whittington, “Anti-Obama Site Shut Down,” RC, 23 October 2003; AP, “Web Site Targeting Senate Candidate Withdrawn,” CDH, 24 October 2003, p. 17; Transcript, West Side Rally to Elect Barack Obama, 1 November 2003, John Kupper daybook entry, 5 November 2003, JKP; DJG interviews with John Kupper. No audio of the second radio ad has been located.

39. Obama Block Schedule, October 2003 and November 2003, JKP; Ken Silverstein, “Barack Obama Inc.: The Birth of a Washington Machine,” Harper’s, November 2006, pp. 31–40; Robert Novak, “Clinton Ally, a Washington Super-Lawyer, Switches Allegiance to Back Obama,” CST, 4 March 2007, p. B6; Vernon Jordan, Make It Plain (Public Affairs, 2008), p. 207; Tim Novak, “How Reform-Minded City Hall Critic Became a Cozy Insider,” CST, 11 November 2007, p. A14; Allison S. Davis, “Minutes of the ISBI Committee for Emerging Manager Policy,” 8 October 2003, ISBIP; James M. Hacking to Antonio Munoz, c/o Jillayne Rock, 23 October 2003, SURSP; Emil Jones Jr. to Linda Hawker, Senate Floor Transcript, 23 October 2003, pp. 1–2; Allison S. Davis, “Minutes, Meeting of the Illinois State Board of Investments,” 24 October 2003, ISBIP; “Citizen Action/Illinois Endorses State Senator Barack Obama in U.S. Senate Democratic Primary Race,” 25 October 2003; OFI, “Obama Endorsed by Citizen Action,” 25 and 27 October 2003; Brian Wallheimer, “Policy Council Endorses Obama,” SJR, 26 October 2003, p. 13; Rick Pearson, “Illinois Undecided on Bush Challenger,” CT, 27 October 2003; Jennifer Koons, “Hynes Wants Nation Building at Home,” NationalJournal.com, 4 November 2003; OFI, “Obama Charges Bush with Undercutting Support for Sexual Assault Victims,” 28 October 2003; OFI, “Obama Announces Committee for LGBT Rights,” 29 October 2003; Tracy Baim, “GLBT Group Forms for Candidate Obama,” WCT, 5 November 2003; Dennis R. Wheeler, “Barack Obama, Running Hard for Senator,” The Star, 30 October 2003; Mike Wiser, “Police Get Preview of New Traffic Stop Requirements,” RRS, 30 October 2003, p. A9; Obama Update—Week of October 26, 31 October 2003, TWP; Steve Neal, “Pappas Has Potential to Take Hynes to Wire,” CST, 31 October 2003, p. 39; Eric Krol, “Cook County Treasurer Joins U.S. Senate Race,” CDH, 1 November 2003, p. 1; Scott Fornek, “Pappas Tosses Her Baton into Senate Ring,” CST, 10 November 2003, p. 14; Obama remarks at National Urban League Annual Conference, St. Louis, MO, 27 July 2007; William Atwood in Christopher Drew and Raymond Hernandez, “Loyal Network Backs Obama After His Help,” NYT, 1 October 2007, and in Michael Tapscott and Richard Pollock, “The Obama You Don’t Know,” Washington Examiner, 19 September 2012; Baim, Obama and the Gays, p. 16; transcript, “West Side Rally to Elect Barack Obama,” 1 November 2003, JKP; “Introducing Barack Obama,” Chicago Video Project, 2003; DJG interviews with Joe McLean, Jill Rock, William Atwood, John Rogers Jr., John Cameron, William McNary, Alvin Love, Kevin Thompson, and Bruce Orenstein. Prior pension systems’ developments are reflected in Joseph P. Cacciatore, “Minutes of the Illinois State Board of Investment for Minority Broker/Manager Policy,” 27 July 2001, Jane R. Patterson to Minority Sub-Committee, “Proposed Policy,” 17 August 2001, Cacciatore, “Minutes,” 20 August 2001, ISBIP; Jon Bauman, “Minutes, Meeting of the Investment Committee,” Teachers’ Retirement System of Illinois, 9 August 2001, TRSIP; Keith Cardoza to Board Members, “Proposed Minority Policy,” 14 September 2001, and Cacciatore, “Minutes,” 21 September

2001, p. 3 (unanimously approving the policy), ISBIP; Bauman, “Minutes,” 22 October 2001, TRSIP; Laurel Martin et al. to Investment Committee, “Minority Manager Due Diligence,” 24 October 2001, and Emma E. McIntosh, “Minutes,” 14 November 2001, SURSP; Bauman, “Minutes,” 17 December 2001 (authorizing allocation of up to $450 million to minority managers plus an additional $107.6 million to Capri Capital), Bauman, “Minutes” (2), 14 February 2002, Bauman, “Minutes” (2), 11 April 2002, TRSIP. On Maria Pappas, see especially Bryan Miller, “What Does Maria Pappas Want?,” CR, 13 August 1992.

40. “2003–2004 IFT Questionnaire for State Senator Barack Obama,” n.d., 7pp. IFTP; IFT, “Illinois Federation of Teachers Backs Obama,” 5 November 2003; Chinta Strausberg, “Pushes to Veto Death Penalty Reform Bill,” CD, 3 November 2003, p. 1; CF, 4 and 7 November 2003; Obama, “Obama Sets Legislative Sights on Metra Neglect,” HPH, 5 November 2003, p. 4; Maura Kelly, “U.S. Senate Candidates Seek Younger Voters,” AP, 4 November 2003; Kate Clements, “Prison Employees Seek $10.6 Million to Increase Staffing,” CNG, 5 November 2003; Strausberg, “Blagojevich, Jones Reach Accord on Lying Cops Bill,” CD, 6 November 2003, p. 1; Sarah Okeson, “Lawmaker Trying to Be ‘1 Out of 100,’” PJS, 6 November 2003, p. B3; Senate Floor Transcript, 6 November 2003, pp. 2–19 (SB 67) and 20 (Obama introduces SB 2120); Christopher Wills, “Senate Rejects Drivers Licenses for Illegal Immigrants,” AP, 6 November 2003; Obama Interview with Terry Martin, 6 November 2003, IllinoisChannel.org; Scott Fornek, “Teachers Union Backs Obama in Senate Bid,” CST, 7 November 2003, p. 20; Eric Krol, “Senate Hopefuls Get Key Endorsements,” CDH, 7 November 2003, p. 19; Bernard Schoenburg, “Teachers’ Union Backs Obama for U.S. Senate,” SJR, 7 November 2003, p. 8; Mark Samuels, “Illinois Federation of Teachers Endorses Obama for U.S. Senate,” DHR, 7 November 2003, p. A5; Schoenburg, “Painting of Ex-Gov. Ryan ‘Straightforward, Simple,’” SJR, 9 November 2003, p. 17; Schoenburg, “Frank Talk About Drug Use in Obama’s ‘Open Book,’” SJR, 16 November 2003, p. 17; CF, 10 and 12 November 2003; Raja Krishnamoorthi e-mail to Andrew Gruber and Dino Christenson, 8 October 2003, Christenson, “Economic Stimulus Initiative: Offshore Tax Haven, 10 October 2003, Christenson e-mail to Krishnamoorthi, 13 October 2003, Krishnamoorthi e-mail to Christenson, 15 October 2003, Krishnamoorthi e-mail to Gruber and Christenson, “Latest,” 22 October 2003, Pam Smith e-mail to Krishnamoorthi, “Draft Real Release,” 5 November 2003, AGP; OFI, “Obama Offers Innovative Plan to Boost U.S. Manufacturing Jobs,” 7 November 2003; Krishnamoorthi e-mail to Issues Committee, “Issues Update—Employment,” 10 November 2003, Krishnamoorthi e-mail to Gruber, Tara Thompson e-mail to Gruber, “Obama Economic Plan,” and Kupper e-mail to Krishnamoorthi, “Early Education Initiative,” 19 November 2003, AGP; Manya A. Brachear, “Program Provides Living Civics Lessons to High Schoolers,” CT, 9 November 2003; Lauren W. Whittington, “Unions Split in Illinois Primary,” RC, 13 November 2003; Schoenburg, “Obama’s Meteoric Rise Hard to Predict 5 Years Ago,” SJR, 6 November 2008; Terry Martin, “Reflections on Barack Obama,” Illinois Municipal Review, January 2009, pp. 7–8; Schoenburg’s 9 March 2009 interview with Mark DePue, pp. 94–96; DJG interviews with Steve Preckwinkle, Raja Krishnamoorthi, Andrew Gruber, and Dino Christenson.

41. Obama Block Schedule, November 2003, JKP; Obama Update—Week of November 5, 8 November 2003, TWP; “Illinois Is Ground-Zero in Battle for the Senate,” RC, 10 November 2003, Paul Merrion, “Turn On, Log In, Find Out,” CCB, 10 November 2003, p. 11; Steve Neal, “Hull Ups the Ante in Senate Bid,” CST, 12 November 2003, p. 55; Meg Kinnard, “Chico Touts Education Credentials,”

NationalJournal.com, 12 November 2003; Don Wycliff, "Soul Survivor," CT Magazine, 16 November 2003, pp. 12ff.; OFI, "Obama Says Pending Medicare Bill Protects Drug Companies, Not Seniors," 16 November 2003; David Mendell, "Obama Lures Some Unions from Hynes," CT, 17 November 2003; SEIU, "SEIU Illinois Endorses Obama for U.S. Senate," 17 November 2003; Bernard Schoenburg, "Madigan Backing Hynes for U.S. Senate," SJR, 18 November 2003, p. 1; CF, 18, 20, and 21 November 2003; JCAR Minutes, 18 November 2003; JCAR, 2003 Annual Report; Peter Savodnik, "Obama Vying for Key Union Support to Turn Back Hynes," TH, 19 November 2003, p. 13; Mendell, "Madigan Gives Boost to Hynes' Senate Campaign," CT, 19 November 2003; Scott Fornek, "Speaker Madigan Backs Hynes for Senate," CST, 19 November 2003, p. 17; Doug Pokorski, "Senate Candidates Gather for Forum," SJR, 19 November 2003, p. 14; Minutes, GARS Board of Trustees, 19 November 2003; Senate Floor Transcript, 19 November 2003, pp. 73–74 (SB 783) and 77–78 (SB 1935); OFI, "Obama Blasts Federal Energy Bill as 'Giveaway' to Big Polluters," 19 November 2003; Obama Weekly Report, 19 November 2003, TWP; Chuck Sweeney, "Democratic Senate Primary Winner May Surprise," RRS, 20 November 2003, p. A9; Ray Long and John Chase, "Gay-Rights Proposal Shelved in Legislature," CT, 20 November 2003; Senate Floor Transcript, 20 November 2003, pp. 43–45 (commending Pete Baroni) and 54–68 (SB 702); Long and Chase, "Landmark Ethics Law Approved," CT, 21 November 2003; Long and Chase, "Legislature Lurches to Wild Finish," CT, 22 November 2003; Travis Morse, "Police Prepare for Racial Profiling Study," FJS, 23 November 2003; Chinta Strausberg, "Rejected City Plan to Lead to 800 Layoffs," CD, 24 November 2003, p. 3; Todd Spivak, "Key Unions Back Obama," HPH, 26 November 2003, p. 3; Mendell, "Protesters Use Bullhorns to Give Jackson an Earful," CT, 26 November 2003; Strausberg, "Jesse Rally Disrupted," CD, 26 November 2003, p. 2; "Jackson Leads Rally for Jobs," CST, 26 November 2003, p. 11; Daniel Duggan, "Party Bigwigs Slow to Endorse," ECN, 27 November 2003, p. A1; "Church Tour," RRS, 30 November 2003; Sweeny, "Obama Leaves Good Impression in Forest City," RRS, 2 December 2003, p. A7; Stephen S. Morrill, "Client Report for 2003 Veto Session," Morrill and Associates, November 2003; "Veto Session Offers Landmark Legislation," C-WR 19 #1, 20 January 2004; Obama for Illinois, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 July–31 December 2003, 30 January 2004, esp. pp. 246, 252; Virgil Wright, "Upstart Illinois Senator a Hit with Delegates, News Media," BSB, 5 August 2004, p. 2; Ray A. Coleman, The Obama Phenomenon (Prioritybooks Publications, 2009), pp. 20–22, 31–37; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, pp. 237–39; Christopher Drew and Mike McIntire, "After 2000 Loss," NYT, 3 April 2007; Abramsky, Inside Obama's Brain, p. 87; David B. Wilkins, "The New Social Engineers in the Age of Obama," Howard Law Journal 53 (Spring 2010): 557–644, at 585; Ron Suskind, Confidence Men (HarperCollins, 2011), p. 79; DJG interviews with Martha Minow, David Wilkins, Claire Serdiuk, Peter Coffey, Pete Baroni, Sean Noble, John Cameron, Cindi Canary, Lyndell Luster, Dan Shomon, Jim Cauley, Randon Gardley, Raja Krishnamoorthi, Madhuri Kommareddi, Kaleshia Page, and William McNary.

42. Lynn Sweet, "Downstate Dem to Quite Senate Race, Back Chico," CST, 1 December 2003, p. 13; Kelly Quigley, "O'Shea Backs Out of Senate Race," CCB, 1 December 2003; OFI, "Obama Announces Plan to Address AIDS Crisis in Minority Communities," 1 December 2003; Chinta Strausberg, "Obama Seeks $1 Bill to Combat AIDS," CD, 3 December 2003, p. 7; Jack Mabley, "Politicians Who Do What's Right—Like Fitzgerald—Are Rare," CDH, 3 December 2003, p. 15; OFI, "Obama Announces Health Care Plan to Cover All Children," 3 December 2003; Strausberg, "Obama Announces $68 Billion Health Plan,” CD, 4 December 2003, p. 2; “Back Barack, the Best of Bunch for U.S. Senate,” AWN, 4 December 2003; Obama Weekly Update, 4 December 2003, TWP; Dan Shomon e-mail to Pam Smith, 4 December 2003, JKP; David Mendell, “Key Race May Tip Balance in Senate,” CT, 7 December 2003; Obama Block Schedule, December 2003, JKP; Drew and McIntire, “After 2000 Loss,” NYT, 3 April 2007; Bob Sexter, “Obama’s Fundraising, Rhetoric Collide,” CT, 1 February 2008; UCLS course evaluations, Autumn 2003 (5.85 for Con Law and 5.73 for Race on UCLS’s 7-point scale); Obama, Constitutional Law Final Examination, [10–15] December 2003; Salim Muwakkil, “Worthy of the Land of Lincoln,” ITT, 8 December 2003, p. 11; CDH, 8 December 2003, p. I-9; OFI, “Obama Files 10,000 Petition Signatures,” 8 December 2003; Obama to Emil Jones Jr., 8 December 2003 (“effective today”), in Senate Journal, 14 January 2004, p. 4; David Jackson and John McCormick, “Building Obama’s Money Machine,” CT, 13 April 2007; Antonio Munoz to Stanley Rives, 22 December 2003, Rives to J. Fred Giertz et al., “Re-establishment of the Minority and Emerging Manager Subcommittee,” 29 December 2003, John R. Krimmel to Members of the Minority and Emerging Manager Subcommittee, “Agenda for the January 19, 2004 Meeting,” 8 January 2004, “Minutes,” 19 January 2004, Krimmel to Investment Committee Members, “Report from the Minority and Female-Owned Business Enterprise Committee,” 29 January 2004, “Minutes,” 17 and 18 February 2004, Krimmel, “Report and Minutes,” 1 March 2004, “Minutes,” 18 March 2004, SURSP; Ray Long, “Candidates Line Up for Next Run,” CT, 9 December 2003; Strausberg, “Leaders: Medicare a ‘Horror’ for Seniors,” CD, 9 December 2003, p. 3; “Illinois Lawmaker Announces,” BND, 9 December 2003, p. B3; OFI, “Statement on the Passing of Honorable Paul Simon,” 9 December 2003; AP, “Reaction to the Death of Former Sen. Paul Simon,” 9 December 2003; Diane Wilkins, “Obama Unveils Job Plan While Announcing Candidacy,” MDR, 10 December 2003; Ray Long, “A Legacy of Honesty and Dignity,” CT, 10 December 2003; CF, 10 December 2003; Obama Weekly Update, 11 December 2003, TWP; “Simon Services Set for Weekend,” CT, 11 December 2003; Long, “Clinton to Be at Simon Rites,” CT, 12 December 2003; “2004 Tentative Session Calendar,” C-WR 18 #10, 12 December 2003, p. 4; Eric Krol, “Succeeding Fitzgerald,” CDH, 13 December 2003, p. 1; Long, “Simon Recalled as Moral Crusader,” CT, 15 December 2003; Richard Goldstein, “Funeral Draws Well-Known Crowd,” SI, 15 December 2003; Abdon M. Pallasch, “Professor Obama Was a Listener, Students Say,” CST, 12 February 2007, p. 5; Pallasch, “Law Students Gave Obama Big Thumbs Up,” CST, 18 December 2007, p. 7; “Fired Up and Ready to . . . Teach!,” AbovetheLaw.com, 21 February 2008; “Brian”’s 12:59 A.M. 31 July 2008 comment (#356) on Jodi Kantor, “Teaching Law, Testing Ideas,” NYT, 30 July 2008; Alexandra Starr, “Case Study,” NYT Magazine, 21 September 2008; Axelrod, Believer, p. 143; DJG interviews with Kaleshia Page, Claire Serdiuk, Nathan Smith, Thomas FitzGibbon, Jonathan Yi, Dan Shomon, Michael Dorf, Dave Feller, Andrew Boron, Juleigh Nowinski, Jill Rock, John Kupper, Terrie Pickerill, and Sheila Simon.

43. David Mendell and Liam Ford, “Candidate Filings Find 1 Surprise Hat in Ring,” CT, 16 December 2003; Lynn Sweet, “Schakowsky Backs Obama for U.S. Senate,” CST, 16 December 2003, p. 20; Eric Krol, “Schakowsky Endorses Obama,” CDH, 16 December 2003, p. 7; JCAR Minutes, 16 December 2003; OFI, “Schakowsky Endorses Barack Obama for U.S. Senate,” 16 December 2003; Rebecca Ephaim, “Looking for a Knockout,” Conscious Choice, February 2004, pp. 26–31; Obama Weekly Update, 17 December 2003; CF, 17, 19, and 22 December 2003; Steve Neal, “Obama’s Endorsements Stacking Up,” CST, 31 December 2003, p. 33; Eric Krol, “Building from the Base,” II, January 2004;

Joshua Green, "A Gambling Man," Atlantic, January–February 2004, pp. 34–38; Bennett, Petts & Blumenthal, "Recap of Surveys of Illinois Democratic Primary Voters," 4 May 2003, MBP; Jan Schakowsky's 2004 interview with David Axelrod; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, p. 240; DJG interviews with Dan Shomon, Nate Tamarin, Michael Dorf, Jan Schakowsky, Bob Creamer, John Cameron, William McNary, Larry Suffredin, Mark Blumenthal, Rick Ridder, Anita Dunn, Fred Lebed, and Mike Henry.

44. "Focus Group—Women," and "Focus Group—Men," 13 December 2003, JKP; Cauley in Mendell, Obama, p. 205; Noam Scheiber, "Cruel Intentions," TNR, 28 May 2008; DJG interviews with Audra Wilson, Pam Smith, Jim Cauley, Randon Gardley, Pete Giangreco, Terry Walsh, John Kupper, Joe Sinsheimer, Forrest Claypool, Dan Shomon, and Michael Dorf.

45. Matt O'Connor and Ray Gibson, "Ryan Indicted," CT, 18 December 2003; Monica Davey, "Former Gov. Ryan of Illinois Indicted on Graft Charges," NYT, 18 December 2003; CF, 19 December 2003; Obama Block Schedule, December 2003, JKP; "Affidavit of Application for Marriage License," D520068, Clark County, NV, 21 January 2003 (performed 23 January); Bennett Guira, "Wedding of the Year," The Rainbow Edition, January 2004 (Educational Laboratory School); Neil Abercrombie in Stu Glauberman and Jerry Burris, The Dream Begins (Watermark Publishing, 2008), p. vi; Untitled budget projection sheet, n.d., ca. 2 January 2004, "4.5 million Budget," n.d., ca. 6 January 2004, "Media Discussion," 2 January [2004], David Axelrod e-mail to Paul Harstad, 2 January 2004, JKP; UCLS Announcements 2003–04, pp. 83, 173; Scott Fornek, "Firefighters Support Hynes for Senate," CST, 6 January 2004, p. 5; Paige Wiser, "The 'It' Factor," CST, 7 January 2004, p. 44; Obama Weekly Update—January 7, 2004, TWP; Roland Klose, "The Changing Face of Voters," IT, 8 January 2004; Axelrod e-mail to Kupper, 8 January 2004, OFI, "Downstate Strategy Memo," 9 January 2004, and "Obama for Illinois Strategy Meeting," 9 January 2004, John Kupper daybook entries, January 2004, Harstad Strategic Research, "Focus Group Outline," 8 January 2004, JKP; "Primary Election Focus Group, Older Women," "Primary Election Focus Group, Younger Women," and "Primary Election Focus Group Summary," 8 January 2004, PHP; "Raw counts of the number . . ." and "Focus Group Observations," n.d., JKP; Remnick, The Bridge, p. 375; Axelrod, Believer, p. 144; DJG interviews with Jim Cauley, Bron Solyom, Kevin Watson, Jesse Jackson Jr., John Kupper, Pete Giangreco, Paul Harstad, and Mike Kulisheck.

46. Peter Savodnik, "Ill. Labor Leaders to Decide on a Senate Endorsement," TH, 7 January 2004, p. 9; Steve Neal, "Hynes Poised to Snare Key Labor Backing," CST, 7 January 2004, p. 37; CF, 7 13, and 15 January 2004; Pat Guinane, "Hynes Wins Coalition Backing," QCT, 8 January 2004 (and SI, 9 January); David Mendell, "Hynes Garners AFL-CIO Backing," CT, 9 January 2004; Scott Fornek, "Hynes Lands AFL-CIO Endorsement," CST, 9 January 2004, p. 5; Eric Krol, "AFL-CIO Supports Hynes in Senate Run," CDH, 9 January 2004, p. I-11; OFI, "AFSCME Picks Obama," 10 January 2004; Dave McKinney and Leslie Gruffy, "Obama Scores Backing from AFSCME," CST, 11 January 2004, p. 3; "Union Endorses Obama," CDH, 11 January 2004, p. I-5; Mendell, "Hynes Takes Low-Key Road in Senate Bid," CT, 11 January 2004; Paul Merrion, "Riches Alone Can't Win Political Office," CCB, 12 January 2004, p. 1; John J. Miller, "Aiming for the Hill," NR, 14 January 2004; Russ Stewart, "Here's New Year's Political Forecasts," NSP, 14 January 2004; Ramsin Canon, "Profiles of Candidates for Senate: Barack Obama, Democrat," GapersBlock.com, 14 January 2004; "House Divided," IT, 15 January 2004; "Illinois AFL-CIO Endorses Dan Hynes in Illinois Senate Race," LL, January 2004, pp. 1–2, IVI-IPO Action

Bulletin, December 2003, p. 3; Sara Schmitt e-mail to Audra Wilson, and Raja Krishnamoorthi e-mail to Andrew Gruber and David Adams, "Questionnaire & Platform," 9 and 10 December 2003, Megan Handley e-mails to Gruber, Wilson e-mail to Gruber, David Munar e-mail to Handley, and Adams e-mail to Gruber and Wilson, "AIDS Foundation Q&A," 16 and 17 December 2003, AGP; AIDS Foundation of Chicago's Candidate Questionnaire, 12 February 2004, Leslie Gryce Sturino to Dear Candidate, 15 December 2003, pp. 3, 6, JKP; Obama, IVI-IPO 2004 U.S. Senate Questionnaire, 5 January 2004, 16pp.; Obama e-mail to John Kupper et al., 12 January 2004, Harstad e-mail to Kupper et al., "A Few Suggestions on Trib Questionnaire," 22 January 2004, JKP; Tracy Baim, "Obama Seeks U.S. Senate Seat," WCT, 4 February 2004; "Letters: Obama on Marriage," WCT, 11 February 2004; John Chase, "Senate Chase Remains Murky," CT, 15 January 2004; Rich Miller, "Dan Hynes Squandering His Political Capital," GZ, MD, and (as "Seeking Inspiration") IT, 22 January 2004; Baim, Obama and the Gays, pp. 19–26; Sheryl Gay Stolberg, "Obama's Views on Gay Marriage 'Evolving,'" NYT, 18 June 2011; DJG interviews with Ray Harris, Steve Preckwinkle, Margaret Blackshere, John Cameron, and Bill Fuhry.

47. The Solon, GARS, January 2004; Senate Floor Transcript, 15 January 2004, p. 18 (Obama introducing SB 2269); OFI, "Obama Pushes Automatic Enrollment for KidCare," 15 January 2004; Obama e-mail prefacing Obama Weekly Update, 15 January 2004, Teamster.net; CNG, 15 January 2004; [Audra Wilson], "Debate Preparation," n.d. [ca. 15 January 2004], and Wilson to John Kupper et al., "Subject Matter for Northwestern Debate on Wednesday 1/21," 15 January 2004, JKP; CDH, 16 January 2004, p. I-3; Tona Kunz, "Senate Hopefuls Debate Finer Points," CDH, 18 January 2004, p. I-6; AP, "Chicago Democrats Take Senate Campaigns on the Road," 18 January 2004; "Upcoming Events," ObamaForIllinois.com, 19 January 2004; Daniel Duggan, "Union Rallies Around Local Candidate," ECN, 20 January 2004; Caleb Hale, "Democratic Candidates for U.S. Senate Debate at SIUC," SI, 21 January 2004, p. A1; AP, CDH, 21 January 2004, p. I-6; "Senate Candidates Propose Solutions to National Issues," DE, 21 January 2004; David More, "Going to the Candidates' Debate," Carbondale Dispatch, 21 January 2004; Seth Freedland, "Democratic Senate Contenders View for Voter Confidence at Tech," DN, 22 January 2004; George Olwenya, "Siaya Ecstatic Over Would-Be Illinois Senator," EAS, 22 January 2004; Obama Weekly Report, 22 January 2004, TWP; Jen Haberkorn, "Obama '04 at Odds with Obama '08," Washington Times, 1 February 2008, p. A1; DJG interviews with Jef Pollock, Chris Mather, and Dan Hynes.

48. David Mendell, "Obama Banks on Credentials, Charisma," CT, 25 January 2004; Mendell, Obama, pp. 198–203, 219–23; OFI, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 October–31 December 2003, 29 January 2004; Friends of Barack Obama, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures, 1 July–31 December 2003, 2 February 2004; Mendell and John Chase, "Pappas Trails in Race for Funds," CT, 1 February 2004; Tamara E. Holmes, "Will Mr. Obama Go to Washington?," BE, February 2004, p. 26; Michael Miner, "The Kiss and the Cover-Up," CR, 19 March 2004; Hendon in Todd Spivak, "In the Black," IT, 25 March 2004; Christi Parsons and Ray Long, "Wheeler-Dealer with a Cause," CT Magazine, 19 September 2004; Tracy Robinson-English, "Statehouse Clout," Ebony, April 2005, pp. 150ff.; Aaron Chambers, "Unofficial Advisors Create a Stir," RRS, 11 January 2004; Patrick J. Fitzgerald, "Government's Motion for Admission of Other Acts of Evidence," U.S. v. Antoin Rezko, N. D. Ill. #05-CR-691, 11 January 2008, p. 18 (Maloof cooperated with prosecutors); Matt Baron, "Covering a Phenomenon,” Wednesday Journal and Forest Park Review, 25 March 2008; Ryan Lizza, “Making It,” New Yorker, 21 July 2008; Clark in David Smallwood, “Two Guys Who Laid It on the Line,” N’Digo Profiles, December 2008, pp. 14–15; Hendon, White Enough/Black Enough, p. 63; Dupuis and Boeckelman, Barack Obama, p. 48; Rebecca Janowitz, Culture of Opportunity—Obama’s Chicago (Ivan R. Dee, 2010), p. 218; Eric Lipton, “Ties to Obama Aided in Access for Big Utility,” NYT, 23 August 2012; DJG interviews with John Rogers Jr., Mike Gecan, Randon Gardley, Don Moore, Cindi Canary, Jan Schakowsky, Emil Jones Jr., Frank Clark, John Hooker, John Kelly, Courtney Nottage, Dave Gross, Jill Rock, Cindy Huebner Davidsmeyer, Debbie Halvorson, Lou Viverito, Mike Lieteau, John Cameron, Bill Perkins, Jim Cauley, Dan Shomon, Claire Serdiuk, and Chris Mather.

49. “Upcoming Events,” ObamaForIllinois.com, 19 January 2004; OFI, “Obama Endorsed by Democratic Party of Evanston,” 26 January 2004; Anne Broache, “Dems Give Support to Obama,” and Jerome C. Pandell, “Candidates Still Confident After Endorsement Choice,” DN, 26 January 2004; Richard Goldstein, “Most Senate Candidates Keep Campaign Offices Close to Home,” SI, 26 January 2004; John Kupper daybook entries, January 2004, David Axelrod e-mail to Obama, “A Few Thoughts for Trib,” 25 January 2004, JKP; John Chase and David Mendell, “Candidates Find Their Foe in Bush,” CT, 27 January 2004; Audra Wilson e-mail to John Kupper et al., “Debate Prep for 2004 City Club of Chicago,” and Axelrod and Kupper to the Obama Team, “Strategy for City Club Debate,” 27 January 2004, JKP; City Club of Chicago Forum, 28 January 2004, CAN-TV, Illinois Channel DVD; Bob Seidenberg, “Evanston Democrats Back Obama in U.S. Senate Race,” ER, 29 January 2004; Scott Fornek, “Democrats Tout Experience in Cordial Senate Debate,” CST, 29 January 2004, p. 22; Mendell, “Hynes Says Charge That He Laundered Funds Ridiculous,” CT, 29 January 2004; Eric Krol, “Hynes Defends Himself After Questions About Finances,” CDH, 29 January 2004, p. I-11; Steve Neal, “Obama Has Good Shot at Senate Seat,” and Thomas Roeser, “If Dems Pick Best Candidate,” CST, 30 January 2004, p. 43; DJG interview with Whit Soule.

50. Stacy St. Clair, “Do You Know These People?,” CDH, 27 January 2004, p. 1; Terry Walsh e-mail to Mike Kulisheck et al., “Questionnaire Drafting for Tracking Poll,” 13 January 2004, JKP; Harstad Strategic Research, “Track 1: Illinois Statewide Democratic Primary Survey,” 14–18 January 2004, JKP and PHP; CF, 19 January 2004; Bennett, Petts & Blumenthal, “Final Illinois Statewide,” BPB 1643, January 2004, RRP; Bennett, Petts & Blumenthal, “Recap of Surveys of Illinois Democratic Primary Voters,” 4 May 2004, MBP; CDH, 26 January 2004, p. IV-2, 30 January 2004, p. I-3, and 1 February 2004, p. III-2; “Tentative Media Schedule,” 31 January 2004, JKP; Mick Dumke, “Beyond the Base,” “Conceding No Demographic,” and “Slim Chances,” Chicago Reporter, February 2004, pp. 8ff., 18–19; Peter Schuler, “A Senate Story,” University of Chicago Magazine, February 2004; Salim Muwakkil, “Obama’s Legacy Is Likely to Ignite a Progressive Firestorm,” Trumpet, February 2004, pp. 28–29; Eric Krol, “Where Candidates Stand on Iraq War, Security,” CDH, 1 February 2004, p. 1, John Kupper daybook entries, February 2004, OFI Block Schedule, February 2004, JKP; Kevin McDeermott, “Illinois Senate Race Remains Up for Grabs,” SLPD, 2 February 2004, p. A1; AP, “Democrats in Senate Race Want Options for Immigrants,” SI, 2 February 2004; Lauren W. Whittington, “Land of Mystery,” RC, 3 February 2004; Bernard Schoenburg, “Condolences,” SJR, 1 February 2004, p. 31; “Beverly Ann Criglar, 63,” CT, 4 February 2004; Senate Floor Transcript, 3 February 2004, p. 2 (Obama introduces SR 394); Senate Floor Transcript, 4 February 2004, pp. 3, 5 (Obama introduces SBs 2579, 2581, 2608, 2609, 2610, and 2611); John Chase and David Mendell, "Opponents Put Hynes on Defensive Over Fundraising, War Stand," CT, 5 February 2004; Scott Fornek, "Dem Rivals Bash Hynes' Support for Iraq War," CST, 5 February 2004, p. 6; Eric Krol, "Democrats Battle Over Iraq War," CDH, 5 February 2004, p. 1; CF, 5 February 2004; Senate Floor Transcript, 6 February 2004, pp. 14, 18 (Obama introduces SBs 3088 and 3147); Dick Durbin to "Dear Friend," 6 February 2004, JKP; Senate Floor Transcript, 10 February 2004, p. 5; "Governor Blagojevich Makes Education Focus of Second State of the State Address," C-WR 19 #2, 29 February 2004, pp. 3–4. No complete recording or transcript of the 4 February WBEZ debate seems to survive.

51. Terrie Pickerill e-mail to John Kupper, "Obama Shoot," 21 January 2004, JKP; Pickerill to Jim Cauley and Juleigh Nowinski, "REV Shoot Details," 4 February 2004, TPP; Axelrod's 2004 interviews with Mike Pflieger and Jan Schakowsky; John Kupper's 2004 interviews with Jeremiah Wright and Michelle Obama; "Schedule, February 7, 2004," TPP; Obama, transcript of remarks, Heartland Cafe, Rogers Park, and transcript of remarks, Mount Zion Missionary Baptist Church, Evanston, 7 February 2004, JKP and TPP; E. Janet Wright, "Obama for Illinois," Trumpet, February 2004, pp. 30–32; David Axelrod's 7 February 2004 interview with Obama, JKP and TPP; John Del Cecato e-mail to Axelrod and Kupper, "Potential Script from Heartland Cafe?," 9 February 2004, JKP; Jarrett in Wolffe, Renegade, p. 123.

52. "Tentative Media Schedule," 31 January 2004, OFI Block Schedule, February 2004, JKP; Dennis Duggan, "Searching for Dem Votes in Kane County," ECN, 9 February 2004, p. A6; Chuck Sweeny, "Senate Hopefuls Blast Bush, Republicans," RRS, 9 February 2004, p. B3; David Mendell, "Hull Proves Money No Object in Bid for Senate," CT, 10 February 2004; CF, 10 February 2004; Joe Sinsheimer e-mail to David Axelrod, "Situational Analysis," and Sinsheimer e-mail to John Kupper, "Hull Fines," 10 February 2004, JKP; Rich Miller, "Maybe It's Right Time for Obama to Run," CST, 8 December 2006, p. 43; Ted McClelland, "How Obama Learned to Be a Natural," Salon, 12 February 2007, and Young Mr. Obama, pp. 227–29; Ali Abunimah, "How Barack Obama Learned to Love Israel," Electronic Intifada, 4 March 2007; Coleman, The Obama Phenomenon, p. 30; Presta, Mr. and Mrs. Grassroots, p. 152; DJG interviews with Ab Mikva, Liz Drew, John Cameron, Dan Hynes, Kevin Watson, Warren Chain, David Kindler, Mike Kruglik, and Paul Scully.

53. "Tentative Media Schedule," 31 January 2004, OFI Block Schedule, February 2004, Pam Smith e-mail to John Kupper, "Press," 29 January 2004, JKP; SurveyUSA, "IL Senate Primaries," ILSenate.com, 8 February 2004; OFI, "Obama Gains Support of New Trier Dems," 9 February 2004; John Kupper notes, "Celinda [Lake]," 10 February [2004], JKP; Russ Stewart, "Hull, Obama Surge in Democrats' Senate Race," NSP, 11 February 2004; OFI, "Obama Picks Up Four Key Latino Endorsements," 11 February 2004; Elaine Hopkins, "Obama: Parents Must Be Involved in Schools," PJS, 11 February 2004, p. B5; Joshua Kolar e-mail to Andrew Gruber et al., "Obama," 11 February 2004, AGP; Lauren W. Whittington, "The Great Black Hope," RC, 12 February 2004; Andrew Schroeder, "New Trier Democrats Endorse Kerry, Obama," WL, 12 February 2004; Terrie Pickerill memo to Jim Cauley and Juleigh Nowinski, "2/17/04 Shoot Details," 12 February 2004, TPP; CF, 13 February 2004; Steve Edwards, "Democratic Senate Candidate Barack Obama," Eight Forty-Eight, WBEZ, 13 February 2004; OFI, "U.S. Rep. John Conyers Stumps for Obama," 13 February 2004; Kristen McQueary, "Black Caucus Leader Backs Obama for Senate," DS, 14 February 2004; OFI, "Champion" and "March" Urban Radio Ads, n.d., JKP and TWP; John Patterson, "Betting on Name Recognition," CDH, 15 February 2004, p. 15; David Mendell, "Political Novice Hull Uneasy in Spotlight," CT, 15 February 2004; Laura Washington, CST, 16 February 2004, p. 41; Jeff Berkowitz, "Making It a Hat Trick," Blogspot.com, 16 February 2004; Michael Sneed, "Sneed," CST, 17 February 2004, p. 4; "Shooting Schedule," 17 February 2004, JKP; Michelle Obama to "Dear Friends," ObamaForIllinois.com, 17 February 2004; Jeremy Adragna, "Big Dollars Boost Obama's Chances as Primary Looms," HPH, 18 February 2004, pp. 1–2; "Analysis of the Governor's Budget—Part I," C-WR 19 #3, 14 April 2004; SB 2800 Bill Status, 5, 19–20, and 26 February and 26 and 28 April 2004; Senate Floor Transcripts, 24 February 2004, p. 17, and 20 May 2004, p. 6; Eric Zorn, "Public Entitled to Know About Hull's History," and Mendell, "Hull Infuses Campaign Chest with $5 Million," CT, 19 February 2004; Obama Weekly Update, 19 February 2004, TWP; Mike Flannery, "Hull Faces Questions of Domestic Abuse," CBS2Chicago.com, 19 February 2004, Internet Archive; Eric Krol, "Candidate Refuses to 'Clear the Air,'" CDH, 20 February 2004, p. 15; Kate Clements, "Legislation Seeks Charity Care Changes," CNG, 20 February 2004 (SB 2579); Pam Smith e-mail to John Kupper, 20 February 2004, JKP; Eric Krol, "Then and Now: Obama's Views on Gay Rights," CDH, 26 March 2007, p. 1; Remnick, The Bridge, pp. 371, 374; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, p. 253; Axelrod, Believer, p. 143; Axelrod in Amy Chozick, "When He Walks Out of That Building," NYT Magazine, 15 February 2015; DJG interviews with Bill Haine, Chris Mather, Jim Cauley, Audra Wilson, Pam Smith, Kevin Watson, Randon Gardley, Pete Giangreco, Terry Walsh, John Kupper, Joe McLean, and Terrie Pickerill.

54. OFI, "State's Largest Teamsters Local Backs Obama in U.S. Senate Race," 15 February 2004; Obama Weekly Update, 19 February 2004, TWP; Rick Pearson, "Steve Neal, 54," CT, 20 February 2004; David Mendell, "Blair Hull Defends Self on Divorce Incident," CT, 21 February 2004; OFI, "Young Voters Rally for Obama," 21 February 2004; Debra Schommer Klein e-mail to Kupper, 21 February 2004, JKP; Terrie Pickerill scheduling e-mails and "TV Scripts," n.d., ca. 20 February 2004, TPP; "2004 Campaign Polling: Illinois Senate," NationalJournal.com, 21–22 February 2004; Dave Orrick, "Hull Responds to Report of Domestic Violence," CDH, 22 February 2004, p. 17; Bernard Schoenburg, "Special Interest Foe Hull Helps Ex-Wife Land State Job," SJR, 22 February 2004, p. 15; Andrew Herrmann and Scott Fornek, "Wealthy Hopefuls Lead Senate Race," CST, 22 February 2004, p. 3; John Chase, "Pappas Is Picking Up 1 Vote at a Time," CT, 22 February 2004; OFI, "Former Clinton Campaign Manager Endorses Obama," 22 February 2004; John Chase, "TV Spots Pay Off in Ryan, Hull Senate Bids," CT, 23 February 2003; CF, 23 February 2004; Axelrod & Associates, "Yes," 23 February 2003, JKP and YouTube; SB 866, 3 July 2001, PA 92-0048; SB 130, 30 June 2003, PA 93-0063; SB 4, 18 August 2003, PA 93-0534; SB 15, 12 August 2003, PA 93-0517; Greg Hinz, "Dems Hit Local Airwaves," CCB, 23 February 2004; Adriana Colindres, "Obama Sees Himself as Fresh Voice on Issues," Copley News Service, 23 February 2004; Madhuri Kommareddi e-mail to Terry Walsh et al., "Obama Consultant Call Tuesday," 23 February 2004, JKP; "Obama Hits Airwaves on Road to Victory," CD, 24 February 2004, p. 2; Lauren W. Whittington, "Hull Goes for Broke," RC, 25 February 2004; John Bachtell, "Illinois Senate Race Offers Historic Opportunity," PWW, 28 February 2004; John S. Jackson, "The Making of a Senator," Southern Illinois University, August 2006; Presta, Mr. and Mrs. Grassroots, p. 154, 156; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, p. 245; DJG interviews with Rick Ridder, Anita Dunn, Mike Henry, Jason Erkes, Don Wiener, Sheila Simon, and Madhuri Kommareddi.

55. OFI Block Schedule, February 2004, JKP; Obama Weekly Update, 19 February 2004, TWP; David

Mendell and Molly Parker, "Opponents Take Aim at Hull on His Divorce, Other Issues," CT, 24 February 2004; Bernard Schoenburg, "Senate Candidates Spar in Springfield," SJR, 24 February 2004, p. 9; Scott Fornek, "Hull Was Late Opposing War, Obama Says," and "Hull Says He's OK with Releasing Divorce Record," CST, 24 February 2004, p. 6; Christopher Wills, "Abuse Accusations Against Hull Take Center Stage," AP, 24 February 2004; John Patterson, "Democrats Press Hull for Details on Protection Order," CDH, 24 February 2004, p. 5; CF, 24, 25, and 27 February 2004; Dorothy Schneider, "Officials: Clean Air Act Haunts Illinois," SJR, 25 February 2004, p. 12; OFI, "Sheila Simon, Daughter of the Late Sen. Paul Simon, Endorses Obama for U.S. Senate," 25 February 2004; Steve Horrell, "Simon Backing Obama," EI, 26 February 2004; Diane Wilkins, "Simon Endorses Obama," MDR, 26 February 2004; Schoenburg, "Obama Gets Endorsement from Simon's Daughter," SJR, 26 February 2004, p. 12; "2004 Campaign Polling: Illinois Senate," NationalJournal.com, 29 February 2004 (Hynes' Global Strategy Group, polling 800 likely voters February 22–24, had Hull leading Hynes and Obama 21–19–19); "Obama, Post-Debate, Overtakes Hull in IL Democrat Sen Primary," SurveyUSA, 24 February 2004, 8pp.; Schoenburg, SJR, 26 February 2006, p. 7; Andrew Herrmann, "New Poll Shows Obama Pulling Ahead of Hull," CST, 26 February 2004, p. 30; Eric Zorn, "The Real Hull Slips Out from Behind the Ads," CT, 26 February 2004; Senate Floor Transcript, 26 February 2004, p. 4 (Obama introduces SR 441); Terry Walsh e-mail to Obama et al., "Revisiting Topline Vote Goals," and John Del Cecato e-mail to David Axelrod et al., "New Poll," 26 February 2004, JKP; Zorn, "Hull Relents: 'Read My Files!,'" Change of Subject Blog, ChicagoTribune.com, 26 February 2004, 1:10 P.M.; Mendell, "Hull, Ex-Wife Ask Judge to Unseal Divorce Files," CT, 27 February 2004; Michael Sneed, "Sneed," Frank Main, "Police Report: Wife Said She Kicked Hull, He Hit Her," and "This Democratic Senate Pick Can Hit the Ground Running," CST, 27 February 2004, pp. 4, 10, 55; Eric Krol, "Spenders Lead Race for Senate," and "Hull to Release Divorce Records," CDH, 27 February 2004, pp. 1, 5; Schoenburg, "Hull, Wife Want Divorce File Unsealed," SJR, 27 February 2004, p. 15; Chris Rickert, "Democrats Obama, Hynes Take Similar Stands on the Issues," DDC, 27 February 2004; United Power for Action and Justice, "Citizens' Report on Candidates for U.S. Senate," March 2004, pp. 5–6 (26 February 2004); Bennett, Petts & Blumenthal, "Recap of Surveys of Illinois Democratic Voters," 4 May 2004, MBP; Remnick, The Bridge, p. 375; Coleman, The Obama Phenomenon, pp. 43, 85; Axelrod, Believer, p. 145; DJG interviews with Bill Haine, Evelyn Bowles, Rick Ridder, Anita Dunn, Mike Henry, Jason Erkes, Laura Russell Hunter, Dan Shomon, Fred Lebed, Claire Serdiuk, and Dan Hynes. No complete recording or transcript of the 23 February debate seems to survive.

56. "Affidavit of Brenda Sexton Hull," Hull v. Hull, #35363, Cook County Circuit Court, 12 March 1998, 7pp., JKP and TWP; Eric Zorn, "The Hull Files," Change of Subject Blog, ChicagoTribune.com, 27 February 2004, 1:10 P.M.; Rick Ridder to Kathy Hull, "Current Controversy," [27 February 2004], RRP; David Mendell, "Hull's Ex-Wife Called Him Violent Man in Divorce File," and Zorn, "Hull's Biggest Mistake Isn't in Divorce File," CT, 28 February 2004; Frank Main, "Hull's Dirty Laundry on the Line," CST, 28 February 2004, p. 4; Rob Olmstead and Eric Krol, "Papers Show Hull Threats, Profanity," CDH, 28 February 2004, p. 1; Daniel Duggan, "One-Liners Show Deep Differences with President," ECN, 28 February 2004, p. A1; OFI, "Barack Obama Endorsed by Sun-Times AND Tribune," 28 February 2004; "For the Democrats: Obama," and John Kass, "Hull Learning Nothing Fair in Illinois Politics," CT, 29 February 2004; Michael Sneed, "Deciphering Blair Hull," CST, 29 February 2004, p. 4; Krol, "Hull Campaign Not Ruined, Experts Say,” CDH, 29 February 2004, p. 1; Bernard Schoenburg, “Costly Primary,” and “U.S. Senate Democratic Candidates: Barack Obama,” SJR, 29 February 2004, pp. 1, 4; Mike Ramsey, “U.S. Senate Hopefuls Make Pitch Outside Chicago,” ODT, 29 February 2004; Chuck Sweeny, “Democratic Candidates for U.S. Senate,” RRS, 29 February 2004, p. H4; “Primary Vote an Important One,” and “Barack Obama,” JHN, 29 February 2004; OFI, “Star Newspapers Endorse Obama,” and “Service Union Rally for U.S. Senate Candidate Barack Obama Draws 1,000,” 29 February 2004; “Mentor,” JKP, TWP, and JCP; LGBT Committee for Obama, Speakeasy Supper Club Brunch, 29 February 2004; Nicole Saunders, “The Next Black Senator?,” Essence, March 2004, p. 32; Dan Johnson-Weinberger, “Picking the Good Ones,” TCP, March 2004, p. 3; Michael Ibrahim, “U.S. Senate Candidate Barack Obama,” Residents’ Journal, March–April 2004; Krol and John Patterson, “Oberweis Not Backing Down on Immigration,” CDH, 1 March 2004, p. 9; “Illinois Needs Senator with Track Record, Experience,” BP, 1 March 2004, p. A8; CF, 1 March 2004; Scott Fornek, “Barack Obama,” CST, 1 March 2004, p. 6; Mendell, “Hull Criticizes Drugmakers, but Heavily Invests in Them,” CT, 1 March 2004; Mundy, Michelle, p. 147; Shomon in Remnick, The Bridge, p. 377; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, p. 245; DJG interviews with Nate Tamarin, Paul Harstad, John Kupper, Randon Gardley, and Jim Cauley. Subsequent speculation seeking to credit David Axelrod with a decisive role in the public release of Sexton’s deposition reflected both exaggeration and implications of false credit-claiming. CF, 4 March 2004 (“It’s highly doubtful that any of his opponents had much, if anything to do with the story’s genesis”), Mendell, “Obama Lets Opponent Do Talking,” CT, 24 June 2004 (“the Democrat’s campaign worked aggressively behind the scenes to fuel controversy about Hull’s filings”), CF, 30 August 2004 (“some prominent media types wrongly credited Dan Hynes with the kill”), Mendell in Ben Smith, “Obama’s Style: Go Negative, Stay Clean,” Politico, 3 November 2011 (“Axelrod and the Obama Senate campaign played no public role in unsealing the Hull or Ryan divorce records. But behind-the-scenes machinations were more complicated. . . . You really have to connect the dots to pin things on Axelrod”), and DJG interviews with Audra Wilson, Don Wiener, John Kupper, Terrie Pickerill, Pete Giangreco, Terry Walsh, and Toni Preckwinkle. Thanks to opposition researcher Don Wiener, Blair Hull’s campaign was directly responsible for the FEC imposing a $275,000 fine on James Chao, an executive who reimbursed his APEX Healthcare employees for $69,500 in donations to Dan Hynes, and a $76,500 penalty on Hynes’s campaign. Mendell, “Exec Fined $275,000 over Donations to Hynes Campaign,” CT, 29 April 2005, and Rick Pearson, “Hynes’ Senate Campaign Will Pay FEC to Settle Complaints,” CT, 20 December 2006.

57. Bennett, Petts & Blumenthal, “Recap of Surveys of Illinois Democratic Primary Voters,” 4 May 2004, MBP; Harstad Strategic Research, “Track 2: Illinois Statewide Democratic Primary Survey,” 29 February–1 March 2004, JKP and PHP; “Left to Spend as of March 1,” Obama Block Schedule, March 2004, John Kupper daybook entries, March 2004, JKP; John Chase and Molly Parker, “NOW Puts Hull on the Defensive Over Divorce File,” CT, 2 March 2004; CF, 2 and 3 March 2004; Jennifer Koons, “Chico, Pappas Focus on Education & Jobs,” NationalJournal.com, 2 March 2004; “2004 Campaign Polling: Illinois Senate,” NationalJournal.com, 1–3 March 2004; OFI, “Obama Raises Another $1.3 Million Since Jan. 1st,” 2 March 2004; David Mendell and Liam Ford, “Hull Calls in Press, Then Takes a Hike,” CT, 3 March 2004; Christopher Wills, “In Senate Race, Government Experience Comes in All Flavors,” AP, 3 March 2004; Rich Miller, “Blair Hull Has a Really Big Problem,” GZ, 4 March 2004; Lauren W. Whittington, “Man and Machine,” RC, 4 March 2004; Peter Savodnik, “Obama-Ryan Match a ‘GQ Race to Watch,’ TH, 4 March 2004; “Mixed Messages,” IT, 4 March 2004; Chase and Mendell, “Divorce Is Now an Issue for GOP,” CT, 4 March 2004; OFI, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 January–25 February 2004, 1 March 2004; Koons, “Hynes Details Plans for Health Care, Jobs,” NationalJournal.com, 4 March 2004; Channel 7 ABC TV, 4 March 2004, MBC; Scott Fornek, “Contribution from MJ Helps Obama Campaign Fund Soar,” CST, 5 March 2004, p. 9; “Michael Likes Obama Too,” CST, 8 March 2004, p. 31; Chris Fusco and Robert C. Herguth, “Gov Adviser Quietly Held Casino Hand,” CST, 7 March 2004, p. 7; Fusco, “Gov Rejects Request to Stay Out of Gaming Regulation,” CST, 23 March 2004, p. 9; Fusco et al., “Gov Taps D.C. Lawyer to Probe Casino Ruling,” CST, 25 March 2004, p. 12; Dave McKinney, “Gov. Fund-Raiser Linked to Man in Indictment,” CST, 7 August 2005, p. A10; Robert Elder, “Brokerage Leader Helping Others Invest in Obama,” AAS, 23 February 2007, p. B6; Sandra Sobieraj Westfall and Maureen Harrington, “No Ordinary Contender,” People, 19 February 2007, p. 83; Patrick J. Fitzgerald, “Government’s Motion for Admission of Other Acts of Evidence,” U.S. v. Antoin Rezko, N. D. Ill. #05-CR-691, 11 January 2008, pp. 10 and 17 (Aramanda cooperated with prosecutors); Korecki, Only in Chicago, p. 144; DJG interviews with Rick Ridder, Mark Blumenthal, Anita Dunn, Mike Henry, Blair Hull, Chris Mather, Jef Pollock, Dan Hynes, Freddrenna Lyle, and Rob Fisher.

58. Burt Constable, “Best Candidate Has Worst Name,” CDH, 2 March 2004, p. 9; Scott Fornek and Andrew Herrmann, “Senate Rivals Urge Ryan to Unseal Divorce Records,” and Mary Mitchell, “Don’t Black Politicians Know Who Their People Are?,” CST, 4 March 2004, pp. 9 and 14; Phil Ponce, City Club Debate, Chicago Tonight, WTTW, 4 March 2004; Matthew Miller, The 2% Solution (Public Affairs, 2003), esp. pp. xi, 53, 262; Ron Ingram, “Obama States His Case in Decatur for Senate Nomination,” DHR, 5 March 2004, p. A3; Rick Pearson, “Divorce Turns into Albatross of Senate Race,” CT, 5 March 2004; Herrmann and Fornek, “Obama Leads Pack for Dem Senate Nod,” Curtis Lawrence and Fornek, “Hull Says He Struck Wife to Defend Himself,” and Dave McKinney, “Obama Pals Block Bill Helpful to Rival Hynes,” CST, 5 March 2004, pp. 9, 10, 32; John Patterson, “Messy Divorce Tale Told by Hull,” CDH, 5 March 2004, p. 1; Kurt Erickson, “Poll: Hull Slips; Ryan Far Ahead,” BP, 5 March 2004, p. A1; Mike Robinson, “Democrat Obama Grabs Lead in Fresh Poll,” AP, 5 March 2004; Kristen McQueary, “Obama Surges to Lead in Southtown Poll,” ECN, 6 March 2004; Eric Krol, “Your Senate Choice: Millionaire or Fund Raiser,” CDH, 7 March 2004, p. 1; “Handshakes Aren’t Like Rubbing Elbows,” CT, 7 March 2004; Lauren W. Whittington, “Final Days for Fightin’ Illini,” RC, 9 March 2004; Ellen Warren, “Scenes from a Senate Campaign,” CT, 12 March 2004; “Rod McCulloch’s Response to Jeff Berkowitz,” ArchPundit.com, 3 July 2004; DJG interviews with Rod McCulloch, Andy Davis, and Anita Dunn.

59. Channel 7 ABC TV, 5 and 6 March 2004, MBC; John Chase and John Bebow, “Ex-Wife Refuses to Back Down from Hull,” CT, 6 March 2004; Andrew Herrmann and Scott Fornek, “Hull’s Ex-Wife Tells Her Side,” CST, 6 March 2004, p. 2; Eric Krol, “Hull Responds in Ad About His Divorce,” CDH, 6 March 2004, p. 4; Monica Davey, “Closely Watched Illinois Senate Race Attracts 7 Candidates in Millionaire Range,” NYT, 7 March 2004; Chuck Sweeny, “Obama, Hynes Talk Jobs in Race for Senate,” RRS, 7 March 2004, p. B1; David Mendell, “Proud of ‘Battle Scars,’ Chico Still in the Fight,” CT, 7 March 2004; Dorothy Schneider, “Hynes Makes Campaign Stop in City,” SJR, 7 March 2004, p. 11; John J. Miller, “Racing for the Senate,” NR, 8 March 2004; Chinta Strausberg, “Obama, Davis, Others Remember ‘Bloody Sunday,’” and Joe Ruklick, “Obama Holding Slight Lead in Democratic Senate Nomination Race,” CD, 8 March 2004, pp. 2 and 4; Krol, “Obama Says Autobiography Teaches Lessons,” CDH, 8 March 2004, p. 11; Mark Samuels, “Fight for Clean Air Hits Illinois Floor,” QCT, 8 March 2004; CF, 8 March 2004; John Bebow, “Hull’s Ex-Wife Wants a Different Spotlight,” CT, 10 March 2004; Carol Slezak, “Heel or a Hero?,” CST, 10 March 2004, p. 51; “Manpower vs. Machine,” Philadelphia Magazine, March 2007; Marcia Gelbart, “Obama Helps Fattah Seek Some Late Funds,” PI, 8 May 2007; Kenneth P. Vogel, “‘Mystery’ Man Lends Support to Obama,” Politico, 19 October 2008; Paul Schwartzman, “A Political Strategist with D.C. on His Mind,” WP, 8 April 2014; DJG interviews with Jim Cauley, Nate Tamarin, Kevin Watson, David LeBreton, Kevin Thompson, Lyndell Luster, Emil Jones Jr., John Kelly, Al Kindle, Tom Lindenfeld, and Greg Naylor.

60. “Choice for U.S. Senate,” CDH, 7 March 2004, p. 16; “United States Senate—Democrat: Barack Obama,” PJS, 7 March 2004, p. A4; “For U.S. Senate,” SLPD, 7 March 2004, p. B2; “Endorsement: U.S. Senate, Democrats,” ABN, 7 March 2004, p. D2; OFI, “Obama Picks Up Endorsements from the Daily Herald, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Champaign News-Gazette, and the Peoria Journal Star,” 7 March 2004; Harstad Strategic Research, “Track 3: Statewide Democratic Primary Survey,” 7–8 March 2004, JKP and PHP; Rick Pearson, “Obama, Ryan Out Front,” Eric Zorn, “Disparagment of Obama Votes Doesn’t Hold Up,” and Joseph Kellman, “2 Hopefuls Are Primarily Long Shots,” CT, 9 March 2004; CF, 9 March 2004; John Patterson, “Pro-Choice Advocates Defend Obama Votes,” CDH, 10 March 2004, p. 15; Bennett, Petts & Blumenthal, “Recap of Surveys of Illinois Democratic Primary Voters,” 4 May 2004, MBP; Blair Hull direct mail, “WDM,” “MSHC,” and “HUL0469,” “Joyce Washington Democrat for U.S. Senate,” SM&M, Obama direct mail, “BO_PRO1,” “BO_PRO3,” and “BO_A1cr,” JKP, PGP, and RRP; “Faith” and “Assault” urban radio ads, JKP, TWP, and TPP; DJG interviews with Paul Harstad, Mike Kulisheck, Mark Blumenthal, Rick Ridder, Pete Giangreco, Terry Walsh, John Kupper, and Terrie Pickerill.

61. Eric Fidler, “Obama Takes Lead in Polls, Donations” and “Barack Obama Moves Front and Center in Illinois Democratic Senate Race,” AP, 9 and 10 March 2004; Russ Stewart, “Hull’s ‘Collapse’ Has Senatorial Precedent,” NSP, 10 March 2004; “For U.S. Senate,” MD, 10 March 2004, p. A4; “Hyde Park Citizen’s Endorsements,” HPC, 10 March 2004, p. 2; John Chase and David Mendell, “Candidate Without Faults Is a Rarity,” CT, 10 March 2004; Audra Wilson e-mail to John Kupper et al., “ABC 7 Debate,” 20 January 2004, JKP; ABC 7 News, 10 March 2004, 10 p.m.; Ron Carter, “Barack Obama for U.S. Senator,” SSJ, 11 March 2004, p. 11; “Obama for Democrats,” DPT, 11 March 2004; Lauren W. Whittington, “Rivals Race to Catch Obama,” RC, 11 March 2004; Harold Henderson et al., “15 Candidates! We Can Help,” Michael Miner, “The View from Downstate,” and Ben Joravsky, “Why Won’t He Commit?,” CR, 11 March 2004; Todd Spivak, “Head of the Class,” IT, 11 March 2004; Chinta Strausberg, “Pols: ‘Kerry’s the Man to Defeat Bush,’” CD, 11 March 2004, p. 2; Chase and John McCormick, “Hull Concedes He Took Cocaine in Early ’80s,” CT, 11 March 2004; Abdon M. Pallasch, “Hynes Pounces on Obama at Last Debate,” CST, 11 March 2004, p. 10; Eric Krol, “Hynes Criticizes Obama for Votes on Spending,” CDH, 11 March 2004, p. 7; Mike Ramsey, “Hynes, Obama Clash Over Budget at Debate,” SJR, 11 March 2004, p. 11; “Hynes Takes Shot at Obama at Forum,” PJS, 11 March 2004; Mike Robinson, “Democratic Senate Hopefuls, in Home Stretch, Exchange Shots,” AP, 11 March 2004; OFI, “Sierra Club and LCV Endorse Obama,” 5 February 2004; “LCV Mounts Independent Campaign on Behalf of Barack Obama for U.S. Senate,” 9 March 2004; Public Citizen’s “New Stealth PACs” archive at www.stealthpacs.org; Jennifer Koons, “LCV Praises Obama’s Enviro Record,” NationalJournal.com, 11 March 2004; OFI, “Obama Places Major Ad Buy in Metro East,” 11 March 2004; “Hope,” BUO-04-17, JCP and TPP; “Faith” (DNA: Did Not Air), TWP and TPP; “Barack OBAMA U.S. Senate Yes, We Can!,” PGP; David Axelrod e-mail to Audra Wilson et al., 11 March 2004, JKP; “The Five Questions,” CJN, 12 March 2004; Harold Meyerson, “A Bright Hope in Illinois,” WP, 12 March 2004; AP, “Candidates for U.S. Senate Make Last Push,” CDH, 12 March 2004, p. I-12; Kurt Erickson, “Obama, Ryan Pulling Away in Senate Races,” BP, 12 March 2004, p. A1; Jeff Smyth, “Hynes Says U.S. Senate Primary Down to Two,” SI, 12 March 2004; Matt O’Connor et al., “U.S. Indicts Consumer Advocate,” CT, 12 March 2004; Dave Newbart, “Schakowsky’s Husband Indicted in Bank Fraud,” CST, 12 March 2004, p. 6; Laurie Cohen, “For a Public Watchdog, Questions of Politics, Principles,” CT, 6 June 1993; Jeff Berkowitz, “Buzzzzz,” Blogspot.com, 12 March 2004; Jennifer Koons, “Obama Touts Past Work with Simon,” NationalJournal.com, 12 March 2004; OFI, “The Final Countdown to Victory,” Bob Chinn’s Crabhouse, 12 March 2004, 6 P.M.; “Barack Obama Is Our Choice,” “Our Endorsements,” and “Barack Obama,” CD, 13 March 2004, p. 1, 19, 25; “Democrat: Barack Obama,” RRS, 14 March 2004, p. H1; John Chase and David Mendell, “Senate Rivals Struggle to Wash Off Mud Stains,” CT, 14 March 2004; Jonathan Goldman, Executive Director, Illinois Environmental Council, “2004 Environmental Scorecard,” n.d.; Rick Pearson and Ray Long, “Careful Steps, Looking Ahead,” CT, 3 May 2007; Mendell, Obama, p. 240; Presta, Mr. and Mrs. Grassroots, p. 156; DJG interviews with Claire Serdiuk, Kaleshia Page, Andy Davis, Randon Gardley, Jim Cauley, Pete Giangreco, Terry Walsh, John Kupper, Terrie Pickerill, Jeremy Flynn, Jack Darin, Pat Welch, Howard Learner, and Jonathan Goldman. No audio or video recording or transcript of the 10 March WLS and League of Women Voters debate seems to survive, despite MBC having copies of most WLS news broadcasts. The Internet Archive did not save either WLS’s or the Illinois League’s Web pages during March 2004.

62. CF, 11 and 12 March 2004, “Statement by Rod McCulloch,” 11 March 2004, 3:13 P.M., IllinoisLeader.com; John Chase and Liam Ford, “Bid Aimed at Derailing Ryan,” and “Mr. Ryan, Clear the Air,” CT, 12 March 2004; Scott Fornek and Andrew Herrmann, “Borling Fires Aide Who Leaked Claims About Ryan,” CST, 12 March 2004, p. 11; “Money and Brains,” Economist, 13 March 2004, p. 34; Dan Stumpf, “Obama Captures Student Support at NU,” DN, 14 March 2004; P. J. Huffstutter, “Sordid Pasts, Hefty Pockets at Fore of Illinois Senate Race,” LAT, 14 March 2004; John Chase and Liam Ford, “Candidates Scramble for 11th Hour Support,” and Rick Pearson, “Not Why, Who,” CT, 14 March 2004; Abdon M. Pallasch, “Can Machine Hand It to Hynes with Obama in Lead?,” CST, 14 March 2004, p. 2; Eric Krol, “No Negative TV Ads, but Race Got Nasty Anyway,” CDH, 14 March 2004, p. 1; Bernard Schoenburg, “Obama, Ryan Pace Race for Senate,” SJR, 14 March 2004, p. 1; “Poll: Ryan, Obama Hold Senate Leads,” PJS, 14 March 2004; “Barack Obama Runs for U.S. Senate Seat,” Jet, 15 March 2004, p. 6; Eric Ferkenhoff, “In Ill. Senate Race, Character Is the Issue,” BG, 15 March 2004; Ofelia Casillas and H. Gregory Meyer, “Even a Dog Gets in Act as Senate Race Ends,” and Dawn Turner Trice, “Obama Unfazed by Foes’ Doubts on Race Question,” CT, 15 and 16 March 2004; Scott Fornek, “Dems in Final Sprint for Senate Race,” CST, 15 March 2004, p. 7; Eric Krol, “Senate Candidates Make Final Sweep of the State,” CDH, 15 March 2004, p. 1; Vernon Jarrett, “This Is the Odyssey of One Man’s Vote for Barack Obama for U.S. Senate,” CD, 15 March 2004, p. 2; Maura Kelly, “Jackson Makes Appeal for Obama,” AP, 15 March 2004; CF, 15 March 2004; Bennett, Petts & Blumenthal, “Recap of Surveys of Illinois Democratic Primary Voters,” 4 May 2004, MBP; OFI, “Statement from Barack Obama on the Passing of Vernon Jarrett,” 24 May 2004; Ferman Beckless, “Reflections on the Life of Vernon Jarrett,” CD, 25 May 2004, p. 3; Jeff Berkowitz, “Fair and Balanced with Mark Brown?” and “Correction,” Blogspot.com, 29 and 30 June 2004; Debra Pickett, “Sunday Lunch with Dan Hynes,” CST, 26 December 2004, p. 18; Cauley in Remnick, The Bridge, p. 381; DJG interviews with Dave Sullivan, Katrina Emmons Mulligan, Jim Cauley, Dan Hynes, Nate Tamarin, Adam Stolorow, Pete Giangreco, Jerry Morrison, and Mike Henry.

63. CF, 15 March 2004; Lauren W. Whittington, “Obama, Ryan Lead Late Polls,” RC, 16 March 2004; Rick Pearson and James Janega, “Candidates Hopeful to the End,” and Eric Zorn, “Election Day Tidbits,” CT, 16 March 2004; Fornek, “Precinct Workers Hit the Streets,” and Mark Brown, “Election Day Gives Homeless Chance to Earn a Buck,” CST, 16 March 2004, pp. 13, 2; Chinta Strausberg, “Leaders: ‘Turnout Key to Victory,’” CD, 16 March 2004, p. 3; OFI, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 25 February–31 March 2004, 14 April 2004, esp. pp. 591–92, and 1 April–30 June 2004, 14 July 2004, esp. p. 1737; DJG interviews with Jim Cauley, Madhuri Kommareddi, Tom Lindenfeld, Greg Naylor, Pete Giangreco, Al Kindle, and Adam Stolorow.

64. Madhuri Kommareddi e-mail to Terry Walsh et al., “Obama Consultants Call Tuesday 11AM,” 15 March 2004, JKP; Obama remarks and transcript, JCP, JKP, and PHP; WGN, Fox, CBS, and NBC Chicago TV news excerpts, 16 March 2004, JKP; David Mendell, “Obama Routs Democratic Foes,” Eric Zorn, “Victory Party Puts Tiny Crack in Obama Calm,” and “The Senate Race of a Generation,” CT, 17 March 2004; Scott Fornek, “Obama Defeats Hull’s Millions, Hynes’ Name,” and Mary Mitchell, “As the Machine Sputters, the People Are Heard,” CST, 17 March 2004, pp. 2, 3; Eric Krol, “Suburban Voters Boost Ryan, Obama to Big Wins,” CDH, 17 March 2004, p. 1; Chinta Strausberg, “OBAMA WINS BIG,” CD, 17 March 2004, p. 3; Doug Finke, “Two Emerge from Pack of Senate Candidates,” and Bernard Schoenburg, “Obama vs. Ryan,” SJR, 17 March 2004, p. 1; Doug Wilson, “State Senator to Face Former Teacher in Race for U.S. Senate,” QHW, 17 March 2004, p. A11; David S. Broder, “In Illinois, a Contest of Contrasts,” WP, 17 March 2004; Fornek, “Obama’s Appeal Spans Racial Lines,” CST, 18 March 2004, p. 9; Doug Wilson, “Democratic U.S. Senate Candidate Obama Makes a Stop in Quincy,” QHW, 18 March 2004, p. A7; OFI, “Obama Takes Downstate Unity Tour,” 18 March 2004; Jeremy Adragna, “Obama Wins Rush’s Support After Landslide Victory,” HPH, 24 March 2004, p. 3; Tracy Douglas, “Democratic Senate Candidate Rallies for Younger Voters in C-U,” DI, 5 April 2004; Jeff Smyth, “Democrats Rally for Obama,” SI, 22 June 2004; Obama remarks transcript, Carlinville, IL, 2 July 2004, JKP; Elizabeth Brackett, “Rising Star,” PBS NewsHour, 27 July 2004; Carol Felsenthal, “My Neighbor’s Surprise Meeting with Obama,” CM, 13 August 2012; David Axelrod’s 2009 interview with Robert Draper; DJG interviews with Dan Shomon, David LeBreton, Jim Cauley, Claire Serdiuk, Kaleshia Page, Liz Drew, Dan Hynes, Chris Mather, Paul Harstad, and Sheila Simon.

65. David Mendell, “Obama Routs Democratic Foes,” and Glenn Jeffers and Rex W. Huppke, “Blacks United Behind Obama,” CT, 17 March 2004; Mark Brown, “Voters Warmed to Obama, the Next Hot Politician,” CST, 17 March 2004, p. 2; Jonathan Tilove, “That’s Obama with a ‘B,’” Newhouse, 17 March 2004; CF, 17 and 19 March 2004, “It’s Kerry and Obama,” LL, March 2004, pp. 1–2; Chinta Strausberg, “Now, Obama to Take on Bush,” CD, 18 March 2004, p. 2; Mendell, “Ryan, Obama Enter

New Ring,” and Gary Washburn and H. Gregory Meyer, “Hynes’ Loss Puts Machine in Doubt,” CT, 18 March 2004; Eric Krol, “Campaign Starts Early for Ryan, Obama,” and “Stage Set for Good Senate Campaign,” CDH, 18 March 2004, pp. 1, 14; Tom Polansek, “No Rest for the Winners,” SJR, 18 March 2004, p. 7; Kurt Erickson, “Nominee Obama Takes Message Downstate,” BP, 18 March 2004, p. A1; Todd Spivak, “The Contenders,” IT, 18 March 2004; Jeff Smyth, “Obama Stops in Region on Victory Tour of State,” SI, 18 March 2004; Shawn Clubb, “Obama Stops in Area to Thank Supporters,” AT, 18 March 2004; Monica Davey, “As Quickly as Overnight, a Democratic Star Is Born,” NYT, 18 March 2004; Lauren W. Whittington, “Gentlemen from Illinois,” RC, 18 March 2004; Chuck Sweeny, “Jobs Talk of Senate Candidates,” RRS, 19 March 2004; Debbie Howlett, “Dems See a Rising Star in Illinois Senate Candidate,” USAT, 19 March 2004; Aaron Chambers, “Theories on Support Accrue in Senate Race,” RRS, 20 March 2004, p. A7; Lynda Arakawa, “U.S. Senate Candidate Has Hawaii Roots,” HA, 19 March 2004; Al Swanson, “Analysis: Obama New Kind of Democrat?” UPI, 19 March 2004; Peter Serafin, “Punahou Grad Stirs Up Illinois Politics,” HSB, 21 March 2004; Kurt Erickson, “Bracket Creep Symptom of Hullacious Election,” BP, 21 March 2004, p. C1; Eric Krol, “Jack Ryan Has Uphill Battle for Black Voters,” CDH, 22 March 2004, p. 1; Russ Stewart, “‘Democratic Wing’ Fuels Obama’s Senate Triumph,” NSP, 24 March 2004; Rich Miller, “Barack Obama Wins Big,” GZ, 25 March 2004; Mick Dumke, “Crossing Over,” Chicago Reporter, April 2004, pp. 19ff.; Dan Johnson-Weinberger, “Primary Opportunities,” TCP, April 2004, p. 3; Eric Ferkenhoff, “Democrats Pinning High Expectations on an Illinois Senator,” BG, 3 April 2004; Stewart, “Hynes’ White House Plan Dimmed by Loss,” NSP, 28 April 2004; Dumke, “Running on Race,” Colorlines Magazine, 22 September 2004, pp. 17ff.; DJG interviews with Pam Smith, Tarak Shah, Peter Coffey, Emil Jones Jr., Dan Shomon, and David LeBreton.

66. “Protecting Choice and Achieving Gender Equity,” ObamaForIllinois.com (26 March, 9 May, and 9 September 2004); Farr Curlin e-mail to Obama, “Congratulations and a Concern,” 17 March 2004, and Obama to Curlin, 18 March 2004; Obama, “‘Call to Renewal’ Keynote Address,” 28 June 2006; Obama, TAOH, pp. 195–98; Obama, Commencement Address at the University of Notre Dame, 17 May 2009, Public Papers of the Presidents 2009, Vol. 1, p. 660; Greg Jaffe, “The Quiet Impact of Obama’s Christian Faith,” WP, 22 December 2015; Jann S. Wenner, “A Conversation with Barack Obama,” Rolling Stone 1056/57, 10 July 2008; The Strategy Group to Barack Obama and Jim Cauley, “Turnout and Performance Review,” 22 March 2004, JKP; Christopher Hayes, “Check Bounce,” TNR, 17 March 2004; Steen, “Self-Financed Candidates and the ‘Millionaires’ Amendment,” in Malbin, Election After Reform, pp. 204–18; Andrew Malcolm, “Sen. Obama Might Be Just Obama Without Law Written by Sen. McCain,” LATimesBlog, 27 June 2008; Dupuis and Boeckelman, Barack Obama, pp. 22–23, 49; Reynolds in David Smallwood, “Genesis of the Grassroots Movement,” N’Digo Profiles, December 2008, pp. 10–11, 44; Dunn in Remnick, The Bridge, p. 380; Eric Fidler, “Barack Obama Moves Front and Center,” AP, 10 March 2004; CF, 19 March 2004; Russ Stewart, “Hynes’ White House Plan Dimmed by Loss,” NSP, 28 April 2004; Don Rose, “Beyond Race—or Not,” CT, 2 May 2004; Kirk Dillard and Mike Flannery, “At Issue,” WBBM Newsradio 780, 18 July 2004, JKP; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, p. 255; DJG interviews with Claire Serdiuk, Kevin Thompson, Liz Drew, Dan Hynes, Don Harmon, Chris Mather, Jef Pollock, Blair Hull, Amita Dunn, Raja Krishnamoorthi, Rick Ridder, and Mark Blumenthal.

67. Axelrod & Associates to Obama, “Finishing the Job,” 16 March 2004, JKP; David Plouffe, The Audacity to Win (Viking, 2009), p. 8; DJG interviews with John Kupper, Forrest Claypool, Dan Shomon, Joe McLean, Pete Giangreco, Terry Walsh, Jim Cauley, Peter Coffey, Claire Serdiuk, Nate Tamarin, Pam Smith, Audra Wilson, Kaleshia Page, Liz Drew, Madhuri Kommareddi, Susan Shadow Ransone, Scott Kennedy, Adam Stolorow, Randon Gardley, Lyndell Luster, Kevin Watson, and Ray Harris.

68. Fran Eaton, “GOP Tops Meet at ‘Morning After’ Breakfast Wednesday,” IL, 17 March 2004; Liam Ford and Gary Washburn, “Ryan Quits 2 Corporate Boards,” CT, 19 March 2004; DSCC to Democratic U.S. Senate Nominee and Staff, “Jack Ryan Research Summary and Recommendations,” 19 March 2004, John Kupper to Paul Harstad and Mike Kulisheck, “Thoughts on March Poll,” 19 March 2004, JKP; Thomas Roeser, “Think Kerry Is Liberal? Get a Load of Obama,” CST, 20 March 2004, p. 18; Kurt Erickson and Scott Miller, “The Race Is On,” BP, 21 March 2004, p. B1; Kevin McDermott, “Ryan’s Divorce Woes Just Won’t Die,” SLPD, 21 March 2004, p. B1; Trevor Jensen, “In Illinois, It’s Still Pay to Play,” Adweek, 22 March 2004, p. 14; Chinta Strausberg, “Obama to Bush: ‘Coalition of the Willing Is a Paper Wish,’” CD, 22 March 2004, p. 2; Lauren W. Whittington, “Down on the Farm,” RC, 23 March 2004; John Kupper daybook entries, March 2004, Kupper e-mail to Harstad, “Qualities,” 23 March 2004, JKP; Senate Floor Transcript, 24 March 2004, p. 8; Mick Dumke, “Beyond the Base,” Chicago Reporter, February 2004, pp. 8ff.; Senate Floor Transcript, 25 March 2004, pp. 225–26 (SB 2579); “Preliminary Media Budget for Obama for Senate—General Election,” n.d. [24 March 2004], JKP; Tara Malone, “Fighting for Funding,” CDH, 25 March 2004, p. 1; Todd Spivak, “In the Black,” IT, 25 March 2004; Senate Floor Transcript, 26 March 2004, pp. 126–27 (SB 3007); Ray Long and Molly Parker, “Gun Curbs Suffer Setbacks,” CT, 27 March 2004; Channel 7 ABC TV, 27 March 2004, MBC; OFI, “Obama and SEIU Pass Landmark Legislation to Guarantee Free and Low Cost Health Care for the Uninsured,” 28 March 2004; David Mendell, “Obama Has Center in His Sights,” CT, 27 April 2004; Spivak, “Barack Obama and Me,” Houston Press, 28 February 2008; Harstad in Abramsky, Inside Obama’s Brain, p. 39; Axelrod, Believer, p. 154; DJG interviews with John Kupper, Nate Tamarin, Claire Serdiuk, John Nicolay, Frank Watson, Tommy Walsh, Ed Petka, Martin Sandoval, Paul Williams, Terry Walsh, Joe McLean, Paul Harstad, and Todd Vandermyde.

69. Obama’s 27 March 2004 interview at CathleenFalsani.com; Falsani, “‘I Have a Deep Faith,’” CST, 5 April 2004, p. 14; Falsani, The God Factor (Farrar, Straus, Giroux, 2006), pp. 45–51; Silverstein in Pauline Yearwood, “Obama and the Jews,” CJN, 12 September 2008; Obama in Lisa Miller and Richard Wolffe, “‘I Am a Big Believer in Not Just Words, but Deeds and Works,’” Newsweek, 12 July 2008; Rosemary Ellis, “GH Talks with Michelle Obama,” Good Housekeeping, November 2012; DJG interviews with Ira Silverstein and Scott Turow.

70. Erin P. Billings, “CBC Boosts Obama,” RC, 29 March 2004; Eric Krol and John Patterson, “GOP, Ryan Begin to Take Aim at Obama,” CDH, 29 March 2004, p. I-15; Obama on Tavis Smiley’s TV show and Smiley’s NPR radio show, 29 March 2004; Chinta Strausberg, “Obama Takes Aim at President Bush Again,” CD, 30 March 2004, p. 2; Liam Ford, “Some Ryan Divorce Files Should Be Unsealed,” CT, 30 March 2004; CF, 30 and 31 March 2004; Scott Turow, “The New Face of the Democratic Party—and America,” Salon, 30 March 2004; J. Michael Kennedy, “Speech Gives a Boost to Obama’s ‘Dreams,’” LAT, 6 August 2004; Charles Leroux, “The Buzz Around Obama’s Book,” CT, 6 August 2004; Janny Scott, “Obama’s Story, Written by Obama,” NYT, 18 May 2008; David Axelrod’s 2009 interview with Robert Draper; Obama, DFMF (Three Rivers Press, 2004), pp. vii–xii; Russ Stewart, “Ryan’s Weak Showing Bodes Ill Versus Obama,” NSP, 31 March 2004; John Harwood, “Presidential Politics Overshadows Rise of State-Level Stars,” WSJ, 31 March 2004; Nick Klagge, “Barack Obama, CC ’83, Up for Senate,” CS, 31 March 2004; “Obama Tells Supporters ‘Distinctions Could Not Be Clearer,’” IL, 31 March 2004; Eddie Pont e-mail to Andrew Gruber, “Jack Ryan,” 31 March 2004, AGP; Senate Floor Transcript, 31 March 2004, pp. 25–31 (SB 1645, PA 93-0672, 2 April 2004); KDJ, 1 April 2004; “Illinois Sends a Strong Message to Bush—NO Overtime Pay Cuts,” LL, March 2004, pp. 1–2; Errol Louis, “A Democratic Star Is Born,” NYS, 2 April 2004; Nate Tamarin e-mail to Paul Harstad et al., “Scheduling Issues,” 2 April 2004, JKP; Gruber to Raja Krishnamoorthi, “Ryan Etc.,” 5 April 2004, AGP; Matt Tallmer, “Thoughts on Obama’s Memoir” and “Potential Factual Problems in Obama’s Memoir,” 30 March 2004, “Obama’s Memoir—The Race Issue” and “Obama & Project Vote,” 7 April 2004, “Obama’s Law Clients,” 3 April 2004, “Review of Obama’s Law Clients,” 6 April 2004, “Major Obama Donors,” 8 April 2004, “Obama Corporate & Union Donors,” 12 April 2004, “Obama’s Institutional Backers: A Who’s Who of Corporate and Union Malfeasance, and Companies That Cost Illinois Jobs,” 16 April 2004, “Major Donors to Obama’s 2004 Senatorial Campaign,” 18 April 2004, “Obama Connections to E2 Nightclub,” 24 April 2004, [Gary Maloney], “Obama Legislation—92nd G.A.,” 36 pp., n.d., and “Obama Legislation—93rd G.A.,” 81 pp., n.d., [Brian McNeill], “Barack Obama: Media Report,” 29 April 2004, 253 pp., [Debbie] Lounsberry, “Barack Obama—The Record: A Summary,” 10 May 2004, [“State Senate”], “Obama Votes—Lonely Votes, 1997–2003,” n.d., JRORF; Bernard Schoenburg, “Obama’s Team,” SJR, 2 May 2004, p. 23; Michael Futch, “Fayetteville Woman Is On Board with Obama,” Fayetteville Observer, 3 February 2008 (Jenny Yeager); Mark Leibovich, “Between Obama and the Press,” NYT Magazine, 21 December 2008 (Gibbs); Will Rahn, “The Jack Ryan Files,” Daily Caller, 25 September 2012; Vince Coglianese, “The Jack Ryan Files,” Daily Caller, 26 September 2012; DJG interviews with Jim Cauley, Claire Serdiuk, John Kupper, Pete Giangreco, Terry Walsh, Amanda Fuchs Miller, Joe McLean, Scott Turow, and Debbie Lounsberry.

71. Harstad Strategic Research, “Illinois Statewide General Election Survey,” 25–31 March 2004, JKP; “Illinois Statewide General Election Survey,” 25 pp. pie charts, PHP; “Target Voters: Illinois Statewide General Election Survey,” JKP; “2004 Campaign Polling: Illinois Senate,” NationalJournal.com, 25–31 March 2004; Harstad to Obama for U.S. Senate Campaign, “Barack Obama Starts Off with a 19% Lead Over Jack Ryan,” 2 April 2004, PHP; Scott Fornek, “Obama: Back Off Divorce Files,” CST, 3 April 2004, p. 4; Tracy Douglas, “Democratic Senate Candidate Rallies for Younger Voters in C-U,” DI, 5 April 2004; Obama, Chicago Tonight, WTTW, 5 April 2004; Bill Burton and Audra Wilson, “John Kerry Joins Barack Obama to Talk Jobs and Economy in Chicago,” 8 April 2004, “Talking Points for Job Training Tour with John Kerry,” n.d., and Kim Molstre to Senator Kerry, “Conversation on Jobs/Economy with Barack Obama,” 8 April 2004, JKP; Jill Zuckman, “Illinois Democrats Ring Up at Least $2 Million for Kerry Run,” CT, 9 April 2004; Eric Krol, “Kerry Collects $2 Million at Chicago Dinner,” CDH, 9 April 2004, p. 13; “Kerry, Obama Outline New Direction for America,” U.S. Newswire, 9 April 2004; Fornek, “Obama, Kerry Plug Each Other at Chicago Job-Training Center,” CST, 10 April 2004, p. 10; Zuckman, “Kerry Gets Questions on War, Not Jobs,” CT, 10 April 2004; Lois Romano, “Kerry Sprinkles Jobs Message with Attacks on Iraq Policy,” WP, 10 April 2004; Glen Johnson, “Kerry Calls for Larger Role for Allies,” BG, 10 April 2004; Fornek, “Obama’s Poll Puts Him Far Ahead of Ryan,” CST, 12 April 2004, p. 7; Eric Krol and John Patterson, “Kerry Visit a ‘Tease’ to Durbin,” CDH, 12 April 2004, p. 11; CF, 12 April 2004; OFI, “Upcoming Downstate Events,” 12 April 2004; John Kupper daybook entries, April 2004, Kupper notes, “Barack 4-12,” “Barack-Downstate,” n.d., “Barack poll,” n.d., “Obama for Illinois Consultant Retreat Agenda,” 13 April 2004, JKP; Salim Muwakkil, “Shades of 1983,” ITT, 26 April 2004, p. 13 (“rising star”); Krol and Patterson, CDH, 26 April 2004, p. 11; Harstad fax to Kupper, 29 April 2004, Cauley e-mail to Vera Baker et al., “Monday Strategy Call at 7:30PM,” 7 May 2004, JKP; Pete Hisey, “Center Stage,” Occidental Magazine, Fall 2004, pp. 24–29; Christopher Drew and Mike McIntire, “An Obama Patron and Friend Until an Indictment,” NYT, 14 June 2007; Bob Sexter, “The Rezko Trial—Levine: Obama a Guest at ’04 Party for Tycoon,” CT, 15 April 2008; James A. Barnes, “Word of Mouth Fueled Obama’s Star Turn,” NJ, 25 August 2008; Corrigan in Remnick, The Bridge, pp. 384–85; Corrigan’s 2013 interview with Daniel Urman; DJG interviews with Robert Bennett, Paul Harstad, John Kupper, Pete Giangreco, Peter Coffey, Amanda Fuchs Miller, Nora Moreno Cargie, Kevin Thompson, Jeremiah Posedel, and Jack Corrigan.

72. AP, CDH, 14 June 2003, p. I-11; Lawrence A. Horwich, Barack H. Obama, and Michelle L. Obama, 2003 Form 1040, 15 April 2004; William Finnegan, “The Candidate,” New Yorker, 31 May 2004; Dori Meinert, “Senators Release Financial Records,” SJR, 15 June 2004, p. 17 (stating Obama listed “no liabilities”); Obama, U.S. Senate Financial Disclosure Report, 15 June 2005; Dorothy A. Brown, “Lessons from Barack and Michelle Obama’s Tax Returns,” Tax Notes, 10 March 2014, pp. 1109–13; Joel Lanceta, “Obama Prepares to Run for U.S. Senate,” Chicago Maroon, 17 February 2004; UCLS, The Glass Menagerie 2003–04, pp. 33, 100, 2004–05, pp. 27–28; UCLS, Obama courses summary sheet, n.d., ca. 2007; Mendell, Obama, pp. 151–52; Michael Lipkin, “The Professor and the President,” Chicago Maroon, 7 November 2008; Jeffrey Rosen, “Obama: The Teacher President,” Washingtonian, January 2009; Kwame Anthony Appiah, “Obama: Professor President,” BBC Radio 4, January 2009; Carol Felsenthal, “The Making of a First Lady,” CM, February 2009; Tom Hundley, “The Ivory Tower of Power,” CT Magazine, 22 March 2009; DJG interviews with Dennis Hutchinson, Geof Stone, Eric Posner, David Strauss, Douglas Baird, and Saul Levmore. Bart Schultz, “Obama’s Political Philosophy,” Philosophy of the Social Sciences 39 (June 2009): 127–73, can be discounted in its entirety, and multiple UCLS faculty concur that Cass Sunstein “was not particularly close to him.”

73. Sara Nelson to Christina Angarola et al., “Updated Schedule,” 12 April 2004, JKP; Paul Hampel, “Senate Candidate Obama Says He Will Campaign More in Metro East,” SLPD, 15 April 2004; “Durbin, Senate Candidate Obama Tout Ethanol Bill,” BND, 15 April 2004; Eric Fodor, “Candidate Barack Obama: President Bush Has Created a Big Mess,” HDR, 16 April 2004; Caleb Hale, “Defending Coal Throughout Illinois,” SI, 16 April 2004; OFI, “Upcoming Events,” 16–17 April 2004; Tom Polansek, “Senate Candidates Wage War of Words,” SJR, 16 April 2004, p. 14; Dave McKinney, “Ryan’s Chart Is Off,” CST, 16 April 2004, p. 6; Liam Ford and David Mendell, “Ryan, Obama Side by Side in Race for Election Funds,” CT, 16 April 2004; Bernard Schoenburg, “Jack Ryan Woefully Unprepared for Attack on Obama,” SJR, 18 April 2004, p. 21; Eric Krol and John Patterson, “Candidate’s Numbers Don’t Add Up at Press Conference,” CDH, 19 April 2004; SB 1028, 21 May 1999, and SB 1903, 31 May 2003; CF, 19, 20, 21, and 28 April and 3 and 13 May 2004; Dana Jay, “Teaching Experience Helps Shape Ryan’s Political Career,” CCC, 19 April 2004; Jim Muir, “Southern Illinois Needs Jobs, Not Political Rallies,” SI, 20 April 2004; Obama to Timuel Black, 21 April 2004, TBP Box 129 Fld. 1; Todd Spivak, “Ready, Aim, Misfire,” IT, 23 April 2004; Mick Dumke, “A Lesson in Politics,” Chicago Reporter, April 2004; Minutes, GARS Board of Trustees, 28 April 2004; Obama to Jack Lavin, 28 April 2004, ILDCEO FOIA;

Ford, "Stand on Labor Sets Ryan Apart," CT, 30 April 2004; Vera Baker e-mail to Jim Cauley et al., "Text for Bundling Site," 30 April 2004, JKP; Tom Polansek, "Winning Strategies Differ Among Black Politicians," SJR, 3 May 2004, p. 1; Dan Shomon e-mail to Robert Gibbs et al., "Legislative Update for This Week—Controversial Bills," 3 May 2004, JKP; Inside Politics, CNN, 4 May 2004, Schoenburg, "U.S. Senate Candidates Present Plans to Improve State Business," SJR, 5 May 2004, p. 11, Schoenburg, "Jack Ryan Sticking with Creative Tax-Increase Story," SJR, 6 May 2004, p. 7, Rich Miller, "This Isn't Dixie," IT, 6 May 2004, Dan Proft Memorandum to Political Reporters, "Outside the Mainstream: Barack Obama Truth Squad Report #4," 7 May 2004, JKP (no #s 1–3 seem to survive); "A GLBT Salute to Senator Hillary Rodham Clinton, Senator Jon Corzine, Senator Richard J. Durbin and State Senator Barack Obama," 7 May 2004; Lisa Ellman and Rafi Jafri, "DNC Young Professionals' Event," DLC21C Report, Summer 2004, p. 5; Muir, "Durbin Says Defense Secretary Should Resign," SI, 8 May 2004; Krol and Patterson, "Campaign Notebook," CDH, 10 May 2004, p. 11; Michael Martinez, "Ryan's Ex-Wife Signs on to Keep Divorce Files Sealed," CT, 11 May 2004; Lauren Shepherd, "Obama Takes 16-Point Lead in New Poll," TH, 12 May 2004, p. 3; Scott Richardson, "Obama Stops in County," BP, 12 May 2004, p. A3; Senate Floor Transcript, 13 May 2004, pp. 118 (HB 4371) and 135–40 (HB 4566); "Bush Campaign Names Edgar as State Chief," CT, 15 May 2004; Mark Samuels, "Classic Matchup," SI, 16 May 2004; Ron Ingram, "Democratic U.S. Senate Candidate Obama Speaks in Decatur to Trade Group," DHR, 16 May 2004; "Illinois Senate Primary Victors Prepare for November," RC, 17 May 2004; OFI, "On 50th Anniversary of Landmark Decision, Obama Proposes Adding 25,000 Teachers to High-Need Schools," 17 May 2004; "Obama Wants 25,000 New Teachers for High-Need Schools," CD, 18 May 2004, p. 2; Kristen McQueary, "Poll: Obama Ahead of Ryan by 8 Points in Senate Race," CST, 18 May 2004, p. 4; ObamaBlog.com, 18, 19, and 20 May 2004; HB 2268, 19 February 2003; Routt v. Barrett, 396 Ill. 322, 337 (22 January 1947); HB 2268, Senate Committee Amendment No. 1, 24 April 2003; Obama remarks to AFL-CIO Civil, Human and Women's Rights Conference, YouTube, 2003 (the exact date is uncertain and remains unconfirmed); Joe Ruklick, "Obama Holding Slight Lead in Democratic Senate Nomination Race," CD, 8 March 2004, p. 4; HB 2268, Senate Floor Amendment No. 2, 11 May 2004; Senate Floor Transcript, 12 May 2004, p. 67; HB 2268, Senate Floor Amendment No. 4, 13 May 2004; Senate Floor Transcript, 19 May 2004, pp. 31–49 (HB 2268, PA 93-0973, 20 August 2004) and 64 (Obama introduces SR 565); Rodney Hart, "Candidate Prefers Campaign with Personal Touch," QHW, 20 May 2004, p. A9; "Health Care Study," SJR, 21 May 2004, p. 10; OFI, "Obama Celebrates Passage of Illinois Citizen Soldier Initiative," 28 May 2004; Hisey, "Center Stage," Occidental Magazine, Fall 2004, pp. 24–29; "Oprah Talks to Barack Obama," O Magazine, November 2004; Scott Helman, "In Illinois, Obama Dealt with Lobbyists," BG, 23 September 2007; Jonathan Cohn, "Obama's Clean Bill of Health," TNR, 30 January 2008, pp. 15–17; Amy Goodman, "Dr. Quentin Young, Longtime Obama Confidante," DemocracyNow.org, 11 March 2009; Angie Drobnic Holan, "Obama Statements on Single-Payer Have Changed a Bit," Politifact.com, 16 July 2009; Michael D. Shear and Ceci Connolly, "In Illinois, a Similar Fight Tested a Future President," WP, 9 September 2009; William Finnegan, "One Year: Dreams from Another Life," New Yorker, 20 January 2010; John Heilemann and Mark Halperin, Game Change (HarperCollins, 2010), pp. 13–14; McClelland, Young Mr. Obama, pp. 222–25; Beverly Helm-Renfro's 2010 interview with Mark DePue, p. 63; Jim Edgar's 2010 interviews with DePue, pp. 1052–53; Dean Olsen, "Seeds of Federal Health Care Law Were Planted in Illinois Senate," SJR, 15 July 2012; Debra Pressey, “Duffett Leaving After Three Decades with Health Care Campaign,” CNG, 12 June 2014; DJG interviews with Dan Shomon, Jim Rea, Glenn Hodas, Jeremy Flynn, Jim Duffett, Quentin Young, John Bouman, Willie Delgado, Phil Lackman, Dale Righter, Howard Peters, Nia Odeoti-Hassan, Mattie Hunter, Miguel del Valle, Denny Jacobs, Dave Syverson, Christine Radogno, Mark Warnsing, John Cameron, William McNary, Doug Dobmeyer, and Kurt DeWeese. The Adequate Health Care Task Force’s 26 January 2007 report is available at www.idph.state.il.us/hcja/index.htm. On Dr. David Scheiner, who felt Barack was “not someone I could get to know,” see David Whelan, “Obama’s Doctor Knocks ObamaCare,” Forbes, 18 June 2009, Mike Dorning, “Obama’s Doctor Says President’s Health-Care Reform Plans Are Too Timid,” CT, 29 July 2009, Sam Stein, “Obama’s Doctor: President’s Vision for Health Care Bound to Fail,” HuffingtonPost.com, 29 July 2009, Kennedy Elliott, “Dr. Scheiner,” Medill Reports, 9 December 2009, and Carol Felsenthal, “Obama’s Former Doc on the President . . .,” CM, 25 May 2012.

74. David Axelrod to Team Obama, “Message: Yes We Can!,” n.d. [ca. 22 May 2004], 6pp., JKP; Axelrod, Believer, p. 162; Channel 7 ABC TV, 20 May 2004, MBC; Ray Long, “Shadow Keeps Eye on Obama,” CT, 21 May 2004; Dave McKinney, “Obama Admits He Dislikes His Most Loyal Follower,” CST, 21 May 2004, p. 8; John Patterson and Sara Hooker, “Obama Takes Political Stalker in Stride,” CDH, 21 May 2004, p. 15; Doug Finke and Mary Massingale, “Ryan’s Cameras Bugging Obama,” SJR, 21 May 2004, p. 1; Kevin McDermott, “Ryan Has Cameraman Tailing Obama,” SLPD, 21 May 2004, p. B2; CF, 21, 25, and 26 May 2004; OFI, “Obama Calls on Senate to Pass Law Allowing Prescription Drug Re-Importation,” 21 May 2004; ObamaBlog.com, 21, 23, 24, 25, and 27 May 2004; “On the Street,” QHW, 23 May 2004, p. A9; David Mendell, “Ryan Aide to Give Obama More Space,” CT, 23 May 2004; Amy Taylor, “Obama Inspires Local Democrat Rally,” JHN, 23 May 2004; “Jack Ryan Should Know Better,” SJR, 23 May 2004, p. 26; “Ryan Takes Campaign to New Low,” CST, 24 May 2004, p. 41; James Kuhnhenh, “With Seven Retirements, Control of Senate Is at Stake in Election,” PI, 24 May 2004, p. A2; Bruce DuMont, Illinois Lawmakers, WTTW, 26 May 2004; Gary Washburn and Christi Parsons, “Burke Asks Ban on Video Stalking,” CT, 27 May 2004; Senate Floor Transcript, 30 May 2004, p. 7 (Obama introduces SJR 84); Bernard Schoenburg, “Jack Ryan’s Staffers May Be a Little Too ‘Passionate,’” SJR, 3 June 2004, p. 7; Peter Savodnik, “LaHood Rips Ryan over Senate Race,” TH, 8 June 2004; Dori Meinert, “LaHood Blasts Ryan’s ‘Bonehead Campaign,’” SJR, 9 June 2004, p. 14; Beverly Helm-Renfro’s 2010 interview with DePue, p. 75; Baim, Obama and the Gays, p. 27; DJG interviews with John Sullivan, Beverly Helm-Renfro, Dale Righter, Frank Watson, Phil Lackman, Jim Dodge, Dan Cronin, Jeff Schoenberg, Pat Welch, Boro Reljic, Jim Collins, Debbie Halvorson, John Kelly, and Glenn Hodas.

75. CF, 25, 28, and 31 May 2004, 1, 2, 4, 9, 10, 11, and 14 June 2004, and 27 November 2012; Senate Floor Transcript, 31 May 2004, p. 99 (HB 2721, 32–26) and 100 (HB 864); Christi Parsons and Ray Long, “11th-Hour Budget Push Seeks Malpractice Deal,” CT, 31 May 2004; Long and Parsons, “Democrats Stalemated Over Budget,” CT, 1 June 2004; Rick Pearson and Long, “3 Kings’ Egos Entangle Budget,” CT, 2 June 2004; Doug Finke, “Assembly Heads Home; Negotiators Will Call Them Back When Budget Is Reached,” SJR, 2 June 2004, p. 1; Ryan Keith, “Obama Walks Fine Line with Legislative Votes in U.S. Senate Race,” AP, 13 June 2004; Pat Guinane, “Under Lock and Key,” II, September 2004; Ed Murnane, “Senator Obama: Quite a Contrast with Senator Durbin,” MCR, 20 February 2005; Paul Merrion, “Obama’s Star Rating,” CCB, 22 January 2007, p. 3; Jeff Coen and John Chase, Golden (Chicago Review Press, 2012), pp. 148, 150; Noam Scheiber, "Race Against History—Barack Obama's Miraculous Campaign," TNR, 31 May 2004, pp. 21–26; Marc Solomon, Winning Marriage (ForeEdge, 2014), pp. 269–71; DJG interviews with Emil Jones Jr., Debbie Halvorson, Pat Welch, Jeff Schoenberg, Glenn Poshard, Dave Gross, Jill Rock, Frank Watson, Dale Righter, Dan Cronin, Jim Dodge, Phil Lackman, Jim Cauley, David Wilhelm, Scott Kennedy, Deanne Benos, Peter Coffey, Darrel Thompson, Kevin Thompson, David LeBreton, Nate Tamarin, Dan Shomon, Nora Moreno Cargie, Tarak Shah, Kaleshia Page, Liz Drew, Claire Serdiuk, Clinton Latimore Jr., Jeremiah Posedel, Andrew Boron, Laura Russell Hunter, Joe McLean, and Susan Shadow Ransone.

76. ObamaBlog.com, 31 May and 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 13 June 2004; NationalJournal.com, 21–24 May 2004; John Chase, "Obama Gets Early Boost from Voters," CT, 31 May 2004; Lauren W. Whittington, "Illinois: Democratic Heavies to Fete Obama in N.Y., D.C.," RC, 3 June 2004; Ted McClelland, "The Obama Juice," CR, 4 June 2004; Bob Herbert, "A Leap of Faith," NYT, 4 June 2004; Liam Ford and David Mendell, "Keep Ryan Records Closed, Court Referee Says," CT, 4 June 2004; Chase, "Cheney Goes to Bat for Ryan," CT, 5 June 2004; OFI, "Obama Unveils Energy Independence Plan for Illinois," 6 June 2004; Obama to Jack Ryan, 13 June 2004, ObamaBlog.com; OFI, "Obama Proposes Series of Debates," 13 June 2004; Mendell, "Obama, Ryan Debate About Debates," CT, 14 June 2004; "Hellenes for Obama," 14 June 2004, SPP; Ford and Mendell, "Ryan Calls 6 Debates and Raises by 4," CT, 15 June 2004; Bernard Schoenburg, "Jack Ryan Blasts Obama on Universal Health Care," SJR, 15 June 2004, p. 10; OFI, "Obama Joins Bi-Partisan Lawmakers in Calling for Passage of Stem Cell Research Bill," 16 June 2004; John Kupper daybook entries, June 2004, [Paul Harstad], "Focus Group Outline," 16 June 2004, JKP; "General Election Focus Group, Women," and "General Election Focus Group, Men," 16 June 2004, PHP; Harstad and Mike Kulisheck to Obama for Senate Campaign, "Participant Ratings from Two June 16, 2004 Focus Groups in Peoria, Illinois," 9pp., and "Summary of Key Findings," JKP; Todd Spivak, "Little Big Man," IT, 17 June 2004; OFI, "Illinois AFL-CIO Endorses Barack Obama for Senate," and "Associated Fire Fighters of Illinois Endorses Barack Obama for Senate," 17 June 2004; Gregg Walker, "Reminiscing—Obama in Manhattan—June [8] 2004," ManhattanViewpoint.blogspot.com, 4 November 2008; DJG interviews with Joe Sinsheimer, John Kupper, Paul Harstad, and Mike Kulisheck.

77. Liam Ford and David Mendell, "Keep Ryan Records Closed, Court Referee Says," CT, 4 June 2004; Ford and Mendell, "Ryan Calls 6 Debates and Raises by 4," CT, 15 June 2004; "Judge to Decide Fate of Sealed Docs, Conservatives Brace for Worst," IL, 17 June 2004; Michael Martinez and Rick Pearson, "Court Sets Release of Ryan's Divorce File," CT, 18 June 2004; Ford and Pearson, "Ryan Won't Appeal Ruling on Files," CT, 19 June 2004; "Declaration of Jeri Lynn Ryan," 9 June 2000, pp. 21–23, "Declaration of John C. Ryan," n.d., p. 17, and "Declaration of Sharon Zimmerman," n.d., In re Marriage of Ryan, Los Angeles Superior Court #BD 290 382; John Chase and Ford, "Ryan File a Bombshell—Ex-Wife Alleges GOP Candidate Took Her to Sex Clubs," and Eric Zorn, "Ryan's Effort to 'Protect' Son Was Self-Serving," CT, 22 June 2004; Scott Fornek and Dave McKinney, "Ex-Wife Says Ryan Took Her to Sex Clubs," CST, 22 June 2004, p. 6; Eric Krol, "Ryan Denies Sex Club Claim," CDH, 22 June 2004, p. 1; Mike Ramsey, "Ryan Denies Ex-Wife's Claims," SJR, 22 June 2004, p. 1; Al Swanson, "Analysis: Embarrassment or Sex Scandal?" UPI, 22 June 2004; CF, 22, 23 (2), 24 (2), and 25 June 2004; OFI, "Obama Says Companies Creating Jobs in American Should Be Rewarded with Tax Cuts, 21 June 2004;

ObamaBlog.com, 21, 22, and 23 June 2004; Andrea Zimmerman, "Obama Offers Plan to Improve Climate for Workers," AT, 22 June 2004; Jeff Smyth, "Democrats Rally for Obama," SI, 22 June 2004; "Obama Rallies for Election at SIU," DE, 22 June 2004; Lauren W. Whittington, "Republicans Quiet on Ryan—For Now," RC, 23 June 2004; Pearson and Ford, "GOP Leaders Say They Felt Misled on Ryan File," Carol Marin, "Ryan's Trouble with the Truth," and "Sex, Lies and Politics," CT, 23 June 2004; Fornek and McKinney, "Ryan Insists He Has No Plans to Withdraw from Senate Race," and "Time for Ryan to Hit the Road," CST, 23 June 2004, pp. 6, 53; Krol, "GOP Mostly Silent on Ryan," CDH, 23 June 2004, p. 1; Bernard Schoenburg, "Ryan Still Running," SJR, 23 June 2004, p. 1; Stephen Kinzer, "Illinois Senate Campaign Thrown into Prurient Turmoil," NYT, 23 June 2004; Dan Balz, "GOP Nominee Fights Calls to Exit Contest," WP, 23 June 2004; Jennifer DeWitt, "Obama Plan Would Reward Firms for Creating U.S. Jobs," and "Obama Says He Wants to Keep Focus on Real Issues," QCT, 23 June 2004; Chuck Sweeny, "Tax Breaks, Creating Jobs Focus for Obama," RRS, 23 June 2004; USAT, 23 June 2004, p. A7; Todd Spivak, "Ryan's Hope," IT, 24 June 2004; David Mendell, "Obama Lets Opponent Do Talking," and John Kass, "Ryan Should Quit Senate Race That He Lost Long Ago," CT, 24 June 2004; Fornek, "Republicans Band Together Against Ryan," CST, 24 June 2004, p. 3; Krol, "Ryan Event Canceled When Hastert Bails Out," CDH, 24 June 2004, p. 1; Schoenburg, "Obama Reaps Benefits from Jack Ryan's Troubles," SJR, 24 June 2004, p. 7; Kevin McDermott and Joel Currier, "Illinois GOP Committee Is Divided on Ryan's Future," SLPD, 24 June 2004; "Ryan Should Step Down from U.S. Senate Race," BP, 24 June 2004, p. A10; Caroline Daniel, "Political Rookie Traverses the Ethnic Divide," FT, 24 June 2004, p. 8; Jill Stanek, "Lies and Sex Clubs," IL, 24 June 2004; "2004 Campaign Polling: Illinois Senate," NationalJournal.com, 24 June 2004; Pearson and Rudolph Bush, "With Successor in Mind, GOP Plots Ryan's Exit," and Blair Hull, "Press Hijacks Senate Race Again," CT, 25 June 2004; Lynn Sweet and Scott Fornek, "GOP Lawmakers Agree Ryan Must Go," and Sweet, "Fitzgerald Steps Up as Party Leaders Ditch Ryan," CST, 25 June 2004, p. 6; Krol, "Ryan Gets the Cold Shoulder from GOP," and "Jack Ryan Made His Choice, Now Is Living with It," CDH, 25 June 2004, pp. 1, 14; Dori Meinert, "Republicans Question Ryan's Future," SJR, 25 June 2004, p. 13; E. J. Dionne, "In Illinois, a Star Prepares," WP, 25 June 2004; "Ryan: Some Ears Didn't Want to Listen," IL, 25 June 2004; Ford and Bush, "Ryan Quits Race," and "Jack Ryan's Painful Exit," CT, 26 June 2004; Fornek and Stephanie Zimmerman, "Sex Scandal Drives Ryan from Race," and Rich Miller, "Ryan Just Couldn't Tell the Truth," CST, 26 June 2004, pp. 4, 12; Krol, "Top Prospects Won't Take Ryan's Place," CDH, 26 June 2004, p. 1; Stephen Kinzer, "Candidate, Under Pressure, Quits Senate Race in Illinois," NYT, 26 June 2004; Chase, "Shaken Again, GOP Forced to Control Damage," and Pearson, "Ryan's Ruin," CT, 27 June 2004; Fornek, "Ryan's Final Campaign Meeting," and McKinney, "GOP Replacement Likely in 3 Weeks," CST, 27 June 2004, p. 3; Mark Brown, "It's Never Too Late to Say 'I Told You So,'" CST, 28 June 2004, p. 2; Christopher Hayes, "Original Sin," TNR, 29 June 2004; Clarence Page, "The 'No-Sex' Sex Scandal," CT, 30 June 2004; Patrick Rucker, "Senator Blasts GOP on Ryan Exit," and Zorn, "Rising Stars Probably Won't Take On Obama," CT, 1 July 2004; Mike Ramsey, "Fitzgerald Criticizes Ryan Replacement Process," SJR, 1 July 2004, p. 9; CF, 1 July 2004; Pearson and Long, "Gidwitz Rejects a Senate Bid," CT, 2 July 2004; Pearson, "Candidates Line Up to Replace Ryan," CT, 3 July 2004; Aricka Flowers, "What Ever Happened to the Republican Party in Illinois?," Chicago Life, November 2004; Robert Feder, "All Good News for Media Mogul Ryan," RobertFeder.com, 12 December 2013; Michael Miner, "Former Senate Hopeful Jack Ryan Is Back in Politics—As a Publisher,” CR, 25 November 2014; Jim Edgar’s 2010 interviews with Mark DePue, pp. 1053–54; Heilemann and Halperin, Game Change, pp. 20–21; DJG interviews with Terry Walsh, Peter Coffey, Glenn Hodas, Jim Edgar, Kirk Dillard, Steve Rauschenberger, Dan Cronin, and Peter Fitzgerald.

78. OFI, “Obama Statement on Jack Ryan’s Decision to Withdraw from U.S. Senate Race,” 25 June 2004; Eric Krol, “Facing ‘Brutal’ Campaign, Ryan Quits,” CDH, 26 June 2004, p. 1; Bernard Schoenburg, “Ryan Out of the Running,” SJR, 26 June 2004, p. 1; Amanda Fuchs to Obama Team, “Policy Development Schedule,” 24 June 2004, JKP; Obama, “Democratic Response to the President’s Weekly Radio Address,” 26 June 2004; OFI, “In Radio Address, Obama Says Middle Class Being Squeezed,” 26 June 2004; AP, “Democrat Economy Squeezing Middle Class,” 26 June 2004; Stefan C. Friedman, “Dems Boost Rising Black Star,” NYP, 27 June 2004, p. 13; Krista Lewin, “Obama Brings Husband’s Campaign to Coles County,” MJG and CTC, 28 June 2004, p. A1; “Fundraiser for Barack Obama,” DL21C-Chicago.org, Summer 2004 (28 June); Jodi Wilgoren, “Who Will Give the Dems’ Keynote? Kerry Lets a Hint Slip,” NYT, 29 June 2004, 5:27 P.M.; “Ba-Rock the House Party for Barack Obama,” www.sebby.org, 29 June 2004; OFI, “More Than 3,000 Gather to Raise $75,000-Plus for Barack Obama at House Parties Across Illinois,” 29 June 2004; “In the Law Firms,” CDLB, 29 June 2004, p. 3; Obama to “Dear Table Tennis Friends,” 30 June 2004; OFI, FEC Form 3, Report of Receipts and Disbursements, 1 April–30 June 2004, 14 July 2004; Friends of Barack Obama, Report of Campaign Contributions and Expenses, 1 January–30 June 2004, 2 August 2004; Senate Floor Transcript, 30 June 2004, p. 1 (3rd Day of 5th Special Session); Senate Floor Transcript, 2 July 2004, p. 1 (1st Day of 6th Special Session); OFI, “Obama Statement Commemorating 40th Anniversary of the Signing of the Civil Rights Act of 1964,” 2 July 2004; “Obama in Diner,” 2 July 2004, Carlinville, IL, JKP and TPP; OFI, “Obama Statement on Independence Day Weekend,” 4 July 2004; Douglas Waller, “Dreaming About the Senate,” Time, 5 July 2004, pp. 34–35; CF, 6 July 2004; OFI, “Obama Raises $4 Million in Three Months,” 6 July 2004; David Mendell, “Fundraising Has Set Record, Obama Says,” CT, 7 July 2004; OFI, “Obama’s Retirement Security Plan,” 7 July 2004; John Froehling, “Obama Brings Positive Campaign to Canton,” CDL, 8 July 2004, pp. 1, 12; Paul Merrion, “Obama Lead Brings Bucks from Biz PACs,” CCB, 12 July 2004, p. 3; Peronet Despeignes, “Dem Star Taking Convention Debut in Stride,” USAT, 27 July 2004; “Oprah Talks to Barack Obama,” O Magazine, November 2004; Obama, TAOH, p. 354; Mike Dorning and Christi Parsons, “Inside Obama’s Inner Circle,” CT, 14 January 2007; David Bernstein, “The Speech,” CM, June 2007; Shira Schoenberg, “17 Minutes to Stardom,” Concord Monitor, 6 December 2007; James Pitkin, “Obama Girl,” Willamette Week, 12 March 2008; John McCormick, “1-on-1 with Obama,” CT, 23 August 2008; James A. Barnes, “Word of Mouth Fueled Obama’s Star Turn,” NJ, 25 August 2008; Eli Saslow, “The 17 Minutes That Launched a Political Star,” WP, 25 August 2008; Dayo Olopade, “Barack’s Big Night,” TNR, 25 August 2008; Bernard Schoenburg, “Obama’s Meteoric Rise Hard to Predict 5 Years Ago,” SJR, 6 November 2008; Remnick, The Bridge, p. 386; Mary Frances Berry and Josh Gottheimer, eds., Power in Words (Beacon Press, 2010), p. 11; Heilemann and Halperin, Game Change, pp. 20–21; Axelrod’s 2008 interview with Jim Gilmore; Cahill’s and Axelrod’s 2009 interviews with Robert Draper; Corrigan’s 2013 interview with Daniel Urman; DJG interviews with Amanda Fuchs Miller, Darrel Thompson, Claire Serdiuk, Jim Cauley, Peter Coffey, Juleigh Nowinski, Pete Giangreco, Jack Corrigan, Lisa Hay, Mary Beth Cahill, Josh Gottheimer, Vicky Rideout, John Kupper, Jill Rock, Matt

Jones, and Terrie Pickerill.

79. Peter Savodnik, "Ill. GOPers Question Party's Senate Plans," TH, 7 July 2004, p. 12; "Our View," JHN, 7 July 2004; "Groups Want Ryan Back in Illinois Race," WT, 8 July 2004; Rick Pearson, "GOP Told Thanks, but No Thanks," CT, 9 July 2004; Bernard Schoenburg, "Rauschenburger Won't Run," SJR, 9 July 2004, p. 1; Kevin McDermott, "Field for Republican Replacement Is Wide Open," SLPD, 11 July 2004, p. B1; Pearson, "Ditka Tells GOP He's Game," CT, 13 July 2004; "The GOP's Hail Mary Play?," and John Kass, "Ditka Doesn't Have Makeup to Be Senator," CT, 14 July 2004; Pearson and John Chase, "Ditka Punts on Possible GOP Run for U.S. Senate," CT, 15 July 2004; Mike Ramsey, "Ditka Won't Run for Senate," SJR, 15 July 2004, p. 1; Stephen Kinzer, "Ex-Coach Won't Run for Senate," NYT, 15 July 2004; Pearson and Rudolph Bush, "Deflated GOP Goes Back to Its Search," CT, 16 July 2004; Rahul Sangwan, "Jack Ryan '81: The Conservative Idealist," Dartmouth Independent, 1 October 2004; Aricka Flowers, "What Ever Happened to the Republican Party in Illinois?," Chicago Life, November 2004; Ann Dalrymple, "Ditka Impressed with Ambition of the Bakken," Dickinson Press, 3 October 2013; Obama, Speech to the Chicago Council on Foreign Relations, 12 July 2004; OFI, "Obama Calls for Renewal of American Leadership in the World," 12 July 2004; David Mendell, "Running as If He's Got a Rival," CT, 13 July 2004; Eric Krol, "Obama Favors Keeping Troops in Iraq," CDH, 13 July 2004, p. 6; Patrick Healy, "Kerry Hones Campaign Themes," BG, 13 July 2004, p. A3; Axelrod e-mail to Kupper, 13 July 2004, JKP; Kerry-Edwards campaign press release, "Barack Obama to Deliver Keynote Address at 2004 Democratic National Convention," 14 July 2004; Healy, "Kerry Takes Steps to Attract African-American Voters," BG, 15 July 2004, p. A3; Jill Zuckman and Mendell, "Obama to Give Keynote Address," CT, 15 July 2004; Scott Fornek, "Obama to Keynote Dem Convention," CST, 15 July 2004, p. 3; Krol, "Convention Spotlight to Shine on Obama," CDH, 15 July 2004, p. 15; Bill Lambrecht, "Democrats Give Obama Keynote Slot at Convention," SLPD, 15 July 2004, p. A4; Lei-Ling Hopgood, "Obama the Democrats' Next Big Thing," Cox News Service, 15 July 2004; Jeremy Berkowitz, "Obama to Give Keynote in Boston," TH, 15 July 2004; Obama on Today, NBC, 15 July 2004; "Obama Heads for the Convention," Economist, 17 July 2004, p. 32; Shira Schoenberg, "17 Minutes to Stardom," Concord Monitor, 6 December 2007; Eli Saslow, "The 17 Minutes That Launched a Political Star," WP, 25 August 2008; Axelrod's 2008 interview with Jim Gilmore; Axelrod's 2009 interview with Robert Draper; Remnick, The Bridge, pp. 393–94; Berry and Gottheimer, Power in Words, p. 12; Axelrod, Believer, pp. 156–57; DJG interviews with Steve Rauschenburger, Dave Sullivan, Dale Righter, Dan Cronin, Glenn Hodas, John Nicolay, Claire Serdiuk, John Kupper, Jim Cauley, Darrel Thompson, and Vicky Rideout.

80. CF, 28 April 2003 and 7, 8, 9, 16, 20, 21, 23, and 26 July 2004, Dave McKinney and Chris Fusco, "Madigan: Fire Hospital Board," CST, 30 June 2004, p. 10; Eric Herman, "Businessman Looking to Sell Chain of Pizza Places," CST, 16 July 2004, p. 55; Ray Gibson and Crystal Yednak, "Blagojevich Adviser Tied to Appointee," CT, 18 July 2004; Kirk Dillard, At Issue, Newsradio 780 WBBM, 18 July 2004, JKP; Obama, Public Affairs with Jeff Berkowitz, 18 July 2004; Rick Pearson, "Hinsdale Legislator May Face Obama," CT, 19 July 2004; "Obama on the Right Track," HPH, 21 July 2004, p. 4; Carol Marin, "Illinois Republicans May Deserve Spanky the Clown," CT, 21 July 2004; Scott Fornek, "Dillard Says He Can Beat Obama," CST, 21 July 2004, p. 11; "Chase the Guy with the Ball," NYT, 21 July 2004; John Chase and Liam Ford, "Does Anyone Want This Job?," CT, 22 July 2004; OFI, "Barack Obama Statement on the 9/11 Commission Report," 23 July 2004; Peronet Despeignes, "Dem Star Taking Convention Debut in Stride, USAT, 27 July 2004, p. 6A; Christopher Wills, “Rising Democratic Star Readies for His Moment in Lights,” AP, 23 July 2004; Ron Staton, “Illinois Senate Candidate Says Lucky to Have Been Raised in Hawaii,” AP, 24 July 2004; Ray Long and Christi Parsons, “8 Weeks Late, Lawmakers OK $46 Billion Plan,” CT, 25 July 2004; Bernard Schoenburg, “Obama’s Children Have More Important Things in Mind,” SJR, 25 July 2004, p. 15; Pearson, “Party Unity,” CT, 26 July 2004; Stephen S. Morrill, “Client Report for 2004 End of Session,” esp. pp. 5, 15, Morrill & Associates, July 2004; “Major Bills Passed by the Illinois General Assembly,” LRU First Reading, September 2004; C-WR 19 #7, 5 October 2004; Eric Krol, “Obama Tries to Keep Cool as Star Rises,” CDH, 27 July 2004, p. 1; Jo Mannies, “Charming, Brainy Obama Creates Party Sensation,” SLPD, 27 July 2004, p. A1; Mark Leibovich, “The Other Man of the Hour,” WP, 27 July 2004; John Patterson, “What’s Changed for Obama in the Last Two Years,” CDH, 27 July 2006, p. 7; Obama, TAOH, p. 357; David Bernstein, “The Speech,” CM, June 2007; Eli Saslow, “The 17 Minutes That Launched a Political Star,” WP, 25 August 2008; Jeff Zeleny, “Former Outsider Navigated a Path to the Marquee,” NYT, 27 August 2008; Obama, Meet the Press, NBC, 25 July 2004; Obama, Face the Nation, CBS, 25 July 2004; Obama, World News Tonight, ABC, 25 July 2004; Obama, Late Edition, CNN, 25 July 2004; Jim Edgar’s 2010 interviews with Mark DePue, p. 1054; DJG interviews with Kirk Dillard, Vicky Rideout, Jeff Schoenberg, Tom Lindenfeld, Jim Cauley, David LeBreton, and Adam Stolorow.

81. David Mendell, “Political Phenomenon Obama Vaults into National Spotlight,” CT, 26 July 2004; Christopher Wills, “Obama Riding Wave to Keynote Speech and Star Status,” AP, 26 July 2004; Scott Fornek, “Former Obama Adversaries Look on Without Regret,” CST, 27 July 2004, p. 6; Eric Krol, “Obama Tries to Keep Cool as Star Rises,” CDH, 27 July 2004, p. 1; “Let Barack Obama Be the Next Barack Obama,” CD, 27 July 2004, p. 9; John Kass, “Obama’s a Star Who Doesn’t Stick to the Script,” and Mendell and Jeff Zeleny, “Obama Says War to Decide Election,” CT, 27 July 2004; “Convention Speaker Says Hawaii Shaped His Life,” HA, 27 July 2004; Bernard Schoenburg, “Obama Fights Image of Stardom,” SJR, 27 July 2004, p. 1; Susan Milligan, “In Obama, Democrats See Their Future,” BG, 27 July 2004; Carl Chancellor, “A Rising Star Gets a Key Role Tonight,” PI, 27 July 2004; P. J. Huffstutter, “Obama Making a Name for Himself,” LAT, 27 July 2004; Lisa Ellman, “The Audacity of Hope,” UCLSR, Fall 2004, pp. 20–21; Shawn McCarthy, “Minorities Looking for Gains in Battle for the Presidency,” G&M, 27 July 2004, p. A3; Julian Borger, “Rising Star to Woo Voters with Upbeat Keynote Speech,” Guardian, 27 July 2004, p. 10; Rupert Cornwell, “An Unknown Rookie, but Can Obama Be First Black President?,” Independent, 27 July 2004; Mary Carey, “Local Eyes Look at National Figures, Up Close,” Daily Hampshire Gazette, 27 July 2004; Obama on Good Morning America, ABC, 27 July 2004, on Today, NBC, 27 July 2004, on The Early Show, CBS, 27 July 2004, and on American Morning, CNN, 27 July 2004; “Rising Star,” PBS NewsHour, 27 July 2004; Obama on All Things Considered, NPR, 27 July 2004; Mendell, “Obama Finding Himself Flush with Media Attention,” CT, 28 July 2004; Scott Fornek, “Obama Delivers,” CST, 28 July 2004, p. 1; Amanda Griscom, “Barack Star,” Grist.com, 4 August 2004 (and Salon, 6 August 2004); Peter Newbould, “Boston Journal: An Inside Look at the 2004 Democratic National Convention,” AAP Advance, Fall 2004, pp. 1, 12; Obama, TAOH, pp. 358–59; Eric Krol and John Patterson, “Obama: The Path to Today,” CDH, 10 February 2007, p. 1; David Bernstein, “The Speech,” CM, June 2007; Favreau in Ashley Parker, “What Would Obama Say?,” NYT, 20 January 2008; Nesbitt in Todd Purdum, “Raising Obama,” Vanity Fair, March 2008, in Ryan Lizza, “Making It,” TNY, 21

July 2008, and on “Barack Obama Revealed,” CNN, 20 August 2008; Eli Saslow, “The 17 Minutes That Launched a Political Star,” WP, 25 August 2008; Saslow, “Helping to Write History,” WP, 18 December 2008; Favreau in Charles P. Pierce, “The Speechwriter in Chief,” BG Magazine, 21 December 2008; Daren Briscoe, “An Interview with Barack Obama,” Newsweek, 8 January 2009 (recorded ca. 18 May 2008); Remnick, The Bridge, p. 395; Berry and Gottheimer, Power in Words, p. 13; Obama, “Remarks,” 11 February 2011, Public Papers of the Presidents 2011 Vol. 1, p. 104; Axelrod, Believer, p. 158; Elizabeth Segrin, “Obama’s Former Law Student Is Shaping the Nation’s Policy on Drones,” Fortune, 4 February 2015; Marty Nesbitt’s 2009 interview with Robert Draper; DJG interviews with Michael Sheehan, Vicky Rideout, Josh Gottheimer, Jim Cauley, Lisa Ellman, Joe McLean, Kitty Kurth, and Raja Krishnamoorthi.

82. Obama, DNC Keynote Address, C-Span Video, 27 July 2004; Hardball with Chris Matthews, MSNBC, 27 July 2004, 10 P.M.; Gwen Ifill, “Rising Star,” PBS NewsHour, 27 July 2004; David S. Broder, “Democrats Focus on Healing Divisions,” WP, 28 July 2004; Katharine Q. Seelye, “Senate Nominee Speaks of Encompassing Unity,” NYT, 28 July 2004; Michael Tackett, “Old, New Guards Rebuke Bush for Drive to War,” CT, 28 July 2004; Mary Mitchell, “Obama Embodies the Hopes of the People,” CST, 28 July 2004, p. 7; Eric Krol and John Patterson, “Obama Shares His ‘American Story,’” and Judy Baar Topinka, “Beyond the Glare of the Spotlight, Obama Facts Tell Different Story,” CDH, 28 July 2004, pp. 1, 16; Bernard Schoenburg, “Preaching Hope: Delegates Cheer Obama’s Keynote Address,” SJR, 28 July 2004, p. 1; Robert Bianco, “What Happened to Conventional Wisdom?,” USAT, 28 July 2004; Brent Baker, “MSNBC and CNN Lionize ‘Rock Star’ Obama, See a Future President,” Media Research Center, 28 July 2004; Scott Fornek, “Obama Has Arrived, Illinois Dems Say,” CST, 29 July 2004, p. 7; Michele Steinbacher, “ISU Student Trustee Working for Obama,” BP, 29 July 2004; Mike Thomas, “What’s Behind Barack’s Celebrity?,” CST, 9 August 2004, p. 44; George Vradenburg, “Here’s to the Skinny Kid with the Funny Name,” Tikkun, September–October 2004, p. 6; Senate Floor Transcript, 8 November 2004, p. 12; Obama on Today, NBC, 19 October 2006; Jones in Terry McDermott, “What Is It About Obama?,” LAT, 24 December 2006; Krol, “Practice and Passion: How Obama Went from ‘Uh, Uh’ to a Polished Speaker,” CDH, 25 February 2007, p. 1; Fornek, “Madelyn Payne Dunham,” CST, 9 September 2007; Scott Helman, “Early Defeat Launched a Rapid Political Climb,” BG, 12 October 2007; Eli Saslow, “The 17 Minutes That Launched a Political Star,” WP, 25 August 2008; Niall Stanage, Redemption Song (Liberties Press, 2009), p. 23; Presta, Mr. and Mrs. Grassroots, p. 182; Remnick, The Bridge, p. 401; Axelrod’s 2009 interview with Robert Draper; DJG interviews with Vicky Rideout, Mary Beth Cahill, Tom Lindenfeld, Terry Link, Darrel Thompson, Jeff Schoenberg, Emil Jones Jr., Forrest Claypool, Kitty Kurth, Andy Schapiro, Dan Hynes, Jim Cauley, Josh Gottheimer, Randon Gardley, Nate Tamarin, Dan Shomon, Carolyn Shapiro, Adam Sherman, Paul Anderson, Pern Beckman, Barry Rutizer, and James Clayborne. By far the best academic discussion of the speech is Robert C. Rowland and John M. Jones’s “Recasting the American Dream and American Politics: Barack Obama’s Keynote Address to the 2004 Democratic National Convention,” Quarterly Journal of Speech 93 (November 2007): 425–48, which notes that “in many ways the message was quite unremarkable” (433) and, like Chris Matthews, how Barack had emphasized the need for “personal responsibility values” (439). See also David A. Frank and Mark Lawrence McPhail’s truly awful “Barack Obama’s Address to the 2004 Democratic National Convention: Trauma, Compromise, Consilience, and the (Im)Possibility of Racial Reconciliation,” Rhetoric & Public Affairs 8 (Winter 2005): 571–99, which states that a speech by Al Sharpton was “far superior to Obama’s” (585), Babak Elahi and Grant Cos, “An Immigrant’s Dream and the Audacity of Hope,” American Behavioral Scientist 49 (November 2005): 454–65, and Deborah F. Atwater, “Senator Barack Obama: The Rhetoric of Hope and the American Dream,” Journal of Black Studies 38 (November 2007): 121–29.

83. “The Phenom,” CT, 28 July 2004; Bill Nichols, “Second Night’s Speakers Stoke the Party Fires,” USAT, 28 July 2004, p. 4A; Salim Muwakkil, “Barack Obama Made Smashing National Debut,” Progressive, 28 July 2004; Obama on NBC Nightly News, 28 July 2004; Randal C. Archibold, “Day After, Keynote Speaker Finds Admirers Everywhere,” and Monica Davey, “In a Star’s Shadow, Republicans Strain to Find Opponent,” NYT, 29 July 2004; Richard Benedetto, “Address Throws Illinois’ Obama into Whirlwind of Political Hope,” USAT, 29 July 2004, p. 6A; Mark Jurkowitz, “With One Speech, Neophyte’s Political Stock Soars,” BG, 29 July 2004; Jeremy Dauber, “A Star Is Born,” CSM, 29 July 2004; Rick Pearson and David Mendell, “Democrats: We’ve Got a Winner in Obama,” CT, 29 July 2004; Mary Mitchell, “Democrats Need More Than Speech from Obama,” CST, 29 July 2004, p. 7; Bernard Schoenburg, “Illinois Delegates Foresee Bright Future for Obama,” SJR, 29 July 2004, p. 1; Michele Steinbacher, “ISU Student Trustee Working for Obama,” BP, 29 July 2004; Sumana Chatterjee (KR), “Democrats Buzzing About Obama’s Future,” The State, 29 July 2004 (“rising star”); Brian A. DeBose, “Obama Emerges as Major Party Player,” WT, 29 July 2004, p. A1; Obama on The Tavis Smiley Show, 29 July 2004; Allan M. Winkler, “Catch a Rising Democratic Star,” BG, 30 July 2004; Liam Ford and John Chase, “With Ryan Out, GOP Moves On,” and Rick Pearson, “Obama: Those Feuding Should Take a ‘Timeout,’” CT, 30 July 2004; Dave McKinney and Scott Fornek, “Ryan Formally Exits Senate Race vs. Obama,” CST, 30 July 2004, p. 10; Eric Krol, “From New Heights, Any Obama Fall Could Be a Long One,” CDH, 30 July 2004, p. 1; Schoenburg, “Obama Details His Stands on the Issues,” and “Obama Suggests a ‘Timeout’ for Bickering Democrats,” SJR, 30 July 2004, pp. 1, 4; Michael Cader, “Publishers Eyeing Obama,” NYS, 30 July 2004, p. 14; Tom Zucco, “Speech Pulls Obama Book into Limelight,” SPT, 30 July 2004, p. A10; Mark Wood, “Obama Has Strength of His Own,” FTU, 30 July 2004, p. A6; Lauren A. E. Schuker, “Obama Stars at Convention,” HC, 30 July 2004; Christopher Caldwell, “A Democrat Star Is Born,” FT, 31 July 2004; Scott L. Malcolmson, “An Appeal Beyond Race,” NYT, 1 August 2004; Jennifer Skalka, “Foes Out to Prove Obama Not Alone,” and Clarence Page, “Obama’s Drama and Our Dreams,” CT, 1 August 2004; John Aloysius Farrell, “Obama Revives MLK’s Dream,” Denver Post, 1 August 2004; Terence Samuel, “A Shining Star Named Obama,” U.S. News, 2 August 2004, p. 25; Paul Merrion, “The Siren Call of Clout,” CCB, 2 August 2004, p. 3; Matthew Continetti, “The Anti-Obama,” Weekly Standard, 2 August 2004; “Who Is Barack Obama?,” WT, 2 August 2004 (“rising star”); Tina Brown, “Barack Obama, Shaking Up the Sound-Bite Culture,” WP, 5 August 2004; “A Rising Star,” BSB, 5 August 2004, p. 4; Cindy Adams, “Dems Rising Star Barack a Writer Too,” NYP, 5 August 2004, p. 14; Lynn Sweet, “Obama’s Book,” CST, 8 August 2004, p. 32; “At Deadline,” CNYB, 9 August 2004, p. 1; Kevin Chappell, “Barack Obama,” Jet, 16 August 2004, pp. 4–10, 59–64; NYTBR, 29 August 2004 through 26 December 2004; “Sales of Obama’s Memoirs Go Up as Candidate’s Star Rises,” CT, 5 September 2004; Janet Maslin, “Crowd Pleasers,” NYT, 10 September 2004; David Mendell, “Barack Obama,” CT, 22 October 2004; Dan Holly, “Onward and Upward,” Black Issues Book Review, November–December 2004, p. 63; Lynn Sweet, “Obama Enlists D.C. Superagent,” CST, 8

November 2004, p. 26; Shira Schoenberg, "17 Minutes to Stardom," Concord Monitor, 6 December 2007; Jeff Zeleny, "Former Outsider Navigated a Path to the Marquee," NYT, 27 August 2008; Munar in Baim, Obama and the Gays, p. 519; Edward-Isaac Dove and David Nather, "10 Years Later: Obama's Hits and Blunders," Politico, 27 July 2014; DJG interviews with Claire Serdiuk, Jim Cauley, Darrel Thompson, Kaleshia Page, Susan Shadow Ransone, and Liz Drew.

84. Obamablog.com, 28, 30, and 31 July and 6 August 2004; "Obama Will Be in Kewanee Saturday," KSC, 28 July 2004; Mary Rae Bragg, "Galena Democrats Set to Welcome Rising Star Obama," TH, 29 July 2004, p. A1; Dan Churney, "Obama Blitz Begins Here," ODT, 1 August 2004; Brandon Coutre, "Obama Brings Message to Illinois," PJS, 1 August 2004; Greg Stanmar, "Obama Hits the Trail," BP, 1 August 2004; Carol Clark, "Obama in Oquawka," GRM, 1 August 2004; Thomas Geyer, "Democrats Line Up for Evans," QCT, 1 August 2004; Dustin Lemmon, "Obama Brings Star Power to Evans Fundraiser," MD, 1 August 2004; Chuck Sweeny, "Obama 'Voice of the Democratic Future' in Illinois," RRS, 1 August 2004; Travis Morse, "Obama to Visit Freeport Library," FJS, 1 August 2004; Christopher Wills, "Obama Returns to Illinois Carrying Big Hopes on His Shoulders," AP, 1 August 2004; Matt Smolensky, "Large Crowd Attend Obama Event," MRA, 2 August 2004; Joan E. Snyder, "Joy and Hope on the Campaign Trail," Parkinson's Information Exchange Network, 2 August 2004; Chris Rickert, "Obama Mania," DDC, 2 August 2004; Matt Hanley, "Obama: Ba-rock Star Impact in DeKalb," AB, 2 August 2004; Jeff Kolkey, "Obama Stumps in Marengo," NH, 2 August 2004; Brad Broders, "From Boston to a Bus," WFIR, 2 August 2004; Mike Wiser, "Q&A with Barack Obama," and "Rockford Shows Its Obama Spirit," RRS, 2 August 2004; Melanie M. Schroeder, "Obama Makes Freeport History," FJS, 2 August 2004; Scott T. Holland, "Obama Makes Speech in Front of Gracious Crowd," CH, 2 August 2004; David Mendell, "Heady Week Yields to Hard Work," CT, 2 August 2004; Paul Gale, "Obama Wants to Carry on Traditions of Paul Simon," SVN, 2 August 2004; Jennifer Speiser, "Obama in the Heart of Illinois," WHOI, 2 August 2004; "Obama Campaigns in Central Illinois," WEEK, 2 August 2004; "Under Gaze of Spotlight, Obama Is Praised for Bridging Racial Divide," JTA, 3 August 2004; Mike Berry, "Obama Wows the Crowd in Kewanee," KSC, 3 August 2004; Michelle Gibbons, "Obama Points Locals to His Side at Rally," [NIU] Northern Star, 3 August 2004; Barb Kromphardt, "Barack Obama Visits Bureau County," BCR, 3 August 2004; Dawn Turner Trice, "Obama's Appeal May Be the Life of Both Parties," CT, 3 August 2004; Scott Richardson, "Obama: I'll Fight for Workers," BP, 3 August 2004, p. A1; Amy Hoak, "Obama Creates a Stir During Campaign Swing Through Central Illinois," DHR, 3 August 2004; Edith Brady-Lunny, "Obama Draws Crowd of More Than 300 in Clinton," BP, 3 August 2004; Stephanie Miller, "Obama Visit," WTHI, 3 August 2004; Pat Phillips, "Obama Greets Area Voters," CNG, 3 August 2004; Amber Griswold, "New Fame for Chicago Senator," WFIE, 3 August 2004; Molly Stephey, "Obama Swings Through C-U," DI, 4 August 2004; Dave McKinney, "Obama Can't Help but Shine," CST, 4 August 2004, p. 6; Herb Meeker, "Obama Takes U.S. Senate Campaign to Lake Land College in Mattoon," DHR, 4 August 2004; Greg Cima, "'Skinny Guy from the South Side' Tells Voters Here What He Believes," MVRN, 4 August 2004 ("rising star"); Nicole Sack, "U.S. Senate Candidate Talks About Platform in Mount Vernon," SI, 4 August 2004; Kevin Ryden, "Obama Makes Campaign Stop in Olney," and "Obama Crowd Includes Happy Democrats," ODN, 4 August 2004; Jennifer Weakley, "Obama Energizes Local Democrats," DCN, 5 August 2004; Bob Livingston, "Obama: When You Pay Attention to Politicians They Act Right," MCR, 5 August 2004; Bernard Schoenburg, "Obama Tells Taylorville Crowd Fame Won't Go to His Head," SJR, 5 August 2004, p. 1; Lauren FitzPatrick and Alice Hohl, "Obama Celebrates 43rd at Matteson Fundraiser," DS, 5 August 2004; Mundy, Michelle, pp. 152–53; Mendell's 2008 interview with Jim Gilmore; DJG interviews with Jeremiah Posedel, Peter Coffey, Jim Cauley, Lauren Kidwell, Matt Jones, Kelly Jo MacArthur, and Darrel Thompson.

85. David Axelrod and John Kupper to Obama Campaign, "Revised Media Plan," 4 August 2004; Amanda [Fuchs] to Obama Team, "Executive Summary—Defensive Research Book," 6 August 2004, 7pp., JKP; Liam Ford and John Chase, "GOP Nears Choice for Senate," CT, 3 August 2004; Scott Fornek, "GOP Wooing Keyes to Take On Obama," CST, 3 August 2004, p. 6; CF, 3, 6, 10, 12, and 20 August 2004; Chase and Ford, "GOP Narrows Senate List to 2," CT, 4 August 2004; Fornek, "Keyes, GOP Discuss Taking On Obama," and Fornek and Lynn Sweet, "State GOP Narrows Senate Hopefuls to 2," CST, 4 August 2004, pp. 1, 3; Ford and Chase, "GOP Wants Keyes," CT, 5 August 2004; Fornek, "GOP Asks Keyes to Run," CST, 5 August 2004, p. 12; Fran Eaton, "Peeks into IL GOP's Executive Session Reveal Struggle for Party Control," IL, 5 August 2004; Rick Pearson and Jon Yates, "Keyes Reportedly Set to Accept GOP Bid," CT, 6 August 2004; Fornek, "Keyes Promises Republicans He'll Run," CST, 6 August 2004, p. 3; Ford and Rudolph Bush, "Debt, Tax Questions Surface for Keyes," CT, 7 August 2004; Ford, Bush, and Chase, "Conservative Heart, Soul Make Keyes Tick," CT, 8 August 2004; Fornek, "Keyes a Hot Property," CST, 8 August 2004, p. 3; OFI, "Statement from Barack Obama on Alan Keyes' Entry into the Illinois U.S. Senate Race," 8 August 2004; Juliet Eilperin, "Keyes to Face Obama," WP, 9 August 2004; Ford and Chase, "Keyes Guarantees Fight, If Not Victory," CT, 9 August 2004; Maureen O'Donnell and Fornek, "Keyes Fires Up GOP Faithful," CST, 9 August 2004, p. 3; Ford and Chase, "On Day 1, New Foes Already Getting Licks In," CT, 10 August 2004; Fornek, "Keyes Says Obama Afraid to Face Him," CST, 10 August 2004, p. 18; Ford and David Mendell, "Obama Runs Away, Keyes Says," and John Kass, "Debate Strategy Is a Winner, But Voters Lose Out," CT, 11 August 2004; Mark Brown, "Obama's Backpedaling Is a Disappointment," and Fornek, "Keyes Says He Wants to Rumble with Obama," CST, 11 August 2004, pp. 2, 24; "Keyes Guilty of Black-on-Black Crime," CD, 11 August 2004, p. 9; "When You Propose Six Debates . . .," CT, 12 August 2004; Michael Van Winkle and Greg Blankenship, "The Obama Myth," American Spectator, 12 August 2004; Obama on Fresh Air, NPR, 12 August 2004; OFI, "Illinois Fraternal Order of Police Endorse Barack Obama for Senate," 12 August 2004; Ford and Mendell, "Keyes Sets Up House in Cal City," CT, 13 August 2004; Fornek, "Obama Ads May Start Next Week," CST, 13 August 2004, p. 5; Eric Krol, "Who Will Scare Soccer Moms More, Keyes or Obama?," CDH, 13 August 2004, p. 14; Fornek, "Obama to Debut TV Ads Next Week—But Not Here," and Thomas Roeser, "How the GOP Ended Up Picking Keyes," CST, 14 August 2004, pp. 6, 18; OFI, "Obama Celebrates Signing of the Illinois Citizen Soldier Initiative," 14 August 2004; Mendell, "Billiken Crowd Jeers Keyes, Cheers Obama," CT, 15 August 2004; Maudlyne Ihejirika, "Bud Billiken Parade a Mix of Pompons and Politics," CST, 15 August 2004, p. 11; Karen E. Pride, "More Than 1 Million Attend 75th Annual Billiken Parade," CD, 16 August 2004, p. 3; La Risa Lynch, "Obama Greets Voters at Bud Billiken Parade," HPC, 18 August 2004, p. 1; Obama on This Week, ABC, 15 August 2004; Glenn Jeffers, "Parade Heralds a Hearty Rivalry," "Obama, Meet Keyes," and Ford and Mendell, "Senate Race to Hit Airwaves," CT, 16 August 2004; Natasha Korecki, "How Do You Do?," CST, 16 August 2004, p. 8; OFI, "Obama Calls for Increased Funding for Agricultural Research and Development," 16 August 2004; Eric Zorn, "Keyes Saddles Wrong Horse for Senate Race," CT, 17 August 2004; Steve Tarter, "Senate Candidate Obama Tours Peoria Agricultural Lab," PJS, 17 August 2004; OFI, "Obama Calls for Doubling of Ethanol Production for Gasoline by 2012," 17 August 2004; Korecki and Fornek, "Keyes Likens Abortion to Terrorism," CST, 17 August 2004, p. 6; H. Gregory Meyer, "Keyes Says State Needs an Outsider," CT, 18 August 2004; Obama, "Expanded O'Hare, or 3rd Airport? Chicago Area Needs Both," CST, 18 August 2004, p. 59 (and HPH, 25 August 2004, p. 4); Rich Miller, "Deal with It," IT, 19 August 2004; Ray Long and Christi Parsons, "Democrats Try to Be Friends," CT, 19 August 2004; McKinney, "With Obama Around, Dems Put Aside Bickering," CST, 19 August 2004, p. 20; Doug Finke, "Obama Stars on Governor's Day," SJR, 19 August 2004, p. 1; Jeff Berkowitz, "Chairman Topinka Sticks the Shiv in Jack Ryan One More Time," Blogspot.com, 19 August 2004; OFI, "Obama Calls on Administration to Increase Intelligence Sharing Between Local and Federal Law Enforcement," 19 August 2004; Colleen Mastony, "Cops Give Obama Subdued Reception," CT, 20 August 2004; McKinney, "GOP Conservatives Rally Behind Keyes at State Fair," CST, 20 August 2004, p. 20; Bob Secter, "Obama Holds 41-Point Lead Over Keyes," and Clarence Page, "A Man for All Racial Reasons," CT, 22 August 2004; Bernard Schoenburg, "Don't Expect Many Niceties in Keyes-Obama Contest," SJR, 22 August 2004, p. 15; Lynch, "Obama Stumps for Votes in South Suburbs," HPC, 25 August 2004, p. 1; Rich Miller, GZ, 26 August 2004; Daniel Nolan, "Relative: Obama's Got 'A Good Handle on Canada,'" Hamilton Spectator, 11 June 2008; Jason Misner, "Barack Obama Was Here," Burlington Post, 20 June 2008; Axelrod, Believer, p. 161; DJG interviews with Amanda Fuchs Miller, Nora Moreno Cargie, Dave Syverson, Ed Petka, Steve Rauschenberger, and Rod McCulloch. A comprehensive collection of all of Alan Keyes's public comments from 8 August 2004 through the balance of the fall campaign is available at www.keyesarchives.com.

86. OFI, "Obama Releases New Campaign Ad Focusing on Creating Quality Jobs in Illinois," 25 August 2004; Todd Spivak, "Judging Judy," IT, 26 August 2004; OFI, "Illinois Families Lose More in Income Than Any Other State Over Last Three Years," 26 August 2004; John Chase and John McCormick, "Race for Senate Turns from Odd to Kind of Wacky," CT, 28 August 2004; Harstad Strategic Research, "Illinois Statewide Survey—August 2004," 22–29 August 2004, PHP; Rudolph Bush, "Keyes Hits Obama's Gay Marriage Stance," CT, 29 August 2004; Obamablog.com, 30 August 2004; Katherine Bouma, "Obama Encouraged by City's Racial Progress," BN, 31 August 2004, p. B1; Lynn Sweet, "Keyes Symbolizes Deep Rift Between State GOP Factions," CST, 31 August 2004, p. 6; "Decision 2004: Sierra Club Endorsed Candidates," Lake & Prairie, 4th Quarter [August] 2004, p. 3; Ryan Lizza, "The Natural," Atlantic, September 2004; Allison Horton, "Obama Releases Television Ad Focusing on Job Creation," HPC, 1 September 2004, p. 1; "Block Schedule for Obama for Illinois," 2 September 2004, "Obama for Illinois Consultants' Retreat Agenda," 2 September 2004, AKP Message and Media to Barack Obama, "Transition," 2 September 2004, 12pp., AKP; "Obama for U.S. Senate—Illinois Media/General Election Planning 2004 (Revision C)," 7 September–2 November 2004, JKP; CF, 3 and 8 September 2004; OFI, "Obama Fights for Horizon Miners, Calls for Bankruptcy Reform," 3 September 2004; Scott Reeder, "Kenya Believe It?—Obama's Rise in Politics," ODT, 4 September 2004 (and KDJ, 11 September 2004); Nicole Sack, "Obama: Time for Reform," SI, 4 September 2004; Matt Adrian and Mark Samuels, "A Look at Barack Obama One-on-One," QCT, 4 September 2004 (and DHR, 5 September, p. B1); Rick Pearson, "Keyes, State GOP Gearing Up Blame Campaign," and Clarence Page, "Keyes Becomes GOP's Burden," CT, 5 September 2004; Kevin J. Kelley, "A Homecoming for Obama, 'If I Win,'" The Nation

(Nairobi), 5 September 2004; Liam Ford and David Mendell, "Candidates Rally Their Strongholds," and Eric Zorn, "To Put It Bluntly, Tactless Keyes Isn't Senatorial," CT, 7 September 2004; Tory Brecht, "Obama Fires Up RI Crowd," QCT, 7 September 2004; Mike Ramsey, "Keyes Questions Obama Spanking Remark," Copley, 7 September 2004; OFI, "Obama Outlines Plan to Help Small Businesses Pay for Health Insurance," 7 September 2004; Lesley R. Chinn, "Obama Speaks to AFL-CIO Members," HPC, 8 September 2004, p. 1; Ford and Mendell, "Jesus Wouldn't Vote for Obama, Keyes Says," CT, 8 September 2004; Stephanie Sievers, "Obama Says He's Not Worried About Getting Jesus' Vote," ODT, 9 September 2004; Christopher Wills, "Obama, Keyes Make Pitches to Farm Group," AP, 9 September 2004; Kurt Erickson, "Obama Wants to Focus on Issues, Not Theology," BP, 9 September 2004; "Obama: U.S. in Health-Care Crisis," PJS, 9 September 2004; Debra Pickett, "My Parents Weren't College-Educated Folks," CST, 19 September 2004, p. 10; Pat Guinane, "Star Power," II, October 2004; "A Rusty Toyota, a Mean Jump Shot, Good Ears," WP, 11 February 2007; Lauren Martin, "Welcome, Mr. President!!!," Martha's Vineyard Magazine, August 2009; Tom Dresser, "Encountering Barack Obama Amid Vineyard's Black History," Vineyard Gazette, 19 August 2010; Matt Viser, "For Obamas, Vineyard Has Enduring Attraction," BG, 17 July 2013; DJG interviews with Sheryll Cashin and Allison Davis. On Davis, also see Mark Konkol, "We Still Live in a Slum," CST Neighborhoods blog, 29 June 2007.

87. Lynn Sweet, "What's Up with Obama Secrecy?," CST, 9 September 2004, p. 37; OFI, "Statement from Barack Obama on Darfur, Sudan," [10 September 2004, not 7 October]; David Mendell, "Obama Urges Push on Sudan," CT, 11 September 2004; Ryan Keith, "Legislative Record Puts Obama at Heart of Philosophical Debate," AP, 11 September 2004; Mendell and Liam Ford, "Keyes Derails Obama from Traditional Track," CT, 13 September 2004; Steve Edwards, "Guns and Crime," Eight Forty-Eight, WBEZ, 13 September 2004; Obama on Paula Zahn Now, CNN, 13 September 2004; Block Schedule for Obama for Illinois, 2 September 2004, JKP; Rick Pearson, "Keyes Says Game Plan Is Controversy," CT, 14 September 2004; OFI, "Obama Outlines Plan to Make College More Affordable," 15 September 2004; AP, "Obama Calls for Increase in Pell Grants," 15 September 2004; John Chase, "Keyes, Obama Are Far Apart on Guns," CT, 15 September 2004; Esther Githui, "Democratic Senatorial Candidate Barack Obama Stresses Importance of Roots," VOA, 15 September 2004; Eric Krol, "Obama Offers Mild Retort to Keyes," CDH, 16 September 2004, p. 7; CF, 16, 20, 27, 29, and 30 September 2004; Dave McKinney, "Obama Suggests Closing Beach to Study Asbestos," CST, 17 September 2004, p. 8; Molly Parker, "Obama Wants to Make Pell Grants More Accessible," PJS, 17 September 2004; Chris Bailey, "Contemplating Steve and Barack," CDH, 19 September 2004, p. 18; Christi Parsons and Ray Long, "Wheeler-Dealer with a Cause," CT Magazine, 19 September 2004, pp. 12ff.; Adriana Colindres, "Obama, Keyes Give Opinions on War, Health Care," SJR, 19 September 2004, p. 17; David Moberg, "Audacious and Hopeful," ITT, 20 September 2004, p. 22; Chase, "Keyes, Obama Differ on Tactics," CT, 20 September 2004; Kevin McDermott, "Obama May Trounce Keyes for Senate," SLPD, 20 September 2004, p. A1; Edwards, "Immigration," Eight Forty-Eight, WBEZ, 20 September 2004; Obama, "Springfield Report," HPH, 22 September 2004, p. 4; R. Eden Martin, "Introduction of Barack Obama," Commercial Club, 22 September 2004, REMP; OFI, "Women for Obama Luncheon," 23 September 2004; Mendell, "Obama Would Consider Missile Strikes in Iran," CT, 25 September 2004; Nicole Ziegler Dizon, "Obama Says His Beliefs Say No to Gay Marriage," CST, 25 September 2004; Tamara Sharman, "Obama Delivers Message of Hope," KDJ, 25 September 2004; Louise Brass, "Obama Touches Base in Bolingbrook,” JHN, 26 September 2004; Chase, “State GOP Wrestling for Identity,” CT, 26 September 2004; Edwards, “Education,” Eight Forty-Eight, WBEZ, 27 September 2004; Mendell, “Obama Takes Show on Road,” CT, 28 September 2004; Sweet, “Kerry Taps Obama to Court African-American Vote,” CST, 28 September 2004, p. 20; Carrie Budoff, “Obama Draws a Crowd at Hoeffel Event,” PI, 28 September 2004; Kali Backer, “Dem. Party Star Electrifies Crowd at Pa. Senate Race Rally,” Daily Pennsylvanian, 28 September 2004; Krol, “Students Put Candidates on the Spot,” CDH, 30 September 2004, p. 10; Mike Christianson, “Obama Comes to Baltimore,” Afro-American, 2–8 October 2004, p. A1; Jim Edgar’s 2010 interviews with Mark DePue, p. 1055; Jason Meisner, “Blagojevich Fundraiser Gets 2 Years in Bribe Case,” CT, 10 February 2014; DJG interview with Michael Parham.

88. “The Obama Record,” LL, September–October 2004, p. 8; Kenneth Meeks, “Favorite Son,” BE, October 2004, pp. 88–95; Barbara Ransby, “Barack Obama,” The Progressive, October 2004, pp. 35–38; Scott Fornek, “‘I’ve Got a Competitive Nature,’” CST, 3 October 2004, p. 12; John Chase, “A Big Split Over Abortion, Stem Cells,” CT, 4 October 2004; Ed Tibbetts, “Obama Boosts Fellow Candidates,” QCT, 5 October 2004; “Barack Obama Visits Quad Cities Area to Help Fellow Democrats,” WCFC, 5 October 2004; Kurt Allemeier, “Obama: People Are Struggling Out There,” RIA, 5 October 2004; Lesley R. Chinn, “Obama Reminds Supporters Not to Take Election for Granted,” HPC, 6 October 2004, p. 2; Nathaniel Zimmer, “Obama Rejects Liberal Label,” JHN, 6 October 2004; Eric Krol, “Obama Clarifies Sex Ed Views at Benedictine,” CDH, 6 October 2004, p. 17; Ronald Roach, “Obama Rising,” BIHE, 7 October 2004, pp. 20–23; Lauren W. Whittington, “Obama Endearing Himself with Cash,” RC, 7 October 2004; Lynn Sweet, “Obama’s Stealth,” TH, 7 October 2004, p. 19; Peter Slevin, “Ill. GOP Watches Take-No-Prisoners Campaign,” WP, 7 October 2004; Sweet, “Obama’s Sharing the Wealth with Fellow Dems,” CST, 7 October 2004, p. 47; David Mendell, “Obama’s Record a Plus, a Minus,” and Kathryn Masterson, “Truly a World Apart,” CT, 8 October 2004; Slevin, “Obama Lending Star Power to Other Democrats,” WP, 11 October 2004; Chase, “Obama, Keyes Clash on Terrorism,” CT, 11 October 2004; Steve Edwards, “Foreign Policy,” Eight Forty-Eight, WBEZ, 11 October 2004; Joe Frolik, “A Sense of Mission,” Plain Dealer, 12 October 2004, p. B9; Hetal Bhatt, “Obama Enthralls Spirited Crowd,” DI, 12 October 2004; Jodi Heckel, “Democratic Senate Hopeful Denounces Negative Campaigns,” CNG, 12 October 2004; Obama-Keyes debate transcript, 12 October 2004; P. J. Huffstutter, “Candidates Miles Apart in History-Making Illinois Election,” LAT, 13 October 2004; Chase and Liam Ford, “Obama, Keyes Put on Kid Gloves,” CT, 13 October 2004; Fornek, “Keyes, Obama Spar Over War in Iraq,” CST, 13 October 2004, p. 18; John Patterson, “A Restrained First Meeting,” CDH, 13 October 2004, p. 1; Bernard Schoenburg, “Debate Sticks to the Issues,” SJR, 13 October 2004, p. 1; Kurt Erickson, “Keyes, Obama Stake Positions,” BP, 13 October 2004, p. A1; Corey Hall, “Obama and Keyes Discuss Issues at First Joint Appearance,” HPC, 13 October 2004, p. 1; CF, 13 October 2004; Eric Zorn, “Senate Debate Hints at What Might Have Been,” CT, 14 October 2004; Debbie Howlett, “Obama Extends Reach Beyond Illinois Race,” USAT, 14 October 2004, p. 14A; Andrew Stern, “Illinois Democrat Set to Win All-Black Senate Race,” Reuters, 14 October 2004; Mendell and Rudolph Bush, “Obama Spreads His Influence,” CT, 15 October 2004; Krol, “In Senate Race, Moderates Finally Coming into Style,” CDH, 15 October 2004, p. 16; Kurt Erickson, “Obama Boosts Renner as He Campaigns for ‘Team,’” BP, 15 October 2004, p. A1; Elaine Hopkins, “Michelle Obama in Peoria,” PJS, 15 October 2004; Mendell and Ford, “Keyes Manages to Rake in Cash,” CT, 16 October 2004; Norma Mendoza, “Obama’s Wife Makes Local Stop,”

EI, 16 October 2004; Mary Massingale, "Michelle Obama Says Faith Guides Her Husband," SJR, 16 October 2004, p. 4; Christopher Wills, "Obama Mixes Exotic Background with Street-Level Experience," AP, 16 October 2004; Erickson, "Obama-Keyes Debate Lacked Spark, Fire," BP, 17 October 2004, p. C1; Yussuf Simmonds and Kathy Williamson, "National Leaders Converge on L.A.," LAS, 21–27 October 2004, p. A1; Rich Miller, "Obamarama," IT, 28 October 2004 (and MD, 29 October); "Oprah Talks to Barack Obama," O Magazine, November 2004; Lawrence A. Horwich, Barack H. Obama, and Michelle L. Obama, 2004 Form 1040, 2 March 2005; Jones in Terry McDermott, "What Is It About Obama?," LAT, 24 December 2006; Obama in Jonathan Van Meter, "Leading by Example," Vogue, April 2013, pp. 248–55, 318–19; "Meryl Streep's Interview with Michelle Obama," More, July–August 2015, pp. 84–85, 140; DJG interviews with Emil Jones Jr. and John Kupper.

89. Mendell, Obama, pp. 76–77; Jeffrey S. Siker, "President Obama, the Bible, and Political Rhetoric," Political Theology 13 (September 2012): 586–609; Claire Martin, "Dems' Rising Star Shines for Salazar," DP, 17 October 2004, p. C1; Obama on American Morning, CNN, 19 October 2004; John Chase, "Obama, Keyes Concur on Little," CT, 18 October 2004; Kevin McDermott, "Unlikely Competitors: Years as Outsider Gave Obama the Ability to Relate, Friends Say," SLPD, 24 October 2004, p. A1; "Look Past the Race Issue," SJR, 18 July 2004, p. 20; Benjamin Wallace-Wells, "The Great Black Hope: What's Riding on Barack Obama?," Washington Monthly, November 2004, pp. 30–36; Amos N. Jones, "Obama's Oversimplified Identity," NYAN, 5–11 August 2004, p. 13; Jones, "Black Like Obama," Thurgood Marshall Law Review 31 (2005–2006) 79–100, esp. 80, 95; Don Terry, "The Skin Game—Do White Voters Like Barack Obama Because 'He's Not Really Black?,'" CT Magazine, 24 October 2004, pp. 14ff.; Joy Bennett Kinnon, "Barack Obama," Ebony, November 2004, pp. 196ff. That fall, University of Chicago political scientist Melissa Harris-Lacewell surveyed some 567 Illinoisans, presenting Barack as multiracial to one half of them and black to the other. There was no difference in how white Illinoisans evaluated him, yet among African American respondents, "when Obama was framed as a multiracial candidate, he was assessed more positively than when he was framed as black." Harris-Lacewell and graduate student Jane Junn rightly observed that "most black respondents understand themselves as being multiracial in some sense." Harris-Lacewell and Junn, "Old Friends and New Alliances," Journal of Black Studies 38 (September 2007): 30–50, esp. 41; see also David J. Anderson and Junn, "Deracializing Obama: White Voters and the 2004 Illinois U.S. Senate Race," American Politics Research 38 (May 2010): 443–70.

90. "Obama Still Looks Like a Winner to Us," CST, 15 October 2004, p. 45; "Obama Shines Through Senate Circus," JHN, 17 October 2004; "For U.S. Senate: Barack Obama," CNG, 18 October 2004; John Patterson, "Foreign Policy Also Splits Keyes, Obama," CDH, 18 October 2004, p. 1; Steve Edwards, "Health Care," Eight Forty-Eight, WBEZ, 18 October 2004; "Obama Can Best Serve Illinois in U.S. Senate," BP, 19 October 2004; Scott Fornek, "Is Obama Overconfident?," CST, 20 October 2004, p. 22; Jay Field, "Barack Obama Profile," Eight Forty-Eight, WBEZ, 20 October 2004; John Chase and Liam Ford, "GOP Leaves Keyes Off Its Team Ad," CT, 21 October 2004; "An Easy Decision," QCT, 21 October 2004; "Obama Certain to Glide to Nov. 2 Victory," SI, 21 October 2004; Obama-Keyes debate transcript, 21 October 2004; Chase and Ford, "Senate Debate Gets Personal," and Mendell, "Barack Obama," CT, 22 October 2004; Fornek, "Rivals Take Gloves Off in First Televised Senate Debate," CST, 22 October 2004, p. 12; Eric Krol, "Fire and Brimstone Keyes, Obama Hit on Spiritual Issues in Heated Debate,” CDH, 22 October 2004, p. 1; CF, 22 October 2004; Christopher Wills, “Obama’s Wife Takes Big Role in Campaign,” AP, 22 October 2004; Bernard Schoenburg, “Obama Speaks at Local Rally, Endorses Auditor Candidate,” SJR, 23 October 2004, p. 13; Rick Pearson and Chase, “Democrats Grip on State Firm,” and “Obama for U.S. Senate,” CT, 24 October 2004; “Obama for Illinois,” SLPD, 24 October 2004, p. B2; “Senate Hopeful Obama to Rally Voters,” DBNJ, 24 October 2004, p. C7; Obama on Off Topic with Carlos Watson, CNN, 24 October 2004; Marc Lacey, “Illinois Democrat Wins Kenyan Hearts,” NYT, 25 October 2004; Chase, “The Issues: Taxes/Education,” CT, 25 October 2004; Krol, “‘Politics of Hope’ Appeals to Wide Range of Supporters,” CDH, 25 October 2004, p. 1; “U.S. Senate: Barack Obama,” PJS, 25 October 2004; “Obama Is the Better Candidate to Represent Ill.,” CCB, 25 October 2004; Thomas Brown, “Ill. Senate Hopeful Rouses S.C. Voters,” Orangeburg Times & Democrat, 25 October 2004; Virginia Smith, “Religious Zeal Flows During Obama Visit,” DBNJ, 25 October 2004, p. C1; Steve Edwards, “Jobs and the Economy,” Eight Forty-Eight, WBEZ, 25 October 2004; Suzanne Bell, “Michelle Obama Speaks at ISU,” DV, 26 October 2004; “Obama for U.S. Senate,” SJR, 29 October 2004, p. 8; “Obama Will Do Us Proud in U.S. Senate,” CD, 29–31 October 2004, p. 15.

91. John Chase, “Senate Hopefuls Far Apart on War,” CT, 26 October 2004; Obama-Keyes debate, 26 October 2004, WTTW; Obama on Hannity & Colmes, Fox News, 26 October 2004; Monica Davey, “Where to Catch a Rising Political Star?,” NYT, 27 October 2004; Chase and Courtney Flynn, “Keyes, Obama Disagree Sharply,” CT, 27 October 2004; Scott Fornek, “Final Debate Offers Spirit, Substance,” CST, 27 October 2004, p. 6; Eric Krol, “Last Shots at Each Other,” CDH, 27 October 2004, p. 1; Mike Ramsey, “Keyes, Obama Trade Jabs Over Moral Issues,” SJR, 27 October 2004, p. 13; Liam Ford and Aamer Madhani, “Keyes Commercial Has Plenty of Praise,” CT, 28 October 2004; Fornek, “Keyes’ First Ad Focuses on Positive Spin,” CST, 28 October 2004, p. 18; Kevin McDermott, “Obama Keeps Huge Lead over Keyes in Senate Race,” SLPD, 28 October 2004, p. A1; Kari Allen, “Obama Impresses Naperville Students,” CDH, 28 October 2004, p. 1; Bernard Schoenburg, “U.S. Senate: Obama, Keyes Offer Clear Choices,” SJR, 28 October 2004, p. B2; CF, 28 October 2004; Ted McClelland, “Keyes and Friends Wind Up Down at the Pokey,” CR, 29 October 2004; David Mendell and Ford, “Obama, Daley Enjoy Lunch,” CT, 30 October 2004; Rudolph Bush and Liam Ford, “Hopefuls Making Last Dash for Votes,” and Chase, “Obama’s Message Has Edge on Keyes,” CT, 31 October 2004; Krol, “Keyes, Obama Sound Off About Bin Laden Tape,” CDH, 31 October 2004, p. 17; Kristyna C. Ryan, “Illinois State Senator Barack Obama,” Chicago Bar Association Record 18 (November 2004): 46–48; Chase and Ford, “Keyes Presses Catholic Voters,” CT, 1 November 2004; Fornek, “Keyes Rips Obama,” CST, 1 November 2004, p. 3; Rick Pearson and Chase, “Unusual Match Nears Wire,” CT, 2 November 2004; Bernard Schoenburg, “A Final Scramble for Votes in Illinois,” SJR, 2 November 2004, p. 1; Kevin McDermott, “A Tale of Two Campaigns,” SLPD, 2 November 2004; Christopher Benson, “Camelot Rising,” Savoy, February 2005, pp. 60–69, 103–6; Marc Solomon, Winning Marriage (ForeEdge, 2014), pp. 271–73. David Airne and William L. Benoit’s vapid “2004 Illinois U.S. Senate Debates,” American Behavioral Scientist 49 (October 2005): 343–52, can be ignored.

92. OFI, Obama victory remarks, 2 November 2004; John Chase and David Mendell, “Obama Sails to Senate Win,” Mendell and Chase, “Huge Victory Sets Stage for National Role,” and Mendell, “Obama to Arrive with Status,” CT, 3 November 2004; Scott Fornek, “Obama Takes Senate Seat in a Landslide,” CST, 3 November 2004, p. 6; Eric Krol, “Obama Wins Landslide,” and “The Election That Wasn’t,”

CDH, 3 November 2004, pp. 1, 10; Karen E. Pride, “Barack Supporters Gather to Watch History Come Alive,” CD, 3 November 2004, p. 16; Kevin McDermott, “Democrats’ Rising Star Has Rousing Victory,” SLPD, 3 November 2004, p. A1; Cindy Wojdyla Cain, “Walsh Wins County Exec Job,” JHN, 3 November 2004; CF, 3 November 2004; Obama on Today, NBC, on Good Morning America, ABC, and on The Early Show, CBS, 3 November 2004; Obama on The Tavis Smiley Show, 3 November 2004; Sharon Cohen, “Obama’s Incredible Year,” AP, 3 November 2004; Todd Spivak, “Rising Son,” IT, 4 November 2004; Mendell, “After Reaching Heights, Obama Lowering His Sites,” CT, 4 November 2004; Fornek, “Obama for President? That’s ‘Silly,’” CST, 4 November 2004, p. 17; Krol, “Obama Silences Presidential Talk,” CDH, 4 November 2004, p. 7; Mike Ramsey, “‘I Am Not Running for President in 2008,’ Obama Says,” SJR, 4 November 2004, p. 1; Christopher Wills (AP), “Obama Wants to Start by Learning,” BP, 4 November 2004; Liam Ford, “From Keyes, No Congratulations,” CT, 5 November 2004; William Lamb, “Don’t Expect Too Much at First, Obama Tells Belleville Backers,” SLPD, 13 November 2004, p. 10; Obama on The Leonard Lopate Show, NPR, 22 November 2004; Christopher Benson, “Camelot Rising,” Savoy, February 2005, pp. 60–69, 103–6; Wills, “Obama Puts Rural Illinois Experience to Work in Effort to Win Iowa,” AP, 13 October 2007.

CHAPTER TEN: DISAPPOINTMENT AND DESTINY

1. “Drew” to Cassandra [Butts], “Possible Committee Assignments,” n.d., JKP; Eric Krol, “Obama Can Hit the Ground Running,” CDH, 3 November 2004, p. 10; John Chase, “8 Vie for Obama’s Legislature Seat,” CT, 6 November 2004; Jodi S. Cohen, “Obama’s Springfield Seat Goes to Lawyer,” CT, 7 November 2004; Cheryl L. Reed, “Dems Name Obama Replacement,” CST, 7 November 2004, p. 8; Lynn Sweet, “Obama Enlists D.C. Superagent,” CST, 8 November 2004, p. 26; Karen E. Pride, “Obama’s Senate Replacement Chosen,” CD, 8 November 2004, p. 5; Senate Floor Transcript, 8 November 2004, pp. 1–2, 11–15; SR 716, 8 November 2004; “Obama Says ‘Thank You’ to Area Volunteers,” LL, November–December 2004, p. 3; David Mendell, “Obama in Bipartisan Goodbye,” and “Obama Says Goodbye to Illinois,” CT, 9 November 2004; Dave McKinney, “Springfield Lovefest,” CST, 9 November 2004, p. 60; Bernard Schoenburg, “Colleagues Congratulate Obama,” SJR, 9 November 2004, p. 9; Kevin McDermott, “Obama Discusses Writing Book,” SLPD, 9 November 2004, p. B1; CF, 9 November 2004; Cindy Adams, “Barack’s Dreams Beyond His Agents,” NYP, 10 November 2004, p. 14; Jonathan Alter, “The Audacity of Hope,” Newsweek, 27 December 2004; Sweet, “Be-Bop, Barack and Bucks from Book,” CST, 17 March 2005, p. 39; Jeff Zeleny, “New Man on the Hill,” CT, 20 March 2005; Tracey Robinson-English, “Statehouse Clout,” Ebony, April 2005, pp. 150ff.; UCLS, The Glass Menagerie, 2005–06, p. 22, 2006–07, pp. 21–22, 2007–08, pp. 22–23; Martin Schram, “Senate Duo Exception to Partisan Bickering,” Scripps Howard, 6 December 2005; Christina Larson, “Hoosier Daddy,” Washington Monthly, September 2006, pp. 9ff.; Peter Osnos, “Barack Obama and the Book Business,” The Century Foundation, 30 October 2006; Mike Dorning and Christi Parsons, “Inside Obama’s Inner Circle,” CT, 14 January 2007; Kwame Raoul, “‘Stay Out of Jail,’” HPH, 14 February 2007, p. 18; Christopher Wills, “Clues to How Obama Would Play His Hand as President Can Be Found in Poker Style,” AP, 24 September 2007; Dan Morain, “Obama’s Lawyer Days Were Effective but Brief,” LAT, 6 April 2008 (Obama totaled 3,723 billable hours at Miner Barnhill, mostly prior to 1997); Bernard Schoenburg, “Former Obama Assistant Remembers Him as Friendly Boss,” SJR, 8 November 2008; Jim Merriner, “Barack Obama and the Parallel to Jimmy Carter,” CDO, 24 March 2009; Edward McClelland,

“The Ones Obama Left Behind,” NBCChicago.com, 23 March 2011; Monique Garcia, “Hyde Park–Kenwood Area Fosters Another Set of Democratic Leaders with Clout,” CT, 13 April 2011; James Warren, “Nobel Laureates Here, Grinding Poverty There,” NYT, 12 August 2011; DJG interviews with Toni Preckwinkle, Leslie Hairston, Emil Jones Jr., Will Burns, John Eason, Cynthia Miller, Dan Shomon, Mike Lieteau, Eden Martin, Andy Davis, Terry Link, Tommy Walsh, Cassandra Butts, and Nathan Diament. On Obama’s state legislative record, see John Patterson, “Obama’s State Record No Mystery,” CDH, 19 February 2007, p. 1, Randolph Burnside and Kami Whitehurst, “From the Statehouse to the White House?,” Journal of Black Studies 38 (September 2007): 75–89, and Boris Shor, “How Liberal Was Obama as a State Senator in Illinois?,” RedBlueRichPoor.com, 6 October 2008. Charles Peters, “Judge Him by His Laws,” WP, 4 January 2008, cogently argued that “the media have not devoted enough attention to Obama’s bills and the effort required to pass them,” indicative of a presumption “that state legislatures are not to be taken seriously.” On the contrary, Obama’s record “is revealing enough to merit far more attention than it has received.”

2. Obama on This Week, ABC, 7 November 2004, and on Meet the Press, NBC, 7 November 2004; Rudolph Bush and David Mendell, “Obama Makes Case for ‘Common Ground,’” CT, 8 November 2004; “Obama to Host Meeting at Peoria Library,” PJS, 9 November 2004; Ed Tibbetts, “Obama Fires-Up Q-C Crowd,” QCT, 11 November 2004; Tibbetts, “Obama Gets Immediate Star Status,” QCT, 12 November 2004; William Lamb, “Don’t Expect Too Much at First, Obama Tells Belleville Backers,” SLPD, 13 November 2004, p. 10; “Obama Must Keep Balance While Working for Illinois,” BP, 13 November 2004, p. A6; “LaHood: It’s a Good Time for Illinoisans,” PJS, 14 November 2004; Bush and Mendell, “Obama Off to Washington,” CT, 14 November 2004; Amanda Ripley et al., “Obama’s Ascent,” Time, 15 November 2004, pp. 74–81; “A Star Is Born,” U.S. News, 15 November 2004, p. 53; Sarah Frank and Bush, “New Lawmakers Learn the Ropes in Washington,” CT, 15 November 2004; Nicole Ziegler Dizon (AP), “Obama Works to Balance Fame, Illinois Interests,” BP, 15 November 2004, p. B1; Dori Meinert, “Obama Gets Oriented in the Senate,” SJR, 16 November 2004, p. 26; Minutes, GARS Board of Trustees, 17 November 2004, #226, pp. 1876–81; Deirdre Shesgreen, “Obama Arrives, and Fitzgerald Says Goodbye,” SLPD, 19 November 2004, p. A1; Rudolph Bush, “Fitzgerald Stood Up,” CT, 19 December 2004; Bernard Schoenburg, “Durbin, LaHood Say Some Good Things About Obama,” SJR, 17 December 2006, p. 39; Tim Dickinson, “Obama’s Brain Trust,” Rolling Stone 1056/57, 10 July 2008; Pete Rouse’s 2008 interview with Jim Gilmore; Ceci Connolly, “Daschle’s Woes Test an Insider’s Insider,” WP, 3 February 2009; Richard Wolffe, Renegade (Crown, 2009), p. 39; John Heilemann and Mark Halperin, Game Change (HarperCollins, 2010), p. 26; Cassandra Butts’s 2012 interview with Gilmore; Ray LaHood, Seeking Bipartisanship (Cambria Press, 2015), pp. 203–4; DJG interviews with Cassandra Butts, Peter Fitzgerald, Paul Williams, Ray Harris, and Rob Fisher.

3. Edward Felker, “Obama: Pledges to Avoid Spotlight,” KDJ, 17 November 2004; Obama on The Leonard Lopate Show, NPR, 22 November 2004; Rudolph Bush, “Obama Greets New York on 2-Day Publicity Blitz,” CT, 23 November 2004; Obama on The Early Show, CBS, 23 November 2004, on Charlie Rose, PBS, 23 November 2004, and on C-Span Book TV at Barnes & Noble, 23 November 2004; “Obama on ‘Letterman,’” CT, 26 November 2004; Robyn Tysver, “Democratic Star Dines with Buffetts,” OWH, 30 November 2004, p. B2; Rick Perlstein, “Conviction Politics,” American Prospect, December 2004, p. 26; Obama on The Friday Night Show, WTTW, 3 December 2004; William Neikirk, “Obama Shows Media He’s a Stand-Up Guy,” CT, 6 December 2004; Lynn Sweet, “Obama Takes Secretive Flight to Visit Buffett,” CST, 6 December 2004, p. 12; Stuart Rothenberg, “A Reality Check as Obama-Mania Hits the Media,” RC, 6 December 2004; Maura Kelly Lannan, “Obama Gets Committee Assignments,” AP, 6 December 2004; Rudolph Bush, “Obama Named to Key Panels,” CT, 7 December 2004; Finlay Lewis, “Obama Jokes About Being a Celebrity,” SJR, 7 December 2004, p. 11; Mary Vorsino, “Obama Pushes Message of Diversity,” HSB, 17 December 2004; Gordon Y. K. Pang, “Democrats Call Obama Hawaii’s ‘Third Senator,’” HA, 17 December 2004; Jaymes Song, “Obama Gets Celebrity Reception as Hawaii’s ‘Third Senator,’” AP, 17 December 2004; Press Release, “Barack Obama . . . Signs Book Contract with Crown Publishers,” 17 December 2004; Rudolph Bush, “Obama’s $1.9 Million, 3-Book Deal Includes 1 Children’s Book,” CT, 18 December 2004; Sara Nelson, “Obama Inks 2-Book Deal,” NYP, 18 December 2004, p. 22; “Obama Urges Kids to ‘Dream Big,’” HSB, 18 December 2004; “Obama Gets $1.9 Million Deal for Books,” NYT, 20 December 2004; Greg Hinz, “Barack on a Roll,” CCB, 20 December 2004; Maura Webber Sadovi, “An Offbeat Christmas Stirs Up Harmony,” CST, 22 December 2004, p. F1; American Morning, CNN, 24 December 2004; Jonathan Alter, “The Audacity of Hope,” Newsweek, 27 December 2004, pp. 74ff.; Amanda Griscom Little, “Barack Obama,” Rolling Stone 964/965, 30 December 2004, p. 88; “Best Rookie,” Vanity Fair, January 2005, pp. 86–87; Laurel Bowers Husain and Laurie Uemoto Chang, “Obama Encourages Students to ‘Dream Big,’” Punahou Bulletin, Spring 2005, pp. 14–17; Godfrey Sperling, “Why Not an Obama-Romney Match Up in 2008?,” CSM, 5 July 2005; Sweet, “When Obama and Romney First Met,” CST, 30 September 2012; DJG interview with Rob Fisher.

4. Barb Ickes, “Face-to-Face with the Freshman Senator,” QCT, 3 January 2005; Obama, DFMF, p. 133; Eric Krol, “Obama’s Green but Full of Steam,” CDH, 3 January 2005, p. 1; CRec, 4 January 2005, p. S4; Maureen Groppe, “Obama Tells Reporters to Slow Down,” USAT, 4 January 2005; Rudolph Bush and David Mendell, “Great Expectations for Junior Senator,” CT, 4 January 2005; Lynn Sweet, “Obama, Bean, Lipinski Sworn In,” CST, 4 January 2005; Ickes, “Obama Humble in New Role,” QCT, 4 January 2005; Nicole Sack, “Ready to Serve,” SI, 4 January 2005; Edward Felker, “Obama Begins Senate Term,” ODT, 4 January 2005; Faye Fiore, “He’s the Hill’s King for a Day,” LAT, 5 January 2005; Sweet, “While Obama Basks, Durbin Rises,” and Carol Marin, “Obama Knows Best, Worst Is Yet to Come,” CST, 5 January 2004; Bush and Mendell, “State Fields Lineup of Stars in Congress,” CT, 5 January 2005; Krol, “Obama Takes the Oath,” CDH, 5 January 2005, p. 13; Dori Meinert, “Obama Takes Capitol by Storm,” SJR, 5 January 2005, p. 11; Sack, “Obama Officially Sworn In as Senator,” SI, 5 January 2005; Obama, CRec, 6 January 2005, p. S53; “Obama Unlikely to Visit Kenya Until 2006,” Nation, 8 January 2005; Kevin Chappell, “Barack Obama Takes His Seat in U.S. Senate,” Jet, 24 January 2005, p. 4; Jeremiah A. Wright Jr., “Senator Barack Obama’s Swearing-In Ceremony,” Trumpet, February 2005, pp. 42–43; Jeff Zeleny, “New Man on the Hill,” CT, 20 March 2005; Bernard Schoenburg, “Obama Maintains Chicago Home,” SJR, 19 April 2005, p. 12; Joy Bennett Kinnon, “Michelle Obama,” Ebony, March 2006, pp. 58ff.; Michelle’s July 2006 interview with Jacob Weisberg; Zeleny, “Testing the Water,” NYT, 24 December 2006; Kalari Girtley and Brian Wellner, “Michelle Obama Is Hyde Park’s Career Mom,” HPH, 14 February 2007, pp. 7–8, 16–17; Leslie Bennetts, “First Lady in Waiting,” Vanity Fair, December 2007; Scott Helman, “Holding Down the Obama Family Fort,” BG, 30 March 2008; Jonathan Darman, “Mr. Obama’s Washington,” Newsweek, 30 June 2008; Eli Saslow, “A Rising Political Star Adopts a Low-Key Strategy,” WP, 17 October 2008; Saslow, “Helping to Write History,” WP, 18 December 2008; Auma Obama, And Then Life Happens, p. 289; Malik Obama, Barack Obama Sr., pp. 320–21.

5. Bob Goldsborough, “On the Ball,” CT, 21 November 1999; Cook County Assessment Records, 1 July and 25 August 2000, #661660 ($1,650,000); Cook County Mortgage Records, 8 August 2000, Documents # 603541 and 603542 (Emigrant Mortgage Co., $1,237,500 and University of Chicago, $412,500); Cook County Mortgage Records, 23 August 2000, Documents # 650071 and 650073 (Mid Town Bank & Trust, $414,000, and University of Chicago, $207,000); “New Faculty Appointments Made Across University,” UCC, 21 September 2000; Obama, U.S. Senate Financial Disclosure Report, 15 June 2005; Ray Gibson and David Jackson, “Rezko Owns Vacant Lot Next to Obama’s Home,” CT, 1 November 2006; Lynn Sweet, “The Obama Chronicles: Waukegan Interview Transcript,” CST, 6 November 2006; Sweet, “Obama’s Sticky Switch from Media Darling to Media-Hounded,” CST, 7 November 2006, p. 2; Edward McClelland, “How Close Were Barack Obama and Tony Rezko?,” Salon, 1 February 2008; Fredric Wondisford e-mail to Bob Bauer, 7 February 2008; Timothy J. Burger, “Obama Bought Home Without Rezko Discount, Seller Says,” Bloomberg, 18 February 2008; Jackson and Bob Sexter, “Obama: I Toured Home with Rezko,” CT, 19 February 2008; Tim Novak, “Gov’s ‘Clout Lists’ Surface in Rezko Trial,” CST, 22 February 2008; Mike McIntire and Christopher Drew, “As Developer Heads to Trial, Questions Linger Over a Deal with Obama,” NYT, 2 March 2008; James Bone, “Boneheaded Deal Haunts House Obama Built,” TOL, 7 March 2008; “Complete Transcript of the Sun-Times March 14 Interview with Barack Obama,” CST, 15 March 2008; Obama, Transcript of March 14 Tribune Interview, CT, 16 March 2008; Binyamin Appelbaum, “Obama Haunted by Friend’s Help Securing Dream House,” BG, 16 March 2008; Coen and Chase, Golden, p. 273; Axelrod, Believer, p. 165; DJG interviews with F. Scott Winslow.

6. House Floor Transcript, 10 January 2005, pp. 9–10; Bernard Schoenburg, “Obama Opens Local Office,” SJR, 11 January 2005, p. 1; Stanley Ziemba, “Obama a Big Hit in Lockport,” CT, 12 January 2005; Russell Lissau, “Obama Meets, Greets in Suburbs,” CDH, 14 January 2005, p. 1; Brian DuBose, “Obama Sets Out to Build Legacy of Achievement,” WT, 17 January 2005, p. A1; USS, CFR, “The Nomination of Condoleezza Rice to Be Secretary of State,” S. Hrg. 109-151, 18–19 January 2005, pp. 86–90, 141–45, 189–92; The Oprah Winfrey Show, 19 January 2005; Eric Zorn, “’08 Reasons Why Obama Will Run for President,” CT, 20 January 2005; Daniel Pike, “Obama, Vets Talk,” SJR, 23 January 2005, p. 13; Matt Adrian, “Obama Hears Vets Concerns in Town Hall Meeting,” SI, 24 January 2005; USS, CVA, “Nomination of Hon. R. James Nicholson to Be Secretary, Department of Veterans Affairs,” S. Hrg. 109-14, 24 January 2005, pp. 5–6, 29–38, 47–48, 50–51; Rudolph Bush, “Obama Grills Vet Nominee on Aid,” CT, 25 January 2005; USS, EPW, “The Need for Multi-Emissions Legislation,” S. Hrg. 109-876, 26 January 2005, pp. 23–24, 40–41; Charles Babington, “Rice Is Confirmed Amid Criticism,” WP, 27 January 2005; Sweet, “Senator May Be Exhausting Progressive Goodwill Very Early,” CST, 27 January 2005, p. 37; Obama’s remarks at Families USA Annual Health Conference, 27 January 2005; Jennifer Skalka, “Obama Rips Bush on Vets’ Funds,” CT, 15 February 2005; Cheryl L. Reed, “Obama Says Bush ‘Bull-Headed’ About Veterans,” CST, 15 February 2005, p. 3; DJG interview with Jan Schakowsky.

7. Lynn Sweet, “Obama Using His Fame to Help Other Dems,” CST, 26 January 2005, p. 24; Charles Keeshan, “Obama Gets Warm Welcome at Town Hall Meeting in Republican Stronghold,” CDH, 1

February 2005, p. 1; Brian Slupski, "Obama Inspires; Can He Succeed?," NH, 1 February 2005; USS, CFR, "Strategies for Reshaping U.S. Policy in Iraq and the Middle East," S. Hrg. 109-21, 1 February 2005, pp. 106–9; USS, EPW, "S. 131, 'The Clear Skies Act of 2005,'" S. Hrg. 109-867, 2 February 2005, pp. 28–29, 90–91; "Bozeman-Evans Cultivated UCSC's Commitment to Community Service," UCC, 3 February 2005; USS, CVA, "Benefits for Survivors," S. Hrg. 109-32, 3 February 2005, pp. 7, 49–50; Obama, CRec, 3 February 2005, pp. S927–28; Charles Babington and Dan Eggen, "Senate Confirms Gonzales, 60 to 36," WP, 4 February 2005; Andrew Zajac, "Senate OKs Gonzales for Cabinet Post," CT, 4 February 2005; Sweet, "Anti-War Obama Opposes Gonzales," CST, 4 February 2005, p. 29; Obama on News & Notes, NPR, 4 and 8 February 2005; Nicole Sack, "Ready for Business," SI, 7 February 2005; Emily Udell, "Keeping the Faith," ITT, 8 February 2005, p. 10; Amy Boerema, "Obama Jabs at Bush, Himself," CDH, 8 February 2005, p. 3; Gary Washburn and Rick Pearson, "A Fracas in the Family," CT, 9 January 2005; James Kimberly and Ray Long, "Governor Assigns His Aide to Probe Mell's Charge," CT, 13 January 2005; John Chase and Pearson, "Feud Sparks 2nd Probe," CT, 14 January 2005; Chase and Washburn, "About-Face: Mell Recants Job-Selling Charge," CT, 21 January 2005; Long and John McCormick, "State Contracts, Donations Tied," CT, 31 January 2005; USS, EPW, "Environmental Protection Agency's Fiscal Year 2006 Budget," S. Hrg. 109-843, 9 February 2005, pp. 14–15, 33–34; USS, CFR, "Tsunami Response: Lessons Learned," S. Hrg. 109-153, 10 February 2005, pp. 76–81; Virginia Groark and John Chase, "Tollway Oasis Pact Rich with Links to Governor's Allies," CT, 13 February 2005; Obama, CRec, 14 February 2005, p. S1333; Chase and Ray Long, "Critics Call for Tollway Inquiry," CT, 15 February 2005; USS, CVA, "Proposed Fiscal Year 2006 Budget for Department of Veterans Affairs Programs," S.Hrg. 109-72, 15 February 2005, pp. 47, 67–69; USS, CFR, "The President's Budget for Foreign Affairs," S. Hrg. 109-98, 16 February 2005, pp. 43–46; USS, CFR, "Democracy in Retreat in Russia," S. Hrg. 109-83, 17 February 2005, p. 40; Groark and Chase, "Tollway Firm Has Link to Governor," CT, 18 February 2005; Groark and Chase, "Oases Developer Won't List Vendors," CT, 24 February 2005, Groark, "State to Get Vendor Details," CT, 25 February 2005, Jeff Zeleny, "New Man on the Hill," CT, 20 March 2005, Zeleny, "Q&A with Michelle Obama," CT, 25 December 2005, Sweet, "After Cautious, Bipartisan Year, Obama Opens New Chapter," CST, 22 January 2006, p. A12, Mike McIntire and Christopher Drew, "In '05 Investing, Obama Took Same Path as Donors," NYT, 7 March 2007; Zeleny and Drew, "Obama Says His Investments Presented No Conflicts of Interest," NYT, 8 March 2007; Christi Parsons and Jill Zuckman, "Obama Says He Was Unaware of Stocks in Trust Fund," CT, 8 March 2007; Sweet, "Stock Answers," CST, 8 March 2007, p. 16; Mike Dorning and Parsons, "Carefully Crafting the Obama Brand," CT, 12 June 2007; Perry Bacon Jr., "The Outsider's Insider," WP, 27 August 2007; Marc Ambinder, "Teacher and Apprentice," Atlantic, December 2007; Joe Stephens, "Obama Got Discount on Home Loan," WP, 2 July 2008; Justin Peters, "Behind Barack's 'Suspicious' Mortgage," CJR, 2 July 2008; Deborah Howell, "More Story Than a Loan Merited," WP, 13 July 2008; Pete Rouse's 2008 interview with Jim Gilmore; Eli Saslow, "A Rising Political Star Adopts a Low-Key Strategy," WP, 17 October 2008; Wolffe, Renegade, pp. 39–40, 43; Heilemann and Halperin, Game Change, pp. 23–25; Suskind, Confidence Men, p. 50; Cassandra Butts's 2012 interview with Gilmore; DJG interviews with Nate Tamarin and Tarak Shah.

8. Mark Preston, "Obama, Thune in Demand," RC, 15 February 2005; Obama, remarks at John Lewis's 65th-birthday gala, 21 February 2005; Errin Haines, "Hundreds Gather to Celebrate Congressman's 65th Birthday,” AP, 21 February 2005; Tom Baxter and Charles Yoo, “Luminaries Applaud Congressman’s Legacy,” AJC, 22 February 2005, p. B1; “U.S. Senator Brings Powerful and Moving Message to Columbus,” Columbus Times, 24 February–2 March 2005, p. 2; Deirdre Cox Baker, “Obama Draws Hundreds in Q-C,” QCT, 24 February 2005; Mark Leibovich, “The Senator’s Humble Beginning,” WP, 24 February 2005, p. C1; Paul Ayars, “Obama Stresses Benefits of Education,” Copley, 25 February 2005; Steve Silverman, “Obama Pledges to Improve Schools, Health-Care Access,” BP, 25 February 2005, p. A3; Obama, remarks to the American Legion Legislative Rally, 1 March 2005; USS, CFR, “Foreign Assistance Oversight,” S. Hrg. 109-141, 2 March 2005, pp. 72–73, 166–67; Obama, CRec, 2 March 2005, pp. S1904–5; “BarackObama.com Rescued from the Deep End by Pool.com,” Canadian Corporate Newswire, 8 March 2005; La Risa Lynch, “Obama Discusses Budget Cuts, Veterans Issues at Town Hall Meeting,” HPC, 9 March 2005, p. 1; Mary Curtius and Tom Hamburger, “Bush’s Clear Skies Act Stalls in the Senate,” LAT, 10 March 2005; Obama on All Things Considered, NPR, 10 March 2005; Kathleen Day, “Senate Passes Bill to Restrict Bankruptcy,” WP, 11 March 2011; Jeff Zeleny, “Obama Slams Bush,” CT, 11 March 2005; Lynn Sweet, “Obama Finds Bush’s Pitch ‘Offensive,’” CST, 11 March 2005, p. 3; Obama’s CURE keynote address, 11 March 2005; Sandy Banks, “He’s Comfortable in His Skin,” LAT, 13 March 2005; Obama, CRec, 15 March 2005, pp. S2727–28; Dan Mihalopoulos and John Chase, “O’Hare Vendor Called Minority Front,” CT, 16 March 2005; Fran Spielman, “City Accuses O’Hare Firm of Using Minority Front,” CST, 16 March 2005, p. 20; Obama, CRec, 16 March 2005, pp. S2789–90, 2793; Mihalopoulos and Chase, “Governor Shuns O’Hare Scandal,” CT, 17 March 2005; Chris Fusco et al., “City Ignored Possible O’Hare ‘Front’ for Years,” CST, 17 March 2005, p. 8; USS, CVA, “Back from the Battlefield,” S. Hrg. 109-109, 17 March 2005, pp. 4–5, 22–24; Obama, CRec, 17 March 2005, pp. S2885–86; Mihalopoulos and Laurie Cohen, “City Knew O’Hare Vendor Wasn’t Minority-Run Firm,” CT, 18 March 2005; Spielman et al., “Daley: I Don’t Know Why City Slow to Act,” CST, 18 March 2005, p. 11; Dori Meinert, “Obama Marches with Democrats, but Not in Lock-step,” and “Obama’s Staff Combines Experience, Enthusiasm,” Copley, 18 March 2005; “Five Minutes with: Sen. Barack Obama,” CampusProgress.org, ca. 23 March 2005; Mickey Ciokajlo and Mihalopoulos, “Minority Firm Led by a Dead Woman,” CT, 26 March 2005; Rummana Hussain, “Dead Woman Listed as Leading Firm,” CST, 27 March 2005; Ciokajlo and Chase, “Stroger Taps Blagojevich Aide,” CT, 8 April 2005; Mike Dorning, “In Big Jump, Obamas Earn $1.67 Million,” CT, 26 September 2006; Dorning, “Employer: Michelle Obama’s Raise Well-Earned,” CT, 27 September 2006; Obama, TAOH, p. 342; Joe Stephens, “Contracts Went to a Longtime Donor,” WP, 22 August 2008; Ben Whitford, “Coal and Clear Skies,” Plenty Magazine, 31 October 2008.

9. Jeff Zeleny, “New Man on the Hill,” CT, 20 March 2005; David Mendell, “Obama Quietly Helps Draw Fine Line,” CT, 27 March 2005; Press Release, “Obama Unveils Bill to Make College More Affordable,” 28 March 2005, Obama.Senate.gov; Lynn Sweet, “Obama’s 1st Bill: Raising Pell Grants,” CST, 29 March 2005, p. 28; Obama to “Dear MoveOn Member,” 29 March 2005; Alexa Aguilar, “First on Obama’s Agenda: A More Affordable Education,” SLPD, 30 March 2005, p. B1; Patrick J. Powers, “Obama Tackles Issues in Town Hall Meeting,” BND, 30 March 2005; Paul J. Nyden, “Senator Gives Big Boost to Byrd,” Charleston Gazette, 31 March 2005, p. 1A; Nate Sandstrom, “Obama Pushes Pell Grant Bill,” DI, 31 March 2005; Ed Tibbetts, “Silvis Marine Greets Obama at Black Hawk,” QCT, 1 April 2005; Kurt Allemeier, “Obama, Q-C Marine Reunite,” MD, 1 April 2005; Obama, CRec, 5 April 2005, p.

S3205 (introducing S. 697, the Higher Education Opportunity Through Pell Grant Expansion [HOPE] Act); USS, EPW, "Pending Nominations," S. Hrg. 109-646, 6 April 2005, pp. 9, 139-41; Obama, opening statement at confirmation hearing of John Bolton, 11 April 2005; Obama, remarks at the Herblock Foundation annual lecture, 11 April 2005; Steven R. Weisman, "Nominee to U.N. Defends Record at Senate Panel," NYT, 12 April 2005; Obama Press Release, "My Visit to Walter Reed Army Medical Center," 12 April 2005, Obama.Senate.gov; Allison Horton, "Senator Obama Hosts Townhall Meeting," HPC, 13 April 2005, p. 1; Obama, CRec, 13 April 2005, pp. S3511-12; Obama, CRec, 14 April 2005, pp. S3641-43; Lawrence A. Horwich, Barack H. Obama and Michelle L. Obama 2004 Form 1040, 5 March 2005; Obama, "Pell Grant Expansion Offers Students Hope," BP, 17 April 2005, p. C3; Perry Bacon Jr., "Barack Obama: The Future of the Democratic Party?," Time, 18 April 2005; Bernard Schoenburg, "Obama Maintains Chicago Home," SJR, 19 April 2005, p. 12; Doug Wilson, "Obama Speaks Out," QHW, 20 April 2005; Obama, "Remarks at the Opening of the Abraham Lincoln Presidential Library and Museum," 20 April 2005; Schoenburg, "Each Speaker Finds Lessons in Lincoln," SJR, 20 April 2005, p. 1; USS, EPW, "Pending Nominations," S. Hrg. 109-652, 20 April 2005, pp. 17, 21-23; Obama, CRec, 20 April 2005, p. S3996; Jon Sawyer and Deirdre Shesgreen, "Obama Is Reluctant to Defend Filibuster in Judicial Battle," SLPD, 21 April 2005, p. A4; Caleb Hale, "Obama Stands Firm in His Opposition to Clear Skies Act," SI, 24 April 2005; Obama, CRec, 21 April 2005, pp. S4082 and 4087-88; USS, CFR, "The Millennium Challenge Corporation's Global Impact," S. Hrg. 109-187, 26 April 2005, pp. 18-21; Obama, "Remarks at the National Press Club," 26 April 2005; Obama, CRec, 27 April 2005, pp. S4405-6 (introducing S. 918, the E-85 Fuel Utilization and Infrastructure Development Incentives Act); Obama, CRec, 28 April 2005, pp. S4502-3, S4581-82 (introducing S. 969, the Attacking Viral Influenza Across Nations [AVIAN] Act); Obama, remarks at NAACP Fight for Freedom Fund dinner, 2 May 2005; Tom Collins, "Obama Addresses Veterans Care, Abortion, Social Security," LNT, 6 May 2005; Jonathan Bilyk, "Obama Blasts Bush, GOP in Ottawa Speech," ODT, 6 May 2005; Jo Ann Hustis, "Q&A: Obama Answers Questions at Town Meeting," MDH, 6 May 2005; Obama, remarks at the Rockford Register Star Young American Awards, 7 May 2005; Aracely Hernandez, "Crowd of 400 Cheers Obama in Sycamore," DDC, 9 May 2005; Obama on Chicago Sunday, WTTW, 8 May 2005; Obama, CRec, 10 May 2005, pp. S4830-31; USS, CFR, 12 May 2005 (John Bolton); USS, CVA, "An Open Discussion: Planning, Providing, and Paying for Veterans' Long-Term Care," S. Hrg. 109-240, 12 May 2005, pp. 48-49; Obama, CRec, 12 May 2005, pp. S5025-26 and S5058-59; "Many View Obama as He Does Lincoln," BP, 4 July 2005, p. A3; Mara Liasson, "Barack Obama, Still on Rise," All Things Considered, NPR, 8 December 2006; DJG interview with Bethann Hester.

10. Abdon M. Pallasch, "Jail's Phone Contractor Has Links to Stroger," CST, 2 May 2005, p. 27; Rick Pearson, "Governor's Ratings Tank," CT, 15 May 2005; Dave McKinney and Frank Main, "Mell's Claims Spur Grand Jury Probe of Gov's Inner Circle," CST, 15 May 2005; Fran Spielman, "Company to Give Up Disputed O'Hare Restaurants," CST, 16 May 2005, p. 12; "Oprah Thows a Party Honoring Black Women Who Inspired Her," SJMN, 17 May 2005, p. A2 (14 May); John Chase and Jeff Coen, "Blagojevich Blames Probe on Family Feud," CT, 17 May 2005; USS, CFR, "The Commission for Africa," S. Hrg. 109-203, 17 May 2005, pp. 31-34, 39-42; McKinney, "2 State Officials Say Gov's Fund-Raiser Helped Get Jobs," CST, 19 May 2005; USS, CFR, "Iran Weapons Proliferation, Terrorism, and Democracy," S. Hrg. 109-211, 19 May 2005, p. 1; John Chase, "First Lady of Illinois Linked to Developer,” CT, 20 May 2005; transcript of VeteransTown Hall Meeting with Secretary Nicholson and Senators Obama & Durbin, Wright Junior College, Chicago, 20 May 2005; David Osborne, “The Contender,” Independent, 25 May 2005; Chase, “Tony Rezko,” CT, 26 May 2005; Jackie Kucinich, “Obama and CBC Split on Cloture,” TH, 26 May 2005, p. 1; USS, CVA, “Battling the Backlog,” S. Hrg. 109-216, 26 May 2005, pp. 2–3, 61–63; Obama, CRec, 26 May 2005, pp. S5965–67; Henry Stuttley, “Obama Comes to Hear from DuPage,” CDH, 28 May 2005, p. 3; Obama, remarks at the Abraham Lincoln National Cemetery, 30 May 2005; Allison Horton, “Obama Hosts Youth Summit,” HPC, 1 June 2005, p. 1; Obama, remarks at Knox College commencement, 4 June 2005; John R. Pulliam, “Obama Big on Ceremonies,” GRM, 5 June 2005; Kevin Sampier, “Providing Inspiration,” PJS, 5 June 2005; David Kusnet, “Stumped,” TNR, 20 June 2005; Obama and Lugar, “Grounding a Pandemic,” NYT, 6 June 2005; Kathy Kiely, “Fresh Faces in Congress Stress Cooperation,” USAT, 6 June 2005, p. 10A; USS, CFR, “The Emergence of China Throughout Asia,” S. Hrg. 109-239, 7 June 2005, pp. 20–22, 28–30; Obama, CRec, 7 June 2005, p. S6159 (introducing S. 1180, the Shelter All Veterans Everywhere [SAVE] Reauthorization Act); Jackie Kucinich, “This Time, Obama and CBC Agree in Close Cloture Vote,” TH, 8 June 2005, p. 4; Obama, CRec, 8 June 2005, pp. S6178–80 and S6228 (introducing S. 1194, the Spent Nuclear Fuel Tracking and Accountability Act); USS, CVA, “Pending Health Care Related Legislation,” S. Hrg. 109-217, 9 June 2005, pp. 7–8; Jeff Zeleny, “Obama Grills Nominee on ’87 Racial Remarks,” CT, 10 June 2005; Obama, commencement address at the Pritzker School of Medicine, 10 June 2005; Obama, CRec, 13 June 2005, p. S6375; USS, CFR, “North Korea,” S. Hrg. 109-226, 14 June 2005, pp. 32–35; Lesley R. Chinn, “Obama Wants Black People to Have Courage to Lead,” CC, 15 June 2005, p. 3; Obama, CRec, 15 June 2005, pp. S6609, S6647; Obama, CRec, 16 June 2005, pp. S6690, 6698; Scott Fornek, “Obama Is No. 1 Most Popular Senator,” CST, 17 June 2005, p. 4; Carl Hulse, “Senator Seeks Details on Nominee’s ’87 Speech,” NYT, 18 June 2005; Liam Ford, “Obama’s Church Sermon to Black Dads: Grow Up,” CT, 20 June 2005; USS, CFR, “U.S. Policy Toward Russia,” S. Hrg. 109-250, 21 June 2005, pp. 40–45; Obama, CRec, 21 June 2005, p. S6897; Obama, “Here’s What It Takes to Be a Bona Fide ‘Full-Grown’ Man,” and “Obama’s Colorblind Words,” CT, 22 June 2005; Obama, CRec, 22 June 2005, p. S7008; Zeleny, “Obama Wants to See FBI File on Nominee,” CT, 23 June 2005; Rodney D. Sieh, “Obama: Debt Relief Should Be Contingent on Taylor Turn Over,” NYB, 23–29 June 2005, p. 10; Mary Ann Ford, “Obama Fields Questions in B-N,” BP, 25 June 2005, p. A1; Carrie Kepple, “Obama Finds Job ‘Exhilarating,’” PJS, 25 June 2005; Obama, address to the American Library Association, 25 June 2005; Obama, “Bound to the Word,” American Libraries, August 2005, pp. 48–52; Rummana Hussain, “Obama Fears ‘Big Brother’ Over Our Shoulders,” CST, 26 June 2005, p. 31; Zeleny, “When It Comes to Race, Obama Makes His Point—with Subtlety,” CT, 26 June 2005; USS, CVA, “Emergency Hearing to Examine the Shortfall in VA’s Medical Care Budget,” S. Hrg. 109-263, 28 June 2005, pp. 11–12, 28–29; Obama, CRec, 28 June 2005, p. S7460; La Risa Lynch, “Obama Addresses 21st Ward Town Hall Meeting,” HPC, 29 June 2005, p. 1; Peggy Noonan, “Conceit of Government,” WSJ, 29 June 2005; Zeleny, “Obama Reviews FBI File on Stalled State Nominee,” CT, 29 June 2005; Obama, CRec, 29 June 2005, pp. 7558–59; Obama, “Why I Oppose CAFTA,” CT, 30 June 2005; USS, CFR, “The Challenge to the Middle East Road Map,” S. Hrg. 109-268, 30 June 2005, pp. 26–29; Obama, CRec, 30 June 2005, pp. 7697–98; Obama, “What I See in Lincoln’s Eyes,” Time, 4 July 2005, p. 74; Molly Parker, “Up Close and Personal,” PJS, 6 July 2005; USS, CVA, “Is the VA Prepared to Meet the Needs of Our Returning Vets?,”

S. Hrg. 109-218, 6 July 2005, pp. 1–43; Sharon Woods Harris, “Obama Listens to Residents’ Concerns,” PDT, 7 July 2005; Obama in Wolffe, Renegade, p. 41.

11. Lynn Sweet, “Book Deals Put Obama in Millionaires’ Club,” CST, 16 June 2005; Warranty Deed 517233010, Northern Trust Co. Trust #10209, 21 June 2005; Federal Election Commission, “Factual and Legal Analysis,” In re Barack Obama, MUR 6035; Sandra Mathers, “Obama Lends Star Power to Nelson,” Orlando Sentinel, 10 July 2005; USS, CFR, “North American Cooperation on the Border,” S. Hrg. 109-423, 12 July 2005, pp. 37–40; USS, EPW, “Nominations of Marcus Peacock et al.,” S. Hrg. 109-725, 14 July 2005, pp. 31–35, 57–59; Sweet, “Obama Draws on African Roots as He Steps onto Global Stage,” CST, 18 July 2005, p. 30; USS, CFR, “Policy Options for Iraq,” S. Hrg. 109-312, 18–20 July 2005, p. 147; Jill Zuckman, “State Department Nominee to Go Forward After Obama Relents,” CT, 19 July 2005; Obama, CRec, 19 July 2005, pp. 8447–50 and S 8490 (introducing S. 1426, the Drinking Water Security Act); Chris L. Jenkins, “Obama Rallies N. Va. Democrats Behind Kaine,” WP, 21 July 2005; USS, CFR, “United Nations Reform,” S. Hrg. 109-356, 21 July 2005, pp. 32–33; Obama Press Release, “Darfur and the U.N.,” 22 July 2005, Obama.Senate.gov; Karen E. Pride, “Obama Discusses Sudan Crisis,” CD, 22–24 July 2005, p. 2; Sharon Cohen, “Obama Keeps Perspective as Freshman,” AP, 24 July 2005; Obama, remarks to the AFL-CIO national convention, Chicago, 25 July 2005; Obama, “Upgrading Health-Care Technology Would Save Many Lives, Much Money,” CDH, 26 July 2005, p. 10; USS, CFR, “Energy Trends in China and India,” S. Hrg. 109-326, 26 July 2005, pp. 26–27; Obama, CRec, 28 July 2005, p. S9248; Brendan R. Linn, “Power to Advise Obama for Year,” HC, 29 July 2005; Obama, CRec, 29 July 2005, pp. S9338–39; Tedd Carrison, “Point Rehab Future in Sen. Obama’s Hands,” and “Dear Sen. Obama, Please Save the Point,” HPH, 3 August 2005, pp. 1, 4, 7; Gary Washburn, “Obama Coy on Backing Daley,” CT, 5 August 2005; Fran Spielman, “Obama Won’t Commit to Daley in ’07,” CST, 5 August 2007, p. 3; Kari Lydersen, “Thousands Pay Tribute to Publisher of Ebony and Jet,” WP, 16 August 2005; James Janega and Charles Storch, “Saluting Pioneer Publisher John H. Johnson,” CT, 16 August 2005; Steve Horrell, “Talking to the Senator,” EI, 17 August 2005; Paul Hampel, “Obama Tells Crowd in Godfrey He Opposes Tapping Oil Reserve,” SLPD, 17 August 2005, p. 1; Doug Wilson, “Meeting the Masses,” QHW, 17 August 2005; Bernard Schoenburg, “Democrats Rally for Blagojevich,” SJR, 18 August 2005, p. 1; Mike Frazier, “Economic Issues Fill Sen. Obama’s Ears,” DHR, 19 August 2005; Paul Wood, “Lawmaker Expresses Reservations About War,” CNG, 19 August 2005; Joe Parrino, “Obama Talks to Voters,” DI, 22 August 2005; Stanley Ziemba, “Illinois’ Sen. Obama Steps into Peotone Airport Feud,” CT, 22 August 2005; Ziemba, “Airport Compromise on Table,” CT, 23 August 2005; Obama, CRec, 25 May 2005, pp. S5862–64; Press Release, “Obama to Visit Nuclear, Biological Weapons Destruction Facilities in Former Soviet Union,” 23 August 2005, Obama.Senate.gov; David Holley, “U.S.-Russian Efforts to Protect Arsenal Gain Steam,” LAT, 27 August 2005; Jeff Zeleny, “U.S. Focuses on Russian WMD,” CT, 27 August 2005; Zeleny, “Wasn’t the Cold War Supposed to Be Over?,” CT, 29 August 2005; Zeleny, “U.S., Ukraine Sign Pact on Germ Threat,” CT, 30 August 2005; Sweet, “Obama Part of Group Locked Up at Russian Airport,” CST, 29 August 2005, p. 2; Sweet, “Russia Plane ‘Delay’ Wasn’t a ‘Detention,’” CST, 30 August 2005, p. 20; “Lugar and Obama Urge Destruction of Conventional Weapons Stockpiles,” 30 August 2005; Zeleny, “U.S. Gets Pathogens from Ex-Soviet Republic,” CT, 3 September 2005; Zeleny, “A Foreign Classroom for Junior Senator,” CT, 23 September 2005; Mike Dorning, “In Big Jump, Obamas Earn $1.67 Million,” CT, 26 September 2006; Sholto Byrnes,

"This Cat Can Scat!," The New Review, 14 October 2007; Joe Stephens, "Obama Got Discount on Home Loan," WP, 2 July 2008; David Nather, "Obama's Quick Rise on a Non-Traditional Career Path," CQ Weekly, 21 August 2008.

12. Stephanie Zimmerman and Scott Fornek, "Daley 'Shocked' as Feds Reject Aid," CST, 3 September 2005, p. 3; Lynn Sweet, "To Obama, Tragedy More About Class Than Race," CST, 5 September 2005, p. 8; Mike Colias, "Obama Says Hurricane Victims Will Need Long-Term Support," AP, 5 September 2005; Lisa Rein, "Clinton and Bush in Charity Reprise," WP, 6 September 2005; Ron Harris, "Big Names Converge on Houston to Greet Evacuees," SLPD, 6 September 2005, p. A10; Obama, CRec, 6 September 2005, pp. S9628–29; Obama, CRec, 7 September 2005, p. S9737 (introducing S. 1630, the National Emergency Family Locator Act); Obama, CRec, 8 September 2005, pp. S9781–82, S9786, and S9844–45 (introducing S. 1638, the Hurricane Katrina Emergency Health Workforce Act); Obama Podcast #1, "Hurricane Katrina," 8 September 2005, Obama.Senate.gov; Obama on This Week, ABC, 11 September 2005; Jeff Zeleny, "Judicious Obama Turns Up Volume," CT, 12 September 2005; Obama, CRec, 12 September 2005, p. S9940 (introducing S. 1685, the Evacuation of Individuals with Special Needs Act); Allison Samuels and Richard Wolffe, "When Oprah Met Obama," Newsweek, 10 December 2007, p. 12; Carrie Budoff, "Santorum Strikes Back at Casey," PI, 13 September 2005, p. B4; Clarence Page, "We're Still Two Nations," CT, 14 September 2005; Obama Podcast #2, "Katrina Relief Spending Accountability," 14 September 2005, Obama.Senate.gov; transcript, Coburn-Obama news conference, 14 September 2004; USS, CFR, "U.S.-Indonesia Relations," S. Hrg. 109-407, 15 September 2005, pp. 3–4, 67–70; Obama, "Securing Our Energy Future," Resources for the Future, Washington, D.C., 15 September 2005; Obama, response to president's speech about Gulf Coast rebuilding effort, 15 September 2005; Dori Meinert, "Sen. Obama Broadening His Scope," Copley, 16 September 2005; Zeleny, "Obama on Bush," CT, 18 September 2005; Tracy Jan, "Obama Urges Alumni to Help Fight Poverty," BG, 18 September 2005; Obama on Face the Nation, CBS, 18 September 2005; Javier C. Hernandez, "Obama Talks Katrina Relief," HC, 19 September 2005, Carol Beggy and Mark Shanahan, "Obama Draws a Fund-Raising Crowd," BG, 19 September 2005, p. B8; Alvin Powell, "Rights, Equality Center Stage at HLS Events," Harvard Gazette, 22 September 2005; Marcella Bombardieri and Sarah Schweitzer, "Talking About U.S. Senator," BG, 25 September 2005; Dick Dahl, "Obama Leads Focus on Katrina Aftermath During Celebration of Black Alumni," Harvard Law Today, November 2005; Obama, remarks at Rahm Emanuel roast for CURE, 20 September 2005.

13. Jeff Zeleny, "Please Move Over, Dear Oprah," CT, 19 September 2005; Obama on News & Notes, NPR, 21 September 2005; Obama Podcast #3, "Poverty in America," 21 September 2005, Obama.Senate.gov; Terry Neal, "Race, Class Re-Enter Politics After Katrina," WP, 22 September 2005; Steve Ivey, "Obama: White House Blind to Poverty in U.S.," CT, 22 September 2005; Obama, CRec, 22 September 2005, pp. 10358–59 and S10365–66; Tom Coburn and Obama, "Rebuilding with Accountability," WT, 23 September 2005, p. A20; Carol Marin, "Obama Dissent Gets Thumbs Up," CST, 25 September 2005; Karen E. Pride, "Obama Voices Opposition to Photo Voting Requirement," CD, 26–27 September 2005, p. 3; Obama, CRec, 26 September 2005, p. S10435 (introducing S. 1770, the Hurricane Katrina Fast-Track Refunds for Working Families Act); Obama on The Tavis Smiley Show, 27 September 2005; Perry Bacon Jr., "Barack Obama Steps (Carefully) into the Spotlight," Time, 28 September 2005; Tedd Carrison, "Obama Last Hope to Preserve Point," and Obama, "The Point Means a Lot to the Community,” HPH, 28 September 2005, pp. 1–2, 4; USS, CFR, “Darfur Revisited,” S. Hrg. 109-868, 28 September 2005, pp. 42–44, 65–71, 86–89; Obama, CRec, 28 September 2005, pp. S10628–29; Obama Podcast #4, “Judge John Roberts Supreme Court Nomination,” 28 September 2005, Obama.Senate.gov; Emily Pierce, “Coburn, Obama Latest Odd Couple,” RC, 29 September 2005; Deirdre Shesgreen, “Measure Would Reduce Medical Mistakes and Lawsuits,” SLPD, 29 September 2005, p. A2; USS, CVA, “Pending Nominations,” S. Hrg. 109-394, 29 September 2005, pp. 7, 81–83; Obama, CRec, 29 September 2005, pp. S10654–55; Obama, “Tone, Truth, and the Democratic Party,” DailyKos.com, 30 September 2005; USS, CFR, “Iraq in U.S. Foreign Policy,” S. Hrg. 109-449, 19 October 2005, pp. 63–67; Steven R. Weisman, “Rice, in Testy Hearing, Cites Progress in Iraq,” NYT, 20 October 2005; Robin Wright, “Rice Declines to Give Senators Timeline for Iraq Withdrawal,” WP, 20 October 2005; USS, CFR, “Avian Influenza: Are We Prepared?,” S. Hrg. 109-628, 9 November 2005, pp. 55–60, 116–20; Bacon, “The Outsider’s Insider,” WP, 27 August 2007; Rouse’s 2008 interview with Gilmore; Wolffe, Renegade, p. 42; Axelrod, Believer, p. 170.

14. Tom Philpott, “Obama Fights Review of Stress Cases,” Military Update, 3 October 2005; Tedd Carrison, “Obama Calls Emergency Point Meeting,” HPH, 5 October 2005, p. 1; USS, EPW, “Kyoto Protocol,” S. Hrg. 109-1016, 5 October 2005, pp. 20, 40–42, 79–80, 217; Obama, CRec, 5 October 2005, pp. S11069–70 and 11138–39 (introducing S. 1821, the Pandemic Preparedness and Response Act); Obama Podcast #5, “Avian Flu Preparedness,” 5 October 2005, Obama.Senate.gov; USS, EPW, “The Roles of the Environmental Protection Agency et al.,” S. Hrg. 109-978, 6 October 2005, p. 1; Judy Ogutu, “Senator Obama to Visit Kenya Next Year,” The Standard (Nairobi), 10 October 2005; “Sen. Obama Deserves Kudos,” HPH, 12 October 2005, p. 4; Obama Podcast #6, “From the Road,” 14 October 2005, Obama.Senate.gov; Christopher Wills, “Obama Pushes for Mix of Taxes, Spending Cuts for Katrina,” AP, 14 October 2005; Caleb Hale, “Obama Sees Progress, Frustration as Senator,” SI, 15 October 2005; Jeff Zeleny, “Voters Give Obama, Durbin Good Marks,” CT, 16 October 2005; Bernard Schoenburg, “Sen. Obama Sees Little ‘Genuine Debate’ in New Job,” SJR, 16 October 2005, p. 15; Tara Fasol, “Barack Obama on Hand to Answer Questions,” WFDA, 17 October 2005; USS, EPW, “S. 1772, The Gas Petroleum Refiner Improvement and Community Empowerment Act of 2005,” S. Hrg. 109-1001, 18 October 2005, pp. 8–9, 25–26; Obama, CRec, 18 October 2005, pp. S11451–52; Obama Podcast #7, “Impressions of the Senate After the First 10 Months,” 19 October 2005, Obama.Senate.gov; Obama, CRec, 20 October 2005, p. S11647; Obama, “Thanks for the Feedback,” DailyKos.com, 20 October 2005; Joy Bennett Kinnon, “Michelle Obama,” Ebony, March 2006, pp. 58ff.; Kalari Girtley and Brian Wellner, “Michelle Obama Is Hyde Park’s Career Mom,” HPH, 14 February 2007, pp. 7–8, 16–17; Jonathan Darman, “Mr. Obama’s Washington,” Newsweek, 30 June 2008; Eli Saslow, “A Rising Political Star Adopts a Low-Key Strategy,” WP, 17 October 2008; Ashley Fantz, “Getting Inside Obama’s Brain,” CNN.com, 13 November 2008; Rouse’s 2008 interview with Gilmore; Paul Schwartzman, “Mr. Obama’s (Giddy) Neighborhood,” WP, 18 January 2009; Michael Scherer and Nancy Gibbs, “Interview with the First Lady,” Time, 21 May 2009; Wolffe, Renegade, p. 42; Jonathan Van Meter, “Leading by Example,” Vogue, April 2013, pp. 248–55, 318–19; Axelrod, Believer, pp. 168, 171.

15. Michael Kelly, “Buffetts: Barack a Name to Note,” OWH, 25 October 2005, p. B1; Obama, CRec, 25 October 2005, pp. S11814–15; Obama, “Teaching Our Kids in a 21st Century Economy,” Center for American Progress, 25 October 2005; Obama, statement on the death of Rosa Parks, 25 October 2005;

Obama Podcast #8, “Remembering Rosa Parks,” 26 October 2005, Obama.Senate.gov; Obama, CRec, 26 October 2005, pp. S11909–10; Obama on Talk of the Nation, NPR, 26 October 2005; Lynn Sweet, “Opening Soon: Obama’s School,” CST, 27 October 2005, p. 45; Obama, CRec, 27 October 2005, pp. S11972–73; USS, CVA, “The Rising Number of Disabled Veterans Deemed Unemployable,” S. Hrg. 109-425, 27 October 2005, pp. 28–31; Christina Nuckols, “Ill. Senator Gives Kaine a Hand on Stump,” Virginian Pilot, 31 October 2005; Jeff E. Shapiro, “Kaine: ‘We’ve Got the Momentum,’” RTD, 31 October 2005, p. B1; Obama, “The Political Movement in Black America,” Ebony, November 2005, pp. 116ff.; Obama and Richard Lugar, “Challenges Ahead for Cooperative Threat Reduction,” Council on Foreign Relations, CRec, 1 November 2005, pp. S12130–31; Jeff Zeleny, “Obama-Lugar Proposal Targets Stockpiles of Conventional Weapons,” CT, 2 November 2005; AP, “Seven-Hour Funeral Pays Tribute to Parks,” 2 November 2005; Tom Curry, “Obama Builds Foreign Policy Credentials,” MSNBC.com, 3 November 2005; Obama, CRec, 3 November 2005, p. S12312; Ben Roberts, “Obama Leads Democrats in Efforts on Bird Flu,” SLPD, 6 November 2005, p. B4; Zeleny, “Obama Dabbles in a Moment of Comedy,” CT, 8 November 2005; Obama, CRec, 8 November 2005, pp. S12521–22 and 12531 (introducing S. 1975, the Deceptive Practices and Voter Intimidation Prevention Act); Obama, remarks regarding the Kaiser Family Foundation’s “Sex on TV” report, 9 November 2005; Lisa De Moraes, “Television More Oversexed Than Ever,” WP, 10 November 2005; Zeleny, “Study Twice as Much Sex Aired on TV,” CT, 10 November 2005; Obama, remarks at the National Women’s Law Center, 10 November 2005; Obama Podcast #9, “Protecting Voters Against Deceptive Practices,” 10 November 2005, Obama.Senate.gov; James A. Barnes and Peter Bell, “In the Year 2025,” NJ, 12 November 2005, pp. 3516–17; Obama, “Cutting ‘Pork’ to Rebuild Coast,” CT, 12 November 2005; Dan Lavoie, “A World of Thanks,” DS, 12 November 2005; Eugene Scott, “Sen. Obama Urges Arizonans to Vote for Pederson,” Arizona Republic, 13 November 2005, p. B5; Emilia Arnold, “Obama, Pederson Call for Lower Education Costs,” ASU Web Devil, 14 November 2005; Obama, CRec, 15 November 2005, p. S12805, 12817–18; Obama, CRec, 16 November 2005, p. S12943; USS, EPW, “Oversight to Examine Transportation Fuels of the Future,” S. Hrg. 109-1012, 16 November 2005, pp. 8–9, 36–37, 70, 93; Obama Podcast #10, “Fiscal Responsibility and Gulf Coast Reconstruction,” 16 November 2005, Obama.Senate.gov; Obama, remarks at the Robert F. Kennedy Human Rights Award ceremony, 16 November 2005; USS, CFR, “African Organizations and Institutions,” S. Hrg. 109-900, 17 November 2005, pp. 18, 22–25; Obama, CRec, 17 November 2005, p. S13090–92, 13121–22, 13124, 13131–32, and 13174–75 (introducing S. 2047, the Healthy Communities Act, and S. 2048, the Lead Free Toys Act); Zeleny, “Obama’s National Appeal Rallies an Army of Backers,” CT, 20 November 2005; Dennis Conrad, “Obama Turns to Speeches to Spread the Word,” AP, 21 November 2005; Obama, “Moving Forward in Iraq,” Chicago Council on Foreign Relations, 22 November 2005; Peter Slevin, “Obama Calls on Bush to Admit Iraq Errors,” WP, 23 November 2005; Zeleny, “Obama: Pull GIs from Iraq Gradually,” CT, 23 November 2005; “Wise Words from Obama,” SJR, 23 November 2005, p. 6; Katherine Hutt Scott, “Obama Picked as Most Likely to Become President,” Gannett, 23 November 2005; Glen Ford and Peter Gamble, “Obama Mouths Mush on War,” Black Commentator 161, 1 December 2005; Obama, U.S. Senate Financial Disclosure Report, 15 May 2006; Christi Parsons and Jill Zuckman, “Obama Says He Was Unaware of Stocks in Trust Fund,” CT, 8 March 2007; Lynn Sweet, “Stock Answers,” CST, 8 March 2007, p. 16; Mike Dorning, “Questions Stalk Obama’s Portfolio,” CT, 9 March 2007.

16. Obama, Podcast #11, “Happy Thanksgiving,” 22 November 2005, Obama.Senate.gov; Sarah Brown, “Obama ’85 Masters Balancing Act,” Daily Princetonian, 7 December 2005; Richard G. Lugar and Obama, “Junkyard Dogs of War,” WP, 3 December 2005; Jeff Zeleny and Rick Pearson, “Obama: Iraq War Splits Democrats,” CT, 6 December 2005; Martin Schram, “Senate Duo Exception to Partisan Bickering,” Scripps Howard, 6 December 2005; Ryan Lizza, “Why Barack Obama Should Run for President in 2008,” TNR, 6 December 2005; Eric Krol, “Obama Heads to Iraq in January to Assess Progress,” CDH, 7 December 2005, p. 7; Burt Constable, “Obama’s Ready to Be President If We Can Convince Him to Run,” CDH, 8 December 2005, p. 15; Krol, “Better Than Expected,” CDH, 2 January 2006, p. 1; DJG interview with Allison Davis.

17. Jeff Zeleny, “Sen. Obama Gets Grammy Nomination in Narration Category,” CT, 9 December 2005; Obama, The Al Franken Show, Air America, 9 December 2005; Wes Allison, “State Party Hitched to Rising Star,” SPT, 10 December 2005, p. A1; Steve Bousquet, “Obama Rocks the House at Florida’s Convention,” SPT, 11 December 2005, p. B4; Obama, CRec, 14 December 2005, pp. S13528–29; Obama and Mel Martinez, “Coming to America,” WSJ, 15 December 2005; transcript of Obama and Martinez press conference, 15 December 2005; Obama, CRec, 15 December 2005, pp. S13629–30; Obama, CRec, 16 December 2005, pp. S13773, 13788 (introducing S. 2125, the Democratic Republic of the Congo Relief, Security and Democracy Promotion Act); Obama Podcast #12, “The Reauthorization of the Patriot Act,” 16 December 2005, Obama.Senate.gov; Deirdre Shesgreen, “Democrats’ Rising Star Takes First Year Carefully,” SLPD, 16 December 2005; Sheryl Gay Stolberg and Eric Lichtblau, “Senators Thwart Bush Bid to Renew Law on Terrorism,” NYT, 17 December 2005; Kurt Erickson, “Durbin Helps Kill Patriot Act Renewal,” BP, 17 December 2005, p. A1; Dori Meinert, “Democrats Assail Wiretaps,” PJS, 20 December 2005; Obama, CRec, 20 December 2005, pp. 14149–50 and S14187–88 (introducing S. 2149, the Summer Term Education Programs for Upward Performance [STEP UP] Act); Obama, CRec, 21 December 2005, p. 14248; Zeleny, “The First Time Around: Sen. Obama’s Freshman Year,” and “Q&A with Sen. Barack Obama,” CT, 25 December 2005; Obama and Sam Brownback, “Policy Adrift on Darfur,” WP, 27 December 2005; Heilemann and Halperin, Game Change, pp. 29–30.

18. Jeff Zeleny, “Obama Making 1st Trip to Iraq,” CT, 5 January 2006; Jason Straziuso, “Obama: Involve More Minorities in Iraq Government,” AP, 7 January 2006; Borzou Daragahi, “Congressmen Warn Iraqis to Shape Up,” CT, 8 January 2006; Lynn Sweet, “Obama Sees No Military Solution in Iraq,” CST, 8 January 2006, p. A8; Eric Krol, “Obama: ‘Everything’s Up for Grabs’ in Iraq,” CDH, 8 January 2006, p. 7; Dori Meinert, “Obama: Obstacles Still in Iraq,” SJR, 8 January 2006; “U.S. Helicopter Crash Kills 12 in Iraq,” CNN.com, 9 January 2006; Obama Podcast #13, “From the Road: Speaking with American Troops in Iraq,” 9 January 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Herb Keinon, “Rising Star Illinois Senator Obama on First Visit Here,” JP, 10 January 2006, p. 5; Chuck Goudie, “Obama Visits Remote Israeli Town with Chicago Ties,” ABC7 Chicago, 11 January 2006; “JUF Leaders Join Obama on Israel Visit,” JUF News, [11 January 2006]; Goudie, “Obama Meets with Arafat’s Successor,” ABC7 Chicago, 12 January 2006; Goudie, “Obama Wraps Up Middle East Trip,” ABC7 Chicago, 13 January 2006; Obama Podcast #14, “From the Road: Israel and the Palestinian Territories,” 14 January 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Flynn Murphy, “Obama Townhall,” NS, 18 January 2006; USS, CFR, “New Initiatives in Cooperative Threat Reduction,” S. Hrg. 109-880, 9 February 2006, pp. 5–6, 23–29, 44–46; Ray

Gibson and David Jackson, "Rezko Owns Vacant Lot Next to Obama's Home," CT, 1 November 2006; Dave McKinney and Chris Fusco, "Obama Spells Out 'Regret' After Land Deal with Rezko," CST, 5 November 2006, p. A4; "How Obama Won Over a Tiny Arab Village," JP, 22 February 2008; Obama's CT and CST interviews, 14 March 2008; Goudie, "Obama's Foreign Mission #2," ABC7 Chicago, 17 July 2008; Goudie, "Obama World Trip Leaves Personal Controversies Behind," CDH, 28 July 2008.

19. Jeff Zeleny, "Obama Is Democrats' Point Man on Ethics," CT, 18 January 2006; Obama on Good Morning America, ABC, and American Morning, CNN, 18 January 2006; Obama Press Release, "Honest Leadership and Open Government," 18 January 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Obama, CRec, 18 January 2006, p. S14 (introducing S. 2179, the CLEAN UP Act); Mike Dorning and Zeleny, "Democrats Put Their Ethics Reform Package on the Table," and Zeleny, "Obama: 'Plantation' Remark Warranted," CT, 19 January 2006; Obama on On the Record, Fox News, 20 January 2006; Lynn Sweet, "Obama to Pay Full Fare on Private Jet," CST, 21 January 2006, p. 6; John Kass, "Obama Might Be Walking on Hot Water," CT, 22 January 2006; Sweet, "After Cautious, Bipartisan Year, Obama Opens New Chapter," CST, 22 January 2006, p. A12; Obama on Meet the Press, NBC, 22 January 2006; Sweet, "Obama Makes It Very Clear: No White House Bid in '08," CST, 23 January 2006, p. 4; "Obama to Vote No on the Nomination of Judge Alito to the Supreme Court," 24 January 2006; Obama Podcast #15, "Today's Meeting on Iraq with President Bush," 25 January 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Obama, CRec, 26 January 2006, pp. S190–91 and S228–29 (introducing S. 2201, the FAA Fair Labor Management Dispute Resolution Act); Obama, remarks at the Lobbying Reform Summit, 26 January 2006; Jamie Francisco, "Obama Packs 'Em In, Riffs on Iraq, Alito," CT, 31 January 2006; Obama Podcast #16, "Supreme Court Nomination of Samuel Alito," 31 January 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Obama on the CBS Evening News, 31 January 2006; Jodi Enda, "Great Expectations," American Prospect, February 2006, pp. 22ff.; Obama on Good Morning America, ABC, 1 February 2006; Obama, CRec, 1 February 2006, p. S431; Sweet, "Obama in Flight," TH, 2 February 2006, p. 15; USS, CVA, "Jobs for Veterans Act Three Years Later," S. Hrg. 109-632, 2 February 2006, pp. 9–10; Rachelle Treiber, "Sen. Obama Hosts Town Meeting in South Holland," DS, 4 February 2006; Chas Reilly, "Obama Visits South Suburban College," NIT, 4 February 2006; Dan Balz and Haynes Johnson, The Battle for America 2008 (Viking, 2009), p. 26; Heilemann and Halperin, Game Change, pp. 30–31; Axelrod, Believer, pp. 173–75.

20. Obama to John McCain, 2 February 2006; McCain to Obama, 6 February 2006; Obama to McCain, 6 February 2006; Elana Schor, "McCain Counters Obama with Sharp Rebuttal on Lobbying Reform," TH, 7 February 2006, p. 3; Jeff Zeleny, "McCain Slams 'Posturing' Obama," CT, 7 February 2006; Lynn Sweet, "McCain: Obama Is Insincere," CST, 7 February 2006, p. 8; Eric Krol, "McCain, Obama Sparring in Exchange of Letters," CDH, 7 February 2006, p. 13; Josh Gerstein, "McCain Harangues Obama Over Bipartisan Lobbying Reform Effort," NYS, 7 February 2006, p. 5; Zeleny, "McCain, Obama Bury the Hatchet," CT, 8 February 2006; Sweet, "Obama on McCain: 'I Think His Feelings Got Bruised,'" CST, 8 February 2006, p. 3; Obama and Jay Inslee, "Salvaging the Auto Industry," BG, 8 February 2006; Obama, CRec, 8 February 2006, pp. S864, S867–68 (introducing S. 2257, the Hurricane Katrina Working Family Tax Relief Act, S. 2259, the Congressional Ethics Enforcement Commission Act, and S. 2261, the Transparency and Integrity in Earmarks Act); Obama, "Testimony Before the Senate Rules Committee," 8 February 2006; Sheryl Gay Stolberg, "Differences Emerge Over Efforts to Restrict Lobbying," NYT, 9 February 2006; "McCain v. Obama," and Sweet, "Obama and Clarity," TH, 9 February 2006, pp. 26, 27;

Tory Newmyer, “Feud Settled, but Paths Split,” RC, 9 February 2006; Zeleny, “‘Pen Pals’ McCain, Obama Talk Pork,” CT, 9 February 2006; Sweet, “‘Pen Pals’ Obama, McCain Call a Truce,” CST, 9 February 2006, p. 3; Obama Podcast #17, “Lobbying and Ethics Reform,” 9 February 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Eric Pfeiffer, “Senate’s Golden Boy Shines Not So Brightly,” WT, 10 February 2006, p. A5; Howard Fineman, “Mark Salter: McCain’s Closest Aide,” Newsweek, 18 July 2008; Pete Rouse’s July 2008 interview with Jim Gilmore; Heilemann and Halperin, Game Change, pp. 323–25.

21. Christina Chapman, “Morris Greets Obama,” JHN, 13 February 2006; Obama, CRec, 13 February 2006, pp. S1107–8; Obama, CRec, 14 February 2006, pp. S1177–78, 1179 (introducing S. 2280, the Stopping Transactions Which Operate to Promote Fraud, Risk and Under-Development [STOP FRAUD] Act and S. 2286, the Equality for Two-Parent Families Act); David Jackson, “Obama, Durbin Propose Federal Mortgage Reform,” CT, 15 February 2006; Dennis Conrad, “Obama: The Senator with the Midas Touch,” AP, 15 February 2006; USS, CFR, “The President’s Budget for Foreign Affairs,” S. Hrg. 109-769, 15 February 2006, pp. 44–46; USS, EPW, “Environmental Protection Agency’s Fiscal Year 2007 Budget,” S. Hrg. 109-1022, 15 February 2006, p. 1; Obama Podcast #18, “Darfur: Current Policy Not Enough,” 15 February 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; USS, CVA, “Hearing on Proposed Fiscal Year 2007 Budget for Department of Veterans Affairs Programs,” S. Hrg. 109-627, 16 February 2006, pp. 6–7; Obama, CRec, 16 February 2006, pp. S1401 and S1426–27; Obama, remarks at Ethics Commission press conference, 16 February 2006; Obama on PBS NewsHour, 16 February 2006; Perry Bacon Jr., “The Exquisite Dilemma of Being Obama,” Time, 20 February 2006, pp. 24–28; Jeff Zeleny, “Stepping Off the Sidelines, into the Spotlight,” CT, 26 February 2006; Alexander Bolton, “Dems Cool on Obama Bill,” TH, 28 February 2006, p. 1; Obama Press Release, “Energy Security Is National Security,” Governors’ Ethanol Coalition, 28 February 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; David Bernstein, “Battle Lines,” CM, March 2006; Seth Borenstein, “Obama’s Fuel-Efficiency Swap,” KRDC, 1 March 2006; Obama, CRec, 1 March 2006, pp. S1581–82 (introducing S. 2348, the Nuclear Release Notice Act); Obama Podcast #19, “Energy Security Is National Security,” 1 March 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Obama, CRec, 2 March 2006, p. S1651 (introducing S. 2358, the VA Hospital Quality Report Act, and S. 2359, the Hospital Quality Report Card Act); USS, CFR, “A Nuclear Iran: Challenges and Responses,” S. Hrg. 109-679, 2 March 2006, pp. 39–43 (“We have generally, across the board, said that a nuclear Iran is unacceptable. I happen to share that view”); Sheryl Gay Stolberg, “Senate Passes Legislation to Renew Patriot Act,” NYT, 3 March 2006; Obama, CRec, 3 March 2006, p. S1678; Kathy Kiely, “Democrats See Obama as Face of ‘Reform and Change,’” USAT, 6 March 2006; Obama, CRec, 7 March 2006, pp. S1822–23; Stolberg, “Fight Looms on Lawmakers’ Use of Corporate Jets,” NYT, 8 March 2006; Obama, CRec, 8 March 2006, p. S1868; Deirdre Shesgreen, “Obama Moves into Leadership Role on Ethics Legislation,” SLPD, 9 March 2006, p. A5; USS, EPW, “Oversight on the Nuclear Regulatory Commission,” S. Hrg. 109-1027, 9 March 2006, pp. 9–10, 26–30; Obama, CRec, 9 March 2006, p. S1953; Dori Meinert, “Obama Carries a Tune,” SJR, 12 March 2006, p. 11; Obama on Face the Nation, CBS, 12 March 2006; Jeff Zeleny, “A Tuneful Obama Leads Gridiron Potshots at Cheney,” CT, 13 March 2006; Lynn Sweet, “Obama in Prime Form at Gridiron Club Roast,” CST, 13 March 2006, p. 28; Leonard Pitts Jr., “Don’t Assume Obama Will Be a Modern Savior,” MH, 13 March 2006; Obama Press Release, “21st Century Schools for a 21st Century Economy,” 13 March 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Obama, CRec, 14 March 2006, pp. S2082–83, S2110–11, and S2128; Maureen Dowd, “What’s Better? His Empty Suit or Her Baggage?,” NYT, 15

March 2006; Harold W. Anderson, "Obama, Others Served Up Laughs at Annual Gridiron Club Dinner," OWH, 19 March 2006, p. B9; "An Evening of Laughs with Obama at Gridiron Dinner," BSB, 13 April 2006, p. 7.

22. USS, CFR, "Post-Palestinian Election Challenges in the Middle East," S. Hrg. 109-903, 15 March 2006, p. 1; USS, CVA, "Looking at Our Homeless Veterans Programs," S. Hrg. 109-533, 16 March 2006, pp. 36–38; Obama, CRec, 16 March 2006, pp. S2227, 2237–38, 2289–90, and S2335 (introducing S. 2441, the Innovation Districts for School Improvement Act); Obama Podcast #20, "21st Century Schools for a 21st Century Economy," 16 March 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Kirk Victor, "Reason to Smile," and "In His Own Words: Barack Obama," NJ, 18 March 2006, pp. 18–27; Anne E. Kornblut, "But Will They Love Him Tomorrow?," NYT, 19 March 2006; Obama, remarks at Fellowship Baptist Church, Chicago, 20 March 2006; Demetrius Patterson, "Englewood Community Rallies Against Violence," CD, 22 March 2006, p. 3; Bacon, "Obama Reaches Out with Tough Love," WP, 3 May 2007.

23. Rosalind Rossi, "4 Indicted in S. Suburb Gambling," CST, 18 June 1992, p. 74; Michael Perlstein, "Brothel Case Expands into Miami," NOTP, 7 August 2002, p. 1; Larry Lebowitz, "Multicity Brothel Network Smashed," MH, 7 August 2002; "Federal Jury Convicts Defendant in 'Circuit' Prostitution Case," States News Service, 9 January 2004; John T. Slania, "On Broadway: City's Most Profitable Bank," CCB, 25 October 2004; Rick Pearson, "Parties Get Set for Busy Primary," CT, 5 December 2005; Greg Hinz, "Halo Tarnish," CCB, 10 December 2005, Hinz, "Sen. Obama, Elevated to Saintly Status, Pulls an Earthly Political Deal," CCB, 12 December 2005; Eric Zorn, "For His Sake, Stroger's Talk Better Be Phony," CT, 2 February 2006; Mickey Ciokajlo, "Ex-Aide to Daley Forges Own Path," CT, 10 March 2006; Hinz, "Gun Shop Owner, Felon Got Loans from State Treasurer Hopeful," CCB, 13 March 2006; Ciokajlo, "Stroger Holding Off Claypool," CT, 14 March 2006; Ciokajlo, "Stroger Suffers Stroke," Courtney Flynn and David Jackson, "Loans to Crime Figure Haunt State Treasurer Hopeful," and "For the Democrats: Mangieri," CT, 15 March 2006; Janet Rausa Fuller, "Giannoulis Secures Dem Treasurer's Nod," CST, 22 March 2006; Jeff Berkowitz, "Another 'Just Another Pol' Day for Senator Obama," Blogspot.com, 22 March 2006; Ciokajlo and Robert Becker, "Stroger Wins. Can He Serve?," and Eric Zorn, "Obama on the Fence Is a Fat Target," CT, 23 March 2006; Sunil Garg, "A Profile in Discouragement—Why Was Obama MIA in the Cook County Board Race?," CT, 24 March 2006; ". . . And Obama Is Confounding," CT, 28 April 2006; Bob Secter and John McCormick, "Sweet—and Sour—Home Chicago," CT, 23 June 2008; Mick Dumke, "Alexi's Albatross," CR, 3 December 2009; Axelrod, Believer, p. 180; DJG interviews with Dan Shomon, Forrest Claypool, Leslie Hairston, Freddrenna Lyle, and John Rogers Jr.

24. Alexander Bolton, "Sens. Obama, Coburn Make Unlikely Duo," TH, 28 March 2006, p. 1; Obama, CRec, 28 March 2006, pp. S2434–35, S2441–43; USS, EPW, "The Impact of the Elimination of MTBE," S. Hrg. 109-1026, 29 March 2006, pp. 35–36; Obama Podcast #21, "Improving Chemical Plant Security," 29 March 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Sheryl Gay Stolberg, "Senate Passes Pared-Down Lobbying Bill," NYT, 30 March 2006; Jeffrey H. Birnbaum, "Senate Passes Lobbying Bill," WP, 30 March 2006; USS, CVA, "Legislative Presentations of the National Association of State Directors of Veterans Affairs et al.," S. Hrg. 109-564, 30 March 2006, p. 34; Obama, CRec, 30 March 2006, pp. S2611–12; Jeff Zeleny, "Writing Bug Bites Obama Again," CT, 31 March 2006; Mark Pazniokas, "A Rising Star Visits Hartford," HC, 31 March 2006, p. A1; Obama, "Fueling the Future," American Prospect, April 2006, p. 12; William

Yardley, "Support for Iraq War Strains Good Will as Lieberman Seeks Re-Election," NYT, 2 April 2006; Obama on This Week, ABC, 2 April 2006; Obama, CRec, 3 April 2006, pp. S2722–23; Obama Press Release, "Energy Independence and the Safety of Our Planet," 3 April 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; John Chase, "Obama Scolds Bush on Environment, Energy Proposals," CT, 4 April 2006; Obama, CRec, 4 April 2006, p. S2805 (introducing S. 2506, the Healthy Places Act); Obama, "Restoring America's Promise of Opportunity, Prosperity and Growth," Brookings Institution, 5 April 2006; Obama Podcast #22, "Immigration Reform," 5 April 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Obama, CRec, 6 April 2006, pp. S3178–79; Rob Hotakainen, "Riding High, Obama Hits the Road for His Party," MST, 8 April 2006, p. A1; Deborah Caulfield Rybak, "Obama Gets DFLers on Their Feet," MST, 9 April 2006, p. B3; David Jackson, "Loans Cast Pall Over Candidate," CT, 9 April 2006; "Deposit Some Answers, Please," CT, 12 April 2006; Rick Pearson and Jackson, "Obama Leans on Treasurer Nominee," CT, 13 April 2006; Harvey Wineberg, Barack H. and Michelle L. Obama, 2005 Form 1040, 15 April 2006; Jackson, "Giannoulis Speaks Up on Loans," CT, 27 April 2006; Scott Fornek, "Giannoulis: I Take It Back," CST, 27 April 2006, p. 6; "Giannoulis Is Elusive," CT, 28 April 2006; Eric Krol, "Treasurer Candidate Squeezed by Catch-22 Over Loans," CDH, 5 May 2006, p. 16; Obama, U.S. Senate Financial Disclosure Report, 15 May 2006; Travis Tritten, "Execs Bet on Development," (Myrtle Beach) Sun News, 21 May 2006; "SunCruz Sunshine," Sun News, 23 May 2006; Patrick Danner, "Boulis Kin, 2 Felons Own Martha's Site," MH, 18 June 2006; Garrison Wells, "SunCruz Chief Sees Calculated Risk in Casinos," Sun News, 25 June 2006; Tritten, "Casinos Offer Fee to County," Sun News, 28 September 2006; Jacob Weisberg, "The Path to Power," Men's Vogue, September 2006, pp. 218–23; Mike Dorning, "In Big Jump, Obamas Earn $1.67 Million," CT, 26 September 2006; Dorning, "Employer: Michelle Obama's Raise Well-Earned," CT, 27 September 2006; Tritten, "Casino Deal Under Attack," Sun News, 17 October 2006; Tritten, "Panel Reviews Casino Tax Talks," Sun News, 24 February 2007; Bob Secter, "For Obama, Charity Really Began in the U.S. Senate," CT, 25 April 2007; Mike Dorning and Christi Parsons, "Carefully Crafting the Obama 'Brand,'" CT, 12 June 2007; Bacon, "The Outsider's Insider," WP, 27 August 2007; Steve Warmbir and Frank Main, "The Face of the New Mafia," CST, 24 February 2008, p. 2; James Bone, "Boneheaded Deal Haunts House Obama Built," TOL, 7 March 2008; Lauren Collins, "The Other Obama," New Yorker, 10 March 2008; Michael Crowley, "Mutual Contempt," TNR, 26 March 2008; David Jackson et al., "$20 Million in Loans to Felons," CT, 2 April 2010; DJG interviews with Rob and Lisa Fisher and Madhuri Kommareddi.

25. Obama, "Town Hall Meeting at Loyola University," 10 April 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Laura Burns, "Obama Talks Politics, Future," Loyola Phoenix, 12 April 2006; John Barrett, "York Visit Senator's 46th Town Hall Forum," EP, 14 April 2006; Caleb Hale, "Obama Discusses State, National Issues in Carbondale Meeting," SI, 15 April 2006; Obama on Public Affairs with Jeff Berkowitz, 17 April 2006; Tom Johnson, "Senator Obama Tells BHS Students Change Is Needed in Government," BCR, 20 April 2006; Bernard Schoenburg, "Durbin: Obama Shouldn't Rule Out National Office," SJR, 20 April 2006, p. 5; Perry Bacon Jr. and Massimo Calabresi, "The Up-and-Comers," Time, 24 April 2006, p. 38; Obama on Charlie Rose, PBS, with Nicholas Kristof, 25 April 2006; USS, CVA, "VA Research," S. Hrg. 109-598, 27 April 2006, p. 1; Obama Podcast #23, "Update on Darfur," 27 April 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Deanna Belandi, "Obama Uses Town Hall Meetings to Connect as a Regular Guy," AP, 30 April 2006; Holli Chmela, "Rally Urges U.S. Role in Sudan," CT, 1 May 2006; Obama, CRec, 1

May 2006, pp. S3779–80; Antonio Olivo and Oscar Avila, “United They March,” CT, 2 May 2006; Obama, CRec, 2 May 2006, pp. S3879–80; Jeff Zeleny, “Senate OKs Plan to Open Storm Bids,” CT, 3 May 2006; Obama, CRec, 4 May 2006, pp. S4014, S4029; USS, CFR, “Housing and Urbanization Issues in Africa,” S. Hrg. 109-946, 4 May 2006, pp. 4–5; Obama Podcast #24, “Immigration Rallies,” 4 May 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Obama, remarks at Chicago benefit dinner for Facing History and Ourselves, 5 May 2006; Don Walton, “Obama: Door Opens for Democrats,” Lincoln Journal Star, 7 May 2006, p. C1; Jason Kuiper, “Sen. Obama Lauds Nelson During Visit to Omaha,” OWH, 7 May 2006, p. B1; Kyle Michaels, “My Interview with Barack Obama,” Blogspot.com, 7 May 2006; Josh Noel, “Illinois Vets Can Reapply for Benefits,” CT, 9 May 2006; Hal Dardick, “Obama Still to Press Spill Bill,” CT, 10 May 2006; Obama, CRec, 10 May 2006, pp. S4324–25; Obama, CRec, 11 May 2006, p. S4425; Obama, remarks at Emily’s List annual luncheon, 11 May 2006; Dennis Conrad, “Obama Mocks Bush’s ‘Subliminal Messages’ of Iraq Victory,” AP, 11 May 2006; Obama Podcast #25, “A Real Solution for High Gas Prices,” 11 May 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Obama on Late Night with Conan O’Brien, 12 May 2006; Megan Reichgott, “Obama Jokes About Possible Presidential Bid in ’08,” AP, 13 May 2006; Obama, CRec, 17 May 2006, pp. S4674–75; USS, EPW, “Nominations of Molly O’Neill and Dale Klein,” S. Hrg. 109-1036, 17 May 2006, pp. 10–11; Obama Podcast #26, “Honoring Our Commitment to Veterans,” 18 May 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; USS, CFR, “Iran’s Political/Nuclear Ambitions and U.S. Policy Options,” S. Hrg. 109-763, 17–18 May 2006, pp. 38–40, 117–20; Jeff Zeleny, “Obama Writes of ‘Spooky’ Good Luck,” CT, 20 May 2006; Lynn Sweet, “In New Book, Obama Muses on Politics,” CST, 20 May 2006, p. 6; Obama, prepared remarks at SIU School of Medicine commencement, Springfield, 20 May 2006; Sweet, “Obama Touts 2nd Volume,” CST, 21 May 2006, p. A9; Daniel Pike, “Obama Talks to SIU Medical Graduates,” SJR, 21 May 2006, p. 1; Obama, CRec, 23 May 2006, pp. S4941–42, S4953; Obama, CRec, 24 May 2006, pp. S5055, S5106–7; Marc Ambinder, “Teacher and Apprentice,” Atlantic Monthly, December 2007; Mundy, Michelle, p. 165; Wolffe, Renegade, p. 45; DJG interviews with Larry Suffredin, Martha Minow, and Rob Fisher.

26. Hillary Rodham Clinton and Obama, “Making Patient Safety the Centerpiece of Medical Liability Reform,” New England Journal of Medicine 354 (25 May 2006): 2205; Obama, CRec, 25 May 2006, pp. S5177–78, S5296; USS, CVA, “Veterans Affairs Data Privacy Breach,” S. Hrg. 109-577, 25 May 2006, pp. 13–14; Jeff Zeleny, “Obama in ’08?,” CT, 28 May 2006; Lynn Sweet, “Chatter About Obama’s 2008 Plans Picks Up,” CST, 26 May 2006, p. 32; Amanda Reavy, “Durbin: Obama Should Run for President,” SJR, 29 May 2006, p. 8; Eric Zorn, “Better ’08 Than Never?,” CT, 31 May 2006; “Obama Presidential Talk Quite Premature,” BP, 2 June 2006, p. A6; Scott Helman and Lisa Wangsness, “Candidates Rally for the Homestretch,” BG, 2 June 2006; John J. Monahan, “Patrick Basks in Obama’s Glow,” Worcester Telegram & Gazette, 2 June 2006, p. A6; Joe Klein, “Barack Obama Isn’t Not Running for President,” Time, 5 June 2006, p. 28; David Sirota, “Mr. Obama Goes to Washington,” Nation, 26 June 2006, pp. 20–23 (Web posted 8 June); Harry Reid, The Good Fight (Berkley Books, 2009), p. 299; Heilemann and Halperin, Game Change, pp. 33–37; Axelrod, Believer, p. 181.

27. Obama, commencement address at the University of Massachusetts at Boston, 2 June 2006; Cristina Silva, “Speakers Brighten Ceremony at UMass-Boston,” BG, 3 June 2006; Neil Mirochnick, “Sen. Obama Tells UMass-Boston Graduates to ‘Do What Is Hard,’” Quincy Patriot-Ledger, 3 June 2006, p. 23; William Hershey, “Obama Says Ohio at Heart of Democrats’ National Strategy,” Dayton Daily News, 4

June 2006, p. A4; Obama, CRec, 7 June 2006, pp. S5523–24, S5576, S5601–2 (introducing S. 3475, the Homes for Heroes Act); Obama, CRec, 8 June 2006, pp. S5616–17; Obama Podcast #27, “Network Neutrality,” 8 June 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; USS, CFR, “Counterterrorism: The Changing Face of Terror,” S. Hrg. 109-859, 13 June 2006, pp. 38–43; Obama, “Remarks at ‘Take Back America,’” Washington, D.C., 14 June 2006; USS, EPW, “Oversight of the Superfund Program,” S. Hrg. 109-1042, 15 June 2006, pp. 12–13, 24–26; Obama Podcast #28, “Katrina Reconstruction Contracts,” 15 June 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Obama, Northwestern University commencement address, 16 June 2006; Charles Babington, “Obama’s Profile Has Democrats Taking Notice,” WP, 18 June 2006; Ross Douthat, “The Great Democratic Hope,” WSJ, 21 June 2006; Obama, CRec, 21 June 2006, pp. 6233–34, S6288 (introducing S. 3554, the Alternative Diesel Standard Act); USS, EPW, “Inherently Safer Technology in the Context of Chemical Site Security,” S. Hrg. 109-1044, 21 June 2006, pp. 12–14; David Stout, “Senate Rejects Democratic Efforts on Iraq,” NYT, 22 June 2006; “Obama’s Supporters Should Encourage Him to Run,” SI, 22 June 2006; Obama, CRec, 22 June 2006, p. S6364; Obama Podcast #29, “Senate Iraq Resolutions,” 22 June 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Obama, remarks at BookExpo America author breakfast, 23 June 2006; Jeffrey H. Birnbaum and Jim VandeHei, “Call for Lobbying Changes Is a Fading Cry, Lawmakers Say,” WP, 26 June 2006; Obama, CRec, 27 June 2006, pp. S6523–24; USS, EPW, “EPA Regional Inconsistencies,” S. Hrg. 109-1046, 28 June 2006, pp. 25–26; Obama, “Call to Renewal Keynote Address,” Washington, D.C., 28 June 2006; Obama on Hannity & Colmes, Fox News, 28 June 2006; CRec, 29 June 2006, pp. S7178–80 (unanimous consent passage of Obama’s S. 2125, as amended); Dana Milbank, “Will Democrats Put Their Faith in Obama?,” WP, 29 June 2006; Marni Goldberg, “Obama Urges Democrats to Embrace Faith,” CT, 29 June 2006; Lynn Sweet, “Obama Puts His Faith in Spotlight,” CST, 29 June 2006, p. 45; Obama on Good Morning America, ABC, 29 June 2006; “UCC Member Sen. Barack Obama Discusses Faith and Politics,” UCC News, 29 June 2006; Obama, CRec, 29 June 2006, pp. S6759–60, S6793–94 (introducing S. 3607, the Responsible Fatherhood and Healthy Families Act); E. J. Dionne, “Obama’s Eloquent Faith,” WP, 30 June 2006; Michelle Goldberg, “What’s the Matter with Barack Obama?,” Huffington Post, 30 June 2006; Eric Zorn, “Change of Subject,” CT, 2 July 2006; Amy Sullivan, “In Good Faith,” Slate, 3 July 2006; Paul Wood, “Obama’s Prayer: Wooing Evangelicals,” NR, 6 July 2006; PastorDan, “Interview with Barack Obama,” StreetProphets.com, 7 July 2006; Margaret Kimberley, “Obama Gets Religion,” CD, 7–9 July 2006, p. 11; “Faith, Race and Barack Obama,” Economist, 8 July 2006, p. 52; Zorn, “Change of Subject,” CT, 9 July 2006; Obama, “Politicians Need Not Abandon Religion,” USAT, 10 July 2006; Clarence Page, “Democrats Need Old-Time Religion,” CT, 12 July 2006; Obama on Morning Edition, NPR, 14 July 2006; Obama, “The Religious Divide,” CT, 18 July 2006; Robinson, A Game of Character, pp. 182–86; “Kelly Robinson,” Mom Magazine, February 2011, pp. 10–15.

28. Obama’s 29 June 2006 interview with Jacob Weisberg; Jorge Luis Borges, “Two English Poems (II),” 1934; Michelle Obama’s July 2006 interview with Weisberg; Weisberg, “The Path to Power,” Men’s Vogue, September 2006, pp. 218–23. The Borges stanza Barack could approximately quote from memory follows a line that says, “I offer you the loyalty of a man who has never been loyal.”

29. Lynn Sweet, “Obama Trip to Highlight U.S. Interests in Africa,” CST, 10 July 2006, p. 34; Obama, remarks at Campus Progress annual conference, Washington, D.C., 12 July 2006; USS, CFR, “An Iraq Update,” S. Hrg. 109-869, 13 July 2006, pp. 39–41; Obama, CRec, 13 July 2006, pp. S7502–3; Obama Podcast #30, "Homeland Security Appropriations," 13 July 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Obama, CRec, 17 July 2006, pp. S7598–99; Obama, "Statement Before the Senate Subcommittee on Federal Financial Management," 18 July 2006; Obama, CRec, 19 July 2006, pp. S7854 and S7926–27 (introducing S. 3694, the Fuel Economy Reform Act); Jeff Zeleny, "Democrats Hold Bush Accountable," CT, 20 July 2006; Ray McAllister, "Obama's Plan," RTD, 20 July 2006, p. B1; Obama, CRec, 20 July 2006, pp. S7984–85; Obama Podcast #31, "Fuel Economy Reform Act," 20 July 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Zeleny, "Obama Trip to Iowa Ups Buzz on '08," CT, 21 July 2006; Sweet, "Obama Plan to Visit Iowa Steps Up White House Buzz," CST, 21 July 2006, p. 36; Thomas Beaumont and Jane Norman, "Illinois' Obama to Attend Harkin Event," DMR, 21 July 2006; Charlotte Eby, "Obama to Headline Harkin's Annual Steak Fry," QCT, 21 July 2006; John Patterson, "Obama in '08? Not So, Senator Says," CDH, 21 July 2006, p. 6; Zeleny, "Obama Joins Parade to See New Orleans," CT, 22 July 2006; Obama on Public Affairs with Jeff Berkowitz, 22 July 2006; Dennis Conrad, "Obama Takes Political Spotlight on Return to Africa," AP, 23 July 2006; Mary Mitchell, "Obama Reassures Ministers He's Still on Their Side," CST, 25 July 2006, p. 14; Obama, CRec, 25 July 2006, p. S8181; Obama, "Support Fuel Economy Reform," HPH, 26 July 2006, p. 4; Terry Dean, "Obama Addresses Small Business Concerns," AWN, 26 July 2006; Obama, remarks at Partnership for Public Service, Washington, D.C., 26 July 2006; John Patterson, "What's Changed for Obama in Last 2 Years," and "Senator Says He's Still Willing to Help Blagojevich Despite Hiring Concerns," CDH, 27 July 2006, p. 7; USS, CFR, "Nomination of Hon. John R. Bolton to Be U.S. Representative to the United Nations," S. Hrg. 109-935, 27 July 2006, pp. 64–69; USS, EPW, "The Stafford Act: A Plan for the Nation's Emergency Preparedness and Response System," S. Hrg. 109-1066, 27 July 2006, pp. 6–7, 22–24; Obama, CRec, 27 July 2006, pp. S8379–80 (introducing S. 3757, to name a post office); Obama, CRec, 1 August 2006, pp. S8502–3; Perry Bacon Jr., "The Outsider's Insider," WP, 27 August 2007; Obama, CRec, 3 August 2006, pp. S8840–41 (introducing S. 3822, the Genomics and Personalized Medicine Act); Obama, remarks to AFSCME national convention," Chicago, 7 August 2006; "Obama Addresses Public Service Union," CT, 8 August 2006; Robin Givhan, "Mussed for Success," WP, 11 August 2006; Obama, Xavier University commencement address, 12 August 2006; AP, "Sen. Obama Addresses Xavier Graduates," 13 August 2006; "Obama to Take Seven-County Downstate Town Hall Tour," 31 July 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Kristen McQueary, "Sore Spot Remains on Statewide Ticket," DS, 14 August 2006; Bill Bartleman, "Rising Star: Obama Draws Crowd in Massac," Paducah Sun, 15 August 2006; Nathaniel West, "Obama Addresses Packed House During Town Hall Meeting," DHR, 16 August 2006; Rich Miller, "Olive Branch," IT, 18 January 2007.

30. Lynn Sweet, "Media, Sudan Watching Trip Closely," CST, 18 August 2006, p. 14; Jeff Zeleny, "Obama Returns to Africa as Celebrity," CT, 20 August 2006; Sweet, "1st Up: Mandela's 27-Year Prison," CST, 20 August 2006, p. A5; Bill Lambrecht, "As Obama Heads to Africa, Terrorism Is a Top Priority," SLPD, 20 August 2006, p. A8; Christopher Wills, "Obama Hopes Fame, Family Combine to Produce Results for Africa Trip," AP, 20 August 2006; Sweet, "A Humbling Visit to Mandela's Cell," CST, 21 August 2006, p. 26; Clare Nulis, "Obama Visits Former Mandela Prison," AP, 21 August 2006; Obama, remarks at the South African Institute for International Affairs, Cape Town, 21 August 2006; Jeff Zeleny and Laurie Goering, "Obama Challenges South Africa to Face AIDS Crisis," CT, 22 August 2006; Sweet, "Confronting Africa's Scourge: AIDS," CST, 22 August 2006, p. 6; Lambrecht, "Obama Tackles South Africa's Response to AIDS," SLPD, 22 August 2006, p. A1; Edmund Sanders, "Senator's Kenya

Visit Inspires Obama-Mania,” LAT, 22 August 2006; Zeleny, “Congo’s Unrest Blocks Obama Visit,” CT, 23 August 2006; Sweet, “Sen. Expects to Disappoint in Kenya,” CST, 23 August 2006, p. 13; Michelle Faul, “Sen. Barack Obama Says South Africans’ Fight for Freedom Inspired His Political Career,” AP, 23 August 2006; Sweet, “Kenya Eager to See Its ‘Great Senator,’” CST, 24 August 2006, p. 16; AP, “Sen. Obama to Take HIV Test in Kenya,” 24 August 2006; Zeleny, “‘Our Blood Is in His,’” CT, 25 August 2006; Sweet, “In Kenya, a Hero’s Welcome Awaits,” CST, 25 August 2006, p. 6; Lambrecht, “Visit Puts Kenya in Grip of Obama-Mania,” SLPD, 25 August 2006, p. A6; Christopher Wills, “Obama Meets Kenyan President,” AP, 25 August 2006; Jeffrey Gettleman, “Obama Gets a Warm Welcome in Kenya,” NYT, 26 August 2006; Sweet, “Senator Mobbed in Kenya,” CST, 26 August 2006, p. 3; Lambrecht, “Obama Says Culture of Corruption Continues to Be Obstacle for Kenya,” SLPD, 26 August 2006, p. A29; Wills, “Obama Returns to Father’s Village with New Fame, New Message,” AP, 26 August 2006; Zeleny, “Kenyan’s Welcome Is Heavy with Hope,” CT, 27 August 2006; Sweet, “For Kenyans, Senator from Illinois Has Come Home,” CST, 27 August 2006, p. A24; Lambrecht, “Village Welcomes Obama Home,” SLPD, 27 August 2006, p. A3; Wills, “Obama Promises Help During Visit to One of Africa’s Biggest Slums,” AP, 27 August 2006; Sweet, “Taxpayers, Campaign Fund, Obama’s Own Money Pay for Trip,” CST, 28 August 2006, p. 7; Obama, “An Honest Government, a Hopeful Future,” University of Nairobi, 28 August 2006; Gettleman, “Obama Urges Kenyans to Get Tough on Corruption,” NYT, 29 August 2006; Zeleny, “Kenya Chided Over Corruption,” CT, 29 August 2006; Sweet, “Senator Rebukes Kenya’s Corruption,” CST, 29 August 2006, p. 7; Wills, “Obama Urges Kenyans to Oppose Corruption,” AP, 29 August 2006; “The Imperfections of Man,” CT, 30 August 2006; Auma Obama, And Then Life Happens, pp. 291–95.

31. Lynn Sweet, “Senator Has a Front-Row Seat as Lion Devours Wildebeest,” CST, 31 August 2006, p. 20; AP, “Obama Visits Flood-Displaced Ethiopians,” 31 August 2006; Macharia Gaitho and Julie Gichuru, “Obama: ‘I Speak What I Think Is True and Say It Best,’” Nation, 1 September 2006; Jeff Zeleny, “Sudan Refugees Plead for World’s Help,” CT, 3 September 2006; Sweet, “Visit to Camp Spotlights Ordeal of Darfur Refugees,” and “Africa Trip Leads to Many Valuable Successes,” CST, 3 September 2006, pp. A24, B6; Christopher Wills, “Sudanese Refugees Tell U.S. Senator Darfur Needs U.N. Force,” AP, 3 September 2006; Sweet, “Next Step Pressuring U.S. on Sudan,” CST, 4 September 2006, p. 20; Wills, “Obama Visit Highlights Precarious Situation of Darfur Refugees,” AP, 4 September 2006; Greg Hinz, “Obama on Oil,” CCB, 4 September 2006; James Kirchick, “In Africa, Obama Was Both VIP and Persona Non Grata,” TH, 5 September 2006; Wills, “Sen. Obama in Africa, Polishing His Resume,” AP, 6 September 2006; Obama Podcast #32, “Africa Trip Recap,” 6 September 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Choire Sicha, “Obama in Orbit,” NYO, 6 November 2006, p. 1; Laurie Abraham, “Mr. Obama Goes to Washington (and Cape Town, and Nairobi, and . . .),” Elle, December 2006; Nicholas D. Kristof, “Obama: Man of the World,” NYT, 6 March 2007.

32. USS, EPW, “Federal Renewable Fuels Programs,” S. Hrg. 109-1079, 6 September 2006, pp. 30–32; Lynn Sweet, “What Obama Needs to Reach the Next Level,” CST, 7 September 2006, p. 41; Obama, CRec, 7 September 2006, pp. S9211, S9297; Dennis Conrad, “Obama Says U.S. Has Plenty of Reasons to Consider Africa,” AP, 8 September 2006; William Neikirk, “Bloggers Help Obama Pass Senate Pork Bill,” CT, 9 September 2006; Ellis Cose, “Walking the World Stage,” Newsweek, 11 September 2006, p. 26; David Yepsen, “Now-or-Never Fears Push Presidential Wannabees,” DMR, 12 September 2006, p.

A9; Obama, CRec, 12 September 2006, pp. S9354–55; Richard Clough, “Efforts to Rein In Lobbyists Stall in Congress,” CT, 13 September 2006; Obama, CRec, 13 September 2006, pp. S9493–94; USS, CFR, “Lebanon: Securing a Permanent Cease-Fire,” S. Hrg. 109-655, 13 September 2006, pp. 30–34; USS, EPW, “Nominations of Roger Romulus Martella Jr. et al.,” S. Hrg. 109-1080, 13 September 2006, pp. 15–17; USS, EPW, “Nuclear Release Notice Act,” S. Rpt. 109-347, Calendar No. 637, 25 September 2006, esp. pp. 2–3, 5–6 (13 September 2006); Mike McIntire, “Nuclear Leaks and Response Tested Obama in Senate,” NYT, 3 February 2008; Ben Whitford, “Coal and Clear Skies: Obama’s Balancing Act,” Plenty Magazine, 31 October 2008; Elana Schor, “Obama and Coburn Revive Effort to Stop No-Bid FEMA Contracts,” TH, 14 September 2006, p. 18; Obama Podcast #33, “Coburn-Obama Transparency Bill,” 14 September 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Obama on The Situation Room, CNN, 14 September 2006; Crystal Yednak, “Ex-Rival Hynes Tries to Start Obama National Bandwagon,” CT, 15 September 2006; Eric Herman, “Hynes to Obama: Run for President,” CST, 15 September 2006, p. 12; Kurt Erickson, “Comptroller Urges Obama to Run for President,” QCT, 15 September 2006; Thomas Beaumont, “Obama Coming to Harkin Steak Fry,” DMR, 15 September 2006, p. B5; Obama, CRec, 15 September 2006, p. S9657; Kevin McDermott, “Obama: Could He Be Too Popular?,” SLPD, 17 September 2006, p. C1; Anne E. Kornblut, “For This Red Meat Crowd, Obama’s ’08 Choice Is Clear,” NYT, 18 September 2006; Beaumont, “Obama Insists He’s Focusing on Party in ’06,” DMR, 18 September 2006, p. B1; Tim Jones, “Iowa Democrats See Contender in Obama,” CT, 18 September 2006; Mike Glover (AP), “Obama to Dems: Get Tougher on Security,” and Scott Fornek, “Poll: Obama for President—but When?,” CST, 18 September 2006, pp. 18, 22; Charlotte Eby, “Obama’s Fans Flock to Iowa,” QCT, 18 September 2006; Elizabeth Ahlin, “Embrace Idealism, Obama Tells Dems,” OWH, 18 September 2006, p. A1; Walter Shapiro, “Obama in ’08?,” Salon, 18 September 2006; David Yepsen, “What Triggers the Big Buzz Around Obama? It’s Hope,” DMR, 21 September 2006, p. A19; Ed Tibbetts, “Obama’s Visit Includes Both Sides of River,” QCT, 23 September 2006; David Mendell, “Looking Beyond Obama-Mania: Is He Ready Yet?,” CT, 24 September 2006; Perry Bacon Jr., “The Outsider’s Insider,” WP, 27 August 2007; Roger Simon, “Relentless,” Politico, 25 August 2008; Carol Felsenthal, “The Making of a First Lady,” CM, February 2009; Balz and Johnson, The Battle for America 2008, p. 27; Wolffe, Renegade, pp. 46–48; Heilemann and Halperin, Game Change, pp. 56–58; Axelrod, Believer, p. 183.

33. USS, CFR, “Responding to Iran’s Nuclear Ambitions: Next Steps,” S. Hrg. 109-648, 19 September 2006, pp. 34–38; USS, CVA, “The Legislative Presentation of the American Legion,” S. Hrg. 109-771, 20 September 2006, p. 1; Obama, “Energy Independence: A Call for Leadership,” MoveOn Progressive Vision, Georgetown University, 20 September 2006; Tim Craig, “Obama Boosts Webb with Alexandria Rally,” WP, 21 September 2006; John McWhorter, “The Color of His Skin,” NYS, 21 September 2006, p. 11; Obama, CRec, 21 September 2006, pp. S9879–80; Mary Baskerville, “Sen. Obama at Joliet Town Hall,” KDJ, 23 September 2006; Clarence Page, “Obama’s Audacious Aura of Hope,” CT, 24 September 2004; “President Bush Signs Federal Funding Accountability and Transparency Act,” 26 September 2006; Obama Podcast #34, “Transparency Act,” 26 September 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Mike Flannery, “Obama’s First Law,” CBS2 Chicago, 26 September 2006; Obama, CRec, 27 September 2006, pp. S10346–48; Fran Spielman, “Daley on Obama: ‘Everybody Wants Him,’” CST, 28 September 2006, p. 14; Scott Fornek, “If Obama Runs, I’ll Campaign for Him, Winfrey Says,” CST, 28 September 2006, p. 3;

David Montgomery, "The Democrats' Charisma Doctor," WP, 28 September 2006; Obama, CRec, 28 September 2006, pp. S10388–89, S10471–72 (introducing S. 3969, the Lead Poisoning Reduction Act); Obama, CRec, 29 September 2006, pp. S10642–43; Mike Glover, "Obama: Democrats Should Embrace National Security Debate," AP, 30 September 2006; Chuck Sweeny, "Barack Obama Assails Bush's Policies," RRS, 1 October 2006, p. B1; Tina Stein, "Obama Comes to Rockford," WIFR.com, 1 October 2006; Kay Luna, "Obama Visits Q-C to Stump for Democrats," QCT, 1 October 2006; Jennifer Senior, "Dreaming of Obama," NYM, 2 October 2006; Joe Klein, "The Fresh Face," Time, 23 October 2006, pp. 44ff. (Web posted 16 October).

34. Obama and Michelle on The Oprah Winfrey Show, 18 October 2006 (taped 3 October); Clarence Page, "Oprah, Obama, and the Leadership Gap," CT, 1 October 2006; "Obama Is Riding a Wave of Celebrity," CNG, 4 October 2006; Frank Radosevich II, "'Obama Fever' Grips Peoria," PJS, 5 October 2006; Jenee Osterheldt, "Sen. Barack Obama Gets My Vote," KC Star, 7 October 2006; Ezra Klein, "Too Soon for Obama," LAT, 8 October 2006; "Everywhere but Illinois," BND, 10 October 2006; Eric Zorn, "It's Simple Scandals That Shock," CT, 17 September 2006; Carol Marin, "'Man Behind the Curtain' Faces Lots of Questions," CST, 27 September 2006, p. 55; U.S. v. Stuart Levine and Antoin Rezko, "Superseding Indictment," No. 05-CR-691, 5 October 2006; Rick Pearson et al., "Top Blagojevich Adviser Indicted," and David Jackson and John Chase, "Rezko's Life a Story of Pizza and Politics," CT, 12 October 2006; Natasha Korecki et al., "It's 'Pay to Play' . . . on Steroids," Michael Sneed, "The Rezko Scandal," and Korecki and Dave McKinney, "Where Is He?," CST, 12 October 2006; Jeff Coen and Matt O'Connor, "U.S. Doesn't Know Where Rezko Is," CT, 13 October 2006; Obama on the CBS Evening News, 13 October 2006; Michael Tackett, "Sen. Obama, Take a Chance in 2008 Race," CT, 15 October 2006; Kathy Chaney and Erin Meyer, "Rezko Gives to Local Pols," HPH, 18 October 2006, pp. 1–2; Coen and O'Connor, "Rezko Is Expected to Show Up," CT, 19 October 2006; Coen, "Rezko Pleads Not Guilty," CT, 20 October 2006; Chaney, "Obama Regrets Land Deal He Made with Tony Rezko," HPH, 8 November 2006, pp. 1–2; Brian Ross and Rhonda Schwartz, "The Rezko Connection," ABCNews.com, 10 January 2008; Mike Robinson, "Obama's Relationship with Alleged Fixer," AP, 22 January 2008; Bob Secter et al., "Obama, Rezko Ties Again at Issue," CT, 23 January 2008; Secter and David Jackson, "Funds Tough to Figure for Rezko Aid," CT, 31 January 2008; Dan Morain, "Obama to Be in Background of Trial," LAT, 3 March 2008.

35. Publishers Weekly, 2 October 2006, p. 52; Jennifer Senior, "Dreaming of Obama," NYM, 2 October 2006; Mike Dorning, "Obama's New Book Laments 'Empathy Deficit,'" CT, 12 October 2006; James L. Merriner, "Barack Obama for Prez," CST, 15 October 2006, p. B12; James Wensits, "'Red to Blue' Bolsters Donnelly," South Bend Tribune, 17 October 2006, p. B1; Kurt Erickson, "Obama Durbin's '08 Pick," BP, 17 October 2006, p. A1; Michiko Kakutani, "Foursquare Politics, with a Dab of Dijon," NYT, 17 October 2006; John Balzar, "Obama Finds Common Ground on Political Plain," LAT, 17 October 2006; Eric Krol, "Obama Is Not a Morning Person," CDH, 17 October 2006, p. 6; Obama, TAOH, pp. 11, 114, 121, 47, 223, 245, 333, 251, 254, 256, 248; Lynn Sweet, "Obama Riding Momentum," CST, 19 October 2006, p. 47; Glenn Thrush, "Is He Waiting in the Wings?," Newsday, 19 October 2006; Obama, "My Spiritual Journey," Time, 23 October 2006, pp. 52ff. (Web posted 16 October); Jodi Kantor, "For a New Political Age, a Self-Made Man," NYT, 28 August 2008; Evan Thomas et al., "Barack Obama: How He Did It," Newsweek, 17 November 2008 (Web posted 4 November); Melody Spann-Cooper in Becoming Barack, Little Dizzle Home Video, 2009; Heilemann and Halperin, Game Change, pp. 58–59.

36. Jill Zuckman, “Obama Dips Toe in 2008 Waters,” CT, 18 October 2006; Dennis Conrad, “Obama’s Book Hints That Presidential Run Could Be Family Decision,” AP, 18 October 2006; Lynn Sweet, “Obama Riding Momentum,” CST, 19 October 2006, p. 47; David Brooks, “Run, Barack, Run,” NYT, 19 October 2006; “Charismatic Obama Looks Presidential,” SJR, 19 October 2006, p. 6; Obama on Today, NBC, on All Things Considered, NPR, on Larry King Live, CNN, and on Charlie Rose, PBS, 19 October 2006; John Kass, “Politicians Don’t Get Much Past Readers,” and “Is This Obama’s Time?,” CT, 20 October 2006; Margaret Talev, “A Conversation with Sen. Obama,” KRDC, 20 October 2006; Obama at the John F. Kennedy Library Forum, 20 October 2006; Maureen Dowd, “Obama’s Project Runway,” NYT, 21 October 2006; Frank Rich, “Obama Is Not a Miracle Elixir,” NYT, 22 October 2006; Clarence Page, “Enjoy, Senator, It’ll Get Worse,” CT, 22 October 2006.

37. Christine Schiavo, “‘Presence of Greatness’: Sen. Obama Gets a Rock-Star Reception in Phila.,” and “Verbatim: Sen. Obama on ‘The Audacity of Hope,’ Iraq and More,” PI, 22 October 2006, pp. B1, C2; Michael Kazin, “Rising Star,” WP, 22 October 2006; Obama on Meet the Press, NBC, 22 October 2006; Adam Nagourney and Jeff Zeleny, “Crowd-Pleaser from Illinois Considers White House Run,” and Bob Herbert, “The Obama Bandwagon,” NYT, 23 October 2006; Dan Balz, “Obama Says He’ll Consider a 2008 Bid for the Presidency,” WP, 23 October 2006, p. A1; Chuck Neubauer, “Obama Admits He’s Thinking ’08,” LAT, 23 October 2006; William Neikirk, “Audacity of a Hopeful,” CT, 23 October 2006; Lynn Sweet, “Obama Mulling ’08 Presidential Bid,” CST, 23 October 2006; Edward Luce, “A Subtle but Effective Political Soft Sell,” FT, 23 October 2006; Obama’s 23 October 2006 American Magazine Conference interview with David Remnick, Phoenix, AZ; Obama on The Tavis Smiley Show, 23 October 2006; Ken Silverstein, “Barack Obama Inc. The Birth of a Washington Machine,” Harper’s, November 2006, pp. 31–40; Press Release, “Senator Obama’s Office Responds to Misleading Harper’s Magazine Story,” 23 October 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Katharine Q. Seelye, “Obama Offers More Variations from the Norm,” NYT, 24 October 2006; Richard Cohen, “Why Not Obama?,” WP, 24 October 2006; “Obama Needs to Keep Feet on Ground,” BP, 24 October 2006, p. A6; “Iowa a Good Place to Make a Tough Decision,” QCT, 25 October 2006; Jon Friedman, “Obama Fails to Wow a Magazine Conference,” Marketwatch.com, 25 October 2006; Plouffe, The Audacity to Win, p. 6.

38. Obama on Hannity & Colmes, Fox News, 24 October 2006; Kevin Simpson, “Dems’ ‘Rock Star’ Rocks Colorado,” DP, 25 October 2006, p. A1; Newton N. Minow, “Why Obama Should Run for President,” CT, 26 October 2006; Richard Halstead, “Obama Mania Visits Marin,” Marin Independent Journal, 26 October 2006; Charles Krauthammer, “Winning by Losing,” WP, 27 October 2006; Jacob Weisberg, “The Audacity of the Democratic Hopeful,” FT, 27 October 2006; Doug Ward, “‘Obamamania’ Taking Off in U.S.,” Vancouver Sun, 28 October 2006, p. A15; Carla Hall, “A Rising Star from Illinois Makes Some Noise in L.A.,” LAT, 28 October 2006; Danny Westneat, “Obama Doesn’t Dazzle, but He Does Intrigue,” Seattle Times, 29 October 2006, p. B1; Isadora Vail, “Senator, Star: Obama Greets Frenzied Crowd,” AAS, 29 October 2006, p. B1; Elizabeth Taylor, “Q&A with Barack Obama,” CT, 29 October 2006; Bill Lambrecht, “Obama’s Book Tells What He Thinks,” SLPD, 29 October 2006, p. F8; Bill Maxwell, “Senator, You Better Walk Before You Run,” SPT, 29 October 2006, p. P1; Howard Kurtz, “Obama? So Handsome, and Probably Delicious,” WP, 30 October 2006; Meggen Lindsay, “Obama Inspires His Minnesota Fans,” SPPP, 31 October 2006, p. A1; Bob von Sternberg, “Obama Knows How to Attract a Crowd,” MST, 31 October 2006, p. B3; Graeme Zielinski, “‘He’s Our Jack Kennedy’: Obama Excites Milwaukee as He Stumps for State Dems,” MCT, 31 October 2006, p. A1; Garrett M. Graff, “The Legend of Barack Obama,” Washingtonian, November 2006, pp. 68–71, 122–24; Anne E. Kornblut, “A Senate Newcomer, Helping Fellow Democrats,” NYT, 1 November 2006; Art Sims, “Rev. Jesse Jackson’s Bash a Celebration Fit for a King,” CD, 1 November 2006, p. 15; CNN Newsroom, 1 November 2006, 2 P.M.; Christine G. Sabathia, “Sen. Barack Obama Talks One-on-One,” LAS, 2–8 November 2006, p. A1; Joel McNally, “No Denying That History Is Calling Upon Obama,” MCT, 4 November 2006; David Mendell, “Backers’ Mission Is Political, Personal,” CT, 17 January 2007; DJG interview with Newton Minow.

39. Ray Gibson and David Jackson, “Rezko Owns Vacant Lot Next to Obama’s Home,” CT, 1 November 2006; Stanley Crouch and Alan Wolfe, “Barack Obama’s The Audacity of Hope,” Slate, 1 November 2006; Crouch, “What Obama Isn’t: Black Like Me,” NYDN, 2 November 2006, p. 35; John Kass, “Obama Fuzzy on Fence That Tony Built,” and Eric Zorn, “Letter to Voters a Letdown for Obama Idealists,” CT, 2 November 2006; Mark Brown, “Obama’s Dealings with Rezko Buy a Parcel of Questions,” CST, 2 November 2006, p. 2; Obama on Talk of the Nation, NPR, 2 November 2006; “Obama, Rezko,” and “And the Inevitable Backlash,” CT, 3 November 2006; Pamela Stallsmith and Kiran Krishnamurthy, “Big Names Stump for Webb,” RTD, 3 November 2006, p. A6; Dana Heupel, “Backed for President,” SJR, 4 November 2006, p. 1; Sarah Baxter, “Obama Mania,” Sunday Times Magazine (London), 5 November 2006, pp. 26ff.; Jackson and Gibson, “Obama: I Regret Deals with Rezko,” CT, 5 November 2006; Dave McKinney and Chris Fusco, “Obama Spells Out ‘Regret’ After Land Deal with Rezko,” and Carol Marin, “Machine’s Shadow Creeps Over Obama,” CST, 5 November 2006, pp. A4, B6; Rebecca Traister, “Obama on Tour,” Salon, 5 November 2006; William Hershey and Laura Bischoff, “Democrats Optimistic Tuesday Will Bring Victory,” DDN, 5 November 2006, p. A31; Sarah Hollander and Rena A. Koontz, “Democrats Urge Voters to Raise State Wage,” CPD, 5 November 2006, p. B3; Gloria Borger, “Does Barack Really Rock?” U.S. News, 6 November 2006; “Obama’s Star Power Dims in Rezko’s Orbit,” CCB, 6 November 2006, p. 28; Lee Hermiston, “Obama Pumps Up Iowa Crowd,” DMR, 6 November 2006, p. A6; Mike Glover, “Obama Keeps Mind on 2006 Vote, for Now,” AP, 6 November 2006; Lynn Sweet, “The Obama Chronicles: Waukegan Interview Transcript,” CST, 6 November 2006; Obama on Nightline, ABC, 6 November 2008; Shailagh Murray, “Eyeing 2008, Political Stars Ran Hard for Others,” WP, 7 November 2006; Jeff Zeleny and Kate Zernike, “For Democrats, Time to Savor Victory at Last,” NYT, 8 November 2006; John Dickerson, “Barackwater,” Slate, 14 December 2006; Peter Slevin, “Obama Says He Regrets Land Deal with Fundraiser,” WP, 17 December 2006; Tim Novak, “Lot Next to Obama Can Be Yours for $1.5M,” CST, 10 October 2007, p. 28; James L. Merriner, “Mr. Inside Out,” CM, November 2007; Obama’s 14 March 2008 CST interview; Carol Felsenthal, “The Making of a First Lady,” CM, February 2009.

40. Bill Reynolds, “Welcome to Obama’s Family,” PJ, 15 February 2007, p. C1; Jodi Kantor and Jeff Zeleny, “Michelle Obama Adds New Role to Balancing Act,” NYT, 18 May 2007; Mike Dorning and Christi Parsons, “Carefully Crafting the Obama ‘Brand,’” CT, 12 June 2007; Perry Bacon Jr., “The Outsider’s Insider,” WP, 27 August 2007; Obama on The Tavis Smiley Show, 18 October 2007; Obama, news conference with Google employees, Mountain View, CA, 14 November 2007; Audie Cornish, “Rare National Buzz Tipped Obama’s Decision to Run,” All Things Considered, NPR, 19 November 2007;

Marc Ambinder, "Teacher and Apprentice," Atlantic Monthly, December 2007; Leslie Bennetts, "First Lady in Waiting," Vanity Fair, December 2007; Daren Briscoe, "An Interview with Barack Obama," Newsweek, 8 January 2009 (18–19 May 2008); Matt Schofield, "Michelle Obama Says She Didn't Want Husband to Run," KC Star, 10 July 2008; Pete Rouse's July 2008 interview with Jim Gilmore; Roger Simon, "Relentless," Politico, 25 August 2008; Evan Thomas et al., "Barack Obama: How He Did It," Newsweek, 17 November 2008; Wolffe, Renegade, pp. 49, 52–54; Heilemann and Halperin, Game Change, pp. 61–63; Plouffe, The Audacity to Win, p. 13; Axelrod, Believer, p. 190.

41. Julie Bosman, "Obama's New Book Is Surprise Best Seller," NYT, 9 November 2006; Chris Lehmann, "Disciplined Politician Dispenses Tough Love," NYO, 13 November 2006, p. 9; Charles Babington, "Time in Senate May Be Irrelevant If Obama Runs," WP, 13 November 2006; Glenn Thrush, "Democratic Surge Boosts Obama," QCT, 13 November 2006; Obama on Good Morning America, ABC, 13 November 2006; Obama, remarks at the King National Memorial groundbreaking ceremony, 13 November 2006; Anne E. Kornblut, "Purpose Driven Candidate?," NYT, 14 November 2006; "Obama Announces New Committee Assignments," 14 November 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Christi Parsons, "'Purpose' Pastor Has Pulpit for Obama," CT, 15 November 2006; Obama Podcast #35, "Democratic Senate Majority," 15 November 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Obama, CRec, 16 November 2006, pp. S11021–22; Leonard Pitts Jr., "Obama: Not Your Father's Politician," MH, 18 November 2006; "Excerpts from Obama's Interview with AP," AP, 18 November 2006; Obama on CNBC with Tim Russert, 18 November 2006; Nicholas Spangler, "Packed Theater Greets Obama," MH, 19 November 2006; Thomas Beaumont, "Obama Talks with Top Advisers in Iowa," DMR, 26 November 2006, p. A1; Deirdre Shesgreen, "On the Way to New Hampshire, Obama Tests Presidential Waters," SLPD, 10 December 2006, p. A4; Walter Shapiro, "Obama's Magic," Salon, 12 December 2006; Ginger Thompson, "Seeking Unity, Obama Feels Pull of Racial Divide," NYT, 12 February 2008; Pete Rouse's July 2008 interview with Jim Gilmore; Evan Thomas et al., "Barack Obama: How He Did It," Newsweek, 17 November 2008; Plouffe, The Audacity to Win, p. 14; Heilemann and Halperin, Game Change, p. 71.

42. Jim Kuhnhen, "Obama Rides Personal, National Political Wave and Ponders His Future," AP, 19 November 2006; Obama, "A Way Forward in Iraq," Chicago Council on Global Affairs, 20 November 2006; Obama on CNN Newsroom, 20 November 2006; Christi Parsons and David Mendell, "Obama: Time to Stop 'Coddling' Iraq," CT, 21 November 2006; Scott Fornek, "'No Good Options Left: Obama,'" and Lynn Sweet, "Obama, Dems Now Setting Agenda," CST, 21 November 2006, pp. 8, 9; Wally Sipers, "Obama Apologizes to Reporter After Potential Love Is Lost," BND, 21 November 2006; Kathy Kiely, "Returning Rookies Reflect on Lessons Learned," USAT, 27 November 2007; Chuck Goudie, "Question Whispered About Obama Now Asked in Public," CDH, 27 November 2006, p. 13; Sweet, "Durbin's Online Petition: Run, Obama, Run," CST, 28 November 2006, p. 20; Alexander Cockburn, "Meet Senator Slither," Counterpunch.org, 9 December 2006; Matthew Mosk, "The $75 Million Woman," WP, 8 October 2007; Ryan Lizza, "Battle Plans: How Obama Won," New Yorker, 17 November 2008; Balz and Johnson, "Obama Campaign Offers Lessons for Present Governing Challenges," WP, 31 July 2009, and The Battle for America 2008, pp. 29–30; Axelrod, Believer, pp. 194–98.

43. Mike Dorning, "Obama Reaches Out in Key 2008 States," CT, 29 November 2006; Lynn Sweet, "Obama Bound for New Hampshire," CST, 29 November 2006, p. 26; Michael Tomasky, "The Phenomenon," NYRB, 30 November 2006; Sweet, "Obama Is Going to Go for It," CST, 30 November

2006, p. 43; Seema Mehta, "Obama an Unlikely Guest at O.C. Church," LAT, 30 November 2006; Dorning, "Obama's Mega-Church Visit Spotlights Waning 'God Gap,'" CT, 1 December 2006; Obama, World AIDS Day speech, Saddleback Church, 1 December 2006; Martin Wisckol, "Obama Warmly Welcomed by Evangelical Christians," OCR, 1 December 2006; Michael Finnegan, "AIDS Fight Needs Churches, Obama Says," LAT, 2 December 2006; Dorning, "Evangelicals' Open Arms, Wary Hearts Greet Obama," CT, 2 December 2006; Tim Grieve, "Left Turn at Saddleback Church," Salon, 2 December 2006; Maureen Dowd, "What's in a Name, Barry?," NYT, 2 December 2006; Adam Nagourney, "Early 'Maybe' from Obama Jolts '08 Field," NYT, 4 December 2006; Patrick Healy, "Obama Meets Party Donors in New York," NYT, 5 December 2006; "Obama Should Run," CT, 6 December 2006; Obama, CRec, 6 December 2006, pp. S11291–92; Obama on The Early Show, CBS, 7 December 2006; Obama, CRec, 7 December 2006, p. S11501 (introducing S. 4102, the Election Jamming Prevention Act); Obama Podcast #36, "Iraq Study Group," 7 December 2006, Obama.Senate.gov; Charles Babington and Shailagh Murray, "For Now, an Unofficial Rivalry," WP, 8 December 2006; Mara Liasson, "Barack Obama, Still on Rise," All Things Considered, NPR, 8 December 2006; Terry McDermott, "What Is It About Obama?," LAT, 24 December 2006; Marc Ambinder, "Teacher and Apprentice," Atlantic Monthly, December 2007; Tom Daschle's June 2008 interview with Jim Gilmore; Evan Thomas et al., "Barack Obama: How He Did It," Newsweek, 17 November 2008; Wolffe, Renegade, pp. 55–56; Heilemann and Halperin, Game Change, pp. 69–70.

44. Holly Ramer, "Obama Says 'Internal Clock' Kept Him from N.H. Until Now," AP, 8 December 2006; John DiStasio, "Obama Heads to NH," Union Leader, 9 December 2006, p. A1; Adam Nagourney, "The Pattern May Change, If," NYT, 10 December 2006; Deirdre Shesgreen, "On Way to New Hampshire, Obama Tests Presidential Waters," SLPD, 10 December 2006, p. A4; Nagourney, "Obama, Visiting New Hampshire, Offers Flavor of a Campaign That Might Be," NYT, 11 December 2006; Dan Balz, "Obama Takes First Steps in N.H.," WP, 11 December 2006; Terry McDermott and Mark Z. Barabak, "Crowds Adore Obama," LAT, 11 December 2006; Jill Lawrence, "Obama Draws Crowds as He Tours New Hampshire," USAT, 11 December 2006, p. 9A; Susan Milligan, "Obama's Star Power Shows on N.H. Visit," BG, 11 December 2006; Scott Brooks, "Obama Fever Grips NH," Union Leader, 11 December 2006, p. A1; Christi Parsons, "N.H. Crowds Warm to Obama," CT, 11 December 2006; Lynn Sweet, "Hamp-Sure? N.H. Seems to Love Obama," CST, 11 December 2006, p. 6; Craig Gilbert, "Obama Dips His Toe Deeper into Presidential Waters," MJS, 11 December 2006, p. 1; John Dickerson, "Barack Star," Slate, 11 December 2006; Scott Lehigh, "Obama Bandwagon Is Filling Up Fast," BG, 12 December 2006; Gail Russell Chaddock, "What's Driving Obama-Mania?," CSM, 12 December 2006; John Podhoretz, "Obama: Rorschach Candidate," NYP, 12 December 2006; Steven Thomma, "If America Is Ready for a Black President, It Might Be Someone Like Obama," KRDC, 12 December 2006; Walter Shapiro, "Obama's Magic," Salon, 12 December 2006; Maureen Dowd, "Will Hillzilla Crush Obambi?," NYT, 13 December 2006.

45. Marcus Kabel, "Obama Throws Weight Behind Wal-Mart Critics," AP, 16 November 2006; Greg Hinz, "Sen. Obama Sees No Hypocrisy in His Wife's Post at a Firm That Does Business with Wal-Mart," CCB, 11 December 2006, p. 2; Barack H. and Michelle L. Obama, 2006 Form 1040, 15 April 2007; Audie Cornish, "Rare National Buzz Tipped Obama's Decision to Run," All Things Considered, NPR, 19 November 2007; Leslie Bennetts, "First Lady in Waiting," Vanity Fair, December 2007; Michelle Obama on The Situation Room, CNN, 1 February 2008; Scott Helman, “Holding Down the Obama Family Fort,” BG, 30 March 2008; Daren Briscoe, “A Conversation with Barack Obama,” Newsweek, 9 January 2009 (18–19 May 2008); Matt Schofield, “Michelle Obama Says She Didn’t Want Husband to Run,” KCS, 10 July 2008; Rachel L. Swarns, “Family Mainstay to Move into White House,” NYT, 10 January 2009; Robinson, A Game of Character, pp. 186–92. Journalists would later note how in December 2006 and January 2007, Michelle’s employer, the University of Chicago Medical Center, hired ASK Public Strategies, the decidedly low-profile partner firm of David Axelrod’s AKPD political consulting shop, to examine UCMC’s Urban Health Initiative. ASK—Axelrod, Eric Sedler, and John Kupper—was best known for creating corporate front groups such as “Consumers Organized for Reliable Electricity,” on behalf of ComEd, and the “New York Association for Better Choices,” on behalf of Cablevision. Howard Wolinsky, “The Secret Side of David Axelrod,” Business Week, 14 March 2008, Joe Stephens, “Obama Camp Has Many Ties to Wife’s Employer,” WP, 22 August 2008, and Mike McIntire, “For Obama Strategist, Ties to Corporations and Non-Profits as a Consultant,” NYT, 18 October 2008.

46. Today, NBC, 12 December 2006; Zachary A. Goldfarb, “On Monday Night Football, An Announcement from Obama,” WP, 17 December 2006; Marc Ambinder, “Teacher and Apprentice,” Atlantic Monthly, December 2007; Daren Briscoe, “An Interview with Barack Obama,” Newsweek, 8 January 2009 (18–19 May 2008); Pete Rouse’s July 2008 interview with Jim Gilmore; Wolffe, Renegade, pp. 20, 56–57; Heilemann and Halperin, Game Change, pp. 62, 72; Plouffe, The Audacity to Win, p. 16; Suskind, Confidence Men, pp. 125–26; Axelrod, Believer, p. 199.

47. George Will, “Run Now, Obama,” WP, 14 December 2006; Mike Dorning, “Obama Donors Signal His Grass-Roots Support,” CT, 14 December 2008; Donald Lambro, “The Obama Factor,” and “The Other Barack Obama,” WT, 14 December 2006, pp. A21, A22; Rick Pearson, “Obama on Obama,” CT, 15 December 2006; Lynn Sweet, “Trail of Fears,” CST, 15 December 2006, p. 3; Rosa Brooks, “Barack’s Ready,” LAT, 15 December 2006; Peggy Noonan, “The Man from Nowhere,” WSJ, 16 December 2006; Joe Garcia, “Barack Obama: The Guise of Change,” DailyKos.com, 16 December 2006; Clarence Page, “What’s in a Middle Name?,” CT, 17 December 2006; David Jackson and Ray Gibson, “Obama Intern Had Ties to Rezko,” CT, 24 December 2006; John Kass, “Obama All Pecs and Peccadilloes, Now,” CT, 17 January 2007; Carol Marin, “Frank Discussions About Family Helped Obama Decide,” CST, 17 January 2007, p. 37; Cathleen Falsani, “Evangelical? Obama’s Faith Too Complex for Simple Label,” CST, 19 January 2007, p. 28; Philip Sherwell, “The Big Hitter,” Sunday Telegraph, 28 January 2007, p. 18; David Jackson and Ray Gibson, “Rezko Sells Lot Next to Obama,” CT, 24 February 2007 (on 28 December 2006); Chris Fusco and Dave McKinney, “Rezko Lawyer Wants to Build Kenwood Condos,” CST, 24 February 2007, p. 2; Kathy Chaney, “Developer Desires to Be Obama’s Neighbor,” HPH, 28 February 2007, pp. 1–2; Hermene D. Hartman, “Barack and Black Enterprise,” N’Digo, 7–13 June 2007; Mundy, Michelle, p. 169; Newton Minow’s 2008 interview with Jim Gilmore; DJG interviews with Newton Minow, Abner Mikva, and Hermene Hartman.

48. Bernard Schoenburg, “Durbin, LaHood Say Some Good Things About Obama,” SJR, 17 December 2006, p. 39; Gregory Rodriguez, “Is Obama the New ‘Black’?,” LAT, 17 December 2006; Jonathan Alter, “2008: The Contenders,” Newsweek, 18 December 2006, p. 7; Jackie Calmes, “Obama Forces Shuffle in Early ’08 Lineup,” and John Fund, “Not So Fast,” WSJ, 18 December 2006; Eric Zorn, “Obama Critics Build Cases on Faulty Premises,” CT, 19 December 2006; “Barack Obama, U.S. Senator,” WT, 19

December 2006, p. A20; [Mark Penn], “Launch Strategy Thoughts,” [21 December 2006], 11pp.; CRec, 8 December 2006, pp. S11836–38 (S. 2125; P. L. 109-456, 22 December 2006); John Heilemann, “The Chicago Cipher,” NYM, 25 December 2006; Josh Gerstein, “Obama Shapes an Agenda Beyond Iraq War,” NYS, 26 December 2006, p. 1; Joshua Green, “‘The Plan,’ October 2006,” and “Penn’s ‘Launch Strategy’ Ideas, December 21, 2006,” TheAtlantic.com, 11 August 2008; Balz and Johnson, The Battle for America 2008, pp. 50–52; Plouffe, The Audacity to Win, pp. 23–25.

49. Mary Clare Jalonick, “Daschle: Obama Has ‘Unlimited Potential,’” AP, 20 December 2006; Brian Charlton (AP), “Obama Run in ‘08 Will Be Decided Here, Sister Says,” HA (and HSB), 20 December 2006; Conor Clarke, “Barack Obama’s Non-Scandal,” TNR, 20 December 2006 (and CST, 24 December 2006, p. B3); Gary Hart, “American Idol,” NYRB, 24 December 2006; Jeff Zeleny, “Testing the Water, Obama Tests His Own Limits,” NYT, 24 December 2006; David Jackson and Ray Gibson, “Obama Intern Had Ties to Rezko,” and Christi Parsons, “Obama’s No ‘Smith,’ but Is That Really Bad?,” CT, 24 December 2006; Frank Main, “Internship Also Links Obama, Rezko,” CST, 24 December 2006, p. A5; Jonathan Alter, “Is America Ready?,” Newsweek, 25 December 2006, pp. 28ff.; Michael Barone, “The Experience Factor,” U.S. News, 25 December 2006; Lynn Sweet, “Obama Eyes Iowa in Putting ‘08 HQ Here,” CST, 25 December 2006, p. 3; “Poll Shows Obama Pulling Even with Clinton in NH,” Union Leader, 26 December 2006, p. A2; Johnny Brannon, “Obama’s Visit All About Golfing, Not Presidency,” HA, 28 December 2006; Charlton, “Obama Stays Out of Public Eye in Hawaii,” AP, 29 December 2006; “Obama Needs to Walk, Not Run,” BND, 30 December 2006; Evan Thomas et al., “Barack Obama: How He Did It,” Newsweek, 17 November 2008; Mendell, Obama, p. 380; Wolffe, Renegade, pp. 22–25; Plouffe, The Audacity to Win, pp. 25–26; Heilemann and Halperin, Game Change, p. 73.

50. Laura Washington, “Whites May Embrace Obama, but Do ‘Regular’ Black Folks?,” CST, 1 January 2007, p. 23; Lois Romano, “Effect of Obama’s Candor Remains to Be Seen,” and Ruth Marcus, “The Audacity of Nope,” WP, 3 January 2007; Obama Podcast #37, “Against an Escalation in Iraq,” 3 January 2007, Obama.Senate.gov; Patrick Healy and Adam Nagourney, “In the Back Room and Over Drinks, Senator Clinton Plans for 2008,” NYT, 4 January 2007; Obama, “A Chance to Change the Game,” WP, 4 January 2007; Lynn Sweet, “Past Drug Use May Test Obama,” CST, 4 January 2007, p. 7; Margaret Carlson, “For Obama, It’s Public Character That Counts,” Bloomberg, 4 January 2007; Mark Silva, “Democrats Warn Bush Against Iraq Buildup,” CT, 6 January 2007; Kenneth T. Walsh, “‘A Great Hunger for Change,’” U.S. News, 8 January 2007; Paul Merrion, “Obama Taps Local Fundraising Bigwigs,” CCB, 8 January 2007; Ambinder, “Teacher and Apprentice,” AM, December 2007; David Axelrod’s and Pete Rouse’s 2008 interviews with Jim Gilmore; Harriette Cole, “The Real Michelle Obama,” Ebony, September 2008, pp. 72–79; Wolffe, Renegade, pp. 57–58; Robinson, A Game of Character, pp. 195–96; Balz and Johnson, “A Political Odyssey: How Obama’s Team Forged a Path,” WP, 2 August 2009, and The Battle for America 2008, p. 19; Plouffe, The Audacity to Win, p. 27; Heilemann and Halperin, Game Change, pp. 73–74; Robert M. Gates, Duty (Knopf, 2014), p. 300; Axelrod, Believer, pp. 201–4.

51. Jim Abrams, “Senate Begins Work on Ethics Bill,” AP, 8 January 2007; Obama Podcast #38, “Ethics Legislation,” 8 January 2007, Obama.Senate.gov; Jeff Zeleny and Patrick Healy, “Decisions on the Horizon,” NYT, 9 January 2007; Dana Milbank, “At Newsstands Everywhere, the Honorable Beach Babe from Illinois,” WP, 9 January 2007; Christi Parsons, “Democrats Target Ethics,” and Eric Zorn, “Honesty Helps Obama Separate Past from Future,” CT, 9 January 2007; Lynn Sweet, “Fit to Be President?,” CST, 9 January 2007, p. 3; Helen Kennedy, “Jesse’s Bid to Be Prez Paved Way, Says Obama,” NYDN, 9 January 2007, p. 4; Annie Karni, “Obama Seeks Support on Clinton Turf,” NYS, 9 January 2007, p. 2; USS, CHS, “Ensuring Full Implementation of the 9/11 Commission’s Recommendations,” S. Hrg. 110-865, 9 January 2007, pp. 37–40; Elizabeth Williamson, “The Green Gripe with Obama,” WP, 10 January 2007; USS, HEL, “Health Care Coverage and Access,” S. Hrg. 110-24, 10 January 2007, p. 1; “Obama Statement on President’s Call for Troop Escalation in Iraq,” 10 January 2007; Sweet, “Clinton Locks Up Key Endorsement,” CST, 11 January 2007, p. 29; Obama on Today, NBC, 11 January 2007; CRec, 8 December 2006, p. S11830 (H. R. 6060, P. L. 109-472, 11 January 2007); “Lugar-Obama Nonproliferation Legislation Signed into Law by the President,” 11 January 2007; USS, CFR, “Securing America’s Interest in Iraq: The Remaining Options,” S. Hrg. 110-153, 11 January 2007, pp. 139–41; Anne E. Kornblut, “Devastating Criticism by Both Parties,” NYT, 12 January 2007; Milbank, “The Secretary vs. the Senators,” WP, 12 January 2007; Obama on Face the Nation, CBS, 14 January 2007; Mark Silva, “Obama, McCain: 2 War Views,” CT, 15 January 2007; “Beach Babes,” People, 15 January 2007, pp. 10–11; Mark Z. Barabak, “How Obama Went from Underdog to Alpha,” LAT, 4 June 2008; Tim Dickinson, “Obama’s Barin Trust,” Rolling Stone 1056/57, 10 July 2008; Shailagh Murray, “In Obama’s Circle, Chicago Remains the Tie That Binds,” WP, 14 July 2008.

52. Obama, Announcement for President, 16 January 2007, YouTube; Jeff Zeleny, “Obama Starts Bid, Reshaping Democratic Field,” NYT, 17 January 2007; Shailagh Murray and Chris Cillizza, “Obama Jumps into Presidential Fray,” WP, 17 January 2007; Judy Keen, “The Big Question About Barack Obama: Does He Have Enough Experience to Be President?,” USAT, 17 January 2007; Mike Dorning and Christi Parsons, “He Sets His Sights on the White House,” and John Kass, “Obama All Pecs and Peccadilloes, Now,” CT, 17 January 2007; Bernard Schoenburg, “Why Springfield,” SJR, 17 January 2007, p. 1; “Obama Statement on Iraq,” 17 January 2007; Zeleny, “Obama Knows Novelty Goes Only So Far as an Agent of Change,” NYT, 18 January 2007; “He’s In,” WP, 18 January 2007; Eric Zorn, “Why Obama Just Might Click with the Voters,” CT, 18 January 2007; Scott Fornek, “Obama Sizing Up Abe’s Old Digs,” CST, 18 January 2007, p. 16; Obama, CRec, 18 January 2007, pp. S722–23; Christi Parsons, “Senate OKs Tougher Ethics Bill 96-2,” CT, 19 January 2007; Eric Krol, “Obama’s Debut Gave Little Hint of What Was to Come,” CDH, 19 January 2007, p. 16; Bernard Schoenburg, “Site of Obama’s Announcement Still a Mystery,” SJR, 19 January 2007, p. 1; Leonard Pitts Jr., “America’s Baggage Is Obama’s Burden,” MH, 19 January 2007; Dori Meinert, “Obama’s Senate Record Shows High Party Loyalty,” Copley, 19 January 2007; Kevin McDermott, “Site of Obama Speech Likely Will Evoke Lincoln,” SLPD, 21 January 2007, p. C7; Kurt Erickson and Ed Tibbetts, “Obama’s Records Reveal His Liberal Side,” BP (and QCT), 21 January 2007; Debra J. Dickerson, “Colorblind,” Salon, 22 January 2007; Fran Spielman, “Obama Endorses Daley,” CST, 22 January 2007; Gary Washburn, “Daley Gets Backing of Obama,” CT, 23 January 2007; Steve Rhodes, “Barack Obama (D-Daley),” BR, 23 January 2007; Dante Chinni, “Obama-Mania May Backfire,” CSM, 23 January 2007; Rich Miller, “Love Is Blind,” IT, 25 January 2007; George Scialabba, “The Work Cut Out for Us,” Nation, 29 January 2007, pp. 23–27; Salim Muwakkil, “Barack’s Black Dilemma,” ITT, February 2007, p. 16; Kevin Alexander Gray, “The Packaging of Obama,” Progressive, February 2007, pp. 41–44; Paul Street, “The Obama Illusion,” Z Magazine, February 2007; James Crabtree, “Barack Obama,” Prospect Magazine (UK) 131, February 2007; Ta-Nehisi Coates, “Is Obama Black Enough?,” Time, 1 February 2007; Peter Beinart, “Black Like Me,” TNR, 5 February 2007, p. 6; Martin Plissner, “Ready for Obama Already,” NYT, 7 February 2007.

53. Obama on MSNBC, 23 January 2007; USS, CVA, “DOD/VA Collaboration and Cooperation,” S. Hrg. 110-1, 23 January 2007, pp. 1, 56, 63; Obama on Good Morning America, ABC, and The Early Show, CBS, 24 January 2007; Obama, remarks at Families USA Conference, 25 January 2007; Mike Dorning, “Obama Joins Ranks of Democrats Supporting Universal Health Care,” CT, 26 January 2007; Scott Fornek, “Clinton Pal Bobby Rush: I’m Supporting Obama,” CST, 27 January 2007, p. 5; USS, CHS, “Hurricanes Katrina and Rita,” S. Hrg. 110-33, 29 January 2007, pp. 10–12, 31–35, 38–41, 60–61; Adam Nagourney, “Senators at Louisiana Hearing Criticize Federal Recovery Aid,” NYT, 30 January 2007; USS, CFR, “Nominations of the 110th Congress,” S. Hrg. 110-777, 30 January 2007, pp. 23–25, 60–61; Obama, CRec, 30 January 2007, p. S1322 (introducing S. 433, the Iraq War De-Escalation Act); Shailagh Murray, “Obama Bill Sets Date for Troop Withdrawal,” WP, 31 January 2007; Obama Podcast #39, “Iraq War De-Escalation Act,” 31 January 2007, Obama.Senate.gov; Jason Horowitz, “Biden on the Biden Story,” NYO, 31 January 2007; Nagourney, “Biden Unwraps His Bid for ‘08 with an Oops!,” NYT, 1 February 2007; Dan Balz, “Biden Stumbles at the Starting Gate,” WP, 1 February 2007; Elana Schor, “Sen. Barack Obama Tries to Flesh Out His Record with an Election-Fraud Bill,” TH, 1 February 2007; Rachel L. Swarns, “So Far, Obama Can’t Take Black Vote for Granted,” NYT, 2 February 2007; Obama, “Remarks at the DNC Winter Meeting,” 2 February 2007; Jonathan Singer, “MyDD Interview with Barack Obama,” 2 February 2007; Ben Smith, “Black Rift Widens over Obama,” Politico, 3 February 2007; Horowitz, “Biden Unbound,” NYO, 5 February 2007; Anne E. Kornblut, “Obama Confronts ‘Outsider’ Dilemma,” WP, 5 February 2007; David Remnick, “The Joshua Generation,” and Ryan Lizza, “Battle Plans: How Obama Won,” TNY, 17 November 2008; Lloyd Grove, “The World According to David Plouffe,” Portfolio.com, 11 December 2008; Wolffe, Renegade, pp. 68–69; Balz and Johnson, The Battle for America 2008, p. 71.

54. Lynn Sweet, “Obama Begins Fund-Raising Drive,” CST, 1 February 2007, p. 31; Zachary A. Goldfarb, “Mobilized Online, Thousands Gather to Hear Obama,” WP, 3 February 2007; Sweet, “Obama in Campaign Mode on a Theme of ‘Hope,’” CST, 4 February 2007, p. A19; Anne E. Kornblut, “Obama Confronts ‘Outsider’ Dilemma,” WP, 5 February 2007; Bernard Schoenburg, “Cold Weather Won’t Move Obama’s Announcement,” SJR, 5 February 2007, p. 1; Christi Parsons and Manya A. Brachear, “Obama Launches an ‘07 Campaign—to Quit Smoking,” CT, 6 February 2007; Norman Mailer, “Superman Comes to the Supermarket,” Esquire, November 1960; Frank, Obama on the Couch, p. 130; Roger Simon, “Obama: ‘I Have the Potential of Bringing People Together,’” Politico, 8 February 2007; USS, CFR, “The President’s Foreign Affairs Budget,” S. Hrg. 110-389, 8 February 2007, pp. 57–60; USS, HEL, “NCLB Reauthorization,” S. Hrg. 110-295, 8 February 2007, pp. 46–47; Judy Keen, “Obama Touts Non-Political Resume,” and “Dem Cites ‘Unique’ Skills as Key to His Campaign,” USAT, 9 February 2007; Mike Allen, “Undoing Obama,” Politico, 9 February 2007; Peter Wallstein, “Blacks Wonder If Obama’s Multiculturalism Is a Problem,” LAT, 10 February 2007; “Michelle Obama to Work Part Time During Campaign,” UCC, 15 February 2007; Lloyd Grove, “The World According to David Plouffe,” Portfolio.com, 11 December 2008.

55. Sara Karp, “Sen. Barack Obama’s Pastor Frames Progressive Issues Through Lens of Faith,” Religion News Service, 10 March 2005; Manya A. Brachear, “Pastor Inspires ‘Audacity to Hope,’” CT, 21 January 2007; Ben Wallace-Wells, “The Radical Roots of Barack Obama,” 14 February 2007, and “Destiny’s Child,” Rolling Stone, 22 February 2007, pp. 48–57; Jodi Kantor, “Disinvitation by Obama Is Criticized,” NYT, 6 March 2007; Michael Powell and Kantor, “A Strained Wright-Obama Bond Finally Snaps,” NYT, 1 May 2008; Daren Briscoe, “An Interview with Barack Obama,” Newsweek, 8 January 2009 (18–19 May 2008); Evan Thomas et al., “Barack Obama: How He Did It,” Newsweek, 17 November 2008; Heilemann and Halperin, Game Change, p. 75; Balz and Johnson, The Battle for America 2008, pp. 33, 201; Remnick, The Bridge, pp. 468–72; Plouffe, The Audacity to Win, pp. 28, 40–41; Axelrod, Believer, pp. 209–12; Jeremiah Wright’s interviews with DJG and Edward Klein; Klein, The Amateur, p. 46.

56. Obama, “Remarks Announcing His Candidacy for President,” 10 February 2007, YouTube; Adam Nagourney and Jeff Zeleny, “Obama Formally Enters Presidential Race with Calls for Generational Change,” and Brent Staples, “Decoding the Debate Over the Blackness of Barack Obama,” NYT, 11 February 2007; Dan Balz and Anne E. Kornblut, “Obama Joins Race with Goals Set High,” WP, 11 February 2007; Rick Pearson and Ray Long, “Obama’s Kickoff Is Steeped in Symbolism,” Christi Parsons, “Obama: ‘Destiny Calling,’” and Michael Tackett, “Obama Entry Heavy in Symbolism,” CT, 11 February 2007; Scott Fornek and Dave McKinney, “Obama Makes It Official,” CST, 11 February 2007, p. A1; Daniel Pike, “A Stirring Start,” and Bernard Schoenburg, “Obama Has No Problem Writing His Own Speeches,” SJR, 11 February 2007, pp. 1, 17; Kevin McDermott, “Obama, Off and Running,” SLPD, 11 February 2007, p. A1; Kurt Erickson, “All In: Obama Enters ‘08 Race,” BP, 11 February 2007, p. A1; Jennifer Jacobs, “Obama Enters Race for President,” DMR, 11 February 2007, p. A1; David Yepsen, “Can a Candidate Be Too Candid?,” DMR, 12 February 2007, p. B3; Maureen Dowd, “Obama, Legally Blonde?,” NYT, 14 February 2007; David Montgomery, “Barack Obama’s On-Point Message Man,” WP, 15 February 2007; Anna Schneider-Mayerson, “It’s Obamalot!,” NYO, 12 March 2007, p. 1; Matthew Mosk, “The $75 Million Woman,” WP, 8 October 2007; M. Charles Bakst, “Up Close: Michelle Obama,” PJ, 21 February 2008, p. B1; Plouffe, The Audacity to Win, pp. 41–42; Axelrod, Believer, pp. 212–15.

EPILOGUE: THE PRESIDENT DID NOT ATTEND, AS HE WAS GOLFING

1. Matt Taibbi, “Between Barack and a Hard Place,” Rolling Stone, 15 February 2007 (and Alternet.org); Curtis Lawrence, “I Want a Black President,” CST, 17 February 2007; Louis Chude-Sokei, “Shades of Black,” LAT, 18 February 2007; Michael D. Shear, “Obama Takes First Campaign Trip South,” WP, 19 February 2007; Eugene Robinson, “Authentic Obama,” WP, 20 February 2007; Rich Miller, “Why Obama Will Surprise National Political Pundits,” CST, 23 February 2007; Jeff Zeleny, “As Candidate, Obama Carves Antiwar Stance,” NYT, 26 February 2007; Obama, “Foreword,” in National Urban League, The State of Black America 2007 (Beckham Publications, 2007), pp. 9–12; Maureen Dowd, “Where’s His Right Hook?,” NYT, 3 March 2007; Nicholas D. Kristof, “Obama on the Issues,” NYT, 5 March 2007; Jason Horowitz, “Barack Attack,” NYO, 26 March 2007, p. 1; Dowd, “She’s Not Buttering Him Up,” NYT, 25 April 2007; Lynn Sweet, “Getting Ready to Roll,” CST, 3 May 2007, p. 37; John McCormick, “Chicago Is Heart, Brain Center of Obama Campaign,” CT, 11 June 2007; McCormick, “Obama’s ‘Body Man’ on His Game,” CT, 15 November 2007; “Obama’s Right Hands,” Glamour, December 2007; Jacob Dagger, “Q&A: Inseparable from Obama,” Duke Magazine, September–October 2008; Axelrod and Plouffe et al. on 60 Minutes, CBS, 9 November 2008.

2. Jeremiah Wright on Hannity & Colmes, Fox News, 1 March 2007; Obama, remarks at the Selma voting rights march commemoration, 4 March 2007; Patrick Healy and Jeff Zeleny, "Clinton and Obama Unite, Briefly, in Pleas to Blacks," NYT, 5 March 2007; Jodi Kantor, "Disinvitation by Obama Is Criticized," NYT, 6 March 2007; Brian DeBose, "Obama's Short Tenure Seen as a Plus," WT, 7 March 2007; Jonathan Tilove, "Who Is Obama's 'Cousin Pookie'?", Newhouse, 8 March 2007; Mary Mitchell, "Obama Slight His Own Pastor," CST, 8 March 2007, p. 14; Bob Abernethy, "Link Between Senator Barack Obama and Reverend Jeremiah Wright of Trinity United Church of Christ Issue in Presidential Campaign," Religion & Ethics NewsWeekly, 9 March 2007; Dawn Turner Trice, "Is Obama Black Enough?," CT, 11 March 2007; Henry C. Jackson, "AP Interview: Obama Doesn't Take 'Great Offense' Over Word Play," AP, 11 March 2007; Laura Washington, "National Media Can't Get Enough of Obama," CST, 12 March 2007, p. 33; Eugene Robinson, "The Moment for This Messenger?," WP, 13 March 2007; Marc Hujer, "Spiegel Interview with Barack Obama's Pastor," Spiegel, 13 March 2007; Henry Bodget, "Barack Obama and His Money," Slate, 13 March 2007; Obama on Anderson Cooper 360, CNN, 14 March 2007; Leon Wieseltier, "Audacities," TNR, 19 March 2007, p. 64; David Ehrenstein, "Obama the 'Magic Negro,'" LAT, 19 March 2007; Obama on The Larry King Show, CNN, 19 March 2007; Michael Tarm, "Activist Obama Church Enters Campaign Spotlight," AP, 20 March 2007; Rich Miller, "Will 3rd Ward Politics Affect Obama's Presidential Race?," CST, 23 March 2007, p. 31; Richard Cohen, "Obama's Back Story," WP, 27 March 2007; Obama on The Situation Room, CNN, 28 March 2007; Jodi Kantor, "A Candidate, His Minister and the Search for Faith," NYT, 30 April 2007.

3. Jackie Calmes, "From Obama's Past: An Old Classmate, a Surprising Call," WSJ, 23 March 2007; Maurice Possley et al., "The Troublesome Return of a Long-Lost Classmate," CT, 25 March 2007; Jake Tapper, "Tale of Two Men: Obama Mentor Now Homeless," Good Morning America, ABC, 30 March 2007; Peter Hart, "Obamamania," Extra!, March–April 2007; Adam Nagourney, "2 Years After Big Speech, A Lower Key for Obama," NYT, 8 April 2007; Obama on The Late Show with David Letterman, 11 April 2007; John Heilemann, "Money Chooses Sides," NYM, 15 April 2007; Tim Novak, "Obama and His Rezko Ties," CST, 23 April 2007, p. 22; Novak, "Obama's Ex-Boss a Rezko Partner," CST, 23 April 2007, p. 25; Rick Pearson and Ray Long, "Obama Still Answers for Old Ties to Rezko," CT, 24 April 2007; Novak, "Broken Promises, Broken Homes," CST, 24 April 2007, p. 20; Novak, "Obama: I Didn't Know About Rezko Problems," CST, 24 April 2007, p. 8; Carol Marin, "Obama Ducks the Questions," CST, 25 April 2007, p. 43; David Brooks, "Obama, Gospel and Verse," NYT, 26 April 2007; "Answers Are Needed About Rezko's Deals," CST, 27 April 2007, p. 38; Katie Couric, "Questions About Barack Obama's Dealings with Chicago Business Developer," CBS Evening News, 27 April 2007; Kevin Drum, "Getting to Know Obama," Washington Monthly, 5 May 2007; Andrew Ferguson, "Self-Made Man: Barack Obama's Autobiographical Fictions," Weekly Standard, 18 June 2012; Sally Quinn, "A Welcome Face—and a Question," WP, 5 May 2007; Lynn Sweet, "Rezko Question Dogs Obama," CST, 17 May 2007, p. 31; Marin, "Out of Touch with Illinois?," CST, 6 June 2007, p. 41; Ray Gibson and David Jackson, "Obama Campaign Distances Itself from Indicted Fundraiser Rezko," CT, 7 June 2007; Jackson and John McCormick, "Critic: Obama Endorsements Counter Calls for Clean Government," CT, 12 June 2007; Novak, "Obama's Letters for Rezko," CST, 13 June 2007, p. 8; Christopher Drew and Mike McIntire, "An Obama Patron and Friend Until an Indictment in Illinois," NYT, 14 June 2007; Chris Fusco and Tim Novak, "Rezko Cash Triple What Obama Says," CST, 18 June 2007, p. 3; "The Drip, Drip, Drip on Obama," CT, 19 June 2007; Oona King, "Barack Obama's Dreams From My Father," Times (London), 15 September 2007; Jess Bravin, "Barack Obama: The Present Is Prologue," WSJ, 7 October 2008; Evan Thomas et al., "Barack Obama: How He Did It," Newsweek, 17 November 2008; Liam Julian, "Niebuhr and Obama," Policy Review, April–May 2009, pp. 19–33; Dave Burgess, A Tale of Two Brothers: The Keith Kakugawa Story (Lulu Press, 2009), p. 171; DJG interview with Keith Kakugawa.

4. Perry Bacon Jr., "Obama Reaches Out with Tough Love," WP, 3 May 2007; Jeff Zeleny, "Secret Service Guards Obama," NYT, 4 May 2007; Christi Parsons and Mike Dorning, "Obama Given Secret Service Protection," CT, 4 May 2007; Lynn Sweet, "Agents to Shield Obama," CST, 4 May 2007, p. 3; Obama, "Remarks to the National Conference of Black Mayors," Baton Rouge, LA, 5 May 2007; Lynne Duke, "How Big a Stretch?," WP, 7 May 2007; John McCormick, "Obama Downplays Security Bubble," CT, 7 May 2007; Harry C. Alford, "Did Barack Obama Lie?," CD, 9 May 2007, p. 7; Obama on This Week, ABC, 13 May 2007; Dorning, "Obama: President Needs Judgment with Toughness," CT, 14 May 2007; Joe Klein, "Barack Obama," Time, 14 May 2007, p. 56; McCormick, "Her Money Is on Obama," CT, 14 May 2007; Parsons, "Obama Doesn't Toe Line at Labor Forum," CT, 15 May 2007; Jodi Kantor and Jeff Zeleny, "Michelle Obama Adds New Role to Balancing Act," NYT, 18 May 2007; "Michelle Obama One-on-One," Good Morning America, ABC, 22 and 23 May 2007; Parsons, "Obama's Wife Cuts Ties to Wal-Mart," CT, 23 May 2007; Sweet, "Ties to Wal-Mart Cut," CST, 23 May 2007, p. 36; Gary Dorrien, "Hope or Hype?," Christian Century, 29 May 2007, pp. 24ff.; Deanna Bellandi, "Michelle Obama Razzes Her Husband, but Says He Doesn't Mind," AP, 29 May 2007; Obama on Today, NBC, 29 May 2007; Walter Shapiro, "Barack Obama's Quiet Rebellion," Salon, 30 May 2007; Donovan Taylor, "Sen. Barack Obama Does Support Local Chambers of Commerce," CD, 6 June 2007, p. 7; AP, "House Where Obama Rents Is Hit by Blaze," WP, CT, and CST, 18 June 2007; Margaret Talev, "Michelle Obama Fits Her Public Role," KRDC, 8 July 2007; Richard Wolffe and Daren Briscoe, "Across the Divide," Newsweek, 16 July 2007, pp. 22ff.; Megan Reichgott, "Obama's 2 Daughters Question Mom," AP, 20 July 2007; Mike McIntire, "Blogger Well Known in Politics Turns His Attention to Attack on Obama Campaign," NYT, 30 August 2007; Jeff Chang, "Barack Obama Q&A," Vibe, September 2007 [23 May 2007]; Tonya Lewis Lee, "Your Next First Lady?," Glamour, September 2007; "The Best Dressed Men in the World," Esquire, September 2007; Dana Slagle, "Michelle Obama Juggles Marriage, Motherhood & Work on the Campaign Trail," Jet, 10 September 2007, pp. 14ff.; Obama and Michelle Obama on 60 Minutes, CBS, 16 November 2008; Jonathan Van Meter, "Leading by Example," Vogue, April 2013, pp. 248–55, 318–19.

5. Obama at the Sojourners Presidential Forum, 4 June 2007, CNN; Obama, remarks at Hampton University annual Ministers' Conference, 5 June 2007; Mike Dorning, "Obama Warns of Black 'Quiet Riot,'" CT, 6 June 2007; Obama, CRec, 6 June 2007, pp. S7155–56, S7162; Charles Babington, "Obama, Graham Trade Barbs in Senate," AP, 7 June 2007; Dena Bunis, "Second Thoughts by Bill's Backers," OCR, 7 June 2007; Kate Zernike and Jeff Zeleny, "Obama in Senate," NYT, 9 March 2008; Graham on "The Choice 2008," Frontline, PBS, 14 October 2008; Margaret E. Dorsey and Miguel Diaz-Barriga, "Senator Barack Obama and Immigration Reform," Journal of Black Studies 38 (September 2007): 90–104.

6. Jeff Zeleny, "A New Kind of Politics Closely Resembles the Old," NYT, 16 June 2007; Mike Dorning, "Obama Urges Fathers to Be Responsible," CT, 16 June 2007; John McCormick, "Obama Bio Cites Hidden '02 Agenda," CT, 21 June 2007; Mendell, Obama, pp. 7, 12; John McCormick, "Obama Team Can Play Rough,” CT, 22 June 2007; Bettylu Saltzman, “Going Back a Few Years with Obama,” CT, 3 July 2007; Richard Wolffe, “Inside Obama’s Dream Machine,” Newsweek, 14 January 2008, pp. 30ff.; Wolffe, Renegade, p. 127; DJG interviews with Hasan Chandoo and Bettylu Saltzman.

7. Obama, remarks at the Take Back America Forum, 19 June 2007; Eugene Robinson, “A Father’s Absence and a Son’s Message,” WP, 19 June 2007; Carol Hunter, “Thoughtful Obama Says He’s Ready to Lead,” DMR, 20 June 2007, p. A11; Obama, “A Politics of Conscience,” UCC 50th anniversary convention, Hartford, 23 June 2007; Jeff Zeleny, “Obama, in New TV Ads, Focuses on His Pre-Senate Years,” NYT, 26 June 2007; Rick Pearson and John McCormick, “GOP Stalwart Lauds Obama in TV Ads,” CT, 26 June 2007; Larry Blumenfeld, “Barack Obama in New Orleans,” Salon, 6 July 2007; Amina Luqman, “Obama’s Tightrope,” WP, 6 July 2007; Ruth Marcus, “From Barack Obama, Two Dangerous Words,” WP, 11 July 2007; Obama on News & Notes, NPR, 13 July 2007; Obama, remarks on Chicago Violence at the Vernon Park Church of God, 15 July 2007; McCormick, “Obama Attacks Violence in Chicago,” CT, 16 July 2007; Obama, remarks to the Planned Parenthood Action Fund, 17 July 2007; Obama, remarks at Changing the Odds for Urban America, Anacostia, D.C., 18 July 2007; Obama, remarks to the College Democrats of America, Columbia, SC, 26 July 2007; Obama, remarks at the National Urban League Annual Conference, St. Louis, MO, 27 July 2007; Obama, “Renewing American Leadership,” Foreign Affairs 86 (July–August 2007): 2–16; Salim Muwakkil, “The Squandering of Obama,” ITT, August 2007, p. 15; Obama, remarks at the Woodrow Wilson Center, 1 August 2007; Eric Zorn, “Obama Missing Chance to Cut Bad Local Ties,” CT, 2 August 2007; Scott Helman, “PACs and Lobbyists Aided Obama’s Rise,” BG, 9 August 2007; Mike Dorning, “In Caregiver’s Shoes,” CT, 9 August 2007; Andrew Sullivan, “Goodbye to All That,” Atlantic, December 2007; Jeff Zeleny, “Reprising a Career,” NYT, 22 January 2008.

8. MacFarquhar, “The Conciliator,” TNY, 7 May 2007, pp. 48ff.; Obama, remarks to the NABJ Convention, Las Vegas, 10 August 2007; Gromer Jeffers Jr., “Is He Black Enough?,” DMN, 11 August 2007; Brian DeBose, “Obama Confronts ‘Blackness’ Issue,” WT, 11 August 2007; Perry Bacon Jr., “The Obamas Are Tired of the Blackness Question,” WP, 14 August 2007; Leonard Pitts, “Concentrate on Obama’s Record, Not His Color,” MH, 15 August 2007; John McCormick, “Buffett Is Obama Meal Ticket,” CT, 16 August 2007; Les Payne, “Sen. Barack Obama: In America, a Dual Audience,” Newsday, 19 August 2007; Steve Penn, “Barack Obama Exudes Confidence,” KC Star, 20 August 2007; Obama, “Our Main Goal: Freedom in Cuba,” MH, 21 August 2007; Jennifer Hunter, “Michelle Gets Stronger All the Time,” CST, 21 August 2007, p. 18; Obama on The Daily Show, Comedy Central, 22 August 2007; David Ignatius, “The Pragmatic Obama,” WP, 23 August 2007; Mike Littwin, “Obama’s ‘Change’ Could Be More Than a Coined Phrase,” RMN, 29 August 2007; Obama, “Hit Iran Where It Hurts,” NYDN, 30 August 2007; Gwen Ifill, “Beside Barack,” Essence, September 2007, pp. 200ff.; Ryan Lizza, “Above the Fray,” GQ, September 2007; Maureen Dowd, “The 46-Year-Old-Virgin,” NYT, 5 September 2007; McCormick and Christi Parsons, “Winfrey Draws Rich, Famous to Obama Bash,” CT, 9 September 2007; David Baumann, “Is Obama as Bipartisan as His Campaign Says?” SPT, 10 September 2007; Obama, remarks at Ashford University, Clinton, IA, 12 September 2007; Obama, “Slate-Yahoo-Huffington Post Presidential Forum,” 12 September 2007; Jeff Zeleny and Michael R. Gordon, “Obama Offers Most Extensive Plan Yet for Winding Down War,” NYT, 13 September 2007; Obama on MSNBC, 17 September 2007; Gwen Ifill, “The Candidate,” Essence, October 2007, pp. 224ff.; Obama in Philip Galanes, “Barack Obama and Bryan Cranston on the Roles of a Lifetime,” NYT, 6 May 2016; DJG interviews with Rob Fisher, Jon Molot, George Galland, Paul Scully, and Cynthia Miller.

9. MacFarquhar, “The Conciliator,” TNY, 7 May 2007, pp. 48ff.; Christi Parsons and Mike Dorning, “Jackson Softens Criticism of Obama in Jena 6 Case,” CT, 20 September 2007; Alec MacGillis, “Obama Skips Vote, Iowa Debate,” WP, 20 September 2007, and twelfth of twenty-one comments, 11:05 A.M., 21 September; Ryan Grim, “Senate Votes to Do PR for MoveOn,” Politico, 20 September 2007; “Campaign Digest,” CT, 21 September 2007; Nedra Pickler, “Democrat Barack Obama Brings in Friend and Long-Term Adviser Amid Concerns About Campaign,” AP, 21 September 2007; Perry Bacon Jr. and Matthew Mosk, “Obama’s Challenge,” WP, 23 September 2007; Obama, remarks at Howard University convocation, 28 September 2007; Obama, “Foreword,” Charleston Law Review, Fall 2007; David Moberg, “Obama’s in the Eye of the Beholder,” ITT, October 2007, pp. 29ff.; Obama, remarks at DePaul University, 2 October 2007; Jeff Zeleny, “Obama Talks About Growing Up Without His Father,” NYT, 3 October 2007; Marc Ambinder, “Teacher and Apprentice,” Atlantic, December 2007; Robert Frank and Mark Maremont, “Money Maven Penny Pritzker Raises Record Amounts of Cash for Obama,” WSJ, 15 March 2008; Noam Scheiber, “Plouffe Piece,” TNR, 7 May 2008; Douglas Belkin, “For Obama, Advice Straight Up,” WSJ, 12 May 2008; Tim Dickinson, “Obama’s Brain Trust,” Rolling Stone 1056/57, 10 July 2008; Valerie Jarrett’s 2009 interview with Robert Draper; Jarrett in Remnick, The Bridge, p. 274; Plouffe, The Audacity to Win, pp. 91–92, 95–99; Suskind, Confidence Men, pp. 10–11; Noam Scheiber, “The Partner,” TNR, 7 June 2012, pp. 4–6; Cal Fussman, “Valerie Jarrett: What I’ve Learned,” Esquire, May 2013; Jarrett, “Unconditional Love and a Legacy of Early Education,” Politico, 5 December 2013; Axelrod, Believer, p. 232; DJG interviews with Judy Byrd, Claire Serdiuk, and Sheila Jager.

10. Jim Davenport, “Obama Says Faith ‘Plays Every Role’ in His Life,” AP, 7 October 2007; Michael Crowley, “Hope Sinks,” TNR, 8 October 2007, p. 20; Obama on The Tonight Show, NBC, 17 October 2007; Joan Walsh et al., “All the Candidates’ Books,” and “Reading Barack Obama,” Salon, 18 and 19 October 2007; Obama on The Tavis Smiley Show, 18 October 2007; Steve Chapman, “Obama vs. the Anger Mongers,” CT, 21 October 2007; David S. Broder, “Trying Times for the Obama Faithful,” WP, 25 October 2007; Christine G. Sabathia, “Meet Michelle Obama,” LAS, 25–31 October 2007, p. A1; Linda Douglass, “Michelle Obama on the Family and the Campaign Trail,” National Journal, 26 October 2007; Melinda Henneberger, “The Obama Marriage,” Slate, 26 October 2007; Adam Nagourney and Jeff Zeleny, “Obama Promises a Forceful Stand Against Clinton,” NYT, 28 October 2007; Dan Balz, “What’s on the Table for Obama and Social Security?,” WP, 30 October 2007, and third comment, 2:58 P.M.; Ryan Lizza, “The Relaunch,” TNY, 26 November 2007, pp. 72ff.; Richard Wolffe, “Inside Obama’s Dream Machine,” Newsweek, 14 January 2008, pp. 30ff.; Lizza, “How to Beat Hillary Clinton,” TNY, 13 October 2015.

11. Holly Yeager, “The Heart and Mind of Michelle Obama,” O Magazine, November 2007, pp. 286ff.; Michael Gordon and Jeff Zeleny, “Interview with Barack Obama,” NYT, 1 November 2007; Gordon and Zeleny, “Obama Envisions New Relationship with Iran,” NYT, 2 November 2007; James Traub, “Is (His) Biography (Our) Destiny?,” NYT Magazine, 4 November 2007, pp. 50ff.; Lynn Sweet, “Living in a Glass House,” CST, 5 November 2007, p. 26; “Barack Obama Attends Campaign Fund Raiser on St. Thomas,” St. John Source, 5 November 2007; Sweet, “Where Are Obama State Senate Files?,” CST, 10 November 2007, p. 10; Obama on Meet the Press, NBC, 11 November 2007; Sweet, “Successor Got Key Obama Files,” CST, 12 November 2007, p. 26; “Michelle Obama Speaks with MSNBC’s Mika Brzezinski,” MSNBC.com, 13 November 2007; Pew Research Center, “Blacks See Growing Values Gap Between Poor and Middle Class,” 13 November 2007; Mike Baker and Christopher Wills, “Obama, Who Rapped Clinton on Records, Says He Has None From Ill. State Senate,” AP, 14 November 2007; Obama, “News Conference with Google Employees,” Mountain View, CA, 14 November 2007; Margaret Talev, “Q&A with Michelle Obama,” KRDC, 21 November 2007; Obama, “Former Prisoners Deserve a Second Chance,” LAS, 22–28 November 2007, p. A6 (and CD, 5 December 2007, p. 8); Andrea Billups, “Mrs. Obama, Savvy Surrogate,” WT, 25 November 2007, p. A1; David S. Broder, “Obama v. the Icon,” WP, 25 November 2007; Obama on Nightline, ABC, 26 November 2007; Rebecca Traister, “Michelle Obama Gets Real,” Salon, 28 November 2007; Perry Bacon Jr., “Foes Use Obama’s Muslim Ties to Fuel Rumors About Him,” WP, 29 November 2007; Juan Williams, “Obama’s Color Line,” NYT, 30 November 2007; Leslie Bennetts, “First Lady in Waiting,” Vanity Fair, December 2007; Richard Wolffe, “‘I Can Only Be Who I Can Be,’” Newsweek, 16 February 2008; Plouffe, The Audacity to Win, pp. 109–15; Axelrod, Believer, pp. 236–40; DJG interview with Bob Klonowski.

12. Obama on the CBS Evening News, 6 December 2007; Noam Scheiber, “The Closer,” TNR, 10 December 2007; Roger Cohen, “Obama’s American Idea,” NYT, 10 December 2007; Daniel Heim, “Sending Mixed Messages?,” RC, 11 December 2007; Obama on the CBS Evening News, 17 December 2007, on The Early Show, CBS, 18 December 2007, on the CBS Evening News, 19 December 2007, on The Early Show, CBS, 20 December 2007, on Good Morning America, ABC, 20 December 2007, and on Today, NBC, 21 December 2007; Shailagh Murray and Peter Slevin, “Message, Method Are Behind Obama’s Climb,” WP, 22 December 2007; Obama on Face the Nation, CBS, 23 December 2007; Scott Helman, “‘Law Professor’ Obama Embraces Nuance on Trail,” BG, 25 December 2007; Bob Dean, “Candidates Brake for Christmas,” AJC, 25 December 2007; Maya Soetoro-Ng on Tell Me More, NPR, 27 December 2007; Obama on Meet the Press, NBC, 30 December 2007; Dan Boylan, “‘08: Year of Obama,” Midweek, 2 January 2008; Maureen Dowd, “Deign or Reign?,” NYT, 2 January 2008; “Barack Obama Interview,” 2 January 2008, ChicagoTribune.com; John McCormick and Christi Parsons, “Obama Feeling Like a Winner,” CT, 3 January 2008; Obama on Good Morning America, ABC, The Early Show, CBS, and Today, NBC, 3 January 2008; “Obama’s Caucus Speech,” NYT, 3 January 2008; Dan Balz et al., “Obama Wins Iowa’s Democratic Caucuses,” WP, 4 January 2008; Yudhijit Bhattacharje, “Barack Obama,” Science, 4 January 2008, pp. 28–29; Nick Shields, “Obama’s Iowa Victory Speech Brings Double Takes,” CDH, 5 January 2005; Deborah Solomon, “All in the Family,” NYT Magazine, 20 January 2008; Amy Rice and Alicia Sams, By the People, Pivotal Pictures, 2009.

13. Richard Wolffe, “‘Hungry for Change,’” Newsweek, 4 January 2008; Ben Smith, “Likable Enough?,” Politico, 5 January 2008; Stanage, Redemption Song, p. 82; Obama on Good Morning America, ABC, 7 January 2008; Christopher Hitchens, “Identity Crisis,” Slate, 7 January 2008; Obama on Good Morning America, ABC, The Early Show, CBS, Today, NBC, Morning Edition, NPR, and Fox and Friends, Fox News, 9 January 2008; William Jelani Cobb, “As He Rises, the Old Guard Scowls,” and David Greenberg, “Why Obamamania?,” WP, 13 January 2008; Wolffe, “Inside Obama’s Dream Machine,” Newsweek, 14 January 2008, pp. 30ff.; Obama on the CBS Evening News, 16 January 2008; David Ignatius, “The Obama of ‘Dreams,’” WP, 17 January 2008; Dan Gilgoff, “Barack Obama,” Beliefnet.com, 21 January 2008; Sarah Pulliam and Ted Olsen, “Q&A: Barack Obama,” Christianity Today, 21 January

2008; Dan Morain and Tom Hamburger, "Obama Dogged by Ties to Donor," LAT, 23 January 2008; Bob Sexter et al., "Obama, Rezko Ties Again at Issue," CT, 23 January 2008; Obama on Good Morning America, ABC, The Early Show, CBS, Today, NBC, and Morning Edition, NPR, 23 January 2008; Jodi Kantor, "Obama's Christian Campaign," NYT, 25 January 2008; Jay Hancock, "Obama's Exelon Ties Merit Close Look," Baltimore Sun, 25 January 2008; Obama on Today, NBC, 26 January 2008; John Kass, "If You Look Closely, It's Plain: Rezko Is Obama's Problem," CT, 27 January 2008; "For the Democrats: Obama," CT, 27 January 2008; Obama on This Week, ABC, 27 January 2008; Bob Sexter and David Jackson, "Funds Tough to Figure for Rezko Aid," and Eric Zorn, "Tony Rezko, the Early Warnings," CT, 31 January 2008; Liz Halloran, "Q&A: Michelle Obama," U.S. News, 1 February 2008; Obama on World News Tonight, ABC, 2 February 2008; Valerie Jarrett, "Barack Obama," CT, 4 February 2008; Obama on The Early Show, CBS, and The Situation Room, CNN, 4 February 2008, on Good Morning America, ABC, The Early Show, CBS, Today, NBC, and Fox and Friends, Fox News, 5 February 2008, and on 60 Minutes, CBS, 10 February 2008; Paul Krugman, "Hate Springs Eternal," NYT, 11 February 2008; Margaret Ramirez, "Obama Pastor Gives Last Trinity Sermon," CT, 11 February 2008; David Mark, "Full Text: Obama Interview," Politico, 12 February 2008; Susan Saulny, "Michelle Obama Thrives in Campaign Trenches," NYT, 14 February 2008; Jack Shafer, "How Obama Does That Thing He Does," Slate, 14 February 2008; Ramirez, "Pastor Remixes Church Service," CT, 17 February 2008; Obama on Today, NBC, 19 February 2008; Robert Samuelson, "The Obama Delusion," WP, 20 February 2008; Robin Abcarian, "Michelle Obama in Spotlight's Glare," LAT, 21 February 2008; Christi Parsons and John McCormick, "Analyzing Obama's Stump Speeches," CT, 24 February 2008; Kenneth T. Walsh, "One-on-One with Barack Obama," U.S. News, 25 February 2008, p. 44; Sandra Sobieraj Westfall, "25 Questions for Barack Obama," People, 25 February 2008, p. 96; Lynn Sweet, "Before Jewish Group, Obama Distances Himself," CST, 25 February 2008; Claudia Feldman, "An Interview with Michelle Obama," Houston Chronicle, 28 February 2008; Obama, "'I Will Be a President Who Draws Upon the Energy and Expertise of the Indian-American Community,'" India Abroad, 29 February 2008, p. A10; David A. Hollinger, "Obama, Blackness, and Postethnic America," CHE, 29 February 2008; David Ignatius, "Obama: A Thin Record for a Bridge Builder," WP, 2 March 2008; Howard Kurtz, "'Soft' Press Sharpens Its Focus on Obama," WP, 3 March 2008; Obama on Good Morning America, ABC, 3 March 2008; Rick Pearson and McCormick, "Barack Obama Takes Heat Over NAFTA Memo, Rezko," CT, 4 March 2008; Lynn Sweet, "Obama Talks a Lot, But Answers Little," CST, 4 March 2008; Dana Milbank, "Ask Tough Questions? Yes, They Can!," WP, 4 March 2008; Lauren Collins, "The Other Obama," TNY, 10 March 2008, pp. 88ff.; Hollinger, "Obama, the Instability of Color Lines, and the Promise of a Postethnic Future," Callaloo 31 (Fall 2008): 1033–37; Plouffe, The Audacity to Win, pp. 197, 203.

14. Obama on Good Morning America, ABC, The Early Show, CBS, Today, NBC, and Fox and Friends, Fox News, 5 March 2008; Darryl Pinckney, "Dreams from Obama," NYRB, 6 March 2008; Lynn Sweet, "Obama's Inner Circle," CST, 9 March 2008; Christopher Wills, "An Obama-Rezko Primer," AP, 10 March 2008; Obama on Hardball with Chris Matthews, MSNBC, 11 March 2008; Obama on Today, NBC, The Early Show, CBS, and Good Morning America, ABC, 12 March 2008; Brian Ross on Good Morning America, ABC, 13 March 2008, 7:07 A.M.; Ross and Rehab El-Buri, "Obama's Pastor: God Damn America, U.S. to Blame for 9/11," ABCNews.com, 13 March 2008; Paul Beatty, "Cool We Can Believe In," TNR, 14 March 2008; Christopher Drew and Jo Becker, "Obama Lists His Earmarks, Asking Clinton for Hers,” NYT, 14 March 2008; Cass R. Sunstein, “The Obama I Know,” CT, 14 March 2008; Lynn Sweet, “Obama Lists Pet Projects, at Last,” CST, 14 March 2008, p. 4; David Brown, “Obama Addresses PA’s Importance, Pastor’s Remarks,” PTR, 14 March 2008; Jodi Kantor, “Pastor’s Words Still Draw Fire,” NYT, 14 March 2008; Obama, “Transcript of Tribune Interview,” CT, 16 March 2008 [14 March]; “Complete Transcript of the Sun-Times Interview with Barack Obama,” CST, 15 March 2008 [14 March]; Obama, “On My Faith and My Church,” Huffington Post, 14 March 2008, 4:28 P.M.; Obama on Countdown, MSNBC, Fox on the Record, Fox News, and Anderson Cooper 360, CNN, 14 March 2008; David Jackson, “Obama: I Trusted Rezko,” CT, 15 March 2008; Tim Novak et al., “More Rezko Dough Found,” CST, 15 March 2008, p. 2; Jodi Kantor, “Obama Denounces Statements of His Pastor as ‘Inflammatory,’” NYT, 15 March 2008; Peter Slevin, “Outspoken Minister Out of Obama Campaign,” WP, 15 March 2008; “Obama’s Rezko Narrative,” and John Kass, “Obama Opens Up on Rezko,” CT, 16 March 2008; Chris Fusco et al., “Obama Explains Rezko Relationship,” and Mark Brown, “Obama Cleared the Air on Rezko,” CST, 16 March 2008, p. 2; Obama on PBS NewsHour, 17 March 2008; Esther Kang, “The Rezko Refund,” CM, April 2008, p. 20; Peter Nicholas, “Obama Relies on Close-Knit Inner Circle,” LAT, 8 November 2008; Rice and Sams, By the People, Pivotal Pictures, 2009; Heilemann and Halperin, Game Change, p. 235; Plouffe, The Audacity to Win, pp. 41, 206–12; Alby Gallun, “Rezko Creditors Come Up Short in Bankruptcy Case,” CCB, 9 June 2015.

15. Kantor and Jeff Zeleny, “On Defensive, Obama Plans Talk on Race,” NYT, 18 March 2008; Eli Saslow, “Congregation Defends Obama’s Ex-Pastor,” and “The Wright Question,” WP, 18 March 2008; Ron Fournier, “The Trouble with Obama’s Arrogance,” AP, 18 March 2008; Obama, “A More Perfect Union,” Philadelphia, 18 March 2008; Michael Crowley, “Obama’s Speech Was Brilliant, But—,” TNR, 18 March 2008; Zeleny, “Obama Urges U.S. to Grapple with Race Issue,” and “Mr. Obama’s Profile in Courage,” NYT, 19 March 2008; Shaleigh Murray and Dan Balz, “Obama Urges U.S.: ‘Move Beyond Our Old Racial Wounds,’” and “Moment of Truth,” WP, 19 March 2008; Ben Calhoun, “Chicagoans: Reports Misrepresent Obama’s Church,” NPR, 19 March 2008; Obama on Anderson Cooper 360, CNN, 19 March 2008; Arnold Jacob Wolf, “My Neighbor Barack,” Jews4Obama 2008, 20 March 2008; Obama on Larry King Live, CNN, 20 March 2008; Peter Wallstein, “Obama Defined by Contrasts,” LAT, 24 March 2008; Patricia Novick, “Prophets Don’t Speak the Language of Politics: A Voice from the Pews,” New America Media, 25 March 2008; William A. Von Hoene Jr., “Reverend Wright in a Different Light,” CT, 26 March 2008; Dan Nakaso, “Obama’s Tutu a Hawaii Banking Female Pioneer,” HA, 30 March 2008; Kelefa Sanneh, “Project Trinity: The Perilous Mission of Obama’s Church,” TNY, 7 April 2008; Julianna Goldman, “Obama Confidante Jarrett Wields Clout of Campaign Inner Circle,” Bloomberg, 8 April 2008; Adam Clark, “Wright’s Teachings Are Part of African-American Opposition to Empire,” Cincinnati Enquirer, 8 April 2008; Obama on Today, NBC, 8 April 2008; Dayo Olopade, “Far Wright,” TNR, 9 April 2008; Freddoso, The Case Against Barack Obama, p. 166; Rolf Nordahl, “Gramp’s Dream,” in Jacobs, ObamaLand, p. 130; David A. Frank, “The Prophetic Voice and the Face of the Other in Barack Obama’s ‘A More Perfect Union’ Address, March 18, 2008,” Rhetoric & Public Affairs 12 (Summer 2009): 167–94; Robert E. Terrill, “Unity and Duality in Barack Obama’s ‘A More Perfect Union,’” Quarterly Journal of Speech 95 (November 2009): 363–86; G. Reginald Daniel, “Race, Multiraciality, and Barack Obama: Toward a More Perfect Union?,” The Black Scholar 39 (Fall–Winter 2009): 51–59; T. Denean Sharpley-Whiting, ed., The Speech: Race and Barack Obama’s ‘A More Perfect Union’ (Bloomsbury, 2009); Todd, The Stranger, p. 113; DJG interviews with Alec Williamson and Rolf Nordahl.

16. Obama interview with ABC News' Terry Moran, 19 March 2008; Dan Gross, "Obama on WIP," Philly.com, 21 March 2008; Pamela Reid Bussard, "Barack Obama Back on St. Thomas for Golf, Relaxation," St. John Source, 24 March 2008; Leon Wieseltier, "Oybama," TNR, 26 March 2008; Kenneth P. Vogel, "Taxes: Obama Prospered as He Soared," Politico, 27 March 2008; Scott Helman, "Holding Down the Obama Family Fort," BG, 30 March 2008; Spencer Ackerman, "The Obama Doctrine," American Prospect, April 2008, pp. 12ff.; Obama on Today, NBC, 1 April 2008, The Early Show, CBS, and Hardball with Chris Matthews, MSNBC, 2 April 2008; Kerry Eleveld, "Obama Talks All Things LGBT," The Advocate, 10 April 2008; Mayhill Fowler, "Obama: No Surprise That Hard-Pressed Pennsylvanians Turn Bitter," Huffington Post, 11 April 2008; Obama, remarks to the Alliance for American Manufacturing, Pittsburgh, 14 April 2008; Curtis Lawrence, "Clinic That Filed Bankruptcy Getting Officials' Support," CST, 1 April 2002, p. 4; Helena Safron and Kelly Forman, "Field Guide for Altgeld Gardens in Chicago IL," unpublished paper, Geology Department, University of Wisconsin, June 2003; Clemolyn 'Pennie' Brinson, "Altgeld Gardens Lawsuit Settlement," Residents' Journal, January–February 2004; Susan Dosemagen, "Are There Enough Students to Fill New Altgeld Gardens School?," Medill Reports, 25 November 2008; Tom Baldwin, "Anger and Despair Rule the Mean Streets That Set Obama on Road to Power," Times (London), 16 January 2009; Layton Ehmke et al., "In Altgeld Gardens, Problems Run Deeper Than Fenger Violence," Medill Reports, 27 October 2009; Linda Paul, "Altgeld Gardens: The Wall of Death," WBEZ Chicago, 5 November 2009; Christopher Drew, "At Developer's Trial, Witness Recalls Seeing Obamas at 2004 Party for Investor," NYT, 15 April 2008; Bob Sexter, "The Rezko Trial—Levine: Obama a Guest at '04 Party for Tycoon," CT, 15 April 2008; Barack H. and Michelle L. Obama, 2007 Form 1040, 13 April 2008; Obama, Senate Financial Disclosure Report, 15 May 2008; "Transcript of Democratic Debate in Philadelphia," NYT, 16 April 2008; Obama on All Things Considered, NPR, and The Daily Show, Comedy Central, 21 April 2008, on The Early Show, CBS, Today, NBC, and Good Morning America, ABC, 22 April 2008; Heilemann and Halperin, Game Change, p. 245; Remnick, The Bridge, pp. 528–29; DJG interview with Jeremiah Wright; Wright's November 2011 interview with Ed Klein; Klein, The Amateur, pp. 50–51.

17. Wright on Bill Moyers Journal, PBS, 25 April 2008; Wright, address to the Detroit branch of the NAACP, 27 April 2008; Obama on Fox News Sunday, 27 April 2008; Abdon M. Pallasch, "Obama's Subprime Pal Penny Pritzker," CST, 28 April 2008; Wright, remarks at the National Press Club, 28 April 2008; Nicoli Nattrass, The AIDS Conspiracy: Science Fights Back (Columbia University Press, 2013), p. 25; Alessandra Stanley, "Not Speaking for Obama, Pastor Speaks for Himself, at Length," NYT, 29 April 2008; Obama, press conference on Jeremiah Wright, Winston-Salem, NC, 29 April 2008; Jeff Zeleny and Adam Nagourney, "An Angry Obama Renounces Ties to His Ex-Pastor," NYT, 30 April 2008; Tom Coburn on The Sean Hannity Show, Fox News, 28 May 2008; Clarence E. Walker and Gregory D. Smithers, The Preacher and the Politician (University of Virginia Press, 2009), pp. 46–50; Wolffe, Renegade, pp. 171, 174, 181–84; Heilemann and Halperin, Game Change, pp. 245–49; Remnick, The Bridge, pp. 529–31.

18. "Mr. Obama and Rev. Wright," NYT, 30 April 2008; "Parting with the Pastor," WP, 30 April 2008; Adolph Reed Jr., "Obama No," Progressive, May 2008; Michael Powell and Jodi Kantor, "A Strained

Wright-Obama Bond Finally Snaps,” NYT, 1 May 2008; Michelle Obama on Today, NBC, 1 May 2008; Obama on Meet the Press, NBC, 4 May 2008; Obama on Today, NBC, American Morning, CNN, The Early Show, CBS, Morning Joe, MSNBC, and Fox and Friends, Fox News, 5 May 2008; Fred Siegel, “The Obama Way,” NR, 5 May 2008; Obama on the NBC Nightly News, 8 May 2008; Jeremiah A. Wright to Timuel Black, 13 May 2008; Ta-Nehisi Coates, “A Deeper Black,” The Nation, 19 May 2008; Obama and Michelle Obama on Good Morning America, ABC, 19 May 2008; Stanley Kurtz, “Wright’s Trumpet,” Weekly Standard, 19 May 2008; Kurtz, “‘Context,’ You Say?,” and “Left in Church: Deep Inside the Wright Trumpet,” NR, 19 and 20 May 2008; Cinque Henderson, “Maybe We Can’t,” and John B. Judis, “The Big Race: Obama and the Psychology of the Color Barrier,” TNR, 28 May 2008, pp. 16–18 and 21–24; Perry Bacon Jr., “On Policy, Obama Breaks Little New Ground,” WP, 29 May 2008; Jeff Zeleny, “A Pulpit Matter Again,” NYT, 30 May 2008; Susan Saulny, “Mocking of Clinton at Obama’s Church Reverberates,” NYT, 31 May 2008; Obama, remarks in Aberdeen, SD, 31 May 2008; Ben Smith and Mike Allen, “Obama Quits Trinity UCC,” Politico, 31 May 2008; Charles P. Pierce, “The Cynic and Senator,” Esquire, June 2008; Laura S. Washington, “Obama Not Feelin’ the Love from Smiley,” ITT, June 2008, p. 17; Michael Powell, “Following Months of Criticism, Obama Quits His Church,” NYT, 1 June 2008; Derek Kravitz and Keith Richburg, “Obama Quits Longtime Church Over Inflammatory Comments,” WP, 1 June 2008; Jon Meacham, “What Barack Obama Learned from His Father,” Newsweek, 22 August 2008; Daren Briscoe, “An Interview with Barack Obama,” Newsweek, 8 January 2009 [18–19 May 2008]; Dan Balz and Haynes Johnson, “A Political Odyssey,” WP, 2 August 2009; Balz and Johnson, The Battle for America 2008, p. 211–14; Heilemann and Halperin, Game Change, pp. 248–49; Wolffe, Renegade, p. 184; DJG interviews with Timuel Black and Hermene Hartman. Two years later, Wright would write that “no one in the Obama administration will respond to me, listen to me, talk to me or read anything that I write to them. I am ‘toxic’” and “‘radioactive.’ . . . When Obama threw me under the bus, he threw me under the bus literally!” Wright to Joseph Prischak, 18 February 2010.

19. Obama, remarks in St. Paul, MN, 3 June 2008; Obama’s interview with ABC News’ Charles Gibson, 4 June 2008; John McCormick, “A Wizard of Odds Steers Obama Run,” CT, 9 June 2008; Julie Bosman, “Obama Calls for More Responsibility from Black Fathers,” NYT, 16 June 2008; Obama on World News Tonight, ABC, 16 June 2008; Michael Powell and Jodi Kantor, “After Attacks, Michelle Obama Looks for a New Introduction,” NYT, 18 June 2008; Michael Eric Dyson, “Obama’s Rebuke of Absentee Black Fathers,” Time, 19 June 2008; Michael Luo and Jeff Zeleny, “Obama, in Shift, Says He’ll Reject Public Financing,” and David Brooks, “The Two Obamas,” NYT, 20 June 2008; Diane Salvatore, “Barack and Michelle Obama: The Full Interview,” Ladies’ Home Journal, August 2008; Rice and Sams, By the People, Pivotal Pictures, 2009; Jonathan V. Last, “American Narcissus,” Weekly Standard, 22 November 2010.

20. Howard Kurtz, “Applying a Personal Touch to the Campaign,” WP, 23 June 2008; Cameron Strang, “Q&A with Barack Obama,” Relevant Magazine, 1 July 2008; Frank James, “Obama Backs Late, Mental-Health Abortion,” CT, 5 July 2008; Laura Miller, “Barack by the Books,” Salon, 7 July 2008; Andrew Delbanco, “Deconstructing Barry,” TNR, 9 July 2008, pp. 20ff.; Dwight D. Murphey, DFMF review, Journal of Social, Political and Economic Studies 33 (Summer 2008): 271–77; David S. Broder, “Obama’s Enigma,” WP, 13 July 2008; John Kass, “Obama Backers on the Left Are Doing the Wincing Now,” CT, 13 July 2008; Obama, “My Plan for Iraq,” NYT, 14 July 2008; Adolph Reed Jr., “Where Obamaism Seems to Be Going,” Black Agenda Report, 15 July 2008; Obama on Larry King Live, CNN, 15 July 2008; Darryl Pinckney, “Obama & the Black Church,” NYRB, 17 July 2008, pp. 18–21; Harry C. Alford, “Beyond the Rhetoric,” Pittsburgh Courier, 17 July 2008; Paul Street, “Statehouse Days,” Znet, 20 July 2008; Tyrone Simpson, “Barack Obama and the Abuse of Black Fathers,” Black Agenda Report, 22 July 2008; Sandra Sobieraj Westfall, “Barack Obama Gives Daughter $1 Allowance a Week,” People, 23 July 2008; Gabriel Sherman, “Barack Obama and the Press Break Up,” TNR, 24 July 2008; “Barack Obama Interview,” CT, 26 July 2008; Obama Q&A, Unity Journalism Conference, Chicago, 27 July 2008; Westfall, “Michelle Obama on Date Nights with Her Husband,” People, 30 July 2008; Joanna Coles and Lucy Kaylin, “Barack in the Saddle,” Marie Claire, 15 August 2008; Damon Linker, “How Obama Found Himself in Trouble This Time,” TNR, 21 August 2008; Ben Smith and Jeffrey Rensner, “Barack Obama’s Lost Law Review Article,” Politico, 22 August 2008.

21. David Brooks, “Where’s the Landslide?,” NYT, 5 August 2008; Chris Bailey, “It’s Still Obama-rama in Hawaii,” HM, 12 August 2008; Michelle Cottle, “Be Not Cool,” TNR, 15 August 2008; Obama at the Saddleback Civil Forum on the Presidency, 16 August 2008; Vanessa Grigoriadis, “Black & Blacker,” NYM, 18 August 2008; Karen Tumulty and David Von Drehle, “Obama on His Veep Thinking,” Time, 20 August 2008; John Lippert, “Penny Pritzker Shows Why She Convinced Buffett to Support Obama,” Bloomberg, 20 August 2008; “Barack Obama Interview,” CT, 21 August 2008; Mike Pflanz, “Barack Obama Is My Inspiration, Says Lost Brother,” Telegraph, 21 August 2008; Von Drehle, “The Five Faces of Barack Obama,” Time, 21 August 2008; John McCormick, “1-On-1 with Obama,” CT, 23 August 2008; Jodi Kantor, “For a New Political Age, a Self-Made Man,” NYT, 28 August 2008; Carrie Budoff Brown, “Obama: The Journey of a Confident Man,” Politico, 28 August 2008; David Moberg, “Loving Obama Left,” ITT, September 2008; John B. Judis, “Creation Myth,” and Cass Sunstein, “The Empiricist Strikes Back,” TNR, 10 September 2008; David Samuels, “Invisible Man—How Ralph Ellison Explains Barack Obama,” TNR, 22 October 2008. On Dreams, see also especially Kelly Bulkeley, “Dreams Shed Light on Obama’s Values,” SFC, 17 August 2008, p. G9 (focusing on two dreams featuring loincloths, Barack’s “feelings of hostility toward his father,” and “personal qualities he deplores in his paternal ancestors yet fears may dwell in him too”), Barbara Foley, “Rhetoric and Silence in Barack Obama’s Dreams From My Father,” Cultural Logic 2009, pp. 1–46, at 4 (“the negation of leftist and revolutionary ideas . . . is the intent guiding Obama’s text”), James T. Kloppenberg, Reading Obama (Princeton University Press, 2010), esp. pp. 9, 14, 20, and 251 (calling Dreams “a fable or an allegory” and noting how “Obama’s debts to Ellison run particularly deep. Many borrowed images from Invisible Man . . . pop up in passages in Dreams”), and Glenda R. Carpio, “Race & Inheritance in Barack Obama’s Dreams From My Father,” Daedalus, Winter 2011, pp. 79–89.

22. Obama on The O’Reilly Factor, Fox News, 4, 8, 9, and 10 September 2008, and on 20/20, ABC, 26 September 2008; Obama Interview Transcript, DFP, 3 October 2008; Michelle Obama on 20/20, ABC, 3 October 2008; John Kass, “A Presidential Debate, the Chicago Way,” CT, 5 October 2008; Deanna Bellandi, “Family, Friends Help Obamas Juggle Kids, Campaign,” AP, 13 October 2008; Liza Mundy, “Michelle and Me,” Slate, 14 October 2008; David Brooks, “Thinking About Obama,” NYT, 17 October 2008; Jasmin Sandelson, “This Sterile Presidency,” Varsity, 17 October 2008, p. 28; Richard Epstein, “The Obama I (Don’t) Know,” Forbes, 21 October 2008; Michael Powell, “After a Year on the Road, Obama Is Changing His Tempo,” NYT, 22 October 2008; Michael Gerson, “The Irony of Obama,” WP, 22

October 2008; Colm Toibín, “James Baldwin & Barack Obama,” NYRB, 23 October 2008; Robert Shikina, “Somber Obama Returns Home,” HSB, 24 October 2008; Obama on Good Morning America, ABC, 24 October 2008; Jeff Zeleny, “On Perhaps a Final Visit to a Most Beloved Supporter,” NYT, 25 October 2008; Robert Barnes, “Obama Visits Grandma Who Was His ‘Rock,’” WP, 25 October 2008; Jodi Kantor, “Barack Obama, Forever Sizing Up,” NYT, 26 October 2008; Keith Richburg, “America Is Showing Europe the Way Again,” Observer, 26 October 2008; Jeff Zeleny, “Long by Obama’s Side,” NYT, 27 October 2008; Eric Bates, “Obama’s Moment,” Rolling Stone 1064, 30 October 2008, pp. 74–81; John Heilemann, “Obama Sheds Tears for Grandma in North Carolina,” NYM, 3 November 2008; Dan Nakaso, “Obama’s Sister ‘Wept Tears of Joy’ Over His Win,” HA, 12 November 2008; Dalton Tanonaka, “We’re All Coming to the Ball,” JP, 30 November 2008; Christopher Hitchens, “Cool Cat,” Atlantic, January–February 2009; Frank Rudy Cooper, “Our First Unisex President?: Black Masculinity and Obama’s Feminine Side,” Denver University Law Review 86 (2009): 633–61; Rice and Sams, By the People, Pivotal Pictures, 2009.

23. Adam Nagourney et al., “Near-Flawless Run Is Credited in Victory,” NYT, 5 November 2008; Shelby Steele, “Obama’s Post-Racial Promise,” LAT, 5 November 2008; John W. Dean, “Predicting the Nature of Obama’s Presidency,” FindLaw, 14 November 2008; Robert Fitch, “The Change They Believe In,” speech to Harlem Tenants’ Association, 14 November 2008; Kevin Merida, “Letting the Big Win Sink In,” WP, 15 November 2008; Obama on 60 Minutes, CBS, 16 November 2008; Evan Thomas et al., “Barack Obama: How He Did It,” Newsweek, 17 November 2008; Jodi Kantor, “An Old Hometown Mentor, and Still at Obama’s Side,” NYT, 24 November 2008; Marie Arana, “He’s Not Black,” WP, 30 November 2008; Kantor, “Obama’s Friends Form Strategy to Stay Close,” NYT, 13 December 2008; Richard Stengel et al., “The Interview: Person of the Year Barack Obama,” Time, 17 December 2008; Chris Bailey, “Obama Bids Farewell to Grandmother on Oahu Coast,” HM, 24 December 2008; Jeff Zeleny, “Obama’s Zen State,” NYT, 25 December 2008; Eli Saslow, “As Duties Weigh Obama Down, His Faith in Fitness Only Increases,” WP, 25 December 2008; Obama’s interview with John Harwood, CNBC, 7 January 2009; Richard Thompson Ford, “Barack Is the New Black,” DuBois Review 6 (March 2009): 37–48, at 40; Michelle C. Bligh and Jeffrey C. Kohles, “The Enduring Allure of Charisma: How Barack Obama Won the Historic 2008 Presidential Election,” Leadership Quarterly 20 (June 2009): 483–92; DJG interviews with Lou Celi, Emil Jones Jr., Peter Coffey, Dave Feller, and Vicky Rideout.

24. Hill Harper, “I Want to Be Like Him,” Essence, January 2009, p. 110; Obama, “What I Want for You—and Every Child in America,” Parade Magazine, 14 January 2009; Michael D. Shear, “Obama Pledges Entitlement Reform,” WP, 16 January 2009; Peggy Noonan, “Look at the Time,” WSJ, 30 January 2009; David Brooks, “A Moderate Manifesto,” NYT, 3 March 2009; Carol E. Lee and Jonathan Martin, “Obama: ‘I Am a New Democrat,’” Politico, 10 March 2009; Obama, remarks on earmark reform, 11 March 2009; Peter Baker and David M. Herszenhorn, “Obama Signs Spending Bill but Criticizes Earmarks,” NYT, 12 March 2009; Paul Kane and Scott Wilson, “Obama Signs Spending Bill, Vowing to Battle Earmarks,” WP, 12 March 2009; Jonathan Weisman and Greg Hitt, “Obama Outlines Plan to Curb Earmarks,” WSJ, 12 March 2009; Noam Scheiber, “What’s Eating David Axelrod?,” TNR, 14 October 2010; Edward McClelland, “The Ones Obama Left Behind,” NBCChicago.com, 23 March 2011; Kantor, The Obamas, p. 33; Suskind, Confidence Men, pp. 195–96, 239; Gates, Duty, p. 96; Todd, The Stranger, pp. 75–79; Axelrod, Believer, p. 346; Axelrod in Michael Grunwald, “The Selling of Obama,” Politico

Magazine, May–June 2016.

25. Obama on 60 Minutes, CBS, 22 March 2009; Jim Merriner, “Barack Obama and the Parallel to Jimmy Carter,” CDO, 24 March 2009; Oprah Winfrey, “Oprah Talks to Michelle Obama,” O Magazine, April 2009; Dale Singer, “The Same Forces Shaped Obama and Blagojevich, Scott Simon Says,” St. Louis Beacon, 6 April 2009; Angela Burt-Murray, “A Mother’s Love,” Essence, May 2009, pp. 104–13; Obama’s interview with Steve Scully, C-SPAN, 22 May 2009; Jon Meacham, “What He’s Like Now,” Newsweek, 25 May 2009, pp. 36–42; Peter Baker and Jeff Zeleny, “Obama Chooses Hispanic Judge for Supreme Court Seat,” NYT, 27 May 2009; Robert J. Samuelson, “The Obama Infatuation,” WP, 1 June 2009; Ben Smith, “A Sheep in Wolffe’s Clothing,” Politico, 3 June 2009; Kevin Baker, “Barack Hoover Obama: The Best and Brightest Blow It Again,” Harper’s, July 2009, pp. 29–37; Obama’s 23 July 2009 interview with ABC’s Terry Moran; Lexington, “The Obama Cult,” Economist, 25 July 2009, p. 42; Glenn C. Loury, “Obama, Gates and the American Black Man,” NYT, 26 July 2009; Neil King Jr. and Jonathan Weisman, “A President as Micromanager,” WSJ, 12 August 2009; Sonia Sotomayor’s interview with Susan Swain, C-SPAN, 16 September 2009; Edward Luce, “A Fearsome Foursome,” FT, 3 February 2010; Suskind, Confidence Men, p. 323; Philip Galanes, “Barack Obama and Bryan Cranston on the Roles of a Lifetime,” NYT, 6 May 2016.

26. Sheila Jager e-mails to DJG, 6 (2), 7 (3), 8 (2), and 9 (2) August 2009. Sheila was relieved to be contacted by someone she viewed as “a first-rate historian” rather than a journalist, and sharing her memories unburdened her. “It has been thrilling speaking to you about him.”

27. Obama on 60 Minutes, CBS, 13 September 2009; Obama on Face the Nation, CBS, 20 September 2009; Richard Cohen, “Obama’s Identity Crisis,” WP, 20 October 2009; Obama’s 27 October 2009 interview with U.S. News’ Kenneth T. Walsh; John Heilemann, “Obama Lost, Obama Found,” NYM, 29 November 2009; Peter Spiegel et al., “Obama Bets Big on Troop Surge,” WSJ, 2 December 2009; Obama on 60 Minutes, CBS, 7 December 2009; Owen Fiss, “Obama’s Betrayal,” Slate, 4 December 2009; Obama’s 11 December 2009 interview with Will Smith; Jake Tapper, “President Obama Grades Self,” ABCNews.com, 14 December 2009; Christ Frates, “Payoffs for States Get Reid to 60,” Politico, 19 December 2009; Josef Joffe, “Who Is This Guy?,” American Interest, January 2010; Christi Parsons, “A Look at Obama’s First Year in Presidency,” LAT, 17 January 2010; Mark Knoller, “Obama’s First Year: By the Numbers,” CBSNews.com, 20 January 2010; Joe Klein, “Q&A: Obama on His First Year in Office,” Time, 21 January 2010; John Heilemann, “Mr. Cool Gets Hot,” NYM, 22 January 2010; Larry Hackett and Sandra Sobieraj Westfall, “Our First Year,” People, 25 January 2010, pp. 60ff.; James W. Ceasar, “The Roots of Obama Worship,” Weekly Standard, 25 January 2010; Obama’s 25 January 2010 interview with ABC’s Diane Sawyer; Byron York, “Has Obama Become Bored with Being President?,” Washington Examiner, 29 January 2010; Edward Luce, “A Fearsome Foursome,” FT, 3 February 2010; Lawrence Lessig, “How to Get Our Democracy Back,” The Nation, 22 February 2010; Jackson Diehl, “Where Are Obama’s Foreign Confidants?,” WP, 8 March 2010; David Brooks, “Getting Obama Right,” NYT, 12 March 2010.

28. Douglas Brinkley, “The Bridge,” LAT, 28 March 2010; Frank Rich, “It’s a Bird, It’s a Plane, It’s Obama,” NYT, 4 April 2010; Ginger Adams Otis, “The Bridge,” NYP, 4 April 2010; Mike Wilson, “Success Crafted by Timely Adaptation,” SPT, 5 April 2010; Erik Spanberg, “The Bridge,” CSM, 5 April 2010; Joan Walsh, “Barack Obama: The Opacity of Hope,” Salon, 5 April 2010; Michiko Kakutani, “Seeking Identity, Shaping a Nation’s,” NYT, 6 April 2010; “His Big Moment Begins,” Economist, 8 April 2010; Christopher Borelli, “New Yorker Editor David Remnick Pens New Obama Biography,” CT, 8 April 2010; Amy Black, “Taking the Measure of Barack Obama,” Books & Culture, 9 April 2010; David W. Blight, “The Bridge,” SFC, 10 April 2010; Garry Wills, “Behind Obama’s Cool,” NYTBR, 11 April 2010; Jon Meacham, “The New Book on Barack Obama,” Newsweek, 12 April 2010; Darryl L. Wellington, “Autobiographical Fire and Obama’s Creation of Self,” The Common Review, 14 April 2010; Howard W. French, “Dirt Off His Shoulders,” The National, 16 April 2010; Joseph Lelyveld, “Who Is Barack Obama?,” NYRB, 19 April 2010; John R. MacArthur, “Under False Colours,” Spectator, 8 May 2010, p. 33; Mona Gable, “Chronicling President Barack Obama,” LAT, 19 May 2010; Todd, The Stranger, pp. 86, 126; Sheila Jager e-mails to DJG, 8 (2), 9, 12, and 13 April 2010.

29. Richard Cohen, “President Obama’s Enigmatic Intellectualism,” WP, 22 June 2010; Kathleen Parker, “Obama: Our First Female President,” WP, 30 June 2010; Cohen, “Who Is Barack Obama?,” WP, 20 July 2010; David Ignatius, “A President Tripped Up by the Spontaneous,” WP, 25 July 2010; Peter Nicholas and Janet Hook, “Obama the Velcro President,” LAT, 30 July 2010; Mitch McConnell on Fox on the Record, Fox News, 4 August 2010; Obama’s interview with Brian Lamb, C-SPAN, 12 August 2010; Frank Rich, “Why Has He Fallen Short?,” NYRB, 19 August 2010; Josh Gerstein, “Should Obama Show His Faith?,” Politico, 19 August 2010; James Hohmann and John F. Harris, “Dems Urge Obama to Take a Stand,” Politico, 23 August 2010; Obama’s interview with Peter Baker, 27 September 2010, NYT, 12 October 2010; Jann S. Wenner, “Obama in Command,” Rolling Stone, 14 October 2010; Obama’s interview with Bill Simmons, GQ, 17 November 2015.

30. Woodward, Obama’s Wars, pp. 38–39, 207, 338, 344; Gates, Duty, pp. 298–99, 569, 585, 587; Peter Baker, “The Education of President Obama,” NYT Magazine, 17 October 2010; Hodge, The Mendacity of Hope (HarperCollins, 2010), pp. 1, 20, 130; Johnny E. Williams, “‘Change You Can Believe In’: You Better Not Believe It,” Critical Sociology 38 (September 2012): 747–68, at 761; Suskind, Confidence Men, pp. 451, 459; Sheryl Gay Stolberg, “Obama’s Playbook After Nov. 2,” NYT, 25 October 2010.

31. Joe Klein, “Where Obama Goes from Here,” Time, 4 November 2010; John F. Harris and Glenn Thrush, “The Ego Factor: Can Obama Change?,” Politico, 5 November 2010; Obama on 60 Minutes, CBS, 7 November 2010; Eleanor Clift, “The Problem with the Cult of Obama,” Newsweek, 21 November 2010; Jonathan V. Last, “American Narcissus,” Weekly Standard, 22 November 2010; Alan Brinkley, “The Philosopher President,” Democracy Journal, Winter 2011, pp. 80–85; Jim Sleeper, “An Unlikely Pragmatist,” Dissent, Spring 2011, pp. 106–9; Wolffe, The Message, pp. 48–55, 64; Halperin and Heilemann, Double Down, pp. 15–16; Bill Glauber, “Chicago Neighborhood Watching President-Elect Closely,” MJS, 12 January 2009; Carol Felsenthal, “N’Digo Publisher Hermene Hartman: Loyalty Not One of Obama’s Qualities,” CM, 21 March 2011; Edward McClelland, “The Ones Obama Left Behind,” NBCChicago.com, 23 March 2011; Chris Hedges, “The Obama Deception: Why Cornel West Went Ballistic,” TruthDig.com, 16 May 2011; Don Terry, “Fighting Crime and Pressuring the Mayor,” NYT, 4 August 2011; Joel Hood, “CPS Fails to Close Performance Gap,” CT, 14 November 2011; Michael Leahy, “Old Obama Acquaintance Voices South Side’s Disillusionment with His Former Ally,” WP, 17 August 2012; Paul Tough, “Obama vs. Poverty,” NYT Magazine, 19 August 2012; Dawn Turner Trice, “Harold Washington Made Us Feel Proud,” CT, 17 November 2012; Ben Austen, “The Death and Life of Chicago,” NYT Magazine, 2 June 2013; Dahleen Glanton and Lolly Bowean, “Trouble in Pill Hill,” CT, 24 November 2013; Glenn Thrush, “Obama’s Obama,” Politico Magazine, January–February 2016; DJG interviews with Hermene Hartman, Stephen Pugh, and John Webster.

32. Paul Krugman, “The President Is Missing,” NYT, 11 April 2011; Perry Bacon Jr., “Obama’s Budget Speech Carries Partisan Tone,” WP, 13 April 2011; Lori Montgomery, “Obama Address Was Surprise Attack, GOP Lawmakers Say,” WP, 15 April 2011; Ryan Lizza, “The Consequentialist,” TNY, 2 May 2011; Obama’s 4 May 2011 interview with CBS’s Steve Kroft; Jacob Weisberg, “Obama Mama,” Slate, 9 May 2011; David Greenberg, “Hope, Change, Nietzsche,” TNR, 26 May 2011; Walter Russell Mead, “Can This Presidency Be Saved?,” American Interest, 17 June 2011; Toby Harnden, “A Life of President Obama’s Father,” Telegraph, 5 August 2011; Drew Westen, “What Happened to Obama?,” NYT, 7 August 2011; Scott Wilson, “Obama, the Loner President,” WP, 7 October 2011; Kennedy, The Persistence of the Color Line, pp. 22–24, 273; Jackie Calmes, “Obama’s Deficit Dilemma,” NYT, 27 February 2012; Peter Wallsten et al., “Obama’s Evolution,” WP, 17 March 2012; Wolffe, The Message, p. 17; Halperin and Heilemann, Double Down, pp. 11–12, 18–20.

33. Obama, remarks on ending the war in Iraq, 21 October 2011 (“the tide of war is receding”); Jodi Kantor, “Leaving Obama’s Shadow,” NYT, 10 November 2011; Obama’s 9 December interview with CBS’ Steve Kroft; Obama on 20/20, ABC, 23 December 2011; Jackson Lears, “A History of Disappointment,” London Review of Books, 5 January 2012, pp. 10–13; Kantor, The Obamas, pp. 76, 178, 185, 192, 213, 251, 275, 329; Connie Schultz, “Partners in Love and the Presidency,” NYT, 8 January 2012; Keach Hagey, “W.H. vs. Kantor: Overkill?,” Politico, 13 January 2012; Renshon, Barack Obama, pp. 181, 187; James Fallows, “Obama, Explained,” Atlantic, March 2012; Halperin and Heilemann, Double Down, pp. 54–58, 63–65; Todd, The Stranger, pp. 285–86.

34. Wolffe, The Message, p. 19; Jackie Calmes, “Obama’s Deficit Dilemma,” NYT, 27 February 2012; James Fallows, “Obama, Explained,” Atlantic, March 2012, pp. 54–70; Obama’s 1 March 2012 interview with Bill Simmons; Peter Wallsten et al., “Obama’s Evolution,” WP, 17 March 2012; David Maraniss, “Becoming Obama,” VanityFair.com, 2 May 2012, 9:30 A.M.; James Fallows, “The Making of the President,” NYT, 14 June 2012; Mike Godwin, “From the Choom Gang to the White House,” Reason, 18 June 2012; Darryl Pinckney, “Young Barry Wins,” NYRB, 16 August 2012; Nicholas Lemann, “The Cipher,” TNR, 25 October 2012, pp. 28–31; DJG interviews with Alex McNear, Genevieve Cook, Sheila Jager, and Sheila Quinlan.

35. Obama’s 9 May 2012 interview with ABC’s Robin Roberts; Eleveld, Don’t Tell Me to Wait, pp. 158, 254; Wear, Reclaiming Hope, pp. 142–56; Roberto Mangabeira Unger, “Beyond Obama,” YouTube, 22 May 2012; Fredrick Harris, “Still Waiting for Our First Black President,” WP, 3 June 2012; Harris, The Price of the Ticket, pp. 139, 154, 167; Jodi Kantor and Nicholas Confessore, “Leading Role in Obama ’08, But Backstage in ’12,” NYT, 15 July 2012; Harris, “The Price of a Black President,” NYT, 28 October 2012; “Oprah Talks to the Obamas,” O Magazine, November 2012 (July 2012); Mark Obama Ndesandjo, An Obama’s Journey, p. 299; DJG interview with Hermene Hartman.

36. Jane Mayer, “Schmooze or Lose,” TNY, 27 August 2012; Jo Becker, “The Other Power in the West Wing,” NYT, 2 September 2012; Dan Balz, “Obama Did Not Change Washington,” WP, 2 September 2012; Ryan Grim and Sam Stein, “Barack Obama Promised a New Kind of Politics, but Played the Same Old Game,” Huffington Post, 2 September 2012; John F. Harris and Jonathan Martin, “Barack Obama, the Conventional President,” Politico, 3 September 2012; Peter Baker, “4 Years Later, Scarred But Still Confident,” NYT, 6 September 2012; Harris and Alexander Burns, “Verdict: Obama Levels More Attacks,” Politico, 6 September 2012; Woodward, The Price of Politics, p. 81; Simon, P.S., p. 138; Ryan Lizza, “Let’s Be Friends,” TNY, 10 September 2012; Bob Herbert, “No More Excuses,” Huffington Post, 4 October 2012; Obama’s 12–13 September 2012 interview with CBS’ Steve Kroft; DeWayne Wickham, “Netanyahu Hedges His Political Bets,” USAT, 20 September 2012; Hunter Walker, “President Obama Parties with Jay Z and Beyoncé,” NYO, 18 September 2012; Ann Gearhart and Jason Horowitz, “Behind the Big-Dollar Fundraisers,” WP, 20 September 2012; Geoff Earle, “When O Met Z and Beyoncé Outdazzled Them Both,” NYP, 20 September 2012; Arnie Graf, “Barack and Mitt as I Knew Them,” NYDN, 28 September 2012; Jasmine Velasco, “Chicago’s Susan Crown,” Breitbart.com, 3 October 2012; David Maraniss, “Obama’s Way with Words,” WP, 14 October 2012; Alter, The Center Holds, p. 141,

37. Michael Lewis, “Obama’s Way,” Vanity Fair, October 2012; Glenn Thrush, “Barack Obama the Not-So-Happy Warrior,” Politico, 5 November 2012; Richard Stengel et al., “Setting the Stage for a Second Term,” Time, 19 December 2012; “Conspiracy Theories Prosper: 25% of Americans Are ‘Truthers,’” Fairleigh Dickinson University Public Mind Poll, 17 January 2013; Sheila Jager e-mail to DJG, 7 November 2012.

38. Mark Knoller, “Obama’s First Term: By the Numbers,” CBSNews.com, 19 January 2013; “Oprah Talks to the Obamas,” O Magazine, November 2012; Christopher H. Pyle, “Barack Obama and Civil Liberties,” Presidential Studies Quarterly 42 (December 2012): 867–80; David K. Shipler, “Will Obama the Constitutional Lawyer Please Stand Up?,” Nation, 23 January 2013; Franklin Foer and Chris Hughes, “Barack Obama Is Not Pleased,” TNR, 27 January 2013; Obama on 60 Minutes, CBS, 27 January 2013; Peter Baker, “Obama’s Turn in Bush’s Bind,” NYT, 9 February 2013; Jim VandeHei and Mike Allen, “Obama, the Puppet Master,” Politico, 18 February 2013; John Podesta, “Obama Should Lift Secrecy on Drones,” WP, 13 March 2013 (Obama “is acting in opposition to the democratic principles we hold most important”); Obama, commencement speech at Morehouse College, 19 May 2013; Carol Felsenthal, “Obama’s Buddy Eric Whitaker: Is He Clueless or What?,” CM, 12 August 2013; Todd, The Stranger, pp. 383, 398, 403, 413; DJG interview with Carole Travis; Sheila Jager e-mail to DJG, 20 August 2013.

39. John F. Harris and Todd S. Purdum, “What’s Wrong with President Obama?,” Politico, 18 September 2013; Obama’s 30 September 2013 interview with NPR’s Steve Inskeep; Leonard Downie Jr., “In Obama’s War on Leaks, Reporters Fight Back,” WP, 6 October 2013; Wolffe, The Message, pp. 31, 206–7; Nicholas Confessore, “How He Won,” NYTBR, 20 October 2013; Scott Wilson, “Controversies Show How Obama’s Inattention to Detail May Hurt His Presidential Legacy,” WP, 30 October 2013; Amy Chozick, “In Clinton Fund-Raising, Expect a Full Embrace,” NYT, 22 October 2013; Halperin and Heilemann, Double Down, pp. 30, 47; Fouad Ajami, “When the Obama Magic Died,” WSJ, 15 November 2013; Todd, The Stranger, 451–52, 466; Gideon Rose, “What Obama Gets Right,” Foreign Affairs, September–October 2015, pp. 2–12; Jeffrey Goldberg, “The Obama Doctrine,” Atlantic, April 2016, pp. 70–90; Grunwald, “The Selling of Obama,” Politico Magazine, May–June 2016; William A. Galston, “Obama’s Toothless Foreign Policy,” WSJ, 7 September 2016.

40. George E. Vaillant, Adaptation to Life (Little, Brown, 1977), p. 29; Dan P. McAdams, “What Psychobiographers Might Learn from Personality Psychology,” in William T. Schultz, ed., Handbook of

Psychobiography (Oxford University Press, 2005), pp. 64–83; Steven Berglas, “Why Does Barack Keep Making Weird Jokes About Michelle?,” Politico, 19 November 2013; the Obamas on 20/20, ABC, 29 November 2013; Todd S. Purdum, “The Lonely Guy,” Vanity Fair, December 2013; Obama’s 20 December 2013 interview with Steve Harvey; Jonathan Van Meter, “Michelle Obama: A Candid Conversation,” Vogue, December 2016 (“living in the White House is isolating . . . you slowly start losing touch”); DJG interviews with Matt Piers, Katrina Emmons Mulligan, Eugene Morris, Jason Scott, Dan Shomon, Andrew Boron, and John Eason.

41. Todd, The Stranger, p. 466; Elizabeth Titus and John F. Harris, “Management Experts Knock Obama,” Politico, 31 December 2013; Frank Bruni, “The Obama-Bush Nexus,” NYT, 21 January 2014; Michael Gerson, “Our Complex President,” WP, 24 January 2014; David Remnick, “Going the Distance,” TNY, 27 January 2014; Michael Hirsh, “Kerry Unbound,” and Charlie Cook, “Moving Right Along,” NJ, 1 February 2014; Gary Younge, “What the Hell Is Barack Obama’s Presidency For?,” Guardian, 23 February 2014; Fred Hiatt, “Is There Change President Obama Can Believe In?,” WP, 23 February 2014; Fred Kaplan, “The Realist,” Politico Magazine, 27 February 2014; Hirsh and James Oliphant, “Obama Will Never End the War on Terror,” NJ, 27 February 2014; Adolph Reed Jr., “Nothing Left,” Harper’s, March 2014; Jonathan Chait, “The Color of His Presidency,” NYM, 6 April 2014; Peter Baker, “For Obama Presidency, Lyndon Johnson Looms Large,” NYT, 9 April 2014; Dan Balz, “Obama and LBJ,” WP, 13 April 2014; Jason Horowitz, “Obama Effect Inspiring Few to Seek Office,” NYT, 14 April 2014; Leon Wieseltier, “The Inconvenience of History,” TNR, 23 April 2014; Carrie Budoff Brown and Jennifer Epstein, “The Obama Paradox,” Politico, 1 June 2014.

42. Zeituni Onyango e-mail to DJG, 6 December 2013; Katharine Q. Seelye, “Zeituni Onyango, Obama’s Aunt from Kenya, Dies at 61,” NYT, 8 April 2014; Jason Horowitz, “Amid Politics, Obama Drifted Away from Kin,” NYT, 23 April 2014; Michael D. Shear, “The Rise of the Drone Master,” NYT, 30 April 2014; Maureen Dowd, “Is Barry Whiffing?,” NYT, 30 April 2014; Todd S. Purdum, “Barack Obama Laughs At but Not With,” Politico, 2 May 2014; “President Obama and the World,” NYT, 4 May 2014; Mike Dorning, “Obamas Diverge with Bidens on Mortgage Refinancing,” Bloomberg, 15 May 2014; Kathleen Parker, “VA Scandal Shows Obama Is Out of the Loop—Again,” WP, 24 May 2014; Obama’s 28 May 2014 interview with NPR’s Steve Inskeep; Mark Landler, “In Obama’s Speeches, a Shifting Tone on Terror,” NYT, 1 June 2014; Albert R. Hunt, “Obama’s Destructive War on the Media,” Bloomberg, 8 June 2014; Ron Fournier, “‘I’ve Had Enough’: When Democrats Quit on Obama,” NJ, 9 June 2014; Rosa Brooks, “Sorry, Hillary: I Should Have Voted for You,” Foreign Policy, 11 June 2014; Michael Grunwald, “The Selling of Obama,” Politico Magazine, May–June 2016; Mark Landler, Alter Egos (Random House, 2016), pp. xii–xiv.

43. Charles Lipson, “Barack Obama’s Presidency Is Spiraling Downward,” CT, 17 June 2014; Ruth Marcus, “A Cautious Obama Misreads History,” WP, 18 June 2014; Randall Kennedy, “Did Obama Fail Black America?,” Politico, 27 June 2014; Steve Chapman “Obama: Wrong on Cellphone Searches and More,” CT, 29 June 2014; Peggy Noonan, “The Daydream and the Nightmare,” WSJ, 5 July 2014; Matt Lewis, “The Obama Years: The Trailers Were Great, the Movie Was Horrible,” Telegraph, 5 July 2014; Michael Hirsh, “Our Lonely First Duffer,” Politico, 7 August 2014; Maureen Dowd, “Where’s the Justice at Justice?,” WP, 17 August 2004; Michael Kazin, “Obama’s Biggest Problem: Political ADD,” TNR, 19 August 2014; Carl Hulse et al., “Obama Is Seen as Frustrating His Own Party,” NYT, 19 August 2014;

Thomas Frank, “Cornel West,” Salon, 24 August 2014; Ruth Marcus, “A Threat Puts Obama’s Legacy in Question,” WP, 24 August 2014.

44. Sheila Jager e-mails to DJG, 1 September and 10 and 14 November, 2014; David A. Graham, “The Wrong Side of ‘the Right Side of History,’” Atlantic, 21 December 2015.
45. Obama on Meet the Press, NBC, 7 September 2014; Obama on 60 Minutes, CBS, 26 September 2014; Leon Panetta, Worthy Fights (Penguin, 2014); Susan Page, “Panetta: ‘30-Year War,’” USAT, 6 October 2014; Ron Fournier, “What a Real White House Shake-Up Looks Like,” NJ, 23 October 2014; Paul Kane, “Midterm Disaster Rips Apart Awkward Ties Between Obama and Senate Democrats,” WP, 6 November 2014; Carol Felsenthal, “Fire Valerie Jarrett,” Politico, 7 November 2014; Todd, The Stranger, p. 273; Robert Draper, “The Enigma of Barack Obama,” WSJ, 8 November 2014; Noam Scheiber, “The Obama Whisperer,” TNR, 9 November 2014.
46. Obama on Face the Nation, CBS, 9 November 2014; David J. Rothkopf, National Insecurity, pp. 85, 204, 207, 318, 324, 358; Jeffrey Goldberg, “A Withering Critique of Obama’s National Security Council,” Atlantic, 12 November 2014; Dana Milbank, “Obama Is Turning into George W. Bush,” WP, 24 November 2014.
47. Glenn Greenwald, “Talking to James Risen About Pay Any Price,” The Intercept, 25 November 2014; Chris Ariens, “Ann Compton,” MediaBistro.com, 8 December 2014; Josh Gerstein, “President Obama’s Mixed Signals,” Politico, 10 December 2014; Mark Udall, CRec, 10 December 2014, pp. S6474–78; Lindsay Moran, “The CIA Book I Wish I’d Written,” Politico, 14 December 2014; Peter Baker and Mark Mazzetti, “Brennan Draws on Bond with Obama in Backing CIA,” NYT, 15 December 2014; Obama’s 16 December 2014 interview with NPR’s Steve Inskeep; Mazzetti, “After Scrutiny, CIA Mandate Is Untouched,” NYT, 27 December 2014; Hadas Gold, “Risen,” Politico, 17 February 2015; James Risen, “If Donald Trump Targets Journalists, Thank Obama,” NYT, 30 December 2016.
48. Elizabeth Drew, “The Unmaking of the President,” ProjectSyndicate.org, 6 January 2015; Sheryl Gay Stolberg, “At 78, McCain Savors a Dream Job in the Senate,” NYT, 14 January 2015; Kenneth Roth, “Obama & Counterterrorism: The Ignored Record,” NYRB, 5 February 2015; Ben Smith, “Full Transcript of BuzzFeed News’ Interview with President Barack Obama,” Buzzfeed.com, 10 February 2015; “A True Believer Meets Reality,” Economist, 14 February 2015; Amy Chozick, “When He Walks Out of That Building, I Don’t Think He’s Gonna Look Back,” NYT Magazine, 15 February 2015; Dana Milbank, “Is This the End of the White House’s Insufferable Insularity?,” WP, 29 March 2015; Alan J. Kuperman, “Obama’s Libya Debacle,” Foreign Affairs, March–April 2015; Obama’s 6 April 2015 interview with NPR’s Steve Inskeep; “The Truth About Covering Obama,” Politico, 22 April 2015; Milbank, “Obama’s Trade Deal,” WP, 11 May 2015; Jack Shafer, “The Rise and Fall of the Obama-Media Romance,” and Nick Gass, “Schieffer on Obama,” Politico, 1 June 2015.
49. Genevieve Cook e-mails to DJG, 28 September 2012 and 26 and 28 February 2015; Obama on WTF with Marc Maron podcast, 18 June 2015; Obama’s 24 July 2015 interview with the BBC’s Jon Sopel; Obama, remarks to the people of Africa, 28 July 2015; Obama’s 6 August 2015 interview with NPR’s Steve Inskeep; Gardiner Harris, “After 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, Where To?,” NYT, 12 October 2015; Obama’s 17 November 2015 interview with GQ’s Bill Simmons; Mark Landler, “Obama Revives the Republican Glory Years of Sunnylands Estate,” NYT, 8 February 2016. Note must be taken of Mohamed Moustafa, “The Other Face of Obama!,” YouTube, 7 May 2012, Moustafa, “Obama and His Ex-Girlfriend's Husband," YouTube, 10 May 2012, and two subsequent YouTube postings on 11 June and 28 July 2012, all offered up by Genevieve's once-abusive former spouse.

50. Jeff Greenfield, "Democratic Blues," Politico, 20 August 2015; Sheryl Gay Stolberg et al., "In Obama Era, GOP Bolsters Grip in the States," NYT, 13 November 2015; Gerald F. Seib, "The President Remains a Paradox," WSJ, 12 January 2016; Juan Williams, "The Carolina Pander for Black Votes," WSJ, 13–14 February 2016; Marilynne Robinson, "A Conversation in Iowa," NYRB, 5 and 19 November 2015 (14 September 2015); Obama's 6 October 2015 interview with CBS' Steve Kroft; Obama's 12 November 2015 interview with ABC's George Stephanopoulos; Obama's 17 November 2015 GQ Interview with Bill Simmons; Obama's 20 March 2015 interview with the Huffington Post's Sam Stein; Robert Pear, "Head of Obama's Health Care Rollout to Lobby for Insurers," NYT, 16 July 2015; Lucia Graves, "Marilyn Tavenner," NJ, 24 October 2015, pp. 24–25; Pear, "Many Say High Deductibles Make Their Health Care Insurance All but Useless," NYT, 15 November 2015; Liz Hamel et al., "The Burden of Medical Debt," Kaiser Family Foundation, December 2015; Abby Goodnough, "Many See I.R.S. Fines as More Affordable Than Insurance," NYT, 3 January 2016; Margot Sanger-Katz, "Lost Jobs, Houses, Savings: Even Insured Often Face Crushing Medical Debt," NYT, 5 January 2016; Josh Gerstein, "How Obama Failed to Shut Washington's Revolving Door," and Michael Grunwald, "The Nation He Built," Politico Magazine, January–February 2016; Sarah Kliff, "Is Obamacare Failing?," Vox, 24 August 2016; Amy Goldstein, "In North Carolina, ACA Insurer Defections Leave Little Choice for Many Consumers," WP, 14 October 2016; Scott Rasmussen, "GOP Hangs On to Historic Gains in State Legislatures," Rasmussen Media Group, 8 December 2016; Dan Balz, "Democrats Search for a Path Back into Rural America's Good Graces," WP, 10 December 2016.

51. Karen DeYoung, "How the Obama White House Runs Foreign Policy," WP, 5 August 2015; David Ignatius, "Russia and 'The Facts on the Ground' in Syria," WP, 2 October 2015; Jackson Diehl, "Obama's Olive Branches are Lifelines for Authoritarian Regimes," WP, 9 November 2015; Richard Cohen, "The President Who Lost His Voice," WP, 1 December 2015; Robert M. Gates, "The Kind of President We Need," WP, 4 December 2015; Obama's 21 December 2015 interview with NPR's Steve Inskeep; Michael Crowley, "'We Caved,'" Politico Magazine, January–February 2016; Obama's 22 January 2016 interview with Politico's Glenn Thrush; Diehl, "Can Obama Let Go of His Wished-For Legacy?," WP, 8 February 2016; Joseph I. Lieberman, "The Absence of U.S. Leadership," WP, 25 February 2016; "Mr. Putin Continues to Call the Shots in Syria," WP, 26 February 2016; "Grozny Rules in Aleppo," Economist, 1 October 2016, pp. 12–13 ("the agony of Syria is the biggest moral stain on Barack Obama's presidency" and "his greatest geopolitical failure"); Greg Jaffe, "The Problem with Obama's Account of the Syrian Red-Line Incident," WP, 4 October 2016; Nicholas Kristof, "The Blot on Obama's Legacy," NYT, 6 October 2016 (Syria is "a huge blot on his legacy"); Jaffe, "Washington's Foreign Policy Elite Breaks with Obama over Syrian Bloodshed," WP, 20 October 2016.

52. Ray LaHood, Seeking Bipartisanship (Cambria Press, 2015), pp. 209, 215, 232; Peter Baker, "Promised Bipartisanship, Obama Adviser Found Disappointment," NYT, 12 November 2015; Darren Samuelson, "Obama's Vanishing Administration," Politico, 5 January 2016; Matt Latimer, "True-Blue Obama," Politico, 6 January 2016; Jeff Jacoby, "Obama Regrets Polarized Rancor. He Should," BG, 24 January 2016; David Brooks, "I Miss Barack Obama," NYT, 9 February 2016; Obama, address to the Illinois General Assembly, Springfield, 10 February 2016; Christi Parsons's interview with Obama, Kirk

Dillard, Denny Jacobs, and Larry Walsh, Springfield, 10 February 2016; Mark Landler, “Obama Revisits Springfield, and His Vow to Bridge a Partisan Divide,” NYT, 11 February 2016; Mike Riopell, “President Obama Greets Old Friends During Springfield Visit,” CDH, 11 February 2016; Tamara Coffman Wittes, “The Slipperiest Slope of Them All,” Atlantic, 12 March 2016; Jackson Diehl, “The Costs of Obama’s Syrian Policy Are Apparent to Everyone but Him,” WP, 21 March 2016; Fred Hiatt, “U.S. Leadership Matters,” WP, 28 March 2016; Obama, remarks at the Toner Prize ceremony, Washington, DC, 28 March 2016; David Luban, “Has Obama Upheld the Law?,” NYRB, 21 April 2016; William A. Galston, “How Obama’s Economy Spawned Trump,” WSJ, 4 May 2016; Dan Corey, “President Obama Sits Down with the Daily Targum,” Daily Targum, 12 May 2016; Margaret Sullivan, “Obama Promised Transparency,” WP, 24 May 2016; Jeffrey Goldberg, “What Obama Actually Thinks About Radical Islam,” Atlantic, 15 June 2016; “Obama Retreats from Putin in Syria—Again,” WP, 3 July 2016; Michael D. Shear, “A Classified Matter at the White House,” NYT, 8 August 2016; Nicholas Kristof, “Obama’s Worst Mistake,” NYT, 11 August 2016; David Cole, “The Drone Presidency,” NYRB, 18 August 2016 (observing that “the only person to win the Nobel Peace Prize based on wishful thinking” then “pioneered a dramatically dangerous and ethically dubious form of warfare”); Charles Lane, “Obama Criticizes Past Presidents’ Foreign Policies,” WP, 15 September 2016; Jackson Diehl, “Putin’s Lesson for Obama in Syria,” WP, 19 September 2016; “Barack Obama and Doris Kearns Goodwin: The Ultimate Exit Interview,” Vanity Fair, 21 September 2016; Jonathan Chait, “Five Days That Shaped a Presidency,” NYM, 3 October 2016; Vanessa K. De Luca et al., “The Obama Legacy,” Essence, October 2016, pp. 100–111; Obama, “The Way Ahead,” Economist, 8 October 2016, pp. 22–24; Obama, “Now Is the Greatest Time to Be Alive,” Wired, November 2016; Josh Kraushaar, “How Obama Inadvertently Set the Stage for Trump’s Presidency,” National Journal, 9 November 2016; Jann S. Wenner, “The Day After,” Rolling Stone, 29 November 2016; Obama on The Daily Show with Trevor Noah, Comedy Central, 12 December 2016; Ta-Nehesi Coates, “My President Was Black,” The Atlantic, January–February 2017; William A. Darity Jr., “How Barack Obama Failed Black Americans,” The Atlantic, 22 December 2016; Obama on David Axelrod’s The Axe Files, CNN.com, 26 December 2016; Obama, “The President’s Role in Advancing Criminal Justice Reform,” HLR 130 (January 2017): 811–66; Obama, “Repealing the ACA Without a Replacement: The Risks to American Healthcare,” NEJM, 6 January 2017, pp. 1–3; Obama on ABC’s This Week, 8 January 2017; Obama, “The Irreversible Momentum of Clean Energy,” Science, 9 January 2017, pp. 1–4; Obama, “Farewell Address,” Chicago, 10 January 2017; Obama on Dateline NBC, 13 January 2017; Obama on CBS’s 60 Minutes, 15 January 2017; Obama’s 13 January 2017 interview with Michiko Kakutani, NYT, 16 January 2017; Norman Mailer, “Superman Comes to the Supermarket,” Esquire, November 1960; Wolffe in Maureen Dowd, “The Ungrateful President,” NYT, 7 August 2012; DJG interview with Cindi Canary; Obama, DFMF, pp. 79, 82.

INDEX

---

The pagination of this electronic edition does not match the edition from which it was created. To locate a specific entry, please use your e-book reader's search tools.

25% Solution, The (Miller), 887–88

47th Street Poems (Davis), 69

60 Minutes (CBS), 1051, 1052, 1070

9/11. See September 11 attacks

Abbas, Mahmoud, 982

Abbruzzese, Jared, 968

Abercrombie, Neil, 46, 51, 54, 57, 79, 81, 709, 861, 963

Abiero, Adede, 77

ABLE (Alliance of Business Leaders and Entrepreneurs), 591, 723, 769, 1019 abortion, 379, 380, 381, 439 bills limiting, 754, 755, 806, 891

    late-term, 754, 903, 1048

    Medicaid funding of, 561, 714

    Obama position on, 562, 597, 600, 607, 633, 637, 730, 748, 755, 807, 818, 826, 846, 881, 891, 902–3, 946, 949, 956, 987, 994, 1015, 1048 opponents, 353, 594, 636, 902–3, 945, 946, 947, 1015, 1044

    partial-birth, 597, 600

    Supreme Court cases, 615, 633

Abortion: The Clash of Absolutes (Tribe), 394, 456

Aboulafia, Mitchell, 532

Abraham Lincoln Presidential Library and Museum (Springfield), 720, 970

Abrams, Andrew, 673

Abrams, Floyd, 399, 444

Abramsky, Sasha, 218

Abunimah, Ali, 691–92, 875

Abyssinian Baptist Church (NY), 285, 468

Ackerman, Martha, 547

Ackerman, Sam, 547

ACORN, 220, 493, 506, 650, 664

    and Altgeld Gardens, 34, 35

    and Eden Green, 32–33

    “motor voter” case, 565

    and New Party, 561–62

    organizing approach, 201, 502

and Project VOTE!, 474, 475, 477

and Roseland, 200–201

suit against Edgar, 512

Woods Fund grant to, 501

Action for Change (Nader), 182–83

Adamjee, Ferial “Filly,” 171, 177, 215

Adams, Cindy, 943

Adarand Construction v. Pena (1995), 578

Adelstein, Eric, 606, 669, 673, 689, 693

and Chico U.S. Senate primary candidacy, 817, 847 and Obama U.S. Senate candidacy, 755

Adequate Health Care Task Force, 917

Administrative Law (Edley), 432

affirmative action

class-based, 575, 614

as law school case study, 515, 614, 615

liberal dilemma of, 614

Obama’s views on, 403–4, 428, 440, 457, 633, 644, 655, 953 seen as stigma, 383, 385, 397, 427, 428, 443

Supreme Court ruling, 578

women and, 396, 427, 445

See also under Harvard Law Review; Harvard Law School

Affordable Care Act (2010), 1053, 1058, 1060, 1067, 1075 partisan divide over, 1054–55

website dysfunction, 1066

Afghanistan war, 1014, 1053–54, 1056

AFL-CIO, 796, 827, 844, 864, 865–66, 956

African AIDS crisis, 997, 998, 1002

African American Contractors Association, 749

African-American Institute (AAI), 45, 53, 58

African American Ministerial Alliance, 838

African-American Student Foundation, 54

African American Summit for the 90s (TV panel), 440–41

African National Congress (ANC), 126, 142, 160

Afrikan Education Project, 126

AFSCME. See American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees (AFSCME)

Agha, Asif

as Obama’s closest male Hyde Park friend, 198, 203–4, 205, 208, 211, 217, 229, 236, 237, 245–46, 270, 271, 272, 285

and Obama’s relationship with Jager, 228, 277–78, 316

and Obama’s secularism, 298

Agricultural Development Bank of Pakistan, 272

Ahad, Samia, 197, 198

AIDS, 997, 998, 1002, 1006, 1015

- African crisis, 997, 998, 1002
- conspiracy theorists, 1046

Aid to Families with Dependent Children, 574, 597

Ajami, Fouad, 1067

Akaka, Danny, 976

Akers, Raymond, 215

Akkineni, Roopa, 880

Alberding, Ellen, 750, 752

Alele, Suzanne “Suzy,” 417

Alexander, Elizabeth, 616–17

Alexis, Geraldine, 417, 418, 465

- and death of Ann Dunham, 549
- as guest at Obama wedding, 478, 480
- and Obama campaign donation, 638, 666
- and Sidley’s summer program, 349, 351–52, 361

Alfred, Julie, 495–96

Ali, Muhammad, 418, 545, 616

Alinsky, Saul, 8, 9, 41, 184, 198, 292

- adverse effects of tactics of, 323
- best-known principle of, 231, 248
- confrontational style of, 12, 13, 29, 201, 248, 281, 282–83, 299, 300, 301, 307–8
- and IAF training programs, 210, 230, 231, 233, 287, 307, 373
- Obama critique of, 373–74
- organizing vision of, 259
- and power-analysis training, 495
- pragmatism of, 233
- revisions of strategies and tactics, 241

Alito, Samuel, 979, 983

Allen, David, 435, 436

Allen, Martha, 225

Alliance for Better Chicago Schools (ABC), 322

Alliance for Survival, 126

Alliance of Business Leaders and Entrepreneurs (ABLE), 591, 723, 769, 1019

Allis-Chalmers plant closing, 207

All Things Considered (NPR), 506–7, 1005

Alperovitz, Gar, 7, 138–39

Al Qaeda, 779, 1014

Alter, Jonathan, 963, 1020, 1056, 1063

Altgeld Developing Communities Project, 224 Altgeld Gardens, 30–35 asbestos contamination, 223–27, 244, 248, 291 boycott of Wheatley Child-Parent Center, 248
  Carver Park, 222
  Carver schools, 30, 31, 32, 217, 249, 251, 405
  and CEN tutoring program, 294
  and DCP organizers, 229–30, 239, 240, 261, 266, 268, 287 deterioration of, 31–33, 217
  drug traffic, 217
  employment problems, 220, 223, 229, 235, 249, 296 garbage dumping, 200, 202, 210, 212
  Obama’s focus on, 217, 245, 309, 313, 321, 458, 1044 scale of deprivation of, 267, 1044 Washington’s mayoral campaign in, 263 youth gangs, 244, 294
Altgeld Tenants United (ATU), 34, 35
Alzheimer & Gray, 817, 821, 829, 834, 847
Amanat, Frank, 388, 394, 426, 429, 430, 444
American Bar Association, 334
American Cancer Society, 801
American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), 15, 684
American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees (AFSCME), 712, 731, 795, 823–24 endorsement of Obama, 853, 854, 864, 866
  lobbyists, 589, 600, 907
  Obama campaign fund donors, 610 and Obama U.S. Senate primary campaign, 827, 832, 833, 837, 875, 807, 913–14
  and Project VOTE!, 477, 480, 481
American Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC), 811, 982
American Lawyer (journal), 402
American Lung Association, 809
American Public Health Association, 809
Ameritech, 698
Amin, Hisham, 564, 575
Anderson, Donita Powell, 255, 259, 324
Anderson, Jack, 509, 749, 751, 752
Anderson, Mark, 117
Anderson, Paul, 111, 112, 121, 133, 135, 136
Ando, Dean, 80–81
Annenberg, Walter, 509, 510, 511, 517, 523
  See also Chicago Annenberg Challenge (CAC)

Anthony, Arthé, 130
Anti-Defamation League, 314
anti-Semitism, 314, 315
Arab American Action Network, 632, 834, 875
Aramanda, Joseph, 886, 1021
Aranda, Ted, 201, 314
Arbor, Pat, 757, 842
Ariel Capital Management, 463, 747, 758, 773
Arms Race Alternatives, 157
Armstrong, Dan (BIMR editor), 170, 174, 179–80
Armstrong, Danny (Columbia student), 159, 160
Arterian, Susan, 174, 536
Art Institute of Chicago, 237, 262, 361
Ashcroft, John, 725, 833
Asia Foundation, 82
Askew, Cathy, 29, 206, 238, 268, 270
    Dreams From My Father portrayal of, 530
    and landfill protest, 274
    Obama's bond with, 212, 236, 246, 297
    and Obama's departure, 309, 319 and Obama's racial identity, 278
Askew, Stephanie, 212
Askia, Gha-Is F., 521, 545, 558, 560, 561, 562
Asner, Ed, 136
Assad, Bashar al-, 1066
Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now. See ACORN
Atieno, Jael, 150, 151, 321
Atkins, Andrea, 299
Atlantic Monthly, 1061
Atlantic Richfield plant closing, 207
Attacking Viral Influenza Across Nations (AVIAN) Act, 970
Attisani, David, 334, 341, 342, 346, 347, 356, 358
Atwater, Lee, 1048
Atwood, William, 851
Audacity of Hope, The (Obama) audio recording of, 996 book tour promoting, 1001, 1005, 1007, 1009 contract for, 959, 989, 992, 994
    Fisher editing of, 989
    Jarrett book party for, 1004
    proofreading of, 999

reviews of, 1004

royalties from, 1012, 1044

Augustine, Loretta Freeman, 269, 310, 316, 317

and Altgeld Gardens, 30–31, 224, 235

argument against Kruglik, 39, 40 conflict with Dillard, 267

as DCP core participant, 209, 213, 261, 262, 268, 270

as DCP director, 238

Dreams From My Father portrayal of, 530

as guest at Obama wedding, 478, 480

and landfill protest, 274, 299–300, 306, 307, 308, 310, 322

and Obama book signing, 527

and Obama going-away barbecues, 323

Obama's bond with, 201–2, 217, 218, 236, 302

on Obama's fight with Jager, 317–18

Austin, Lemuel, 262

Austin v. Michigan Chamber of Commerce (1990), 419

Autobiography of Malcolm X, The, 88, 695

Avalos, Alma, 16, 17

avian flu, 970, 971, 977

AVI BioPharma stock, 968, 979

Avila, Frank, 839

Avila, Jim, 226

Awlaki, Anwar al-, 1060

Axelrod, David, 820, 956, 975, 977 assessment of Obama presidency, 1073

background of, 774

and campaign staff tensions, 877 and Claypool friendship, 989

critics of, 1036

as Daley's media counselor, 481, 516, 867

and defensive research, 945

and driver for Obama, 889–90

and Hull-Sexton divorce scandal, 842, 882 and media consulting firm founding, 774–75

memo advocating Obama presidential bid, 1014–15

on Obama Chicago mansion purchase, 966

and Obama congressional primary bid, 669, 671, 707

and Obama debate performance, 952

and Obama DNC (2004) speech, 913–14, 930, 931, 933–34, 936–37, 939, 940

and Obama narrative, 1049

- and Obama presidential campaign, 1026–27, 1038, 1049
- on Obama’s political skills, 954
- and Obama TV appearance, 872, 874, 878, 898
- and Obama U.S. Senate campaign, 903, 954
- and Obama U.S. Senate campaign challenges, 905
- and Obama U.S. Senate campaign emphasis, 870–71, 918–19
- and Obama U.S. Senate campaign final days, 894
- and Obama U.S. Senate campaign memo, 918–19
- and Obama U.S. Senate campaign planning, 905–6, 910, 913, 929
- and Obama U.S. Senate campaign revised plans, 944–45
- and Obama U.S. Senate primary, 760–66, 774–79, 805–6, 812–13, 816, 820–21, 848, 849–50, 863–64, 879
- and Obama U.S. Senate primary Election Day, 897, 898
- on Obama U.S. Senate primary win, 900
- and Obama U.S. Senate “Transition” memo, 948
- and Obama White House, 1051, 1052, 1054, 1058
- and possibility of Obama presidential candidacy, 992, 999, 1000–1001, 1007, 1011–19, 1022
- on potential problems of Obama presidential candidacy, 1015, 1017
- and Sheila Simon statement about Obama, 879–80
- as vital factor in Obama’s presidential win, 1050–51
- and Wright controversy, 1027, 1028, 1042, 1046
- writing skill of, 879–80, 927, 1028
- and “Yes We Can!” slogan, 918

Axelrod, Lauren, 774, 775, 975

Axelrod, Susan, 817, 975

Ayers, Bill, 303, 612, 757

- background of, 511

- and Chicago Annenberg Challenge, 523, 524

- Cook’s encounter with, 168–69

- dinner with Obamas, Dohrn, and Khalidis, 568–70, 603, 617, 674, 708, 834–35

- and juvenile justice reform, 616, 617

- Obama campaign contribution from, 733

- as Obama presidential campaign issue, 1044–45

- Obamas’ friendship with, 743

- on Obama’s personality, 835

- and Obama state Senate campaign, 546, 733

- past political violence of, 511, 546, 569, 743, 1044

- and school reform, 405, 509–11, 546, 547

- self-reinvention of, 569

- and Woods Fund board, 669

Ayers, George, 249, 265

Ayers, John, 249, 523, 633, 647
Ayers, Thomas G., 511
Ayres, Ian, 436, 456

Back of the Yards neighborhood, 22, 284
Bacon, Gloria Jackson, 217
Bacon, Perry, Jr., 986
Bader, Dennis, 106
Bagby, Margaret, 239, 263, 267, 269, 317
    Dreams From My Father portrayal of, 530
    as guest at Obama wedding, 478, 480
    and landfill protest, 275, 308
Baim, Tracy, 852, 865
Bain, Eugenia “Sister,” 184
Baird, Douglas, 454, 466, 486, 565–66, 666, 914
Bakalis, Michael, 243
Baker, Deborah, 574
Baker, Ida, 75
Baker, Peter, 1057, 1068, 1073
Baker, Ruth Beatrice, 75–76, 77, 78
    See also Ndesandjo, Ruth Beatrice Baker Obama Baker, Vera, 910, 922
Balanoff, Miriam, 10
Baldwin, James, 695
Banas, Casey, 281
Bangash, Afzal, 137
Bank of Hawaii, 51, 74, 87, 119, 1043
Bank Rakyat Indonesia (BRI), 379–80
Banks, Brian, 473, 474, 475, 477, 478, 517
Baptist churches, 253, 255, 259, 289
Baravati, Ahmad, 154, 486, 498
Baravati v. Josephthal, Lyon & Ross (1993), 498
Barnard College, 303, 347, 379, 380, 394
Barnes, Arthur H., 182
Barnett, Robert, 959
Barnett, William, 645
Barnett v. City of Chicago (1997), 486, 498, 635
Barnhill, Chuck, 486, 514, 668
Baron, Hal, 281, 517, 525, 526, 545, 552, 553, 732
Baron, Michael L., 146–47, 153, 161, 293
Barrett, Tom, 1009
Barrow, Willie, 850, 876

Bartlett, Katharine, 398–99

Baruch, Susannah, 515

Basinger, Kim, 105

basketball

- in Chicago, 694–95
- at Columbia, 143
- Craig Robinson university coaching, 736, 993
- at Harvard Law School, 336, 343–44, 375–76, 378, 428
- Harvard-Walpole State prison inmates game, 376, 435
- as Obama campaign analogy, 1041
- and Obama’s left-handedness, 111, 365, 367
- Obama’s style of, 367
- in Obama’s youth, 81, 82, 84, 85, 87, 88, 91, 92–93
- at Occidental, 110–11
- at Punahou, 96–100, 536
- at University of Chicago gym, 492

Baskin-Robbins, 94–95, 100, 363

Bassett, Emmett, 140

Bates, Mary, 28

Bauer, Bob, 979

Baum, Gideon, 595, 609

Bayer, Henry, 913–14

Bayh, Evan, 982

Bay Valley Foods, 973

Beavers, William, 306, 460

Bechet, Leon, 336

Becker, Scott, 331, 348, 354

Beckett, Samuel, 172, 178

Beckman, Peregrine “Pern,” 142, 146, 153, 940

Becoming a Heroine (Brownstein), 148

Belcaster, John, 498, 499–500, 546, 565, 634, 659, 729–30, 754

Bell, Derrick, 339, 409–11, 441, 477

- and BLSA protest, 328
- critique of Brown v. Board of Education, 856–57
- Dreams From My Father* endorsement by, 511–12, 515, 528, 533
- New York University law school appointment of, 445–46
- Obama’s first meeting with, 337
- and Obama’s Law Review presidency, 391, 393–94
- Obama’s thank-you note to, 446

Bell Curve, The (Herrnstein and Murray), 506–7

Bendix, Mark, 83, 88, 91–92, 93, 104

Benjamin, Ellen, 36, 254

Bennett, Anna, 765, 858, 872

Bennett, Joe, 29, 199, 206, 266

Bennett, Robert W., 564–65, 613, 643, 674, 734
and Obama campaign contribution, 638 and Obama Northwestern law school scholarship offer, 304–5, 494–95
and redistricting, 734

Bennett, Petts & Blumenthal, 765

Benton, Marjorie, 814

Berenson, Brad, 369, 378, 385, 388, 396, 397, 408 and “bagel war,” 425 and Bluebook rules, 437
conservatism of, 438
Obama friendship with, 428
on Obama’s “amused detachment,” 427 and Supreme Court commentary controversy, 413, 414, 420–21, 422–23

Berkowitz, Jeff, 771, 786–87, 833–34, 932, 991

Berman, Arthur, 265, 316, 558

Bernardin, Joseph Cardinal, 14, 22, 205–6, 207, 209, 223, 230, 406

Bernardin Amendment, 764, 765, 783

Bernstein, Mary, 205, 209, 217–18, 282, 285, 289

Bertha, Brian, 414

Besuki elementary school (Jakarta), 65, 72

Beth Eden Baptist Church, 256

Beverly Bank, 284

Beverly Hills Cop (film), 180

Beyoncé, 1063, 1067

“Beyond Critical Legal Studies: The Reconstructive Theology of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.” (Cook), 399

Beyond the Beltway (radio program), 839–40

Beyond the Wasteland (Bowles et al.), 448

Bhutto, Zulfikar Ali, 117, 137, 144

Biden, Joe, 1043, 1049, 1060, 1062

Biko, Stephen, 126

Bilandic, Michael A., 741

bin Laden, Osama, 743, 848
Obama sounding like, 790, 845, 923, 950
U.S. forces killing of, 1059, 1072

Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act (2002). See McCain-Feingold Act

Bipartisan Health Care Reform Commission, 917

Birkett, Joe, 783

Bishop, Maurice, 461

Black, Timuel “Tim,” 473, 548, 552, 1047

Black Caucus

Chicago City Council, 758

Illinois legislature, 657–58, 710, 799

See also Congressional Black Caucus (CBC)

black churches, 555, 573

Harvard conference on, 285–86

and Obama campaigns, 690–91, 698, 855, 861, 895, 909

potential for community organizing, 285–86, 295–96, 297, 313

See also specific churches

Black History Month, 441, 643

Black Law Students Association (BLSA), 336–37, 375, 376, 383, 393, 443 annual spring conference, 445–46

black students’ leadership roles, 328, 351 and black student study group, 346

Michelle Robinson’s active role in, 351 and “Minority and Women Law Professors” essay, 329

and Obama Law Review presidency, 394

Obama’s speeches to, 403–4, 405, 409, 423–24

overnight sit-ins, 328, 455

black liberation theology, 258, 426, 469, 1030

Black Like Me (Griffin), 66

Black Man’s Verse (Davis), 68

Blackmun, Harry A., 359

black nationalists, 552, 563, 692, 704, 708, 793, 1026

rejection of Obama by, 855, 856

Black Orpheus (film), 50, 144, 540

Black Panthers, 471, 645, 662, 663, 708, 831

Black Power (Carmichael and Hamilton), 160

Black Press Institute, 461

Black Student Directory (Occidental), 136

Black Students Organization (BSO) Columbia and Barnard, 160, 330

Black Theology and Black Power (Cone), 258

Blackwell, Robert, Jr., 666

Electric Knowledge Interchange, 723–24, 729, 755, 826

and Obama campaign funding, 747, 785, 814

and Obama retainer, 723–24, 789

Blagojevich, Patti, 517, 966

Blagojevich, Rod, 781, 816, 824, 947, 951, 1003 corrupt administration of, 970–71

critics of, 919–20

Democratic gubernatorial campaign of, 748, 749, 752, 754, 756, 775, 783 difficult last name of, 756, 760, 794

Hull's campaign contribution to, 843 and Illinois budget deficit, 790–91, 932

and influence-peddling lobbyists, 803

and legislation, 821–22, 823, 829, 831, 840, 918

and legislators, 798, 821–23

and Madigan animus, 919–20

as “new face” of Chicago machine, 740

Obama support for, 771

and reception for Obama, 935

Rezko connection with, 802–3, 912, 931, 966, 969, 970–71

and Rezko indictment, 1003

and state budget, 919

Blair, Tony, 974

Blank, David, 388

Blitzer, Wolf, 933

Block, Melissa, 935

Bloom, Allan, 448

Blount, Richard, 567

Blumenthal, Mark, 818, 842–43, 858, 872

Boatti, Robert, 138

Bob Jones University, 725

Boehner, John, 1059

Boerner, Karen, 496. See also McCraw, Karen

Boerner, Phil

and Alex McNear, 135

birth of first child, 496

and book discussion group, 178–79

as Columbia transfer student, 138, 140–43, 146, 152, 153, 157, 158, 175, 632 marriage announcement, 287, 295

Obama's friendship with, 163, 185, 940

Obama's letters about Chicago to, 210–11, 218, 219, 227, 237–38, 248

and Obama's relationship with Jager, 302

Occidental student, 111, 131

Boesche, Roger, 110, 121–22, 125, 127

Bok, Derek, 353

Bolin, Lionel, 304, 483, 519, 526–27, 666

Bond, Julian, 142

Bond, Kit, 982

Bonin, Adam, 580

Bono (musician), 1000
Boord, Roger, 340
Borges, Jorge Luis, 995, 1002
Borg-Warner Foundation, 36, 254
Bork, Robert, 415, 745
Borling, John, 844, 886–87, 894
Boron, Andrew, 812, 847
Borum, Jennifer, 383, 384, 386, 390, 398
Boss, Caroline, 116, 118, 120–23, 135 and boyfriend John Drew, 123, 138–39 Obama’s conversations with, 129, 130, 132, 138 and Obama’s writing, 137 political activism of, 127, 128–29
Boston Globe, 353, 356, 372, 393, 394, 411, 435
    on Dreams From My Father, 533, 535
    on Obama as “rising star,” 935, 942
    on Obama’s Democratic primary win, 902
Bostonians, The (film), 177
Bouman, John, 595, 605, 731–32, 812
Bouman, Mark, 284
Bowles, Erskine, 1059
Bowles, Evelyn, 593, 656, 881
Bowles, Samuel, 448
Bowman, Barbara, 463, 464, 1004
Bowman, James, 463, 464, 1004
Boxer, Barbara, 967
Boyd, Thelma, 68
Boyda, Gloria, 23, 29, 33, 206, 207
Boyer, John, 111, 118, 125
Boyer, Ray “Gay Ray,” 92, 97, 101, 104
Boykin, Keith, 455
Boyte, Harry, 283
Bradford, Calvin, 27
Bradley, Bill, 724, 809, 848
Brady, Bill, 917–18
Brake, Debbie, 386, 414
Brasuell, Czerny, 365
Brazier, Arthur M., 498
Brazile, Donna, 717
“Breaking the War Mentality” (Obama), 157–58
Brennan, John, 1072–73

Brennan, William J., 392, 426
as Obama judicial inspiration, 285, 429–30
Brereton, Renee, 220, 263, 310
Brewer, Libby, 823
Bridge, The (Remnick), 1055–56
Bridges, Harry, 60
Briffault, Richard, 416
Brint, David, 418–19, 504, 785
Broadway Bank, 988, 989, 990
Broder, David S., 527, 940
Brokaw, Tom, 942
Bromberg, Dan, 360, 386, 389, 408
Bronson, Julia, 488
Bronzeville, 224, 279, 473, 501, 524
Brookings Institution, 633
Brooklyn Friends School, 167, 171, 176
Brooks, David, 1005, 1031, 1048
Brooks, Gwendolyn, 616
Brooks, Rosa, 1069
Brown, Janice Rogers, 972
Brown, Mark, 900, 1042
Brown, Scott, 1054
Brown, Sherrod, 1010
Brown, Tina, 825, 942
Brown, Willie, 799
Brownback, Sam, 980, 1015
Browne, Katrina, 467–68, 488, 489
Browne & Nichols School, 58
Brown's Mill, 1
Brownstein, Rachel, 148
Brown University, 509, 570–71, 993
Brown v. Board of Education (1954), 487, 614, 725, 856–57
Brubaker, Steve, 722
Brubeck, Daniel and Christopher, 81
Brubeck, Dave, 81
Brucks, Ken, 219
Bryan, John, 675, 814, 825, 885
Bryan, Neville, 885
Bryk, Anthony, 648
Bryn Mawr Elementary School, 364
Brzezinski, Zbigniew, 161

Buchanan, John, 21
Buckley, Jack, 1016
Bucklo, Elaine, 635
Bud Billiken Day Parade, 476–77, 667, 838, 946
Budd, Wayne, 456
Buffett, Susie, 962, 978
Buffett, Warren, 962, 978, 1039
Bukro, Casey, 300
Bunche, Ralph, 54
Bunche, Ruth, 54
Burak, Paul, 26, 29, 266
Burford, Bart, 102
Burger Court (1970s), 96
Burke, Edward, 317
Burke, Juana, 66
Burke, Paul, 23
Burkhalter, Dan, 589
Burnam, Deloris, 239, 470
Burnett, Michael (aka Michael Raymond), 215
Burns, James, 1021
Burns, Will
    and Obama Finance Committee, 738 and Obama’s congressional primary, 541, 577, 623, 666–68, 675, 682, 685, 690, 700, 704, 705, 707–8, 709
    and Obama’s state Senate seat, 659, 718, 721
    and Obama’s U.S. Senate campaign, 780 and petition circulation, 549, 558, 559, 610, 616 and selection of state Senate successor to Obama, 959
    Trotter’s nastiness toward, 660
Burrell, Sam, 473, 480–81, 494
Burris, Roland, 503, 504, 516, 618, 623, 667, 740
    and Democratic gubernatorial race, 745, 748, 753, 754, 833
Burroughs, Margaret, 71, 229, 230
Burt, John H., 7
Burzynski, Brad, 598–99, 728, 742
Bush, George H. W., 339, 348, 471, 585, 974
Bush, George W., 780, 816, 840, 855, 927 appellate court nominees, 971–72, 975–76 Ashcroft named attorney general, 725 disdain for Keyes, 950
    Federal Funding Accountability and Transparency Act signing, 1001 foreign leaders' view of, 1071

Hispanic judicial nominee, 833
Hurricane Katrina response by, 974
Illinois voter negativity toward, 912 and Iraq war, 777–78, 781, 810–11, 926, 934, 984, 1022 and Iraq war “surge,” 1023, 1025
Jack Ryan's support for, 902
Khalidi's criticism of, 834 and major economic crisis, 1051
and national debt, 991, 1063
Obama appraisals of, 806, 810–11, 817, 827, 849, 930, 976, 991, 1004, 1018–19, 1022, 1077
Obama contrasted with, 980, 1014, 1071–72, 1073
Obama meetings with, 964, 984 and Obama's U.S. Senate victory, 958, 968 and Pell Grants, 970 and prescription drug plan, 830 presidential election (2004) of, 717, 721, 722, 724, 923, 954, 955, 957, 960–61
Supreme Court appointments, 975–76, 979
and tax cuts, 849

Bushell, Gerrard, 160

Bushnell, Marlease, 952

Bush v. Gore (2000), 724

Business International Corporation (BI), 165–70, 173–75, 178, 179–80

black employees, 167, 174

former colleagues' reactions to Dreams From My Father, 536 former colleagues' reactions to Obama presidency, 1050 former colleagues' reactions to Obama's DNC keynote speech, 941

Obama's salary at, 166, 191

Business International Money Report (BIMR), 166, 170, 174

Butler, Lewis, 509

Butterfield, Fox, 155, 393

Butts, Cassandra “Sandy,” 358, 372, 374, 441

and diversity protest, 410, 426–27

on Dreams From My Father, 536

friendship with Obama, 337, 345–46, 374, 405

and Obama's Law Review presidency, 383

and Obama's U.S. Senate staff, 961, 962

Bynoe, Peter, 669, 675, 733, 747, 785, 886, 892

Byrd, Judy, 306, 668, 695, 758

and Obama campaign funding, 664, 708, 709, 747, 748, 773, 785, 814

and Obama statewide candidacy, 721

Byrd, Manford, 243–44, 316, 317 and Chicago United opposition, 283, 294 and no-confidence vote, 322
and teachers' strike, 279–80, 281
and Trinity United Church, 256–57, 468

Byrd, Robert, 970, 986

Byrne, Jane, 11–12, 17–18, 250, 586

Byrnes, Marian, 33, 240, 249
and landfill protest, 274–75, 290, 300, 305, 307, 308, 310

Cahill, Mary Beth, 928, 930, 937–38

Caldwell, Kristen B., 82–83, 369

Caldwell, Larry, 116

Calicott, John, 29–30, 40, 199, 206

Callahan, David, 634

Callahan, Deb, 893

Callahan, Mary Ellen, 564

Calmes, Jackie, 1031, 1061

Calumet Community Religious Conference (CCRC) ad for community organizer, 41, 189 and Altgeld asbestos problem, 224 breakup with DCP, 238 and church-based organizing, 10, 33, 201, 205 expansion into Indiana, 223, 236 founding of, 10–14, 22, 23 grants for, 13, 39, 207, 219, 220, 222, 223, 239 and jobs bank, 205–7, 211, 213
Obama's first meeting with, 197–98
Obama's income from, 651
Obama's interview with, 189, 190–91 objective of, 191
original vision of, 222
reactivation of, 22, 24, 28, 29, 33, 39, 40
and Regional Employment Network (REN), 207, 223

Calumet Industrial District (CID) landfill, 16, 17, 35–36, 200
and Altgeld Gardens, 30, 248
and antidumping alliance, 240 ban on extension of, 294 community trust-fund proposal, 299, 300 and dumping moratorium, 28–29, 276, 311 hard-core opponents of, 290 and promising developments, 322–23 protests against, 19–21, 35, 210, 273–76, 290, 294, 299–311, 322, 323

“reconfiguration” of, 234 underground fire, 200

Calumet Project for Industrial Jobs, 223

Calumet region, 11, 18, 23, 24, 197

Cambridge Public Library, 543

Cameron, John, 596, 597, 731, 732, 842, 875

campaign finance reform and Illinois Gift Ban Act, 761

and Illinois legislature, 611–13, 616–31, 635

and McCain-Feingold Act, 795, 904

Obama’s advocacy of, 694, 701, 748, 749, 764, 774, 888

and public funding, 888, 1005–6, 1025, 1048

Campaign for Better Health Care (CBHC), 783, 916

Campaign for Human Development (CHD), 14, 22, 28, 261

CCRC grants from, 13, 39, 207, 219

and DCP funding, 268

and leadership training, 216, 220, 227, 263

mayor’s award to, 210

and Obama’s law school decision, 310

Campbell Works, 7

Camp Timberline, 82

Camus, Marcel, 50

Canary, Cindi, 603, 631, 732, 824, 867, 1004

Canby, Vincent, 301

Cantor, Danny, 493–94

Capital Fax, 623, 629, 775, 822. See also Miller, Rich capital punishment. See death penalty

Cardozo, Benjamin, 95

Career Education Network (CEN), 309, 317

hiring of Lowe, 304

and LaRoche, 249, 265, 463

Obama proposal for, 249–53, 262–68, 295–96

“Partnership for Educational Progress,” 289

“Proposed Advisory Board,” 265, 266 renamed Career Education and Intervention Network, 266 support campaign, 251–52, 262–70, 281, 296

tutoring program, 294

Wright’s reaction to, 259

Carleton College, 643

Carlin, George, 980

Carlisle, Judith Pinn, 115
Carlson, Richard, 16, 17, 32, 33
Carmichael, Stokely, 160
Carmines, Edward G., 614
Carmody, Bill, 736
Carmon, Dominic, 217, 248–49, 308, 311
Carnegie, Andrew, 1
Carney, Jay, 1058
Caro, Robert, 695
Carpenter, Paul, 142, 153, 366, 496
    Obama friendship at Columbia, 139, 141
    Obama friendship at Occidental, 109, 111, 112, 116, 117, 120, 121, 122
Carper, Tom, 810
Carril, Pete, 367
Carroll, Howard, 562, 586, 593, 599, 628
Carruthers, Iva E., 257
Carson, Clayborne, 184
Carter, Jimmy, 7, 11, 113, 114, 116
Cartier-Bresson, Henri, 237
Carver, George Washington, 30
Carver Park, 222
Casabal, Glorina, 643, 651
Case for Israel, The (Dershowitz), 847
Cases and Materials on Tort and Accident Law (Keeton et al.), 333
Cases and Text on Property (Casner et al.), 352
Casey, Bob, 974
Cashin, Sheryll, 337, 391, 392, 417
Casner, A. James, 352
Cason, Tiffanie, 515
Castillo, Ruben, 513, 562, 563, 564
Catholic Campaign for Human Development. See Campaign for Human Development (CHD)
Catholic churches. See Roman Catholic parishes; specific churches
Catler, Jane, 385
Cauley, Jim
    background and hiring of, 820–21, 827 and black staff members, 877, 910 and campaign field operation, 889, 890 and campaign fund management, 832, 836 and campaign operations director, 841 and campaign startup, 832, 836–38, 841
    on campaign success, 904

- and campaign tensions, 877
- and check of petition signatures, 860
- and driver for Obama, 854, 889, 890, 920
- on effects of Hull scandal, 884
- and Election Day tactics, 897, 898
- on Obama's attitude, 861, 870
- and Obama's celebrity, 935, 942–43
- and Obama's DNC speech, 923, 928, 933, 936, 940, 941
- and Obama's self-discipline issues, 920, 921
- and Obama's surging poll numbers, 895–96
- and TV advertising, 892, 896
- view of Rezko, 869

CBS Evening News, 715

CBS News, 1054, 1064, 1066

Celi, Lou, 166, 170, 179, 1050

Cellini, Bill, 720

Center for Equal Opportunity, 655

Center for Neighborhood Technology (CNT), 495

Centers for New Horizons, 224, 279, 473, 501, 524

Central Bank of Kenya, 78

Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), 174, 1066, 1072–73

Cerda, Maria, 229, 235, 249, 251, 261, 262, 275

Chadwell & Kayser, 365–66, 496

Chain, Warren, 875

Chambers, Ed, 231

Chandler, Janet, 729–30

Chandoo, Ahmed, 115–16, 120, 139, 148, 177, 182

Chandoo, Hasan, 132, 145, 214, 276–77, 319

- Brooklyn apartment parties of, 172, 176, 177, 182, 184, 186, 188, 189–90

- compelling presence of, 135

- Iraq war support by, 847

- and Obama political campaigns, 666, 700, 847

- and Obama's book-promotion tour, 533

- Obama's cautions against drug use to, 176, 190

- and Obama's congressional primary loss, 717

- and Obama's interest in Genevieve Cook, 169

- Obama's Karachi visit with, 139

- Obama's phone calls from Chicago to, 218

- on Obama's presidential candidacy, 1034

- Obama's strong bond with, 176, 177, 847

- and Obama's unusual name, 122 and Obama's visit to Singapore, 162

and Obama wedding, 478, 479

Occidental friendship with Obama, 115–16, 117

and Occidental parties, 138, 143 and Occidental political activism, 120–21, 125, 127, 129, 136–37, 139, 140, 144

Chandoo, Raazia, 276, 277, 319

Chang, Eugene, 174

Chang, Susan Arterian, 174, 536

Chapman, Gary, 113–14

Chapman, Steve, 1069

Chapman, Warren, 509, 511

Charity, Elvin, 380–81, 417, 576, 708, 747

Charles, John, 551, 640, 661, 784

Charnes, Adam, 389, 396, 397, 413, 437, 438

Charny, David, 412, 429, 456

charter schools, 633, 697, 721, 730, 833–34

Chase Manhattan Bank, 3, 4, 9, 11, 18

Check Acceptance Firm Act (Ill.), 646, 649, 651, 652

derailment of, 653

Check, Please (TV show), 741, 742

Chemerinsky, Erwin, 377, 379

Chen, Jim, 396, 402, 427, 428, 429

adherence to Bluebook rules by, 437, 444

on stigma of affirmative action, 385, 397, 443

Chen, Micki, 386, 389, 411

Cheney, Dick, 964, 1072

Chester, Marty, 732

Chew, Earl, 115, 122, 128–29, 136, 141

“Chicago” (Sandburg), 191

Chicago, University of. See University of Chicago

Chicago Annenberg Challenge (CAC), 510–11, 521–24, 546, 551, 730

“Breakthrough Schools” challenge, 660–61

Obama as board chair, 551, 563, 570, 591, 592, 612, 632, 641, 648, 660, 749

Obama chair resignation, 668–69, 715

Obama's view of, 624

Small Schools Network grant, 612–13, 660–62

wind-down of, 715–17

Chicagoans Against War on Iraq, 778–79

Chicago Association of Commerce and Industry, 21

Chicago Bears (football), 1018, 1024

Chicago Better Housing Association (CBHA), 719

- Chicago Black Renaissance, 68–69
- Chicago Bulls (basketball), 348
- Chicago Children’s Museum, 907
- Chicago City Council, 645, 738
  - redistricting case, 330–32, 486, 498, 506
  - slavery reparations resolution, 714
- Chicago Community Trust, 13, 28, 523
- Chicago Council of Lawyers, 780
- Chicago Council on Foreign Relations, 930
- Chicago Council on Global Affairs, 1014
- Chicago Daily Law Bulletin*, 605, 606
- Chicago Defender*
  - on expectations for Obama, 934
  - on Eyes on the Prize, 249–50
  - Obama campaign letter to, 668
  - on Obama’s landmark criminal-justice bill, 831
  - Obama U.S. Senate endorsement, 951
  - Obama U.S. Senate primary endorsement, 892
  - on state Senate primary, 553, 562
- Chicago Freedom Movement (1966), 15, 249–50, 260, 288, 318, 460
- Chicago Housing Authority (CHA), 17, 25, 31, 35, 216, 524
  - and asbestos removal, 223, 224–26, 227
  - mismanagement reputation, 244, 639
  - and Project VOTE!, 474
  - and Robert Taylor, 30, 464, 475
  - and tenants’ periodical, 692
- Chicago Law Foundation, 711, 732
- Chicago Magazine*, 199, 216, 241, 481, 482, 547, 1071
- Chicago Metropolitan Housing Development Corporation, 499
- Chicago Panel on Public School Finances, 242, 303–4
- Chicago Park District (CPD), 221, 222, 229–30, 419
- Chicago Parks, 221–22, 230
- Chicago Public Schools (CPS), 220, 230, 249, 612, 1058–59
  - and African Americans, 279–80, 524
  - Annenberg grants to, 551
  - autonomy pilot program, 265
  - and bureaucratic inflation, 283
  - and Byrd’s funding complaints, 294
  - Career Education Network, 251
  - and citizen demands, 283–84, 296
  - and Daley policies, 645 dropout rates, 235–36, 238, 242, 244, 251–52, 264, 266, 268, 312 and governance change, 523–24, 645

and local councils, 523

Mayor Washington's forum on, 281, 283

and parent training, 235–36, 283, 289–90, 296 reform bill, 350, 405, 523–24, 588

and teachers' strike, 279, 280–81

See also school reform

Chicago Reader, 554

Chicago Roseland Coalition for Community Control (CRCCC), 284

Chicago School Reform Collaborative, 511, 546, 571

Chicago Slag & Ballast, 4

Chicago State University (CSU), 249, 284, 289, 867

Chicago Teachers Union (CTU), 205, 215, 279, 280–81, 289, 610

Chicago Transit Authority, 33, 541

Chicago United, 283, 289, 294, 296, 303–4, 316, 350

Chicago Urban League, 249, 265, 303–4, 463, 665, 715

Chico, Craig, 817

Chico, Gery, 523, 612, 645, 799, 890 campaign fund-raising, 797, 813, 814, 817, 831 and gay marriage support, 887

and Iraq war, 880

opposition research on, 826

poll results, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766, 821supporters, 862, 863

televised debate, 848, 849

TV advertising campaign, 847, 885

U.S. Senate primary candidacy, 757, 761, 775, 795, 800, 817, 827, 829, 834, 839, 844, 853

U.S. Senate primary results, 900, 901

Children and Family Justice Center, 546

Children's Defense Fund, 286

Children's Health Insurance Program. See KidCare

China (Butterfield), 155

Chisholm, Shirley, 440

Choan, Myrtle, 87

Choom Gang, 91–94, 97, 101, 104, 111

Chorowsky, Jack, 400

Christian, Amy, 334, 335, 342, 344

Christian Reformed Church (CRC), 25, 26

Christianson, Dino, 846

Christ Temple Community Baptist Church, 473

Chun, Marisa, 369, 396, 424, 427, 439

CIA. See Central Intelligence Agency (CIA)

Cicchino, Peter, 375

Cima, Tom, 14

Cimino, Chapin, 575, 614

Cities in Schools, 461

Citizen Action of Illinois, 852, 855

Citizens for a Better Environment, 35

Citizenship Education Fund, 665, 729, 796

Citizens United to Reclaim the Environment (CURE), 240

City College of New York (CCNY), 182, 183, 184, 185, 186 civil liberties, 833, 848, 862–63, 911, 1069

civil rights, 848, 862–63, 883, 887

Civil Rights Act (1964), 745, 887

Civil Rights Institute, 948

civil rights movement, 249–50, 271, 282, 345, 373, 451, 563

    Obama assessment of, 555, 725–26, 909

civil unions, 865, 1030

Claffey, Michael, 749, 750–51, 752

Claretian Social Development Fund, 12, 13, 22, 32, 219, 223

Clark, Frank, 518, 602, 713, 770, 807, 868

Clark, Robert C., 328, 353–54, 371–72, 409, 411, 450, 455

Class Action Fairness Act (2005), 968

Clauss, Carin, 509, 571, 751

Clayborne, James, 599–600, 605, 611, 649, 655, 717

    as African American state senator, 477–78, 638, 658

    on Obama’s 2004 DNC keynote speech, 941

    and Obama U.S. Senate campaign, 759, 868

Claypool, Forrest, 774, 989, 992, 1022

Clayton, Fay, 513

Clemons, John, 610

Clifford the Big Red Dog, 907

Clift, Eleanor, 1057

Clinton, Bill, 561, 613, 725, 775, 825, 891, 973

    and 1996 presidential election, 578, 1024

    endorsement of Rush, 693, 701

    and Hurricane Katrina evacuees, 974

    and Lewinsky scandal, 618

    Obama compared with, 1005, 1007

    Obama’s view of, 506, 573

    and Project VOTE!, 477–78, 480

    and welfare reform, 563, 574, 576, 601, 607

Clinton, Hillary Rodham
and Hurricane Katrina evacuees, 974
Iowa caucus loss, 1040, 1050
and Obama DNC keynote speech, 938, 939
and Obama relationship, 876, 923, 968, 1040 presidential primary (2008) candidacy, 967, 987, 1009, 1014, 1016, 1019, 1020, 1034, 1036, 1038, 1040, 1056, 1069 presidential primary state wins, 1041, 1042, 1045, 1047
as U.S Senate member, 962, 968, 983

Cloobek, Richard, 331, 334, 339, 340, 342–43

Closing of the American Mind, The (Bloom), 448

Coalition for a Free South Africa, 148, 159, 160

Coalition for Civil Rights (CCR), 446, 455

Coalition for Diversity, 339

Coar, David H., 754

Cobb, Delmarie, 557, 669, 738

Coburn, Tom, 975, 981, 989, 999, 1001, 1002, 1044–45

Cody, John Patrick Cardinal, 8, 10, 11, 14, 19, 209

Coffey, Peter, 812–13, 901, 906, 910, 920, 922, 943

Cohen, Julie, 385, 386, 396, 397, 424

Cohen, Michael, 387, 396, 421, 422, 423, 427, 438–39

Cohen, Richard, 1056, 1076

Cokely, Steve, 314–15

Colb, Sherry, 340, 341, 342, 346

Cole, Mary K., 420

Cole, Thomas A., 349, 647

Collery, Arnold, 138

Collins, Cardiss, 886

Collins, Earlean, 852

Collins, Eric, 331, 334

Collins, Jacqueline, 816, 868

Collins, Jennifer, 386, 396, 426

Collins, Raymond “Big Man,” 435

Collins, Scott, 369, 386, 395

Colmery, Harry, 114

Columbia Law School, 430

Columbia University, 140–44
African American professors, 160–61
African American students, 148–49, 160
atmosphere of, 141–43
core curriculum, 138, 141, 142, 149

Obama as transfer student, 131–32, 138, 160, 161–62, 367

and Obama's later political prominence, 911

Obama's senior-year classes, 146–49, 153–59

and political activism, 148, 159, 160

Said's Modern Fiction course, 146, 632

Sundial publication, 157

Comdisco, 512–13, 514

Commercial Club of Chicago, 633, 647

commercial-driver's-license bribery scandal (Ill.), 693, 732, 739, 754–55, 783, 861

Committee for the Spanish Speaking, 8

Committee on Solidarity with the People of El Salvador (CISPES), 136–37

Committee to Protect the Prairie, 33

Common Cause, 612, 626, 627, 630, 782

Commonwealth Edison, 518

Commonwealth Edison PAC, 713

Communist Party USA

Davis and, 68–69, 70, 72

Lumpkin and, 2, 7, 14, 318

Palmer and, 461

Community Careers Resource Center, 40

Community Jobs, 40–41, 189, 199

Community Organized for Action & Reform (COAR), 201 community organizing. See Alinsky, Saul; under Obama, Barack Hussein; specific organizations

Community Organizing and Family Issues (COFI), 508, 517

Community Reinvestment Act (CRA; 1977), 284

Community Renewal Society (CRS), 225, 473

Conard, Enos 200

Cone, James H., 258, 469, 1030

Coney, Les, 675, 770, 785

Confronting Authority (Bell), 511

Congressional Black Caucus (CBC), 776, 847, 910

Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), 233

Conlon, Suzanne, 512–13

Consortium on Chicago Schools Research, 613

Constable, Burt, 886, 980

Constitution, U.S.

Bill of Rights, 285

and civil rights, 726, 833

and Court originalists, 415

Tribe on contrasting conceptions of, 377, 417

See also specific amendments

Constitutional Law Cases and Materials (Lockhart et al.), 370
Contracts: Exchange Transactions and Relations (Macneil), 332
Cook, Anthony E., 426
    Law Review article, 369–70, 374–79, 398, 399
Cook, Charlie, 1068
Cook, Genevieve, 167–78, 180–82, 184–90, 237, 245, 271, 315
    as Dreams From My Father composite girlfriend, 531, 1061
    end of Obama relationship, 188–89, 191–92
    internationalism of, 367
    Maraniss Obama biography on, 1061–62
    Obama’s birthday greetings to, 227–28
    Obama’s emotional ties with, 214–15, 324
    Obama’s letters to, 193–94, 197, 198, 202–3
    poems by, 188
    retrospective assessment of Obama by, 1074, 1078
    Siddiqi relationship with, 208, 228
Cook, Mariana, 568
Cook, Michael J., 167
Cook County Circuit Court, 525, 563
Cook County Electoral Board, 558, 559, 561, 563–64
Cooper, Anderson, 1042
Cooper, Frank, 336, 378, 383, 384, 386, 388–91
Cooper, Melody Spann, 1004
Corrigan, Jack (Kerry aide), 913–14, 928, 934, 937, 939
Corrigan, John (state Senate staffer), 602, 636, 668, 734, 739, 742, 746
Cortes, Ernie, 231, 232
Corzine, Jon, 935, 981
Cosby, Bill, 933
Cose, Ellis, 497, 999–1000
Cottroll, Robert, 352
Couric, Katie, 930, 935
Cox, Garland, 492
Craig, Greg, 851
Craig, Larry, 976, 1017
Crane, Tom, 890
Craven, David, 88
Creamer, Bob, 857
credit discrimination, 641–42, 645, 651, 653
Criglar, Beverly, 557, 585, 683, 872
Crisp, Harry, 654, 657
Cronin, Dan, 594, 731, 754

Cross, Tom, 630, 733
Crossroads Africa, 122
Crossroads Fund, 13, 38
Crowhurst, Megan, 817, 829
Crown, Henry, 791, 814, 885, 904
Crown, James, 505, 791, 814, 856, 885, 904
Crown, Lester, 505, 791, 814, 885, 904
Crown, Susan, 505, 814, 904, 1063
Crown Publishing, 911, 943, 963, 999
Crucial Concessions, 418–19
Cruz, Rolando, 783
Cruzan v. Director (1990), 426
Cullen, Lori Joyce, 593, 596
Cullerton, John, 649, 682, 683, 725, 728, 731
    Hawkinson friendship, 594 neutrality on U.S. Senate primary, 811, 829–30 and partial-birth-abortion bill, 597, 600 and racial-profiling bill, 812 and seat-belt measure, 799, 811, 829 skit impersonations of colleagues, 735 and state Senate Judiciary Committee, 787–88, 811
Culver, Chet, 1011
Cummings, Jeff, 486, 499, 512, 513, 546, 576, 949
    Obama campaign contributions, 666, 747, 781
Cunningham, Peter, 779
Cunningham, Russ, 92, 93, 94, 104
Cuomo, Mario, 187, 980
Curlin, Farr A., 902–3, 994
Currie, Barbara Flynn, 600, 631–32, 739, 774 and Mendelson memorial service, 624
    and Obama congressional bid, 666, 707–8
    on Obama’s frustration with state Senate, 659
    and Obama state Senate campaign, 517, 521, 540
    and redistricting map, 731
Curry, Lacey K., 255
“Curvature of Constitutional Space: What Lawyers Can Learn from Modern Physics” (Tribe), 377
Czachorski, Violet, 36, 240, 274, 300, 307, 310, 311

Dabbouseh, M. A., 886
Dahlin, Lyle, 51, 52, 53
Daley, Bill, 1011, 1057, 1060, 1061
Daley, John, 800

Daley, Richard J. (father), 18, 460, 581, 664
Daley, Richard M. (son), 18, 374, 406, 586, 646
    African American support for, 516 and Axelrod political consultancy, 774 board of education appointees by, 523 challenges to machine of, 515–16 as Chicago mayor, 459, 464, 465, 466, 472, 481, 482, 490
    Chicago school control by, 523
    Claypool as aide to, 989
    and funeral for Rush's son, 678 inner circle of, 466, 482, 867
    and mayoral fourth-term bid, 645
    Obama analysis of success of, 645–46
    and Obama congressional bid, 664, 665, 669, 703–4, 709, 710
    on Obama DNC keynote speech, 941–42
    Obama endorsement of, 1024 and Obama presidential possibility, 1001, 1019 Obama relationship with, 867, 893, 956
    on Obama White House, 1058 and Palmer congressional bid, 539 political machine of, 623–24, 650–51, 727, 740, 748–49, 1036 reelection campaign, 504, 505, 515–16, 1024 Rush's mayoral challenge to, 645, 646, 659, 660, 665, 670, 675, 677, 679, 709
    and Safe Neighborhoods Act, 684 and "Taste of Chicago" reception, 607 and U.S. Senate candidate poll results, 762–63 and U.S. Senate primary candidates, 757, 769, 774, 807, 893
Daly, Charles U., 509, 749, 751
Daniels, Gregory, 749
Daniels, Lee, 630, 684, 720, 769, 822
Darmawan, Isabella, 64
Dart, Tom, 579, 602, 659, 663, 700, 753 backing of Obama, 739, 759 poll positives vs. negatives, 762
Daschle, Tom, 948, 952, 957, 961, 1013, 1016, 1022, 1056
Daves, Ira, 383, 384
Davies, Dave, 204
Davila, Yvonne, 478, 480, 508, 616
Davis, Allison, 484, 486, 498–99, 750 and civil rights litigation, 455, 465
    and ISBI, 851

- and Obama campaign funding, 747, 814
- and Obama golf match, 947
- and Obama quote controversy, 1061
- and Obama's book blurbs, 511
- and Obama's congressional campaign, 674
- and Obama's Project VOTE! job, 472
- and Obama's state Senate campaign, 519, 576
- and Obama's visit with daughters, 979
- at Obama wedding, 478
- and Rezko real estate projects, 590, 625, 639

Davis, Andy, 771, 813, 814

Davis, Artur, 423–24

Davis, Bette, 48

Davis, Danny, 315, 459, 545, 745, 792, 844

- and Obama U.S. Senate primary, 850–51, 855, 894, 898

Davis, Frank Marshall, 68–72, 95, 103, 135, 229, 232

- advice to young Obama, 107, 119–20, 324, 325

- death of, 277

- Dreams From My Father* portrayal of, 529, 543

- poetry by, 68, 69, 96, 119

- Stanley Dunham's friendship with, 68, 72, 85, 119, 120, 543

Davis, Helen Canfield, 68, 69, 70, 71

Davis, Lennard "Len," 153–54, 155–56, 158

Davis, Lynn, 70

Davis, Maggie, 34, 35

Davis, Mark, 70, 71

Davis, Miles, 348, 405, 557

Davis, Monique, 538, 544, 550, 551–52, 701, 908

Davis, Rochelle, 220

Davis, Ron, 481, 494, 539, 541, 547, 552, 610, 637

- and Obama's congressional campaign, 705

- and Palmer's reentry into state Senate campaign, 553

- and petition regulations, 558, 559–60

- professionalism of, 564

Davis, Miner, Barnhill & Galland (DMBG), 455, 465–66, 472, 476, 504, 562, 579

- Obama job with, 483–86, 489, 491, 494, 496–500, 505, 511–14, 522, 548

- Obama "of counsel" position, 565, 590

- Obama wedding guests from, 478

- See also* Miner, Barnhill & Galland

Dean, Howard, 839–40

DeAngelis, Aldo, 577, 598

Death of Ivan Ilyich, The (Tolstoy), 426

death penalty

and faulty convictions, 644, 783

and gang-activity bill, 734–35, 740, 748, 827 moratorium on, 816, 830

and Obama interrogation-videotape bill, 808, 811

Obama's view of, 574–76, 668, 714, 734–35, 740, 787, 796, 830, 850, 864, 910, 949

and Ryan blanket commutation, 791

Ryan Commission report on, 744, 755

Ryan moratorium on, 693

Ryan-Philip dispute over, 648

Déby, Idriss, 999

Decker, Anita, 943

Dee, Diane, 159

Deering, William, 1

Dees, Michael "Mike," 229, 246–47, 277

Defense of Marriage Act (1996), 845, 846

Defoe, Daniel, 154

Delanney, Laurent, 115, 120, 128, 478, 565

Del Cecato, John, 820

DeLeo, Jimmy, 649, 687, 713, 714, 725, 728–29

Delgado, Willie, 522, 915

Delk, Yvonne, 473

del Valle, Miguel, 522, 600, 608, 623, 658, 759, 918

challenge to Philip power play, 729

cosponsorship of Chicago school-reform bill, 317 and dinner honoring Lumpkin, 318

first impressions of Obama, 475, 593

Demanski, Laura, 431, 483

Demers, Jim, 1012

Democratic Leadership Council (DLC), 827

Democratic Leadership for the 21st Century (DL21C), 636

Democratic National Committee (DNC), 669, 791, 898

Democratic National Convention (1996), 573–74

Democratic National Convention (2000), 717, 941

Democratic National Convention (2004), Obama keynote speech, 913–14, 920, 923, 928–43, 948, 951, 954, 960, 963, 967, 978, 1028, 1050

Democratic National Convention (2008), 1041, 1049–50

Democratic Party, 471, 480, 503, 512

and Bill Clinton's centrism, 561 congressional control (2006), 1011

in Illinois, 752, 775–76, 783 Obama critiques of, 975–76
and Obama presidency, 1074–75
Obama seen as “rising star” of, 962, 964, 967 and Washington insiders, 851

Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee (DSCC), 908, 910, 922, 952, 958

Democratic Socialist Alliance (DSA), 114, 120

Democratic Socialists of America, 158, 563

Demos (think tank), 740, 782

Demuzio, Vince, 571, 587, 599, 628, 658, 800

Denitch, Bogdan, 158

Dennis, Eugene, 70

De Priest, Oscar, 645

Derks, Steve, 519, 546

Dershowitz, Alan, 847

Dery, Mark, 124

Derycz, Diana, 331, 342, 347

DeShaney v. Winnebago County (1989), 359, 360

Designs for Change, 265, 296, 303, 317

Despres, Leon, 699

Developing Communities Project (DCP), 189, 191, 249, 282, 289, 332, 481

and Alinsky-style tactics, 307–8

and Altgeld problems, 224, 235, 291

and black churches, 295–96

breakup with CCRC, 238

broadened outreach of, 223–24, 252

Career Education Network proposal, 264–65, 269–70, 304

Catholic parish base of, 29, 199–200, 201, 205, 206, 239

classist charges against, 268

core participants, 212, 268, 270 and disparate neighborhoods, 236, 244, 266–67 divisions within, 266–68, 405–6

Dreams From My Father portrayal of, 527

expansion of base, 252

focus shift from jobs to education, 266–67

funding sources, 39, 265, 268–70, 305, 322, 510

Gamaliel training sessions, 263–64, 287

grant applications, 219, 220, 230, 239–40, 248, 261, 267–70, 295

and job training, 220, 229, 249

Kruglik as consultant, 39–40, 350

and landfill issue, 262–66, 274–75, 299–300, 306, 307–8, 310, 311

and Mayor Washington, 261–62, 264 neighborhoods served by, 199–200, 217, 239, 266–67
new members, 269–70

as nonprofit corporation, 238

Obama as executive director of, 264, 285, 350

Obama at annual convention of, 721

Obama going-away dinner, 318

Obama on positive results of, 312–13

Obama's description of coworkers, 197–98

Obama's frustrations with, 284

Obama's introduction to, 201–2, 203, 206–7

Obama's leaving from, 305, 308–11, 323

and Obama's smoking, 270

Obama wedding guests from, 478, 479

Obama work with, 219–20, 236, 238–39, 247–48, 341, 351, 362, 404, 457 organizing strength of, 220

Owens as executive director of, 305, 350, 479

and Owens's problems, 405–6, 479

and Parent Community Council, 295

and Project VOTE!, 475

and Protestant congregations, 33, 266, 296, 309–10 and public park improvement, 221–22, 230

recruitment by, 239

and school reform movement, 203, 251, 255–56, 289–90, 316, 317, 322

and Trinity United Church, 255, 259

Development Alternatives Inc. (DAI), 105, 139, 510

Devine, Dick, 801

Dewey, Alice, 94, 119, 162, 169, 182, 380

as Ann Dunham's dissertation adviser, 85

Ann Dunham's dissertation dedication to, 470 and Ann Dunham's professional name, 105

description of Stanley Dunham, 87

DeWitt, Jesse, 206

DeZutter, Hank, 548, 554–56

Dhesi, Simrit "Sima," 317

Diament, Nathan, 375, 411, 811

Diehl, Jackson, 1076, 1077

Dietrich, Kelly, 817, 829

Dietterle, Todd, 576

DiFelice, Mary, 430

Dillard, Kirk, 594, 606, 618, 627–30, 926

and Illinois Enterprise Zone Act, 648–49 and Judiciary Committee, 731

minority leader bid by, 787

Obama political relationship with, 931–32, 968, 1034–35, 1077, 1078

and racial profiling, 734

on Rauschenberger candidacy, 929 and Ryan veto override vote, 766

on Sheila Simon ad, 905

Dillard, Marlene, 29, 213, 218, 238, 263, 312

and landfill task force, 308

and needs of disparate neighborhoods, 212, 266, 267, 268

Obama's closeness with, 302, 309

Dimon, Jamie, 788, 806

Dingens, Greg, 375–76, 546, 773, 785

Dionne, E. J., 592, 645, 926, 994

DiPerna, Paula, 647, 749

Di Rosa, Paolo, 335, 352, 359, 410, 411

Ditka, Mike, 930, 932

Dixie Kitchen (Hyde Park restaurant), 740, 741

Dixon, Alan "Al the Pal," 471, 516

Dixon, Bruce, 473, 475, 476, 827

Dixon, Willie, 200

Djilas, Milovan, The New Class, 155

Dobmeyer, Doug, 595, 638, 731

Dobry, Alan, 459–62, 521, 541, 574

and Palmer congressional primary, 545, 551, 553, 558, 559

and Rush congressional vulnerability, 666

Dobry, Lois, 541, 545, 553, 558, 559, 563, 574

Dodge, Jim, 811, 812

Dohrn, Bernardine

background of, 546, 616

dinner with Obamas, Ayers, and Khalidis, 568–70, 603, 674, 708, 835

on Obama's personality, 835

radical past of, 168–69, 547, 569

Dold, Bruce, 306, 646

Dole, Bob, 573, 1024

Dole Corporation, 47

Dolotta, Peter, 400

Domer, Gaylene, 224

domestic partnerships, 561, 574, 845–46, 865

domestic violence protection, 694, 713, 840

Donahue, Laura Kent, 655, 780
Donahue, Richard K., 509, 749, 751
Donnell, William, 512–13, 514
Donnell v. Comdisco Inc. (Ill.), 512–13, 514, 644
Dorf, Michael (Chicago attorney), 775, 785, 861
Dorf, Michael (Harvard law student), 400, 401
Do the Right Thing (film), 262
Dowd, Maureen, 987, 1029, 1069
Downey, Kevin, 378, 385, 386, 426, 439
Doyle, Jim, 1009
draft registration, 113, 114, 116, 118, 125, 157
Dreams From My Father (Obama), 522, 531–32, 557, 577, 591, 634, 854, 1004 advances for, 432, 943
    advertising of, 532–33
    bestseller listings of, 943, 954–55
    Bob Elia monologue portrayal, 193, 194, 529–30 book cover blurbs, 511, 528, 532–33, 574 book cover photos, 515
    cancellation of original contract for, 482–83, 959
    Chicago Reader extract of, 554 composite characters, 315, 500, 528, 529, 530–31, 537 composite girlfriend, 531, 1061, 1070
    Crown’s reprint rights to, 911
    Dystel’s remarketing of, 490 finishing of, 484–85, 486, 490, 500–501, 511–12 first draft of (see “Journeys in Black and White”) Fisher’s editing of, 483–84, 490, 495, 500, 515
    Fisher’s suggested title for, 515
    Grammy Award for audio version, 980, 986 as historical fiction, 537 interviews about, 605
    new contract for, 490–91
    new edition of, 911
    new interest in, 943
    as novelistic, 537, 554
    Obama characterization of, 543
    Obama readings from, 729
    Obama signing events, 640, 963, 964 original titles, 511–12, 515 paperback edition of, 574, 622, 943, 989
    personal reactions to, 535–37

- portrayal of Lolo Soetoro, 73, 528–29, 729
- portrayal of Schofield Barracks party, 535–36, 543
- portrayals of Obama’s parents, 529, 531, 540, 549
- prepublication publicity for, 510–12
  - and presidential campaign, 1014–15, 1029, 1031–32
- promotion of, 527, 533–35, 543, 640, 962
- radical feeling inferred in, 1027
- remaindered copies of, 622, 703
  - and Remnick’s Obama biography, 1055
- restructuring of, 490–91
- reviews of, 515, 533, 535
- royalties from, 963, 965, 989, 1044
- as self-distancing, 1049
  - and “Story of Race,” 643–44
  - and U.S. Senate campaign, 777, 902

Dred Scott v. Sandford (1857), 614

Drew, John, 123, 138–39

Drew, Liz, 836, 847, 903, 906

Dreyer, Benjamin, 515

Driscoll, Tim, 335

“driving while black.” See racial profiling

Drizin, Steven, 783–84

Drum, Kevin, 1031–32

Drummond, Tammerlin, 401–2

Dubi, Len, 33

Dubin, Jan Anne, 365–66, 496, 567

Du Bois, W.E.B., 487, 534, 575

Dudycz, Walter, 592, 598, 655

Duffett, Jim, 783, 916

Duffey, Margery, 80, 696

Dukakis, Michael, 338, 339, 348, 370, 913, 928

DuMont, Bruce, 629, 655, 712, 839

Dunham, Ann [Stanley Ann] (mother), 101, 122, 272, 276, 299, 634

- anthropology study, 80, 82, 85, 89, 229

- Bank Rakyat Indonesia (BRI) job, 379–80

- birth of daughter Maya, 72

- birth of son Barack, 52

- and Black Orpheus (film), 50, 144, 540

- cancer of, 510, 540, 801

- death of, 549, 564, 565, 567, 808, 1051

- and death of Obama Sr., 150 debts of, 182

and dissertation dedication, 470 dissertation of, 175, 272, 380, 420 divorce from Obama Sr., 58, 59, 118
divorce from Soetoro, 73, 105, 118–19
Dreams From My Father portrayal of, 529, 540, 549 early years of, 48–52
and father's death, 470
Indonesian life, 64, 65, 81, 85, 89–90, 105, 110, 139, 144, 162–63, 175, 182, 484, 485 and Kenya, 162, 420 long-range goals of (1985), 182 marriage to Obama Sr., 50–51, 52, 73, 79, 80–81 marriage to Soetoro, 57–58, 61, 62–63, 73 on Michelle Robinson, 381–82 mythologizing of Obama Sr. by, 73, 204, 1004 and New York job, 485 and New York visits, 144, 276
and Obama as “Barry,” 295
Obama's conflicted feelings about, 88–90, 129, 175, 178, 470, 937
Obama's descriptions of, 181, 272 and Obama's education, 65, 67, 100, 110 and Obama's employment, 169–70
Obama's posthumous tribute to, 549 and Obama's Punahou graduation, 105, 106
at Obamas' wedding, 478, 479, 480 returns to Hawaii, 75, 94, 105, 106, 175, 181 and Sheila Jager visit, 294–95, 379 student year in Seattle, 53
Suarjana relationship, 380, 420
Sutoro as professional surname, 105, 110 unpaid taxes, 110, 214, 470, 549
USAID job, 105, 110, 139
Women's World Banking job, 485, 510

Dunham, Madelyn Payne “Toot” (grandmother), 85, 100, 393, 571, 696 and American West tour, 82 and Ann's birth name “Stanley,” 48 and Ann's cancer, 510, 540 and Ann's death, 549
Ann's dissertation dedication to, 470
Ann's financial debt to, 182 and Ann's marriage to Obama Sr., 51

background and marriage of, 48–49

Bank of Hawaii retirement, 294

Bank of Hawaii vice presidency, 74, 87, 92, 110 and birth of granddaughter Maya, 72

death of, 1050, 1051

devotion to Obama, 87, 119, 1043, 1048

Dreams From My Father cover photo of, 515

early married years of, 48–50 fear of black panhandler, 119, 533, 543, 1043, 1045

homes in Honolulu, 57, 67, 87

and husband Stanley's death, 470

Marian Robinson bond with, 479

and Obama as "Barry," 295

Obama campaign contributions by, 618, 697

Obama condominium financing by, 491

Obama raised by, 103, 106, 119, 152, 470, 1043

Obama's adult characterization of, 181, 1043

Obama's annual Christmas visits to, 618, 641, 685, 686, 687, 689, 723, 789, 861, 963

and Obama's birth, 52, 53

and Obama's college friends, 139

and Obama's Columbia commencement, 161

and Obama's DNC keynote speech, 935, 937, 941

and Obama's final visit with, 1050 and Obama's law career, 233, 285

and Obama's marijuana use, 101

and Obama's presidential election, 1048, 1050

and Obama Sr. return visit, 80

Obama's yearbook tribute to, 104

at Obama wedding, 478, 479

pragmatism of, 493

small apartment of, 87, 100, 139

smoking habit of, 91

temperament of, 87, 1048

Dunham, Ralph (great-uncle), 48, 49, 87, 91, 528

Dunham, Ruth Armour (great-grandmother), 48

Dunham, Stanley Ann (mother). See Dunham, Ann

Dunham, Stanley Armour "Gramps" (grandfather), 98, 99, 173, 181, 247, 514, 654

background and marriage of, 48–49

and birth of Obama, 52, 53 closeness with young Obama, 57, 67–68, 72, 81, 86, 87, 152–53, 1043

death of, 470

and Dreams From My Father, 515, 528, 533
early married years, 50–52 friendship with Davis, 68, 72, 85, 119, 120, 543 furniture sales jobs, 49, 67
homes in Honolulu, 57, 67, 87
insurance agent job, 67, 85, 92 and Madelyn's fearful reaction to black man, 119, 533, 543, 1043
Obama raised by, 103, 106, 119, 470, 479
and Obama's admission to Punahou School, 67, 74
and Obama's Columbia commencement, 161
Obama's poem about, 133–34, 135
Obama's references to, 779
and Obama Sr. return visit, 80
Obama's tributes to, 104, 479 personality of, 85–86, 87, 88, 106
poems by, 86–87, 96
retirement of, 294
small apartment of, 87, 100, 139
smoking habit of, 91

Dunlop, John T., 60

Dunn, Anita, 749, 774, 818, 819, 842, 843, 905
as head of Obama Hopefund PAC, 992 and Hull campaign, 879, 884

Durbin, Dick, 577, 578, 757, 765, 778, 951
and anti-Iraq war rally, 779, 786
on Guantanamo Bay interrogations, 972 Obama campaign trip with, 914–15
and Obama DNC keynote speech, 937, 939
Obama on Illinois popularity of, 717 and Obama's presidential candidacy, 1020, 1032
and Obama's presidential potential, 991–94, 1005 and Obama's U.S. Senate position, 960 and Rice confirmation, 967

Durbin, Loretta, 939

Durkheim, Émile, 426

Dyson, Marv, 474

Dyson, Michael Eric, 743

Dystel, Jane, 404, 482, 485, 943 and Obama book proposal, 416–17, 430–32 and Obama book remarketing, 490 and Obama book reprint rights, 911

Obama's replacement of, 959

Eagan, John "Vince," 384, 394

Early Show, The (CBS), 935, 962

Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC), 650, 694, 712, 713, 728, 749, 796, 800, 840, 848

Eason, John, 572, 576, 637, 668, 690, 691, 698, 707

East Bank Club, 622, 921

Easterbrook, Frank H., 566, 575

Eastland, James O., 70

East Roseland Pullman Concerned Citizens Organization (ERPCCO), 201

East Side Republic Steel Plant, 207, 217, 234, 236

East View condominium, 491–92, 973

Eaton, Sarah, 384–85

Ebony, 66, 493, 953, 973

Echols, Barack, 78, 492–93, 535, 575, 709

Economic Development Administration (EDA), 3, 4, 12, 262

Economist, 624–25, 1052–53

Ecumenical Coalition of the Mahoning Valley (ECMV), 6, 7–8

Edelman, Marian Wright, 286, 528, 533, 574

Eden Green complex, 30, 32–33, 212, 266, 267

Edgar, Jim, 517, 539, 581, 599, 592, 594, 783

and campaign finances, 611, 635

and Chicago public schools, 523 designation of gubernatorial successor, 611 and education funding reforms, 607, 608, 616

and gubernatorial primary, 503

and Jack Ryan's divorce records, 895, 915, 925

on Jack Ryan's withdrawal from U.S. Senate race, 927

and Juvenile Justice Reform Act, 626

on Keyes U.S. Senate candidacy, 950 and legislature leaders, 586, 587 and National Voter Registration Act implementation, 506, 512, 565

Obama's appraisal of, 590

and Obama U.S. Senate candidacy, 907, 926, 949

as potential U.S. Senate candidate, 816–20

Safe Neighborhoods Act veto, 684

State of the State address, 588

Edley, Christopher, 328, 372

Obama's Harvard Law School classes with, 370, 371, 381, 383, 399, 432

on Obama's Law Review presidency, 394 opposition to Emanuel as Obama White House chief of staff, 1051

Edmonds, Nat, 724

education reform. See school reform

Education Summit, 281, 292, 316

Education Under Mao (Unger), 155

Edwards, Joella, 75

Edwards, John, 1019, 1040, 1041

Edwards, Steve, 875

Egan, Carlos Alan, 116, 136–37

Egan, Jack, 315

Ehrbar, Tom, 174

Eichmann, Adolf, 314, 315

Einstein, Albert, 377

Eldredge, Boy, 96

Eldredge, Hastings Judd Kauwela “Pal,” 74, 80, 81, 83, 86, 88, 96, 536

Electric Knowledge Interchange (EKI), 723–24, 729

    Obama’s consultant income from, 753, 755, 758, 826

    Obama’s resignation from, 758, 789

electronic surveillance, 574, 830, 853, 1065

Elia, Bob, Obama’s life-changing encounter with, 193–95, 202, 324–25, 458, 529, 530, 993

Eliot, T. S., 156

Elleithree, Mo, 818

Ellen, David, 442, 445, 456

Elling, Kurt, 973

Ellison, Ralph, 172, 1049

Ellman, Lisa, 935

Elrod, Richard, 774

Emanuel, Rahm, 749, 760, 826, 975

    as White House chief of staff, 1051–54, 1057, 1058

Emerging Viruses (Horowitz), 1056

Emmanuel Baptist Church, 255

Emmet, Dorothy, 426

Emmons, Katrina, 777, 784, 785, 792, 796–97

Employment Division v. Smith (1990), 381 employment of ex-offenders, 831, 860, 888, 1033

“End of the Rainbow, The” (Lind), 613

Enforcement Act (1871), 424

Envirodyne Industries, 2, 3, 4, 11, 262

    settlement for plant closure, 560

Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), 21, 32, 34, 200, 248, 290

Ephedra Prohibition Act (Ill.), 801, 810, 823, 825

Epstein, Richard, 497, 575, 732

Epstein, Susan, 497–98

Epton, Bernard, 18
Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, 565
Erickson, Paul E., 206
Erikson, Erik, 1009
Erkes, Jason, 749, 882
Esquire magazine, 1032
E2 Club, 801–2
Evans, Clay, 835
Evans, Harold, 825
Evans, Lane, 795, 810, 812, 827, 829, 830, 861, 898
    on Obama DNC keynote speech, 942
Evans, Michael, 481
Evans, Tim, 225–26, 268, 291, 292, 374, 459, 461–62, 546, 548
Ewell, Marc, 545, 553, 558, 560, 561, 562, 563–64
Ewell, Raymond, 545, 562, 563–64
Eyes on the Prize (TV documentary), 249–50, 307
Eyman, Barbara, 391
Ezrol, Lauren, 356–57, 358

Fab Five (state Senate), 592, 595, 596
Face the Nation (CBS), 933, 987, 1023, 1071
Factual Fictions (Davis), 153
Fairchild, Mark, 553
Fairway Inn, 193, 202, 458, 529
Fallows, James, 1061
Falsani, Cathleen, 909
False Necessity (Unger), 447
FamilyCare, 776, 825, 829, 839
Fannie Mae, 27
Fanon, Frantz, 123
Farier, Stanley, 30
Farley, Bruce, 611
Farrakhan, Louis, 255, 314, 407, 546, 617, 805, 1030, 1045–46
Farrell, Mike, 136
Farrow, William, 322
Far South Side, 1–41, 249, 271, 313–14 beginning of decline of, 31
    Beverly Bank loans to, 284 cancer rates, 32
    Career Education Network proposed for, 249–53
    DCP improvement plans, 219, 220, 221, 229, 239 environmental problems, 240 high school problems, 264, 287, 289

jobless steelworkers, 213, 216, 217, 219, 236 lack of employment services, 229, 239

parks improvement, 230

religious institutions, 29–30, 266

Faruqi, Muhammad Umar, 261, 262

Faux, Jeff, 7

Favreau, Jon, 936–37

Fawell, Scott, 754–55

Fecych, Ruth, 501, 515

Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), 69, 70–71, 215, 261, 822, 824

Federal Communications Commission (FCC), 357

Federal Courts and the Federal System, The (Hart and Wechsler), 424

Federal Deposit Insurance Company (FDIC), 284

Federal Election Commission (FEC), 777, 789, 800, 812, 829

advertising stipulation, 883 and candidate's self-funding, 795, 821

and Obama staff compliance team, 906 and presidential nominees' (2008) funding, 1025

and Rezko irregularities, 869–70, 886

strictness of contribution rules, 869–70

U.S. Senate candidate filings, 830–31, 845, 869

U.S. Senate primary candidate filings, 789

Federal Funding Accountability and Transparency Act (2006), 999, 1001

Federal Housing Administration (FHA), 26–27

Federalist Society, 339

Federal National Mortgage Association (FNMA), 27

Feigenbaum, Brent, 179

Feinberg, Gerald, 147, 148, 159

Feinberg, Jeremy, 159

Feingold, Russ, 795, 929, 951, 986, 989, 994, 1052

Feinstein, Dianne, 1033–34, 1072

Feldman, Diane, 673

Feldman, Leonard, 419

Feller, Dave, 780

Fellowship Missionary Baptist Church, 988

Felsenthal, Carol, 1058, 1071

Felsenthal, Edward, 353

Ferguson, Andrew, 1032

Fernandes, Julie, 488

Fernwood United Methodist Church, 254

Ferraro, Gayl, 935
Ferris, Henry, 490–91, 500, 501, 515
Field, Richard H., 332
Fiesta Educativa, 236
Finfer, Lew, 375
Finkelman, Paul, 352
Finney, Leon, 546
Fire Next Time, The (Baldwin), 695
First Amendment, 399, 444
First Lutheran Church of Harvey, 33, 206
Fischer, Sunny, 496, 508, 546, 568
Fisher, Lisa, 483, 571, 613, 614, 647–48, 716, 750, 989
Fisher, Rob, 331, 382, 399, 400, 409, 414, 415, 458, 499
    and Ames Moot Court, 354–55 belief in rational discourse, 452 brilliance of, 332, 371
    and Civil Society seminar, 425–26, 432
    and complaints against Macneil, 356 editing of Dreams From My Father by, 483–84, 490, 498, 500, 515 editing of The Audacity of Hope by, 989 exam preparation rule of, 416 and Glendon’s Property course, 353 and Harvard Law exam grades, 354 and Harvard Law magna cum laude degree, 457 on Macneil’s Contracts course, 335 marriage of, 571 (see also Fisher, Lisa) on Obama and Michelle Robinson, 361
    Obama campaign contributions from, 666, 814
    Obama close friendship with, 332, 337, 338, 340, 341, 344, 346, 347, 359, 374, 406, 428, 441, 453, 457, 606, 609, 613, 614, 847 and Obama coauthored paper for Minow, 432–34, 448–53, 457, 578
    and Obama Law Review presidency, 383
    and Obama’s career, 647–48 on Obama’s disinterest in Law School politics, 411 and Obama’s interest in Joyce presidency, 750, 751 on Obama’s Law Review problems, 404 on Obama’s possible 2008 presidential candidacy, 991 on Obama’s public image vs. true self, 1036
    on Obama’s smoking, 347
    Obamas’ visit to, 716
    at Obamas’ wedding, 478

and Rosenberg's course, 342, 343, 348, 476 third-year law classes, 424, 425, 435–36, 447
Tribe association with, 357, 371, 376–77, 400–401

Fisher, William "Terry," 352

Fitch, James A., 35, 323

and O'Brien Locks landfill deal, 276, 290, 294, 299

UNO's ambush against, 299–300, 302, 306, 308, 310, 311

Fitzgerald, Patrick (U.S. Attorney), 925–26, 927, 1003

Fitzgerald, Peter (U.S. Senator)

at AIPAC event, 811

on downside of U.S. Senate, 962 filibuster to avert state misuse of federal funds, 719–20

Jack Ryan candidacy for U.S. Senate seat of, 926, 927

Obama candidacy for U.S. Senate seat of, 760, 764, 788, 789, 790, 794

Obama's assessments of, 650, 957

on Obama's over-diligence, 596

and poll results, 762–63, 765, 771, 772, 802, 814, 815, 816, 926

possible 2004 reelection bid, 720, 738, 748, 772, 787, 788–89 retirement from U.S. Senate, 538, 814–16, 817, 844, 923, 926, 957, 977 successful U.S. Senate campaign against Moseley Braun, 636, 640, 641, 719, 772, 788, 927

as "too honest" for politics, 753, 862 voter negativity toward, 788–89

Flannery, Mike, 878, 905

flat income-tax, 620

Fleming, Thomas, 11

Food and Drug Administration (FDA), 652

Ford, Harold, 982

Ford, Lula, 691

Ford, Richard Thompson, 1051

Ford Foundation, 139, 144, 162, 175

Fornek, Scott, 951

Forrest, Terry, 888

Forte, Tania, 245

Forth, Gary, 493

Fortier, Fred, 521

FORUM—Fulfilling Our Responsibilities Unto Mankind, 678–79, 719–20, 753

Foster, Andy, 517, 587, 619, 629

Foster, Leo, 678

Fourez, Bunny, 781

Four Quartets (Eliot), 156

Fourteenth Amendment, 359

Fox News, 956, 983, 1030, 1042, 1045

Frank, Barney, 399

Franken, Al, 980

Frankl, Viktor, 231

Franklin, David, 580

Franklin, Homer D., 249, 265, 290

Frank Lumpkin v. Envirodyne Industries (1991), 559

Freeman, Aaron, 779

Freiwald, Susan, 370, 377, 378, 391, 396, 400, 402 and affirmative action, 397 and Law Review book notes, 396, 402 and Obama as Law Review president, 383, 423, 437 and Yu, 378, 383

French, Howard W., 1055

Fried, Charles, 399, 413–14, 420, 422, 426
Federal Courts course, 424, 435
and Law Review muffins, 425, 456

Friedman, Milton, 1049

Friends of Barack Obama, 546, 638, 747, 757 formation of, 526–27

Friends of the Parks (FOP), 221–22, 261, 269

Frist, Bill, 984, 986

Froman, Mike, 413–14, 420–21, 422

From the Yaroslavsky Station (Pond), 155

Frontline (PBS), 258–59

Fross, Roger, 751

Frost, Wilson, 586

Frug, Gerald, 353, 382, 399–400, 415–16, 448, 451, 455

Frug, Mary Joe, 455

Fuchs, Amanda, 910, 927, 945

Fuchs, Jackie, 336, 342, 345, 346–47, 356

Fugitive Days (Ayers), 743

Fundamentals of Criminal Law (Robinson), 333

Fund for Neighborhood Initiatives, 267–68

Furishima, Kelli, 90, 94, 536

Gabriel, Darryl, 96

Galbraith, John Kenneth, 407, 409

Galica, Larry, 234, 253

Galland, George, 230, 486, 505, 547–48, 565, 590, 634, 641
Obama campaign contribution, 668 on Obama’s talents, 961

Galluzzo, Greg, 9–15, 19, 22, 222, 293, 323, 405

and Alinsky-style organizing, 9, 281

and Back of the Yards, 284

and Dreams From My Father, 530, 537

formal mentoring of Obama, 238, 260–61

as former Catholic priest, 9, 219

and Gamaliel Foundation, 235–36, 264

as guest at Obama wedding, 478

hiring of Kellman, 13–14

and IAF training event, 230–31, 373

and Kruglik replacement of as DCP counsel-adviser, 350 marriage to Mary Gonzales, 9–10

Obama disagreement with, 373

and Obama leaving DCP, 311–12, 318

and Obama's African American identity, 313–14

on Obama's pragmatism, 469

and Obama weekly meetings, 247–48, 263, 270, 276, 281, 282 and organizing power of local churches, 231 training network, 287

UNO founding, 10–12

Galston, William, 1057, 1066

Gamaliel Foundation, 235–36, 241, 242, 247–48, 249, 282, 572

and Chicago school reform, 296, 350

and training sessions, 263–64, 287, 311–12

UNO split with, 405

gaming, 655–57, 668, 714, 821–22

Gandhi's Truth (Erikson), 1009 gang activity, 266, 290, 501, 503, 556, 684, 851

and Altgeld Gardens, 244, 294

and death-penalty bill, 735, 740, 748

Ganis, Steve, 447–48

Gannett House, 366, 442, 445

bagel and muffin amenities, 420, 424–25, 445

See also Harvard Law Review

Gantt, Harvey, 428–29

Garcia, Evelyn, 518

Garcia, Jesus "Chuy," 318, 518, 520, 593, 600, 623, 628

and anti-Iraq war rally, 779

on Daley's politics, 665

Garcia, Romeo, 117

Gardley, Randon, 792, 797, 836, 841, 847, 853–55, 866, 884

Gardner, Edward, 475, 476
Gardner, Frank, 280
Gardner, Joe, 472, 473, 474, 478, 480, 494, 504 challenge to Daley machine, 516 and Jones congressional primary bid, 539
Gardner, Terri, 476
Garg, Sunil, 989
Garhart, Molly, 580
Garin, Geoff, 755
Garrett, Betty, 24, 29, 209, 212, 238–39, 267, 274, 308, 350
Garrett, Major, 1042
Garrett, Susan, 868
Garrett Ripley's bar (Chicago), 896, 900
Garvey, Marcus, 487
Gates, Robert M., 1057, 1076–77
Gaughan, Norbert F., Bishop, 223 gay and lesbian rights, 113, 127, 137, 637, 748, 812 and domestic partnerships, 561, 574, 845–46 and military service, 845, 1057
    Obama positions on, 864–65, 875, 889, 955–56, 1057
    See also same-sex marriage
Gay Pride Parade, 828
Geaney, Dennis, 20, 21, 22, 410
Gecan, Michael, 184, 231, 232, 233
GE Commerce Financial Corporation, 966
Gellhorn, Walter, 370
Genachowski, Julius, 383, 385, 396, 428, 675, 716, 851
Gendler, Harry, 632
Geoghegan, Tom, 13, 38, 262, 302–3, 559, 560, 570
Geo-Karis, Adeline, 599, 606, 754, 824
George, Erika, 481
George Mason University, 1025
Gephardt, Richard, 910, 939, 1012
Gerberding, Julie, 977
Gergen, David, 1067–68
gerrymandering, 1013, 1025
Gervais, Christine, 8, 23, 29
Gettleman, Robert W., 724–25, 728, 729, 735
Ghulam Safdar Shah, 137
Giangreco, Pete, 669, 720, 778, 789, 799–800, 812 and Obama prime-time DNC speech, 913, 914, 928

and Obama U.S. Senate campaign, 906, 910, 913

and Obama U.S. Senate primary strategy, 820, 821, 832–33, 837, 838, 841, 855, 863–64, 883–84, 891, 896, 897

postprimary analysis of success, 903–4

Giannoulis, Alexi, 814, 988, 989, 990, 992, 996, 998–99, 1003 elected state treasurer, 1011

Gibbs, Robert, 996–97, 1003 journalist relations with, 1049

as Obama communications director, 910, 913, 927, 948, 957, 967, 973, 976, 1007

and Obama-McCain ethics reform exchange, 985–86

and Obama presidential bid, 1011, 1020

and Obama's DNC keynote speech, 928, 936, 937, 939

and Obama White House, 1054, 1058

reaction to Rolling Stone article, 1027

Shomon's discord with, 921–22

Gibson, Aletha Strong, 221, 238, 239, 249, 254, 266, 268, 269

Obama's respect for, 302

on Owens as DCP executive director, 350

and school reform movement, 294, 316

Gibson, Charles, 1044, 1048

Gibson, Eugene, 254

Gift Ban Act (Ill.), 761

Giglio, Frank, 205

Gilboy, Janet, 557

Giles, Calvin, 601

Gill, Tom, 54

Gilliam, Sharon Gist, 276

Gilligan, Carol, 425

Gills, Jeanne, 487, 488, 546, 576

Gilman, Richard C., 109, 114, 122, 128, 136

Ginsburg, Bob, 21, 35

Giorango, Michael "Jaws," 988–89, 990

Glazer, Nathan, 403

Glendon, Mary Ann, 352–53, 358, 425, 426, 1179*n*

Glick, Doug, 273, 285, 298, 321

Gluba, Bill, 1001

Goeldner, Virginia Dunham, 52

Goldberg, David, 378, 383, 386, 387, 388, 390, 395, 408

and Law Review Articles Office, 396, 412, 413, 439 and new Law Review president, 442

and Obama congressional primary bid, 700

Goldberg, Jeffrey, 1066
Goldberg v. Kelly (1970), 334
Golden, Michael, 817
Golden Gate neighborhood, 30, 212, 266
Goldman, Ronald, 544
Goldsmith, Stephen, 617
Goldyn, Lawrence, 113, 127, 133, 137
Golf Channel, 1074
Gomes, Peter J., 286–87
Gonzales, Alberto, 968
Gonzales, Mary, 9–15, 16, 22, 265, 284, 311, 323
    and “Future of Organizing” panel, 501 and Gamaliel training event, 264, 287
    and IAF training event, 230–31
    marriage to Greg Galluzzo, 9–10 and public education problems, 405 and UNO founding, 10–12
Good Morning America (ABC), 935, 1032, 1040
Goosby, Constance, 553–54, 557
Gordon (Chicago restaurant), 463–64
Gore, Al, 613, 717, 721, 724, 775, 1000, 1022
Gore, Gabriel, 487, 488
Gore, Tipper, 1022
Gorman, John, 885, 968
Goss, Kent, 138
Gottheimer, Josh, 936, 937
Goudie, Chuck, 982
Governors State University (GSU), 205
Grace Baptist Church, 255
Graf, Arnie, 231, 232, 233, 246, 285, 1064
Graf, Martha, 232
Graham, Cleonia, 225
Graham, Lindsey, 1033, 1034
Graham, Patricia A., 509, 510–11, 522, 551, 570, 667, 715–16
Grammy Awards, 980, 986
Granfield, Robert, 329, 330, 383, 424
Granholm, Jennifer, 928
Gration, Scott, 996–97
Grauman, Tom, 128, 133, 135, 137
Gray, William H., 286
Greater Roseland Association (GRO), 27–28

Green, Eric, 382
Green, Joe, 676
Green, Paul, 693
Greenberg, David, 537
Greene, Bob, 654
Greenfield, Jeff, 939, 1074–75
Greenpeace, 274, 275
Gregorian, Vartan, 509, 570–71
Gregory, Dick, 125–26, 711
Gregory, Wilton, Bishop, 223
Gridiron Club dinner, 962–63, 987
Griffin, Jean Latz, 243
Griffin, John Howard, 66
Griffin, Nadyne, 39, 221, 238, 256, 297
Grimshaw, Bill, 291, 293, 516
Grimshaw, Jacky, 291, 467, 488, 494
    and campaign finance reform, 588
    and Center for Neighborhood Technology, 495
    and “Future of Organizing” panel, 501 and Mayor Washington administration, 35, 250 on “O’Bama” candidacy, 471
    and Public Allies, 508
Griswold, Erwin N., 395, 398, 399, 402, 414–15, 432 criticism of Yu, 379
    critique of each Law Review article, 368 dislike of Ayres article, 436 on Law Record critique of Law Review, 444 and Law Review November issue, 429 on Obama Law Review presidency, 439 and Obama’s Law Review successor, 442
Griswold v. Connecticut (1965), 95
Gross, Adam, 497
Gross, Dave, 559, 596, 742, 867
Gross, Stuart, 95
Gruber, Andrew, 718, 726–27, 788, 801, 846, 911
Grunwald, Michael, 1066
Guantánamo Bay detention camp, 864, 972, 1001
    Obama pledge to close, 1051
Guess Who’s Coming to Dinner (film), 85 gun control, 580, 632, 638–39, 643, 677, 684–92, 701, 806, 923 and Chicago violence, 988, 1074

and Obama missed state Senate vote, 687–90, 691, 694, 707, 796, 861, 895

Obama's frustration over, 1074

Obama state Senate bills, 727, 730, 749, 820 passage of bill with felony provision, 711, 712, 714

Guneratne, Arjun, 245

Guthrie, Carlton, 509, 638, 747, 749–50

Gutierrez, Luis, 221

Guzman, Mike, 396, 437, 438

Guzzo, Frank, 38

Haas, Greetje de, 228

Hagberg, Gordon, 45

Haile, Rebecca, 384, 386, 387, 388, 396, 397–98

Haine, Bill, 811, 861, 868, 881

Haine, Marc, 88, 90

Hairston, Leslie, 650–51, 663, 669, 677, 707, 816, 959, 989

Hajra, Dodie, 430

Hale, Dan, 96, 98, 106–7, 536

Hales Franciscan High School, 663, 821, 927

Hall, Jack, 54, 69

Hallett, Anne, 249, 265, 280, 283, 295, 303, 322, 372

and Chicago Annenberg Challenge, 523, 524

and Palmer congressional campaign, 517

and urban school reform network, 509–11 and Wieboldt Foundation, 239, 242

Hallett, Stanley, 283, 284

Halperin, Mark, 1066–67

Halpern, Charles, 661

and think tank proposal, 613, 625, 632–33

Halvorson, Debbie, 577, 593–94, 598, 628, 640, 642, 767, 868

Hamburger University, 417

Hamid, Wahid, 139, 142, 145, 218

Long Island apartment, 164, 402

in Los Angeles, 150, 153

marriage of, 171, 214–15

in New York, 164, 174, 177, 190, 214

at Obama wedding, 478

at Occidental, 115, 120, 122–23, 128

Hamilton, Charles V., 160–61

Hamlish, Tammy, 228, 229, 245–46

Hance, Andrea, 841

Handy, Myra, 632

Hankins, Willard, Jr., 115
Hannig, Gary, 617–18, 619, 628–29, 630
Hannity, Sean, 956, 1030
Hannity & Colmes (Fox News), 956, 1030
Hansen, Joe, 88, 92, 93, 104
Hansen, Larry, 584, 611
Hansen, Sandra, 78, 492–93
Haraszti, Miklos, 155
Hardiman, Janis. See Robinson, Janis Hardiman
Hardy, Thomas, 525
Harkin, Tom, 755, 986, 995, 999, 1000
Harmon, Don, 904, 917
Harper, Frank “Hill,” 336, 375, 376, 391, 435
Harper, George J., 3–4
Harris, Fredrick, 1062
Harris, Irving, 618
Harris, John, 1063
Harris, Monica, 384, 444–45, 456
Harris, Ray, 589, 600, 605, 712, 832, 837, 907, 962 on Palmer’s political skills, 518, 545
Harris, Sarah-Etta, 128, 129, 130–31
Harstad, Paul, 800, 802 and focus group, 923
    hiring of, 755, 756, 758–59 and polls, 760–66, 771, 772, 774, 775, 835, 836, 838, 840, 846, 849, 862–63, 871–72, 885, 890–91, 912, 913, 948 recommendations for U.S. Senate primary, 786, 794, 798, 804 Hart, Brett, 488, 546, 548, 576
Hart, Gary, 172
Hart, Henry M., Jr., 424
Hart, Janice, 553
Hartman, Hermene, 535, 723, 769–70, 1058
Hartog-Levin, Fay, 781, 814
Hartzler, Joseph, 822
Harvard Board of Overseers, 458
Harvard Business School, 7, 404
Harvard Civil Rights—Civil Liberties Law Review, 347, 357–58, 374
Harvard Crimson, 353, 372, 393, 409, 411, 942
Harvard Law Record, 356, 372, 394, 427, 442–43, 455
Harvard Law Review
    affirmative action, 359–60, 383, 385, 389, 396–97, 403, 427, 428, 442, 445, 457

annual banquets, 407–9, 456 bagels and muffins controversy, 420, 424–25, 430, 445, 456 black editors, 353, 374, 383, 384, 386–88, 389, 397–98
Bluebook, 369, 395–99, 430, 437, 444 editing process, 368–70
editorial disagreement, 421–23, 437, 438–39, 444–45 election of president, 386–90
elitism of members, 424–25
Ellen as Obama presidency successor, 442 faculty tenure articles, 413
final issue June (1990–91), 412–16 gender breakdown of editors, 419–20 individual case comments, 378–79
Law Record critique of, 443–44
Obama as first African American president, 384, 390–95, 410, 436, 437–39, 454, 457, 528, 592, 694, 704, 708, 763–64, 772, 863, 875, 880, 921
Obama-colleagues relations, 378, 398, 401, 402, 422, 423–24, 425, 427 and political correctness, 437 roundtable on, 372–74 satiric Revue issues, 407–8, 456 selection of officers, 395–98
and student protests, 426–27
Supreme Court Office, 412, 413–14, 420–21, 426, 429
Tribe essay, 376–77, 379
women editors, 353, 427, 443, 444–45 writing competition, 357–60, 419–20
Yu as first Asian American president, 353, 360, 377–78

Harvard Law Review Association, 430

Harvard Law School, 285, 286, 295, 327–458

Administrative Law course, 370, 381
affirmative action, 354, 359–60, 383, 385, 387, 389, 396–99, 403
Ames Moot Court, 348, 354–55
black alumni reunion, 718 black faculty, 328, 337, 339, 354, 391, 393–94, 404, 411, 487
Black Men of Harvard Law School calendar, 436–37
black students, 328, 329–30, 336–37, 339–40, 351, 375, 404, 456
“Celebration of Black Alumni” event, 974, 975
Civil Procedure course, 332, 334–35, 339, 349, 358, 359
Civil Society seminar, 425–26, 432
Clark as new dean, 353–54, 371–72 clerkship candidates, 375, 457

commencement, 457–58
Constitutional Law course, 370–71, 381
Contracts course, 332, 333–35, 338–39, 355–56, 358, 359
Corporations course, 370, 381
Criminal Law course, 333, 334, 339–40, 342, 349, 354, 455 diversity of class of 1991, 327–28, 331 diversity of faculty, 328, 409–11, 413, 426–27, 434–35, 436, 446, 455–56
Dreams From My Father portrayal of, 536–37
Evidence course, 382–83
exams, 349, 354, 415–16
faculty tenure, 413
Federal Courts course, 424, 435
first-year courses, 330–31 gay students, 375, 410
graduating class law firm prospects, 330, 457
Jurisprudence course, 382–83, 400, 447
Law and Political Economy course, 383
Law School Council, 356–57
Legal Methods course, 330, 348, 354, 359
Legal Profession course, 435–36
Local Government Law course, 382, 399–400, 415–16
magna cum laude degree, 457
Michelle Robinson’s degree from, 329–30, 361, 363, 365, 366, 381, 481, 746
Obama on value of attending, 401, 746
Obama’s choice of, 304, 309, 310, 318, 321, 350–51, 360–61, 363, 446, 457, 458, 481, 727
Obama’s retrospective assessment of, 456
Obamas’ wedding guests from, 478
Obama U.S. Senate campaign fund-raising at, 854
Property Law course, 352–53, 358
Race, Racism, and American Law course, 441–42, 487
Reinventing Democracy course, 447–48, 457
Section III “Obamanometer” contest, 341, 342 sexism charges, 355–56
Socratic method, 333, 399
Taxation course, 382, 415
third-year classes, 424, 425–26
Three Speech newsletter, 338, 340, 342, 353
Torts course, 333, 334, 342–44, 348, 349, 354, 370
tuition, 330
women faculty, 411, 412
Yearbook, 366, 456

Harvard Law School Coalition for Civil Rights, 434–35
Harvard Legal Aid Bureau, 366, 445
Harvard-Radcliffe Alumni/ae Against Apartheid (HRAAA), 434–35 Harvard University
    affirmative action, 403–4
    Kennedy School of Government, 425–26
    Obama Sr. doctoral studies at, 55–60, 77, 152, 285, 321
    Saguaro Seminar, 592
Harwell, Carol and Obama’s confrontation with Hendon, 768 and Obama’s congressional defeat, 708, 709 and Obama’s foreign car, 572
    and Obama state Senate campaign, 527, 539, 540, 546–48, 551, 552, 557, 610
    as Obama wedding guest, 478, 479
    opposition to Obama congressional bid, 662 on Palmer’s petitions, 557–58, 560
    professionalism of, 564
    and Project VOTE!, 473, 475, 477, 480, 494, 527
Hasegawa, Ed, 46
Hastert, Dennis, 911, 925
Havel, Václav, 412
Hawaii
    Ann Dunham’s death in, 549
    Dunham family move to, 50–51
    Maya Soetoro wedding in, 861
    mixed ethnicities in, 67–68, 88, 103, 120, 245, 278
    Obama’s birth in, 50, 52, 53, 1059
    Obama’s Christmas visit tradition, 122, 180, 294, 374, 379–80, 381, 382–83, 435, 618, 641, 685–88, 689, 723, 789, 861, 963, 1016, 1019–23, 1051
    Obama’s identification with, 116, 120, 122, 181, 189, 932, 933, 935, 994
    Obama’s idyllic childhood in, 57, 63, 103–4, 534, 933
    Obama Sr. return visit to, 79–81, 152 term for grandmother, 87
    See also Punahou School; University of Hawaii
Hawaii Civil Rights Congress (HCRC), 70
Hawaii Five-O (TV program), 101
Hawaii Peace Rally Committee, 54
Hawes, Sonya, 814, 952
Hawker, Linda, 599
Hawkins, Larry, 31
Hawkinson, Carl, 592, 594, 599, 605–6, 617–18

as Judiciary Committee chairman, 586, 641, 653, 787–88

and Juvenile Justice Reform Act, 626

and sports-referee-assault bill, 653–54

and tax abatement “enterprise zones,” 722

Hay, Lisa, 335, 338, 339, 340, 356, 385, 387

and Bluebook renegotiation, 430

and Harvard Law Record, 397

as Law Review treasurer, 395, 396, 419, 420, 928

on Obama’s Law Review banquet speech, 409, 928

Hayden, Michael, 1071–72

Hayek, Friedrich, 1049

Hayes, Charles “Charlie,” 250, 318, 472, 504, 645, 660, 678, 702

Hayes, Clarence “Squeaky,” 37, 200

Haymarket Group, 289, 303

Haynes, Dion, 524

Haywood, Cheryl, 968

Haywood, George W., 968

Hazen, Tom, 836

Head Start, 634

Healey, Robert, 289

Health and Human Services Committee (state Senate), 787, 800, 807

health care

    Bernardin Amendment, 764, 765, 783

    discriminatory pricing, 810

    Hull campaign on, 834

    Illinois bill, 783–84, 801, 915–18

    Massachusetts plan, 992

    and Obama presidential action, 1052

    and Obama presidential campaign, 1025

    single-payer system, 776, 916–17, 932

    as U.S. Senate campaign issue, 923, 932

See also Affordable Care Act; FamilyCare; KidCare; universal health care

HealthCare.gov, 1066, 1075

Health Care Justice Act (Ill.), 783–84, 801, 915–18, 919

Health Care Surrogate Act (Ill.), 649

Healy, Win, 84, 106

Heard, Beverly, 505, 516, 525, 538

Hebing, Brad, 93

Hebing, Mark “Hebs”

    and Choom Gang, 91, 92, 93, 105

    Obama friendship, 74–75, 81, 88, 95, 103, 104, 106

Heckelman, Dave, 605–6, 609
Heflin, Mark, 88
Hefner, Christie, 806, 814
Hefty, Mabel, 74–75, 80
Hegewisch, 23, 33, 36, 209, 240, 300, 311
Hegewisch News, 36, 300, 307, 310
Heilemann, John, 1060, 1066–67
Heinen, Steven, 356, 358, 1020–21
Heintz, Stephen, 613, 661, 740–41
Heisenberg, Werner, 377
Helm, Beverly, 683, 692, 806, 808–9
Helm, Eddie Winfred “Doc,” 683
Helms, Jesse, 428–29
Hemingway, Ernest, 177
Hendon, Rickey, 306, 559, 562, 619, 628, 653, 655, 657, 868 antipathy toward Obama, 598–99, 600, 604, 606, 658, 660, 710, 767, 768, 808 challenge to Pate Philip power play, 729 and Democratic politics, 745
    and Obama and Trotter congressional bid, 670, 683 Obama’s physical confrontation with, 767–68, 769
    and redistricting, 735, 739
    on Ryan’s children’s services veto, 766 support for Obama U.S. Senate campaign, 889
Hendren, Carter, 617, 618, 624, 626, 629, 630
Hendro, Widiyanto, 72
Heninger, Sim, 111, 120, 121, 138, 175
Hennessey, Lisa Shachtman, 167, 170
Henry, David, 60
Henry, Mike, 818, 879, 884, 896
Herbert, Bob, 922–23, 1006, 1007
Herrmannsfeld, Paul, 178
Herrnstein, Richard J., 506–7
Hershenov, Eileen, 183, 184, 187
Hertzner, Lisa, 348, 354
Hess, Fred (G. Alfred), 249, 265–66, 283, 316, 716
    Chicago Panel, 243, 303–4 on Chicago schools dropout rate, 235, 242 and Chicago teachers strike, 205, 279, 280
    and Palmer congressional campaign, 517
Hester, Bethann, 490, 496
Hewitt, Mary Jane, 114

Higa, Clyde and Teri, 94, 95
Higgins, George, 426
Higgins, Susan, 360, 391, 419
Higgins, Tracy, 389–90
“Higgins, William” (ghost employee) 636, 819
Higher Education Operations Through Pell Grant Expansion (HOPE) Act, 969–70
Higher Education Reauthorization Act, 186
Hildebrand, Steve, 1000, 1008, 1011, 1013–14
Hill, David, 336, 337, 375, 391, 424, 436
Hill, Johnny, 290
Hilsman, Roger, 161
Himmelfarb, Susan, 849
Hines-Shah, Jay, 637
Hinz, Greg, 769, 802–3, 988–89, 1017
Hirsh, Michael, 1070
Hispanics
    Bush judicial nominee, 833
    Chicago neighborhoods, 9, 22, 210, 220–21, 405
    Illinois voting challenge, 512 majority district, 754
    redistricting, 734, 739
HistoryMakers, The (video interviews), 727–28
HIV testing. See AIDS
Hobbes, Thomas, 425
Hoberman, Jeff, 422, 438
Hobson, Melody, 668, 733, 773
Hodas, Glenn, 623, 629
Hoeffel, Joe, 950
Hoffmann, Mike, 557, 593, 594, 596–97, 628, 637, 640 on Obama reaction to congressional primary defeat, 709–10
Holland, Louis, 733, 747, 785, 814
Holland Capital, 747
Holmes, Oliver Wendell, Jr., 401
Holocaust, 314, 315, 632
Holt, Barbara, 60, 521, 535, 541, 558, 560, 650–61, 663
Holtz, Cindy Pratt, 57
Holy Ghost Parish, 23
Holy Name Cathedral, 263
Holy Name of Mary Parish, 29–30, 40, 199, 206
Holy Rosary Parish, 97, 222, 238, 252, 260, 267, 290 and DCP office, 24, 28, 29, 206, 208, 209, 269, 1058

most active parishioners, 29
Holzhauer, Jim, 475–76 home care workers, 823–24 home mortgage lending, 27, 284
Honolulu Advertiser, 52
Honolulu Record, 69, 70
Honolulu Star-Bulletin, 46, 47, 52, 56, 393
Honolulu Symphony concert, 81
Hooker, John, 518, 713, 868
Hooks, Benjamin, 440
Hoover, Larry, 601
Hope, Lugenia Burns, 508, 524
Hope Center, 508, 524, 548, 554, 572–73, 576, 718
Hopefund PAC, 972, 975, 978, 983, 992
Hopkins, Dwight, 468–69, 1030
Hopkins & Sutter, 380–81, 417
Horn, Elaine, 488
Horowitz, Jason, 1068
Horowitz, Leonard, 1046
Horwitz, Morton, 353 hospital report-card bill, 806, 825
Hotel & Restaurant Employees International, 550
Houlihan, Jim, 665
House Financial Institutions Committee (Ill.), 651
Houseman, John, 334
Housing and Urban Development Department (HUD), 7, 27, 28, 182
Houston, Charles Hamilton, 441, 974
Howard, Connie, 545
Howard, Jim, 612, 616–17, 626, 627, 630
Howard, Sean, 798
Howard University, 1026
Howells, Anne, 123–24, 131
Hoyt, Josh, 284, 502, 731–32
Huebner, Cindy, 578, 596, 602, 621, 667, 768, 868
Huffman, Craig, 508, 535, 567, 568, 576, 597, 666, 674
Hughes, Megan, 105
Hull, Blair campaign implosion, 904–5 campaign in U.S. Senate primary, 748–49, 757, 763, 769, 772, 774, 789, 797, 817–19, 823, 825–26, 834, 839, 856, 865, 866 campaign lead, 879

- campaign mailing, 891
- campaign manager, 896
- campaign mistakes, 903, 904
- campaign self-funding, 795, 797, 800, 814, 818, 821, 828, 830–31, 842–44, 878, 887, 888, 904
- cocaine use, 894
- debate performances, 848, 862, 880–88, 891
  - and divorce scandal, 761, 842, 878–79, 881–83, 884, 886, 887, 888, 891, 904
  - and Election Day tactics, 897
  - on Jack Ryan Senate candidacy, 926
  - as leading candidate, 879
  - Rush endorsement of, 831–32, 834, 855, 860, 886
  - third-place finish of, 900, 903
  - wealth of, 852, 904–5
  - Zorn press takedown of, 967

Hunter, Laura Russell, 713, 738, 747, 748, 773, 882, 884

Hunter, Mattie, 807

Hunter-Gault, Charlayne, 511, 528, 532–33

Hurley, Chuck, 799, 812

Hurricane Katrina, 974, 975, 996

Husain, Imad, 109, 111, 115, 120, 139, 153, 189–91, 496

Hussein, Saddam, 777, 779, 786, 809, 833

Hutchinson, Dennis J., 566, 725

Hutchinson, Perry, 35, 215, 261, 262, 263

Hwang, Lee, 407

Hyatt Regency Chicago, 898–99, 900, 912, 956, 957, 1026

Hyde Park

- amenities of, 492

- Ayers's book description of, 616–17

- Mahmood's apartment in, 191, 197, 198

- Obama's apartments in, 198, 211, 237, 245, 270, 360, 458, 521

- Obama's characterization of, 202, 211

- Obamas' condominium in, 491–92, 973

Hynes, Christina, 870, 885

Hynes, Dan, 640, 669, 753, 761, 799, 875, 878, 954

- at AIPAC event, 811

- campaign debates, 848, 893

- campaign endorsements, 864, 865–66, 890, 892

- campaign for U.S. Senate Democratic primary, 775, 778, 795–97, 800, 804, 807, 813, 817, 823, 827, 829–32, 834, 838–49, 853, 890–97, 989

- campaign funding, 797, 813, 814, 831, 852, 869, 885, 887, 888, 974

- campaign optimism, 866 campaign supporters, 855, 856, 863, 867, 868, 894, 901 campaign TV ads, 885

and Election Day, 896–97

as favored candidate, 854, 907

and Hull's candidacy, 903

and Hull's dropping out, 882

and Iraq war issue, 864–65, 872, 881, 904

Madigan support for, 855, 867, 894

and Mendell interview of Obama, 270

Obama landslide victory over, 900

as Obama presidential candidacy advocate, 999

on Obama's DNC speech, 939

and Obama's national campaign, 924

Obama's projected win over, 896

second-place finish, 900

Hynes, Matt, 80, 866

Hynes, Tom, 251, 263, 669, 679, 700, 868, 894

Iams, Jim, 91

Ibbitson, Helen, 167

Ickes, Barb, 964

Ignatius, David, 1036, 1076

Ihejirika, Maudlyne, 688, 697, 699

Ikenberry, Stanley, 511

Illinois bar exam, 454, 462, 463, 466, 467

Illinois Bipartisan Health Care Reform Commission, 915–16

Illinois Campaign Finance Project, 588, 611

Illinois Campaign for Political Reform, 631, 824

Illinois Coalition Against Handgun Violence, 651

Illinois Coalition for Community Services, 640

Illinois Commerce Commission, 679

Illinois Constitution of 1970, 683–84, 733

Illinois Education Association, 589, 631

Illinois Enterprise Zone Act, 648–49

Illinois Environmental Protection Agency (IEPA), 16, 32, 33, 240

Illinois Federation of Teachers (IFT), 289, 795–96, 807, 838

endorsement of Obama, 852–53, 863, 864

Illinois FIRST—Fund for Infrastructure, Roads, Schools, and Transit, 652, 653, 655, 665

Illinois General Assembly, 505, 1077

Illinois Health Facilities Planning Board (IHFPB), 931

Illinois Hospital Association, 806

Illinois Issues, 312–13, 606, 609, 692

Illinois Lawmakers (TV program), 655, 712
“Illinois Legislature, The” (Simon), 582–84
Illinois NOW, 846
Illinois Planned Parenthood, 601, 602–3, 806, 863, 891, 916
Illinois Public Action Council (IPA), 8
Illinois Senate Select Committee on Public Pensions Investment, 851, 857
Illinois Small Loan Association (ISLA), 722
Illinois State Board of Education (ISBE), 270, 724–25, 728, 729, 735
Illinois State Board of Investment (ISBI), 726, 736, 851
Illinois State Democratic Fund, 757
Illinois State Department of Labor, 6
Illinois State Fair, 838–39, 947, 996
Illinois State Library, 729
Illinois State Medical Society, 631
Illinois State Rifle Association, 632
Illinois State Senate
    1996 spring session, 462, 518
    1997 spring session, 588–97, 602–10
    1997 veto session, 616–18
    1998 spring session, 618–22, 624–32
    1998 veto session, 640–41
    1999 spring session, 642–57, 659
    1999 veto session, 681, 682–88
    1999 special session, 684, 685–87
    2000 spring session, 689, 692–95, 712–13
    2000 special session, 715
    2000 veto session, 722
    2001 spring session, 724–35, 737
    2001 veto session, 748–49
    2002 spring session, 752–56, 761–63, 766–67
    2002 veto session, 787–88
    2003 spring session, 796–802, 806–12, 821–28
    2003 veto session, 855–56
    2004 spring session, 866, 907–8, 915–20, 929, 932–33
    See also Obama, Barack Hussein, state Senate; Obama, Barack Hussein, state Senate primary Illinois Supreme Court, 379, 380, 683–84, 686, 748, 810, 916 Gift Ban Act ruling, 761
immigration, 840, 1033–34
Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS), 52, 53, 57, 59–62, 75
In a Different Voice (Gilligan), 426 Independent Voters of Illinois-Independent Precinct Organization. See IVI-IPO

Indonesia

Ann Dunham's life in, 81, 85, 89, 62, 182, 379–80, 510

Genevieve Cook's ties with, 168

Lolo's forced return to, 62

Obama's early life in, 63, 64–65, 72–74, 162, 331, 402, 465

Obama's return to finish manuscript, 484–85, 490

Obama's visits to, 139, 162–63, 185 political situation in, 61–62

women's employment in, 162–63

Industrial Areas Foundation (IAF), 13, 39, 184, 191, 198, 216, 1063–64

confrontational style of, 307–8

Obama's disagreement with, 373–74 training events, 220, 222, 227, 230–33, 238

worldview of, 252

Inouye, Daniel P., 81, 101

Inside Illinois Government (TV program), 640–41

Institute on the Church in Urban Industrial Society, 6

In Struggle (Carson), 184

Internal Revenue Service (IRS)

and Ann Dunham's unpaid taxes, 110, 214, 470, 549 and Michelle Obama's income, 1017

and Obamas' refund, 970

and Obamas' tax bills, 625, 651, 713, 733, 755, 814, 914, 990, 1044

International Harvester Company, 1, 2–3, 18, 29

lawsuits against, 38, 262

See also Navistar

interrogation-videotaping bill, 798–99, 801, 804, 811, 812

In This Our Life (film), 48

Investing Licensing & Trading (ILT), 166

Invisible Man (Ellison), 172, 1049

Iowa caucuses, 1024–25, 1038, 1039

significance of Obama victory, 1040, 1050–51

Iraq war, 817, 967, 982, 983, 990, 1037

Hull position on, 880–81, 891

Hynes support for, 864, 865, 872, 881, 904

Jack Ryan's support for, 926

and national debt, 991

Obama opposition to, 778, 779, 781, 785, 786–87, 802, 803, 809, 816, 827, 830, 833, 841, 847–49, 862, 864, 872, 904, 912, 934, 973, 994, 1014, 1022, 1023, 1025, 1034, 1035, 1037

and Obama presidency, 1054, 1063

Obama speeches on, 979, 1014, 1034

Pappas support for, 881 rally (2002) against, 778, 779, 1034
Senate authorization of, 781
Senate troop withdrawal vote, 994 “surge” strategy, 1022, 1023, 1025, 1037 and terrorist threat, 1014
troop withdrawal advocacy, 973, 976–77, 978, 979, 984, 987, 1014
See also under Bush, George W.

Irondalers Against the Chemical Threat (IACT), 17–23, 28, 32, 33, 35, 36
five demands, 20

Irving, Evangeline “Vangie,” 225, 226

Isbell, Michael, 171–72

Islam, 254, 259, 261, 298

See also Nation of Islam (NOI)

Israeli-Palestinian conflict, 632, 692, 847, 910, 912, 938

Obama administration on, 1063

Obama senatorial visit, 982

and two-state solution, 849

IVI-IPO, 512, 554, 560, 563, 574, 580, 830, 864

demise of, 616

endorsement of Obama over Rush, 689

Jack, Lisa, 118

Jackson, Adrienne Bitoy, 29, 39, 199, 205, 207, 227, 255, 267 and CEN street-corner demonstration, 251–52

Obama description of, 197–98

Jackson, Donna Schwan, 966

Jackson, J. H., 259

Jackson, Jesse, 339, 373, 411, 473, 492, 507, 570, 669, 706

and anti-Iraq war rally, 779

Citizen Education Fund, 665, 729, 796

and Cokely’s racist epithet, 314 and congressional primary endorsement, 526, 551 and criticism of Obama, 1037

Gardner support from, 516

and Hurricane Katrina evacuees, 974

1984 presidential candidacy, 172, 292, 462, 1023

1988 presidential candidacy, 841, 1023

and Obama’s DNC 2004 keynote speech, 938, 939

and Obama’s political career, 769, 770, 771, 790, 795, 825, 826, 898, 934, 938, 944, 1023

and poll negative votes, 762, 764 and rally against Bush jobs policy, 855

sixty-fifth birthday celebration for, 1009 son's strained relationship with, 526

See also Operation PUSH

Jackson, Jesse, Jr., 417, 490, 507–8, 636, 669, 681

at anti-gun violence event, 988

as backer of Rush challenge to Mayor Daley, 645 bid for Palmer's state Senate seat, 526, 541 and congressional district's changed boundaries, 735 and congressional primary, 525, 526, 538, 539, 544, 545, 550–52

congressional seat of, 557, 694

Obamas as guests at wedding of, 462, 525, 544

on Obama's potential presidency, 964

Obama's praise for, 694

and Obama U.S. Senate campaign support, 934, 946 and Obama U.S. Senate primary bid support, 770, 771, 789, 790, 792, 793, 802, 847, 861, 876–77, 878, 898

as Obama wedding guest, 479, 525, 544

and political poll results, 762, 765, 772 political promise of, 640, 663

Jackson, Sandi, 462, 526, 557

Jackson, Santita, 462, 479, 525, 544, 1009

Jacobs, Denny, 578, 587, 599, 621, 624, 628, 630, 658, 725

and Gift Ban Act challenge, 761 and Obama friendship, 662, 732, 1077

on Obama's celebrity, 947

on Obama's help from Jones, 808

and Obama U.S. Senate bid, 759, 792, 810, 861, 868

and Wednesday night poker games, 651

Jacobs, Lowell, 841

Jacobs, Michelle, 334, 335, 358, 424, 425

Jacobs, Sally, 46, 47, 58, 59, 78, 79

Jacobson, Sharon, 220

Jacobson, Walter, 225

Jager, Bernd, 228–29, 246–47, 338

put-down of Kim, 743 put-down of Obama, 271

Jager, David, 229

Jager, Geesje, 228

Jager, Hendrik, 228

Jager, Sheila Miyoshi, 236, 260, 282, 287, 302

anthropology studies, 228, 245, 246, 324 apartment with Obama, 237–38, 244–47, 270–71, 273, 298–99, 360

background of, 228–29
as biracial, 229, 245, 367, 1055
characterization of Obama, 278
deep commitment to Obama, 245, 278, 1053 discussion of marriage with Obama, 245, 246, 247, 271, 277, 295, 324
as Dreams From My Father composite girlfriend, 531, 1070 emotional tension with Obama, 277–78, 301–2, 315–17, 324, 469, 531
end of Obama relationship, 317–18, 321, 323, 453–54, 458
and Hawaii Christmas visit, 294–95, 379, 381
internationalism of, 367
introduction to Obama, 228 and Obama at Harvard, 337–38, 453 and Obama–Michelle Robinson relationship, 367, 382, 470 and Obama phone call about Maraniss book, 1061–62
Obama’s continuing emotional ties to, 324, 325, 382, 744
Obama’s description of, 229, 237–38 and Obama’s “destiny” insight, 271–72, 277, 278, 285, 305, 324, 344–45, 368, 469, 993 and Obama’s journal, 317
Obama’s letters to, 500, 531, 743, 744
and Obama’s political caution, 1037–38 on Obama’s presidency, 1064 and Obama’s presidential ambitions, 277, 278, 285 on Obama’s secularism, 298 professional accomplishments of, 323, 328, 337, 743–44 and race issue, 271, 277, 278, 315–16, 318, 531 relationship with Jiyul Kim, 453, 743–44
Remnick characterization of, 1055–56 retrospective view of Obama, 1061–62, 1065, 1070, 1074, 1078

Jager, Shinko Sakata, 229, 247, 277, 338

Jakarta International School, 139

Jakobsson, Naomi, 949

James, David, 124, 133, 135, 137

James, LeBron, 1041

Jania, Ken, 23, 39

Janis, Irving, 146

Jarrett, Valerie

background of, 464, 475

book party for Obama, 534–35

extreme regard for Obama of, 1037

Martha’s Vineyard home of, 947 and Mayor Daley's inner circle, 466, 482, 488, 516, 540–41, 867

New Republic profile of, 1071

and Obama campaign funding, 747, 748, 785, 898, 968

and Obama DNC keynote speech, 939

and Obama presidency, 1054, 1057, 1063, 1071

and Obama presidential campaign management, 1036–37, 1045, 1046

and Obama's presidential candidacy decision, 1011, 1012, 1018, 1019, 1021

and Obama's state Senate campaign, 576

and Obama's unfinished manuscript, 484

and Obama's U.S. Senate campaign, 757–58, 788, 792, 874, 877, 892, 912, 922, 1036–37

as Obama wedding guest, 478

and Public Allies, 490, 508

Jarrett, Vernon, 407, 459, 461–62, 464, 465, 896

and Project VOTE!, 475, 477

Jarrett, William, 465, 896

Jay Z, 813, 1063, 1067

jazz, 81, 89, 97, 100, 348, 405, 457

Jefferson-Jackson Dinner, 1038

Jeffery Manor, 14, 33

Jeffries, Leonard, Jr., 184

Jehl, Laura, 371, 374

Jenkins, Alan, 404

Jensvold, Chuck, 118, 124, 138, 153

Jessup, Philip C., Jr., 167, 185

Jessup, Tim, 162, 185, 276

Jett, Joan, 336, 346

Jewish Federation of Metropolitan Chicago, 982

Jinnah, Muhammad Ali, 117

jobs training, 563, 649, 703, 724

Job Training Partnership Act (1982), 29

Jodi Solomon Speakers Bureau, 643

Joens, Dave, 640

Johanns, Mike, 1057

Johnson, Al, 406, 503–4, 522, 546, 656, 657

and Obama campaign funding, 785, 814

Johnson, Cheryl, 1044

Johnson, Don, 522

Johnson, Hazel, 225, 234, 240, 258, 259, 261, 268, 1044

and landfill protest, 274–75, 290, 300, 305, 307, 308, 310

and PCR founding, 32, 33, 35, 248, 249

Johnson, John H., 973

Johnson, Lyndon B., 255–56, 994, 1060

Johnson, Magic, 1041

Johnson, Ricky, 115

Johnson, Tom, 221, 547–48, 557, 559, 561, 562, 563–64, 606

Johnson Foundation, 467

Johnson-Karanja, Ayana, 257

Johnson v. M’Intosh (1823), 614

Joint Committee on Administrative Rules (JCAR), 644–45, 660, 676, 689, 722, 724–25, 728, 729, 735 monthly meetings, 742
Obama as chair, 717
state predatory-loan vote, 733

Jokisch, Kevin, 287, 311–12, 495

Jonas, Brad, 622, 703

Jones, Alma, 32, 217, 249, 252, 265, 638, 676
Dreams From My Father portrayal of, 530

Jones, Elaine, 403

Jones, Emil, Jr., 571, 713, 754, 801
and ABLE leaders, 723
African American recognition of, 835
background of, 586–87
and Blagojevich, 798, 920
and congressional primary bid, 306, 525, 538, 539, 541, 544, 545, 550–52, 557
Cullerton skit impersonation of, 735 and death of wife, 748
endorsement of Palmer state Senate primary bid, 558, 559 and ethics investigation, 822–23, 824, 866
and gaming interests, 655, 656, 657, 668
and gun-control bill, 727
and health-care bill, 916
HistoryMakers video interview of, 727
leadership of, 521, 577
and Madigan animus, 919
and Obama’s congressional bid, 664, 691, 710
and Obama’s DCP association, 251–52, 262, 265, 269, 270, 275, 289, 294, 296
on Obama’s DNC keynote speech, 939, 960
and Obama’s law school plans, 310
and Obama’s presidential election, 1050
and Obama’s Senate primary, 756–59, 792, 797, 807, 808, 815, 816, 827, 842, 844, 867–69, 889, 894, 898, 902 and Obama’s state Senate role, 589, 595, 596, 617, 618, 624, 627, 628, 644–45, 652, 783–84, 857 and Obama’s state Senate successor, 959

- and Obama's U.S. Senate campaign, 944, 950, 951, 960
- and Obama's U.S. Senate searing-in, 965
- and Philip put-down, 620, 642, 643
- and pork-barrel funding, 753
- and public pension investment reform, 851
- and redistricted map, 734, 746
- and Safe Neighborhoods Act, 684
- and September 11 attacks, 742
- and state budget, 919
- and state Democratic strength, 752, 775–76
- and state Senate, 577, 581, 586–88, 638, 640, 649, 851
- and state Senate majority, 742, 752
- and state Senate presidency, 725, 762, 771, 787, 790, 831
- tribute to, 769

Jones, Jack, 435, 436

Jones, Jim, 1057

Jones, Kim (later Nelson), 102, 103

Jones, Leslie, 559

Jones, Linzey, 361, 362, 576, 785

Jones, Lovana "Lou," 548, 552, 553, 558, 677, 678

- hatred of Obama, 739, 908

Jones, Matt, 595, 653

Jones, Orlando, 517, 689

Jones, Patricia, 586, 748

Jones, Robert Trent, Sr., 605

Jones, Wendell, 687

Joravsky, Ben, 284, 373–74, 743

Jordan, Ellis, 266, 270

Jordan, Michael, 348, 886, 1002

Jordan, Vallmer, 256, 257

Jordan, Vernon E., 511, 825, 851, 885, 959

Josephthal, Lyon & Ross, 487, 498

"Journeys in Black and White" (Obama), 453, 454, 459, 463, 466, 467, 472

- cancellation of contract for, 482, 510, 959

- initial proposal for, 430–32

- radical restructuring of, 490–91

- See also Dreams From My Father

Joyce, Tom, 6–9, 12, 13, 22, 32, 219, 223

Joyce Foundation, 219, 222, 235, 488, 508, 584

- board members, 508–9, 571, 613, 747

- and campaign finance reform, 617, 631

and Chicago Annenberg Challenge, 523
Consortium on Chicago Schools Research, 613
DiPerna succeeds Leff, 647
Illinois Campaign Finance Project, 588, 611
Obama's income from, 651, 713, 814
Obama's possible presidency of, 749–52, 782
Obama's resignation from board, 788
Small Schools Network grant, 612

Judiciary Committee (state Senate), 594–95, 605–6, 731, 811 approval of interrogation videotaping, 804 Hawkinson as chairman, 641, 653, 787–88 hearing on antiabortion bills, 754 sports-referee-assault bill, 653–54

Judis, John B., 374, 1049

Julian, Percy, 290

Jumabhoy, Asad, 120–21, 122, 153, 162

“Jurisprudence and Gender” (West), 412

Justice Department, U.S., 511, 830

Juvenile Justice Reform Act (Ill.), 615–16, 618–19, 626, 639, 650, 694

Kadner, Phil, 311, 699

Kagan, Elena, 515, 914, 1056

Kahn, Beth, 120, 141, 366

Kahooohanohano, Whitey, 84

Kaine, Tim, 972, 977

Kaiser Family Foundation, 978

Kakugawa, Keith, 139, 153, 171, 232

Dreams From My Father portrayal of, 529, 537

Obama's close friendship with, 88–90, 94

and Obama's presidential campaign, 1030–31, 1033

Kakutani, Michiko, 1004, 1055

Kalven, Harry, Jr., 399

Kamana, John, 96

Kamberos, Peter, 826

Kaminski, Tom “Rock,” 199, 200, 209, 212, 214, 218, 266 and CCRC representation, 24, 26, 29

as DCP director, 238

Obama bonding with, 236, 246, 298

Kamiya, Gary, 537

Kane, Paul, 1071

Kang, Joyce, 82, 83

Kantor, Jodi, 1030, 1060

Kapiolani Maternity & Gynecological Hospital (Honolulu), 52, 1059

Kaplan, Jordan, 922, 968

Karanja, Sokoni, 257, 279, 289, 297, 303, 373

and Centers for New Horizons, 473, 501, 524

and “Future of Organizing” panel, 501, 502, 503

as guest at Obama wedding, 478

and Hope Center, 508, 524, 572, 576

MacArthur Foundation “genius grant” to, 508

and Obama campaign donation, 638

and Obama’s political ambitions, 302, 546

opposition to Obama congressional bid, 662

and Project VOTE!, 372

and Wright’s preaching, 468

Karim, Abdul, 1036

Karpiel, Doris, 722, 742

Kass, John, 291, 292, 505–6, 705, 1010, 1019 impressions of Obama, 934, 1024, 1048

Katz, David, 919

Katz, Marilyn, 35, 79, 519, 778, 983

Katzenstein, Peter, 123

Kaufman, Andrew, 435

Keeton, Page, 333

Keillor, Garrison, 980

Keleher, Patrick, Jr., 283, 289, 294, 303–4, 316, 322

on Chicago school reform, 350, 405, 592

Kelleher, Keith

and ACORN, 32, 650

and New Party, 493, 494, 522, 561

and Obama political career, 561, 739

and Project VOTE!, 474, 475, 477, 501

and SEIU Local 880, 824

Kelley, Alison, 183, 184, 187

Kelley, Clifford, 541, 552, 657, 697, 757, 780, 825, 902

and Chicago bribery scandal, 215

Obama cohosting radio show with, 788

Kellman, April, 189, 323

Kellman, Jerry, 217, 272, 288, 289, 350, 351 and ad for community organizer, 40–41, 189, 199

and Alinsky-style organizing, 231, 281, 282, 293

background of, 13–14

and Catholic parishes, 22–23, 24, 28, 203, 205–6

- and CCRC founding, 10–14, 22, 23, 28
- and CCRC jobs bank, 205–9, 211, 213
- and CCRC reactivation, 29–30, 33, 39, 40
- and conference on black churches, 285–86
- conversion to Catholicism of, 209
- and DCP diverse coverage, 266–67
- Dreams From My Father* portrayal of, 530
- and Gary (Ind.) organizing, 236–37, 238, 285, 351, 406, 418
- and grants, 219, 220, 222, 223, 230
- as guest at Obama wedding, 478
- and hiring Obama, 189, 190–91, 198, 199–202, 264, 281, 309
- joins UNO, 13–14, 15, 17
- and LIFT, 351, 406
- and LTV problems, 215, 216, 217
- and Obama-Jager relationship, 246, 323–24
- on Obama’s dual life, 246
- and Obama’s law school application, 286
- Obama’s strong relationship with, 351
- on picking winnable battles, 231
- and plant closings, 234, 449
- on problem with Owens, 350
- and Regional Employment Network, 207, 265

Kelly, Chris, 969, 971

Kelly, Ed, 229, 230

Kelly, James, 406

Kelly, John, 664–65, 757, 868–69

Kelly, Richard, 205

Kelm, George, 304, 305

Kemp, Jack, 182

Kende, Mark, 486

Kennedy, Andrew, 818–19

Kennedy, Angela, 364

Kennedy, Edward M. “Ted,” 371, 857, 967, 969, 1034

- Republican U.S. Senate replacement, 1054, 1074

Kennedy, Ethel, 979

Kennedy, John F., 743, 907, 934, 994

- Obama compared with, 964, 1007, 1009–10

Kennedy, Paul, 448

Kennedy, Randall, 328, 355, 411, 415, 441, 446

- and Harvard Law School syllabus, 487

- and Obama campaign contribution, 668

on Obama presidency, 1059–60, 1069

Kennedy, Robert F., 979, 1001, 1007

Kennedy, Scott, 906

Kennedy Communications, 818–19, 826, 842

Kennedy King College, 703, 717

Kensington, 24–25

Kent, Herb, 861

Kenwood Oakland Community Organization, 473

Kenya, 51–52, 61, 122, 347

    Abercrombie and Zane visit to, 79

    Ann Dunham visit to, 162 corruption in, 204, 997, 998

Dreams From My Father on, 485, 500, 531

    Michelle Obama's first visit to, 466–67

    Obama's ancestors in, 43–48, 132, 1034

    Obama Sr. death in, 150, 178

    Obama Sr. troubled life in, 151–52, 204

    and Obama's U.S. political celebrity, 955

    Obama visit (1988) to, 304, 312, 319–25, 345, 431, 453, 500, 527, 531, 537

    Obama visit (1991) to, 466–67

    Obama visit (2006) to, 995, 997–99, 1002

    political scene in, 76–78

    poverty in, 402–3

Kenya Tourist Development Corporation (KTDC), 78, 79

Kenyatta, Jomo, 76, 77–78

Kerry, John, 910, 912–13, 923, 954, 955, 989, 994, 1029 and Obama as DNC keynote speaker, 928, 930, 931, 933, 934, 936–37, 940, 942

    Obama's praise for, 938, 939

    presidential defeat (2004) of, 957

    and Rice confirmation, 967

Kerry, Teresa Heinz, 913

Keselenko, Susan, 116, 118, 120, 135, 137

Kett, Amy Folsom, 387–88, 389, 396, 397, 429

Keyes, Alan

    candidacy for U.S. Senate, 945–49, 950–52, 954, 955, 1015

    Obama defeat of, 956–57

Keyes, Jocelyn, 946

Khalidi, Mona, 569–70, 603, 632, 674, 691–92, 708, 834–35, 875

Khalidi, Rashid, 569, 570, 603, 632, 674, 691–92, 708, 875

    farewell party for, 834–35

Khan, Joe, 673, 711

Kiai, Maina, 347
Kiano, Julius Gikonyo, 78
Kibaki, Mwai, 151, 997
KidCare, 627, 728, 731–32, 735, 848, 850, 880 expansion to FamilyCare, 776 Kids Ohio, 752
Kidwell, Lauren, 836, 841
Kilgore, Thomas, 126
Kim, Hannah, 743, 744
Kim, Isaac, 743, 744
Kim, Jiyul, 453, 743, 744
Kimathi, Dedan, 319
Kimbrew, Kim (later Amiekoleh Usafi), 116
Kind and Just Parent (Ayers), 616, 617
Kindle, Al, 666, 667, 857, 874, 890, 898
Kindler, David, 263–64, 287, 311, 478, 495, 541, 576, 875
King, Alan, 366
King, Jonathan, 457
King, Kraig, 107
King, Martin Luther, Jr., 254, 258, 283, 468, 551, 859 assassination of, 25, 126, 159, 705
    biography of, 250
    and Chicago Freedom Movement, 15, 249–50, 260, 288 federal holiday honoring, 428, 643, 752, 866, 1023 home church of, 468
    Law Review article on, 369, 399
    “Letter from a Birmingham Jail,” 121, 487
    Obama references to, 345, 605, 643, 690, 691, 705, 793, 934
King, Marty, 526, 544–45, 770
King, Rodney, 474
King, Samuel P., 59
King, Tim, 663–64, 708, 747, 821
Kirk, Betty Mooney, 55, 56, 58
Kirkpatrick, David K., 1025
Kirsch, Vanessa, 467–68, 488, 489, 567, 661
Kissinger, Henry, 1057
Kjellander, Bob, 741, 927
Klayman, Rachel, 911, 943
Klein, Joe, 993, 1001–2, 1054
Klobuchar, Amy, 990
Klonowski, Bob, 33, 39, 40, 209, 300, 308, 311, 552, 1038

Klonsky, Michael, 612, 849
Klonsky, Susan, 849
Klos, Diana Mitsu, 183
Klotzle, Dana, 59
Knoller, Mark, 1054, 1064
Knox, Eddie, 266, 309
Knutson, Thomas, 33, 206
Kobrick, Jeffrey, 435–36
Kohl, Herb, 1009
Koinonia Foundation, 44, 57
Kokoraleis, Andrew, 648
Kolivas, John, 103
Komenaka, Naomi, 87
Kommareddi, Madhuri, 841, 880, 898, 906
Korecki, Natasha, 947
Kornblut, Anne, 1026
Kotlowitz, Alex, 511, 528
Kozinski, Alex, 375
Kozlowski, Mark, 331, 335, 336, 341, 342, 441
    and Ames Moot Court, 348, 354–55
    and complaints against Macneil, 356
    as guest at Obama wedding, 478
    on Obama’s nonparticipation in diversity protest, 409–10
    on Obama’s smoking, 347
    and Property exam, 358
    on Tribe’s Constitutional Law class, 370–71
Kozol, Jonathan, 435
Kraakman, Reinier, 370, 371, 381
Krause, Tom, 375, 378, 387, 397, 398
Krauthammer, Charles, 1009
Kretzmann, Jody, 241, 468, 488, 502
Krishnamoorthi, Raja, 724, 777, 778, 780, 788, 845, 846, 906 and Bradley endorsement of Obama, 848 on Jack Ryan’s campaign website, 911
    and Obama U.S. Senate campaign, 927 on Obama U.S. Senate primary turning-point, 905 Kristof, Nicholas, 1029
Kroft, Steve, 1052, 1058, 1059, 1060, 1063, 1070, 1075
Krol, Eric, 946, 1024
Krommer, Patricia, 136
Kruglik, Mike, 39, 40, 197, 201, 204, 205, 209, 222

and Alinsky principles, 231

as DCP's consultant, 350

Dreams From My Father portrayal of, 530

and Gamaliel training session, 263, 287

as guest at Obama wedding, 478

Obama's bonding with, 236, 246, 281, 282, 287–89, 297, 351

and Obama's political ambition, 302, 312, 345, 553

on picking winnable battles, 231

and SSAC, 351, 406, 473–74

Krugman, Paul, 1041

Kubik, Jack, 617, 630

Kucinich, Dennis, 779

Kulisheck, Mike, 765, 835, 863, 913, 923

Kundera, Milan, 301

Kupper, John, 669, 677, 707, 755, 761, 789–90, 796, 840 analysis of Obama U.S. Senate campaign success, 904–5 and effectiveness of Sheila Simon TV ad, 883–84

on Jack Ryan's strength as candidate, 907, 923 and Obama campaign revisions, 944–45

and Obama campaign tensions, 877

and Obama debate performance, 952

and Obama research, 825–27 and Obama's draft of DNC keynote speech, 930–31

and Obama TV ads, 872–73

and Obama U.S. Senate campaign strategic plan, 797–805, 820, 832, 844, 849, 863–64, 871 and opposition research, 826, 913 partners of, 820

and transition memo, 948

Kurashige, Paula Miyashiro, 102, 106, 107

Kurth, Kitty, 525–26, 550–51

Kusunoki, Eric, 84, 102, 536

Lackman, Phil, 603, 651, 809, 917, 919

LaHood, Ray, 787, 919, 925, 961, 1077

Lakatos, Imre, 332

Lake Calumet Study Committee (LCSC), 36, 274

Lake Interfaith Families Together (LIFT), 351, 406

Lamb, Nicole, 404

Lambrecht, Bill, 997

Lambro, Don, 1019

Lamkin, Leonard, 274

Lampe, Kevin, 937

Lampland, Bethany, 745 landfill. See Calumet Industrial District (CID) landfill Landing, James, 36, 274, 290, 294, 300
Landler, Mark, 1068–69, 1074
Landrieu, Mary, 995–96
Larkin, Ian, 508, 566, 568
LaRoche, Gwendolyn, 249, 265, 303, 463, 535
LaRouche, Lyndon, 553
Larrowe, Peter, 340
Larry King Live (CNN), 1006
LaSalle Street Project, 665
Lasson, Kenneth, 399
Latimore, Clinton, Jr., 921
Latino Institute, 8–9, 13
Laubach, Frank, 44–45, 47, 57
Lauer, Matt, 957, 1018
Lauzen, Chris, 640, 693, 712
Law of Democracy, The (2001 edition), 752
Lawrence, Mike, 611–12, 617, 619, 621, 623, 626–30, 635 reaction to Obama congressional bid, 667–68
Lazere, Cathy, 166, 170, 179, 180, 536
Leadership for Quality Education, 405, 632, 647
League of Conservation Voters (LCV), 893, 935
League of Women Voters, 511, 577, 602–3, 612, 631
Leahy, Patrick, 976, 986
Leary, Tracy, 572, 573, 576
Lebanon Lutheran Church, 33, 209, 300, 311
Lebed, Fred, 504, 505, 842, 881
LeBreton, David, 889, 898
Lee, Christine, 337, 370, 378, 408, 458 anger at Obama, 398, 401, 402, 422, 423 and antitrust law note, 432
    background of, 337
    and editing Cook manuscript, 378 and Fried’s “muffin thingees” query, 425 and Law Review divisiveness, 421, 422 and Law Review election of first black president, 387, 391, 393, 394
    as Law Review presidency contender, 383, 384, 387
    on Perrelli’s managing editor skills, 414 slighting as Law Review masthead editor, 396, 397–98, 402 and Supreme Court Office, 413, 414, 420–21

Lee, Dan, 29, 39, 212, 227, 249, 251, 270
as DCP president, 207, 238–39, 261, 262, 265, 266
Dreams From My Father portrayal of, 530
first impression of Obama, 201
and landfill protest, 274, 307, 308
Obama’s bond with, 236

Lee, Spike, 262

Leff, Deborah, 540, 613, 647, 666 and Joyce Foundation, 508–9, 510, 749, 782

Legal Eagle Awards, 512

Lelyveld, Joseph, 1055

Lemann, Nicholas, 1062

Lemon, Don, 1009, 1014

Lemon, Jan-Michele, 381, 478

Leno, Jay, 925

Leola (film), 366

Leong, Byron, 106

Lessig, Lawrence, 675

Lester, Ron, 679

Let History Judge (Medvedev), 155

“Letter from a Birmingham Jail” (King), 121, 487

Letterman, David, 962

Lev, Sean, 421, 424, 425, 438

Leveen, Lois, 422

Levi, John G., 349, 351, 352, 357, 465

Leviathan (Hobbes), 425

Levin, Carl, 1073

Levin, Daniel, 676, 733, 781, 814

Levine, Stuart, 1003

Levinsohn, Florence Hamlish, 245–46, 406–7

Lévi-Strauss, Claude, 228

Lew, Jack, 1061, 1066

Lewinsky, Monica, 618

Lewis, John, 968

Liazos, Ted, 732

Libby, McNeill & Libby, closure of, 206, 266

Lieberman, Joseph, 990, 1077

Lieteau, Michael “Mike,” 539, 544, 575, 651, 662, 809 easy relationship with Obama, 603–5 on Obama’s poker style, 603, 621, 622

Lieteau, Michelle, 603

Lieteau, Tristé, 575, 603, 807

Life magazine, 65–66

Lightford, Kimberly, 638, 658, 683, 768 on Obama's marital loyalty, 710–11 and Obama's U.S. Senate bid, 759, 868

Lilydale, 25

Lilydale First Baptist Church, 296

Lincoln, Abraham, 970, 1027, 1060, 1064

Lind, Michael, 613

Linde, Ronald K., 2, 560

Lindenfeld, Tom, 821, 890, 896–98, 910, 933, 938

Ling-Temco-Vought. See LTV (Ling-Temco-Vought) steel mill

Link, Terry, 577, 600, 605, 640, 642, 658, 686 on Obama's congressional bid, 662
and Obama's DNC keynote speech, 938, 939
and Obama's U.S. Senate primary bid, 759, 792, 868
and Ryan amendatory budget vetoes, 766
statewide Democratic influence of, 621 and Wednesday night poker, 603, 621, 651, 710, 732–33, 809, 906, 919, 960

Lippert, Mark, 973, 996, 997

Lipson, Charles, 1069

Little, Kevin, 336

Lizza, Ryan, 980, 1035–36

Lloyd, Richard, 185, 1138*n*

Lloyd, Yvonne, 30, 39, 40, 201, 238, 267, 310 and concern for Obama's welfare, 218, 302
as DCP core participant, 212, 217, 268
Dreams From My Father portrayal of, 530
as guest at Obama wedding, 478
and Obama book signing, 527
and Obama's DCP resignation, 308, 309

lobbying ethics reform, 795, 904, 984–86, 987

Local Initiative Support Corporation (LISC), 190–91, 499
“Futures Committee” findings, 591

Local School Councils, 350, 405, 732

Lockhart, William B., 370

Logic of Economic Diversity, The (Fisher), 332

Logic of Scientific Discovery, The (Popper), 332

Loizeau, Pierre-Marie, 532

Lomax, Charles, 463

Lomax, Willie, 284

London Towne Homes, 212, 263, 266, 267, 306
Longhi, Dario, 122
Longworth, Richard, 3, 4, 6, 11, 22, 318
    articles on Lumpkin, 14, 284, 303, 559–60
Loop Capital Markets, 622, 664, 736, 820
López, Ian Haney, 447
Lopez-Isa, Lourdes, 424, 428
Lord, Bissell & Brook, 509
Lott, John R., Jr., 581
Lott, Trent, 788, 1056
Loui, Ronald, 74, 75
Lounsberry, Debbie, 595, 596, 806, 912
Love, Alvin, 296, 698
Love, Reggie, 1029, 1057, 1060
Lowden Homes, 39, 256
Lowe, Cassandra, 304
Lowery, Joseph E., 440
Loyola University of Chicago, 638–39, 643
Loyd, Bernard, 404, 496, 546, 675
LTV (Ling-Temco-Vought) steel mill, 38, 207, 309 bankruptcy filing, 233, 234, 236, 238 steelworker layoffs, 206, 213, 216–17, 221 steelworkers contract, 211, 221
Lu, Chris, 427
Luce, Edward, 1054–55
Luechtefeld, Dave, 577, 651–52, 808
Lugar, Richard, 960, 971, 973, 974, 975
Luking, Bill, 675, 687, 746
Lula da Silva, Luiz Inácio, 801
Lum, Alan, 97, 98, 99, 536
Lumpkin, Bea, 1–2, 779
Lumpkin, Frank, 1–2, 4, 6, 9, 11–14, 34, 449
    at anti-Iraq war rally, 779 banquet honoring, 318
    final victory of, 559–60 and International Harvester pickets, 29, 262 and International Harvester settlement, 303 Longworth articles on, 14, 284, 303, 559–60 and pension issue, 37 and pension settlement, 559 and political campaign, 460

on steelworker unemployment, 207–8

as UNO honoree, 240

See also Save Our Jobs Committee (SOJC)

Luster, Lyndell, 854, 889, 906–7, 920

Lutheran churches, 20, 33, 206, 209, 300, 311

Lutheran General Hospital System, 519

Lykes Corporation, 7

Lyle, Freddrenna, 635, 663, 678, 885

Lynch, Hollis R., 161

Lynch, John, 1016

Lynch, Roberta, 10, 11, 12, 13, 318, 481, 824, 832, 842

Lynch, Ulmer D., 557, 558, 561, 562, 564

Lynch-Giddings, Scott, 635, 777

Lynd, Staughton, 7

Lyon, Harvey, 283

Maathai, Wangari, 999

Mabley, Jack, 856

MacArthur, Kelly Jo, 361, 381, 454, 463, 478, 479

MacArthur Foundation

and Career Education Network, 289, 296

and Chicago Annenberg Challenge, 523

and community organization grants, 239–40

“Community Organizing Award” ceremony, 576–77

and DCP grant proposal, 248, 261, 267–68

and DCP grants, 265, 269, 305, 322

and Karanja “genius grant,” 508

and Public Allies grant, 488

MacFarquhar, Larissa, 536–37, 1036

Mack, Kenneth, 339–40, 353, 357, 374, 375, 385

Black Men of Harvard Law School calendar, 436

as Bluebook editor, 397, 398, 430, 444

Chicago visit of, 498

on critics of Obama, 409

as guest at Obama wedding, 478

and Law Review election of black president, 390–91 on Law Review race-consciousness, 384

on Obama’s cool, 428

on Obama’s Law Review experience, 404, 457

on Rao’s Law Review essay, 415

MacKinnon, Catharine, 745

MacLean, Nancy, 847

Macneil, Ian, 332, 333–36, 338–39, 349

characterization of Obama, 357

Contracts exam, 358–59

rebuttal letter to WLA sexism charges, 355–56

Madigan, Lisa, 638, 642, 729, 808

Illinois attorney general candidacy, 722, 727, 740, 753

and Ryan amendatory budget vetoes, 766

Madigan, Michael J., 210, 265, 322, 581, 587, 588, 810

and ABLE leaders, 723

and Blagojevich, 919, 920

and campaign-finance-reform bill, 612, 617–18, 626, 630

Cullerton skit impersonation of, 735 and Democratic attorney general nominee selection, 722 and economic development proposal, 632, 736

Hynes support by, 855, 867, 868, 894 and Illinois primary (2006), 988

and ISBI meeting, 726

and minority-owned firms, 736

and pork-barrel funding, 753

and predatory-loan bill, 733 refusal to support Giannoulas, 996

and Safe Neighborhoods Act, 684

sarcastic dismissal of Obama, 996

and state budget, 919

and state house control, 783

and state pension investment reform, 747

Madison, Jesse, 229

Maffia, Charlotte, 466

Mahmood, Mir Mahboob “Beenu,” 145, 172, 176, 177

as guest at Obama wedding, 478

Hyde Park apartment of, 191, 197, 198

New York apartment of, 190, 214, 276–77

and Sidley & Austin, 276, 348–49

Mahnke, Rob, 497

Mahon, Leo

and CCRC launching, 10, 12, 13–14, 22–23, 24 departure from St. Victor, 238 and jobs rally, 207

as Lumpkin banquet sponsor, 318 and Wisconsin Steel’s closing, 8–9

Mahru, Dan, 418, 419, 625, 1003

Mailer, Norman, 1026, 1078
Malcolm X, 365, 477, 529, 743, 1027
Malloy, Darwin, 160
Malone, James W., 7
Maloney, Ed, 808, 868
Maloof, Elie “Lee,” 869, 870
Management Services of Illinois (MSI), 611–12
Manar, Andy, 734
Manas, Jean, 396, 397, 402
    as Law Review presidency contender, 387–88, 389
    and Law Review tensions, 413, 421, 423
Manchin, Joe, 1065
Mandela, Nelson, 396, 997
Mangieri, Paul, 988, 989
Manilow, David, 740
Manilow, Lewis, 618, 740, 885
Manilow, Susan, 740
Manners, Akinyi, 615
Manners, Ian, 571, 615
Manning, Dave, 603, 605, 651, 659, 693, 809, 919
Man’s Search for Meaning (Frankl), 231
Manu, Samuel Yaw “Kofi,” 112
Mapes, Tim, 741
Maraniss, David, 1061–62
Marchiori, Adelmo, 596, 661
Marcus, Ruth, 1070
marijuana
    Choom Gang and, 91–94, 97, 101, 104, 111
    Cook and, 168, 173, 185, 188
    decriminalization advocacy, 866
    Obama admitted use of, 853, 894
    Obama cautions about, 176, 190
    Occidental students and, 111, 121, 132
    Pakistani crowd and, 190
    Punahou students and, 91–93, 94, 101, 102, 529, 536
Marin, Carol, 227, 924, 1031
Marks, Shelley, 121
Markusen, Ann R., 213
Marley, Bob, 144
Marrs, Mike, 607, 793
Marsalis, Wynton, 405

Marshall, Thurgood, 357, 392, 409, 419, 426
Martakis, Nick, 185
Martha's Vineyard, 947
Martin, Eden, 647, 648, 667, 960
Martin, Jonathan, 1063
Martin, Karla, 375
Martin, Shaun, 397
Martin, Terry, 853
Martinez, Iris, 807
Martinez, Luz, 264
Martinez, Mel, 980, 1034
Martinez, Peter, 22, 198, 264, 287, 303
Martin Luther King Day, 428, 643, 752, 866, 1023
Martins, Mark, 389
Martinson, Connie, 534
Marx, Karl, 426
Marxism and Literature (Williams), 156
Marxist analysis, 123, 154
Maryland Manor, 34, 210
Mason, Jennifer, 635, 636, 639, 805, 819, 960
Massari, Paul, 422
Mastromonaco, Alyssa, 1011, 1027–28
Materials for a Basic Course in Civil Procedure (Field), 332
Mather, Chris, 818, 865–66, 878, 885, 904–5
Matthews, Chris, 939, 940
Matthews, Kgosie, 471
Mattoch, Ian, 95–96, 97, 100, 107
Mauch, Tom, 83
Maule, Albert, 417
Maurer, Darin, 98, 107
May, Ernest, 146
Mayer, Jane, 1063
Mayer Brown (law firm), 475, 681
Mayor's Office of Employment and Training (MOET), 229, 234, 235, 266, 275
Mazzetti, Mark, 1073
Mboya, Tom, 43, 44, 54, 55, 76
    assassination of, 79, 151
McAdams, Dan P., 530
McAdoo, Jack, 89
McAtee, Darin, 419, 439
McAuliffe, Terry, 791

McCabe, Sumie, 51, 53

McCain, John, 795, 967, 976, 981, 989

- clash with Obama in U.S. Senate, 984–86, 987
- criticism of Obama, 1073
- praise for Obama, 981
- presidential candidacy (2008), 1020, 1035, 1048, 1049, 1050, 1056

McCain-Feingold Act (2002), 795, 904

McCarthy, Robert, 509

McCaskill, Claire, 1003

McClelland, Ted, 694–95, 703–4, 874–75

McConnell, Michael W., 408, 415, 439, 444, 454

McConnell, Mitch, 1056, 1071

McCormack, Kelli, 105

McCraw, Karen, 287, 295

McCrum, Kelly, 993

McCulloch, Rod, 886, 894–95, 947

McCullough, Nancy, 427–28, 444–45

McDermott, Kevin, 953

McDonald, Lavergne, 36, 37

McDonough, Denis, 1066

McGann, Michael, 571

McKeever, Lester, 733

McKeever, Susan, 736, 814

McKenna, Andrew, Jr., 819

McKinney, Dave, 730

McKinney, Princeton, 473–74

McKinnon, Mark, 1015

McKnight, John, 249, 271, 284, 313, 468, 650

- influence on Obama, 281–83, 555, 576–77, 591, 661, 728, 729
- and Obama’s law school application letter, 293–94
- and Public Allies, 488
- on Sheila Jager’s beauty, 282
- social analysis, 15, 241–42, 257, 272, 280, 281–82, 321, 432, 441, 524, 555

McLachlin, Chris, 96, 97–98, 99

McLaurin v. Oklahoma State Regents (1950), 614

McLean, Joe, 784–85, 796, 800, 847, 851, 877

- and Obama’s DNC keynote speech, 937
- and Obama’s national fund-raising, 906, 910, 922

McNary, William, 539, 731, 732, 855

McNear, Alex, 133, 135–36, 152, 315, 491

- as Dreams From My Father composite girlfriend, 531

and Maraniss Obama biography, 1061

Obama's relationship with, 138, 142, 145, 147, 148–50, 153, 156–59, 162–64, 165, 173, 178

Obama's retrospective description of, 710

McNeil, Larry, 231

McPhee, Rod, 106

McQueary, Kristen, 760, 996

McWhorter, John, 1002

Medicaid, 692, 800, 1052, 1075

    funding of abortion, 561, 714

Medical Apartheid (Washington), 1046

Medicare, 1052, 1059, 1075

Medvedev, Roy, 155

Meeks, James, 809–10, 850

Meet the Press (NBC), 932, 933, 960, 983, 1007–8, 1039, 1070

Mell, Richard, 221, 740, 970

Mello, Breno, 50

Mellow Yellow (Hyde Park restaurant), 740, 837

Mendell, David, 856, 914, 942 critical biography of Obama, 1034

    Obama interview, 867

    on Obama Iowa performance, 1000

    on Obama's celebrity, 934, 936, 944, 946

    and Obama U.S. Senate campaign coverage, 870, 952, 954 prediction of Obama political future, 902 profile of Hull campaign, 878–79

    profile of Obama, 878, 954–55, 1034

Mendelow, Peggy, 167, 170, 174–75

Mendelson, Saul, 559, 560, 624

Mendez, Norbie, 88

Messer, Bill, 91

Methodist churches, 206, 698

Metro Broadcasting, Inc. v. FCC (1990), 426

Metropolitan Sanitary District (MSD), 30, 35, 200, 273–74, 275, 305–6, 323

Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund, 684

Meyer, Albert Cardinal, 8

Meyer, Chris, 183, 187

Miceli, Bill, 498

Mier, Rob, 213, 280, 291, 292

Mifflin, Margot, 117, 120, 121, 122, 124, 128, 134–35, 138

Mikva, Abner, 391–92, 426, 508, 512, 522, 617, 750

    and Obama campaign funding, 785, 814, 840

and Obama congressional primary, 664, 689–90, 699, 709 on Obama’s political talent, 914

and Obama’s presidential candidacy decision, 1019–20

and Obama’s U.S. Senate candidacy, 771

Milbank, Dana, 994, 1073

Milhouse, Foster, 17, 19, 210, 249, 290, 318

Millar, Bill, 174

Miller, Al, 244, 623–24

Miller, Andrew, 853

Miller, Arnie, 782

Miller, Cynthia, 571, 578, 606, 610, 635–36, 695, 788, 819

as Hope Center director, 718

departure from Obama campaign staff, 805, 812

and Obama congressional campaign, 666, 667, 675, 682, 688, 700, 704

and Obama district office successor, 960

and Obama Joyce Foundation presidency prospect, 750, 751 on Obama’s reaction to celebrity, 1036 and Obama’s reaction to defeat, 709

and Obama U.S. Senate primary, 775, 777, 792, 799–800

Miller, Matthew, 887–88

Miller, Rich

on “black pork,” 657

on Blagojevich, 740, 783, 791, 823, 919–20

on campaign finance reform bill, 619–20, 626, 628, 630, 646 comparison of Edgar and George Ryan, 642 on congressional primary, 705

on death penalty, 644, 648

defense of Philip, 654

on failed override of child support bill veto, 682

on Fitzgerald candidacy, 787

on Fitzgerald distaste for state patronage crowd, 720

on George Ryan and gun control issue, 643 on George Ryan as “genuinely nice,” 636 on George Ryan compared with Edgar, 642, 643 on George Ryan flip-flops, 714–15 on George Ryan-Pate Philip conflict, 647, 684, 685

on George Ryan speech, 652 on goodwill toward George Ryan, 651

on griping by state Senate Democratic aides, 822 on Hull U.S. Senate Democratic primary potential, 879

on Hynes AFL-CIO endorsement, 864 on Hynes U.S. Senate primary, 865, 872 on Illinois state candidates, 740, 742 on Jack Ryan aide's stalking of Obama, 919 on Jack Ryan divorce scandal, 925 on Jack Ryan Republican primary victory, 901 on JCAR predatory loan vote, 733 on Jones-Philip conflict, 657 on Jones's enthusiasm for Obama's U.S. Senate candidacy, 842 on Jones's frustration with Blagojevich, 798 on Keyes's behavior, 945, 949, 950

on legislature 1997 session, 602
on legislature 1998 session, 631
on legislature 1999 spring session, 653
on legislature 2002 spring session, 735
on legislature lobbyists, 653 on Obama backers, 893
on Obama fairgrounds speech, 839 on Obama irrational phenomenon, 1024 on Obama-Keyes confrontation, 947 on Obama-Keyes debate, 951–52 on Obama-Madigan enmity, 996 on Obama-Rush congressional contest, 680 on Obama-Ryan Senate contest, 915 on Obama's appeal to black voters, 876 on Obama's Harvard background, 704 on Obama's superstar status, 932 on Obama's TV ads, 884, 901 on Paul Simon's legacy, 857 on Poshard loss, 640
on raucous Democratic caucus, 616 on Rezko influence-peddling, 931 on Rush mayoral campaign, 645 on state corruption, 720
on state Senate staffers' bad morale, 822 on U.S. Senate Democratic aspirants, 775, 790, 834, 844, 858, 865, 871 on U.S. Senate election, 946, 947

Million Man March, 546, 556

Mills, Linda, 731, 732

Miner, Judson H. "Judd," 216, 230, 455, 472, 500, 566, 589–90, 836 and anti-Daley forces, 504, 506, 516 appreciation of Obama, 455

- and Barnett case, 486, 498, 635
- and Chandler case appeal, 729–30
- and Comdisco racial discrimination case, 512, 513
- hiring of Valerie Jarrett, 464–65
- and Obama book party, 535
- and Obama campaign funding, 666, 698, 785, 814
- on Obama presidential campaign, 1036
- Obama's relationship with, 514, 520
- and Obama's state Senate bid, 519, 547–48, 565
- and Obama state Senate campaign contribution, 546
- and reapportionment map, 754

Miner, Linda, 455

Miner, Barnhill & Galland, 590, 625, 638, 641, 723, 724, 777, 780–81, 797

- and Mitsubishi settlement, 634–35
- Obama's briefs for, 729–30, 742
- Obama's fees from, 753–54, 755, 814
- Obama's resignation from, 959
- Republican opposition investigation of, 912
- See also* Davis, Miner, Barnhill & Galland

Ming, Chin See, 245, 246

minimum wage, 643, 816, 824

Mink, Patsy, 54

minority majority districts, 579, 734

Minow, Jo (wife), 362

Minow, Martha (daughter), 357, 412, 425, 426, 592, 991

- Fisher and Obama coauthored paper for, 432–34, 448–53, 457
- and Obama campaign fund-raising, 668, 669, 747, 814, 854
- and Saguaro Seminar, 633, 637–38

Minow, Newton, 357, 362, 417, 463, 465, 750, 825

- appreciation of Obama by, 591, 606, 638, 791, 1008
- and Obama campaign funding, 666, 675, 785, 814, 840
- and Obama job prospects, 647
- and Obama's presidential candidacy decision, 1019–20
- and Obama's U.S. Senate candidacy, 771, 791
- opposition to Obama congressional bid, 662

Mission of Faith Baptist Church, 254

Missouri v. Jenkins (1995), 857

Mitchell, Andrea, 940

Mitchell, Mary, 886, 1030

Mitchell, Ned, 686, 710

Mitsubishi sexual harassment suit, 565, 634–35

Miyashiro, Paula (later Kurashige), 102, 106, 107
Moe, Kari, 266
Moelis, Cindy, 508, 666, 785, 1039
Molaro, Bobby, 593, 594, 600, 649, 658, 728
Molot, Jon, 847
Momentous Events, Vivid Memories (Pillemer), 529
Mondale, Walter, 172
Monteagudo, Lourdes, 303, 316
Montes, Mary Ellen “Lena” confrontational-style leadership of, 16–17, 20, 34, 35, 300, 307–8, 373 criticism of EPA by, 200, 290
    description of, 16
    Dreams From My Father absence of, 531
    and Gamaliel Foundation, 235–36, 263
    and landfill protests, 16–21, 28, 34–36, 234, 248, 249, 262, 299–300, 306–311, 322, 323
    and Obama relationship, 236, 302, 305, 317, 319, 323, 346, 368, 993
    and Obama relationship ending, 350 political aplomb of, 20–21
    thirtieth birthday party, 310 and UNO leadership, 210, 241
Montes, Ray, 16, 17
Montgomery, James, 215
Montoya, Renee, 317
Moody, Neil, 115
Mooney, Betty (later Kirk), 44–45, 47, 55, 56, 58
Moore, Donald, 243, 265, 283, 296, 303, 316, 317, 503, 732
    and Chicago school reform, 715–16, 867
Moore, Eric, 115, 116, 117, 118, 120, 131, 138, 222, 232 on Obama’s unusual name, 122
Moore, Michael, 951
Moore, Ralph, 749
Moorehead, William, 546, 668
Moran, James B., 303
Moran, Lindsay, 1073
Moran, Terry, 933, 1044, 1052
Moreno, Nora, 910, 913
Moriarty, Bob, 15–16, 17, 19, 21, 282
Morillo, John, 299
Morioka, Betty, 82
Morris, Eugene, 769–70
Morrison, Jerry, 674, 896

Morrison, Toni, 110, 695
mortgage foreclosures, 27–28, 36, 257
Moseley Braun, Carol, 317, 460, 611, 624, 801, 954 aim of reclaiming U.S. Senate seat (2004), 756, 757, 759–766, 771–73, 776, 789, 790, 791–92 endorsement of Daley, 516
    and funeral for Rush’s son, 678
    Obama’s praise for, 793
    and Obama U.S. Senate primary bid (2004), 759–60, 762, 773, 776, 788–89, 790 on Reynolds resignation from Congress, 538 and U.S. Senate primary win (1992), 471, 472, 477–78, 596, 891, 901 and U.S. Senate reelection challenger (1998), 636, 637, 640, 719, 788, 815
Mosen, David, 464
Moses, Robert “Bob,” 184, 328, 572
Mosgers, Peg, 623, 629
Moss, Otis, III, 1027
Mother Jones magazine, 613
“motor voter” law, 506, 512, 565, 661
Mount St. Mary’s College, 231
Mount Zion Baptist Church, 948
MoveOn.org, 970, 1037
Moyers, Bill, 540, 1045
Mrs. Dalloway (Woolf), 149
Muhammad, Elijah, 418, 813, 969
Muhammad, Jabir Herbert, 418–19, 813, 969
Muhammad, Jamillah, 474
Mullens, Laura, 641–42, 645, 653
Mullins, Phil, 16–17, 21, 231, 241, 264, 287, 289 on Obama’s detachment, 481 and St. Kevin landfill rally, 307
    and school reform, 235–36, 405
Munar, David, 941
Mundy, Liza, 365
Munoz, George, 240, 241, 244, 249
Munoz, Tony, 623, 728, 868
Murphy (Beckett), 178
Murphy, Frank, 26
Murphy, Thomas, 738
Murray, Charles, 506–7
Muslims. See Islam
Mutchler, Terry, 620
Muwakkil, Salim, 563, 705, 942

MX missile project, 118–19
My American Journey (Powell), 543
Myers, Verna Bigger, 160, 330

NAACP, 440, 535, 738, 848, 862, 949, 974
Nader, Ralph, 113–14, 183, 721
NAFTA, 507, 827
Nagourney, Adam, 1016–17
Nahmias, Dave, 396–97, 425
Nathan Cummings Foundation, 613
National Association of Black Legislators, 1035
National Association of Securities Dealers, 487
National Baptist Convention, 259
National Black Catholic Congress, 263
National Center for Careers in Public Life, 467–68
National Center for Economic Alternatives (NCEA), 7, 138–39 “National Conference on Religion and Labor,” 6 national debt, 991–92, 1063, 1064
National Insecurity (Rothkopf), 1071
National Journal, 987–88
National Labor Relations Board, 6
National Press Club, 970
National Public Radio. See NPR (National Public Radio)
National Rifle Association (NRA), 632, 684, 685, 686, 806, 808
National Safety Council (NSC), 799, 812
National Training and Information Center (NTIC), 733 National Voter Registration Act (1993), 506, 512, 565
Nation of Islam (NOI), 314, 407, 418, 546, 805, 813, 969, 1030
Nature of the Judicial System, The (Cardozo), 95 Navistar, 262, 302–3
    liability for unpaid pensions, 559, 560
Nayak, Raghuvver, 813, 817, 847, 949
Naylor, Greg, 890, 896–97, 898
Ndaba, David (Sam Gulabe), 142
Ndesandjo, Mark Okoth Obama (half-brother), 77, 78, 79, 150, 151, 152, 320, 485, 1062
Ndesandjo, Ruth Beatrice Baker Obama, 75–76, 77, 79, 150, 151, 152, 203, 320
    Dreams From My Father portrayal of, 532
    Obama’s meeting with, 320
Ndesandjo, Simeon, 152
Near North Health Service Corporation, 499
Nebraska Democratic Party, 991
Nebraska Wesleyan “University Forum,” 506

Neighborhood Housing Services (NHS), 254
Nelson, Ben, 991
Nelson, Bill, 972, 980
Nelson, Kim Jones, 102, 103
Nelson, Roger, 36–37
Nelson, Ronald, 37, 200
Nesbitt, Marty, 668, 695, 709, 721, 1021
    and Obama campaign funding, 747, 814, 877, 892, 897
    and Obama presidential bid, 1011, 1012, 1022
    on Obama’s celebrity, 935
    and Obama U.S. Senate bid, 758, 770, 771, 820, 935
Nesson, Charles R., 337, 382, 435
Netanyahu, Benjamin, 1062
Netsch, Dawn Clark, 503
Netsch, Walter, 229, 230
Network for American Renewal, 661
Nevels, Malik, 544, 572, 715
New Class, The (Djilas), 155
Newell, Felton, 575, 618
Newhall, Eric, 121
New Hampshire
    Hillary Clinton primary win, 1042
    Obama Democratic event, 1012, 1015, 1016–17, 1020 Newhouse, Richard H., Jr., 460, 474, 541, 571, 595 funeral of, 760
Newman, Sanford “Sandy,” 471–72, 475, 477, 480, 484
New Party, 493–94, 522, 561–62
New Republic, The, 406, 921, 980, 1049, 1062
    profile of Valerie Jarrett, 1071
Newsweek, 963, 999, 1040, 1047
Newtson, Robert, 736
New York, 1020–21, 1049
New Yorker, The, 915, 921, 1036, 1037, 1063
New York Post, 943
New York Public Interest Research Group (NYPIRG), 182–88, 189, 191
    Straphangers Campaign for Better Subway Service, 186
New York Review of Books, 1062
New York Times
    on Harvard Law Review, 436–37 on Illinois politics, 611, 687, 930, 932 on Obamacare problems, 1075–76

Obama front-page profile, 934 on Obama Harvard Law Review presidency, 393, 880
on Obama presidential campaign, 1029, 1030, 1031, 1049
on Obama repudiation of Wright, 1046 on Obama's speech on race, 1043 profile of Michelle Obama, 1032
"Punjab" story, 1034
review of Remnick's Obama biography, 1055 on shrinking Democratic party, 1075

New York Times Book Review, 532–33, 1055

New York Times Magazine, 1057

New York University Press, 332

New York University School of Law, 445–46

New York Urban Coalition, 182

Ng, Konrad, 789, 945, 964, 1040 marriage to Maya Soetoro, 861

Ng, Suhaila, 945

Ngubeni, Thamsanqa "Tim," 126–27, 128

Nicholson, Marvin, 1029, 1057, 1070

Nichols-Roy, Barbara, 116

Nickelsen, Linne, 91

Nicolay, John, 595, 907

Niebuhr, Reinhold, 1031

Nietzsche, Friedrich, 149

Nightclub Safety Act (Ill.), 802, 810, 823, 840

Nitsche, Bonnie, 209

Nitsche, Wally, 209

Nix, Crystal, 353

and Harvard Law Review, 383, 384, 386, 389, 391, 396, 401, 408, 442

and Tribe seminar, 400

Nixon, Richard, 1054, 1057

Nobel Peace Prize, 54, 999

Nobles, Andre, 376

Noelani Elementary School (Honolulu), 57, 63

Noonan, Peggy, 1051

Nordahl, Rolf, 85, 86, 1043

Norris, Cynthia, 263, 317, 319

Norris, John, 1012

Norris, Michele, 1005

Norris, Trent, 421–22, 439, 444

North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), 507, 827

North Carolina primary, 1046
Northern Trust, 968
Northwestern Law School
    Children and Family Justice Center, 546, 616
    Diversity Week, 646
    Obama full scholarship offer from, 304–5, 321, 361, 494
    Obama rejection of faculty appointment, 494–95
Northwestern University, 15, 511
    Center of Wrongful Convictions, 644
    Craig Robinson as basketball coach, 736
Northwest Indiana Organizing Project, 223
Nottage, Courtney, 632, 640, 662, 719, 742, 767–68
Novak, Tim, 1031
Novick, Patty, 250, 470
Nowinski, Juleigh, 838, 841
Noymer, Beth, 166–67, 170, 179, 180
NPR (National Public Radio), 506–7, 935, 946, 1005, 1010, 1035, 1040
    Brennan interview, 285, 430
    Obama interview, 657, 705
    Obama on race, 506–7
nuclear weapons, 54, 951, 973, 1054
Nugent, Ray, 22
Nurridin, Salim Al, 254, 261, 306, 405
    Dreams From My Father portrayal of, 530
Nussbaum, Martha, 638, 785
Nyaugenya, Akinyi, 151–52
Nye, Joseph, 146

Oahu Paper Company, 69–70
Obadele, Bamani, 953–54
Obama, Auma (half-sister), 55, 56, 76, 79, 178, 179, 213, 304, 467
    Chicago visits by, 203, 615, 1040
    Dreams From My Father portrayal of, 530–31, 532
    marriage in London of, 571 and meeting of Obama Sr.’s first two wives, 420 and Obama’s Kenya trips, 312, 319–20, 321, 466 and Obama’s presidential bid, 1022 and Obama Sr.’s death, 150, 151–52 on Obama Sr.’s failings, 203, 204, 205 at Obama’s U.S. Senate swearing-in ceremony, 964
    at Obama wedding, 478, 479
Obama, Barack Hussein

background and youth, 43–107

as Barry, 61, 65, 87

basketball enthusiasm, 81, 84, 85, 87, 88, 91, 92–93, 96–100, 106–7, 110–11

Baskin-Robbins summer job, 94–95, 100, 363 birth certificate, 52, 1059

birth of sister Maya, 72 (see also Soetoro-Ng, Maya Cassandra) carefree Hawaiian childhood, 57, 63, 103–4, 534, 933, 994

and Choom Gang, 91–92, 101, 104

classmates' memories of, 100–102 college applications, 102, 106–7 (see also Columbia University; Occidental College “Oxy”) conception and birth of, 50, 52, 53

Dreams From My Father portrayal of, 528–29

and drugs, 101, 121, 132, 500, 853, 894 education in Hawaii, 57, 63 (see also Punahou School) and father's absence, 56, 73, 80–81, 89–90, 129, 132, 203, 204, 260, 532, 534, 874, 1048, 1049–50, 1065, 1066

and father's return visit, 79–81, 152 feelings about father, 152, 417

grandfather's closeness with, 57, 72, 81, 86, 87, 470

grandparents' raising of, 87, 100–101, 103, 106, 119, 139, 152–53, 181, 1048

in Indonesia, 63, 64–65, 72–74, 162, 402, 465

nonparticipation of birth parents, 89–90, 129, 152, 178, 1048

poem by, 96, 133–35

smiling persona of, 81, 82, 84, 90, 93, 94, 95, 98, 102, 116, 118

and smoking, 91, 101

Soetoro as father-figure, 73–74, 729

“Winner” essay for basketball championship, 99 community organizing, 189–318, 321–23

and African American identity, 271–72, 534

and Alinsky style, 12, 13, 201, 248, 373–74

assessment of effectiveness of, 286 bonds with colleagues, 201–2, 208–9, 217–20, 237

and CCRC ad, 40–41, 189 concern for poor people, 402–3 departure announcement, 308–9

earlier experience in Harlem, 182–88 effect on identity of, 271–72, 534 emotional involvement with, 211–12

“Future of Organizing” panel, 501–3

Galluzzo formal mentoring of, 238, 260–61

and IAF training program, 216, 220, 227, 230–31, 232–33, 238

Illinois Issues article by, 312–13 and impressions of Chicago, 202–3, 206–7 Kellman interview of, 189, 190–91 and Kellman’s and Kruglik’s ongoing work, 351 lack of social life, 217–18, 219
McKnight influence on, 281–83, 555, 576–77, 591, 661, 728, 729 and Montes relationship, 236 and one-on-one interviews, 199–200 retrospective view of, 1044 roundtable participation, 372–74
salary, 191, 237, 239, 296
and self-assessment, 312–14, 534 skills learned from, 287, 457 stock expressions of, 269 workday of, 211–12

identity

and abandonment issues, 88–89, 90, 106, 112, 119, 129, 178, 185, 532, 1049, 1067 as African American, 270–72, 278–79, 292, 302, 316, 345, 470, 533, 534, 537, 556 from “Barry” to “Barack,” 122, 129, 144, 152, 245, 295, 765 and biographers, 1055–56, 1061–62
as biracial, 67–68, 212, 232, 246, 278, 345, 533, 859, 860, 991
as both African and American, 553, 910, 921 calmness of, 104, 514, 580, 900
charisma of, 236, 273, 385, 394, 414, 969, 994
and Chicago as home, 195, 313, 345, 367, 395, 458, 459, 469, 529
as Christian, 850, 946, 995 community work effects on, 271–72, 534
Davis influence on, 96, 119
DNC speech as “transformational moment” for, 940 and Dreams From My Father portrayals, 515, 522, 527–37, 543 and Elia’s life-changing monologue, 193–95, 202, 324–25, 458, 529–30, 993 Ellison’s Invisible Man impact on, 172, 1049 embracing own destiny, 138, 270–71, 277, 285, 305, 324, 344–45, 367, 368, 382, 403, 458, 469, 751, 782, 993, 1062
and father’s failings, 204–5, 320–21, 709 first awareness of racial differences, 65–67, 529 first close black male friend, 222 first exposure to mainland African Americans, 120 foreign-sounding name of, 471, 553, 923, 938
as hapa-haole (half-white), 67–68, 278 higher goals and aspirations of, 751

Indonesia as formative influence on, 73–74 as international, 159, 367 and lack of African American experience, 232 and lack of roots, 130, 313
as “multi-colored,” 900–901
as multiethnic Hawaiian, 104, 116, 120, 122, 245, 995
as “not black enough,” 409, 552–53, 603, 658, 667, 669, 677, 690, 704, 705, 708, 750, 792, 856, 908, 1035
as “passing in reverse,” 953 pragmatism of, 441, 469, 731, 732, 859, 867, 1036, 1049, 1060, 1063, 1065
as race-transcending, 389 religious belief of, 255–56, 260, 272, 273, 298, 427, 468, 848, 849–50, 873, 909–10, 946, 952, 994, 995, 1006, 1015, 1039, 1042, 1046 reserve of, 112, 174, 448, 808 self-assessment of, 994–95 self-confidence of, 571, 602, 652, 1059–60 self-creation of, 88, 204, 348, 1049, 1078 self-discipline of, 227–28 self-transformation (early 1987) of, 132, 152, 270–71, 277, 313, 751 sense of humor of, 273, 975, 987, 991, 1018 seriousness of purpose of, 143, 144, 159 sexuality of, 246, 345
skin color of, 52, 65
as transcending racial stereotypes, 953, 1002 “whiteness” of, 170, 245, 247, 273, 603, 793, 953–54

law, 324–25, 327–458 and Davis, Miner, Barnhill & Galland, 455, 465–66, 475, 485–86 disinterest in clerkship, 375, 392, 417–18 dislike of litigation, 514
as Electric Knowledge Interchange counsel, 723–24, 729 first significant courtroom appearance, 498
Illinois bar exam, 454, 462, 463, 466, 467 law school decision, 284–86, 304–5 and Miner, Barnhill, 590, 729 and political ambition, 277, 288, 297, 302, 318, 401, 518
salaries, 489
summer jobs, 348–49, 351–52, 357, 360–61, 380, 417 teaching approach, 514–15, 673, 718–19, 745 “Transformative Politics” coauthored paper, 432–34 and Tribe professional relationship, 357, 371, 376–77
See also Harvard Law Review; Harvard Law School; University of Chicago Law School

personal life

- basketball pickup games, 82, 84, 85, 97, 110–11, 143, 336, 343–44, 367, 375, 378, 428, 492, 571, 600, 622, 675, 694–95
- biographers of, 1055–56, 1060–62
- birth of daughters, 634, 735–36
- book contracts (see Audacity of Hope, The; Dreams From My Father)
- Business International job, 165–67, 169–70, 173–75, 178, 179–80
- charitable giving, 651, 990, 1044
- Christmas at home in Chicago (2007), 1040
- Christmas celebrated in Hawaii (see under Hawaii)
- close friendship with Fisher (see Fisher, Rob)
- condominium purchase, 466, 482, 488, 491–92, 498
- condominium sale, 973
- dinner with Ayers, Dohrn, and Khalidis, 568–70, 603, 674, 708, 834–35
- eating habits, 781, 854–55
- engagement and marriage, 463–64, 468 (see also Obama, Michelle Robinson)
- European trips, 319, 450, 564–65
- family life in White House, 1052, 1054
- family-political life balance, 977, 996, 1001, 1004
- family vacations, 903, 947
- fatherhood, 742, 746–47, 773, 782, 808, 810, 819, 874, 907, 920, 942, 950, 956, 960, 978, 979, 995, 1019–20, 1038, 1048, 1065
  - and father's death, 150–51, 152, 153
- favorite books, 1009
- favorite hideout, 921
- favorite lunch, 781
- financial concerns, 491, 565, 625, 643, 651, 674, 709, 713, 716, 717, 723–24, 733, 747, 750, 753–54, 755, 758, 777, 789, 814, 914, 929, 970, 1048–49
- financial investments, 968–69, 979
- financial wealth, 963, 965, 968–69, 989–90, 1012, 1044
- girlfriends (see Cook, Genevieve; Jager, Sheila Miyoshi; McNear, Alex; Montes, Mary Ellen “Lena”)
- golf enthusiasm, 514, 605, 615, 622–23, 749, 808, 919, 947, 1021, 1054, 1064, 1068, 1070, 1074
- grandmother Dunham's meaning to, 1050, 1051
- health consciousness, 781
- HistoryMakers* interview of, 727–28
- jazz enthusiasm, 81, 89, 97, 100, 348, 405, 457
- journal keeping, 143, 317, 453, 994
- Kenyan family (see Kenya; Obama listings)
- mansion purchase, 965–66, 968–69, 973, 977, 979, 982–83, 1010, 1019, 1041, 1043
- marital loyalty, 710–11, 1037

and mother's death, 549, 564, 565, 567, 1050
in New York City, 140–93
Pakistani friends, 117–18, 121, 123, 139–40, 144, 145, 153, 175–77, 188–90, 197–98, 208, 218, 245
Scottsdale vacation, 901, 903, 906
Scrabble competitiveness, 950–51, 963, 1040
September 11 effect on, 742, 743 smoking habit, 91, 112, 167, 171, 187, 209, 270, 347, 361, 414, 422, 438, 477, 496, 497, 514, 601, 603, 632, 634, 652, 740, 781, 813, 854–55, 921, 980, 981, 1019, 1021, 1026 smoking quitting, 1060 stereo and record collection, 144 student loan debt, 321, 330, 372, 401, 411, 458, 491, 491–92, 674, 723 wedding, 478–80, 532 in White House, 1052, 1074

politics, 899–906 ambitions of, 270–71, 276–77, 288, 291, 316, 348, 375, 401, 418, 453 assets as candidate, 859, 993
and bipartisanship, 973, 974, 975, 976, 991, 1001, 1002, 1070
“Call to Renewal Speech,” 991 celebrity of, 934–36, 941–44, 946, 949, 950, 963–67, 979–80, 997, 1002–3, 1007, 1010, 1016, 1017, 1021
as change agent, 1019
and New Party, 493–94, 522, 561–62
and politics of hope, 793, 820, 900, 930, 939, 1038
and Project VOTE!, 471, 471–78
smoothness of, 801, 814, 875
Yes We Can! slogan, 894, 900, 918

presidency, 1051–78
black vs. white voter approval, 1069 congressional relations, 1056, 1059, 1065, 1068, 1071, 1073
critics of, 1055–60, 1063–64, 1065–73
first term statistics, 1064
and golf, 1054, 1064, 1068, 1070, 1073, 1074 health care reform (see Affordable Care Act) and “hidden identity” rumors, 1056, 1059
inauguration day, 1051
inherited economic crisis, 1051, 1054
and intelligence agencies, 1072–73 killing of bin Laden, 1059, 1072 long-form birth certificate issue, 1059
one-year anniversary, 1054–55

- pragmatic stances, 1060, 1062, 1063
- and public approval, 1052–53
- second-term, 1064–78
- and Secret Service, 1032, 1040
- self-critique, 1060
- Supreme Court appointments, 1052, 1056
- Syrian red line reversal, 1066
- White House staff, 1051, 1053, 1054–55, 1057, 1058, 1061, 1066
- presidential candidacy, 980–1051
  - Biden as running mate, 1049
  - campaign slogan, 1038, 1039
  - campaign staff, 1020–26
  - campaign themes, 1034, 1035
  - Chicago campaign headquarters, 1026, 1029
  - “cling to guns and religion” remark, 1043–44
  - decision factor, 1000–1001, 1022, 1110–20*n*
  - declaration of, 1023–24
  - defeat of McCain, 1050
  - Democratic nomination victory speech, 1047–48
  - election returns responses, 1050–51
  - and family life, 1011–20, 1032–33
  - fund-raising, 1025–26, 1029, 1036–37
  - inauguration day, 1051
  - Michelle Obama campaign events, 1029, 1034–35, 1039, 1040
  - negative coverage of, 1032, 1033, 1034–38
  - “On My Faith and My Church” statement, 1042
  - primaries and caucuses, 1040–42, 1046, 1050
  - public funding rejection, 1048
  - race factor, 1035, 1042–45, 1050–51
  - responses to Hillary Clinton, 1040–41
  - and Rezko issue, 1039, 1042
  - safety concerns, 944, 1012, 1013, 1017, 1019
  - second term campaign, 1062, 1063
  - Secret Service protection, 1032, 1040
  - Springfield announcement ceremony, 1026–28
  - televised debates, 1040, 1044
  - television ads, 1034
  - vital factor in success of, 1050–51
  - Web video declaration of, 1023–1244
  - and Wright issue, 1026–27, 1028, 1030, 1042–47
- state Senate achievements in, 848, 866, 874, 915–16 and Black Caucus, 657–58 colleague relationships, 571–72, 592–93, 596, 604–6, 711, 731–32 colleague resentments of, 599–600, 658, 808, 907–8 committee assignments, 594–96, 652, 783, 787–88 and congressional primary defeat, 710–11 disappointment with, 596–97, 606, 647, 649–50, 658–70, 731, 739, 750 discarded records of, 1038, 1039 district office and staff, 585, 593–96, 610, 635–36, 814, 819 floor debut, 597–98

ghost employee “William Higgins,” 636, 819 and informal issues committee, 717–18, 721, 726–27, 788 and member initiative grants, 716–17, 719–20 and missed gun-control bill vote, 687–90, 691, 694, 707, 796, 861, 895 outsider status of, 600 physical confrontation with Hendon, 767–68, 769 and poker games, 603–4, 620–21, 651–52, 732, 808, 809, 919, 1078 and “present” votes, 600–601, 607, 618–19, 818, 824, 862, 863, 891
and presidential campaign, 1034–35, 1038, 1039 racial makeup of district, 578 redistricting map, 744–45, 746 reelections to, 616, 622, 623, 637–40, 748, 753, 754, 776 resignation from, 959–60
salary, 651, 814
and Springfield routine, 808–9
State Government Operations Committee, 596
and U.S. Senate campaign, 759, 867–69, 932–33
U.S. Senate contrasted with, 977–78, 1007 voting record, 609, 654, 734–35, 824, 832 state Senate primary, 517–22, 526–27, 538–64 campaign donors, 610, 638, 733 campaign office, 539–40, 545–46, 571 nominating petition, 547–48, 551, 553, 557–59, 616 opponents’ invalid petitions, 559–60, 562, 563–64
  Palmer reentry into, 553–54, 558–60, 571, 572, 624, 658, 667, 703 Palmer withdrawal from, 562 unanimous win, 564
U.S. Congress primary, 505–32, 543–671, 673–713 advertising, 680, 695–96, 699–700
  black staff members, 877
  endorsements, 698–99

- four candidates, 685
- racial factors, 691, 694–96, 698, 699, 704, 705, 707, 708, 750
- retrospective view of, 707–9, 711–12, 716
- Rush victory, 706–10, 750, 782, 793, 841
  - and Trotter animus, 683
- U.S. Senate, 960–1058
  - Africa trip, 995, 996–97, 1006
  - appraisals of first year, 983
  - bills introduced, 970, 1021
  - boredom with, 1022
  - committee memberships, 787–88, 967, 971–74, 976, 987–88, 1012–13
  - ethics reform, 984–86, 987, 989
  - first year, 968, 979–80
  - Hurricane Katrina tour, 974, 975, 996
  - Iraq tour, 982, 983
  - McCain clash with, 984–86, 987
  - and presidential candidacy, 1028
  - “reaching across aisle” by, 973, 974, 975, 976, 991, 1001
  - on “slow pace” of, 971–72
  - as sole black member, 972
  - as strain on family life, 977, 996
  - swearing-in ceremonies, 964–65
  - and town halls, 1001
- U.S. Senate campaign, 905–58
  - and DNC keynote speech, 913–43, 948, 951
  - downstate focus of, 943–44, 951
  - DSCC experienced staff, 901, 906–7, 910, 921–22
  - endorsements, 954–55
  - focus groups, 923–24
  - foreign policy speech, 930
  - fund-raising, 906, 910, 911, 913, 923, 928, 929, 948, 949, 952, 960, 1003, 1021
  - and Jack Ryan campaign video stalker, 915, 919, 951
  - and Jack Ryan divorce records, 912, 924, 925
  - and Jack Ryan withdrawal, 927, 944
  - and Keyes replacement candidacy, 945–47, 948, 951–52
  - landslide victory, 956–57
  - and national media, 921, 933–35
  - television ads, 947–48, 954
  - and white voters, 923
  - Yes We Can! slogan, 918
- U.S. Senate primary, 776–906

- argument for running, 758–59, 780
- basic theme of, 786
- black protests against, 855
- black staff members, 877, 907
- black turnout, 901
- campaign manager, 820–21, 827
- campaign staff, 792, 805–6, 836, 855
- candidates, 789–90, 800–801, 818–20, 830
- consultants, 789–90, 820–21, 832–34, 835–36
- contributors list, 814
- debates, 879–80, 887–88
- direct mail, 890–91
- Election Day tactics, 888–89, 896–99
- favorable press reaction, 845
- formal candidacy, 792–94, 795–96
- landslide victory, 899–901, 903
- Muslim staff members, 805
- opposition research, 818–19, 825–26
- petition filings, 857
- postelection analysis of, 903–6
- radio ads, 848, 849, 876–77, 891
- success chances, 772–73, 815–16, 821
- transition to national campaign, 905–6
- TV ads, 871–74, 877–81, 883–85, 892, 893, 896, 901, 905, 923
- white liberal supporters, 862–63, 881, 884, 904
- Yes We Can! slogan, 878, 880

See also Obama for Illinois

Obama, Barack Hussein, Sr. (father), 43–48, 140, 247, 320, 709

- alcohol abuse, 47, 54, 59, 73, 76, 77, 78, 79, 150–51, 152, 153, 178, 203, 204, 205, 260, 320
- car crashes, 77, 78, 79, 150–51, 153, 203, 260
- charisma of, 46, 78, 204
- death in car crash, 150–51, 153, 178, 260
- deterioration of, 151–52, 203, 204
- Dreams From My Father* portrayal of, 515, 529, 531, 549
- Dunham's divorce from, 58, 59
- and Echols namesake, 78, 492, 535, 575, 709
- Harvard studies, 55–60, 77, 152, 285, 321
- INS forces return to Kenya, 60–61
- and Kenyan politics, 76–77, 79
- multiple marriages, 43, 50–51, 55, 59, 76, 77, 150, 204, 420, 1050
- mythology created about, 73, 204 return visit to Honolulu, 75, 80–81 son Barack's birth in Hawaii, 50, 52, 53 son Barack's dream about, 178 son Barack's feelings about, 132, 152, 178, 204, 260, 320–21, 417, 493, 510, 531, 709, 935, 1048 University of Hawaii studies, 45–48, 51, 53, 54–56, 79 violence of, 203

womanizing of, 47, 54, 56, 59, 60, 75–76

Obama, David Opiyo (half-brother), 78, 150, 151, 179

Obama, George Hussein (half-brother), 150, 321

Obama, Grace Kezia Aoko (father's first wife), 43, 44, 55, 59, 320, 420

Obama, Habiba Akumu (grandfather's second wife), 43, 44, 515

Obama, Hawa Auma (aunt), 43

Obama, Hussein Onyango (grandfather), 43, 44, 45, 55, 151

Obama, Malia Ann (daughter)

asthma of, 773–74, 873

at Ayers and Dohrn dinner parties, 835 ballet performances, 979, 1016

birth of, 634

and grandmother Robinson, 969, 1039

Halloween trick-or-treating, 950, 1038

high fever in Hawaii, 687–88

Kenyan trip, 997–98

and Obama's celebrity, 1002

and Obama's election night appearance, 898

Obama's intense love for, 995

and Obama's missed parent-teacher conference, 920

Obama's nightly phone call to, 808

and Obama's political campaigns, 932, 940, 942, 943, 944

and Obama's presidential possibility, 964, 1008, 1010, 1011, 1012, 1019, 1035

and Obama's Senate seat, 965, 977

and White House life, 1057, 1064

Obama, Marsat (aunt), 151

Obama, Mary (Roy's wife), 213, 219

Obama, Michelle Robinson (wife), 540, 823

birth of daughters, 634, 735–36

on black anti-intellectualism, 951, 952

on black self-doubt, 1039

and charitable giving, 651, 990, 1044

Chicago African American roots of, 363–64, 367–68, 417, 454, 459, 469 and child care arrangements, 814, 914, 929, 952, 969

and Christmas in Chicago, 1040 and Christmas in Hawaii (see under Hawaii) close-knit family background of, 520, 568 and condominium purchase, 466, 482, 488, 491–92, 498 and condominium sale, 973 conservative morals of, 361

courtship of, 361–63, 379, 405, 418, 420
Daley administration jobs, 466, 482, 488 desire for children, 520, 567, 568 and dinners with Ayers, Dohrn, and Khalidis, 568–70, 603, 674, 708, 834–35 dislike of politics, 675, 708, 995 effect of Blount’s death on, 567 engagement of, 463–64, 465, 469 and European trip, 564–65 and family events, 696, 901, 903, 979 and family finances, 489, 565, 567, 625, 651, 716, 717, 723, 733, 747, 750, 755, 777, 814, 914, 929, 970, 973, 989–90, 1017 and family Scrabble competition, 950–51, 963, 1040 favorite TV shows, 496, 506 as First Lady, 1035, 1057, 1074 friendship with Santita Jackson, 462, 479, 525, 544, 1009 friendship with Valerie Jarrett, 464, 465, 1072 Harvard Law School degree, 329–30, 361, 363, 365, 366, 381, 464, 481, 746 humor of, 987
interviews of, 950–51, 955, 1009, 1038, 1039
Kenyan visits, 466–67, 997–98 and marital strains, 651, 674, 716, 736–37, 744, 773, 782, 996 Martha Vineyard vacation, 947 and motherhood, 736–37, 819 on Obama’s ability to compartmentalize, 1062
and Obama’s belief in own destiny, 782, 948
and Obama’s celebrity, 1002, 1007
Obama’s devotion to, 710, 1037 and Obama’s disinterest in Supreme Court clerkship, 392
and Obama’s DNC 2004 keynote speech, 936, 937, 939, 940
and Obama’s manuscript, 484–85, 500–501 on Obama’s messy habits, 967, 1029, 1032
and Obama’s political aspirations, 517, 520–21, 568, 569, 592, 637, 662, 663, 674, 708, 716, 721, 732, 751, 757, 758, 773, 783, 793, 877, 900, 995 on Obama’s political celebrity, 965, 1007 on Obama’s political future, 979, 1008 on Obama’s political gifts, 995

on Obama's smoking, 496, 854, 1021, 1026, 1030
on Obama's special qualities, 873
and Obama's state Senate seat, 539, 552, 597, 647–48, 750
as Obama's summer job adviser, 361 on Obama's transparency, 963–64 and Obama's U.S. Senate seat, 961, 963–66, 977, 981–82, 988, 996 participation in Obama's presidential campaign, 1029, 1034–35, 1039, 1040 participation in Obama's U.S. Senate campaign, 873, 874, 878, 882, 927–28, 952 personality of, 1035 personal religion of, 909, 952
pragmatism of, 493, 793
pregnancies of, 616, 721
Princeton education of, 363, 364–65, 384, 417, 464
Public Allies job, 489–90, 493, 495–500, 508, 520, 566–68, 570 and Purdum Vanity Fair profile, 1067 and Republican opposition research, 912
salaries, 814, 914, 969, 990, 1017, 1048–49
and Scottsdale vacation, 901, 903, 906
Sidley & Austin job, 351, 352, 361, 366, 417, 463 and social life, 495, 568–70, 603, 613, 708 and South Greenwood mansion, 965–66, 968–69, 973, 977, 982 student loan debt of, 489, 491–92, 674, 723 television appearances of, 935, 940
temperament of, 496, 567, 793, 834–35, 1013, 1032, 1039
and TreeHouse Foods board, 973, 990, 1017, 1032
and Trinity United Church, 469, 470
University of Chicago assistant dean job, 567–68, 570, 577, 643, 736 University of Chicago Medical Center job, 737, 747, 969, 1049 wedding of, 468–70, 478–80 on Wright controversy, 1041

Obama, Natasha Marian "Sasha" (daughter), 742, 808, 960, 982 at Ayers-Dohrn dinner parties, 835
birth of, 735–36
and grandmother Robinson, 969, 1039
Halloween trick-or-treating, 950, 1038
Kenyan trip of, 997–98, 1002 meningitis emergency of, 746–47, 1059
and Obama's celebrity, 1002
and Obama's election night appearance, 898
Obama's intense love for, 995
Obama's nightly phone call to, 808

and Obama's political campaigns, 932, 940, 943, 944

and Obama's potential presidency, 1008, 1010, 1011–12, 1019–20, 1035

and Obama's Senate seat, 965, 977

and White House life, 1057, 1074

Obama, Omar Onyango (uncle), 58, 150, 182, 324, 327, 626, 634, 1068

Obama, Rita Auma. See Obama, Auma

Obama, Roy Abon'go (aka Malik) (half-brother), 44, 57, 76, 79, 151, 219, 272, 634

and Kenya trip, 466

marriages of, 213–14, 420

and Obama Sr.'s failings, 203–4 at Obama U.S. Senate swearing-in ceremony, 964

at Obama wedding, 478, 532

and Zeituni Onyango's death, 1068

Obama, Ruth Baker. See Ndesandjo, Ruth Beatrice Baker

Obama, Sarah Nyaoke (aunt), 43, 321

Obama, Sarah Ogwel "Granny Sarah" (stepgrandmother), 43, 44, 55, 320, 403–4, 466–67, 574, 964

Obama, Sasha (daughter). See Obama, Natasha Marian "Sasha"

Obama, Zeituni Onyango (aunt), 43, 51, 76, 150–51, 152, 319, 324, 467

death of, 1068

U.S. visit of, 626, 634

Obamacare. See Affordable Care Act

Obama Finance Committee, 738, 748, 772

Obama for Illinois (OFI), 775, 785, 797, 812

campaign staff, 805–6, 812

campaign strategy, 789–90

contributions, 812, 813–14, 829

donations to other candidates, 952

opening of new offices, 866

See also Obama, Barack Hussein, U.S. Senate primary

ObamaforIllinois.com, 821

Obamas, The (Kantor), 1060–61

Obama's Wars (Woodward), 1056

Oberlin College, 744

Obonyo, Silpa "Aunt Jane," 150, 152, 320

O'Brien, Patrick, 369, 390, 773

O'Brien, Soledad, 953

Obstfeld, Maurice, 154

Occidental College "Oxy," 106–7, 109–18, 120–40, 324 admissions and dropouts, 109

African American students, 110, 114–16, 120, 126, 127, 128–29, 136

anti-apartheid movement, 114, 122, 127 and basketball, 110–11

core program, 110
draft registration protest, 113, 114, 116
Dreams From My Father portrayal of, 529, 537

and drinking and drugs, 111, 112, 132

El Salvador symposium, 136–37

Feast literary magazine, 133, 135, 137 financial aid policy, 110

forum on prejudice, 126

freshman classes, 110

Haines Annex, 109, 111, 115, 117–18, 130 literary analysis course, 123–24

as nonstop party, 143

Obama's continuing friendships from, 178, 185, 496

as Obama's second college choice, 107

Obama wedding guests from, 478, 479

photos of Obama at, 118

political science courses, 110, 112–13, 116–17, 125

Sexual Politics class, 133

students' issues, 113–14, 126–27

transfers from, 131–32

tuition, 110, 114

O'Dell, Margaret, 749

Odeoti-Hassan, Nia, 553, 595, 596, 627, 731, 787, 806

Odiawo, Wilson, 55

Odinga, Oginga, 77, 78

O'Donnell, Sandy, 502, 503, 524, 576

Office of Black Catholic Ministries, 263

Ogletree, Charles, 328, 329, 330, 394

O'Grady, Kevin, 741

Ohio Players (band), 144, 861

Okada, Annabelle, 106

Okoda, Sebastian Peter, 151

Okrent, Alex, 900, 933

Olbermann, Keith, 1042

Oldfather, Chad, 378, 390

“Old Man, The” (Obama), 96

Olive-Harvey College, 26, 249, 289, 290, 296

Oliver, Edward H., 290

Oliver, Ruby, 366

Oliver-Hill, Janet, 521

Olsen, Frances, 377, 378, 379, 383

Olson, Karla, 131

O'Malley, Patrick, 730, 739–40

Omnibus Appropriations Act (2009), 1052, 1058

Omolo, Leo Odera, 77

O'Neil, Abby McCormick, 733, 748, 785, 814, 885

O'Neil, Conor, 885

On Reading the Constitution (Tribe and Dorf), 401

Open Meetings Act (Ill.), 801, 825

Operation PUSH, 473, 474, 475, 492, 830, 850

- and Obama campaign ad, 876
- and Obama speeches, 971
- rally, 578, 770, 823, 859
- See also* Rainbow/PUSH

Orenstein, Bruce, 241, 248–49, 262, 276, 282, 290, 404, 405

- and landfill issue, 299–300, 306–7, 308, 311, 323
- and Obama fund-raiser, 846–47
- on Obama's political ambitions, 318, 345

Organizing for Family and Congregation (Chambers), 231

Orme, Greg, 88–93, 97, 100–101, 104, 105, 112, 148

- on Dreams From My Father, 535–36
- as Obama wedding guest, 478

Orr, David, 291

Orren, Gary, 425

Osnos, Peter, 490–91

O'Toole, Donald, 25

Our Lady Gate of Heaven Parish, 14

Our Lady of the Gardens Parish, 30, 31, 217, 229, 248–49, 304, 310

Owango, Godfrey Kassim, 78

Owens, John "Johnnie," 232, 267, 276, 284, 289, 295, 304

- background of, 269
- and CEN tutoring program, 294
- as DCP executive director, 305, 350
- and DCP problems, 405–6, 479
- Dreams From My Father* portrayal of, 531
- as guest at Obama wedding, 478
- on Jager's upset, 321
- as Obama's best man, 479

Obama's friendship with, 221–22, 227, 236, 237, 261, 393

- and Obama's Law Review presidency, 394
- and Obama's law school plans, 284, 305

- and Obama's political candidacy, 554
- as Obama's successor at DCP, 308, 322, 350
- and Parent Community Council, 295
- personal problems of, 350
- and Project VOTE!, 473
- and salary raise, 296
- and school improvement program, 289, 304, 316

PACs, 693, 698, 713, 747, 968, 972

Page, Clarence, 221–22, 1005, 1019

Page, Kaleshia, 841, 847, 877, 899

Page, Susan, 1071

Paget, Lisa, 341, 346, 347

Paige, Billie, 759

Palestinians, 117, 632, 641, 691–92, 743, 835, 982

See also Israeli-Palestinian conflict

Palin, Sarah, 1049

Palmer, Alice

- background of, 306, 460, 461, 504

- and congressional primary, 505–8, 516–21, 525–26, 538, 539–40, 544, 910–15

- and congressional primary loss, 548–49, 551–52

- endorsement of Obama by, 521, 546, 547, 562

- hatred of Obama, 739

- HistoryMakers* video interview of, 727

- invalid petitions of, 557–59, 560, 561, 562, 564, 860, 1050

- and Obama relationship, 518, 522, 525–26, 527, 539, 540, 544, 563, 569

- and Obama relationship ending, 553, 556, 571–72, 739

- and Obama win of state Senate seat, 521–22, 526, 541, 545, 546, 577

- and pledge to surrender state Senate seat, 552, 793

- political loyalists of, 578, 593, 598, 599, 658, 667, 677, 703

- as politically naive, 545

- and Rush support, 678, 698

- and seat in state Senate, 420, 461–62, 471, 494, 518, 519, 527, 538–39, 571, 578

- and state Senate primary reentry, 548–49, 552–54, 557–59, 571–72, 624

- and state Senate primary withdrawal, 562

Palmer, Edward “Buzz,” 461, 517, 526, 545, 552

Palmer, Lu, 216, 692, 704

Palmer, Walt, 11

Palmer Park, 197, 222, 277, 1058

Panetta, Leon, 1066, 1071

Panther Creek Country Club, 603, 621

Papandreou, George, 448

Paper Chase, The (film), 334

Pappas, Maria

    Iraq war support, 881

    poll results, 762, 763, 789, 802, 818, 821, 836, 840, 852, 858, 865, 871, 872, 885

    supporters of, 862, 863

    and TV debate, 887, 888

    U.S. Senate primary candidacy, 826, 833, 834, 844, 862

    U.S. Senate primary results, 866, 900, 903

Paradise Papers, 70, 71

Pardo, Lou, 475, 477

Parent Community Council, 283, 294, 295

Parham, Michael, 546, 949

Parker, Kathy, 608, 687, 689

Parker, Richard D., 333, 334, 339, 340, 341, 349, 354, 430

Parks, Rosa, funeral of, 978

Parry, John, 370, 378, 388, 396, 400, 413, 414, 429

Parson, Christi, 1026

Parsons, Mark, 112

Partee, Cecil, 253, 460

Partee, Tyrone, 253, 266, 270, 290

Patchel, Keith, 185, 190

Patriot Act (2001)

    compromise extension of, 986

    opponents of, 817, 830, 833, 845, 849, 853, 862–63, 864, 872, 911, 929, 949, 951, 981, 986

Patten, Carl, 580–81

Patterson, John (governor), 51

Patterson, John (reporter), 996

Patty, Ann, 431–32, 483

Paxton landfill, 20, 21, 200, 274, 290

payday loan industry, 650, 692, 722, 723, 729, 733

Payne, Arlene, 80, 82, 696

Payne, Charles (maternal uncle), 52, 87, 272, 660 on Madelyn and Stanley Dunham marriage, 48–49, 68, 470

    as guest at Obama wedding, 479

    Obama campaign contribution from, 546, 667

    and Obama condominium remodeling, 492

    seventy-fifth birthday event, 696

    as University of Chicago Law School senior librarian, 454

Payne, Jon, 696

Payne, Madelyn. See Dunham, Madelyn Payne “Toot”

Payne, Melanie, 479

Payne, Richard, 272
PCBs, 21, 200, 240, 305
Pear, Robert, 1076
Pearson, Rick, 895
Peck, Gerald W., 69
Peck, Helen Canfield. See Davis, Helen Canfield
Pell Grants, 186, 970
Pelosi, Nancy, 1052
Pemstein, Josh, 803
Penn, Mark, 1020
Penn, Sean, 980
Pennick, Aurie, 267–68, 269, 305, 322, 517, 591, 638
People for Community Recovery (PCR), 32, 33, 35, 248, 249
People’s Bank of Indonesia—Bank Rakyat Indonesia (BRI), 379–80
People’s Coalition for Educational Reform (PCER), 280–81, 283
People’s Daily World, 461
Percy, Charles “Chuck,” 28, 34, 774
Perdiou, Deno, 592
Perkins, Bill, 480, 589, 806, 824
Perkins, Steve, 250, 495
Perrelli, Tom, 376, 379, 387, 389, 397, 442, 444
    as guest at Obama wedding, 478
    and Harvard Law Record, 397
    Law Review colleagues praise for, 438 as Law Review managing editor, 395, 396, 414, 426, 438 on “muffin flaunting,” 424, 425
    and Obama U.S. Senate candidacy, 776 positive appraisal of Obama, 424
Perry, James, 480
Peters, Howard, 806
Peters, Louanner, 669, 674
Peterson, Bill, 624, 694
Peterson, Keith, 93, 97, 102, 103
Peterson, Terry, 646, 669
Peterson, Tony, 84–85, 88, 93
Petka, Ed, 594, 656, 657, 660, 684, 811, 907
Petraeus, David, 1037–38
Peyton, Rosette Caldwell, 574
Pfefferblit, Elaine, 431–32, 482, 483
Pfleger, Michael “Mike,” 260, 265, 297–98, 473, 481, 490, 714, 835 on Obama’s consistency, 872

Obama's friendship with, 909
state grant awarded to, 716 support for Obama congressional campaign, 698 support for Obama presidential primary, 1044, 1047 support for Obama state Senate campaign, 546, 558, 638, 816 support for Obama U.S. Senate campaign, 850

Phelan, Richard, 503, 775

Phelps, Reginald H., 60

Phi Beta Kappa, 55

Philadelphia Inquirer, 395, 404, 935

Philbin, Patrick, 429, 442

Philip, James "Pate," 518, 538, 581, 594, 915, 1077 campaign-finance-reform bill, 624, 626, 627, 629, 630

Cullerton skit impersonation of, 735

and DeLeo elevation, 728–29 departure from state Senate, 787

and gaming interests, 656, 657

Jones conflict with, 620, 642, 643, 656, 771 legislative power of, 596, 597, 606, 607, 617, 649, 659, 734, 761, 776 and Obama's pragmatism, 731, 732, 859

political machine of, 740

positive view of Trotter, 660 and presidency of lame-duck state Senate, 787 and prison guards' drug use, 712

as pro-gun, 684, 685, 689

racist speech of, 585–87

and Republican majority, 713

and Ryan as governor, 642, 646–47, 648, 652, 684, 685, 689, 711 seat-belt bill opposition, 799

and sports-referee-assault bill, 653–54

Pierce, Samuel R., 182

Piers, Matt, 520–21, 643, 662, 675, 734, 789

Piggee, Nat, 637, 690, 691, 698

Pildes, Rick, 579–80

Pillemer, David, 529–30

Pilsen Neighbors Community Council, 9, 22

Pincham, R. Eugene, 256, 459, 775, 835, 892, 900

Pinckney, Darryl, 1062

Pittman, Stuart, 34, 35, 201

Pitts, Leonard, Jr., 987

Piven, Frances Fox, 184, 186

Planned Parenthood, 601, 602–3, 806, 863, 891, 916
Planned Parenthood v. Casey (1992), 615
Plasticity into Power (Unger), 447
Platt, Carol, 421, 424, 442, 443, 444–45
Pleasant Ridge Missionary Baptist Church, 851, 852
Plesha, Steve, 2
Plessy v. Ferguson (1896), 614
Plouffe, David, 820, 948, 1007, 1011, 1012, 1018 and all-Iowa strategy, 1024, 1038, 1039–40, 1051 as Obama presidential campaign manager, 1020–23, 1025–26 and Obama speech on race, 1043
    and Obama White House, 1058, 1060
    reaction to Rolling Stone article, 1027 and Rezko extortion trial, 1041 as vital factor in Obama presidential win, 1050–51 and Wright sermon tapes, 1042
Podesta, John, 1057
Poethig, Dick, 6–7, 8–9, 10, 12, 13
Poitier, Sidney, 85
PoKempner, Mark, 548
Poledziowski, Jan, 8, 23, 29
police. See interrogation-videotaping bill; racial profiling political action committees. See PACs political correctness, 437
Politico, 1063, 1066, 1069, 1070, 1071, 1073
Pollack, Wendy, 358
Pollock, Jef, 817–18, 865, 866, 904
Ponce, Phil, 701–3, 793–94, 825, 887–88, 955–56, 970
Pond, Elizabeth, 155
Pontikes, Rachael, 719
“Pop” (Obama), 133–34, 135
Popper, Karl, 332
Porter, Anthony, 644
Posada, Julian, 490, 496
Posedel, Jeremiah, 810, 943, 944
Poseidon books, 431–32, 485, 490
    cancellation of Obama contract, 482–83, 510, 959
Poshard, Glenn, 618, 623, 636, 640, 642
Posner, Eric, 425, 426
Posner, Richard A., 498, 566, 752
pot smoking. See marijuana

Powell, Colin, 543, 911, 953, 1002, 1016 political popularity of, 1024

Powell, Ernest, Jr., 239, 270, 309

Powell, Lewis, 559

Powell, Paul, 582–84, 585

Power Broker, The (Caro), 695

Pratt, Albert “Bob,” 50, 67

Preckwinkle, Steve, 504, 807, 838

Preckwinkle, Toni, 459, 469, 504, 517, 541, 624, 727
    and Obama congressional campaign, 663, 666, 669, 675, 707, 708
    and Obama state Senate bid, 521 positive impression of Obama, 421 and successor to Obama state Senate seat, 959

Presbyterian churches, 6, 10, 206, 266, 309

prescription drug pricing, 691, 694, 695, 697, 699, 700

presidential election (1984), 172, 292, 471, 1023

presidential election (1988), 338, 339, 348, 370, 585, 841, 913, 928
    Jackson Sr. candidacy, 1023
    Willie Horton controversy, 775

presidential election (1992), 471, 477–78, 480–81

presidential election (1996), 573–74, 578, 1024

presidential election (2000), 717, 721, 722, 724, 1000

presidential election (2004), 912–14, 910, 923, 928, 930, 954, 955, 957, 960–61
    See also Democratic National Convention

presidential election (2008), 958, 963, 967, 970, 983, 992–94
    Obama advantages, 1014–15
    Obama vs. Hillary Clinton candidacy, 987, 1014

presidential election (2012), 1062, 1063, 1064, 1066–67

Price, Arthur, 948

Price, Jacqueline, 741

Primo, Quintin, 675, 785, 814

Princeton Project ’55, 467

Princeton University, 363, 364–65, 367, 382, 384, 570

Pritzker, Penny, 505, 668, 733
    and Obama campaign funding, 785, 806, 814, 840, 904
    and Obama DNC keynote speech, 939
    and Obama U.S. Senate bid, 758, 771

Problems, Cases, and Materials on Evidence (Nesson and Green), 382

Problems in Professional Responsibilities (Kaufman), 435

Proctor, Samuel D., 285

Proft, Dan, 915, 957

Progressive Chicago, 494
Progressive Party, 69
Progressive Steel Workers (PSW), 2, 6, 10–11, 18
Project VOTE!, 250, 471–78, 480–84, 488, 489, 494, 504, 547
    1994 voter drive, 501
    Obama deputies, 525, 527, 891 and Obama political ambitions, 505, 518, 521, 548, 563, 704 and Obama political education, 482, 495, 727
Project Vote Smart, 633
Promise, The (Alter), 1056
Protestant churches, 14, 33, 296
    See also specific churches
Protestants for the Common Good, 731
Proxmire, William, 284
Pruitt, Alonzo C., 253, 254, 255, 266, 284
Public Allies Chicago, 468, 488–90, 514, 546
    Michelle Obama’s job with, 489–90, 493, 495–500, 508, 520, 544, 566–68
    Michelle Obama’s resignation from, 568, 570
    Woods Fund grant to, 501, 502
Public Broadcasting System (PBS), 249, 258–59, 935, 1006
Public Education Fund (proposed), 612–13 public funding of campaigns, 888, 1005–6, 1025
    Obama presidential campaign rejection of, 1048
Public Health and Welfare Committee (Ill. Senate), 652, 776, 781, 783
Pucinski, Aurelia, 553
Puck, Amanda, 741
Pugh, Allison, 402–3
Pugh, Stephen, 723, 769, 814, 827, 885
Pullman, George, 24, 30
Pullman (neighborhood), 24, 30, 201
Pullman Christian Reformed Church (PCRC), 252, 284, 309
Pullman Civic Organization, 27–28
Pullman Presbyterian Church, 266, 309
Punahou Circle Apartments, 67
Punahou School, 47, 50, 67–68, 74–75, 82–106, 166, 171, 447 Academy (high school), 84–85 basketball team, 96–100, 536 and black students, 75, 84–85, 93, 102–3
    and Choom Gang, 91–94
    creative writing course, 96
    curriculum, 74, 82, 83, 87–88, 90–91, 95, 103

Dreams From My Father portrayals of, 529, 535–36, 537 financial aid policy, 1115*n* graduation ceremony, 105–6

Law and Society course, 95–96

and marijuana use, 91–93, 94, 101, 102, 529, 536, 853

Maya Soetoro enrollment in, 175, 181, 182, 214

as multicultural/multiethnic, 103, 245

Obama's friends from, 83, 88, 91–94

Obama's return as U.S. Senator to, 963

Obama's senior prom date, 105

Obama's senior year at, 100–102

Obama's tribute to, 103–4

Obama's wedding guests from, 478, 479, 480

Obama's yearbook quarter page, 104 quality of teaching, 103 reputation of students, 89

smoking prohibition, 93

speech by Obama Sr. at, 80–81

teachers, 74–75, 94, 95, 536

tuition, 74, 95

Purdum, Todd S., 1067

PUSH. See Operation PUSH

Putin, Vladimir, 1076, 1077

Putnam, Jonathan, 424, 428, 429

Putnam, Robert, 602

Quinlan, Sheila, 246

Quinn, Pat, 593, 754

Raban, Jonathan, 537

Rabinovitz, Dan, 341, 347–48, 415

as guest at Obama wedding, 478

Obama at wedding of, 647

Raby, Al, 297, 470, 518

and Chicago Freedom Movement, 250, 288

death and memorial service for, 349, 350

and Haymarket Group, 289, 303

Obama contacts with, 252, 261, 264, 265, 271, 289, 467

Obama law school recommendation from, 293 and Perkins friendship, 495

and Project VOTE!, 250, 471

and school reform, 303, 322

and teachers strike, 280
and Woodstock Institute founding, 284

race

binary view of, 278 and black anti-intellectualism, 951, 952, 953
and black self-doubt, 1039 and Chicago politics, 215–16, 220, 263, 291–92, 306, 524 and class divide, 129–30, 280, 1058–59 and color, 278
and Hawaii, 67–68, 88–89, 103, 116, 278 and Hurricane Katrina, 974, 975 and identity, 180, 232
and interracial children, 70, 71, 72, 212, 232, 245
and interracial marriage, 246, 277, 278, 460 and interracial relationships, 231, 246 and Law Review, 383 and mixed race, 67–68, 115, 229, 278, 859 and Obama “A Story of Race” speech, 643–44
as Obama-Jager issue, 271, 277, 278, 315–16, 318, 531
Obama on legacy of slavery and, 954
Obama on politics and, 794
and Obama presidency, 1058–59, 1062–63, 1064
as Obama presidential campaign factor, 1035, 1037, 1045–46, 1050–51
Obama presidential campaign speech on, 1042–43, 1045, 1046
Obama’s critique of The Bell Curve on, 506–7 and Obama’s Dunham grandparents, 119, 1043, 1045, 1062
and Obama’s political appeal, 1002 Obama’s views on problems of, 1004–5 and Obama’s white heritage, 1062
and Occidental College, 114–15
as social concept, 507
and speech pattern, 604 and U.S. Supreme Court cases, 487, 614, 855–56 and voter views of Obama, 953–54

See also Obama, Barack Hussein, identity

“Race and Rights Theory” (Fisher and Obama), 451

racial profiling

as Obama congressional campaign issue, 696, 700, 701
Obama’s personal experiences with, 340, 695, 698
Obama’s Racism and the Law course on, 745
Obama’s state Senate bill against, 684–85, 689, 728, 734, 796, 799, 804, 807, 811–12, 819, 825, 831,

850, 860, 867, 888, 891, 892 and police officer's perception, 812 racism, 258, 451, 452, 728, 1051
Radding, Jennifer, 331, 335, 341, 347, 371, 382
"Radical Roots of Barack Obama, The" (Wallace-Wells article), 1026–27
Radogno, Christine, 577, 648, 654, 730, 1077
Radovick, Sally, 965–66
Ragen, Mike, 627, 629
Rage of a Privileged Class, The (Cose), 497
Rainbow Coalition, 526, 550, 677, 770
Rainbow/PUSH, 526, 550, 578, 665, 677
    See also Operation PUSH
Rakoff, Todd, 425, 426
Ramírez, Jorge, 389, 408, 409
Ramos, Connie, 103
Ramos, Greg, 93, 97, 98, 106, 107
Ramos, Mike, 88–93, 97, 103, 112, 153
    as guest at Obama wedding, 478, 480
    New York visit by, 178 and Schofield Barracks party, 88, 89, 543
Ramsey, Jane, 250
Randle, Linda, 224, 263, 282, 310
Random House, 494, 574
Ranney, David, 213
Ransby, Barbara, 159, 160
Rao, Radhika, 386, 389, 400, 401–2, 414, 415
Raoul, Kwame, 959–60
rap culture, 828
Rapoport, Miles, 740–41
Rask, Rob, 92
Rather, Dan, 172
Ratner, Morris, 335, 410
Rauschenberger, Steve, 648, 649, 839, 840 appraisal of Obama, 950 and Fab Five designation, 538, 592 and KidCare, 627
    minority leader bid, 787
    on Obama and Trotter's congressional primary bid, 683 and Obama campaign donation, 713
Palmer support by, 538–39 as possible U.S. Senate candidate, 819, 844, 857, 926–27, 929–30, 932

as Republican budget expert, 660 state Senate authority of, 538, 586

Rawlings, Chuck, 6, 7–8, 10

Raymond, Michael (aka Michael Burnett), 215

Rea, Jim, 610–11, 645, 686, 761

Reaching Beyond Race (Carmines and Sniderman), 614

Reagan, Ronald, 11, 12, 21, 186, 413, 424, 448–49, 1022

Real, Mark, 750–51, 752

RealNetworks, 949

REAL USA Corporations, 948

Real World, The (MTV series), 496

Reath, Richard F., 110

Redfield, Kent, 584–85, 588, 612, 631, 712–13

redistricting, 216, 733–34, 735, 741

and gerrymandering, 1013, 1025

new legislative map, 744–45, 746, 748, 754

Obama “nonpartisan maps” proposal, 996 and “racial packing,” 739

and safe seats, 734

and winner-take all, 741–42

redlining, 27, 513, 642, 646

Reed, Adolph, 553, 560–61, 562–63

Reed, Ralph, 632

Reed, Tom, 361, 363, 478, 483

Reformation Lutheran Church, 20, 252–53, 268, 290, 304, 318

Reformed Church of America (RCA), 25, 26, 252, 255

Regional Employment Network (REN), 207, 236, 265

Rehnquist, William H., 419, 615, 975

Reid, Harry, 983, 987, 992, 993, 1032, 1071

Reilly, Dawn, 171–72

Reilly, William, 2

Reljic, Boro, 621, 652

Remnick, David, 143, 157–58, 842–43, 1037, 1068

Obama biography, 1055–56

reparations, 714, 719

Republican National Committee, 942

Republican Party

2004 election wins, 957

2008 candidates, 967, 1049

2014 midterm election wins, 1071

Republic Steel. See LTV (Ling-Temco-Vought) steel mill

Resisting Ideology (Davis), 154
Revival (Wolffe), 1056
Reynolds, Jeanne, 179, 536
Reynolds, Jim, Jr., 638, 648, 664, 665, 667, 675, 695, 709
    and ISBI, 726, 736
    and minority-owned firms, 736
    and Obama campaign funding, 747, 770, 814, 892, 904
    and Obama campaign tensions, 877
    Obama friendship with, 622–23
    and Obama’s inauguration, 1051 and Obama’s presidency, 1058
    and Obama statewide candidacy, 721, 723
    and Obama U.S. Senate campaign, 769–70, 771, 820
Reynolds, Melvin J. “Mel,” 275, 305, 306, 406–7, 704 and campaign finance scandal, 505, 541
    colleague resentments of, 600 congressional resignation of, 539 criminal trial of, 521, 525, 538
    and guilty verdict, 538
    Rhodes Scholarship of, 515, 518 and sex scandal, 505, 506, 507, 516–17, 518, 525, 529, 538 special election to fill congressional seat of, 525–26, 538, 539, 541, 544
Reynolds, Sandra, 667
Rezko, Antoin “Tony,” 517, 522, 590, 656, 851
    background of, 418–19
    and Blagojevich administration, 802–3, 912, 931, 1003 FEC violations, 869–70, 886 financial irregularities, 813, 931, 966, 969, 970–71 indictment for extortion, 1003, 1041 negative press on, 931, 969
    Obama campaign funding, 526, 527, 546, 610, 618, 625, 667, 704, 785, 813, 814, 819, 828, 831, 840, 849, 885–86, 899, 912, 970, 1003, 1021
    as Obama presidency issue, 1039, 1041, 1042
    Obama relations with, 803, 912, 966, 970, 899, 1003–4, 1030 and “pay-to-play” scheme, 1003 political influence-peddling charges against, 504, 931 promotion of Obama political prospects, 504, 505, 517, 521, 522 promotion of Palmer congressional campaign, 517 and Obama purchase of new home, 966, 982–83, 1010, 1012, 1019, 1041, 1043 real estate projects of, 625, 639, 657
Rezko, Rita, 517, 667

Rezmar Inc., 418–19, 504, 590, 610, 625
Rhodes, Steve, 715
Rice, André, 814
Rice, Condoleezza, 911, 967, 976–77, 1023
Rice, Susan, 1066
Rich, Frank, 172, 1005
Rich, Huey, 677–78
Richard, Tynia, 394, 403, 409, 410, 411
Richards, Maury, 38, 207, 211, 303 and Dislocated Workers Program, 251
    Dreams From My Father portrayal of, 530
    and LTV bankruptcy, 233–34 and LTV layoffs, 206, 213, 216–17, 221
Richardson, Julieanna, 727–28
Richman, Jeff, 321
RICO Act (1970), 354, 355
Ridder, Rick, 749, 757, 760, 834 as Hull campaign consultant, 818, 819, 832, 842–43, 858, 879
    and Sexton’s divorce affidavit, 882, 884 Rideout, Vicky, 928, 931, 932, 934 on Obama’s delivery of DNC speech, 937–38, 939, 941
    and Obama’s presidential election, 1050
Riggins, Debbie, 823
Riggins, Kevin, 810, 823
Riggins, Sean, 810, 823
Righter, Dale, 807, 809, 916, 917
Riley, L. C., 200
Ring, Diane, 369, 388
Riordan, Michael, 737, 969
Risch, Michael, 615
Rise and Fall of the Great Powers, The (Kennedy), 448 Risen, James, 1069–70, 1072
Rivera, Rebecca, 128, 129, 136
Rivkin, Bob, 785
Rizzuto, Don, 1017
Robb, Charlie, 421, 438
Roberts, Dorothy, 437
Roberts, Helen, 44, 55
Roberts, John G., Jr., 975–76, 979–80
Roberts, Robin, 1062
Robeson, Paul, 69

Robinson, Avery, 736

Robinson, Craig (brother-in-law), 363–67, 463, 493, 520, 664 and basketball coaching, 736, 993
divorce of, 736
family life of, 520, 591–92, 615 on Michelle Obama’s temperament, 1032
and Obama campaigns, 675, 695, 758, 1017–18
and Obama U.S. Senate win, 957
at Obama wedding, 479
second marriage of, 993, 1022

Robinson, Fraser (father-in-law), 364, 365, 366, 367, 520
death of, 445
Obama’s admiration of, 417

Robinson, Janis Hardiman (sister-in-law), 160, 363, 366–67, 485, 493 and ABLE, 723
divorce of, 736
and family life, 520, 615
as Obama campaign co-treasurer, 666 and Obama’s aspirations, 591
and Obama state Senate campaign, 527, 546
at Obama wedding, 479

Robinson, Leslie, 736

Robinson, Marian (mother-in-law), 364, 365, 520, 568, 736, 766–67 care of Malia and Sasha Obama by, 965, 969, 1039
first impressions of Obama, 366
Madelyn Dunham bond with, 479 and Obama in home of, 417, 418, 454, 455, 458, 459, 462, 491 and Obama potential presidential candidacy, 1017
at Obama wedding, 479
and Thanksgiving family gathering, 979

Robinson, Michelle. See Obama, Michelle Robinson

Robinson, Paul H., 333

Robinson Crusoe (Defoe), 154

Roby, George C., 685, 706

Rock, Jill, 767, 768, 851

Rock, Phil, 586

Rockaby (Beckett), 172

Rockefeller, Jay, 1072

Roderick, David M., 18–19

Rodgers, Lenora, 28

Rodriguez, Byron, 745, 752

Rodriguez, Petra, 16, 19, 20

Roeser, Tom, 871

Roe v. Wade (1973), 615, 633, 902

Rogers, Gwendolyn LaRoche. See LaRoche, Gwendolyn

Rogers, Joel, 493–94, 561–62

Rogers, John, Jr., 463, 472, 516, 541, 577, 723, 851

- and Jones tribute, 769
- and Moseley-Braun’s former U.S. Senate seat, 788, 789, 791–92
- and Obama campaign funding, 667–69, 733, 747, 773, 785, 814, 840, 885, 892
- and Obama’s U.S. Senate bid, 758, 789

See also Ariel Capital Management

Rogers, Steven, 747, 814

Roll Call, 693, 705, 853–54

Rolling, Ken, 249, 304, 312, 350, 576

- and Chicago Annenberg Challenge, 523, 551, 570, 571, 715–16
- and “Future of Organizing” panel, 501
- as guest at Obama wedding, 478
- on Obama’s stresses, 716
- praise for DCP, 268
- and Woods Fund, 219, 220, 239, 247

Rolling Stone

- Obama interview, 1056
- “The Radical Roots of Barack Obama” article, 1026–27

Roman Catholic parishes

- and Catholic social teaching, 238, 318
- and CHD trainers, 263
- and community organizing, 7–14, 22, 24, 26, 39, 220
- as DCP base, 29, 199–200, 201, 205, 206, 239
- Gary (Ind.) diocese, 222–23
- Office of Black Catholic Ministries, 263
- and Roseland, 26, 29–30

See also specific parishes and pastors

Romero, Oscar, Archbishop, 136

Romer v. Evans (1996), 579

Romney, Mitt, 962, 1062, 1063, 1064

Ronan, Alfred, 713, 814

Ronen, Carol, 766

Roosevelt, Franklin Delano, 1054, 1060

Roque, Leonard “Tony,” 2, 6, 11, 18

Rorty, Richard, 379, 426

Rose, Charlie, 962, 1006

Rose, Don, 545, 705, 774

Roseland, 198–201, 202, 222, 239, 313
and bribery scandal, 215
Career Education Network proposal, 249–53, 262–68, 295–96
CEN tutoring program, 294
DCP key participants, 212 decline of, 24–28, 36 disappointment with Obama presidency, 1058 dominant pastors, 25, 29–30, 253, 254, 266, 289
Dreams From My Father portrayal of, 530 economic development measures, 284 gang intimidation, 257, 258, 503 homeless people, 253–54 jobs center, 261, 288 jobs losses, 36
Muslim community, 261
as Obama formative experience, 197, 217, 245, 253, 254, 259, 272, 281, 288, 345, 362, 367, 373–74, 395, 441, 453, 457, 458, 534, 727, 909, 1028, 1044 plight of schools, 242–43, 268, 289–90, 441
and Project VOTE!, 475
prospective health center, 262
University of Chicago law student from, 486–87 violence, 37, 200, 1059
“white flight” from, 24–25, 26–27

Roseland Christian Ministries Center, 26, 37

Roseland Clergy Association (RCA), 254

Roseland Community Development Corporation (RCDC), 261

Roseland Heights Community Association, 27–28

Rosen, Louis, 25

Rosenberg, David, 328, 333, 334, 342–44, 370, 401 economic perspective of, 441
Obama and Fisher student relationship with, 343, 348, 354, 357, 358, 447, 476
Torts exam, 349
and value of Law Review presidency, 383

Rosenbloom, Richard S., 7

Roskam, Peter, 918

Ross, Donald K., 183

Roth, Andy, 144, 145, 158
New Year’s Eve party, 167, 168
Obama’s good-bye lunch with, 192
and Obama’s Law Review presidency, 404

and Occidental College, 113–14, 135

Roth, Jon, 167, 168

Rothenberg, Stuart, 776, 963

Rothkopf, David, 1071, 1072

Rouse, Pete

as Daschle's U.S. Senate chief of staff, 948

and Obama's presidential candidacy, 983, 991, 1000, 1001, 1003–14, 1018, 1022

as Obama's U.S. Senate chief of staff, 961–62, 968, 969, 976, 977

as Obama White House temporary chief of staff, 1057

Rowan, William A., 30

Rowe, Romelle, 131

Rubin, Alicia, 333–34, 336, 340–41, 342, 356

Rudd, Jean, 12, 13, 350, 363, 466, 605

and community organizing roundtable, 372

as guest at Obama wedding, 478

interviewed about Obama, 554

and Obama campaign funding, 666, 748

and Obama law school choice, 304 and Obama's bid for Joyce Foundation presidency, 750 and Obama's bid for state Senate, 519, 526

and Obama's book manuscript, 482–83, 484

and Palmer congressional campaign, 517

and Woods Fund, 219–20, 239, 268, 305, 312, 322, 495, 501, 503

Ruenitz, Robert, 54

Ruggie, John G., 161

Ruiz, Jesse, 486–87, 538, 546, 548, 576, 716

and Obama campaign funding, 747

Rules, Roles, and Relations (Emmet), 426

Ruppertsberger, C. A. "Dutch," 820

Rush, Bobby

and asbestos problem, 225, 226

and congressional district revised boundaries, 735 and congressional reelection primary, 669, 673–82, 685, 698

and congressional reelection primary victory, 706–8, 710, 755

deaths of son and father, 677–78, 679, 697, 707

and Democratic politics, 744–45, 902

as endangered incumbent, 667

endorsement of Hull's U.S. Senate candidacy, 831–32, 834, 855, 860, 886 as former Black Panther, 471, 645, 662, 663, 708

as grudge-holder, 832

HistoryMakers video interview of, 727

and mayoral challenge to Daley, 645, 646, 659, 660, 665, 670, 675, 677, 679, 709 non-support of Obama's U.S. Senate candidacy, 795, 798, 858, 888, 894

"Obama as tool of white liberals" charge, 704 and Obama congressional primary challenge, 661–65, 669, 670–71, 675, 685, 688–91, 692, 693, 696–99, 701–10, 738, 739, 930

and Obama primary loss, 706–10, 750, 755, 782, 793, 841 on Obama's missed state Senate gun-control vote, 687

resentments toward, 660 seat in U.S. Congress, 471, 504, 645, 648, 659, 661, 662, 663, 667

significance of Obama's loss to, 750

and U.S. Senate primary candidates, 802, 829, 831

Rush, Carolyn, 669, 832

Rush, Marlon, 855, 858

Rush, Thomas, 351

Rusk, Barbara Cannon, 56

Russert, Tim, 933, 983, 996, 1007–8, 1013, 1039

Russians, The (Smith), 155

Rutan v. Republican Party (1990), 426

Rutherford, Dan, 733

Rutizer, Barry, 166, 170, 940

Ryan, George (Illinois Republican governor), 611, 618, 627, 630, 636, 640, 720, 893

and bipartisanship, 651

and bribery scandal, 693, 732, 739, 754–55, 783, 861, 926, 931

and child-support bill veto, 668, 682, 704 contest between successors, 739–40

Cullerton skit impersonation of, 735 and Daley political machine, 740 and death penalty, 644, 648, 693, 740, 744, 748, 755, 791 election as governor, 642–43

and gun control, 711, 714

indictment of, 861

and ISBI board appointees, 736 and KidCare expansion, 776

as lame duck, 740

and line-item budget vetoes, 766, 769

and lobbyists, 653

and Medicaid-funded-abortion bill, 714

Philip discord with, 646–47, 648, 684, 685, 689, 711 political transformation of, 714–15 and predatory lending regulation, 717 and public works construction project, 652, 655

and Safe Neighborhoods Act, 684, 685–86, 687

and state budget, 657, 728, 766

and state budget agreement, 712, 735

and tax abatement “enterprise zones,” 722

Ryan, Jack (Illinois Republican U.S. Senate candidate) campaign assets, 839, 844 campaign chances, 854, 907 campaign critics, 919

campaign strategy, 923

campaign vulnerabilities, 913

and divorce records, 886–87, 894–95, 901, 902, 911, 912, 915, 924, 925–26

favorability rating, 922

and Obama campaign, 918

and Obama debate challenge, 923, 945 oppositional research report on, 908 political record of, 911

poll results, 912, 922, 926–27, 947, 948

prediction of Obama 2008 successful presidential campaign, 967 and sex club charge, 887, 895, 924

and videographer stalking of Obama, 915, 919, 951 withdrawal from campaign, 927, 930, 945, 947, 949

Zorn press takedown of, 967

Ryan, Jeri, 886, 895, 924, 926

Ryan, Jim, 640, 684, 734, 739–40, 754, 755, 783

Ryan, Mary, 248–49, 262, 274, 275, 311

Ryan, Paul, 1059

Safe Neighborhoods Act (Ill. 1999), 683–87, 711, 826

Saguaro Seminar, 592, 613, 617, 620, 632, 637–38, 645, 660, 711

Sahlins, Marshall, 228, 245

Said, Edward, 146, 153, 158, 632

St. Anne Parish, 33

St. Catherine of Genoa Parish, 26, 29, 39, 207, 212, 252, 260, 297, 317

St. Francis Assisi school (Jakarta), 64, 65

St. Francis de Sales Parish, 19

St. George and St. Matthias Episcopal Church, 253, 254

St. Helena of the Cross Parish, 24, 26, 29, 199, 200, 201, 206, 209, 230

St. John de la Salle Parish, 29, 199, 206, 267

St. Jude’s Children’s Research Hospital, 517

St. Kevin Parish, 19, 20, 33, 199, 210, 248 landfill rally, 306–8, 310, 311

St. Sabina Parish, 29, 260, 297, 473, 475, 481, 714, 716

St. Salonea Parish, 24

St. Victor Parish, 14, 20–21, 22, 23, 33, 207

- core activists, 8–9, 29, 33, 205, 206
- Leo Mahon departure from, 238

St. Xavier University, 304

Saitoti, George, 58

Sakata, Shinko, 229

Saladi, Indira, 618

Salazar, Ken, 953, 957

Salem Baptist Church, 991

Salter, Mark, 985, 986

Saltmarsh, Kathy, 811

Saltzman, Bettylu, 472, 481, 807

- and anti-Iraq war rally, 778, 779, 1034
- and Obama campaign funding, 785, 814, 840, 885
- and Obama congressional campaign, 666
- and Palmer congressional campaign, 517

Salz, Kenji, 92, 93, 94, 104, 106, 484 same-sex marriage, 561, 633, 637, 845, 846

- Biden support for, 1062
- Obama positions on, 865, 875, 887, 923, 925, 949, 992, 993, 1004, 1030, 1060
- Obama support for, 1062

Sampson, Al, 254–55, 257, 284, 315

Samuels, David, 1049

Samuels, Mark, 845

Samuels, Summer, 690–91, 698, 704

Samuelson, Robert, 1041

San Antonio v. Rodriguez (1973), 487

Sandburg, Carl, 191

Sandoval, Martin, 868

Sanger, David, 1066

Sangmeister, George, 553

Sarmina, Teresa, 349

Sarrafan, Sima, 340

Sasono, Adi, 182

Sater, Greg, 335, 340, 341–42, 344, 358

Satter, Beryl, 282–83

Sautter, Chris, 579–80, 688, 695, 699

- and Obama missed gun-control vote, 688
- pessimism about Obama congressional campaign, 669, 675, 678, 679–80, 699, 700, 705
- and viability of Obama U.S. Senate candidacy, 755–56

Savage, Bonnie, 355, 356
Savage, Gus, 275, 306, 406, 407, 471, 472, 669
Save Our Jobs Committee (SOJC), 9–14, 18, 29, 34, 38, 239, 284 celebratory rally, 559–60
    MacArthur grant to, 640
    Mayor Washington sympathy with, 213, 221
    and UNO first protest, 11
Sawyer, Diane, 935, 1040–50, 1054
Sawyer, Eugene, 206, 292, 294, 616
    and aide’s ethnic slurs, 314–15
    Daley’s defeat of, 374, 465
    as Mayor Washington’s successor, 292, 294, 306, 308, 311 and waste management task force, 307, 310, 322–23
SBC Communications, 823
SCA Chemical Services, 16, 21, 305
Scalia, Antonin, 576, 615, 975
Scanlon, James M., 563, 564
Scates, Steve and Kappy, 610
Schakowsky, Jan, 694, 753, 789, 967
    endorsement of Obama, 857, 858, 862, 863, 872, 878, 898
    and Obama’s gay-rights position, 864
    and poll results, 762, 763, 764
Schapiro, Andy, 378, 386, 390, 400, 700
    Law Review satiric Revue, 407–8
Scheiber, Noam, 921, 1071
Scheid, Bernard “Benny,” 19, 20
Scheiner, David L., 262, 547, 916
Scheinman, Bill, 43, 54
Scheper, Scott, 370–71
Schiavo, Christine, 1007
Schieffer, Bob, 933, 987, 1066, 1071, 1073
Schiff, Robbin, 515
Schilling, Warner, 161
Schlafly, Phyllis, 127
Schmich, Mary, 208, 802
Schmidt, Jeanne Reynolds, 536. See also Reynolds, Jeanne Schmidt, John R., 478, 505, 563, 610, 618, 723 and attorney general bid, 740
    and gubernatorial race, 623, 740, 833 and Illinois Project VOTE! fund-raising, 472, 476 and Obama’s campaign funding, 638, 785, 814

and Obama's congressional bid, 662, 669

and Obama's unfinished manuscript, 483, 484

Schmitz, Paul, 567

Schmoyer, Shannon, 336, 340, 356

Schneider, Barbara, 378, 390, 414

Schneier, Ned, 184

Schnider, Robert A., 924

Schoenberg, Jeff, 518, 807, 868, 918, 939

Schoenburg, Bernard, 642, 915, 919, 942, 977, 991

and Obama's 2004 DNC speech, 932

and Obama's controversial missed vote in state Senate, 688 and Obama's youthful drug use, 853, 862

Schofield, Doug, 803

Schofield Barracks (Hawaii) party, 88–89, 535–36, 543 school reform, 203, 281, 289, 290, 405, 524, 546, 547

and Donald Moore, 715–16, 867

and foundation funding, 509–11

and Illinois state funding, 588

Obama ideas about, 633, 696, 697, 730, 732, 987

and Raby, 303, 322

and UNO, 265–66, 283, 303–4, 316–18, 322, 350

school vouchers, 697, 833–34

Schopp, George, 19, 20, 21, 199, 208, 209, 210, 248

and landfill rally, 307, 308

Schultz, Connie, 1010

Schultz, Robert, 63

Schumann Foundation, 540

Schumer, Chuck, 992, 994

Schumer, Ellen, 242, 508, 517, 521, 549, 558, 563

Schumpeter, Joseph, 450

Schwartz, Michael, 112

Schweickart, Karen, 753

Schweitzer, Albert, 228

Scott, Hal, 355

Scott, Jackie, 388, 396

Scott, Janny, 56, 58, 80

Scott, Jason, 488, 489, 567

Scott, Rob, 781, 822

Scully, Steve, 1052

seat-belt bill, 799, 811, 829

Second Amendment, 632, 806, 911, 949

Secter, Bob, 870
Sederstrom, Scott, 275
Seeger, Kristen, 724
Seidman, Gary, 179
Seidman, William, 284
Seliga, Joe, 706
Senate Agriculture Committee, 960
Senate Banking Committee, 284
Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, 963, 976, 1012
Senate Finance Committee, 960
Senate Foreign Relations Committee, 960, 963, 967, 971, 973, 976–77, 1013
    Rice testimony on Iraq war “surge,” 1023
Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee, 1013
Senate Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee, 1013
Senate Intelligence Committee, 1072
Senate Judiciary Committee, 960
Senate Rules Committee, 986
Senate Veterans Affairs Committee, 963, 967, 976, 987–88
September 11 attacks (2001), 742–43, 747–48, 1042
Serdiuk, Claire and Jack Ryan as competitive candidate, 907 and Obama DNC after-party, 941 on Obama family postelection vacation, 901, 903 and Obama fund-raising expansion, 847, 906
    and Obama U.S. Senate campaign, 910
    and Obama U.S. Senate primary campaign, 777, 784, 792, 796–97, 799–800, 805, 806, 836, 841 and Rezko approach to campaign funding, 869–70 Service Employees International Union (SEIU), 795, 796, 806, 810, 823–24
    endorsement of Obama, 853, 864, 866
    and Obama U.S. Senate campaign, 827, 828, 832, 833, 849, 855
Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals. See U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit
Severns, Penny, 620, 640
Sex Rebel: Black—Memoirs of a Gash Gourmet (Davis), 71, 229
Sexton, Brenda, 842, 843, 878, 879, 881–84, 888, 891 affidavit on Hull’s violence, 882–83, 884 sexual harassment suit, 565, 634–35 sexual orientation. See gay and lesbian rights Shachtman, Lisa, 167, 170
Shadid, George, 594, 658
Shadow, Susan, 784, 906, 910, 913, 922, 942
Shadur, Milton, 512, 565

Shah, Tarak, 838, 900, 968
Shalom, Silvan, 982
Shapiro, David L., 332, 333, 334, 339, 349
Shapiro, Walter, 1000, 1017
Sharon, Ariel, 982
Sharp, Al, 731
Shaw, Bill, 306, 503, 504, 538, 649, 657, 739
Shaw, Robert, 263, 292, 315, 407
Sheehan, Michael, 933–34, 936
Sher, Susan, 464, 535, 662, 737
Sherman, Adam, 111–12
Sherman, Scott, 347
Shields, Purnell “Southside,” 365
Shields, Steve, 823
Shockley, Evie, 362, 363
Shomon, Dan
    background of, 577, 593
    and Chicago Law Bulletin profile of Obama, 605 and death of mother, 797, 805 and discord with Gibbs, 921–22
    and driver for Obama, 847, 854
    and Halvorson state Senate campaign, 577, 593, 868 and Hull-Sexton divorce issue, 882 and issue of Obama’s unusual name, 756 on Jones as factor in Obama political success, 960 and Michelle Obama disdain for politics, 674, 708 and Obama campaign finances, 738, 747, 988
    and Obama congressional campaign, 661–62, 666–69, 675–82, 687–90, 697, 700, 705, 707–9, 713, 719, 789, 868
    and Obama discriminatory-credit-scoring bill, 642, 651, 653 and Obama dislike of state legislature, 659, 711 and Obama Joyce Foundation presidency candidacy, 750, 751
    and Obama missed gun-control vote, 687, 688
    and Obama road trip through southern Illinois, 610–11 Obama’s personal bond with, 781–82 and Obama’s self-discipline problem, 688–89, 920
    and Obama’s smoking, 921
    and Obama’s state Senate issues committee, 717–18, 726 and Obama’s stress, 854–55
    as Obama state Senate aide, 593–94, 596, 605, 606, 610–11 and Obama state Senate reelection campaign, 632, 637

Obama statewide candidacy promotion, 721

and Obama U.S. Senate primary, 755, 756, 762, 777, 780, 781, 784, 786, 789, 792, 793, 795, 799–800, 805–6, 812, 820, 821, 827, 836, 837, 857, 883, 898 and professional campaign advisers for U.S. Senate campaign, 906 and Rezko problem, 869

viewing on television of Obama's DNC keynote speech, 941

as vital to Obama's political success, 637, 1050

Shooting of Big Man, The (TV documentary), 435–36

Shribman, David, 480

Siddiqi, Sohale

on change in Obama, 150, 159

Genevieve Cook's affair with, 208, 228

on Obama's closeness with grandparents, 152–53

Obama's shared New York apartment with, 131, 140, 143, 144, 145, 172, 173, 174, 176, 189–90

Sidley & Austin, 230, 276, 329, 348–49, 362–63, 366, 417–18, 465

Dohrn association with, 546

guests at Obama wedding from, 478, 480

Michelle Robinson employment by, 366, 381, 417, 454, 463, 546

Minow as senior partner of, 357, 591

Obama job offer from, 417–18, 454, 462, 463, 465

Obama possible positions with, 647

Obama summer job with, 348–49, 351, 357, 360–61, 380

Siegel, Martin, 344

Sierra Club, 240, 862

Siff, Scott, 388, 413, 436, 438, 439, 453

Signator, Mike, 889–90, 920, 928

Silva, Dina, 120, 121, 138

Silverstein, Ira, 638, 642, 754

and amendatory budget vetoes, 766

and Obama's religious beliefs, 909–10

Simari, Fred, 23, 29, 33, 205–9, 223, 481

on meaning of community organizing to Obama, 313

Simmons, Adele Smith, 509, 517, 779

Simmons, Jamal, 910

Simmons, John, 823, 830

Simon, Jeanne, 697

Simon, Paul, 28, 34, 404, 472, 508, 512, 577, 757

and campaign finance reform, 588, 611, 612, 617, 619, 623, 628, 630, 764, 888

daughter's TV ad endorsing Obama, 879–80, 881, 883–84, 891

death of, 857

on Illinois statehouse corruption, 582–84

on Obama as “rising star,” 871, 881, 891

on Obama election challenge to Rush, 667

Obama relationship with, 634, 697, 698, 709, 721, 765, 790, 816, 830, 863

on strong political convictions, 1063 successful Senate campaign of, 774

Trotter compared with, 660 on U.S. Senate primary candidates, 828, 829, 893

Simon, Sheila, 698, 857, 879–80, 881, 883–84, 891, 898, 905

Simon & Schuster, 431–32, 482, 490, 491

Simpson, Alan, 1059

Simpson, Dick, 693

Simpson, O. J., 544

Sinaga, Fermina Katarina, 64

Sinclair, David A., 52

Singer, Linda, 409, 410 single-payer health care, 776, 916–17, 932

Sinsheimer, Joe, 826

Sipes, Chris, 425, 438

Sirota, David, 993

Siskind, Sarah, 494, 561–62

Siverly, Bryan, 821

Sixteenth Street Baptist Church (Birmingham), 948

Skaggs, David, 661

Skinner, Gary, 206

Skinner, Nancy

and Iraq war, 880

televised debate, 848, 849

U.S. Senate primary, 831, 833, 844, 857

U.S. Senate primary results, 900

Slevin, Jack, 512–13

Slifkin, Daniel, 389, 421

Smail, David, 356, 399

Small Schools Network, 612–13

Smiley, Tavis, 715, 910–11, 942, 957–58, 975, 1008, 1038

Smith, Callie, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227

Smith, Dean, 96

Smith, Harry, 1039

Smith, Hendrick, 155

Smith, Irv, 887

Smith, Kenneth B. (pastor), 256

Smith, Kenny (law student), 336, 343

Smith, Margaret, 595, 596, 600, 652, 739
Smith, Nathan, 856
Smith, Pam, 820, 840–41, 859–60, 877, 910
Smith, Rik, 84–85
Smith, Scott, 409
Smith, Zirl, 224, 225, 226–27, 235, 244, 311
Smoot, Julianna, 1003–4
Smooth Operator (film), 105
Smylie, Mark, 648
Sneed, Michael, 757, 761, 878, 882
Snider, Bill, 120, 121, 122, 124
Sniderman, Paul M., 614
Snowden, Edward, 1065
Snyder, Laurence H., 47
Social Investment Forum of Chicago, 665
Socialist Scholars Conference, 158, 159 social justice Catholicism, 238, 318
Social Security, 1038
Social Theory (Unger), 447
Society of the Divine Word, 30, 236
Socratic method, 333, 497
Soetoro, Ann. See Dunham, Ann
Soetoro, Lolo (stepfather), 57–58, 61–62, 63–64, 94
    Ann Dunham’s disillusionment with, 73
    Ann Dunham’s divorce from, 105, 118–19
    death of, 260
    Dreams From My Father portrayal of, 73, 528–29, 729 emotional control of, 73, 529, 729
    as Obama influence, 72–74
Soetoro-Ng, Maya Kassandra (sister), 470, 493, 789
    birth of, 72
    and birth of baby Suhaila, 945
    Chicago visits, 272–73, 615, 696, 737 childhood of, 81–82, 85, 89, 94, 118, 119 “drop-dead gorgeous” description of, 348 education of, 139, 175, 214, 478–79, 510, 861 and European trip with Obamas, 564–65 and family Christmas celebrations in Hawaii, 379, 380, 641, 723, 963, 1021 and family Scrabble games, 950–51, 963, 1040 and grandmother’s death, 1050 marriage to Konrad Ng, 861, 945

- and mother's cancer, 540
- and mother's death, 549, 1051
- and mother's dissertation dedication, 470
- in New York, 144, 214, 276, 404, 420, 510, 540, 615
- and Obama as "Barry," 122, 295
- Obama's appreciation of, 181
- on Obama's Law Review presidency, 394
- at Obama's law school Halloween party, 347, 348
- and Obama's marriage, 478, 479, 493, 737
- and Obama's presidential candidacy decision, 1021, 1022
- and Obama's presidential election, 1050
- and Obama's U.S. Senate win, 898, 957
- reaction to Obama's speech on race, 1043

Solid Waste Management Task Force, 35, 234, 310–11

Solis, Danny, 22, 241, 265, 287, 405

- and Daley machine, 623, 807

- and IAF training event, 230–31

- and school reform, 235–36, 295, 303, 316, 317, 322, 405

Solow, Alan, 816, 841–42

Solyom, Bron, 484, 485

Solyom, Garrett, 484, 485

Song, Unmi, 749

Song of Solomon (Morrison), 110, 695

Sorkin, Jerry, 341

Soros, George, 892, 904, 922, 923, 1015

Sotomayor, Sonia, 1052

Soule, Whitman, 80, 514, 654

Souter, David H., 1052

South Carolina primary, 1041

South Chicago Savings Bank, 6, 35, 290, 299–300

South Deering, 38, 240

- as essence of Rust Belt, 199, 211, 262

South Deering Improvement Association (SDIA), 17, 210

Southeast Chicago Development Commission (SEDCOM), 276

Southeast Side, 8–18, 21–24, 38, 213, 216, 234–35

Southern Christian Leadership Conference, 126, 254, 440

Southern Illinois University, 617, 720

Southern Illinois University Public Policy Institute, 612, 635

South Shore, 1, 2, 362, 364, 459, 462, 492, 571

South Shore Cultural Center (SSCC), 418–19, 479

- Obama fund-raiser at, 738, 747, 755

South Side. See Far South Side

South Side Irish Parade, 701

South Side United Neighbors, 32

South Side YMCA, 666, 716

South Suburban Action Conference (SSAC), 223, 238, 351, 406, 473–74

South Works, 18–19, 21, 24, 38, 207, 251, 253, 303 final layoff, 233–34, 236, 238

Souza, Pete, 1057

Sowell, Thomas, 193–94

Speer, Edgar, 7

Speller, Julia M., 256, 258

Spencer Foundation, 509, 510, 523

Spiegel, David, 760

Spitz, Jennifer Amdur, 779

Spiva, Bruce, 421, 423, 438, 442, 443, 776, 831

Spivak, Todd, 908

Stanback, Howard, 206, 275–76, 290, 294, 591, 625, 664
    and landfill issue, 299, 300, 306–7, 308, 310, 311
    as Woods Fund chair, 669

Stanford, Karin, 665

Stanley, Henry M., 48

Starks, Robert, 552, 553, 558, 562, 563

State Government Operations Committee (Ill.), 596

State Universities Retirement System (SURS), 183, 736, 851

Stathis, Maria, 179

Stauter, Jeff, 571–72, 661

Stavropoulos, Demitri, 990

Stazak, Don, 208

Steele, Shelby, 477, 1051

steel mills. See LTV (Ling-Temco-Vought) steel mill; South Works; Wisconsin Steel closure

Steffen, Peter, 719–20

Stell, Kathy, 541, 548, 558, 559, 576, 674

Stenger, Boyd, 944

Stenzel, Bill, 23, 24, 28, 29, 209, 212, 260, 266, 267
    Obama friendship with, 236, 298

Stephanopoulos, George, 939, 946, 974, 1044

Stevens, John Paul, 1056

Stevens, Judy, 250

Stevens, Sandi, 462. See also Jackson, Sandi

Stewart, Russ, 904, 911

Stokes, Ronald A. X., 376, 435

Stolberg, Sheryl Gay, 986, 1057
Stolorow, Adam, 841, 896, 906, 933
Stone, Geoffrey “Geof,” 454, 466, 565, 566, 575, 828
Stone, Randolph, 466, 617
Storm, Hannah, 935, 962
Stover, Dave, 781
Stradt, Ron, 822
Strahler, Steven, 749
Strassman, Marc, 534
Stratton, William, 588
Strausberg, Chinta, 244, 553, 609, 703, 707, 739, 741, 800, 804, 806
    Obama interviews, 747–48, 762, 773, 778, 816
Strauss, David, 496–97, 675
Strauss, Paul, 478, 499, 659, 667, 785
Street, Paul, 1048
Streeter, Allan, 503, 504, 538
Stroessner, Alfredo, 410
Stroger, John, 460, 503–4, 517, 522, 527, 656, 813, 901
    Claypool election challenge to, 989 and Rezko dealings, 969, 970 and Rush congressional campaign, 674, 678 and Trotter’s political career, 660, 670, 674, 689
Stroger, Todd, 660
Strossen, Nadine, 435
Stroud, Joseph, 753
Student Coalition Against Apartheid (SCAA), 114, 122, 127
Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), 184
Students Against Militarism, 157
Students for a Democratic Campus, 159
Sturgies, Eva, 29, 221, 230, 238, 239
    Dreams From My Father portrayal of, 530
Suarjana, Made, 380, 420
Subrin, Stephen H., 332, 358
Suffredin, Larry, 519–20, 658, 675, 759, 857
Sugini, Cecilia, 64
Suh, Sung-Hee, 358
Sullivan, Dave, 642, 654, 704, 895, 928, 1077, 1078
Sullivan, Greg, 594, 799
Sullivan, Heather, 711
Sullivan, Jerry, 200
Sullivan, John, 780

Sullivan, Kathleen (law professor), 355, 413–14, 455
Sullivan, Kathy (politician), 1012
Sulzer, Ken, 111, 113, 125
Summers, Larry, 974, 1051–52, 1063
Sunstein, Cass, 785, 927, 1049
Supple, Chuck, 567
Supreme Court, Illinois. See Illinois Supreme Court
Supreme Court, U.S., 95, 216, 368, 379, 415, 471, 579, 730
    Alito appointed to, 979, 983 civil rights record, 725–26
    gender cases, 614–15
    importance of clerkships, 392, 417–18
    Kagan appointed to, 1056
    Law Review issue on, 412, 413–14, 420–21, 426 on political funding, 419 presidential election of 2000 ruling, 722, 724 race-related decisions, 487, 614
    Roberts appointed to, 975–76, 979–80
    Sotomayor appointed to, 1052
    See also specific cases
Suryakusuma, Julia, 380, 381–82
Suskind, Ron, 1052, 1053, 1057
Sussman, Arthur, 568
Sutherland, Pam, 601, 602–3, 806, 891, 916
Sutoro, Ann. See Dunham, Ann
Sutton, Nate, 673
Swarthmore College, 107, 167, 168
Sweeny, Chuck, 855–56, 1001
Sweet, Lynn, 667, 949, 958, 965, 983, 992, 997 and Obama-McCain dispute, 985–86 on Obama presidential candidacy, 999 and Obama’s state Senate records, 1038
Syverson, Dave, 595–96, 607, 627, 653, 682, 814–15, 926, 945, 1077
Szarek, Amy, 666, 667, 675, 682, 704, 755, 781

Talabani, Jalal, 982
Talbot, Madeline, 474, 475, 477
    and ACORN, 32, 34, 201, 220, 493, 650, 664
    and “Future of Organizing” panel, 501, 502–3
    interviewed about Obama, 554
    and New Party, 493, 494, 522, 562
    and Obama’s political career, 739

and Obama's state Senate campaign, 561–62

Tallmer, Matt, 912

Tamarin, Nate, 812, 813, 820, 829, 836, 837, 884, 920 and Obama campaign field operations, 857, 861, 889, 896

and Obama PAC, 968

and U.S. Senate general election, 907

Tanden, Neera, 1055

Tavares, Larry, 84, 96

Tavenner, Marilyn, 1075

Taylor, Robert R., 30, 464, 475

Taylor, Stuart, 814

Teachers' Retirement System, 723, 726, 761

Teamsters Union, 821, 823, 879

Techy Towers, 236, 263, 287, 311–12

Tempting of America, The (Bork), 415

Terkel, Studs, 180

terrorism, 742–43, 747–48, 846, 990, 1014

Terry, Don, 953–54

Thacker, Thom, 347, 348

This Week (ABC), 946, 960

Thomas, Clarence, 471, 614, 856, 975

Thomas, Danny, 517

Thomas, Rosa, 269, 270, 297, 316

Thomas, Ted, 650, 664, 669, 677, 816

Thompson, Bill, 533

Thompson, Darrel, 525, 526, 910, 920

and Obama DNC speech, 923, 928, 931, 937, 938, 941

and Obama fund-raising parties, 927–28

Thompson, James R. "Big Jim," 16–17, 34, 205–6, 207, 210, 280

Thompson, Kevin, 478, 812, 852, 889, 903

as Obama's personal "body man," 906, 910, 920–22

Thummalapally, Vinai, 115, 120, 478

Thune, John, 957

Thurmond, Strom, 788

Tibbetts, Ed, 961

Tilly, Laura, 478, 479, 486, 498, 499, 504

Time for XII program, 22–23, 39

Time magazine, 118, 394, 929, 961, 991, 993, 1049, 1054

Obama cover story, 1001–2

Obama profile, 986

Times Books, 501, 510, 511, 515, 527, 528, 532

acquisition of Dreams From My Father, 490–91, 494

Titcomb, Bobby, 92–93, 101, 102, 103, 175

Dreams From My Father portrayal of, 529, 536

Obama's relationship with, 181–82, 285

as Obama wedding guest, 478

Tith, Naranhkiri, 54

Today Show (NBC), 930, 935, 957, 1018, 1032

Todd, Chuck, 1052, 1055, 1065, 1066, 1070

Toker, Anne, 389, 396, 397, 437, 438

Topinka, Judy Baar, 832, 895, 915, 919, 925, 926, 927

Topolinski, Tom "Topo," 88, 91–94, 96–97, 100–101, 104, 536

Torielli, Gina, 335, 341, 346, 382, 435

Torres, Maria, 520, 643, 734

Torrey, Bob, 90

Torrey, Joyce Kang, 83

Torrey, Kent, 90, 94, 100, 106

torture, 976, 1051, 1072, 1073

Totenberg, Nina, 285

Toutonghi, Mary, 53–54

toxic chemical waste, 16, 21, 200, 248, 273–75

Toxic Victims Access to Justice bill (NY), 186, 187

Trask, Andrew, 615

Travis, Carole, 569, 570, 571, 603

Travis, Dempsey J., 663

Treadwell, Jimmy, 593

TreeHouse Foods, 973, 990, 1017, 1032

Tribe, Laurence H., 348, 354, 392, 399, 408, 417, 599

Constitutional Law course, 358, 370–71, 381, 388

constitutional paradigm seminar, 400–401

first meeting with Obama, 357

Harvard Law Review essay, 376–77, 379

Obama and Fisher relationship with, 357, 371, 376–77, 379, 382, 385–86, 401, 447, 456

Obama campaign contribution from, 668

on Obama's Law Review presidency, 394

On Reading the Constitution, 401

teaching style of, 371

Trinity United Church of Christ, 255–59, 289, 297, 324, 697, 941

and "Black Value System," 257

membership increase, 256–58

Obama association with, 417, 468, 849, 1046

as Obama presidential candidacy issue, 1026, 1027, 1044, 1045

Obamas as members of, 469, 470, 493, 651, 1041, 1046, 1047

Obamas' charitable giving to, 990, 1044

Obamas' poor attendance at, 567, 634, 742, 813, 909

Obamas' withdrawal from, 1047

and Obama U.S. Senate campaign, 848–50, 859, 873, 874, 891, 957

Obama wedding at, 479

preeminence of, 743

and Project VOTE! and, 474, 475

See also Wright, Jeremiah A., Jr.

Trisulo, "Sonny," 64

Trop, Harriet, 564, 643

Trotter, Donne, 460, 582, 586, 619, 799 animus toward Obama, 598, 600, 604, 606, 658, 768, 808, 868 appointment to state Senate, 471

and children's health insurance program, 627

and congressional primary bid, 659–60, 664, 666, 667, 670, 674, 675, 678–80, 683, 688–90, 693, 697, 698, 701–10

and Democratic politics, 745

and election of Mayor Washington, 263, 306 and Obama's physical confrontation with Hendon, 768 and Palmer state Senate seat, 462, 471, 558, 563

on Philip's racist speech, 586

and pork-barrel funding, 753

and state Senate influence, 739

Troutman, Arenda, 335, 518, 678

Troutt, David, 342, 346, 347, 348, 356, 455

Trump, Donald, 452

Tucker, Stacy Monahan, 718–19

Turner, Art, 601

Turow, Scott, 570, 574, 606, 659, 675, 783, 787, 841

on Obama as exemplar of American diversity, 911 on Obama's religious faith, 910

Tutu, Desmond, 434, 997, 999

Udall, Mark, 1072

Ujima (black student group), 115, 127, 128, 136

Ullman, Howard, 422, 438

Unbearable Lightness of Being (film), 301

"Underground" (Obama), 133, 134

Unger, Jonathan, 155

Unger, Roberto Mangabeira, 328, 382–83, 400, 401, 449, 457 disappointment in Obama's presidency, 1062

Reinventing Democracy course, 447–48

Union Oil Company, 73, 94

Unitarian Universalist Association (UUA), 59

United Auto Workers (UAW), 2–3, 477, 813

United Church of Christ, 256

United Citizens Organization (UCO), 223

United Neighborhood Organization (UNO) of Southeast Chicago, 10–15, 18–20, 28, 29, 36, 198, 248, 374

and Alinsky-style tactics, 307–8, 323

annual dinner, 240–41

candidate forum, 34

and Daley campaign, 623

founding and expansion of, 10–12, 14, 22

and Gamaliel Foundation, 235–36, 241, 242, 405

and Hispanic neighborhoods, 210, 405

IAF training sessions, 230–31 landfill protests, 210, 240, 262–63, 267, 276, 290, 299–300, 306–11

and Parent Community Council, 295

power struggles within, 405

and school reform movement, 265, 283, 303–4, 316, 317, 322, 350

suit against EPA, 200

transformation of, 323

United Steelworkers (USW), 2, 9, 18, 21–22

United Steelworkers Local 1033, 38, 206, 207, 211, 213, 251, 309 and new LTV contract vote, 221 and strike, 233–34

universal health care

Illinois Constitution proposed amendment, 620

Obama advocacy, 691, 697, 783, 787, 827, 839, 849, 865, 916, 921, 923, 1025, 1034, 1040

single-payer proposal, 776, 916–17, 932

University of Chicago, 567–68, 570, 577, 634, 643, 736

University of Chicago Law Review, 412–13, 444

University of Chicago Law School (UCLS), 577, 711, 779–80

black students, 487, 637, 718

conservatism of, 575, 914

Constitutional Law III course, 566, 575–76, 579–80, 603, 614–15, 637, 673, 718–19, 745, 753, 780, 847, 856, 914

and “day in Springfield” auction prize, 611, 732–33

Obama faculty appointment, 454–55, 466, 475–76, 489, 521, 564, 566, 708, 764, 835, 837

Obama nonideological agenda, 745

Obama resignation from, 959

Obama salary, 625, 814, 914

Obama-student relations, 745–46, 914

privilege of attending, 746

Racism and the Law course, 475–76, 486–88, 494, 496–98, 514–15, 566, 603, 613–14, 615, 637, 673, 718–19, 745, 753, 780, 847, 849, 856, 914

teaching approach and syllabus, 497, 719, 724, 752

Voting Rights course, 566, 579, 618, 641–42, 724, 752, 753, 789, 803

white male dominance, 718, 745

University of Chicago Library, 454

University of Chicago Medical Center, 737

Michelle Obama job, 737, 749, 814, 969, 990, 1017, 1048

Michelle Obama part-time leave from, 1026, 1029

University of Hawaii

Ann Dunham at, 57, 63

Ann Dunham graduate study at, 82, 85, 175

East-West Center, 61

Lolo Soetoro at, 58

Maya Soetoro at, 478–79, 493, 861

Obama Sr. at, 45–48, 51, 53, 54–56, 79

University of Illinois, 36, 303

University of Illinois at Chicago, 509, 546–47

University of Illinois Chicago Circle campus (UICC), 281, 283, 292, 316

University of Massachusetts, Obama commencement address, 993, 994

University of Washington (UDub), 49, 50, 292

Ann Dunham's year at, 53–54, 56, 81

USAID, 105, 139, 214

USA Patriot Act. See Patriot Act

U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, 391

U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, 498, 512, 559, 566, 729–30, 735, 754

U.S. Steel, 7, 12, 208, 234, 238

South Works closure, 1–2, 18–19, 21–22, 28, 38, 233

U.S. Supreme Court. See Supreme Court, U.S.

Vader, Tony, 29–30

Vallas, Paul, 523–24, 612, 645

and Democratic gubernatorial race, 740, 745, 748, 752, 754, 762

Vandermyde, Todd, 806

Van Der Slik, Jack, 641

Van Fossen, Doyle, 113–14

Vanity Fair, 963, 1061–62

Obama profile, 1067

Van Zanten, Donna, 26, 36, 37

Van Zanten, Kent, 37
Van Zanten, Tony, 26, 36, 266
Vasquez, Felix, 38
Vaughn, Jacqueline, 280
Vayda, Pete, 185, 533, 540
Verdict, The (film), 724
Viall, Ralph, 24, 28, 29
Victims' Economic Security and Safety Act (VESSA) (Ill.), 801, 887
Victims of Groupthink (Janis), 146
Victor, Kirk, 987–88
videotaped-police-interrogation bill, 487, 798–99, 801, 804, 811, 812, 825 state Senate passage of, 819, 830, 831, 867, 891
Vietor, Tommy, 910, 942, 944
Village of Arlington Heights v. Metropolitan Housing Development Corporation (1977), 487 Vilsack, Tom, 755
Vinson, Brenda, 167
Vitas, Daniel “Muscles,” 14
Viverito, Lou, 545, 600, 652, 713, 725, 759, 868
Vogel, Ezra, 328
von Hoffman, Nicholas, 8
Vorenberg, James, 328, 329
Voting Rights Act (1965), 216, 579, 661, 739
Vrdolyak, Edward R. “Fast Eddie,” 2, 17–21, 38, 291, 535 conflict with Mayor Washington, 210, 216, 220–21, 240, 251, 263, 292
    and dumping moratorium, 28, 29, 35
    and landfill, 240, 274, 276, 300 and mayoral election defeats, 263, 374
    Sawyer characterization of, 292, 308
Vukojevic, Joe, 299

Wade, Deloris, 969
Waits, Tom, 111
Walder, Andrew W., 154–55
Wallace, Chris, 1045
Wallace-Wells, Benjamin, 953, 1026–27
Waller, Isabella, 239, 249, 266
Walley, Christine, 23–24
Wall Street Journal, 980, 994, 1020, 1031
Wall Street Project, 665, 1023
Wal-Mart, 1017
Walpole All-Stars, 435
Walpole (Mass.) State Prison, 376

Walsh, Joan, 1055

Walsh, Larry, 1077

- and county executive win, 956
- on Obama's frustration with state Senate, 659
- and Obama's U.S. Senate candidacy, 759, 792, 868
- and poker games, 603, 604, 621, 651, 652

Walsh, Terry, 778, 812, 819, 820, 837, 864, 891

- analysis of Obama U.S. Senate campaign strategy, 789, 800, 903–4, 913

Walsh, Tom, 621–22, 652, 687, 907, 939

Walters, Barbara, 1060

Wan, Pauline, 378, 390

Wang, Audrey, 386

Wansley, Ty, 535

Ware, Judy Farner, 56

Warfel, Justin, 919

WARN (Worker Adjustment and Retraining Notification) Act (1998), 727

Warren, Alvin, 382, 399, 415

Warren, Elizabeth, 854, 927

Warren, Rick, 1015

Warren Court (1960s), 96, 725–26

Washington, Booker T., 487, 560

Washington, Grover, Jr., 89, 100, 455

Washington, Harold, 221, 240, 245, 294, 380, 406, 518, 645

- administration problems, 215–16
- and Altgeld asbestos, 217, 224, 225
- and Career Education Network, 264, 266
- and CHA problems, 244
- charisma of, 271, 293, 373, 1036
- and Chicago bribery scandal, 215–16
- and Chicago schools, 279, 280, 281, 283, 540
- as Chicago's first black mayor, 18, 202, 222, 312, 313, 460, 541, 954
- city council conflict with, 209–10
- and coalition renewal, 494
- and CPD, 229–30
- disillusion following death of, 52, 313, 459
- Education Summit, 281, 292, 316
- and Far West Side jobs center, 261
- fatal heart attack of, 290–92, 294
- Jackson Jr. seen as successor, 894
- and landfill issue, 19–20, 29, 34–36, 234, 274, 275, 276, 307–8, 311
- legacy of, 482

loyal supporters, 253, 522, 896 and mayoral reelection campaign, 234, 250, 251, 257, 263, 481
Obama's admiration for, 202, 292–93, 345, 548, 705
Obama's critique of, 373, 374, 555
Obama's politics as legacy of, 288–89, 663, 668, 852, 893, 896, 900
PCR speech of, 248
political office progression of, 519 political opponents of, 230 and RCDC, 261–63
and Roseland decline, 36
Sawyer as successor, 292, 294, 306, 308, 310
Task Force on Solid Waste Management, 234 Task Force on Steel, 212–13
and UNO, 207, 210, 265, 266
and Wisconsin Steel laid-off workers, 13

Washington, Harriet, 1046

Washington, Joe, 266, 281

Washington, Joyce, 740, 754, 797, 798

backers of, 862

Iraq war position, 880 petition validity, 857, 860–61

poll results, 802, 835, 885

televised debate, 848

and U.S. Senate primary, 528–29, 800, 817, 828–29, 833, 837, 842, 844 and U.S. Senate primary results, 900

Washington, Laura, 481, 792, 830, 845, 1022, 1030

Washington Heights, 239

Washington Post

Obama coauthored op-ed, 980

on Obama presidency failures, 1059, 1066

on Obama presidential campaign, 1029–30, 1032, 1036, 1038

on Obama presidential potential, 993–94, 1011, 1019 praise for Obama's speech on race, 1043

profile of Obama, 969

on Republican midterm (2014) sweep, 1071

on Wright, 1046

Washington Times, 1019

Washington v. Davis (1976), 487

Wasik, John, 6

Waste Management Incorporated (WMI), 16–20, 240, 248–49, 262–64

and community trust, 307

and employees' misconduct, 305–6 and political scandal, 215–16

See also Calumet Industrial District (CID) landfill

Wathen, Tom, 187, 376

Watkins, Paul, 533

Watson, Carlos, 954

Watson, Frank, 592, 606, 722, 787, 907, 915, 919, 960

Watson, Kevin, 837, 854, 855, 875, 877, 889–90, 907, 910

Waugh, Malcolm, 74

Weatherly-Williams, Dawna, 72, 95

Weather Underground, 546, 569, 743, 1044

Weaver, Stan, 596, 682

Webb, Jim, 1010

Webb, Lori-Christina, 421, 437, 438

Webb, Tim, 489

Weber, Arnold, 511

Weber, Max, 426

Webster, John, 253, 318, 1058

Webster, Kimetha, 252–53

Wechsler, Herbert, 424

Weddington, Wayne, 160

Weekly Standard, 1032

Weightman, Wayne, 92, 104

Weinberger, Michael, 386, 391, 412, 432

Weisberg, Jacob, 994–95, 1009

Welch, Pat, 571, 624, 628, 640, 649, 713, 759, 767 welfare reform, 564, 578, 589, 600, 648, 748

    federal, 563, 574, 576, 590, 597, 601, 607

Welton, Chris, 121, 127, 137

Wenner, Jann, 1056

West, Ann, 239, 268–69, 289, 316

West, Cornel, 497, 543, 1069

West, Robin, 412, 423, 426, 429

West, Tommy, 29, 207, 260, 262, 297, 298, 308

Western Illinois University, 780

West Pullman, 25, 212, 239, 266, 268, 269

West Pullman Park, 222

Wettleson, Jeff, 124

Wexner, Abigail, 752

What Is the World Made Of? (Feinberg), 147

Wheatley Child-Parent Center, 217, 244, 248

Wheeler, Charles M., III, 741–42
Wheeler, Esther “Queen Esther,” 32, 34
Wheeler Avenue Baptist Church (Houston), 469
“Where’s Room 185?” (report), 243
Which Side Are You On? (Geoghegan), 570
Whitaker, Eric, 638, 668, 803, 1021, 1027, 1044
White, Jesse, 640, 741
White, Quincy, 463
Whitehead, David, 574
White House Correspondents’ Association annual dinner, 817
Whitelaw, Billie, 172
Whitfield, Rita, 477
Whitman, Gordon, 360, 369, 370, 374–75, 378, 386, 391, 398
    Law Review articles cochair, 390, 412–13
Whitson, Sarah Leah, 331, 335, 340, 347, 371
Wieboldt Foundation, 12, 13, 14, 242, 249, 280, 295, 322, 509
    “Community Organizing Award” ceremony, 576–77
    DCP funding, 239–40, 265, 268, 295, 510
Wiegmann, H. Brad, 344, 356, 358, 399
Wiener, Don, 545, 562, 669, 673
Wilder, Douglas, 961
Wilhelm, David, 412, 713, 729, 846, 898, 900, 916
Wilkins, Ann Marie, 854
Wilkins, David, 329, 330, 337, 404 fund-raiser for Obama, 854
    Law Review article, 412, 414, 429, 432, 439
Wilkins, Roger, 258
Will, George, 1019
Willenson, Marni, 514–15, 729–30
Williams, Andy, 73
Williams, Brian, 940
Williams, Clarence, III, 91
Williams, Grant, 32–33, 34
Williams, Michael, 179
Williams, Patricia, 414, 422, 423, 426, 429, 457
Williams, Paul, 519, 545, 552, 599–600, 662, 769, 962
Williams, Raymond, 156
Williams, Rick, 252, 266, 284, 309–10
Williams, Verna, 328
Williams, Vince, 601, 664
Williams, Walter (CHA manager), 224

Williams, Walter E. (economist), 193–94

Williamson, Alec, 67, 74, 85, 86

Williamson, John S., 67

Williamson, Susan, 67

Wills, Chris, 932, 955

Wilson, Audra, 812, 832, 836, 837, 841, 845, 859–60
departure from Obama campaign staff, 877, 906, 907, 910

Wilson, David, 593

Wilson, Kaye, 495, 535, 703

Wilson, Mary-Ann, 238

Wilson, Wellington, 703, 717

Wilson, William Julius, 286

Wineberg, Harvey, 805

Winfrey, Oprah, 204, 951, 967, 978, 1001
Obama interviews, 1002, 1009, 1054, 1062, 1064–65
O Magazine, 1039 travel to meet Hurricane Katrina evacuees, 974

Winslow, F. Scott, 965

Wirtz, William, 654, 657

Wisconsin Steel closure, 1–21, 24, 28, 207, 217, 231 annual anniversaries, 29, 37–38, 221, 234, 262 empty rusty plant from, 199 and lawsuit resolution, 559–60, 570
“ripple effect layoff” from, 4, 6
Save Our Jobs Committee, 9, 11, 13, 14, 18, 29, 34, 38, 213 settlement with surviving workers, 303, 318

Wojcicki, Ed, 606, 659

Wolf, Arnold Jacob, 547

Wolfe, Alan, 426

Wolff, Paula, 509, 588, 713, 737, 747, 751–52

Wolffe, Richard, 1040–41, 1056, 1058, 1059, 1066, 1078

Wolin, Sheldon, 145

Women’s Law Association (WLA), 355–56, 427

Women’s World Banking, 485, 510

Wonder, Stevie, 100–101, 144, 479

Wondisford, Fredric, 965–66

Wood, Corinne, 739–40, 754

Wood, Diane P., 566

Wood, Sheree Aleta, 420

Wooden, John, 96

Woodlawn Organization, 483

Woodlawn Preservation and Investment Corp., 498

Woods, Donald, 148

Woods, Tiger, 1002

Woods Charitable Fund, 12, 13, 14, 22, 39, 247, 304, 312, 523

- board members, 276, 495, 501, 647, 669, 733
- Career Education Network, 289, 296
- “Community Organizing Award” ceremony, 576–77
- and DCP funding, 219–20, 239, 258, 262, 264, 268, 322
- first black board member, 279
- “Future of Organizing” panel, 501–3, 524
- and Hope Center project, 508, 576
- and Joyce Fund, 749
- Obama board fees, 713
- Obama board resignation, 788
- and Public Allies, 488
- Stanback as chairman, 669
- and UNO grant, 235
- and welfare-to-work program, 576, 578

Woodstock Institute, 284, 717

Woodward, Bob, 1056, 1057, 1063

Woolf, Virginia, 149

Worker Adjustment and Retraining Notification (WARN) Act (1998), 727

Wortham, Carolyn, 269, 289, 470

Worthy Tradition (Kalven), 399

Wright, Janet, 259

Wright, Jeremiah A., Jr., 255–60, 265, 271, 289, 297, 298, 305, 310, 351

- “Audacity of Hope” sermon, 469, 531, 643, 939, 1004
- background of, 255–56
- black Chicago’s regard for, 743
- controversial sermons, 742–43, 813, 1042
- Dreams From My Father* portrayal of, 531
- and fatal shooting of Rush’s son, 677, 678
- “great black preacher” ranking, 493
- and Hope Center workshop, 572
- Obama distancing from, 743, 1030, 1041, 1044
- and Obama presidential candidacy, 1026–27, 1028, 1030, 1042–47
- Obama relationship with, 324, 325, 403, 404, 405, 458, 534, 776, 1030, 1043, 1044
- Obama repudiation of, 1046
- and Obama-Rush congressional primary contest, 698
- and Obama Senate campaign, 848, 849, 873, 891–92, 898, 957
- as Obama’s pastor, 417, 468, 859, 909, 982, 995

and Obama's Senate candidacy, 873 at Obama's Senate swearing-in, 964 as Obama wedding officiant, 479 preaching appeal of, 468–69
and Project VOTE!, 474
racial views of, 1045–47

Rolling Stone article on, 1026–27

Wright, Judith, 454

Wright, Tim, 539, 662

Wycliff, Don, 855

Wyden, Ron, 986

Yanagi, Sharon, 84

Yatsushiro, Aimee, 57

Yeager, Jenny, 922, 968

Yeats, W. H., 148

Yee, Annette, 94, 95, 100

Yehudah, Yesse, 826

and FORUM financial practices, 678–79, 719, 720, 753, 796

Obama state Senate race against, 616, 637, 638, 640

Yepsen, David, 1000

Yi, Eunhee Kim, 245

Young, Quentin, 547, 699, 916, 917

Younge, Gary, 1068

Youngstown Sheet & Tube, 38, 450

Yu, Mary, 220

Yu, Peter, 377–78, 379, 383, 388, 390, 398, 399, 442

and Law Review annual banquet, 408, 409

as Law Review first Asian American president, 353, 360

Zane, Andy “Pake,” 46, 51, 79, 81, 151

Zeigler, Lee, 53

Zeleny, Jeff, 969, 972, 973, 974, 975, 978, 986

and Obama Africa trip, 997

and Obama interviews, 972, 973, 974, 981–82

and Obama presidential candidacy, 1024

Zell, Helen, 885

Zell, Sam, 885

Zeltzerman, Miriam, 965, 966

Zia-ul-Haq, Muhammad, 137

Zimmerman, Al, 31

Zopp, Andrea, 525

Zorn, Eric, 538, 792, 801, 821, 831, 878

on Hull campaign, 881, 883, 891

on Obama 2008 presidential bid, 992 on Obama vs. Hillary Clinton presidential 2008 chances, 967

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

---

David J. Garrow's prior books include Liberty and Sexuality: The Right to Privacy and the Making of Roe v. Wade, a comprehensive history of the American reproductive rights struggle, and Bearing the Cross: Martin Luther King, Jr., and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, which won the Pulitzer Prize in Biography and the Robert F. Kennedy Human Rights Book Award.

Garrow also authored The FBI and Martin Luther King, Jr. and Protest at Selma: Martin Luther King, Jr., and the Voting Rights Act of 1965, and edited The Montgomery Bus Boycott and the Women Who Started It: The Memoir of Jo Ann Gibson Robinson. He coedited The Forgotten Memoir of John Knox: A Year in the Life of a Supreme Court Clerk in FDR's Washington; the Library of America's two-volume Reporting Civil Rights; and The Eyes on the Prize Civil Rights Reader: Documents, Speeches, and Firsthand Accounts from the Black Freedom Struggle and served as a senior adviser for Eyes on the Prize, the award-winning PBS television history of the American black freedom struggle. Garrow has regularly contributed to the Washington Post and the New York Times, and his articles and essays have also appeared in The Atlantic, The New York Review of Books, The New Republic, The Nation, the Los Angeles Times, and Newsweek. His academic writings have been published in The Supreme Court Review, The Yale Law Journal, The University of Chicago Law Review, Cornell Law Review, Virginia Law Review, Vanderbilt Law Review, and Constitutional Commentary. Garrow has taught at Duke University, the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, the City University of New York, Cooper Union, the College of William and Mary, American University, and Emory University, and from 2005 to 2011 he was Senior Research Fellow at Homerton College at the University of Cambridge. Most recently he has been Professor of Law & History and Distinguished Faculty Scholar at the University of Pittsburgh School of Law. Garrow graduated magna cum laude from Wesleyan University and received his Ph.D. from Duke University.

Discover great authors, exclusive offers, and more at hc.com.

ALSO BY DAVID J. GARROW

---

Liberty and Sexuality: The Right to Privacy and the Making of Roe v. Wade

Bearing the Cross: Martin Luther King, Jr., and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference

The FBI and Martin Luther King, Jr.: From “Solo” to Memphis

Protest at Selma: Martin Luther King, Jr., and the Voting Rights Act of 1965

The logo for Bookperk, featuring the word "Bookperk" in a sans-serif font. "Book" is yellow and "perk" is white. The logo is centered within a large, faint white circle on a black background.

Bookperk

Sign up for Bookperk and get e-book bargains, sneak peeks, special offers, and more—delivered straight to your inbox.

SIGN UP NOW

COPYRIGHT

---

RISING STAR. Copyright © 2017 by David J. Garrow. All rights reserved under International and Pan-American Copyright Conventions. By payment of the required fees, you have been granted the nonexclusive, nontransferable right to access and read the text of this e-book on-screen. No part of this text may be reproduced, transmitted, downloaded, decompiled, reverse-engineered, or stored in or introduced into any information storage and retrieval system, in any form or by any means, whether electronic or mechanical, now known or hereafter invented, without the express written permission of HarperCollins e-books.

FIRST EDITION

Cover design by Ploy Siripant
Cover photograph © 1990 John Goodman

Print ISBN 978-0-06-264183-0

Epub Edition May 2017 ISBN 9780062641854

ABOUT THE PUBLISHER

Australia

HarperCollins Publishers (Australia) Pty. Ltd.

Level 13, 201 Elizabeth Street

Sydney, NSW 2000, Australia

www.harpercollins.com.au

Canada

HarperCollins Canada

2 Bloor Street East - 20th Floor

Toronto, ON M4W 1A8, Canada

www.harpercollins.ca

New Zealand

HarperCollins Publishers New Zealand

Unit D1, 63 Apollo Drive

Rosedale 0632

Auckland, New Zealand

www.harpercollins.co.nz

United Kingdom

HarperCollins Publishers Ltd.

1 London Bridge Street

London SE1 9GF, UK

www.harpercollins.co.uk

United States

HarperCollins Publishers Inc.

195 Broadway

New York, NY 10007

www.harpercollins.com

RISING

THE MAKING OF BARACK OBAMA

STAR

---

DAVID J. GARROW

PULITZER PRIZE-WINNING AUTHOR OF BEARING THE CROSS

